September Interactive Democracy Description Interactive Democracy – Consensus Multiperson Decision Making All of Great Britain Approve 26 September Interactive Democracy Description Interactive Democracy - Decentralised All of Great Britain Approve 26 September Interactive Democracy Description Interactive Democracy – Distributed Ledger Technology All of Great Britain Approve 26 September Motherworld Party Emblem All of Great Britain Approve 26 September Proud of Oldham & Saddleworth Name Proud of Oldham & Saddleworth England Approve 26 September Proud of Oldham & Saddleworth Emblem England Reject Likely to mislead voters as the words spelt out in the emblem are unable to be read 26 September The British Restoration Society Name The British Restoration Society All of Great Britain Approve 2 September Andover Independents Party Name Andover Independents Party England Approve 2 September Andover Independents Party Description Andover Independents England Approve 2 September Andover Independents Party Description The Andover Independents England Approve 2 September Andover Independents Party Emblem England Reject Likely to mislead voters as the words spelt out in the emblem are unable to be read 2 September Britain First Name Britain First Northern Ireland Reject Application incomplete 2 September Failsworth Independent Party Description Failsworth Independent Party England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 2 September Failsworth Independent Party Description Failsworth Independents England Approve 2 September Failsworth Independent Party Emblem England Approve 2 September Failsworth Independent Party Emblem England Approve 2 September Failsworth Independent Party Name Failsworth Independent Party England Approve 2 September Gwlad Gwlad Description Drois ein Gwlad/For our Country Wales Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 2 September Gwlad Gwlad Description Dros y Genedl/For the Nation Wales Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 2 September Gwlad Gwlad Description Ein Gwlad Wales Reject Confusingly similar to another already registered party 2 September Gwlad Gwlad Description Gwlad Gwlad – Ein Gwlad Wales Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 2 September Gwlad Gwlad Description Plaid Annibyniaeth Cymru/The Welsh Independence Party Wales Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 2 September Gwlad Gwlad Description Plaid Diddymu San Steffan/The Abolish Westminster Party Wales Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 2 September Gwlad Gwlad Description Plaid Syncretaidd Cymru/Wales's Syncretic Party Wales Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 2 September Gwlad Gwlad Description Y blaid Gymraeal/The Wexit Party Wales Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 2 September Gwlad Gwlad Description Yn Erbyn Lygredd Bae Caerdydd/Fighting Corruption in Cardiff Bay Wales Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 2 September Independent Network Description Independent Network (Buckinghamshire) All of Great Britain Approve 2 September Independent Network Emblem All of Great Britain Approve 2 September Interactive Democracy Description Distributed Ledger Technology All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet requirements of a description 2 September Interactive Democracy Description Blockchain Democracy All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet requirements of a description 2 September Interactive Democracy Description Decentralised Democracy All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet requirements of a description 2 September Interactive Democracy Description Byzantine Fault Tolerance Voting System All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet requirements of a description 2 September Interactive Democracy Description Behavioural Analytics Collective Intelligence Democracy All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet requirements of a description 2 September Interactive Democracy Description Consensus Achievement in Multiperson Decision Making All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet requirements of a

description 2 September Interactive Democracy Description Open Agora All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet requirements of a description August 2019 Date of decision Applicant name Type of identity mark applied for The identity mark applied for Part of the UK the application applies to Registration decision Further information/ Reason for rejection 23 August British Union & Sovereignty Party Name British Unionist Party (BUP) All of Great Britain Reject Confusingly similar to another already registered party 23 August British Union & Sovereignty Party Name British Unionist Party (BUP) Northern Ireland Reject Confusingly similar to another already registered party 23 August Global Republic Name Global Republic Scotland Reject Application incomplete 19 August Birkenhead Social Justice Party Name Birkenhead Social Justice Party England Reject Application incomplete 19 August Newcastle Independents Description Newcastle Independents - Putting Lemington Ward First England Approve 19 August Newcastle Independents Description Newcastle Independents - Putting Callerton Throckley First England Approve 19 August Newcastle Independents Description Newcastle Independents - Putting Tyneside First England Approve 19 August Newcastle Independents Description Newcastle Independents - Fix Our Broken Politics England Approve 19 August Newcastle Independents Description Newcastle Independents - Always Putting Newcastle First England Approve 19 August Newcastle Independents Emblem England Approve 19 August Newcastle Independents Emblem England Approve 19 August Newcastle Independents Emblem England Approve 19 August United Kingdom Liberty Party Emblem All of Great Britain Approve 6 August Mansfield Independent Forum Name Mansfield Independents England Approve Change of party name application 6 August Mansfield Independent Forum Description Mansfield Independents Putting People Before Politics England Approve 6 August Mansfield Independent Forum Description Mansfield Independents Working Hard All Year Round England Reject Contains more than 6 words 6 August Mansfield Independent Forum Description Mansfield Independents - The Community Champions England Approve 6 August Mansfield Independent Forum Description Mansfield Independents Putting Local People First England Approve 6 August Mansfield Independent Forum Description Mansfield Independents - Keeping You Informed England Approve 6 August Mansfield Independent Forum Description Think Local - Think Mansfield Independents England Approve 6 August Mansfield Independent Forum Description Mansfield Independents - Putting Local Residents First England Approve 6 August Mansfield Independent Forum Description Mansfield Independents - Warsop Voice England Approve 6 August Mansfield Independent Forum Description Mansfield Independents - Local People - Local Issues - Local Solutions England Reject Contains more than 6 words 6 August Mansfield Independent Forum Description Mansfield Independents - The Ones Who Really Care England Reject Contains more than 6 words 6 August Mansfield Independent Forum Description Mansfield Reject Does not meet the minimum requirements for emblems 6 August The Citizens Movement Party UK Name The Citizens Movement Party UK All of Great Britain Reject Application incomplete 1 August East Wycombe Independent Party Name Wycombe Independents England Approve Change of party name application 1 August East Wycombe Independent Party Description Your Independent Team for High Wycombe England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 1 August East Wycombe Independent Party Description Your Independent Team for Abbey England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 1 August East Wycombe Independent Party Description Independent for Booker, Cressex and Castlefield England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 1 August East Wycombe Independent Party Description

Your Independent Team for Downley England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 1 August East Wycombe Independent Party Description Your Independent Team for Hazlemere England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 1 August East Wycombe Independent Party Description Your Independent Team for Reyemead and Micklefield England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 1 August East Wycombe Independent Party Description Independent for Terriers and Amersham Hill England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 1 August East Wycombe Independent Party Description Your Independent Team for Totteridge and Bowerdean England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 1 August East Wycombe Independent Party Description Independent for Tylers Green and Loudwater England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 1 August East Wycombe Independent Party Description Your Independent Team for West Wycombe England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 1 August East Wycombe Independent Party Description Your Independent Team for Marlow England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 1 August East Wycombe Independent Party Description An Independent Team for our Community England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 1 August Remain Alliance Party Name Remain Alliance Party All of Great Britain Reject Application incomplete July 2019 Date of decision Applicant name Type of identity mark applied for The identity mark applied for Part of the UK the application applies to Registration decision Further information/ Reason for rejection 14 July Positive Horizon Name Positive Horizon All of Great Britain Approve 14 July Positive Horizon Description Positive Future - Contract Manifesto All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 14 July Positive Horizon Description Positive Future - Positive Solutions All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 5 July The Citizens Movement Party UK Name The Citizens Movement Party UK All of Great Britain Reject Application Incomplete 5 July Change UK - The Independent Group Name The Independent Group for Change All of Great Britain Approve 5 July Positive Horizon Name Positive Horizon Northern Ireland Approve 2 July UK Voice Name UK Voice All of Great Britain Reject Application incomplete 2 July UK Voice Name UK Voice Northern Ireland Reject Application incomplete 1 July IndividualFirst Name United Kingdom Liberty Party All of Great Britain Approve 1 July IndividualFirst Description UK Liberty Party All of Great Britain Approve 1 July IndividualFirst Description UKLP All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 1 July IndividualFirst Emblem All of Great Britain Reject Likely to mislead voters as the words spelt out in the emblem are unable to be read 1 July StrongerOUT Name StrongerOUT All of Great Britain Reject Application incomplete June 2019 Date of decision Applicant name Type of identity mark applied for The identity mark applied for Part of the UK the application applies to Registration decision Further information/ Reason for rejection 23 June Progressive People's Party Name Plaid Flaengar y Bobl All of Great Britain Approve 23 June Progressive People's Party Description The Progressive People's Party / Plaid Flaengar y Bobl All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 23 June Progressive People's Party Description The Progressive People's Party Candidate / Ymgeisydd Plaid Flaengar y Bobl All of Great Britain Approve 20 June Cornish Liberal Party Name Cornish Liberal Party England Reject Confusingly similar to another already registered party 20 June Londependence Name Londependence England Approve 20 June Londependence Description Londependence England Reject Duplicate of party name 20 June Londependence Description #Londependence England Reject Likely to mislead voters, contains a link to online material 20 June Londependence Description The Londependence Party England Approve 20

June Londependence Description Londependence Party England Approve 20 June Londependence Description Londependence – for London Independence England Approve 20 June June Londependence Description Londependence – the party for London England Approve 20 June 20 June Londependence Description Londependence – the London Independence Party England Approve 20 June
Londependence Description #Londependence – for London Independence England Reject Likely to mislead voters, contains a link to online material 20 June Londependence Description #Londependence – the party for London England Reject Likely to mislead voters, contains a link to online material 20 June Londependence Description #Londependence – the London Independence Party England Reject Likely to mislead voters, contains a link to online material 20 June Londependence Emblem England Approve 20 June Londependence Emblem England Reject Likely to mislead voters, contains a link to online material 20 June Londependence Emblem England Approve 20 June Movement for Active Democracy (M.A.D.) Name Extinction Rebellion All of Great Britain Reject Likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote 20 June Movement for Active Democracy (M.A.D.) Emblem All of Great Britain Reject Likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote 20 June Newcastle upon Tyne Community First Party Name Newcastle Independents England Approve 20 June Newcastle upon Tyne Community First Party Description Newcastle First England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 20 June Newcastle upon Tyne Community First Party Description It's time to put Newcastle First England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 20 June Newcastle upon Tyne Community First Party Description Local Community Candidate England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 20 June Newcastle upon Tyne Community First Party Description Lemington First England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 20 June Newcastle upon Tyne Community First Party Description Newcastle upon Tyne Community First Party England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 20 June Newcastle upon Tyne Community First Party Description Newcastle Independent Candidate England Approve 20 June Newcastle upon Tyne Community First Party Description Newcastle Independent Community Candidate England Approve 20 June Newcastle upon Tyne Community First Party Description Newcastle Independents – Putting Denton Westerhope First England Approve 20 June Newcastle upon Tyne Community First Party Description Newcastle Independents – The Newcastle Party England Approve 20 June Newcastle upon Tyne Community First Party Description Newcastle Independents – Putting Newcastle First England Approve 20 June Newcastle upon Tyne Community First Party Description Newcastle Independents – Local Community Candidate England Approve 20 June Newcastle upon Tyne Community First Party Description Newcastle Independents - People Before Politics Always England Approve 20 June Newcastle upon Tyne Community First Party Emblem England Reject Likely to mislead voters as the words spelt out in the emblem are unable to be read 20 June Newcastle upon Tyne Community First Party Emblem England Reject Likely to mislead voters as the words spelt out in the emblem are unable to be read 20 June Positive Alliances Description Contract Manifesto All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 20 June Positive Alliances Description Positive Solutions All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 14 June A New Direction For The UK Name A New Direction For The UK All of Great Britain Approve 14 June A New Direction For The UK Description New Direction All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 14 June A New Direction For The UK Description A New Direction All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 14 June A New

Direction For The UK Emblem All of Great Britain Approve 14 June Democrats and Veterans Party Name Democrats and Veterans Direct Democracy Party All of Great Britain Approve 14 June Democrats and Veterans Party Name Democrats and Veterans Direct Democracy Party Northern Ireland Approve 7 June Positive Alliances Name Positive Alliances Northern Ireland Reject Confusingly similar to another already registered party 7 June Blue Revolution Description For the People Not the Party England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a description 7 June Local Alliance Emblem England Approve May 2019 Date of decision Applicant name Type of identity mark applied for The identity mark applied for Part of the UK the application applies to Registration decision Further information/ Reason for rejection 22 May Alliance EPP: European People's Party UK Name Alliance EPP (European People's Party) UK All of Great Britain Approve 22 May Change UK - The Independent Group Emblem All of Great Britain Approve 22 May Harold Wood Hill Park Residents Association Description Independent Harold Hill Residents Association Gooshays England Approve 22 May Harold Wood Hill Park Residents Association Description Independent Harold Hill Residents Association Heaton England Approve 22 May Harold Wood Hill Park Residents Association Description Independent Harold Wood Residents Association England Approve 17 May Civic Party Name Civic Party All of Great Britain Reject Application incomplete 17 May Liberal Democrats Description Liberal Democrats - To stop Brexit All of Great Britain Approve 17 May Liberal Democrats Description Scottish Liberal Democrats – To stop Brexit All of Great Britain Approve 17 May Liberal Democrats Description Welsh Liberal Democrats – To stop Brexit / Democraidaid Rhyddfrydol Cymru - i Stopio Brexit All of Great Britain Approve 17 May The For Britain Movement Description The For Britain Movement For Brexit All of Great Britain Approve 17 May The For Britain Movement Description The For Britain Movement For Wales All of Great Britain Approve 17 May The For Britain Movement Description The For Britain Movement, For Scotland All of Great Britain Approve 17 May The For Britain Movement Description The For Britain Movement, For Freedom All of Great Britain Approve 17 May The For Britain Movement Description The For Britain Movement, For Democracy All of Great Britain Approve 17 May The For Britain Movement Description The For Britain Movement, For London All of Great Britain Approve 17 May The For Britain Movement Description The For Britain Movement: For Sovereignty All of Great Britain Approve 17 May The For Britain Movement Description The For Britain Movement, For Liberty All of Great Britain Approve 17 May The For Britain Movement Description The For Britain Movement, For Yorkshire All of Great Britain Approve 17 May The For Britain Movement Description The For Britain Movement, For Justice All of Great Britain Approve 17 May The For Britain Movement Description The For Britain Movement, For England All of Great Britain Approve 17 May The For Britain Movement Description The For Britain Movement, For Truth All of Great Britain Approve 17 May Volt United Kingdom Name Volt United Kingdom All of Great Britain Reject Application incomplete 5 May Local Alliance Emblem England Approve 5 May Local Alliance Emblem England Approve 5 May Sutton Residents' Party Emblem England Approve 5 May Steyning First Description Steyning First - Protecting and Enhancing Steyning England Approve 5 May UK Independent Voice Name UK Independent Voice All of Great Britain Reject Application incomplete 5 May UK Independent Voice Name UK Independent Voice Northern Ireland Reject Application incomplete 2 May Bolton People First Name Bolton People First England Reject Application incomplete 2 May Forward Name Forward All of Great Britain Approve 2 May Forward Description Forward For A Better United Kingdom All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 2 May Forward Description Giving Hope For The Future All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 2 May Forward Description Bringing People Together All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 2 May Forward Description Making Communities Safer All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 2 May Forward Description For Our Childrens Future All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 2 May Forward Description Putting the United Kingdom First All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 2 May Forward Description Equality Balance and Restoring Faith All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 2 May Forward Description Forward For A Better Economy All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 2 May Forward Description Restoring Justice Law And Order All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 2 May Forward Emblem All of Great Britain Approve April 2019 Date of decision Applicant name Type of identity mark applied for The identity mark applied for Part of the UK the application applies to Registration decision Further information/ Reason for rejection 18 April Positive Alliances Name Positive Alliances All of Great Britain Approve 18 April Radcliffe First Name Radcliffe First England Approve 18 April Radcliffe First Description Making Radcliffe a Priority England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 18 April Radcliffe First Emblem England Approve 18 April UK European Union Party (UKEUP) Name UK European Union Party (UKEUP) All of Great Britain Approve 18 April UK European Union Party (UKEUP) Description Remain! UK EU Party All of Great Britain Approve 18 April UK European Union Party (UKEUP) Description UKEUP All of Great Britain Reject Contains an abbreviation which is likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote. 18 April UK European Union Party (UKEUP) Description UK EU Party All of Great Britain Approve 18 April UK European Union Party (UKEUP) Description (UKEUP) Remain with Europe! All of Great Britain Reject Likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote 18 April UK European Union Party (UKEUP) Description (UKEUP) The Remain with Europe Party All of Great Britain Reject Likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote; and Confusingly similar to another already registered party 18 April UK European Union Party (UKEUP) Emblem All of Great Britain Reject Likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote 15 April Advance Together Name Advance Together Scotland and Wales Approve 15 April Advance Together Description The Advance Together Candidate Scotland and Wales Approve 15 April Advance Together Description Advance Together Candidate Scotland and Wales Approve 15 April Advance Together Emblem Scotland and Wales Approve 15 April Animal Welfare Party Description For People, Animals and the Environment All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 15 April Animal Welfare Party Description Animal Welfare Party - People, Animals, Environment All of Great Britain Approve 15 April Animal Welfare Party Description For People, Animals and the Environment Northern Ireland Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 15 April Animal Welfare Party Description Animal Welfare Party - People, Animals, Environment Northern Ireland Approve 15 April Atomist Description Atomist- Intelligent Revolution All of Great Britain Approve 15 April Atomist Description Intelligent Revolution All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 15 April Atomist Emblem All of Great Britain Approve 15 April Change UK – The Independent Group Name Change UK – The Independent Group All of Great Britain Approve 15 April Change UK – The Independent Group Description The Change UK candidate All of Great Britain Approve 15 April Change UK – The Independent Group Emblem All of Great Britain Reject Likely to mislead voters, contains a link to online material 15 April Christian Party "Proclaiming Christ's Lordship Name Christian Parties Alliance

"Proclaiming Christ's Lordship All of Great Britain Reject Likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote 15 April Christian Party "Proclaiming Christ's Lordship Description Christian Parties Alliance All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 15 April Christian Party "Proclaiming Christ's Lordship Description Christian Parties Alliance (Scotland) All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 15 April Christian Party "Proclaiming Christ's Lordship Description Christian Parties Alliance (Wales) All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 15 April Ideal Bradford Name Ideal Bradford England Approve 15 April Ideal Bradford Emblem England Reject Likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote, Likely to mislead voters as the words spelt out in the emblem are unable to be read. 15 April National Flood Prevention Party Emblem England Approve 7 April Progressive People's Party Name Progressive People's Party All of Great Britain Approve 4 April Independents for Frome Emblem England Approve 4 April Tattenhams Residents' Association Name Tattenham & Preston Residents England Approve 4 April Tattenhams Residents' Association Description Tattenham & Preston Residents Association England Approve 4 April Tattenhams Residents' Association Description Tattenham Corner & Preston Residents England Approve 4 April Tattenhams Residents' Association Description Tattenham Residents Association England Approve 4 April Tattenhams Residents' Association Emblem England Approve 4 April The Brexit Party Description Brexit Party All of Great Britain Approve 4 April The Brexit Party Description Brexit Party For Leaving the EU All of Great Britain Approve 4 April The Brexit Party Description Brexit Party For A Better Future All of Great Britain Approve 4 April The Brexit Party Description Better Off Out Of The EU All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 4 April The Brexit Party Description Nigel Farage's Brexit Party All of Great Britain Reject Likely to hinder an elector's understanding of directions for voting given on ballot papers 4 April The Brexit Party Description Brexit Party, The One to Trust All of Great Britain Approve 4 April The Brexit Party Emblem All of Great Britain Approve 4 April Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Name Wigan Independents England Approve 4 April Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Description Standish Independents part of Wigan Independents England Approve 4 April Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Description Shevington Independents part of Wigan Independents England Approve 4 April Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Description Leigh Independents part of Wigan Independents England Approve 4 April Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Description Bryn Independents part of Wigan Independents England Approve 4 April Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Description Ashton Independents part of Wigan Independents England Approve 4 April Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Description Winstanley Independents part of Wigan Independents England Approve 4 April Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Description Hindley Independents part of Wigan Independents England Approve 4 April Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Description Atheron Independents part of Wigan Independents England Approve 4 April Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Description Tyldesley Independents part of Wigan Independents England Approve 4 April Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Description HindleyGreen Independents part of Wigan Independents England Reject Contains more than six words 4 April Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Description Standish Independents England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 4 April Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Description Shevington Independents England

Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 1 April Alliance For Local Living (ALL) Name Alliance For Local Living (ALL) England Approve 1 April Alliance For Local Living (ALL) Description ALL- for people, not party politics England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 1 April Alliance For Local Living (ALL) Description Standing for Better, for ALL, Together England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 1 April Alliance For Local Living (ALL) Description ALL - Independent candidate England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 1 April Alliance For Local Living (ALL) Description ALL for Dorset, Independent candidate England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 1 April Alliance For Local Living (ALL) Description ALL Independents for Bournemouth, Christchurch, Poole England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 1 April Alliance For Local Living (ALL) Description ALL for listening and involving community England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 1 April Alliance For Local Living (ALL) Description Alliance for Local Living Independent Candidate England Approve 1 April Alliance For Local Living (ALL) Description ALL for Poole, Independent Candidate England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 1 April Alliance For Local Living (ALL) Description ALL for Bournemouth, Independent Candidate England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 1 April Alliance For Local Living (ALL) Description ALL for Christchurch, Independent Candidate England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 1 April Alliance For Local Living (ALL) Description ALL for Poole People England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 1 April Alliance For Local Living (ALL) Description ALL, Councillors working together, with neighbourhoods England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 1 April Alliance For Local Living (ALL) Emblem England Approve 1 April Alliance For Local Living (ALL) Emblem England Reject Likely to mislead voters as the words spelt out in the emblem are unable to be read 1 April Alliance For Local Living (ALL) Emblem England Reject Contains an abbreviation which is likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote 1 April Britain First Name Britain First Northern Ireland Reject Application incomplete 1 April The Best For Luton Party Name The Best For Luton Party England Approve 1 April The Best For Luton Party Description Best4Luton England Approve 1 April The Best For Luton Party Description The Best4Luton Party England Approve 1 April The Best For Luton Party Description Best for Luton England Approve 1 April The Best For Luton Party Description Best for Luton Candidate England Approve 1 April The Best For Luton Party Description The Best for Luton Candidate England Approve 1 April The Best For Luton Party Emblem England Approve March 2019 Date of decision Applicant name Type of identity mark applied for The identity mark applied for Part of the UK the application applies to Registration decision Further information/ Reason for rejection 25 March Give Me Back Elmo Party Name Give Me Back Elmo Party All of Great Britain Reject Application incomplete, Contains an abbreviation which is likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote 25 March Link Party Emblem All of Great Britain Approve 25 March Newton Says No Name Newton Says No England Reject Application incomplete 25 March The People's Voice Name The People's Voice All of Great Britain Reject Application incomplete, Confusingly similar to another already registered party 22 March Andover Alliance Name Andover Alliance England Approve 22 March Andover Alliance Description The Andover Alliance England Approve 22 March Andover Alliance Emblem England Approve 22 March Andover Alliance Emblem England Approve 22 March Aontú Name Aontú Northern Ireland Approve 22 March Aontú Emblem Northern Ireland Approve 22 March Bath Northeast Somerset Independent Group (BIG) Emblem England Approve 22 March Bath Northeast Somerset Independent Group (BIG)

Emblem England Reject Does not meet the minimum requirements for emblems 22 March Bath Northeast Somerset Independent Group (BIG) Emblem England Approve 22 March Buckinghamshire Residents Association Name Buckinghamshire Residents Association England Approve 22 March Buckinghamshire Residents Association Description Aylesbury Residents England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 22 March Buckinghamshire Residents Association Description Aylesbury Vale Residents England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 22 March Buckinghamshire Residents Association Description Buckingham Residents England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 22 March Buckinghamshire Residents Association Description Chiltern Residents England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 22 March Buckinghamshire Residents Association Description Milton Keynes Residents England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 22 March Buckinghamshire Residents Association Description South Bucks Residents England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 22 March Buckinghamshire Residents Association Description Wycombe Residents England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 22 March Buckinghamshire Residents Association Emblem England Approve 19 March Best for Middlesbrough Name Best for Middlesbrough England Approve 19 March Best for Middlesbrough Emblem England Approve 19 March Green Party Emblem Northern Ireland Approve 19 March Medway People's Voice Name Medway People's Voice England Reject Application incomplete 19 March People's Vote Party Name People's Vote Party All of Great Britain Reject Likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote 19 March Renew Emblem All of Great Britain Approve 19 March Renew Emblem All of Great Britain Approve 19 March Saddleworth, Yorkshire & Proud! Name Saddleworth First! England Approve 19 March Saddleworth, Yorkshire & Proud! Emblem England Approve 19 March Save Our Beeston and Holbeck Independents Emblem England Approve 19 March Tewkesbury Independents Name Tewkesbury and Twyning Independents England Approve Change of party name application 19 March The For Britain Movement Description For The Forgotten Majority All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 19 March The For Britain Movement Description The Democratic Populist Party All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 19 March The For Britain Movement Description The Popular Democratic Party All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 19 March The For Britain Movement Description For The People, For Britain All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 19 March The For Britain Movement Description For Democracy, For Britain All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 19 March The For Britain Movement Description For Our Children, For Britain All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 19 March The For Britain Movement Description For The Future, For Britain All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 19 March The For Britain Movement Description For Freedom, For Britain All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 19 March The For Britain Movement Description For Sovereignty, For Britain All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 19 March The For Britain Movement Description For Truth, For Britain All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 19 March UK Independence Party (UKIP) Description UKIP - UK Unionists Northern Ireland Approve 19 March UK Independence Party (UKIP) Description UKIP - For The Union Northern Ireland Approve 19 March UK Independence Party (UKIP) Description UKIP – Unionist For Brexit Northern Ireland Approve 19 March Westhoughton First Independents Name Westhoughton First Independents England Approve 19 March Westhoughton First Independents Emblem

England Approve 19 March Westhoughton First Independents Emblem England Approve 19 March Westhoughton First Independents Emblem England Approve 15 March Progressive Centre Party Name Centre Progressive Party England Approve Change of party name application 12 March Keep Penrith & Eden Special (KPES) Name Keep Penrith & Eden Special (KPES) England Reject Application incomplete 12 March Labour Party NI Name Labour Party NI Northern Ireland Reject Likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote 12 March Polegate Residents' Association Emblem England Reject Contains an abbreviation which is likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote 12 March Progress and Reform Party Name Progress and Reform Party All of Great Britain Approve 12 March Progress and Reform Party Emblem All of Great Britain Approve 12 March Prosper UK Name Prosper UK All of Great Britain Approve 12 March Prosper UK Description A modern political party for an independent and prosperous Britain. All of Great Britain Reject Contains more than 6 words 12 March Prosper UK Emblem All of Great Britain Reject Likely to mislead voters as the words spelt out in the emblem are unable to be read 12 March Residents for Guildford and Villages Name Residents for Guildford and Villages England Approve 12 March Residents for Guildford and Villages Description Residents for Guildford and Villages England Reject Duplicate of party name 12 March Residents for Guildford and Villages Description R4GV England Reject Contains an abbreviation which is likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote 12 March Residents for Guildford and Villages Description Residents for Guildford and Holy Trinity England Approve 12 March Residents for Guildford and Villages Description Residents for Guildford, Clandon & Horsley England Approve 12 March Residents for Guildford and Villages Description Residents for Guildford and Worplesdon England Approve 12 March Residents for Guildford and Villages Description Residents for Guildford, Ash and Tongham England Approve 12 March Residents for Guildford and Villages Description Residents for Guildford and Send England Approve 12 March Residents for Guildford and Villages Description Residents for Guildford, Ripley and Ockham England Approve 12 March Residents for Guildford and Villages Description Residents for Guildford and Pilgrims England Approve 12 March Residents for Guildford and Villages Description Residents for Guildford and Onslow Village England Approve 12 March Residents for Guildford and Villages Description Residents for Guildford and Merrow England Approve 12 March Residents for Guildford and Villages Description Residents for Guildford and Shalford England Approve 12 March Residents for Guildford and Villages Emblem England Approve 12 March Volt United Kingdom Name Volt United Kingdom All of Great Britain Reject Application incomplete 11 March Alliance for Local Living (ALL) Name Alliance for Local Living (ALL) England Reject Application incomplete 11 March Brexit Express (BE) Name Brexit Express (BE) All of Great Britain Approve 11 March Brexit Express (BE) Description Take Back Control of Our Laws All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 11 March Brexit Express (BE) Description Take Back Control of Our Money All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 11 March Brexit Express (BE) Description Take Back Control of Our Borders All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 11 March Brexit Express (BE) Description Achieve a full and clean Brexit All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 11 March Brexit Express (BE) Description Promote the maintenance of the Union All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 11 March Brexit Express (BE) Description A low tax business friendly country All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 11 March Brexit Express (BE) Description Advance Free Trade Agreements All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a

Description 11 March Brexit Express (BE) Description Strong Defence Capabilities All of Great Britain Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 11 March Civic Party Name Civic Party England Reject Application incomplete 11 March Core Party UK Name Core Party UK All of Great Britain Reject Application incomplete 11 March Independence Name Independence All of Great Britain Reject Application incomplete 11 March Yarm Residents Association Name Yarm Residents Association England Approve 11 March Yarm Residents Association Emblem England Reject Likely to mislead voters as the words spelt out in the emblem are unable to be read 6 March Social Democratic Party Description Social Democratic Party: Fighting For Brexit All of Great Britain Approve 6 March Social Democratic Party Emblem All of Great Britain Approve 6 March Social Democratic Party Emblem All of Great Britain Approve 4 March Bath & Northeast Somerset Independent Group Name Bath Northeast Somerset Independent Group (BIG) England Approve Change of party name application 4 March Bath & Northeast Somerset Independent Group Emblem England Reject Contains an abbreviation which is likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote 4 March Bath & Northeast Somerset Independent Group Emblem England Reject Likely to mislead voters as the words spelt out in the emblem are unable to be read 4 March Bath & Northeast Somerset Independent Group Emblem England Reject Likely to mislead voters as the words spelt out in the emblem are unable to be read 4 March British Union & Sovereignty Party Description Union & Sovereignty Party – Rebuild Britain Northern Ireland Approve 4 March British Union & Sovereignty Party Description Union & Sovereignty Party – UK Unionism Northern Ireland Approve 4 March British Union & Sovereignty Party Description Union & Sovereignty Party – Brexit Now Northern Ireland Approve 4 March British Union & Sovereignty Party Description Union & Sovereignty Party UK Northern Ireland Approve 4 March Foundation Party Description Foundation Party – We Work for you All of Great Britain Approve 4 March Foundation Party Description Foundation Party – Your Concerns, Our Priorities All of Great Britain Approve 4 March Foundation Party Description Foundation Party – Openness and common sense All of Great Britain Approve 4 March Foundation Party Description Foundation Party – Cleaning up politics All of Great Britain Approve 4 March Foundation Party Description Foundation Party – Holding politicians to account All of Great Britain Approve 4 March Foundation Party Description Foundation Party – Standing up for Brexit All of Great Britain Reject Likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote 4 March Foundation Party Description Foundation party – Brexit Without Delay All of Great Britain Approve 4 March Foundation Party Description Foundation Party – No Brexit Betrayal All of Great Britain Approve 4 March Foundation Party Description Foundation Party – Leave Means Leave All of Great Britain Reject Likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote 4 March Foundation Party Description Foundation Party – The Pro-Brexit Party All of Great Britain Approve 4 March Foundation Party Description Foundation Party – The Brexit Party All of Great Britain Reject Likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote 4 March Foundation Party Description Foundation Party – The People's Brexit Party All of Great Britain Reject Likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote 4 March Fylde Ratepayers Name Lytham St Annes Independents England Approve Change of party name application 4 March Fylde Ratepayers Emblem England Reject Contains an abbreviation which is likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote 4 March Independents for Sutton Name Sutton Residents' Party England Approve Change of party name application 4 March Independents for Sutton Description Sutton Coldfield Residents' Party England Approve 4 March Independents for Sutton Description Sutton Residents' Party: Residents for Sutton Coldfield England Reject Contains more than 6 words 4 March Independents for Sutton Description Sutton

Residents' Party: representing Sutton Coldfield residents England Reject Contains more than 6 words 4 March Independents for Sutton Emblem England Reject Likely to mislead voters as the words spelt out in the emblem are unable to be read 4 March It's Our County (Herefordshire) Description It's Our County: Independent Organised Capable England Approve 4 March It's Our County (Herefordshire) Description It's Our County: Here for Herefordshire England Approve 4 March It's Our County (Herefordshire) Description It's Our County with Herefordshire Independents England Approve 4 March It's Our County (Herefordshire) Description It's Our County with Herefordshire Greens England Reject Likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote 4 March It's Our County (Herefordshire) Emblem England Reject Contains an abbreviation which is likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote 4 March Residents' Association of Cuddington Emblem England Approve 4 March South Woodham Ferrers Independents Name South Woodham Ferrers Council Taxpayers Association England Approve Change of party name application 4 March South Woodham Ferrers Independents Emblem England Approve 4 March Torridge Common Ground Community Group Name Torridge Common Ground Community Group England Reject Application incomplete 1 March Aontú Name Aontú Northern Ireland Reject Application incomplete 1 March Alderley Edge First Name Alderley Edge First England Approve 1 March Alderley Edge First Description Alderley Edge First England Reject Duplicate of party name 1 March Alderley Edge First Emblem England Reject Contains a numeral and is likely to contradict instructions or guidance on ballot papers 1 March Alderley Edge First Emblem England Approve 1 March Andover Alliance Name Andover Alliance England Reject Application incomplete 1 March Arnold Independents Name Arnold Independents England Approve 1 March Arnold Independents Description Putting Arnold First England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 1 March Arnold Independents Description Making Arnold a better place England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description February 2019 Date of decision Applicant name Type of identity mark applied for The identity mark applied for Part of the UK the application applies to Registration decision Further information/ Reason for rejection 24 February Steyning First Description Preserving and Enhancing Our Wonderful Steyning England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 24 February Residents of Wilmslow Name Residents for Wilmslow England Approve 24 February Residents of Wilmslow Description Independent voice of Wilmslow residents England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 18 February Gwlad Gwlad Name Gwlad Gwlad Wales Approve 18 February Gwlad Gwlad Description Pleidiol Wyf I'm Gwlad Wales Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 18 February Gwlad Gwlad Description Abolish Westminster Wales Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 18 February Gwlad Gwlad Emblem Wales Approve 18 February Gwlad Gwlad Emblem Wales Approve 18 February Gwlad Gwlad Emblem Wales Reject Same as an already registered party 18 February Hadleigh Together Name Hadleigh Together England Approve 18 February Hadleigh Together Description Hadleigh Together England Reject Duplicate of party name 18 February Hadleigh Together Description People at the Heart of Hadleigh England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 18 February Hadleigh Together Emblem England Approve 18 February Independent Union Name Independent Union England Approve 18 February Independent Union Emblem England Approve 18 February Independent Union Emblem England Approve 18 February Thanet Independents Name Thanet Independents England Approve 18 February Thanet Independents Emblem England Approve 18 February The Compass Party Name The Compass Party All of Great Britain Approve 5 February Horwich & Blackrod First Independents Name Horwich & Blackrod First Independents England Approve 5 February

Horwich & Blackrod First Independents Description Horwich First Independents England Approve 5 February Horwich & Blackrod First Independents Description Blackrod First Independents England Approve 5 February Horwich & Blackrod First Independents Description Horwich Independents England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 5 February Horwich & Blackrod First Independents Description Blackrod Independents England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 5 February Horwich & Blackrod First Independents Emblem England Approve 5 February Horwich & Blackrod First Independents Emblem England Reject Likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote 5 February Horwich & Blackrod First Independents Emblem England Reject Likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote 5 February Horwich and Blackrod Independent Residents Name Horwich and Blackrod Independent Residents England Reject Confusingly similar to a competing registration application, and was deemed to have a lesser claim to its respective name 5 February Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Name Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents England Approve 5 February Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Description Wigan Independent Party England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 5 February Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Description Leigh Independents England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 5 February Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Description Standish Independents England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 5 February Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Description Shevington Independents England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 5 February Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Description Wigan Independents England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 5 February Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Description Bryn Independents England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 5 February Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Description The Independents of Wigan England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 5 February Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Description Hindley Green Independents England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 5 February Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Description Orrell Independents England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 5 February Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Description Winstanley Independents England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 5 February Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Description Golborne and Lowton Independents England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 5 February Wigan Standish Shevington Bryn Hindley Independents Emblem England Approve 5 February Local Alliance Name Local Alliance England Approve 5 February Local Alliance Description A non-political partnership championing your priorities England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 5 February Nork Residents' Association Emblem England Approve 5 February Renew Emblem All of Great Britain Reject Likely to mislead voters as the words spelt out in the emblem are unable to be read 5 February The Brexit Party Name The Brexit Party All of Great Britain Approve 4 February Best For Middlesbrough Name Best For Middlesbrough England Reject Application Incomplete 4 February Conservative and Unionist Party Description Local Conservatives All of Great Britain Approve 4 February Green Party Description Green Party – Comhaontas Glas Northern Ireland Approve 4 February Green Party Description Green Party Northern Ireland Northern

Ireland Approve 4 February Green Party Description Comhontas Glas/The Green Party Northern Ireland Approve 4 February Polegate Residents' Association Emblem England Reject Likely to mislead voters as the words spelt out in the emblem are unable to be read 4 February Skelmersdale Independent Party Name Skelmersdale Independent Party England Approve 4 February Skelmersdale Independent Party Description Skelmersdale Independents Working For Skelmersdale England Approve 4 February Skelmersdale Independent Party Description Skelmersdale Independents Representing Skelmersdale Before County England Approve 4 February Skelmersdale Independent Party Description Skelmersdale Independents Representing Ashurst First England Approve 4 February Skelmersdale Independent Party Description Skelmersdale Independents Representing Birch Green First England Approve 4 February Skelmersdale Independent Party Description Skelmersdale Independents Representing Digmoor First England Approve 4 February Skelmersdale Independent Party Description Skelmersdale Independents Representing Moorside First England Approve 4 February Skelmersdale Independent Party Description Skelmersdale Independents Representing Skem North First England Approve 4 February Skelmersdale Independent Party Description Skelmersdale Independents Representing Skem South First England Approve 4 February Skelmersdale Independent Party Description Skelmersdale Independents Representing Tanhouse First England Approve 4 February Skelmersdale Independent Party Description Skelmersdale Independents Representing Up Holland First England Approve 4 February Skelmersdale Independent Party Description Skelmersdale Independents Representing Skelmersdale Before Borough England Approve 4 February Skelmersdale Independent Party Description Skelmersdale Independents Working For you. England Approve 4 February Skelmersdale Independent Party Emblem England Approve 4 February Steyning First Name Steyning First England Approve 4 February Steyning First Emblem England Approve 4 February Swale Independents Description Swale Independents - Local issues, local solutions England Approve 4 February Swale Independents Description Swale Independents - People not party politics England Approve 4 February Swale Independents Description Swale Independents - Putting local people first England Approve 4 February Swale Independents Emblem England Approve 4 February Swale Independents Emblem England Reject Contains a tick and is likely to contradict instructions or guidance given for voting on ballot papers 4 February Tewkesbury Independents Name Tewkesbury and Twynning Independents England Reject Application incomplete January 2019 Date of decision Applicant name Type of identity mark applied for The identity mark applied for Part of the UK the application applies to Registration decision Further information/ Reason for rejection 28 January British Union & Sovereignty Party Name British Union & Sovereignty Party Northern Ireland Approve 28 January British Union & Sovereignty Party Description British Union & Sovereignty Party -Rebuild Britain Northern Ireland Reject Contains more than 6 words 28 January British Union & Sovereignty Party Description British Union & Sovereignty Party - UK Unionism Northern Ireland Reject Contains more than 6 words 28 January British Union & Sovereignty Party Description British Union & Sovereignty Party - Brexit Now Northern Ireland Reject Contains more than 6 words 28 January British Union & Sovereignty Party Emblem Northern Ireland Approve 28 January British Union & Sovereignty Party Emblem Northern Ireland Approve 28 January British Union & Sovereignty Party Emblem Northern Ireland Approve 28 January Nottingham Independents Description Nottingham Independents Wilford Silverdale and Clifton England Approve 28 January Nottingham Independents Description Nottingham Independents for the Meadows England Approve 28 January Nottingham Independents Description Nottingham Independents for Gedling England Approve 28 January Portishead Independents Description Portishead

Independents your team your town England Approve 28 January Portishead Independents Description Portishead Independents your voice your choice England Approve 28 January Portishead Independents Description Portishead Independents your family your future England Approve 28 January Core Party UK Name Core Party UK All of Great Britain Reject Application incomplete 28 January The Collective Democratic Union (CDU) Name The Collective Democratic Union (CDU) All of Great Britain Approve 14 January Act for Cuxton Together Name Act for Cuxton Together England Approve 14 January Act for Cuxton Together Emblem England Approve 14 January Act for Cuxton Together Emblem England Approve 14 January Act for Cuxton Together Emblem England Approve 14 January Britain First Name Britain First Northern Ireland Reject Application incomplete 14 January CumbriaFirst Name CumbriaFirst All of Great Britain Approve 14 January CumbriaFirst Description Cumbria First All of Great Britain Approve 14 January CumbriaFirst Description PuttingCumbriaFirst All of Great Britain Approve 14 January CumbriaFirst Description Putting CumbriaFirst All of Great Britain Approve 14 January CumbriaFirst Description Putting Cumbria First All of Great Britain Approve 14 January CumbriaFirst Description Putting CumbriaFirst All of Great Britain Approve 14 January CumbriaFirst Emblem All of Great Britain Reject Likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote, Likely to mislead voters as the words spelt out in the emblem are unable to be read 14 January Ecclesfield Parish Independent Councillors Name Ecclesfield Parish Independent Councillors England Approve 14 January Ecclesfield Parish Independent Councillors Description Ecclesfield Parish Independent Councillors England Reject Duplicate of party name 14 January Ecclesfield Parish Independent Councillors Description Ecclesfield Parish Independent Councillors – Ecclesfield Ward England Approve 14 January Ecclesfield Parish Independent Councillors Description Ecclesfield Parish Independent Councillors – Grenoside Ward England Approve 14 January Ecclesfield Parish Independent Councillors Description Ecclesfield Parish Independent Councillors – Highgreen Ward England Reject Contains more than 6 words 14 January Ecclesfield Parish Independent Councillors Description Ecclesfield Parish Independent Councillors – Thorncliffe Ward England Approve 14 January Ecclesfield Parish Independent Councillors Description Ecclesfield Parish Independent Councillors – Burncross Ward England Approve 14 January Ecclesfield Parish Independent Councillors Description Ecclesfield Parish Independent Councillors – Chapeltown Ward England Approve 14 January Ecclesfield Parish Independent Councillors Emblem England Approve 14 January Ecclesfield Parish Independent Councillors Emblem England Approve 14 January Ecclesfield Parish Independent Councillors Emblem England Reject Does not meet the minimum requirements for emblems 14 January The Sovereign Party of Great Britain Name The Sovereign Party of Great Britain All of Great Britain Reject Confusingly similar to another already registered party 14 January Northern England Working Democrats Name Northern England Working Democrats England Approve 14 January Northern England Working Democrats Emblem England Reject Likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote 7 January Bath & Northeast Somerset Independent Group Name BathNES Independent Group (BIG) England Reject Contains an abbreviation which is likely to mislead voters as to the effect of their vote 7 January Independent Alliance - Hartlepool Independent Group Name Independent Alliance - Hartlepool Independent Group England Reject Confusingly similar to another already registered party 7 January Independent Alliance - Hartlepool Independent Group Description Independent Alliance England Reject Does not meet the requirements of a Description 7 January Independent Alliance - Hartlepool Independent Group Emblem England Reject Confusingly similar to another already registered party 7 January Libertarian Party Emblem All of Great Britain Approve 7 January Libertarian Party Emblem All of Great Britain Approve 7 January Libertarian

Party Emblem Northern Ireland Approve 7 January Libertarian Party Emblem Northern Ireland Approve 7 January Thanet Independent Alliance Name Thanet Independent Alliance England Reject Application incomplete 7 January The Best For Luton Party Name The Best For Luton Party England Reject Application incomplete Related content View current applications View the political party names, descriptions and emblems which we are currently considering as part of our assessment process Comment on an application Find out how to comment on a particular political party name, description or emblem as part of our assessment process Find out about party registration applications and decisions

Investigation: Liberal Democrats 2015 UK Parliamentary general election campaign spending return | Electoral Commission Search Investigation: Liberal Democrats 2015 UK Parliamentary general election campaign spending return You are in the Investigations section Home Investigations On this page Issues under investigation Pre-investigation enquiries The investigation and our findings Conclusions First published: 7 December 2016 Last updated: 7 December 2016 The Liberal Democrats The Liberal Democrats ("the Party") is a registered political party in Great Britain. The 2015 United Kingdom Parliamentary General Election ("the 2015 UKPGE") took place on 7 May 2015. Under PPERA and given that the Party's campaign spending exceeded £250,000, the registered campaigns officer of the Party 1 , Mr Tim Gordon, was required to deliver to us a financial return including all campaign spending incurred by the Party during the 2015 UKPGE campaign period, by 7 November 2015. Mr Gordon delivered this return in advance of the statutory deadline. We published this return on 20 January 2016. We later identified various items of expenditure in Liberal Democrat candidate spending returns for the 2015 UKPGE which were stated as split between the Party and the candidate and thus reportable in both returns. However, the Party element did not appear in the Party's original UKPGE return. Following enquiries with the Party, we opened an investigation on 27 June 2016. This is a report of that investigation. It is being published alongside the publication of the outcome of the investigation and the sanction imposed. Summary of outcomes In summary, we found that the Party's 2015 UKPGE campaign spending return was not a complete return as required by PPERA. Accordingly, Mr Gordon committed one offence under PPERA and the Party has been fined £20,000, this being the maximum fine that we may impose. In addition, we identified information raising the suspicion that Mr Gordon may have knowingly or recklessly signed a false declaration that the spending return was complete. This is an offence under section 83(3) of PPERA. We do not have the powers to sanction this offence, and the matter was therefore referred to the Metropolitan Police Service on 24 November 2016. Issues under investigation The scope of the investigation On 20 January 2016 we published the Party's 2015 UKPGE spending return on our online registers database. The return listed 1,335 items of spending incurred in Great Britain, totalling £3,539,106. As part of the Commission's monitoring function, set out in section 145 of PPERA, a review of candidate expenditure returns from the 2015 UKPGE was conducted. Candidate returns from a number of parties, including four from the Liberal Democrats, were selected for the review. The review identified discrepancies on a Liberal Democrat candidate return 2 between the values of three items reported as incurred by the candidate and the total of the three supporting invoices. These discrepancies were the result of the invoice value being apportioned between the Party and the candidate. We reviewed the Party's spending return to verify that the apportioned items had been reported by the Party, but concluded that the apportionments had not been included in the Party return. Subsequent enquiries identified that various other items of expenditure, apportioned to the Party in other candidate returns, also did not appear on the Party's national expenditure return 3 . Enquiries were undertaken with the Party to identify missing items or to explain discrepancies between amounts apportioned to the Party within candidate returns and the amount reported by the Party. Following these enquiries an investigation was launched on 27 June 2016. The investigation focussed on the following two matters: Whether the Party's campaign spending return for the 2015 UKPGE was a complete statement of all campaign payments made. Failures, without reasonable excuse, in relation to this constitute an offence under section 82(4) of PPERA. Whether the Party's campaign spending return for the

2015 UKPGE contained all invoices and receipts related to the statement of payments of over £200 made. Failures, without reasonable excuse, in relation to this may constitute a separate offence under section 82(4) of PPERA. The legal framework The legal framework In accordance with section 24 of PPERA the registered treasurer of a party is responsible for compliance on the part of the Party with all parts of PPERA, unless the Party has a registered campaigns officer. In accordance with section 25 of PPERA, where a party has a registered campaigns officer, such as the Liberal Democrats, they are responsible for ensuring compliance with parts V to VII of PPERA. This includes the preparation and submission of reports prepared under section 80 of PPERA. Section 80(2) of PPERA requires the registered campaigns officer of a party to prepare a campaign spending return at the conclusion of a UKPGE campaign period. Section 80(3) requires that the return contains: a statement of all payments made in respect of campaign spending incurred during the campaign period; a statement of all disputed claims (where the campaigns officer refuses to pay the claim) of which the campaigns officer is aware; and a statement of all the unpaid claims (if any) of which the campaigns officer is aware Section 80(4) requires that the return contains: all invoices or receipts related to the payments (of value greater than £200); and a declaration of all notional spending. Section 82(1) of PPERA requires the registered campaigns officer of a party which incurred more than £250,000 of campaign spending to deliver the campaign spending return within six months of the end of the relevant campaign period. For the 2015 UKPGE, which took place on 7 May 2015, the deadline for delivering the return was 7 November 2015. Under section 82(4)(b) of PPERA, the registered campaigns officer commits an offence if, without reasonable excuse, he or she delivers a return which does not comply with the requirements of section 80(3) or (4) of PPERA. Pre-investigation enquiries Under our monitoring functions set out in section 145 of PPERA, we reviewed a sample of candidate returns from the 2015 UKPGE. These candidate returns were required by the Representation of the People Act 1983 ("the RPA") to include all election expenses incurred by those candidates. The review included Liberal Democrat Party candidates, as well as candidates from other parties. As set out above, we identified apparent discrepancies between the Party's spending return and certain candidate returns, so made enquiries. On 19 April 2016 we wrote to one candidate and their agent to seek clarification on the way three items had been reported in the candidate return 4 . A response to our enquiry was received from the Liberal Democrat Compliance Unit on 3 May 2016. The response explained that the discrepancy between the value of each of the three items, reported as incurred by the candidate, and the value of their invoices, was because some of the value had been apportioned to the Party 5 . We were unable to locate any items on the Party's return which matched the value apportioned to the Party in the candidate return. Consequently, we asked the Party to identify the three items of national expenditure, totalling £6,317, on its UKPGE spending return, and to explain how such apportionments were managed. The Party replied on 3 June 2016 setting out the system it used at the 2015 UKPGE to identify and collate party campaign expenditure. This includes spending incurred on behalf of the Party by Party branches, known as accounting units. Liberal Democrat accounting units are given authority by the central Party to incur campaign spending on its behalf, which must be recorded and reported to the Party. The Party also confirmed that the three items identified by us had not been included on the Party's original return and offered to report them. Upon receipt of this information, we conducted further analysis of other Liberal Democrat candidate returns 6 .The analysis identified 27 items of expenditure, totalling £20,691, that could not be located on the Party's return but appeared to have been apportioned to the Party by three candidates. On 10 June 2016, we told the Party to report the three items of expenditure missing from its spending return. We also detailed the further 27 items of Party expenditure that appeared to be missing from the Party's return, and advised the Party that it was concerned that the Party's 2015 UKPGE return was not complete. We asked the Party to review all Liberal Democrat candidate expenditure returns to ensure that all items of expenditure apportioned to the Party had been reported. The Party were advised to report any items they identified as missing and confirm that all items of expenditure had been reported to us. The Party responded on 17 June 2016 clarifying that three of the apparently missing items of apportioned expenditure were in the Party return, but the amounts had been incorrectly reported. These errors were put down to accounting unit treasurers recalculating the percentage of Party spend incorrectly which had resulted in a net under declaration of £2.82. The Party also agreed to conduct a review of its spending at the 2015 UKPGE. Given our concern that the Party's return was incomplete and that an offence under PPERA may have been committed, an investigation was commenced on 27 June 2016. We then awaited the outcome of the Party's review. The investigation and our findings The Party cooperated with our enquiries throughout the investigation. Missing campaign spending The Party concluded its review on 25 August 2016. It resulted in an additional 307 payments being reported to us. The 307 additional items included 27 payments totalling £26,714 that had been identified by us as missing from the Party's original return. The items also included a further 280 payments totalling £157,962 identified by the Party during its review. In total the 307 payments were made up of 258 individual payments totalling £144,063 and 49 notional payments totalling £40,614. Each additional item of spending was incurred by or on behalf of one of the Party's accounting units. The total value of the additional payments is £184,676, which when added to the Party's original return (and £2.82 under-declaration), increases the total expenditure incurred by approximately 5% from £3,529,106 to £3,713,785. Outstanding invoices The Party supplied 128 invoices in support of the 307 additional items of expenditure reported. Of the additional invoices, 122 were in support of payments exceeding £200, totalling £134,612. None of the additional invoices supplied by the Party related to items of expenditure which had previously been included within the Party's original return. Explanation provided by the Party The Party explained its system for compiling the 2015 UKPGE spending return broadly worked as follows:- Guidance was issued to agents and registered accounting unit treasurers, and treasurers were given delegated authority to incur Party campaign spending. All Party material was created and approved centrally and given a code to be quoted back to the Party on accounting unit returns where it was used. All template material was created centrally and was given a code to be quoted back to the Party on accounting unit returns where it was used. After the 2015 UKPGE, all accounting units were required to complete a form, either reporting all Party spending incurred or reporting nil spending if appropriate. Forms that were not supplied by a deadline given by the Party were chased by the Party's Compliance Unit right up until the Party's auditors began auditing the Party's return. The Party employed a risk assessment process when chasing outstanding returns. This was based on factors such as the Party's own experience of dealing with treasurers and accounting units on spending returns, donations and accounts returns, turnover declared within their accounts and the volume and value of donations previously declared. During the investigation and when making representations on our proposal to penalise the Party, it explained that the missing spending in its return had resulted from: One particular accounting unit having significant organisational problems after the election, in part caused by the serious illness of a key accounting unit official. These led to difficulties across the board for the particular accounting unit in terms of producing accounts and donation reports, as well as their Party spending report. Inaccurate reports from seven accounting units. Reports from five accounting units that were received after external auditors had begun the audit of the return, but prior to the submission of the return. The Party stated that its external auditors told it that these payments could not be added to its return at this point. The unexpected absence of the Party's Head of Compliance and Constitutional Support for serious health reasons. Redundancies amongst staff employed by accounting units, which were not within the control or responsibilities of the central Party. The loss of experienced internal resource as a result of major organisational changes within the Party following the result of the 2015 UKPGE, the loss of 49 out of 57 parliamentary seats and further the diversion of resources to conduct a leadership election for the Party. Our findings on the Party's explanation None of these factors constituted a reasonable excuse for the Party's incomplete spending return. The Party's internal system for collating information from accounting units was within its control, as was the ability to dedicate resources to appropriately manage such a system. Large and complex political parties require appropriate financial procedures to manage and account for all of their transactions, including payments incurred by or on behalf of the Party and its accounting units. There is always a risk of human error. However, this risk can be mitigated through the creation and review of adequate financial procedures, through training and through oversight and supervision of professional and voluntary staff. Further, the 2015 UKPGE was a major electoral event. A party with the campaigning experience of the Liberal Democrats should have adequate and robust internal financial procedures in place to meet the reporting obligations arising from the election. The Party's campaigns officer was responsible for ensuring that robust financial procedures were in place to deal with any unexpected issues that could arise, such as the unforeseen illness of a key member of staff. It appears that there was a significant reliance on the Head of Compliance and Constitutional Support's personal knowledge inherent in the system, and this was a contributing factor. We do not consider it appropriate for a compliance system of a larger party spending significant sums of money to rely overly on one individual's personal knowledge. The Party's reliance on accounting units to return forms to the central party reporting Party spending (or confirming a nil return) cannot be relied upon, unless the Party can also dedicate resources to appropriately manage such a system. Such events warrant high levels of compliance to ensure voters can have confidence in the transparency and integrity of political finance. Representations made by the Party on our proposed sanction On 10 November 2016, we issued a notice to the Party setting out our conclusion that Mr Gordon had committed an offence under section 82(4) in delivering an incomplete spending return, and proposing a sanction of £20,000. As required under PPERA, we gave the Party 28 days to make representations on its conclusions and proposed sanction. Those representations were then considered before final decisions on the offence and sanction were taken. The Party were asked to supply evidence of the instructions it purportedly received from its external auditors not to add further spending to the return once the audit had begun, in order that this could be considered as part of its representations, but did not do so. We therefore had no clear evidence to support whether the instructions were given or properly understood by the Party. If given, such instructions would be wrong, as it is not for the auditor to determine whether a spending return is complete. We are not aware of any other party receiving such instructions from an auditor. We noted that the Party could have contacted us for advice upon receipt of any such instructions, or at any point afterwards. In any event, PPERA places an obligation on a registered campaigns officer to submit a complete and accurate return. This obligation is not changed by instructions from an auditor or any other person not to include campaign spending payments. The Party raised the potential that treasurers in its accounting units may have committed offences under section 76 of PPERA, by not notifying it of Party campaign spending as soon as possible after paying it. To date, the Party has not supplied evidence of any offences under section 76 occurring. If it does so, we will consider the matter in line with our enforcement policy. Irrespective of any offences, however, the Party had a compliance process in train to obtain these returns and in many cases was notified of relevant payments before submitting its return. The matter was therefore within the control of the compliance systems for which Mr Gordon had responsibility. Of particular concern to us was the fact that the explanation provided by the Party made it clear that it was aware of some of the missing payments before the spending return was submitted. The Party stated that it found itself in a position where it faced either submitting a return that included the vast majority of its spending on time, or being penalised for submitting a complete return after the deadline. At no point prior to the submission of the return in November 2015, or between then and when we approached it on this matter in June 2016, did the Party tell us that the return was incomplete. No advice was requested on the instructions purportedly received from the Party's auditors, or on how to take forward any issues with the accuracy or content of the return. PPERA is clear that spending returns must be complete and accurate, and on time, when they are submitted. As a well-established Party with a long history of corresponding with us, the Party should have known to approach us on this matter as early as possible. It was a significant failing by the Party that it did not report this matter. Assurances sought from the Party post-investigation During the investigation, the Party's campaigns officer confirmed that, as a result of the issues highlighted by this matter, the Party had reviewed its systems for compiling party returns at elections and referendums. We advised the Party to ensure this review took into account the various factors that led to an incomplete return for the 2015 UKPGE. In response, the Party explained that it had amended its process for compiling party spending by accounting units, and had developed a new training package for accounting unit treasurers. In addition, the Party has confirmed it is conducting a wider review of its financial compliance processes. We will continue to seek assurances from the Party concerning the findings of its wider review of its processes, specifically on the changes it will make and how and when these will be implemented. Conclusions Offence under section 82(4) of PPERA Mr Tim Gordon, the registered campaigns officer for the Party, failed to deliver to us a campaign spending return which was a statement of all payments made by the Party in respect of its campaign for the 2015 UKPGE. In total 307 payments totalling £184,676 were missing from the Party's 2015 UKPGE campaign spending return without a reasonable excuse. The return therefore failed to comply with section 80(3) of PPERA. In total the missed 307 payments also resulted in 122 invoices in support of such payments being missing. As these were in support of items omitted from the original return only, the failure to include them was part of the same offence under section 84(2). We concluded that Mr Gordon committed one offence under section 82(4)(b) of PPERA in respect of the Party's 2015 UKPGE spending return. Penalty imposed We have imposed a financial penalty on the Liberal Democrats of £20,000. In determining this penalty we took into account a number of mitigating and aggravating factors. We took into account the Party's cooperation during the investigation. We also considered the extent and value of the missing payments and the overall detriment to transparency in political caused by this offence. We considered the fact that the Party is an established organisation with significant campaign spending. Based on those factors, and recognising the potential damage to public confidence in the controls we regulate and the importance of ensuring future compliance by both the Liberal Democrats and others, we considered that a variable monetary penalty of £20,000 was appropriate. However, we noted that the failure by the Party to notify it that the return was incomplete prior to submission or at any point afterwards was a significant aggravating factor. This would have made a penalty in excess of £20,000 appropriate, were this not the maximum we may impose for a single offence. Potential criminal offence under section 83(3) of PPERA required the Party's campaigns officer to declare that he had examined the return and that, to the best of his knowledge and belief, the return was complete and correct as required by law. A declaration by the campaigns officer to that effect was delivered alongside the Party's 2015 UKPGE. Knowingly or recklessly making a false declaration under this section is a criminal offence under section 83(3) of PPERA. Such offences fall outside the remit of our civil sanctioning powers. This investigation established that the Party's 2015 UKPGE spending return was neither complete nor correct. Further, the evidence provided by the Party indicates that some persons within the Party were aware of some of the missing payments before the spending return was submitted. Consequently some persons within the Party were aware that the return was not complete nor correct prior to the campaigns officer signing the accompanying declaration, raising the potential that it was a false declaration. We have referred this issue to the Metropolitan Police Service. It will be a matter for the police as to what steps they take following the Commission's referral.

1. In accordance with section 25 of PPERA, where a party has a registered campaigns officer, they are responsible for ensuring compliance with Parts V to VII of that Act, as opposed to the party treasurer. This includes the submission of campaign expenditure returns in respect of a UKPGE ■ Back to content at footnote 1

2. Sir Bob Russell (Colchester). There is no suggestion that the data reported by the candidate and agent within the candidate return was wrong. ■ Back to content at footnote 2

3. It is the legal responsibility of the Party's registered campaigns officer to ensure a party's spending return is a complete statement of all payments made by, or on behalf of, the Party. The Commission does not proactively review on a line by line basis whether a party's spending return is complete and accurate prior to publication as it is important to publish the information proactively as soon as possible after we receive it to ensure the greatest transparency around spend and to inform the media's reporting of the issue. The Commission will take appropriate action where it has credible evidence that a failure to comply has occurred and where it is proportionate to do so ■ Back to content at footnote 3

4. Sir Bob Russell (Colchester). There is no suggestion that the data reported by the Candidate and agent within the candidate return was wrong. ■ Back to content at footnote 4

5. Where spending applies to both a party and a candidate's campaign, the spending must be split accordingly between campaigns. In such circumstances an honest assessment, based on the facts, must be made to determine the proportion of spending that can be fairly attributed to the Party and candidate. Spending apportioned to the Party must be included in the Party's spending return. ■ Back to content at footnote 5

6. Ed Davey (Kingston and Surbiton), Tim Farron (Westmorland and Lonsdale) and Mark Williams (Ceredigion). There is no suggestion that the data reported by the Candidate and agent within each candidate return was wrong. ■ Back to content at footnote 6 Related content Report: Voting in 2017 Read our report about voting at the general election in 2017 Testing the EU referendum question Find out about our testing of the EU referendum question Report: How the 2017 UK general election was run Read our report about how the 2017 general election was run Results and turnout at the 2017 UK general election View the results and turnout at the 2017 general election

6. Making sure electoral law is fair and effective | Electoral Commission Search

6. Making sure electoral law is fair and effective You are in the Corporate plan 2022/23 to 2026/27 section Home Our plans and priorities Corporate plan 2022/23 to 2026/27 On this page Supporting effective consideration and implementation of legislation in the UK, Scottish and Welsh parliaments Focus on Wales and on England Engaging with governments' current electoral law reform agendas, while continuing to make the case for further reform Continuing to provide expert advice on the practicability and impact of any changes which could be made to improve the electoral system First published: 25 April 2022 Last updated: 25 April 2022 Summary Our electoral system is underpinned by a legal framework which establishes how elections are delivered. It sets out who is allowed to vote and the various ways they can cast their vote. It sets out who can stand for elections, who can campaign, and how much they can spend. And it sets out how electoral administrators should deliver elections, including counting and declaring the results. Given its cross cutting impact, we want to work with parliamentarians and governments to improve electoral law so that it is fit for purpose, reduces complexity, inefficiencies and risk, and enables innovation. We will work with others to reform electoral law by: supporting effective consideration and implementation of legislation in the UK, Scottish and Welsh parliaments engaging with governments' current electoral law reform agendas, while continuing to make the case for further reform continuing to provide expert advice on the practicability and impact of any changes which could be made to improve the electoral system Supporting effective consideration and implementation of legislation in the UK, Scottish and Welsh parliaments We will continue to scrutinise new electoral legislation and provide expert briefings to governments and parliaments on legislative proposals. We will focus on providing an evidence-based analysis of any proposed changes to electoral law, to support informed consideration of any changes. We will also work to support effective implementation of any new legislation, ensuring that voters, electoral administrators and campaigners understand what it means for them in each case. Focus on Wales and England Focus on Wales: Electoral reform We will work closely with the Welsh Government and the Senedd as they develop legislation for Welsh elections. This may include reform ahead of the next local government elections in May 2022, a wider local government elections Bill and reform of Senedd elections ahead of the 2026 polls. We will provide advice on the practical implementation of proposals which reflect the views of the electoral community. Through our role in designing forms and our public awareness activity, we will also play a key role in implementing any changes, such as making the postal voting system more accessible. We also expect to play a key role in evaluating and publishing a report on the piloting of any reform measures, which may include early voting centres, mobile polling stations and voting in educational establishments. Focus on England: Developing capacity to support implementation of change We will continue to work with partners across the electoral community to develop and implement solutions to support local authorities to increase the capacity and resilience of their electoral services functions. This will not only help to manage the existing known risks to the delivery of well-run elections, but will also provide a firm foundation for the effective implementation of changes to electoral law. A key focus will be the development of a toolkit to support local authorities with designing and reviewing their electoral services functions, ensuring they have the skills, resources and processes that they need. Engaging with governments' current electoral law reform agendas, while continuing to make the case for further reform There is an urgent need for governments to simplify and modernise electoral law. It is increasingly complex, which is not just a technical or legal problem. There are real costs and consequences for voters, campaigners and electoral administrators, as well as for the regulators and enforcement bodies which struggle to uphold and enforce the law. The UK's Law Commissions have produced a blueprint for simplified and modernised electoral law, which is supported by us, parliamentary select committees, electoral administrators, electoral lawyers and academics. We will continue to make the case for the implementation of this electoral law reform, while supporting parliamentarians and governments with reform when it happens. Continuing to provide expert advice on the practicability and impact of any changes which could be made to improve the electoral system. We want to maintain high levels of public confidence in the electoral process, including perceptions of the legitimacy of the results. We will continue to research public attitudes to understand how the electoral system could be improved to meet voters' needs. We will also continue to conduct research on the delivery of and participation in elections and referendums, and use this research to identify reforms to electoral law and process that would improve them. We will continue to support governments to successfully implement changes to electoral law, and will provide evidence-based recommendations, expertise and practical advice. Technological advances in digital campaigning bring new challenges, and we know that lack of transparency is already a concern for voters. Results from our 2021 public opinion tracking survey show that 37% of people disagree that they can find out who has produced the political information they see online. And, 40% are concerned about how or why online political adverts are targeted at them. We will therefore continue support to governments to implement our recommendations on digital campaigning, while encouraging further improvements.

Navigation 5. Supporting local electoral services delivery and resilience Section 5 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan 7. A modern and sustainable electoral system Section 7 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan

Confidence assessment: findings and recommendations | Electoral Commission Search

Confidence assessment: findings and recommendations You are in the May 2019 voter identification pilot schemes section Home Our research Voter identification pilots May 2019 voter identification pilot schemes First published: 23 July 2019 Last updated: 23 July 2019 Intro In May 2019, 10 pilot schemes trialled ways of implementing identification of voters at polling stations. This is an assessment of the confidence in each type of identification. There are some technical recommendations to improve the strength, integrity and usability of this voter ID model, which would benefit the security of the process for operation at a larger scale. Background Richard Dykes was asked by the Electoral Commission to undertake an independent assessment of the security provided by each of the different types of identification used at the May 2019 pilot schemes to feed into its evaluation. The Commission was interested in: The level of security provided by each ID document for each model The extent the issuing process can provide identity assurance The extent the checking process can provide identity assurance Recommendations on the issuing and checking processes to improve assurance Background The May 2019 pilot schemes Although voters at polling stations in Great Britain do not currently need to show ID to vote, the UK Government is exploring ways in which voters in Great Britain could be required to show a form of ID before they vote at polling stations in future. The Electoral Commission is responsible for evaluating the Government's second tranche of voter identification (ID) pilot schemes, trialling voter identification measures in ten local authorities for the May 2019 local elections. The evaluation of the pilot schemes cannot judge whether the requirement to show identification prevented fraud occurring at these elections. This security assessment seeks to address that gap by objectively considering how secure each identification type used is as a form of voter identification. This report provides a comparative assessment of the level of confidence in voter identity provided by each form of identification document. Aims of this report This voter ID assessment report explores the following aspects regarding the pilots, by: Identifying relevant common standards for identity verification, particularly as applied in relation to public service provision in the UK. Establishing a framework to review different types of ID being used in the pilots, in order to provide an assessment of the level of security provided by each of the documents used in the pilot, as a form of voter identification. Applying those standards where appropriate, to assess the degree to which the issuing process for each of the documents deemed acceptable in the 2019 pilot schemes can provide assurance about the identity of the holder. Similarly, assessing the degree to which the checking process for each of the documents deemed acceptable in the 2019 pilot schemes can provide assurance about the identity of the holder. Where feasible (taking into account the extent to which Returning Officers or Electoral Registration Officers have control over the issuing process) making recommendations about possible enhancements to the issuing process that could improve the level of assurance provided by each of the document types specifically issued as part of the 2019 pilot schemes. Making recommendations about possible enhancements to the checking process that could improve the level of assurance provided by each of the acceptable documents in the 2019 pilot schemes, including any simple additional guidelines or checks for polling station staff about what they should look for when checking ID. Framework for assuring voter identification Before the voter ID methods trialled in the pilots can be assessed, this framework establishes, contextualises and justifies the relevant factors and criteria that will be considered in this assessment. Note that processes related to anonymous, postal and proxy voting have been excluded from the scope of this assessment, as have factors regarding eligibility to vote, by reference to nationality, address catchment or multiple residential addresses.

Framework for assuring voter identification Common standards and guidance for identity verification The UK Government has established various sets of identity related standards, containing regulations or guidance, to support the providers of public or financial services. These sources of guidance should be applied, where appropriate and beneficial for gaining sufficient confidence in the identity of their service consumers, in order to mitigate identity related risks sufficiently to transact or share personal information:

- GPG 44 - Cabinet Office GDS Good Practice Guide (GPG) 44 (currently v2.0, Oct 2014) – Authentication and credentials for use with HMG online services
- GPG 45 - Cabinet Office GDS Good Practice Guide (GPG) 45 (currently v4.1, Apr 2019) – Identity proofing and verification of an individual
- MLR 2017 - Money Laundering, Terrorist Financing and Transfer of Funds (Information on the Payer) Regulations 2017
- NDFU 2016 - Home Office NDFU Guidance on examining identity documents 2016

Many other forms of departmental, local or business sector guidance also exist which may also have some relevance to the context of voter identity, however most of these are themselves derived to some degree from one or more of the authoritative sources listed above. For example DWP have adapted such guidance to produce their current Common Standards for Identity Verification and Authentication (2017), used to support the verification of benefits claimants' identity in all channels, not just online. Similarly the MLR 2017 regulations are implemented by all banks, solicitors and estate agents to help prevent fraud and money laundering by their customers. The UK Government supports the representation of public service and business interests in the standardisation of identity practices across the EU and internationally, for example through contribution to the development and review of EU eIDAS regulations and BSI PAS 499. As such, taking guidance from the authoritative UK Government sources should be regarded as being the most appropriate way to remain aligned to EU and international standards.

Personation and related risks to electoral integrity The GPG guidance reflects distinct levels of confidence in each of the elements of identity verification and authentication, in order to address the specific need to mitigate a range of risks from low impact (non-financial) to the highest levels of fraud or national security. Likewise MLR 2017 is also primarily aimed at mitigating the risks of high value fraud. In order to make a practical assessment of the confidence in voter ID to be gained from the trialled identification approaches, or indeed any protection measures, it is important to understand the key risks to electoral integrity that may be identity related and the impact those risks could have on electoral outcome, including any potential negative impacts of the additional identity measures. The following is a non-exhaustive and qualitative review of the more relevant risks, which may also occur in combination to achieve a compromise of electoral integrity:

- Electoral identity fraud is not identified, resulting in an incorrect election outcome;
- The public do not have confidence in the integrity of results of UK elections, due to perceived threats to, or perceived weaknesses in, the UK electoral system;
- An ineligible individual registers to vote, in order to pervert the outcome of a future election;
- An individual registers a false or stolen identity as an elector, in order to pervert the outcome of a future election;
- An organised registration of multiple false, ineligible or eligible-but-unknowing individuals, in order to pervert the outcome of a future election;
- An individual is registered without their knowledge to an incorrect address, resulting in capture of the named individuals subsequent polling card, to make a personated vote;
- One or more polling cards are illegally obtained from an address, in order to setup false voter attendance and fraudulent votes cast at polling stations; Identity mules are organised to present a set of personated identities and vote in a number of polling stations (one identity/polling card for one vote each per polling station), in order to pervert the outcome of an election; While some of these risks have occurred historically, to compromise the integrity of elections in Northern Ireland (for which NI voter ID measures were later applied), there have not been significant numbers of identified instances of personated attended voting in polling stations in Great Britain, beyond small numbers of individuals operating in isolation. The impact of isolated individuals compromising a single vote is mostly minimal, however an organised exploit to one or more voting areas could potentially throw an election, especially in a marginal area. Key principles to consider in implementing voter identification The following statements of principle are derived from both previous reviews of electoral integrity and identity assurance guidance; these should help in keeping a balanced and pragmatic view of the value of specific pilot measures for securing voter ID in the context of the overall electoral process: An identity is a combination of characteristics that identifies a person; a single characteristic is usually not enough to uniquely identify a person; Evidence of the full name, their date of birth and some personal address history is generally required to support unique identification of an individual; this may require more than one independent source of evidence that correlate to the same full name; Some meaningful degree of validation or verification of evidence is advisable to resist personation, forgery or counterfeit; Confidence in personal identity may be built up in steps at separate times, however there should be a proportionate measure to ensure the identity is in the control of only the same person at each step (i.e. from registration through to voter ID checking); The strength of any security process should be consistent across the primary journey as well as all exception handling processes; Document checking in polling stations is constrained to simple manual or technology-assisted processes requiring only minimal training and non-specialist devices, if any. Standard factors for assuring personal identification Three identity assurance processes in particular are often confused with each other, or are not otherwise differentiated adequately in use: validation, verification and authentication [of identity]. Validation and verification are both defined below, whereas authentication only relates to the need for a subsequent verification some time later than the first, where a secure token (credential) is used to ensure the same person is present on the subsequent occasion(s), as an alternative to re-proofing that identity each time. The guidance in the two GDS GPGs addresses the following aspects of identity assurance: Identity checking – “is the person who they say they are?”, Strength – the documentary or other/electronic evidence is hard to forge or counterfeit; Validity – the identity exists and the evidence is genuine and valid; Activity – evidence the identity has behaved normally in the real world over time; Fraud – no records showing that the identity is related to known fraud or high risks; Verification – that the identity belongs to the person who is claiming it; Authentication credentials – “is the person the same individual as previously?”, Quality – the documentary or electronic token is strong, and hard to crack or duplicate; Issuance – ensure the token is securely delivered intact only to the correct person; Integrity – resilient to compromises such as disclosure, replay or personation; Monitoring – recognise normal good behaviour and suspicion of misuse or theft; Checking – test the token is genuine and valid, and under the control of the owner. Like the MLR and NDFU guidance, the GPG guidance also then covers operating aspects of how to assess evidence as acceptable for the level of confidence required in a service context. This is most pertinent to either issuing or checking identity documents or tokens. Assessment of voter identification pilots Voter identification methods trialled by the pilots In 2019 the UK Government legislated to allow pilots to take place in 10 local authorities. Authorities had a choice of three pilot types: Poll card model (or one form of photo ID) Standard poll card (used in NW Leicestershire) Technology enabled poll card (used in Mid Sussex & Watford) Mixed model (used in Braintree, Broxtowe, Craven, Derby & North Kesteven) One form of photographic ID or two forms of non-photographic ID At least one document should include a residential address Photographic model (used in Pendle & Woking) One form of photo ID only In these 2019 pilots, a consistent list of ID documents deemed acceptable was provided; this full list of accepted ID can be found at Annex A, reproduced from the Government's report on equality considerations for these pilots. In all cases, local authorities were required to offer a free locally issued ID, although local processes and designs differed. Application of standard factors to assure voter identification To bring the identity standards into the real world of the processes related to elections, it is appropriate to understand these identity assurance factors and their relevance in the context of the experience of voters engaging with the electoral processes, which may be summarised for the voter identity journey (rolling in any exception processes) as: Individual electoral registration by a voter; Validation of voter registration by the Electoral Registration Officer (ERO); Optional identity verification for issuance of a local electoral ID certificate; Issuance of a standard or technology enabled voter polling card; Voter identity checking at a polling station on behalf of the Returning Officer (RO) or Presiding Officer (PO). The standard identity assurance factors relevant to the methods trialled by the voter ID pilots may be illustrated (in general terms only here, and at differing degrees of assurance) by drawing from this voter identity journey in the following examples: Identity checking Strength – the documentary or evidence is hard to forge or counterfeit Initial voter registration only requires a declaration of a unique real world identity (full name, date of birth, some form of address) plus either a National Insurance Number (NINo, the DWP & HMRC personal record reference) and/or recent address history; Subsequent separate proofing for the pilots requires presentation of either acceptable photo ID or officially issued documents evidencing the claimed identity (many of which have no tamper-resistant security features). Validity – the identity exists and the evidence is genuine and valid At registration the NINo is checked against a DWP or HMRC data source; For some pilots, a voter may present (at a polling station) two apparently original and acceptable documents, both consistently evidencing the full name, and at least one of them showing their residential address, that must match an entry on the electoral roll; Otherwise for the pilots a voter may be required to present a polling card which they have received in the post or as a replacement in person, on which the personal details exactly match a record on the electoral roll; Activity – evidence the identity has behaved normally in the real world over time In the standards only and identity lacking Photo ID needs to be checked for evidence of activity at low assurance. Here the appropriate option is to show two or more documents evidencing the identity, which should both in combination meet the requirements of MLR 2017; Fraud – no records showing that the identity is related to known fraud or high risks There was no evident checking of voter identity or bank cards presented against a counter-fraud or identity theft black-list; Verification – that the identity belongs to the person who is claiming it There is a basic verification of the person claiming the identity at initial registration, by posting a confirmation to their registered address; Voters are asked, as a counter-fraud measure, to verbally declare from memory their full name and registered address; polling cards and/or voter ID are not checked until after an eligible electoral roll record has been found matching the voter's declaration; A voter's address is in effect verified where both (i) the polling card is posted to that address, and (ii) that polling card is required to be presented at a polling station, where it is checked for physical authenticity (e.g. QR barcode) and/or validated against the electoral roll; A voter may present a photo ID that has a good likeness, matching the full name and potentially (not mandated) the address on the electoral roll, and the document appears to be authentic to the non-specialist polling staff checking it. Authentication credentials There are two instances in which the electoral authorities check identity and then issue a document themselves to a voter, for subsequent presentation at a polling station, effectively as a credential to link those events, are: In all cases, issuing an individual polling card by post, or a replacement in person; For some pilots, issuing a local electoral ID certificate, some with a photo. For this assessment, it is important to note that these two documents are therefore not in themselves original evidence of identity in the overall electoral process, but merely a token indicating a previous identity check by the electoral authorities. Quality A QR barcode makes successful forgery or counterfeit of a polling card more difficult, as knowledge of the coding mechanism of a valid electoral record would be required. Issuance Polling cards are generally posted to the registered address, to limit the opportunity for one getting into the hands of anyone with no access to that address; note this only adds any benefit if the polling card is actually required to be shown at polling time.

Integrity A local electoral ID certificate with a genuinely attached or printed photo likeness provides strong evidence that it was issued to the same person later showing it. Monitoring While difficult at polling time, statistical data gathered by election monitors and polling staff may later show unusual or unexpected trends in voter behaviour in particular areas, such as much higher use of one particular form of identification at polling than in other areas, thus alerting to the possibility of some external influence on that community. Checking Security features of any physical document, including type of paper or printing method, and inclusion of a testable QR barcode or a photo to check likeness. Evaluation of strength of acceptable ID documents by issuance The standards have no exhaustive list of which documentary types have what strength, however they do provide a clear scoring criteria in GPG 45 and a broad hierarchy in MLR 2017. Of those identification documents acceptable to the pilots, their value in terms just of issuance strength may be summarised as follows (See Annex A for the detailed list): List 1 High Strength (score 3+, MLR primary photo ID) These are all officially issued photo ID with security features that uniquely identify the individual and provide a unique reference to the record held by the issuer. The photo likeness binds the document to the holder, and their real world identity was first verified by the issuer. These are the passport, driver licence photocard, NI electoral ID card, biometric immigration documents, EEA photo ID cards and an MOD ID card. Medium Strength (score 2) While not as strong as the primary photo ID, the same basic criteria each still apply but to a lesser degree. Given that specialist document checking cannot be applied in a polling station, these identification documents should be just as appropriate in this context. This class of documents included a PASS age card, the various travel or parking permit photo cards and any local electoral ID certificate. GPG 45 & MLR 2017 both include a photo ID firearms certificate in this category rather than as a List 2 item in the pilots. List 2 Medium Strength (score 2, MLR primary non-photo ID, generally with date of birth) Some officially produced documents are issued with unique references and physical security features in the paper or printing, and after robust verification or certified witnessing, although they lack a photo likeness. These carry more weight than other paper evidence as they can be validated against a data source and they are harder to forge or counterfeit. This group includes the official registration certificates for birth, adoption, marriage and partnerships plus a firearms certificate. Low Strength (score 1, MLR secondary evidence of address) These are generally documents that evidence routine living and financial activity of the individual named at their residential address, that can be uniquely referenced (e.g. by account number) with the issuing institution, and which should be required to be produced in original form on the issuers own printed headed document paper, rather than home printed from an electronic form (unless there is a QR barcode or similar validation printed). This group includes almost all other items on the pilot List 2, except for Bank Cards, Cheque Books and a National Insurance Number Card. It is worth noting that neither GPG 45 nor MLR 2017 would suggest that evidence is adequate when only two items at Low Strength are presented, however one medium strength official document (even if the address may not be current), when supported by a second item showing a recent and still current address should be acceptable. There are groups in the population who will be unable to meet this requirement due to a lack of original documents in their possession (and often without a bank account); these will generally be individuals who would also be relying on some support from benefits and charity. For the electoral context, if a letter of benefits award is offered, it could be treated as a primary non-photo document, if supported by additional secondary evidence of address (which may be transient). Bank Cards, Cheque Books and National Insurance Number Card While bank cards, cheque books and national insurance number cards are included as acceptable in List 2 for the pilots, they should be regarded as too weak a form of identification when offered in a context where they cannot be validated or verified at the time, as they do not provide a printed unique person identity alongside the numerical identifier on the card; i.e. they lack both date of birth and address information, and often no forenames. Note that while banks can verify bank cards electronically using a PIN checker and an online verification of the resulting code; this isn't available to polling stations. A counter argument could be made for bank cards that still carry a signature strip on their reverse (no longer universal) as well as a full name. This was not trialled in the pilots, however if the voter could replicate their card signature in the presence of polling staff, this would give some confidence in their ownership of the card and thus the name on it. This is however not a recommended approach due to complexity and likely exceptions. Although the National Insurance Number of the voter is the preferred validation identifier used to validate an individual's real identity following a standard electoral registration application, this identifier is not available on the electoral roll to staff in polling stations. The card cannot therefore be validated to an adequate degree to relate back to the original voter registration, and is therefore of no real value as identification at polling. Polling Cards – both standard and technology enabled In standard electoral procedures, voters are currently not required to present their polling card in order to be permitted to vote; they may simply declare their personal details which are checked against the copy of the electoral roll at the polling station. The standard polling card is generally issued by post to each elector at their registered address on the roll a few weeks ahead of polling day. It is usually a printed card bearing the full name and address (but not date of birth) of the elector, and by being posted has in effect verified the address of its holder by polling day, unless it is a replacement collected in person using some other local procedure (if any) for identity verification. There are three contexts in which the pilots trialled further use of the standard polling card: Standard - as an optional List 2 item of secondary address evidence. Where the poll card has been posted and received by the voter, this postal verification provides a reasonable link between identity at registration and at the polling station. For most voters there will have been a validation of personal details against their National Insurance record with HMRC/DWP, and then a postal verification. As with any other secondary address evidence, any similar person (i.e. by apparent age & sex) with access to that address, and therefore access to the poll card, could attempt to personate the real person. Standard - On its own as an authentication token (in place of photo ID) In this use case only the polling card is required to be produced in order to cast a vote in the name of the associated identity on the electoral roll. In this case the real identity is validated by National Insurance record at registration, and the address verified by post (if so delivered). This is a weaker use case when the card is used on its own and not used in conjunction with another List 2 document. This is however still of some real practical value, if only at a low level, and certainly better value than providing no physical evidence at polling. Technology Enabled – on its own as an authentication token (in place of photo ID) Two pilot areas trialled use of a polling card enabled with a printed QR barcode on its reverse. Tablets with the Modern Democracy QR barcode reading and identity validation app were provided to polling stations. In issuance terms, the technology enabled polling cards follow the same processes as the standard cards. The QR barcode provides a stronger defence against attempts to forge or counterfeit a card, as the codification of the QR barcode is designed to enable the personal details on the card to be validated simply, and checked automatically against the register. There is still no verification of the person's real identity by this method; no different in this respect to any other non-photographic evidence. This does provide strong enforcement of one record only having one vote...though this has not been identified as a significant electoral integrity risk, as the one vote could still potentially be personated (e.g. in multiple occupancy dwellings). Local electoral ID certificate – with or without a photo likeness All pilots were required to have the capability to provide a form of local electoral ID certificate, and such a certificate required a photo likeness where the trial method required presentation of photo ID. The essential requirement for the capability to issue such a certificate locally is to provide a fall-back method to support those voters unable through circumstances to present standard identification documents of an acceptable type. There is less uniformity in the approaches taken and formats used for issuing a local electoral ID certificate, although generally templates to support trialling a photo ID model included a photo likeness. Some (if not all) local electoral authorities asked potential voters to offer a suitable and trusted person to demonstrate their own identity and then attest to the identity of the applicant for the certificate. They may take and/or incorporate a suitable photo likeness in the certificate issued then by post or (more likely) in person. Some authorities then incorporated a replacement polling card in the reverse of the certificate; in any case each authority (regardless of pilot group) would regard the local electoral ID certificate as the only evidence of identity that would then be required at polling. Where a local electoral ID certificate is issued without a photo likeness, the voter is thus able to meet the identity checking requirement, following the prior attestation, in circumstances where the original polling card would have been insufficient on its own, i.e. the mixed and photo ID only pilots. This process would be superfluous in the pilots that accepted only a polling card, and was never used in such cases. As the local resources available to an electoral authority may be unable to produce and issue a document with advanced security features (such as holograms, relief printing effects or watermarks), the ID certificate with no photo likeness is a weak token to link the attested identity to the voter presenting it at a polling station, however it is certainly no worse than the standard polling card identity model. Adding a photo likeness when issued does at least provide a visual verification at the polling station that the same person is present, even though the document itself may have no meaningful security features. In practice very few local ID certificates were produced for the pilots, as most of those who actually applied already possessed adequate evidence in the form of other documents. For example Woking had 37 local certificates issued and produced to polling stations, being only 0.02% of the voters identified before voting; this is however a fairly affluent area which may not reflect the needs of more challenging areas. Evaluation of checking of identity for voting All the pilot areas have issued training materials that appear consistent with the pre-pilot common guidance on both the acceptable list of identification documents and on the procedures for voter eligibility and identity checking in polling stations. In the absence of any direct evidence, for this assessment it is assumed that all pre-polling procedures are followed as per the guidance in the five part Electoral Commission Guidance for Electoral Registration Officers. The confidence gained in the identity of a voter at polling time has been built up over all the steps by which there is interaction between that voter and the electoral authorities, so long as there is an adequate link or 'bind' between a series of separate steps over time. For this reason the evaluation of ID checking will consider the end-to-end journeys. As the methods in each polling station appear to all be consistent with the pilot method selected for trialling in each pilot area, it is only necessary to consider each of the distinct identification tests used:

Standard polling card presented Technology enabled polling card presented One form of photographic ID presented Two forms of non-photographic ID presented Local electoral ID certificate presented Standard polling card presented All electors who have previously made a successful and validated individual electoral registration will, a few weeks ahead of the election date, receive a standard polling card at their registered address. In identity terms the original polling card on its own has low evidential strength, however in process terms there has also been a basic validation of that identity against Government data, and verification of the postal address. A replacement polling card is normally marked as such and may have been issued in person; it wasn't clarified whether an ID check may be required for in person collection; In pilots where a polling card was accepted on its own, the polling station staff take the polling card and require the voter to state their name and address without reference to the card, and the stated identity is then checked against the electoral register before the polling card is then checked for a match. The voter's name and address are then called out before ballot papers are issued. These measures were applied to mitigate vote fraud, and they would certainly make organised use of identity mules harder to be convincing. On balance this method provides some validation of a real world identity with verification of address and tested knowledge of the persons claimed personal details, plus a link through from registration to voting. The user experience of this process is really no more challenging than the general process, adding only the need to save and bring their polling card to vote. This approach therefore does effectively provide a reasonable but low degree of confidence (in terms of the verification standards) in the integrity of the resulting vote, unlike the current optional process, which does not require a poll card to be presented. Technology enabled polling card presented To the voter the process here will seem identical to the standard polling card method. An investment in technology is however required to support issuance of the polling card with a QR code, as well as the electronic scan of that code and an automated check against the electoral register in the polling station. The security benefit is a stronger authentication bind between the register record and the card presented at polling; i.e. defence against counterfeit polling cards related to existing register entries. There is no historic evidence that this form of personation attack has been attempted, and given that the real standard polling card may also be presented, the duplication would be detected to enable investigation. The technology may even reduce identity confidence, as the voter's declared identity is not manually compared with the electoral roll. This method would appear to actually offer little or no benefit to electoral integrity for the increased cost and complexity of automating the process. One form of photographic ID presented The early part of this overall process is no different to the standard polling card process, and indeed this option is offered as an alternative to the polling card paths in those pilot areas. The only difference in the checking process is that the identity check following the register eligibility check may be satisfied with a single item of acceptable medium or strong photo ID. This does however require the polling staff to have some training in recognition and basic physical inspection to determine if (to the inexpert eye) the documents are genuine and haven't been tampered with. There is no data available to determine how effective these checks were in practice, as there was no sheep dip process to sample any of the voters and their evidence. This approach is however relatively hard to attack in a bulk manner, and is therefore likely very effective as a deterrent against organised attack, even if a few dodgy documents do get accepted undetected in small numbers. There is also no strong correlation required between either date of birth or address of the voter between the photo id and the electoral register, however as the personal verification is stronger, this can be ignored safely here. From the pilots, it was apparent that a good proportion of voters do routinely carry their driving licence photocard or bus pass, and probably welcome the opportunity to vote despite forgetting to pick up their polling card. This makes this method worthwhile as an option to the mandatory presentation of a standard polling card. Two forms of non-photographic ID presented In process terms the mixed model checking process is of course the same as the other manual evidence checking methods. In principle this method provides greater confidence in the current address of the voter for correlation with the electoral register, as it goes beyond requiring just the polling card (although the polling card is an option for one piece of evidence). The process is more demanding for polling staff to check given the much wider range of potential evidence that may be produced, and the practical difficulty in differentiating genuine from home printed statements, for example. In MLR terms, the objective of this specific method is to enable correlation of a more recent/current address with official identity evidence that lacks such an address. GPG 45 has no profile that would accept a low proofing with only two weak items of evidence. In the electoral context the voter's official identity has been validated at registration, and the polling card provides a verification of current address – both with much more simplicity than the 'two documents' method here, and with frankly little different confidence in identity. Data from the Craven pilot shows that the vast majority of voters taking this option produced their polling card supported by a bank card from their wallet; the bank card was produced as much as 10 times more often than a bank statement or utility bill. In the real world the bank card offered no proofing value in a polling station context, and the statements or bills (which are increasingly emailed to customers these days) offer little if anything in confidence in addition to a polling card. If two statements or bills are offered together stating a full name, assuming they really are both genuinely posted to the individual at the same address (not required in the pilot rules), then they should give as much confidence in voter identity as would a polling card, as all should have been obtained by post at the address. This was however a very little used option taken in the pilot at Craven for which data is available. Given the training and checking complexity, and the high chance of ineligible documents with no real proofing value being accepted, this method provides very low assurance for the effort involved. Local electoral ID certificate presented As previously stated, where the identity checking requirement is for documents issued by parties other than the local electoral authorities, then it is essential that a local electoral ID certificate or its equivalent may be provided to eligible voters who due to circumstances are otherwise unable to meet the requirement. The attestation process is probably the only appropriate identity verification method possible to enable this approach, however it should be recognised this is still only a relatively weak assurance of identity. In practical terms any of the pilots that would accept a polling card on its own would not have a need to produce a local certificate option. Individuals who also have difficulty with having their identity validated at electoral registration already have fall back methods available to them under the Guidance for Electoral Registration Officers, including attestation.

Overall Findings and Recommendations

Overall comparative assessment of confidence in voter identity

While each of the identity checking methods trialled in the pilots have strengths and some disadvantages, there is a clear baseline or benchmark with the standard polling card method, which has a low but meaningful level of assurance that can be linked to preserve a consistent level of confidence in identity throughout, from initial electoral registration to checking at a polling station. The various linked validations and verifications may not be hard to compromise in small numbers, however they should thwart and enable detection of organised or bulk attempts at compromise. At minimal cost over traditional procedures, it also provides a user journey that is accessible to nearly all voters, and straightforward opportunities for exception handling where extra support is required by those in need. The extra assurance of the QR coding of the polling card may give an impression of a positive security measure and a way to embrace the digital opportunities out there, however from a meaningful assurance perspective this is addressing a risk that is not significant and potentially enabling other exploits, as well as being costly. This does not offer a genuine assurance improvement. Although not yet trialled, capturing a digital photo as part of electoral registration (much as with bus passes) to enable a photo printed polling card may give a simpler way to provide a more positive and verifiable bind with the person throughout the journey, and still not require expensive technology in polling stations. Where voters happen to have a driving licence photocard, passport or bus pass, in particular, these enable effective identity verification with even just an inexpert physical inspection in polling stations, and may be more convenient than remembering a polling card for some. It should also deter or detect organised bulk compromise attempts. The main weakness of this approach is that a significant proportion of voters in some areas will not already have one of these List 1 documents; a method is only as good as its weakest component, and here solving the needs of those without photo ID is the actual key to any confidence in voting integrity. This method should therefore be offered as an option for those who do find it convenient. Basic training to recognise and check just the common or popular List 1 photo ID is neither expensive nor time consuming, as has been trialled. While the two document option appears at first glance to offer a higher assurance than the polling card method for those with no photo ID, in reality the approach taken was compromised by the use of bank cards in this context, and it will be increasingly hard for polling station staff without better training and special equipment to tell apart original and home print documents in this category. As there is no meaningful bind with the electoral registration process, this approach adds nothing of value to the polling card method, and should be discontinued. Where it was trialled the actual assurance was in 90% of cases based only on presentation of the polling card as one of the two items. Finally the local electoral identity certificate was rarely used, however this must be offered in some form if photo ID is required and a polling card is not offered as the alternative. If this ID certificate is intended to be used as a single document as an alternative to a photo ID, these should really only be produced to incorporate a photo likeness. In reality if the polling card method is always to be an acceptable baseline, then the need for creating a separate local photo ID becomes redundant. A photo on the polling card would also effectively replace the need for a separate certificate process. Recommendations to enhance confidence in voter identity Consideration for electoral integrity should be taken across the complete voter user journey from individual electoral registration through to polling stations, rather than just focusing on the polling related processes; The polling card may be much as per the current standard, subject to it or a marked replacement being delivered by post to the registered address, where there is sufficient time to do so before the election date; If a late replacement polling card must be issued in person, then a meaningful identity check must be carried out and recorded at issue, based on photo ID or presentation of information that can be validated from official data sources or attestation, as is available to support electoral registration; If feasible, there should be a unique reference number marked on all polling cards, that would be different on any replacement polling card later issued; this would enable revocation of a replaced polling card in a way that enables validation of revocation status at polling time (without technology) from the electoral roll copies provided to polling stations; If feasible, the polling card should be designed to incorporate one or more security features that could be readily and manually verified by polling station staff, to enhance resistance to forgery and counterfeit fraud; Home Office NDFU should be consulted; Consideration should be given to enhance the integrity and verification of polling cards by capturing a photo likeness as part of the individual electoral registration process, for printing (in black and white if necessary) on polling cards as standard; The verbal declaration of full name and address by voters, from memory without reference to their polling card or identification documents, should be incorporated as a standard counter-fraud measure in all polling stations, regardless of future methods applied (this is an example of good practice trialled in most of the pilots in May 2019); Consideration should be given to include the date of birth, collected at individual electoral registration, in the electoral register copy used by polling stations; date of birth should then be included in the voter's verbal declaration, and validated against the electoral roll, as well as used to improve identification when the photo ID presented has no address (e.g. passports); List 1 should be retained as the formal list of acceptable photo ID documents, however a photo ID firearms certificate should be added; List 2 should be discontinued; if List 2 is retained in some form, the list should not include bank payment cards, cheque books or the old National Insurance Number Card, as these cannot be validated in any useful form in a polling station; List 2 items from non-Government sources should as a minimum include a full name and the current address; Outside Northern Ireland, if the polling card is accepted as a form of ID, the local electoral ID certificate should be discontinued as it would become redundant; Guidance to polling station staff should include monitoring indicators (such as numbers of each identification document presented, failures of any verification steps, etc) and stress the importance of alerting the Returning Officer early, if any suspicious patterns or behaviours are noticed that could indicate a potential breach of electoral integrity; If new digital or technology-based innovations in electoral processes are considered, then the process and technology applied should be properly risk assessed and assured to ensure there is only a resulting improvement to overall electoral integrity; The automated Individual Electoral Registration process currently relies on identity validation with HMRC/DWP to check the National Insurance Number records, or access to local authority data; consideration should be given to widening or changing the choice of authoritative networked whitelist (valid identities) and blacklist (associated with known ID fraud) data sources that could be checked by using relevant personal identifiers (or by matching personal identifying information); Cabinet Office GDS should be consulted on best future practice for this (e.g. the Gov.UK Verify digital document checking service); Consideration should be given to whether the automated Individual Electoral Registration process may also in future benefit from integration with one of more networked identity providers, as may be available and officially approved, as an external source of identity validation or verification; e.g. the full Gov.UK Verify service or its future equivalent; Once feedback from polling stations who conducted List 1 document checks have been collated, a review of best practice and a revision of future guidance should be considered; Home Office NDFU guidance should also be consulted as previously; The findings and recommendations here should also be impacted against the anonymous, postal and proxy voting processes that were not considered in this assessment, as a consistent application of assurance measures is needed to maintain overall electoral integrity; attackers will always go after the weakest perceived component.

Annex Annex A - Forms of accepted ID (Pre-Pilot Equality Considerations)

List 1 - (Photo ID, Mixed ID Model, Poll Card)

Where List 1 applies, an elector needs to bring one form of ID from List 1 to verify their identity in order to be issued a ballot paper.

The following forms of ID will be accepted:

- (a) a passport issued by a Commonwealth country or a country within the European Economic Area;
- (b) a photocard driving licence (including a provisional licence) issued in the United Kingdom or by a Crown Dependency or by a Member State of the European Union;
- (c) an electoral identity card issued under section 13C (Electoral identity card: Northern Ireland) of the Representation of the People Act 1983;
- (d) a biometric immigration document issued in the United Kingdom in accordance with regulations made under section 5 of the UK Borders Act 2007([1]);
- (e) an identity card issued in the European Economic Area which bears a photograph of the voter;
- (f) a PASS scheme card (national proof of age standards scheme);
- (g) a Ministry of Defence Identity Card;
- (h) a concessionary travel pass funded by HM Government;
- (i) an Oyster 60+ pass;
- (j) a photocard parking permit issued as part of the Blue Badge scheme.

List 2 - (Mixed ID Model)

Where List 2 applies, an elector needs to bring two forms of ID from List 2 to verify their identity in order to be issued a ballot paper. At least one form of ID must contain the elector's registered address. (a) a valid bank or building society debit card or credit card; (b) a mortgage statement dated within 12 months of the date of the poll; (c) a bank or building society statement, or a letter from the bank or building society confirming the opening of an account, dated within 3 months of the date of the poll; (d) a bank or building society cheque book or building society pass book; (e) a credit card statement dated within 3 months of the date of the poll; (f) a council tax demand letter or statement dated within 12 months of the date of the poll; (g) a utility bill dated within 3 months of the date of the poll; (h) a Form P45 or Form P60 issued within 12 months of the date of the poll; (i) a poll card for the election; (j) a birth certificate; (k) a marriage certificate or civil partnership certificate; (l) an adoption certificate; (m) a firearms certificate granted under the Firearms Act 1968([1]); (n) the record of a decision on bail made in respect of the voter in accordance with section 5(1) of the Bail Act 1976([2]); (o) a driving licence (including a provisional licence) which is not in the form of a photocard; (p) a statement of benefits or entitlement to benefits, such as a statement of child benefit within the meaning of section 141 of the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992([3]), or a letter confirming that the voter is entitled to housing benefit, within the meaning of section 130 of that Act; (q) a student loan statement issued by the Student Loan Company dated within 12 months of the date of the poll; (r) a National Insurance Number card or letter issued by Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs. Related content Register to vote All you need to register to vote is 5 minutes and your National Insurance number. Donations and loans Find out about donations and loans to a political party, individual or other organisation Party registration decisions View our decisions on political party names, descriptions and emblems Report: How the 2017 UK general election was run Read our report about how the 2017 general election was run

Search

Results and turnout at the 2016 Scottish Parliament

election You are in the Scottish Parliamentary elections section Home Scottish Parliamentary elections On this page Download Summary First published: 5 July 2019 Last updated: 16 April 2021 Download You can download the full dataset and results as an XLS full dataset and results as a CSV (zip file) You can also download our full report , written by David Denver. Summary The number of constituency candidates declined to 313 – the smallest number in a Scottish Parliament election to date. The four major parties – Conservative, Labour, Liberal Democrats and SNP contested all 73 constituencies and there were just 21 other candidates. Of these eight were Independents, six represented the Trade Union and Socialist Coalition (TUSC), and three the Green party, leaving four others. Eight parties contested all eight regional list elections – the four major parties plus the Greens, UKIP, RISE (Respect, Independence, Internationalism and Environmentalism) and Solidarity. The SNP won 59 of the 73 constituency seats with 46.5% of the votes. The Conservatives won seven (22.0% of votes), Liberal Democrats four (7.9%) and Labour three (22.6%). In the list voting, the SNP had 41.7% of votes, the Conservatives 22.9%, Labour 19.1%, Greens 6.6% and Liberal Democrats 5.2%. UKIP led the ‘others’ with 1.9%. This earned the Conservatives 24 list seats, Labour 21, Greens six, SNP four and Liberal Democrats one. Overall, the SNP fell short of a majority in the Parliament winning 63 of the 129 seats – a decline of six compared with 2011. The Conservatives with 31 seats became the second largest party – up from 15 in 2011. Turnout at 55.8% for the constituency contests and 55.9% for the list voting was significantly higher than in 2011 (50.5% and 50.4% respectively). As in 2011, rejected ballots constituted a minuscule proportion of votes cast. The figure was 0.41% in constituency contests and 0.17% in the list elections. The comparable figures in 2011 were 0.42% and 0.34%. Across Scotland, 726,555 postal ballots were issued amounting to 17.7% of the electorate. This is the largest proportion to date. Almost 77 per cent of postal ballots issued were returned. Of these, just over 3 per cent were excluded from the counts because of failures relating to personal identifiers or noninclusion of either a ballot or statement in the return envelope. In the 63 constituencies for which data are available, new electors added to the register between December and March amounted to 3.8% of the electorate while those added between March and April constituted 2.2%. The total varied from less than 2% in two constituencies to more than 10% in four. Across 58 constituencies, electors aged 16-17 accounted for 2% of the electorate, the figures ranging narrowly from 1.1% to 2.7%. Related content Report: How the 2016 Scottish Parliament election was run View the results and turnout at the 2016 Scottish Parliament election Report on the Scottish Parliament election on 6 May 2021 Read our report about how the 2021 Scottish Parliament election was run Report: How the 2011 Scottish Parliament election was run Read our report about how the 2011 Scottish Parliament election was run Results and turnout at the 2011 Scottish Parliament election View the results and turnout at the 2011 Scottish Parliament election

Appendix 6 of the Code of Conduct for Electoral Commissioners: Nolan Principles of Public Life | Electoral Commission Search Appendix 6 of the Code of Conduct for Electoral Commissioners: Nolan Principles of Public Life You are in the Code of Conduct for Electoral Commissioners section Home Commissioners Code of Conduct for Electoral Commissioners On this page Selflessness Integrity Objectivity Accountability Openness Honesty Leadership First published: 24 January 2023 Last updated: 18 June 2023 Introduction The 'Nolan Principles' code of practice has been written with regard to the seven principles of public life identified by the Nolan Committee in their First Report on Standards in Public Life in May 1995 and subsequently endorsed by the Government. Selflessness Holders of public office should take decisions solely in terms of the public interest. They should not do so in order to gain financial or other material benefits for themselves, their family, or their friends. Integrity Holders of public office should not place themselves under any financial or other obligation to an outside individual or organisation that might influence them in the performance of their official duties. Objectivity In carrying out public business, including making public appointments, awarding contracts, or recommending individuals for rewards and benefits, holders of public office should make choices on merits. Accountability Holders of public office are accountable for their decisions and actions to the public and must submit themselves to whatever scrutiny is appropriate to their office. Openness Holders of public office should be as open as possible about all the decisions and actions they take. They should give reasons for their decisions and restrict information only when the wider public interest clearly demands. Honesty Holders of public office have a duty to declare any private interests relating to their public duties and to take steps to resolve any conflicts arising in a way that protects the public interest. Leadership Holders of public office should promote and support these principles by leadership and example.

These are the views we set out to parliamentarians before the Elections Act became law. We last updated these views in early 2022. Close alert Preventing candidate intimidation You are in the Elections Act section Home Elections Act On this page Changes proposed by the government Our view Further reading First published: 5 July 2021 Last updated: 5 July 2021 Last updated These are the views we set out to parliamentarians before the Elections Act became law. We last updated these views in early 2022. Changes proposed by the government The UK Government's Elections Act introduces a new penalty for anyone found guilty of intimidating candidates, campaigners or elected representatives. Anyone found guilty of this behaviour could be banned from standing for elected office for five years. This is in addition to punishments already in place for those guilty of existing intimidation offences, such as common assault, harassment, and the use of threatening language. Our view There has been increasing concern at recent elections about intimidating and threatening behaviour towards candidates and campaigners. Following the 2019 UK general election, more than half of the candidates we spoke to said they were concerned about standing for election because of the risk of intimidation, threats and abuse. Three quarters of respondents said that they had experienced this behaviour. It is vital that action is taken against those who abuse, threaten or intimidate candidates and campaigners. This behaviour cannot be allowed to discourage people from standing for election or campaigning. Banning someone from standing for elected office, as well as imposing criminal sanctions, such as a prison sentence or fine, will strengthen the deterrent against this intimidating behaviour. Further reading Further reading The Government's Written Ministerial Statement: Strengthening transparency and fairness in elections, 2021 Our response to the UK Government policy consultation: Protecting the Debate Our survey of candidates following the 2019 UK Parliamentary general election Related content Elections Act about the UK Government's Elections Act and what it means for voting and campaigning About the Elections Act about the Elections Bill, including the measures it contains and which elections it applies to. Introducing digital imprints about the proposed changes to digital imprints on election material. Changes to notional spending Read about the proposals to clarify the rules that relate to notional spending for candidates and agents.

Campaign spending at the Scottish referendum | Electoral Commission Search
Campaign spending at the Scottish referendum You are in the Scottish Independence referendum section Home Scottish Independence referendum On this page
Table: Total spending at the Scottish independence referendum Chart: Total spending
at the Scottish independence referendum Chart: Spending over referendum campaign period First published: 29 July 2019 Last updated: 9 August 2021 Overview Under the Scottish Independence Referendum Act, registered campaigners were required to complete campaign spending returns if they spent more than £10,000 on their campaign.
If they spent £10,000 or less they were required to submit nil campaign expenditure returns Forty-two organisations and individuals registered with as campaigners at the referendum. Altogether, the forty-two campaigners reported spending £6,664,950 on campaigning at the referendum. Five registered campaigners reported spending of more than £250,000 campaigning in the regulated period, from 30 May 2014 until 18 September 2014, spending a total of £5,230,642. s spending more than £250,000 were required to submit an independently audited return to the Commission by 18 March 2015. View our report on the regulation of campaigners at the Scottish independence referendum . Table: Total spending at the Scottish independence referendum Referendum spending details Referendum spending Chart: Total spending at the Scottish independence referendum Chart: Spending over referendum campaign period Related content Report: Regulation of campaigners at the independence referendum held on 18 September 2014 Read our report about regulation at the Scottish independence referendum Report: Scottish Independence Referendum Read our report about the Scottish Independence Referendum Our advice on the proposed Scottish independence referendum question Read our advice on the proposed Scottish independence referendum question Donations and loans reported by campaigners at the Scottish referendum View donations and loans reported by campaigners at the Scottish referendum

Guidance for observers of local elections in Northern Ireland | Electoral Commission Search Guidance for observers of local elections in Northern Ireland You are in the Guidance and feedback for observing elections section Home Observing elections and referendums Guidance and feedback for observing elections On this page What elections are taking place? Postal voting Postal vote opening procedure Duty to maintain secrecy Observing at polling stations Observing the verification and count First published: 14 April 2023 Last updated: 4 May 2023 May 2023 May 2023 This guidance is for electoral observers who have been accredited by the Electoral Commission. It includes information on what elections are taking place, who does what at these elections and what to expect at the electoral processes you are entitled to observe. about becoming an accredited observer What elections are taking place? On Thursday 18 May 2023, 462 councillors will be elected across the 11 councils in Northern Ireland. In each council election councillors are elected to represent a District Electoral Area (DEA). This guidance is for accredited observers in Northern Ireland. There is separate guidance available for observers in England, Scotland, and Wales. What can I observe? As an accredited observer you are entitled to attend: the issue and receipt of postal ballot papers the poll the verification and counting of the votes We have published a Code of Practice for electoral observers. You must comply with the standards of behaviour set out in this Code. You do not need to tell electoral officials that you want to observe proceedings; by law you have a right to attend as detailed above. However, if you do tell them, they may be able to provide you with some relevant local and practical information, for example a list of polling stations or adaptations made to venues for accessibility purposes. You can still make unannounced visits or change your plans if you want to. Who can vote in these elections? A person can vote in these elections if they are: included on the electoral register at least 18 years of age on the day of election a British, Irish, qualifying Commonwealth citizen or a citizen of the European Union What voting method will be used? The Single Transferable Vote (STV) system will be used for these elections. The instructions on the ballot paper will tell voters to rank the candidates in order of preference. Mark a '1' next to their first choice, '2' next to their second, '3' by their third, and so on. They can vote for as few or as many candidates as they like – it's entirely their choice. Who does what at the local council elections? The Returning Officer The Returning Officer for all elections in Northern Ireland is the Chief Electoral Officer (CEO). The CEO is also the Registration Officer for the whole of Northern Ireland and is responsible for maintaining the register of electors and the absent voters list. You can contact them as follows: Chief Electoral Officer 3rd Floor St Anne's House 15 Church Street Belfast BT1 1ER Tel: 028 9044 6680 Email: info@eoni.org.uk The Electoral Office for Northern Ireland (EONI) is the collective name for the staff who assist the Chief Electoral Officer in the performance of their statutory duties. Deputy Returning Officers At local council elections in Northern Ireland the Chief Executive of each council act as Deputy Returning Officer (DRO). Their responsibilities include: receiving candidate nominations publishing the statement of persons nominated and notice of poll managing the verification and count of ballot papers receiving returns and declarations of election expenses Find the contact details for all DROs The Electoral Commission . Our contact details are: The Electoral Commission Ground Floor 4 Cromac Place The Gasworks Belfast BT7 2JB 0333 103 1928 Email: infonorthernireland@electoralcommission.org.uk Postal voting Voters in Northern Ireland can apply for a postal vote if they are unable to make it to their polling station in person on polling day. They must provide a valid reason as to why they cannot attend, for example because of illness, disability, holiday or work arrangements. The EONI starts to send postal voting packs to postal voters around two weeks before polling day. Completed postal ballot papers must be returned by 10pm on polling day. You are entitled to attend both the issuing of postal voting packs and postal vote opening sessions. The notice of issue and opening of postal votes times can be found on EONI's website. What happens at a postal vote issuing session? At the issuing session, postal voting packs will be put together. The packs will include:

Envelope A – this is the envelope that the elector returns their ballot paper in. It is marked with the letter 'A' and the words 'ballot paper envelope'

Envelope B – this is the envelope that the elector will use to return the ballot paper envelope and the postal voting statement. It is marked with the letter 'B' and the address of the EONI

The postal voting statement – this contains the elector's name, the number of the ballot paper issued to them, instructions on how to vote by post and space for the elector to sign and provide their date of birth

The ballot paper

Postal voting packs will then be delivered to electors by post.

What happens at a postal vote opening session? Postal voters must complete and return a postal voting statement which includes their signature and date of birth, as well as their ballot paper. An appointed representative of the Chief Electoral Officer will decide whether or not the date of birth and signature provided by electors on their postal voting statements matches the signature and date of birth previously provided. If they do not match, the postal vote will be rejected. Staff will explain the postal vote opening process to you. They may issue you with information on the procedures to be followed during the opening session, including instructions on what you can and cannot do at the session. You should comply with any instructions that the Chief Electoral Officer or staff have given.

Ballot papers will be kept face down throughout a postal vote opening session. Anyone attending an opening session must not attempt to see how individual ballot papers have been marked.

Postal vote opening procedure

Stage 1 Step 1: Open the postal voters' ballot box.

Step 2: Count and record the number of covering envelopes (Envelopes 'B')

Step 3: Open the covering envelopes (envelopes 'B') and remove the postal voting statement and ballot paper envelope (envelope 'A')

Step 4: Mark all returned postal vote statements on the postal/postal proxy list to show it is returned

If not all parts of the postal vote have been returned:

Step 5: Mark the envelope 'provisionally rejected', attach contents and add to the rejected votes packet.

Add to the lists as appropriate:

- the list of ballot papers received without a valid (or any) postal voting statement
- the list of ballot paper numbers of postal voting statements received without a ballot paper.

See Stage 4.

Stage 2 Step 1: Verify the personal identifiers on the returned postal voting statements

Step 2: Separate the ballot paper envelopes from the postal voting statements and keep both in order

Step 3: Determine those postal voting statements that are missing a date of birth and/or signature or where either/both do not match those held on the identifier record. Adjudicate those and reject where either are not included or you are not satisfied that the statement is duly completed.

Invalid postal voting statements are rejected. The statements, ballot paper and envelopes are marked 'rejected' and placed in the receptacle for rejected votes

Postal voters who have been granted a waiver only need to complete their date of birth

Step 4: Check the number on the postal voting statement matches the number on the ballot paper envelope (envelope "A"). After matching, package up the postal voting statements and seal the packet.

If the numbers do not match:

Step 5: Open the envelope. If the ballot paper matches the statement, it is valid and should go in the postal ballot box. Non-matching ones should be provisionally rejected.

Stage 3 Step

1: Open the ballot paper envelopes (envelopes 'A') If the ballot paper is inside the envelope: Step 2: Remove the ballot paper(s), ensuring they are kept face down at all times Step 3: Check the number on the ballot paper envelope (envelope 'A') against the number on the back of the ballot paper Step 4: Keep the ballot papers face down at all times. Don't look or allow others to look at the votes marked on the ballot papers. Step 5: Place ballot papers in the postal ballot box or appropriate receptacle and proceed to Stage 5. If the ballot paper number does not match: Step 2: Attach the ballot paper to the envelope Step 3: Mark it as 'provisionally rejected' and put it in the receptacle for rejected votes Step 4: Add to the both the list of ballot papers received without a valid postal statement and the list of ballot paper numbers of postal voting statements received without a ballot paper If there is no ballot paper inside the envelope: Step 2: Mark 'provisionally rejected' and put in the receptacle for rejected ballot paper envelopes. Step 3: Add to the list of ballot paper numbers of postal voting statements received without a ballot paper. Stage 4 Step 1: To match up separated documents, check the two reject lists against all ballot papers/postal voting statements that have been returned separately from their corresponding postal voting statement/ballot paper and, if possible, match them up The two lists must be taken to the final opening of postal votes to carry out any final matching Step 2: Record any successful match on the relevant lists Step 3: Place the ballot papers that are no longer to be treated as provisionally rejected in the postal ballot box or appropriate receptacle and place the accompanying postal voting statements in the appropriate receptacle. Stage 5 Step 1: Count and record the total number of ballot papers, keeping the ballot papers face down at all times Actual votes are not counted at this stage Step 2: Place the ballot papers in the postal ballot box, which much be sealed at the end of each opening session and stored securely Step 3: Complete postal vote ballot paper account Duty to maintain secrecy The Returning Officer or their representative will give you a copy of the statutory Requirement of Secrecy. Anyone attending a postal vote opening must comply with this. Ballot papers will be kept face down throughout a postal vote opening session. Anyone attending an opening session must not: attempt to see how individual ballot papers have been marked attempt to look at identifying marks or numbers on ballot papers disclose how any particular ballot paper has been marked pass on any such information gained from the session Anyone found guilty of breaching these requirements can face an unlimited fine, or may be imprisoned for up to six months. Observing at polling stations You are entitled to observe inside polling stations. You can find a list of polling stations on the EONI website . When are polling stations open? Polling stations will be open between 7am and 10pm on Thursday 18 May 2023. You are permitted to arrive shortly before this to observe the sealing of the ballot box(es) prior to the poll opening. What will the inside of the polling station look like? The layout within each polling station may differ, but it may look similar to the images below: Who can vote at polling stations? Any person on the polling station's electoral register can vote at the polling station in a local election, unless: they are a registered postal voter they are a registered proxy voter, and their proxy has already voted for them or has applied to vote on their behalf by post they are not 18 years of age or older on polling day they are registered as an overseas elector Electors receive a poll card before the election telling them where they can vote. Who is allowed to be in the polling station? The following people are entitled by law to be present in a polling station: voters persons under the age of 18 who accompany voters companions of disabled voters candidates and their election agents polling agents the Returning Officer, the DRO and their staff the Presiding Officer and clerks constables on duty Electoral Commission representatives observers accredited by the Electoral Commission What do polling agents do? Candidates can appoint polling agents to be present at any polling station. Only one polling agent for each candidate may be present at the same time. The main role of a polling agent is to detect personation (when an individual votes as someone else – whether that person is living or dead or is a fictitious person). Other duties that the polling agents may undertake include: checking that the ballot box is empty at 7am being present when the Presiding Officer marks a ballot paper on behalf of a voter being present at the close of poll to observe the sealing up of the ballot box and other packages attaching their own seal to the ballot box or any packet in addition to the official seal What happens in a polling station? Polling station staff will: ask voters for their name and address, and make sure they are eligible to vote ask voters for photographic ID mark a straight line against the voter's entry on the register of electors call out the number and name of the elector write the elector number on a list next to the number of the ballot paper to be issued ensure the ballot paper includes the official mark (e.g. a barcode or watermark) fold the ballot paper and then hand it to the voter unfolded so that they can see all of the options on the ballot paper Voters will need to produce one of the following documents in order to prove their identity: a UK, Irish or EEA Driving Licence (photographic part, provisional accepted) a UK, Irish or EU Passport (including an Irish Passport Card) an Electoral Identity Card a Translink Senior SmartPass a Translink 60+ SmartPass a Translink War Disabled SmartPass a Translink Blind Person's SmartPass a Translink half fare SmartPass. a Biometric Immigration Document These documents are listed in legislation and no other forms of identity can be accepted. The identification document does not need to be current, but the photograph must be of a good enough likeness to allow polling station staff to confirm the identity of the holder. What assistance is available for voters with disabilities? Through our work with civil society organisations and charities we have identified a range of equipment that can help to overcome the known barriers faced by disabled people. The following equipment should, as a minimum, be provided in all polling stations to support disabled voters: chairs/seating – this provides a place to rest for voters who cannot stand for long periods and a seat for voters who would like to take some time to think before entering the polling booth magnifiers – these can provide support for voters who are visually impaired to vote independently by increasing the size of the text on a document tactile voting device – tactile voting devices provide support for voters who are visually impaired to mark their vote on the ballot paper in the correct place, provided it is placed on the ballot paper correctly. They have been found to provide assistance in completing the ballot paper once visually impaired voters know the position on the ballot paper of the candidate for whom they wish to vote. They do not allow blind voters to vote independently unless they also have accessible information about the order of the candidates on the ballot paper polling booth at wheelchair level – helps to ensure that voters who use a wheelchair are able access a lower writing surface to ensure they can cast their vote in secret in a booth that is accessible badges identifying polling station staff – these help voters more easily identify who is a member of staff in the polling station and can therefore be approached for assistance. pencil grip – these can help voters with dexterity impairments to more easily hold and use a pencil independently ramps (for buildings with steps) – these support access to a polling station for voters who use a wheelchair or have difficulty using steps temporary alerters or temporary doorbells for any doors that are required to remain shut during the day (for example, fire doors) – these provide a way for voters to let polling station staff know that they need assistance to open the door so they can access the polling station. These do not need to be permanently fixed or installed in a building used as a polling station but can be temporarily placed at an accessible level on a table or chair next to any doors that must remain closed appropriate lighting – some polling station venues have good lighting but others may need additional lighting at the desk; to ensure that voters can clearly see the faces of staff, and in the polling booths; to support voters with visual impairments to be able to read and complete the ballot paper.

parking spaces reserved for disabled voters (where parking is available at the venue) – this ensures that disabled voters can park as close as possible to the polling station a large print version of the ballot papers (for reference purposes only)

Voters with sight loss may use apps on their mobile phones or carry pocket-sized assistive equipment, such as video magnifiers to help them read documents. These could be used in conjunction with the template. The Returning Officer may also have provided magnifying glasses to support voting without assistance. If a voter is unable to mark a ballot paper themselves because they have a disability, the Presiding Officer or a companion can mark it for them. The voter must tell the polling station staff that this is how they want to vote and the reason why. If a companion marks the ballot paper for a voter, they will be asked to fill in a form. A companion cannot assist more than two electors to vote at an election. Electors can contact the Returning Officer to explain any specific access needs that they have. As a result, there may be extra equipment in certain polling stations where the Returning Officer has allocated specific equipment to meet those access needs. The Chief Electoral Officer will be providing a helpline that will allow blind and partially-sighted people to hear the list of candidates in their DEA in the order they appear on the ballot paper. What happens after polls close? Polls close at 10:00pm. Any voters waiting in a queue at their polling station at 10pm will be allowed to vote, even if they haven't been issued with a ballot paper yet. Once all voters who have been issued with a ballot paper have voted, the Presiding Officer must seal the ballot box. Candidates, agents and polling agents can also add their own seal if they want to. The Presiding Officer must then complete a number of official forms: the ballot paper account (this states how many ballot papers were issued) the list of voters with disabilities assisted by companions the list of votes marked by the Presiding Officer the statement of the number of voters whose votes were marked by the Presiding Officer the list of tendered votes The Presiding Officer must take the following to the count venue or a designated point for collection without delay: the ballot box(es) official forms election stationery all other materials

Duty to maintain secrecy in the polling station Anyone attending a polling station has a duty to maintain the secrecy of the ballot. In particular, the following information must not be disclosed: the name or electoral number of who has or has not voted the number or other unique identifying mark on the ballot paper

Anyone attending a polling station must not try to determine how a voter has voted or who they are about to vote for. A polling agent can mark off on their copy of the register of electors those voters who have applied for ballot papers. If the polling agent leaves the polling station during the hours of polling, they must leave the marked copy of the register in the polling station to ensure that secrecy requirements are not breached. Observing the verification and count You are entitled to attend the verification and count. You are only permitted to observe the process.

You are not allowed to enter the restricted area where staff count the votes. The DRO has the right to limit the number of observers who may be present at any one time during the verification and count. The verification and counting of votes will start at 8.00am on Friday 19 May. The location of the count for each council area is available on EONI's website www.eoni.org.uk/Elections/Media-Centre. The DRO will also be able to provide you with a Count Information Pack which will outline the arrangements for the count. Who can attend the count? The following people are entitled by law to attend the verification and count: the Returning Officer, DRO and their staff candidates, plus one guest per candidate election agents counting agents Electoral Commission representatives observers accredited by the Electoral Commission any other person permitted by the Returning Officer or DRO The DRO may allow representatives of the media to attend the verification and count. They must not interfere with the process or compromise the secrecy of the vote. What do counting agents do? Counting agents have a number of important roles to play at the count: they observe the counting process and make sure that it is accurate they can draw to the attention of count staff any doubtful ballot papers if they disagree with a decision by the DRO to reject a ballot paper, they can ask the DRO to mark on the ballot paper "rejection objected to" if a count is suspended for any reason, counting agents can add their seals when the DRO seals the ballot boxes and envelopes What is verification? After polling stations close at 10pm the ballot boxes will be delivered to the count venue. These boxes will be opened at 8am on Friday 19 May. Postal ballot papers will also be brought to the count venue in sealed boxes to be opened.

Verification has two main purposes: to make sure and show that all ballot papers issued at polling stations and all returned postal ballot papers have been brought to the count to provide the figure that should match the result of the count The number of ballot papers in each box will be compared with the number on the ballot paper account. If the number of ballot papers in each box matches the ballot paper account the verification of that box is complete. If the numbers do not match, the ballot papers will be recounted and the documentation checked again. The process will continue until the DRO is satisfied as to the actual number of ballot papers to be included in the count. The number of ballot papers in each box will be recorded on the verification statement. When will the count take place? The counting of ballot papers will begin once the verification stage has been completed. How are the votes counted? After verification is complete, the DRO must mix the ballot papers before sorting and counting the votes. Count staff will then sort the ballot papers into piles for each candidate according to the first preference marked. The number of votes for each candidate will be counted and the total number of valid votes calculated. A formula will then be applied to calculate a quota: Where the total number of votes for a candidate at any stage of the count is equal to or exceeds the quota that candidate shall be deemed to be elected. The next stages of the count will involve either the transfer of the surplus vote from a candidate deemed to be elected or the exclusion of one or more candidates with the least votes. The ballot papers should be visible at all times to any candidates, agents and observers present. Any doubtful ballot papers should be placed aside for adjudication. What are doubtful ballot papers? A doubtful ballot paper is a ballot paper that has not been completed in accordance with the instructions. During the count, these ballot papers will be placed aside. The DRO will adjudicate these ballot papers regularly throughout the count to determine whether the intention of the voter clearly appears on the ballot paper. An announcement will be made that an adjudication on doubtful ballot papers is about to be made. The DRO will decide whether each doubtful ballot paper is valid in the presence of candidates, agents and observers. You can attend the adjudication but it will not be delayed if you are not present. The DRO will inform those present whether or not each doubtful ballot paper is valid and the reason for their decision. The DROs decision is final and can only be challenged by an election petition. If a candidate or agent does not agree with any decision to reject a ballot paper as invalid, they can tell the DRO and the paper will be stamped “rejection objected to”. Any doubtful ballot papers that are declared as valid must be counted and included in the total number of votes cast for the appropriate candidate. A ballot paper will not be counted if it: is unmarked does not contain the official mark contains any mark or writing that can identify the voter does not indicate the voter’s intention with certainty has no first preference has the same preference vote given to more than one candidate The DRO must mark the word “rejected” on any ballot paper that is rejected and must draw up a statement showing the number of ballot papers rejected for these reasons. What happens after the votes are counted? After staff have finished counting the votes at each stage of the count, the DRO will share the provisional result with the candidates and their agents. They may ask the DRO to recount the votes for that stage although the DRO can refuse to do so if they think the request is unreasonable. Once a stage of the count has been completed there are can be no requests for recounts of this stage later on in the count process. Once the number of seats to be filled in the DEA have been filled the DRO will declare the candidates elected. The results will be published on the council and EONI websites. Duty to maintain secrecy Anyone attending the count has a duty to maintain the secrecy of the count. In particular, anyone attending must not: ascertain or attempt to ascertain number or other unique identifying mark on the back of any ballot paper communicate any information obtained at the count as to the candidate for whom any vote is given on any particular ballot paper Submitting feedback We welcome feedback from your electoral observations and on your experiences of the Electoral Commission’s observer scheme which you can submit using our feedback form. If you want to submit feedback on the May 2023 local elections in Northern Ireland, the deadline for this feedback to be considered is Friday 9 June 2023. Feedback may be shared with the Chief Electoral Officer and relevant DROs to help improve the running of elections and the observer scheme. You may find it helpful to print a copy of the feedback form in advance to take with you when observing. If you would like to send feedback in a different format, please email observers@electoralcommission.org.uk

Update application: Submit additional names | Electoral Commission Search
Update application: Submit additional names You are in the Accredited Organisations: submission of additional names section Home Observing elections and referendums Accredited Organisations: submission of additional names First published: 9 March 2021 Last updated: 2 November 2021 Update observers for an accredited organisation Update observers for an accredited organisation (new) Organisation details Organisation name Contact email for the organisation Accreditation details How do you want your observers to receive their observer badges? By post to the organisation address By post to a different address Alternative address: First line Alternative address: Town or city Alternative address: County Alternative address: Postcode Alternative address: Country New observer details: Observer one Is the observer over the age of 16? Yes No You can't apply to be an electoral observer if you're under 16. First name Last name Confirm that the observer has: Read and agrees to the Code of Practice Read and understood the requirements of secrecy Not been convicted of an electoral offence in the last five years Read, understood and agrees to our Privacy Policy Click here to read the Code of Practice Click here to read our Privacy Policy Would you like to add another observer? Yes No Observer details: Observer two Is the observer over the age of 16? Yes No First name Last name Confirm that the observer has: Read and agree to the Code of Practice Read and understood the requirements of secrecy Not been convicted of an electoral offence in the last five years Read, understood and agrees to our Privacy Policy Click here to read the Code of Practice Click here to read our Privacy Policy Would you like to add another observer? Yes No Observer details: Observer three Is the observer over the age of 16? Yes No First name Last name Confirm that the observer has: Read and agree to the Code of Practice Read and understood the requirements of secrecy Not been convicted of an electoral offence in the last five years Read, understood and agrees to our Privacy Policy Click here to read the Code of Practice Click here to read our Privacy Policy Would you like to add another observer? Yes No Observer details: Observer four Is the observer over the age of 16? Yes No First name Last name Confirm that the observer has: Read and agree to the Code of Practice Read and understood the requirements of secrecy Not been convicted of an electoral offence in the last five years Read, understood and agrees to our Privacy Policy Click here to read the Code of Practice Click here to read our Privacy Policy Would you like to add another observer? Yes No Observer details: Observer five Is the observer over the age of 16? Yes No First name Last name Confirm that the observer has: Read and agree to the Code of Practice Read and understood the requirements of secrecy Not been convicted of an electoral offence in the last five years Read, understood and agrees to our Privacy Policy Click here to read the Code of Practice Click here to read our Privacy Policy Would you like to add another observer? Yes No Observer details: Observer six Is the observer over the age of 16? Yes No First name Last name Confirm that the observer has: Read and agree to the Code of Practice Read and understood the requirements of secrecy Not been convicted of an electoral offence in the last five years Read, understood and agrees to our Privacy Policy Click here to read the Code of Practice Click here to read our Privacy Policy Would you like to add another observer? Yes No Observer details: Observer seven Is the observer over the age of 16? Yes No First name Last name Confirm that the observer has: Read and agree to the Code of Practice Read and understood the requirements of secrecy Not been convicted of an electoral offence in the last five years Read, understood and agrees to our Privacy Policy Click here to read the Code of Practice Click here to read our Privacy Policy Would you like to add another observer? Yes No Observer details: Observer eight Is the observer over the age of 16? Yes No First name Last name Confirm that the observer has: Read and agree to the Code of Practice Read and understood the requirements of secrecy Not been convicted of an electoral offence in the last five years Read, understood and agrees to our Privacy Policy Click here to read the Code of Practice Click here to read our Privacy Policy Would you like to add another observer? Yes No Observer details: Observer nine Is the observer over the age of 16? Yes No First name Last name Confirm that the observer has: Read and agree to the Code of Practice Read and understood the requirements of secrecy Not been convicted of an electoral offence in the last five years Read, understood and agrees to our Privacy Policy Click here to read the Code of Practice Click here to read our Privacy Policy Would you like to add another observer? Yes No Observer details: Observer ten Is the observer over the age of 16? Yes No First name Last name Confirm that the observer has: Read and agree to the Code of Practice Read and understood the requirements of secrecy Not been convicted of an electoral offence in the last five years Read, understood and agrees to our Privacy Policy Click here to read the Code of Practice Click here to read our Privacy Policy Declaration Confirm that: The information you have provided is accurate and true You have permission from the observers to submit information on their behalf Leave this field blank

Board minutes: 17 February 2023 | Electoral Commission Search
Board minutes: 17 February 2023 You are in the Electoral Commission Board section Home How we make decisions Electoral Commission Board On this page Who was at the meeting Welcomes and introduction to the Speaker of the House of Commons, Rt Hon Sir Lindsay Hoyle MP Apologies Declarations of interests Minutes Commission Board action tracker Chief Executive's update Forward Plan of Board business 2022/23 and 2023/24 Strategy and Policy Statement (SPS) Key messages for the annual report Annual review of risk First published: 19 April 2023 Last updated: 20 April 2023 Commission Board minutes 17 February 2023 Friday 17 February 2023 Location: In person Date of next scheduled Board meeting: Wednesday, 22 March 2023 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting John Pullinger Chair Rob Vincent Alex Attwood Sarah Chambers Stephen Gilbert Roseanna Cunningham Chris Ruane Katy Radford Elan Closs Stephens In attendance: Shaun McNally Chief Executive Kieran Rix Director, Finance and Corporate Services Craig Westwood Director, Communications, Policy and Research Ailsa Irvine Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance Louise Edwards Director, Regulation Binnie Goh General Counsel Sal Naseem Independent Adviser to the Commission Board on Equality, Diversity, and Inclusion (EDI) Matt Pledger Senior Adviser, Governance Zena Khan Senior Adviser, Governance Rt Hon Sir Lindsay Hoyle MP Mr Speaker, House of Commons [item 2] Councillor Peter Wilson Deputy Executive Leader Chorley Council [item 2] Orla Hennessy Media Relations & Public Information Manager [item 11] Welcomes and introduction to the Speaker of the House of Commons, Rt Hon Sir Lindsay Hoyle MP The Chair of the Board welcomed Mr Speaker to the meeting. Mr Speaker reciprocated in welcoming the Board to Chorley and stated that the work of the Commission was much appreciated. Mr Speaker outlined key aspects of the electoral reform agenda across the UK and areas where he was undertaking engagement, including internationally. He highlighted the UK Youth Parliament and the need to support wider youth engagement in democracy. Mr Speaker noted the importance of his committee's relationship with the Commission, and a desire to engage on a broader range of subjects than on financial and performance issues. The Board welcomed engagement with the Speakers Committee. Apologies The Board received apologies from Commissioner Sue Bruce. Declarations of interests The Board noted the following updated entries of declarations of interests since the January 2023 Board meeting: Commissioner Alex Attwood: Member of the Electoral Commission for Ireland ("An Coimisiún Toghchain") Commissioner John Pullinger: Chair: High Level Steering Group, Better Lives 2030 Conference Zambia, April 2023 Commissioner Stephen Gilbert: Member of the Industry and Regulation Select Committee of the House of Lords Independent Adviser to the Commission Board on Equality, Diversity, and Inclusion Sal Naseem: Member of Spectrum Speakers General Counsel Binnie Goh: Trustee of Vibrance, a Social Care charity Minutes (EC 176/23) Resolved: That the Board agreed the minutes of the Board meeting 17 January 2023, subject to minor amendments. Matters arising: The Board noted that the Commission had yet to receive a response to its letter, sent to the Security Minister, regarding foreign donations to political parties. Commission Board action tracker (EC 177/23) The Board noted that the Chief Executive would be chairing the Equality Diversity and Inclusion, (EDI), Project Group and the first meeting was scheduled for March 2023. The Group would initially meet every six weeks. The scope of the Project Group would be determined at the first meeting and will align to the People Strategy. The Board noted the actions from the Belfast Board event, and that the high level summary notes of the actions were to be circulated to Board members and attendees. Resolved: That the Board noted the progress against actions requested by the Board which included the action tracker of the Belfast Board event. Chief Executive's update (EC 178/23) The Chief Executive reported to the Board that a budget underspend was forecast. To improve forecasting, the Board noted that mandatory training was being implemented for all budget holders, and work to improve recruitment rates was underway. The Board noted that for financial year 2024/25 estimates would be formulated on a zero-based review. The Board noted that there was a historic trend in the Commission for budget underspends and welcomed the actions being taken by the Chief Executive to improve financial management. The Chief Executive reported that procurement was underway to replace the current board support platform. Commissioners were invited to advise the Director, Regulation if they wished to engage and test the shortlisted software. The Board noted work being undertaken on implementation of the Elections Act, staff sickness absence, voter accessibility and performance standards. The Director, Communications, Policy and Research updated the Board on progress with the campaign, including the advertising used and the partnership activity with civic society organisations and local authorities. The Director, Communications, Policy and Research also noted discussions with UK Government about the campaign. Members of the Board suggested that updates on other Elections Act 2022 provisions, specifically postal and proxy vote changes, and overseas voting, feature at a future meeting.

Resolved: That the Board noted the Chief Executive's update on operations and matters arising and, the quarterly performance report for quarter three. Forward Plan of Board business 2022/23 and 2023/24 (EC 179/23)

The Board noted that some of the dates for the Audit and Risk Committee 2023/24 would be revised.

Resolved: That the Board noted the Forward Plan of Board business 2022/23 and 2023/24 Strategy and Policy Statement (SPS) (EC 180/23)

The Director, Communications, Policy and Research introduced the report, stating that the Commission's ongoing concerns about the SPS will continue to be voiced. This would be undertaken in parallel with planning proportionate preparations for accountability under the SPS. The Board noted that the UK Government had delayed its expected timetable for moving to the next stage of engagement on the SPS, and no timescale had been confirmed. The Board welcomed the report and agreed the direction proposed in the report to enable work to progress.

Resolved: That the Board noted an update on preparing for Commission accountability under the SPS. Key messages for the annual report (EC 181/23)

The Director, Finance and Corporate Services introduced the report and requested the Board consider the suggestions outlined. The Board noted that the timing for release of the final report would be post May 2023 elections. The Board overall was satisfied with the key messages that were conveyed in the paper and provided the following additional guidance.

Resolved: That the Board would like to ensure that the Annual Report is clear on the outputs of the Commission's activities.

Resolved: That the Board would like to see strong forward focused messages from both the Chair and Chief Executive in the Annual Report.

Resolved: That the Board would like the Annual Report to demonstrate that the Commission has a robust focus on EDI which incorporates all activities.

Resolved: That the Board agreed that the Annual Report should reference the work done on implementation of the Elections Act, including management and mitigation of risk.

Resolved: That the Board requested that the Annual Report should draw out the Commission's activities across all nations of the UK.

Annual review of risk (EC 182/23)

The Director, Finance and Corporate Services introduced the report to the Board and requested guidance as to whether the risks were acceptable to the Board. The Board noted that the analysis had been simplified to enable a range of audiences to engage and that the review of risk was ongoing. The Board noted that the report was subject to consultation with the Chair of Audit and Risk Committee, (ARC), and the Independent Adviser to the ARC.

Resolved:

That the Board agreed the draft risk appetite statement and noted progress towards implementing the new strategic risks and completing the risk improvement plan.

Voting in 2017 You are in the UK general elections section Home UK general elections First published: 1 October 2017 Last updated: 1 October 2017 Summary A core area of the Electoral Commission's work is to promote public confidence in the democratic process. In order to understand public attitudes, following each set of elections we survey a nationally representative sample of the population in those areas where polls have been held. This report summarises and analyses the results of the post-election surveys conducted in 2017 and provides an overview of public attitudes to elections and voting. Key findings The elections in 2017 saw increased turnout compared to the last equivalent poll – most notably at the Northern Ireland Assembly and Scottish council elections. In addition, the level of engagement among younger age groups at the UK general election appears to have improved since 2015 – our research suggests a greater turnout and an increased level of awareness among younger people of both the election itself and of the parties and candidates standing at the poll. Nevertheless, we also found strong evidence of a continuing lack of engagement, particularly among young people, with the local elections. While turnout at these polls was up it remains relatively low. We asked people in England with local government elections if they felt they had enough information to make an informed choice on who to vote for – one third of all respondents, including nearly half of 18-34 year olds, disagreed. More work must be done to ensure that all voters have access to information about these elections and who they can vote for, and that they use that access. Positively, we have again found that most people believe elections in the UK to be well run – with confidence even higher among those who vote – and that the vast majority of voters are satisfied with the process for casting their ballot. However, there is no room for complacency in this area and our research highlighted areas where we believe further work is needed. While most people continue to be satisfied with the system of registering to vote there is also support for improvement, with two thirds supporting the idea of automatically registering electors when they are issued with a National Insurance number. We have recently published our assessment of the system of electoral registration and highlighted several areas for improvement. Finally, the perception of electoral fraud continues to be an issue at UK elections. While the vast majority believe voting in general to be safe, there remains a level of concern, albeit based more on media coverage than direct experience. We have previously set out our recommendation for the introduction of an ID requirement for voters at polling stations in Great Britain, reflecting that which is already in operation in Northern Ireland. The UK Government has recently announced plans to pilot the requirement for ID at a number of local elections in May 2018, and the Commission will conduct and publish a full, independent evaluation of those pilots by summer 2018. Download our full report Voting in 2017: Understanding public attitudes towards elections and voting Related content Report: How the 2017 UK general election was run Read our report about how the 2017 general election was run Results and turnout at the 2017 UK general election View the results and turnout at the 2017 general election Report: Political finance regulation at the June 2017 UK general election Read our report about political finance regulation at the 2017 general election Report: Electoral registration at the June 2017 UK general election Read our report about electoral registration at the 2017 general election

Board notes: 22 January 2020 informal briefing for Commissioners on our approach to public awareness campaigns | Electoral Commission Search

Board notes: 22 January 2020 informal briefing for Commissioners on our approach to public awareness campaigns You are in the Electoral Commission Board section

Home How we make decisions Electoral Commission Board On this page Our approach to public awareness campaigns First published: 18 June 2020 Last updated: 21 June 2021

Meeting overview Date: Wednesday 22 January 2020 Location: Boothroyd Room, 3 Bunhill Row, London Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting John Holmes, Chair Alasdair Morgan Alastair Ross Anna Carragher Sarah Chambers Elan Closs Stephens Rob Vincent Stephen Gilbert Joan Walley Craig Westwood, Director, Communications, Policy and Research Kieran Rix, Director, Finance and Corporate Services Louise Edwards, Director, Regulation Ailsa Irvine, Director, Electoral Guidance and Administration David Bailey, Head of Strategic Planning and Performance David Meek, Senior Adviser, Governance Tim Crowley, Head of Digital Communications and Learning Emma Hartley, Head of Campaigns and Corporate Identity Ben Hancock, Campaigns and Corporate Communications Manager Elaine Spooner, Senior Communications Officer, Campaigns Jess Cook, Senior Communications Officer, Campaigns and Corporate Communications Charles Courtier, Chairman, MSQ Partners Our approach to public awareness campaigns The Chair noted that this informal item was scheduled at the Board's request from a previous meeting. The Chair invited the Director of Communications, Policy, and Research and Charles Courtier, the Chairman of MSQ Partners, to address the Commissioners. The Director of Communications, Policy and Research informed the Commissioners that MSQ

Partners was the agency currently contracted to support our public awareness campaigns, particularly the campaign to encourage people to register to vote. Charles Courtier advised the Commissioners of the four strategic parameters that shape public awareness campaigns: objective, audience, engagement, and incentive / reward. He discussed how these parameters related to the Commission, including the spectrum of possible objectives, with public awareness at one end and behavioural change at the other. The Commission was closer to the latter. As far as audience selection was concerned, between going broad or narrow, the Commission was in the middle, but was particularly interested in affecting the behaviour of a small part of the audience.

On the spectrum of emotional versus rational appeal, the Commission was closer to the rational end, but did use emotive language. In terms of 'carrot versus stick', the Commission was clearly closer to the carrot end of the spectrum, but specific rewards were obviously lacking. In discussion, the Commissioners expressed an interest in exploring more emotive advertising messaging which might increase impact and outcomes

The Commissioners had a discussion about demonstrating direct impact and the difficulty in separating out the success of the Commission's activity from that of others with the same objective. Some of the latter did of course use the materials we provided. Work with partners was an important part of our activity. The Commissioners heard of the ways that we were able to track the number of people applying to register to vote as a result of exposure to our campaign, but there were limitations in determining cause and effect. Some innovations available through digital advertising, that could more closely track the success of digital campaigns, were not possible under current gov.uk website restrictions. It was noted that there were noticeable increases in the number of people accessing the website following the broadcast of campaign advertising on television, for example during the UK

Parliamentary General Election leaders' debate. We were also able to track the number of people that accessed the registration website by typing in the web page address directly, which indicated that they had seen the advertising where the address was promoted. We were not in a position to gather information on the journey of someone registering online, for example how many times they had seen our campaign, whether they had seen digital and television advertising, and whether they had also seen advertising from other campaigns promoting registration. The Commissioners discussed the targeting of groups of potential voters who were known to be less likely to be registered, such as young people, those from Black and Minority Ethnic groups and recent home movers, and the balance of resource this was currently allocated within the overall campaign. The current and recent approach had been to direct our campaigns widely, so that they appealed to all voters, supported by other targeted activity through partnerships and online. The Commissioners heard that the public awareness campaigns supporting the May 2020 local election would include both campaigns that were widely aimed and campaigns that were targeted at underrepresented groups. The Commissioners expressed an appetite for increasing the proportion of resources allocated to the targeted aspect of such campaigns, ahead of future polls. The Commissioners discussed the challenge of targeting potential voters who were disengaged from politics and not persuaded of the importance of voting. The Director of Communications, Policy and Research noted that advertising was unlikely to be a value for money route to get people engaged with politics. This would be better addressed through education work, which the Commissioners had previously discussed, and also by parties and other campaigners whose role was to explain the merits of their policy positions. The Commissioners heard about work we were engaged on with partner organisations to address the educational aspects.

Electoral registration in Great Britain in 2022 | Electoral Commission Search
Electoral registration in Great Britain in 2022 You are in the Our research
section Home Our research Currently reading: of 3 - Show page contents On this page Size of the electoral registers Effectiveness of the canvass Background Overview This report looks at how the 2022 canvass in Great Britain was run and considers how the electoral registers have been affected by the canvass reforms introduced in 2020.

Summary In 2020, new processes were introduced to make the annual canvass more efficient. These processes involve comparing the electoral registers with other public datasets so that Electoral Registration Officers (EROs) can identify households where residents' details are most likely to have changed. EROs can then target their resources at these households (by assigning them to different 'routes' for follow up contacts). The 2022 canvass was the third using this approach. This analysis sets out our latest insight into the impact that the canvass reforms are having on the quality of the electoral registers. However, we cannot draw firm conclusions on the basis of this analysis alone. In September 2023, we will publish the findings from our next study into the accuracy and completeness of the registers.
This research involves interviewing several thousand households across the UK and comparing their current details with their entries on the electoral register. It will allow us to produce reliable estimates of the quality of the registers and thereby to robustly evaluate the impact that the canvass reforms have had. The results of our previous studies are available here. In the meantime, our analysis of data relating to the 2022 canvass provides a snapshot of performance in a specific year. The data suggests that the new processes may not be sufficient to ensure that the registers keep pace with population movement and we can see clear patterns emerging: Some households continue to be allocated to the 'wrong' route due to imperfections in the data matching process and/or the lag between matching and canvassing. Almost a fifth of responses from households allocated to Route 1 (where the data matching process suggested there had been no change in household composition) reported significant changes to electors' details. The response rate among Route 2 households suggests that necessary changes to electors' details may not be reflected on the registers.
One third of Route 2 households (~2.4 million) did not respond to the canvass despite the fact that the data matching process suggested there had been a change in household composition. The number of registered attainers (i.e. those who will soon reach voting age) continues to fall, possibly as a consequence of the reduction in contact that EROs now make with Route 1 households. The decline in the number of registered attainers began after the introduction of individual electoral registration (IER) in 2014. It continued in 2022, although the number fell at a much lower rate than in 2021 (-0.23% vs. -28.70%). While we know that new registration applications are most readily driven by large scale electoral events, it is nevertheless important that the canvass and other year-round registration activity supports accurate and complete registers. This can help to reduce the large volumes of registration applications received immediately in advance of major polls, when EROs' staff capacity is already stretched. To help ensure that all eligible voters can have their say at elections, the electoral registration system in Great Britain should be further modernised. This modernisation should involve making better use of public data, including data from other government services, so that registration is as easy as possible for voters. Over 2023, we will continue to use the ERO performance standards framework to build on the work we have carried out with EROs in the past two years. We will support EROs to further develop and use key performance indicators to help them better understand and report on the impact of their activity.

We will also once again ask EROs to complete a survey during the 2023 canvass, to help us build a picture of how the canvass is progressing, as well as supporting our engagement with individual EROs and their teams.

Size of the electoral registers
Table 1 below shows the percentage change in the number of entries on the parliamentary registers in each nation of Great Britain between 2021 and 2022. Table

1. Change in the number of parliamentary entries 2021-22 Area 2021 2022 % change

England	38,889,429	38,834,540	-0.1%	Scotland	4,028,717	4,012,887	-0.4%	Wales
---------	------------	------------	-------	----------	-----------	-----------	-------	-------

2,307,877	2,310,148	0.1%	Great Britain	45,226,023	45,157,575	-0.2%	In the West
-----------	-----------	------	---------------	------------	------------	-------	-------------

Midlands, the East of England, the South East, Scotland and Wales the number of local government register entries increased slightly between 2021 and 2022 (see Table 2).

In the other regions, the number of local government entries fell slightly. Table 2.

Change in the number of local government entries 2021-22 Area 2021 2022 %change

England	40,882,721	40,857,874	-0.1%	North East	1,946,010	1,943,955	-0.1%	North West
---------	------------	------------	-------	------------	-----------	-----------	-------	------------

5,421,090	5,419,776	0.0%	Yorkshire and the Humber	4,009,237	3,986,561	-0.6%	East
-----------	-----------	------	--------------------------	-----------	-----------	-------	------

3,554,099	3,553,180	0.0%	West Midlands	4,253,449	4,257,399	0.1%	East of
-----------	-----------	------	---------------	-----------	-----------	------	---------

England	4,633,193	4,636,054	0.1%	London	6,021,139	6,000,191	-0.3%	South East
---------	-----------	-----------	------	--------	-----------	-----------	-------	------------

6,775,409	6,796,943	0.3%	South West	4,269,095	4,263,815	-0.1%	Scotland	4,245,217
-----------	-----------	------	------------	-----------	-----------	-------	----------	-----------

4,250,579	0.1%	Wales	2,348,576	2,362,964	0.6%	Great Britain	47,476,514	47,471,417
-----------	------	-------	-----------	-----------	------	---------------	------------	------------

0.0% Variations in levels of registration can be driven by changes in the size of the eligible population or by policy changes, such as extensions to the franchise.

Changes can also be driven by reforms to the canvassing approaches used by EROs, as well as national and local voter registration campaigns. Our analysis below explores what the available data tells us about the effectiveness of the canvass.

Attainers People who will reach voting age and become eligible to vote during the lifetime of the register are known as attainers. Attainers can be included on the electoral registers. The number of attainers has been falling for several years. The number of attainers on the parliamentary registers in Great Britain fell by -0.23% between 2021 and 2022 (see Table 3 below). This marked a dramatic reduction in the rate of decline relative to 2020 and 2021. The introduction of individual registration in 2014 meant that attainers had to make their own application to register (rather than being added through a single household form) and this change coincided with a decline in numbers.

The number of registered attainers in Great Britain has fallen every year since 2017, albeit by varying degrees (see Figure 1). In 2020 and 2021, the overall decrease across Great Britain as a whole was driven by large drops in the number of registered attainers in England (-25.9% and -40.6%, respectively). This trend was broken in 2022, when the number of attainers rose slightly (1.17%). Similarly, whereas Scotland saw a modest increase in registered attainers in both 2020 (0.9%) and 2021 (6.1%), this number fell in 2022 (-4.52%). In Wales, the number of registered attainers increased significantly in 2020 (11.6%) and 2021 (34.2%) and this upward trend continued in 2022, but the increase was much smaller (0.74%). The reformed annual canvass may be exacerbating the decline seen from 2014 onwards, as the need to add an attainer to the register will not be identified through the data matching process.

For example, many households in Route 1 will have potential attainers but now receive fewer communications from EROs to encourage them to become registered. The different pattern in Scotland and Wales is likely to be connected to the extension of the devolved elections' franchise to 16 and 17 year olds (and associated increased registration activity). This seems to be offsetting a systematic problem with the registration of attainers evident in England. Our next accuracy and completeness research will give us an updated assessment of the registration rate for attainers, which was 25% in our 2018 study. Our engagement with EROs indicates that they recognise that their attainer numbers are falling, despite efforts to engage widely with education institutions and use education data to support this work. South Norfolk and Peterborough have had some success engaging with schools around school elections, to help build relationships with them. North Hertfordshire also carried out targeted work to promote registration in schools during UK Parliament Week. However, overall, a lack of staff capacity to support this work and issues with the accuracy of education data were common reasons given for not being able to do more in this area. Despite numbers stabilising somewhat in 2022, attainer registration is unlikely to significantly increase through the existing registration and canvass processes alone. This is an area where a more automated registration process could be beneficial. Data from the education sector could help EROs identify and target attainers and other young people. Also, data from the Department for Work and Pensions could potentially be used by EROs to register young people to vote automatically when they are allocated their National Insurance number ahead of their 16th birthday. Table 3. Number of attainers on the parliamentary registers in Great Britain 2013-22 Year England Scotland Wales Great Britain Attainers % change

Attainers % change	Attainers % change	Attainers % change	2022	113,266	1.17%	39,025
-4.52%	19,517	0.74%	171,808	-0.23%	2021	111,958 -40.60%
172,203	-28.70%	2020	188,472	-25.90%	38,518	0.90%
254,384	-1.40%	38,171	-7.60%	12,942	0.00%	305,497 -2.10%
-4.80%	12,948	1.20%	312,182	-4.00%	2017	269,092 -5.40%
325,243	-4.30%	2016	284,522	19.00%	41,561	67.40%
239,019	-6.20%	24,827	-36.30%	12,339	-12.30%	276,185 -10.30%
38,963	-38.60%	14,065	-24.40%	307,864	-33.30%	2013
461,350	NA	Other register statistics	16 and 17 year olds (Scotland and Wales)	In	379,284	NA
Scotland and Wales,	16 and 17 year-olds can vote in Scottish Parliament, Senedd and local council elections.	This change was introduced in 2015 in Scotland and 2020 in Wales.	In Scotland, 76,955 16 and 17 year-olds were registered on the local government registers at the conclusion of the 2022 canvass (see Table 4).	This represents a -1.3% decrease on 2021. Taken with NRS population estimates, this indicates that roughly two thirds of 16 and 17 year-olds in Scotland are included on the local government registers.	1.60%	339,734 23.00%
1 EROs across Scotland continue to engage with 16 and 17 year-olds using a variety of methods including direct mailing, phone/text communications, contact with schools and universities, issuing press releases, social media activity, distributing newsletters, and local advertising, as well as local activity with partner organisations.	Case study – Lothian Valuation Joint Board	Lothian Valuation Joint Board – covering the City of Edinburgh, East Lothian, Midlothian and West Lothian Council areas – uses a combination of approaches to encourage 16 and 17 year-olds to register, including direct emails, attending events and data mining.	In the days after they sent a targeted email, there was a spike in registration applications. Across four events attended, they reported directly registering 357 students and engaging with a great deal more.	Data mining school lists and subsequent follow up activities were attributable to a 6.6% increase in registered school pupils over the age of 16 (equal to approximately 1,075 applications), and an overall increase of 18.9% for school pupils over the age of 14 (approximately 5,754 applications).	48,962	2015
Table 4. Number of 16 and 17 year-olds on the local government registers in Scotland 2015-22 Year	16 and 17 year-olds	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019
2020	2021	2022	2022	2022	2022	2022
In Wales, 36,722 16 and 17 year-olds were on the local government registers on 1 December 2022. This represents a 10.5% increase on 2021, meaning the rate of growth	73,777	73,272	77,958	76,955

in the number of registered 16 and 17 year-olds has slowed since the previous canvass, which saw a 115.1% increase relative to 2020. Taken with the ONS mid-year population estimates for 2021, our canvass data suggests that just over half of 16 and 17 year-olds in Wales are currently included on the local government registers. 2 Across Wales, EROs carried out a range of activity to encourage registration amongst 16 and 17 year-olds. Using grant funding from Welsh Government, many authorities appointed temporary public engagement officers and there appears to have been an increase in the range of engagement that was undertaken in those areas. The strongly held opinion of the local authorities that we talked to was that this resource should continue to be made available to ensure that the foundations already laid are built upon and this important work can continue. In addition to more standard engagement activities such as direct mailing, phone/text communications, contact with schools, press releases, newsletters and social media, some authorities undertook additional activities such as: creating website banners and TikTok videos to share with schools working with youth councils and youth partnership groups sending 16th birthday cards advertising in bus shelters pop-up sessions in schools teacher training sessions using Electoral Commission resources Case study – Torfaen County Borough Council Alongside developing an advertising campaign targeted at 16-17 year olds, Torfaen Council undertook several activities to engage with young people in the area. This included recording several videos with school pupils on how to vote and what the local council does, working with schools to promote registration via pupil post and parent portals, and running assemblies and mock elections. This activity was led by the Engagement and Electoral Participation Officer. Torfaen saw a 9% increase in registration amongst 16-17 year olds. Overseas electors A UK citizen living abroad who has been registered to vote in the UK in the past 15 years can apply to be an overseas voter. These registrations currently need to be renewed annually. The total number of overseas electors on the 2022 registers in Great Britain was 79,665 (Table 5). Table 5. Number of overseas electors on the parliamentary registers in Great Britain 2015-22

Area	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	England	Scotland	Wales	UK
England	97,572	241,097	205,687	113,833	185,513	170,196	94,908	73,407	7,729	15,230	12,790	6,679
Great Britain	108,241	263,894	225,472	124,190	204,069	184,982	104,665	79,665

This is a decrease of -23.9% since the publication of the registers in 2021. It marks a continuation in the decline of registered overseas electors that has been ongoing since 2019. This decline is likely a consequence of the fact that there has not been an election in which overseas electors can vote since the 2019 UK parliamentary general election. The Elections Act 2022 extends the number of overseas citizens who will be eligible to register and vote, and also changes the requirement to renew registration annually to every three years. The extension of eligibility could result in a high volume of applications close to the next UK parliamentary general election, which EROs will need to be prepared to manage. We will carry out targeted support and engagement activities with EROs ahead of the next UK parliamentary general election.

Anonymous electors The number of anonymous electoral register entries on the parliamentary registers in Great Britain decreased from 3,097 in 2021 to 2,842 in 2022 (Table 6). Anonymous registration is available for people meeting certain requirements, whose safety, or the safety of someone in the same household, is at risk. People registered anonymously appear on the electoral register without their name and address. Table 6. Number of anonymous electors on the parliamentary registers in Great Britain 2015-22

Area	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022
England	2,151	2,194	2,440	2,550	3,214	3,064	2,788	2,539
Scotland	111	117	116	130	194

196 187 191 Wales 74 74 85 108 138 114 122 112 Great Britain 2,336 2,385 2,641 2,788
3,546 3,374 3,097 2,842 Effectiveness of the canvass Route allocations At the beginning of the canvass, all registers are matched against Department for Work and Pensions (DWP) data. The results are used by EROs to allocate properties to 'routes' which determine how many times they will contact a household to attempt to get a response (see Background section below for more detail). EROs can also carry out further matching using local data, such as council tax records. The majority of EROs carried out local data matching and, as in 2021, council tax records were the most popular datasets used. The local data matching step had a significant impact on the number of households allocated to each route, as shown in Table 7. As in 2021, when asked whether their approach to local data matching was the same as or different to last year's, a majority (87%) of those EROs who responded said that their approach was the same. For those that decided to take a different approach, the responses suggest that this predominantly involved using a wider range of data sources. In a small handful of cases, EROs used fewer datasets in 2022 relative to 2021. These EROs cited concerns around the quality of local data, the challenge of matching registers to council tax data where the latter does not contain unique property reference numbers (UPRNs), difficulty using the data matching function within their electoral management software (EMS) system, and resource shortages as reasons for using fewer datasets this year. Other changes that EROs made to the data matching process in 2022 included allowing more time to complete the data matching step and making better use of EMS systems to reduce the level of manual matching. In some cases, EROs opted to skip the local data matching step. For example, the London Borough of Barnet chose not to conduct local data matching so as to limit the number of properties allocated to Route 1. They cited some concerns over the accuracy of local data but also noted that this approach did lead to higher costs as a higher proportion of properties needed to be more frequently contacted via the Route 2 process. Across the board, those local authorities who did not conduct local data matching allocated fewer properties to Route 1 (68% vs 76%), and more properties to Route 2 (31% vs 23%).
Table 7. Number of properties allocated to each route after national and local data matching Route No. properties allocated after DWP match No. properties allocated after local data match % change 1 19,875,665 22,186,204 11.62% 2 9,406,384 7,341,172 -21.96% 3 NA 305,128 NA The percentage of properties allocated to Route 2 was 24.6% (see Table 8). This is in line with the expectations set out in the statement of policy for canvass reform published by the UK, Scottish and Welsh governments in 2019, which predicted that approximately one quarter of properties would need to be allocated to Route 2 nationally. 3 The percentage of households allocated to Routes 1, 2 and 3 continues to be fairly consistent across Great Britain, with the exception of London (Table 8). As in previous years, the proportion of households allocated to Route 1 was lower (66.2%) in London than in other regions, while the proportion allocated to Route 2 was higher (32.8%). This reflects the higher rate of population movement in London: as the rate of change in household composition is higher in London, fewer properties are successfully matched against existing DWP and local data. Table 8. Percentage of properties allocated to each route by nation and region Area Route 1 Route 2 Route 3 England 74.3% 24.7% 1.0% North East 80.9% 18.9% 0.2% North West 74.4% 24.9% 0.7% Yorkshire and the Humber 74.3% 24.7% 1.1% East Midlands 76.6% 21.6% 1.9% West Midlands 74.2% 24.2% 1.6% East of England 77.0% 22.3% 0.7% London 66.2% 32.8% 1.0% South East 75.1% 24.1% 0.8% South West 76.7% 22.4% 0.9% Scotland 73.9% 24.8% 1.3% Wales 76.5% 22.4% 1.1% Great Britain 74.4% 24.6% 1.0% The changes to the annual canvass were designed to allow EROs to direct their resources at households whose composition was most likely to have changed. The effectiveness of the new canvass, based on this targeting of activity, will therefore be strongly determined by two things: the accuracy of the data matching and the level of response achieved. We can draw some conclusions about both from an analysis of household response rates within the two allocated routes. Household response rates per route As expected, the response rate is significantly higher among Route 2 households, where changes are expected, than Route 1 households, where they are not (67.1% vs 22.9%) (see Table 9). In 2019, before the canvass process was reformed, 23.8 million household responses were received during the canvass. In 2022, only 10 million responses were received, which is higher than the level of responses received in 2020 and 2021 (~9 million). This drop in the number of household responses since the implementation of canvass reform can be partly explained by the lower response rate among Route 1 households, which comprise the vast majority of all households but which are not required to respond unless a change to the register is needed. However, as in 2021, almost a third of Route 2 households did not respond. These are households where the data suggests a change to the register may be needed. It is important for the accuracy and completeness of the registers that the response rate for Route 2 households is as high as possible. Several EROs suggested that funding pressures made it difficult to achieve a higher Route 2 response rate, in part because these pressures made it harder to recruit canvassers. Others were unable to run public awareness campaigns or were impacted by the increase in the cost of postage. A growing number of EROs are using e-communications and telephone canvassing as this represents better value for money. However, this does present some limitations as telephone data is not always complete and some respondents are wary of e-communications from the ERO and mistake them for spam. It continues to be a challenge to reach communities who have historically been reluctant to engage with canvassers. Densely populated urban areas with high rates of population movement appear to be the most challenging areas. Some EROs are choosing to target their door-knocking efforts only in these locations. However, data from previous years demonstrates that even that is not universally successful. Some EROs are using different methods in specific areas. For example, the team in Chelmsford have supported their canvassers in building relationships with their gated communities and caravan sites. This has involved the communications team developing resources to support canvassers in those areas. Their initial experience suggests this approach is working well. We will focus our analysis of the Route 2 data over the coming years to further develop our understanding of the challenges faced by EROs and to support the identification of actions to help mitigate against the risks to the accuracy and completeness of their electoral registers. We will also undertake work with smaller groups of EROs to facilitate the sharing of good practice between those facing similar challenges. Variations in response rate As in 2020 and 2021, the response rate among Route 2 households varied significantly in 2022. For the third year, Scotland reported the lowest response rate among Route 2 properties (50.7%) (see Table 10). It may be that the year-round registration activity in Scotland, supported by elections in May 2021 and 2022, will have mitigated any negative impact of this lower response rate on the registers. The results of our next accuracy and completeness study should allow us to draw clearer conclusions.

	Route 1	Route 2
England	23.7%	69.0%
North East	10.9%	65.6%
North West	17.3%	61.7%
Yorkshire and the Humber	19.5%
East Midlands	24.7%	76.0%
West Midlands	23.2%	70.3%
East of England	25.2%	73.9%
London	22.3%	64.3%
South East	31.9%	73.2%
South West	29.4%	75.4%
Scotland	17.0%	50.7%

Wales 21.2% 66.1% Great Britain 22.9% 67.1% Table 10. Route 2 response rates 2020-22 Area 2020 2021 2022 England 67.4% 70.1% 69.0% North East 59.3% 62.7% 65.6% North West 61.8% 63.2% 61.7% Yorkshire and the Humber 70.5% 67.3% 65.6% East Midlands 72.5% 75.6% 76.0% West Midlands 69.3% 71.2% 70.3% East of England 72.3% 75.8% 73.9% London 59.7% 65.9% 64.3% South East 71.5% 74.2% 73.2% South West 72.4% 75.4% 75.4% Scotland 50.0% 50.7% 50.7% Wales 63.6% 65.4% 66.1% Great Britain 65.5% 68.1% 67.1% Major and minor changes per route The nature of the responses received can also give an indication of the efficacy of the reformed canvass process. Responding households can record a major change (e.g. reporting that a potential new elector is resident), a minor change (e.g. amending the name of an existing elector) or no change (i.e. confirming the existing details of household members). Understanding the distribution of these changes can tell us about the accuracy of the data matching process. Of the 10 million responses received across all routes, 2.8 million households reported a major change. Table 11 describes how these major changes were distributed across the three routes. The pattern is broadly in line with 2020 and 2021. Table 11.

Distribution of major changes across routes

Route	Number of households reporting a major change	% of households reporting a major change
Route 1	933,813	32.8%
Route 2	1,860,570	65.4%
Route 3	52,096	1.8%
Total	2,846,479	100.0%

Approximately two thirds of major changes were reported by Route 2 households – i.e., those identified during the data matching step as the households most likely to report changes to residents' registration details. However, as in both 2020 and 2021, nearly a third (32.8%) of the major changes reported relate to Route 1 households, where the DWP and/or local data had indicated no change should be needed. As in the previous two years, of the 22.2 million households allocated to Route 1, the percentage reporting a major change (4.2%) is small. However, as Figure 3 below shows, almost a fifth of those Route 1 households who responded to the canvass reported a major change. Importantly for the quality of the registers, it is also unlikely that all the Route 1 households that needed to report a major change have done so – particularly as they would have received limited contact from the ERO. We do not have comparative data on the number of major changes reported by households during the canvasses preceding the reforms. It is therefore not clear to what extent the 2020-22 canvasses are out of line with historic figures. However, it is clear that either the data matching process does not accurately identify all properties where changes will be needed and/or there is an impact from the lag time between the matching and the canvassing taking place.

Additions and deletions

Canvassing households does not directly result in new registrations. When a household reports that a potential new elector is resident, that individual still needs to submit an application to be added to the register. Where a household reports that electors need to be removed from the registers, a second piece of evidence (e.g. locally held data) is needed before the ERO can confirm the deletion. Entries need to be added to, and deleted from, the registers for several reasons including migration, home movement and deaths. The level of these additions and deletions provides insight into whether registration activity is keeping pace with population change. As population mobility varies across the country, so does the scale of the challenge faced by EROs. As in 2020 and 2021, the distribution of additions and deletions across the routes is largely as expected, with Route 2 households accounting for the highest proportion of changes (see Table 12). However, approximately 40% of both additions and deletions came from households whose composition was presumed to be unchanged following the data matching. Again, this suggests either a degree of inaccuracy in the allocation of households to routes or an impact from population movement between matching and canvassing. Table 12.

Percentage of additions and deletions per route Additions / Deletions Route 1 Route 2 Route 3 Additions 39.91% 56.50% 3.60% Deletions 39.02% 57.36% 3.62% This data suggests that at least some population change is not being picked up on the registers. We cannot draw clear conclusions on the overall impact from this data alone – partly because of the variable impact of electoral events outside the canvass. However, our accuracy and completeness research will provide evidence on whether the quality of the registers has declined since 2018, before the introduction of the reformed canvass. Table 13 below shows the levels of additions and deletions in recent years (for the full year, not just the canvass period). In 2020, 2021 and 2022, additions and deletions have been slightly lower than in some previous years (e.g. 2013 and 2015). However, it is usual to see more change – and higher additions, in particular – in years with significant UK-wide electoral events, such as UK general elections and the EU referendum). Table 13. Annual percentage of additions and deletions 2010-22

Year	Additions	Deletions
2010	13%	12%
2013	15%	15%
2015	15%	15%
2016	15%	13%
2017	13%	13%
2018	11%	12%
2019	13%	10%
2020	10%	10%
2021	11%	11%
2022	10%	10%

As Table 14 sets out, we also expect to see a higher proportion of changes being picked up during the canvass period, compared to the rest of the year, in years without UK-wide elections (e.g. 2018). This trend continued in 2022. Table 14.

Percentage of additions during and outside of canvass period 2015-22

Year	Additions	Deletions	During canvass	Outside canvass
2015	40%	60%	58%	43%
2016	38%	64%	54%	47%
2017	39%	61%	56%	44%
2018	68%	32%	68%	32%
2019	62%	38%	61%	39%
2020	56%	44%	64%	36%
2021	61%	39%	61%	39%
2022	61%	39%	65%	35%

The 2022 data on the proportion of additions and deletions recorded during the canvass period also supports this point (see Table 15). The proportion of additions during the canvass was lowest in Wales (51.6%), followed by Scotland (52.4%) and then by England (62.2%). The proportion of deletions during the canvass was lowest in Scotland (58.9%), followed by Wales (61.4%), and then by England (66.2%). The fact that the proportion of both additions and deletions during the canvass were highest in England aligns with the fact that turnout in England at the May 2022 elections was lower than in both Scotland and Wales. Table 15. Additions and deletions during full year and canvass period, per nation

Area	Additions	Deletions	Full year	Canvass period % during canvass period	England	Scotland	Wales	Great Britain
England	4,184,944	2,602,740	62.2%	4,233,640	2,802,569	66.2%	397,080	208,263	52.4%
Scotland	234,824	226,355	58.9%	116,703	51.6%	218,729	134,293	61.4%	399,007
Wales	4,808,379	2,927,706	60.9%	3,171,686	4,851,376	65.4%	218,729	134,293	61.4%
Great Britain	4,808,379	2,927,706	60.9%	3,171,686	4,851,376	65.4%	218,729	134,293	61.4%

Further reform of the annual canvass An effective canvass process is an important tool to provide for a high-quality register at all times and to minimise the need for significant updates ahead of major polls. However, evidence from our analysis of canvass data in recent years suggests that the reformed canvass process is still not fully picking up ongoing population movement. This means that EROs will continue to face the challenge of processing large numbers of registration applications in the period immediately before major electoral events, from new electors or people who have changed address that were not picked up by the canvass. This continues to increase risks to the resilience of electoral administration teams in the pre-election period, when they are under significant resource pressures and have critical election deadlines to meet. We have highlighted significant concerns in successive reports on electoral registration that the registration system, including the annual canvass, is unlikely to be sustainable in the longer term. We continue to recommend that governments should further reform electoral registration so that registering and updating address details is as easy as possible for people who aren't correctly registered to vote, and managing electoral registration is more efficient for EROs. We have highlighted how these reforms could be delivered in practice , including: Introducing more automated or automatic electoral registration options through other public service transactions that people already frequently use, for example applications for passports or changes to driving licence address details, or when new National Insurance numbers are issued to people turning 16. Giving EROs access to data from a wide range of public service organisations so that they can identify new electors who are not correctly registered. There is some evidence that canvass reform has addressed one aspect of sustainability, by reducing the resource consumed by unnecessarily chasing households where there has been no change. However, our analysis has highlighted some signs that it has not had a positive impact on the other key aspect, the system's ability to pick up population changes away from major electoral events. The results from our next accuracy and completeness study, in autumn 2023, will allow us to assess the overall impact on the registers of the reformed canvass in Great Britain.

Background Electoral registers

There is no national electoral register for the United Kingdom. Separate electoral registers are compiled and maintained by each Electoral Registration Officer (ERO) across Great Britain, and one register for Northern Ireland is compiled and maintained by the Chief Electoral Officer. Electoral Registration Officers (EROs) are required to maintain two electoral registers: Parliamentary register – used for UK Parliamentary elections Local government register – used for Scottish Parliamentary, Senedd, Northern Ireland Assembly, local government and Police and Crime Commissioner elections

The electoral register is a property-based database, with register entries linked to a property. This means that the quality of its information is affected by ongoing population change and EROs need to add and delete records for home-movers, electors who have died and newly eligible electors. New registers are published annually and reviewed most months. In Great Britain, there is a process of auditing the register annually before a revised version is published, which is known as the annual canvass. Each ERO is required by law to conduct an annual canvass of all properties in their area to confirm their electoral register entries and to identify electors who have moved or were not previously registered.

The reformed canvass

The 2022 canvass was the third to take place under a new model which incorporates data matching between the electoral registers and a combination of national and local data at the outset of the process. This data matching informs the ERO which properties are likely to have an unchanged household composition to enable them to target their canvass activity accordingly. The ERO will then follow one of three routes for each property:

- Route 1: Properties are placed into Route 1 if the entries of registered electors match with other data, such as that held by the DWP, and the composition of the household is therefore assumed to be unchanged. The ERO will contact Route 1 households to invite them to provide information on any changes which have occurred. Where there are no changes to report, the household is not required to respond.
- Route 2: Properties are placed into Route 2 if any of the entries of registered electors do not match with other data, such as that held by the DWP, and the composition of the household is therefore assumed to have changed such that the electoral register needs to be updated. These households are required to respond to requests for information regardless of whether or not they do in fact need to report a change.
- Route 3: This route is available for those properties where the ERO thinks they can most effectively and efficiently obtain information on residents through a 'single responsible person' acting on behalf of all residents. Care homes and student halls of residence are examples of typical Route 3 properties. Should the ERO be unable to successfully obtain information about the property from the ‘single responsible person’, the property is placed into Route 2. Engagement with EROs The Commission has the statutory power to set and monitor performance standards for EROs in Great Britain and has been doing so since 2008. In June 2021 we launched a new set of ERO standards. In December 2022 we updated these to reflect the changes being introduced by the Elections Act. We expect to consider further updates as electoral reform proposals from Welsh Government and Scottish Government are progressed. We will continue to use the performance standards framework over the course of this year to build on the work we carried out with EROs in 2022, supporting them to establish more formalised key performance indicators (KPIs) in order to help them better understand, and report on, the impact of their activity. This year we have seen a significant increase in the number of EROs that report having KPIs in place, from 45% in 2021 to 70% in 2022. In the coming year we will shift our emphasis to the content and quality of the KPIs that have been set and how these are being used to inform decision making locally. We are also working with a number of local authorities to develop tools and resources to help EROs make effective use of their data to identify areas where improvements could be made. The data we have gathered to date will help to inform and shape the engagement we carry out with individual EROs, with the aim of developing a deeper understanding of the impact of particular practices and approaches, which in turn can help us to identify and share examples of good practice. In 2023/24, in addition to the specific engagement with EROs during the canvass period, which will be similar to 2022, we will also take a year-round approach to engagement with EROs. As well as focussing on KPIs, this will also involve data collection and engagement around the Elections Act changes which impact on the role of EROs, including administering the Voter Authority Certificate process. Download the electoral registration data 2020-2022 Electoral Registration and Annual Canvass Data 2020-22 1. NRS (2022) Mid-2021 Population Estimates Scotland ■ Back to content at footnote 1 2. ONS (2022) Estimates of the population for the UK, England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland, Table MYE2 - Persons ■ Back to content at footnote 2 3. HM Government, Scottish Government and Welsh Government (2019) Reform of the Annual Canvass: Statement of Policy ■ Back to content at footnote 3 Page history First published: 30 March 2023 Last updated: 30 March 2023 Related content Our research about our research, which helps inform our work and our policies 2019 report: Accuracy and completeness of the 2018 electoral registers in Great Britain Read our report on the accuracy and completeness of the 2018 electoral registers in Great Britain 2019 electoral fraud data about electoral fraud in 2019 and view the data Public attitudes Read our reports about public attitudes towards voting

Report: Electoral registration at the June 2017 UK general election | Electoral Commission Search Report: Electoral registration at the June 2017 UK general election You are in the UK general elections section Home UK general elections On this page Key data Key issues Key areas for further improvement Download our full report First published: 19 June 2019 Last updated: 13 August 2019 What the report includes A UK Parliamentary general election was held on 8 June 2017. This is the first of the Electoral Commission's statutory reports on the election, and it focuses on the registration of voters, which is at the heart of a sound and efficient electoral system. It sets out our analysis of key data about electoral registration applications and the electoral registers, and identifies issues and recommendations for further improving and modernising the system, which we believe to be urgently needed. Within the UK, the developing devolution settlement means that the Scottish and Welsh Governments have powers to develop policy and legislation for electoral registration for local government elections and Scottish Parliament and National Assembly for Wales elections respectively. We will continue to work closely with all of the UK's governments to help support the development of new approaches to improve the accuracy and completeness of electoral registers. Key data An estimated 46.8 million people were registered to vote at the June 2017 UK Parliamentary general election, of which 68.8% actually voted. This was the largest electorate for a UK-wide poll, with approximately 500,000 more electors than at the 2015 election. More than 2.9 million applications to register to vote were made in Great Britain between the Prime Minister's announcement on 18 April (that she would ask Parliament to approve a general election) and the deadline for applications on 22 May. More than 96% of applications were made using the online service, including 612,000 which were submitted on the last day for applications. Between 18 April and 22 May, over two thirds (69%) of online applications were made by people aged under 34. Key issues The online registration service has significantly improved access to elections in Great Britain since it was introduced in June 2014, but it is not yet available for people in Northern Ireland. Electoral Registration Officers (EROs) have again highlighted the significant administrative and financial impact of processing duplicate applications submitted by people who are already registered to vote. Initial estimates by EROs of the proportion of duplicate applications have ranged from 30% of the total submitted in some areas to 70% in others. Although people may lawfully be registered to vote in more than one place in certain circumstances, it is troubling that some voters appear to have admitted voting more than once at the general election, which is an offence. Key areas for further improvement Online electoral registration should be extended to Northern Ireland as soon as possible. Urgent steps are needed to reduce both the scale and administrative impact of duplicate registration applications for EROs ahead of future polls. Tools to prevent double voting at general elections should be explored quickly. Funding for EROs needs to reflect better the scale of activity required to process electoral registration applications ahead of major polls. Electoral registration should be more joined-up with other public services, to make registering to vote even simpler for the public and more efficient for EROs. This should include integrating applications into other public service transactions, and better use of national data to identify new electors or home movers. Automatic registration methods should be explored further, drawing on other countries' experiences. Download our full report Electoral registration at the June 2017 UK general election Related content Results and turnout at the 2017 UK general election View the results and turnout at the 2017 general election Report: Voting in 2017 Read our report about voting at the general election in 2017 Report:

How the 2017 UK general election was run Read our report about how the 2017 general election was run Report: Political finance regulation at the June 2017 UK general election Read our report about political finance regulation at the 2017 general election

Scottish Parliament Political Parties Panel minutes: 21 January 2021 | Electoral Commission Search Scottish Parliament Political Parties

Panel minutes: 21 January 2021 You are in the Party panels section Home How we make decisions Party panels On this page Who was at the meeting Welcome and introductions Minutes of the last meeting Preparations for the Scottish Parliamentary Election 2021 Report on observations from Scottish Council by-elections EMB Convener directions Electoral registration, postal voting, proxy voting Electoral Commission guidance update Inclusion Scotland - Access to Elected Office Fund Scottish Government update Scotland Office/Cabinet Office update Scottish Boundary Commissions update EMB update Dates of next meeting First published: 20 April 2021 Last updated: 21 May 2021 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting Matt Edmonds, Scottish Conservative and Unionist Party (Chair) Scott Martin, Scottish National Party Paul Moat, Scottish Liberal Democrats Fiona O'Donnell, Scottish Labour Party Isabel Drummond-Murray, Scottish Boundary Commissions Maria McCann, Scottish Government Iain Hockenhull, Scottish Government James Newman, Scottish Government Malcolm Burr, Convener Electoral Management Board for Scotland Chris Highcock, Electoral Management Board for Scotland Pete Wildman, Scottish Assessors Association (chair of Electoral Registration Committee) Eleanor Tankard, Office of the Secretary of State for Scotland Rachel Winham, Royal Mail Scott Forsyth, Royal Mail Ethan Young, Inclusion Scotland Dame Susan Bruce, Electoral Commissioner, Scotland Alasdair Morgan, Electoral Commissioner Andy O'Neill, Head of Electoral Commission, Scotland Sarah Mackie, Manager, Electoral Commission, Scotland Martin McKeown, Senior Adviser, Elections & s, Scotland Catherine Heggie, Partnerships and Information Officer, Scotland Lindsey Hamilton, Business Support Officer, Scotland (Minutes) Welcome and introductions Matt Edmonds (ME) welcomed those present and introductions were made.

Minutes of the last meeting The minutes of the previous meeting held on 24 November 2020 were approved. Preparations for the Scottish Parliamentary Election 2021 Scottish General Election (Coronavirus) Bill and other legislation relating to Scottish Parliamentary election 2021 Maria McCann (MMcC) said the Scottish General Election (Coronavirus) Bill had been passed unanimously on 23 December and now awaited Royal Assent. The First Minister had said they were committed to going ahead with the election on 6 May and saw no reason to change that position, but if a postponement were to be required, it would take the form of an emergency Bill and come back to MSPs to vote on. Rachel Winham (RW) asked how likely an all postal election would be. MMcC said it was extremely unlikely and only in the event of a postponement. MMcC said there was an agreed approach to the vaccination programme which prioritised those most vulnerable so those working in elections could not be vaccinated earlier than planned and it was possible that by May very significant numbers would have been vaccinated. Action: MMcC to circulate a link to Jason Leitch's Q&A's Report on observations from Scottish Council by-elections Martin McKeown (MMcK) said the key point to take from the Report was elections could be conducted safely with aspects of polling adapted to the public health condition. He said there would be a briefing on 5 February with all RO/EROs in Scotland to talk through the findings and also concerns about the polls going ahead. Fiona O'Donnell (FOD) asked if there was any correlation between by-elections held and turnout, but the by-elections had been held before moving to the tier system and there was no evidence of a great upturn in postal votes. EMB Convener directions Malcolm Burr (MB) said that directions had been issued to RO/EROs and a discussion on points arising took place. See directions Electoral registration, postal voting, proxy voting Pete Wildman (PW) said that by 1st December, postal vote applications were 16.6% and by

1st January 16.69%. During this period the electorate grew by 6,500. He advised that a Household Notification Letter (HNL) would be issued across Scotland starting week of 8 February confirming who was registered to vote at the property and who had a postal vote. It would provide instructions on how to register and apply for a postal vote. A TV advert airing during the first two weeks of February would raise awareness of postal voting. Any requests for a postal vote application form made to an ERO would be supplied with a business reply paid envelope. All postal vote applications needed to be returned to the EROs by 5pm on 6 April 2021. Scott Martin (SM) asked about the postal vote signature refresh, PW confirmed that was happening and if a registered postal voter did not reply to the request they would lose their postal vote, even if listed on the HNL. Electoral Commission guidance update MMcK confirmed core guidance for parties, candidates and agents had now been published and asked it be directed to those in the parties who required it. He said the website would make it clear that early contact should be made with the RRO and ROs to go over which aspects of the election would be different, e.g. nominations. Campaigning under Covid-19 - MMcK said the consultation with parties surrounding concerns on campaigning had closed and supplementary guidance to be issued would reflect the feedback received. Briefings for Parties -MMcK noted guidance on imprints had been circulated with some taking up the invitation to meet and discuss. He said he was happy to meet with all Parties to discuss any aspect of guidance. Code of Conduct for s -Sarah Mackie (SMA) reminded all of the voluntary code for campaigners, following receipt of complaints from the public. She said the Commission had not been provided with any evidence but in light of the earlier deadline for postal vote applications asked that candidates and campaigners be aware of the deadline and to direct forms to the relevant EROs so that postal vote applications could be received in time. She confirmed Scotland was the only country holding elections this year with an earlier postal voting deadline (for the Scottish Parliament election) but there were also a number of council by-elections taking place which carried the usual minus 11 days deadline. The Commission's postal voting forms were being updated to remove deadline references but with advice to check the deadline for the specific election applied for. Action: SMA to circulate the Commission's updated postal voting form as soon as possible. PW reminded all that requests for application forms to EROs were sent out with a letter explaining the deadline and the HNL made the deadline clear. FOD asked how to establish two days from parties gathering the forms. SMA advised that if in doubt, to leave the form in the voter's hands to forward to the relevant ERO. FOD asked if the Commission's recently published report on the by-elections had any questions on the value voters placed on receiving leaflets or a door knock visit. AON replied that the Commission's research did not cover that. Public Awareness - SMA briefed the Panel on a number of awareness activities to be undertaken leading to the Scottish Parliament election. The Chief Medical officer (CMO) was going to write in February to those who were shielding and the Commission would liaise with the CMO over the content of the letter. A virtual 'Welcome to your vote' week scheduled for the end of February would be held which replicated the work which would normally be done in schools. For qualifying foreign nationals there would be workshops with refugee groups. The main electoral registration campaign would commence on 9 March with TV, online and radio focussing on encouraging registration ahead of the deadline. The household booklet would go out on 22 March and would include information on what Parliament does, voting method options, how to vote and what to expect in the polling station under Covid restrictions. SM recalled parties had been consulted on the booklet in the past and asked if that would happen this time. SMA indicated that, as previously, finalised text would be shared with parties for their information. Inclusion Scotland - Access to Elected Office Fund Ethan young (EY) spoke of the importance in having parties' record data on protected characteristics to help reduce barriers to those who run for public office. The data should include:- how many disabled people approved/not approved for candidate selection, who had/had not been selected as a candidate, how many elected and to which office The Parties' asked if EY could send a best practice guide including the information sought and which he agreed to do. Action: Ethan Young Scottish Government update Codes of Practice on spending - MMcC explained the Codes had not been introduced to the Scottish Parliament for the reasons given in the written update circulated earlier.

e-Counting 2022 - James Newman (JN) said an early trial of the system had taken place with a number of minor changes requested which would be developed prior to further testing. He committed to coming back to the group to canvass views either writing directly to the parties' or bringing to the next meeting. Action: James Newman.

Campaigning under Covid - MMcC said current regulations didn't permit door-to-door activity or public meetings and she would be interested to hear from parties on what they were able to do under current restrictions. All the parties agreed it was not possible to do traditional door step campaigning which would have a bigger impact closer to the election. Clarification was sought following a news item which had suggested leafleting was being practiced and asked if that was indeed possible.

Leafleting etc. was currently not allowed. It was confirmed it was possible to leave home to go and vote as was the submission of nomination papers which were a legal obligation, so permitted. The parties asked if consideration had been given to extra spending and MMcC confirmed it had been discussed by the cross-party group of MSPs during the Scottish General Election (Coronavirus) Bill development but had been decided against at that point. Scotland Office/Cabinet Office update Ellie Tankard (ET) reported the Parliamentary Constituencies Bill had received Royal Assent on 14 December 2020 and the 2023 Boundary review had been launched. The Draft Repeal Bill published in December had its review extended and the Joint Committee would now report by 31 March 2021. Scottish Boundary Commissions update Local Government Boundary Commission - Isabel Drummond-Murray (ID-M) said the public consultation on electoral arrangements in Argyll and Bute, North Ayrshire and Highland closed on 26 January and all responses would be considered before developing final recommendations and submitting these to Scottish Ministers in 2021. Boundary Commission for Scotland – ID-M noted legislative changes had already been covered. She confirmed the 2023 review had now formally commenced but would not report until June 2023. Consultation in Scotland would likely begin in the autumn, slightly behind the Boundary Commission were likely to out to consultation in the summer. ID-M would be happy to set up a meeting to discuss the coming review with the parties. She suggested March and would circulate something via the Electoral Commission. Action: Isabel Drummond-Murray to arrange meeting with parties through EC Royal Mail update Rachel Winham (RW) said their preparations were well under way for the May 2021 election. She would forward the candidate mail update next Tuesday. With regards to a number of concerns over the current levels of service due to the pandemic, she indicated they faced the same issues as everyone else under Covid but gave assurance that election materials were a priority and would be delivered on time. Royal Mail appreciated parties wanted mail to hit door mats a day or two before delivery of postal votes and polling and said they would do the best for them. The helpline was open 24/7 and there was a contact for support. Action: Rachel Winham to provide contact details. EMB update Chris Highcock (CH) reiterated that the EMB direction letter had been issued and was available on the EMB website. The Convener of the EMB was likely to update his advice to Scottish Ministers regarding the issue of day(s) of poll at the end of January and was currently considering additional directions in relation to daytime counting and numbers of voters per polling station. In relation to the May 2022 Scottish Local Government election e-counting project CH updated that work on the project was continuing and the EMB would update the Panel further at a later date. PW confirmed the electoral registers were published on 1 December 2020 except for Glasgow's which will be published on 1 February 2021. Second Interim Update available fixed 8 April agreed. Electoral Commission update AON indicated Police Scotland would attend the RO/ERO briefing on 5 February and be invited to attend the next SP PPP meeting.

Action: EC to invite Police Scotland. Dates of next meeting Thursday 4 March 2021 at 11am

You are in the Party panels section Home How we make decisions Party panels On this page Minutes, and actions of the meeting and matters arising (ECPPP 01/12/2015) May 2016 polls EU Referendum Strategic Review Commission update report Date of the next meeting Actions First published: 23 February 2016 Last updated: 2 September 2019 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting Conservative Party: Andrew Stedman (AS) Labour: Margaret Lynch (ML) Mike Creighton (MC) Liberal Democrats: Darren Briddock (DB) Scottish National Party (Chair): Scott Martin (SM) Electoral Commission: Claire Bassett, Chief Executive (CB) Alex Robertson, Director of Communication (AR) Bob Posner, Director of Party and Election Finance (BP) Katy Thomas (KT), Planning and Performance Manager Karim Aziz, Deputy Head of Media and Public Affairs (KA) Minutes, and actions of the meeting and matters arising (ECPPP 01/12/2015) The minutes from 01/12/2015 were agreed. BP noted that the recently launched online consultation on new party registration applications had not generated a large number of responses from other political parties or members of the public. PPP members all said that it was a useful page on the website. DB suggested adding a link to PEF Online to the page as it was hard to find on the website. Action: Commission to look into whether it is practical / cost effective to put a link on PEF Online. It was noted that in any event all members of the PPP should be receiving (and if not can register to receive) email alerts when new party registration applications go onto the website. DB said that a new set of XML spreadsheets for parties to record spending would be available soon. Action: Commission to confirm dates that the spreadsheet would be available for parties to start using. Members of the PPP queried why they had to report the 'incurred date' for a transaction and not just the date that an invoice is paid. BP said that he thought the form reflected a legal requirement. Action: Commission to clarify what 'incurred date' means and clarify whether it is a requirement in the legislation. May 2016 polls DB asked what the Commission was doing to encourage expats to register to vote. AR confirmed that nothing for the May 16 polls as they're not eligible to take part, but a lot of work is being undertaken ahead of the EU Referendum including an online campaign and engaging with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and embassies. AR noted that the Commission worked closely with them to promote 'Overseas Voter Registration Day' on 4 February. MC noted the recent Law Commission report addressed areas of the law that are not certain. BP confirmed that so far, the Commission had not seen anything that would mean the Commission needs to change its guidance. BP drew the group's attention to section 1.9 of the Commission's update report and over-lapping regulated periods (elections in May 2016 and the EU Referendum in June) and informed the panel that the Commission would be issuing guidance about this in early March. AS mentioned that when using the Commission's guidance and tried to click to open an expert papers on 'valuing donations in kind' or 'sponsorship' they didn't appear to be there. Action: Commission to look into this. ML mentioned that in the Commission's Police and Crime Commissioner guidance, there are no names for the Police Area Returning Officers (PAROs) or direct email addresses for them. Action: Commission to provide list of PAROs and contact addresses. ML asked about the publication of the 1 December registers. AR informed the panel that the Commission would be publishing its analysis on 24 February. DB, AS and ML all commented that the additions and deletions to the registers after 1 December make it harder to undertake compliance checks. SM agreed with the points made. CB acknowledged that it's an imperfect situation. EU Referendum AR confirmed the dates for the designation application process at the EU Referendum and the regulatory period, subject to parliamentary approval. DB asked if the ‘working together rules’ would be the same as at the Scottish Independence Referendum. BP confirmed that this would be the case and that there would also be pre-poll reporting. SM commented that when the Scottish National Party registered as a campaigner at the EU Referendum, a letter was sent to the ‘responsible person’ about their pre-poll reporting requirements. This does not apply to political parties as they are required to report donations over £7,500 on a quarterly basis. Action: Commission to look at amending registration letters that go to political parties so they do not reference pre-poll reporting at the EU Referendum. DB asked what the Electoral Commission will do if it appears that campaigners have ‘over stepped’ the mark. DB said he didn’t want a situation where debate is ‘stifled’. AR said that it’s important to learn the lessons from the Scottish Independence Referendum where the police took any allegations of a breach in the rules seriously. The panel and the Commission felt that it would be a good idea to publicise that campaigners had signed up to the Commission’s Code of Conduct. Action: Commission to consider whether it will ask designated lead campaigners to sign up to its Code of Conduct. Strategic Review CB informed the panel that the timing of the EU Referendum means that the strategic review will slow down now and ramp up over the summer. The panel then took part in a roundtable discussion about the review. The discussion focused around the development of a single, national register; greater powers for the Electoral Commission over Local Authorities; review of campaign rules in light of changes in the cost of and how social media is used and changes to wider campaigner rules. Commission update report MC asked to what extent the Commission had considered political parties’ ability to absorb cuts in Policy Development Grants (PDGs). BP referenced the short notice period it had to develop a formula for the reduction in PDGs and informed the panel that the Electoral Commission Board will want to consider again in future. MC noted that the Labour Party was opposed to the reduction in PDGs. BP confirmed that the Commission would look at the standardisation of accounts in the second half of this year. SM asked if it was just for parties over £250k or would it be for accounting units with income / expenditure over £250k too. BP confirmed it would likely be for both. DB said it would be helpful if the Commission could consult with the auditors that parties use. BP confirmed that the Commission would and that this would be a key part of the process. AS also said that the Commission should be mindful that a lot of accounting units have volunteers who are responsible for reporting requirements. Date of the next meeting The next PPP meeting will take place on Tuesday 5 July at 11am – Labour to chair. Actions Actions from February 2016 PPP meeting Action Owner Status EC to look into whether to put a link on PEF Online to page on website where people can review party registration requests BP Information provided 3 March EC to confirm date that XML spreadsheet to record spending would be available for parties BP Information provided 3 March EC to confirm what ‘incurred date’ for reporting spending means and whether it is a legislative requirement BP Information sent 21 March EC to look into whether there are expert papers on valuing donations in kind and sponsorship KA Sent 3 March EC to provide a list of PARO names and contact details KA Sent 3 March EC to look at amending the letters that go to political parties that register at EU Referendum so they don’t mention pre-poll reporting requirement BP Change to letters made 3 March, info sent 21 March EC to confirm that it will consider whether to ask designated lead campaigners to sign up to Code of Conduct and publicise it BP Information provided 3 March Related content Party registration decisions View our decisions on political party names, descriptions and emblems View current applications View the political party names, descriptions and emblems which we are currently considering as part of our assessment process

Donations and loans Find out about donations and loans to a political party, individual or other organisation

Registers of unincorporated associations Download and view the registers of unincorporated associations

Changes to postal voting You are in the Elections Act section Home Elections Act On this page Changes for voters Our role in the change for voters Postal vote handling and secrecy Changes to postal vote handling and secrecy Our role in the changes to postal vote handling and secrecy First published: 5 July 2021 Last updated: 7 July 2023 Summary From October 2023, there will be a number of changes to postal voting for both voters and parties and campaigners. It will also be possible to apply for a postal vote online. This will apply to: local elections in England, Police and Crime Commissioner elections in England and Wales, and UK Parliament general elections, by-elections and recall petitions. Changes for voters The changes to postal voting include: A maximum period of three years on voters' application to hold a postal vote. Voters would need to re-apply at the end of that time. Allowing voters to apply online for a postal vote and requiring a voter's identity to be checked as part of the process. Both online and paper applications will require ID verification. Our role in the changes for voters We will provide updated guidance and support to electoral administrators to help them understand and deliver the changes. We will support local authorities to communicate these changes to voters who want to apply for a postal vote, including highlighting to them the option to apply online. We will also update the postal vote application forms. We will tell political parties and campaigners about the postal vote changes. Postal vote handling and secrecy From 1 December 2023, restrictions on the handling of postal votes by campaigners will apply. Changes to postal vote handling and secrecy A ban and new criminal offence will be in place to stop parties and campaigners handling completed postal votes and postal vote envelopes. Only voters, a family member or a designated carer will be able to hand in a postal vote. Voters will not be allowed to hand in more than five postal ballot packs (in addition to their own). Ministers will get new powers to make regulations to limit the number of postal ballot packs that someone can hand in on behalf of other voters, and would also require postal votes to be rejected if they are not handed in in accordance with the requirements. Our role in the changes to postal vote handling and secrecy We will update our guidance for electoral administrators and polling station staff to help them understand the changes. We will also provide updated guidance for political parties and campaigners to help them comply with the changes on handling postal votes, which formalise a key part of our existing code of conduct for parties and campaigners. Related content Elections Act about the UK Government's Elections Act and what it means for voting and campaigning About the Elections Act about the Elections Bill, including the measures it contains and which elections it applies to. Requirement to show ID at polling stations about the UK Government's voter ID proposal. Changes to proxy voting about the proposed changes to voting by proxy, where someone you trust votes on your behalf.

Home How we make decisions Electoral Commission Board On this page Who was at the meeting Apologies and welcome Declarations of interest Minutes Commission Board action tracker Forward Plan of Board business 2022/23 National Audit Office (NAO)

RSM's annual internal audit report Annual Report and Accounts 2021/22 Annual Report of the Audit and Risk Committee (ARC) 2021/22 to the Commission Board Annual Report of the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee 2021/22 to the Commission Board Pay remit 2022/23 Board effectiveness matters Chief Executive's update Update from the

Audit and Risk Committee Chair First published: 9 August 2022 Last updated: 22 August

2022 Meeting summary Date: Wednesday 22 June 2022 Time: 9:30am to 1:00pm Location: In person and by video conference Date of next scheduled meeting: Wednesday 20 July 2022

Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting John Pullinger, Chair Rob Vincent Sue

Bruce Alex Attwood Sarah Chambers Stephen Gilbert Alasdair Morgan Joan Walley Katy

Radford In attendance: Shaun McNally, Chief Executive Craig Westwood, Director,

Communications, Policy and Research Kieran Rix, Director, Finance and Corporate

Services Ailsa Irvine, Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance Louise

Edwards, Director, Regulation Binnie Goh, General Counsel Zena Khan, Senior Adviser, Governance Lilly Malik, Legal Officer [meeting support] Tracey Blackman, Head,

Finance and [items 6, 7, 8 and 9] Apologies and welcome Apologies were received from Kieran Rix, Director, Finance and Corporate Services. The Chair welcomed all to the meeting, in particular Paul Redfern, Independent Adviser to the Audit and Risk

Committee. Paul would continue to maintain relationships with Commissioners and on occasion provide advice where applicable. Paul would be contributing to the end of year reports. Declarations of interest Resolved: That the Board noted no new declared interests. Minutes (EC 118/22) Resolved: That the minutes of the Board meeting on 18

May 2022 be agreed. Commission Board action tracker (EC 119/22) The Board noted that the report on Bullying and Harassment which went to a meeting of the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee last year, was circulated to Commissioners. It was noted that the remaining actions were delayed due to clarification on what would be covered, and in places the need to organise external speakers. These items will be scheduled for board business this year. Resolved: That the Board noted the progress against actions requested by the Board. Forward Plan of Board business 2022/23 (EC 120/22) The Board discussed how best to capture and progress any actions from the deep dive sessions at the October meeting in Northern Ireland and the England region meeting in February 2023. The potential for an annual discussion around the state of the electoral system was discussed, potentially following the May elections. This would enable the Board to take stock and aid forward planning. Resolved: That the Board discussed and reviewed the Forward Plan of Board business for 2022/23, with pending topical items for scheduling. National Audit Office (NAO) (EC 121/22) The Board discussed the Audit completion report (including management letter) on the 2021/22 financial statements audit. The Board were advised that whilst there were only minor issues still left to be resolved, the NAO could not provide assurance at this stage, but at the same time, were not anticipating any significant changes. The Chair of the Audit and Risk Committee advised that at their meeting earlier in the week, they were satisfied with the reasonable assurance from NAO. Resolved: That the Board was content with delegating the final approvals to the Accounting Officer and the Commission Chair on the NAO completion report and approve any further disclosure amendments unless they were significant in nature. RSM's annual internal audit report

(EC 122/22) The Board considered the annual internal audit opinion, prepared by internal auditors RSM, on the overall adequacy and effectiveness of the organisation's risk management, control and governance processes. The opinion would contribute to the organisation's annual governance reporting. The Audit and Risk Committee Chair advised the Board that despite the report providing reasonable assurance, the Committee was working with RSM to further enhance the internal audits for the coming year. The Board discussed and noted that at a previous meeting of the Audit and Risk Committee, an audit on PF Online procurement was deferred. Resolved: That the Board noted RSM's audit opinion. Annual Report and Accounts 2021/22 (EC 123/22) The Board received the Commission's Annual Report and Accounts 2021/22 following the Audit and Risk Committee's review of the Report and Accounts including the governance statement, at their meeting on 20 June. The Board noted that this was the first year in which the accounts also have to include specific reports on Scottish and Welsh devolved functions. The Board supported the inclusion of dedicated sections devoted to Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. The Board discussed finalisation of the foreword for consistency and welcomed the overall approach on how the report was written, thanking staff colleagues for their work thus far. The Board noted that following discussions at the Audit and Risk Committee meeting, the Committee Chair recommended to the Board, delegated authority to both the Commission Chair and the Chief Executive: (i) that it adopted the accounts and, (ii) the accounting officer approved the governance statement and signed the accounts as appropriate Resolved: That the Board approved and adopted the Annual Report and Accounts for 2021/22, subject to final NAO approval, to be signed by the Accounting Officer and submitted to the Comptroller and Auditor General for certification. The audited Report and Accounts would then be laid before the House of Commons, House of Lords and Scottish and Welsh Parliaments in July. Annual Report of the Audit and Risk Committee (ARC) 2021/22 to the Commission Board (EC 124/22) The Chair of the Audit and Risk Committee introduced the report, summarising the work of the Committee during the year 2021/22. The Board noted the Committee's annual review of information assurance and further work planned to enhance cyber security and reduce risk. The Board noted that a risk appetite workshop would be scheduled this year for the Board to understand further risk management, and how this is linked to the Commission's objectives, helping with Board oversight whilst improving financial and budgetary controls. Resolved: That the Board noted the work of the Audit and Risk Committee during the year 2021/22. Annual Report of the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee 2021/22 to the Commission Board (EC 125/22) The Chair of the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee introduced the report, summarising the work of the Committee during the year 2021/22. The Board welcomed the update noting recent activities of the Committee on workforce and recruitment retention risks, ways of working post Covid, exit payments, pay remit and the staff survey results 2021. The Board noted that whilst finalisation of the revised people strategy was due to be presented at the next Committee meeting, the Board discussed how best the Committee can engage more with staff colleagues on HR issues and the culture of the organisation. The Board noted that Commissioners are welcome to attend either of the two Committees as observers to better understand and engage in their work. Resolved: That the Board noted the work of the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee during the year 2021/22. Pay remit 2022/23 (EC 126/22) Having regard to the desirability of keeping pay broadly in line with the Civil Service and considering wider comparisons, the Board considered the appropriate approach for the annual pay award remit for the Commission in 2022/23. The Board discussed the need for flexibility in recruiting staff and how to do this. The Board favoured recruiting from wider, diverse geographical areas, and more flexibility on remote working, but acknowledged that there would be the need for certain teams to attend the office more than two days a week. This also raised discussions on office space and how that relates to our approach to recruitment. Resolved: That the Board agreed the proposed pay remit for the 2022/23 pay award. Board effectiveness matters (Oral) The Board received an oral update from the General Counsel on work planned for the review of Board effectiveness. The Board noted that this work would be carried out internally rather than using an external organisation and that a survey would be circulated via a survey platform to capture the Board's performance, insights and ways of strengthening the work between the executive and Board members whilst highlighting areas for further development. It was noted that the survey would be anonymised and there would be extra text space for additional comments. The survey would be reported to the October Board meeting as part of the Board effectiveness review item.

Resolved: That the Board noted the oral update. Chief Executive's update (Oral) The Board received an oral update on operations and matters arising, in particular updates on digital transformation, Elections Act implementation, the Independent Adviser to the Commission Board on Equality, Diversity and Inclusion, and the Belfast Board away day in October. The Chief Executive advised the Board on work planned for the Commission's digital infrastructure, following the appointment of the new Head of Digital who started at the Commission this week. The Board noted that the Commission has been responding to the aging IT infrastructure and plans are in place to move services to Cloud based infrastructure. Further updates including any funding gaps would be reported to the Board in the coming months. The Board noted that the revised people strategy was in its final iterations and this would be received at the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee meeting in July, before wider circulation to the Board. It was noted that there was a renewed focus on learning and development in the strategy. Learning and development taster sessions have been programmed for two days in July and, a roll out of a leadership programme across the organisation. It was reported that we have engaged with external parties who have offered to run leadership workshops, providing colleagues with an opportunity to take part in masterclasses to develop their skills. The Board noted an update on the Elections Act and in particular recent discussions with the Minister related to implementation of the provisions. It was agreed that Elections Act implementation will be a topic for discussion at the next Board meeting in July. The Board noted arrangements for the Belfast Board away day in October were underway, with thanks to Commissioner Katy Radford for her input so far. It was noted that we are arranging a two day programme, with an option for staff colleagues and Commissioners to travel on the Sunday and have dinner. We are starting to programme and secure speakers and Katy Radford will circulate an email to share some thoughts for the programming. An update will be brought to the July Board meeting. The General Counsel updated the Board on the recruitment of the Independent Adviser to the Commission Board on Equality, Diversity and Inclusion. The Board noted that the campaign is now closed with twenty six applications received. The longlisting took place this week, agreeing on nine applicants. The agency will hold interviews to produce a shortlist of candidates next month. The Board noted that the selection panel were impressed with the quality of applicants so far, from a wide range of backgrounds. The Board discussed the scope of the role and how this role would link in with work already scoped out with the EDI lead and the remit of the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee. There was a desire to ensure that the Independent Adviser would have an effective role within the Board and Commission with discussions on expectations and value for money. Resolved:

That the Board noted the oral updates. Update from the Audit and Risk Committee Chair (Oral) The Board received an oral update on the work of the Committee at their meeting earlier in the week. The Board noted activities on the RSM internal audit on quality assurance and the progress report, as well as the internal audit annual opinion. Further work considered was on the National Audit Office report, Annual Report and Resource Accounts (including the governance statement) 2021/22, Annual Report of the Committee 2021/22 to the Commission Board and Committee effectiveness.

Resolved: That the Board noted the oral updates.

Results and turnout at the 2016 National Assembly for Wales election | Electoral Commission Search Results and turnout at the 2016 National Assembly for Wales election You are in the Senedd elections section Home Senedd elections First published: 9 August 2019 Last updated: 9 August 2019 Download You can download our full dataset as an XLS full dataset as a CSV You can also download our full report , written by Colin Rallings and Michael Thrasher (Elections Centre, Plymouth University, Drake Circus, Plymouth, PL4 8AA). Summary Simultaneous elections were held to choose 60 members of the National Assembly for Wales as well as four Police and Crime Commissioners. The number of constituency candidates at the Assembly elections was 248 -a record- compared to 176 in 2011 and 197 in 2007. Sixteen parties or groups were represented in the regional lists together with 2 individuals. Labour won a total of 29 out of 60 Assembly seats. The Conservatives took 11, Plaid Cymru 12; UKIP seven; and the Liberal Democrats a single seat. No other party or Independent candidate won a seat. In the PCC contests, there were 19 candidates across 4 police authority areas. Labour won two of the posts and Plaid Cymru two. Almost 2.25 million electors were eligible to vote at these elections: a decrease of more than 40,000 compared with 2011. The names of about 3.3% of those on the 'final' register were added between December 2015 and 13 March 2016, and a further 1.6% between 13 March and the deadline of 16 April. More than 1,020,000 votes were counted in both the NAW constituency and regional level polls, making the overall turnout 45.6% - almost four percentage points higher than in 2011. Slightly fewer votes were cast at the PCC contests where the turnout was 45.2%. The proportion of ballot papers rejected at the count was again very small at the NAW elections – 0.54% of constituency ballots and 0.64% of list ballots. However, 5.3% of first votes were rejected at the PCC contests in Wales compared with 3.1% in 2012. Across Wales, 395,878 postal ballots were issued, representing 17.6% of the electorate. This is the largest proportion to date at an Assembly election, but fractionally below the 17.7% at the 2015 general election. More than seven in 10 of postal ballot forms issued were returned (73.9%). Of these, 3.5% (constituency) and 4.0% (regional list) were rejected because of failures relating to personal identifiers or non-inclusion of either a ballot paper or statement in the envelope. Some 5% of postal vote forms at the PCC elections were rejected – almost half for a failure to enclose the relevant ballot paper. Related content Report: How the 2016 Scottish Parliament election was run View the results and turnout at the 2016 Scottish Parliament election Report on the May 2021 elections in Wales Read our report about how the 2021 elections in Wales were run Report: How the 2011 National Assembly for Wales elections were run Read our report about how the 2011 National Assembly for Wales elections were run Results and turnout at the 2011 National Assembly for Wales election View the results and turnout at the 2011 National Assembly for Wales election

Report: How the 2017 UK general election was run | Electoral Commission Search Report: How the 2017 UK general election was run You are in the UK general elections section Home UK general elections On this page Summary Download our full report First published: 14 June 2019 Last updated: 6 August 2019 Summary Nearly four in five (79%) people surveyed after the election reported they were either very or fairly confident the elections were well-run, and 89% of candidates were very or fairly satisfied with the administration of the election. The June 2017 UK Parliamentary general election was unexpectedly announced less than three weeks before polling day for the scheduled May 2017 local government elections. This presented significant challenges for Returning Officers (ROs) and their staff who were responsible for running the poll. They deserve great credit and thanks for ensuring that the May and June elections were well-run. Risks to well-run elections But this positive overall picture should not mask wider risks to the administration of well-run elections, which are becoming increasingly apparent. ROs and electoral administrators face reduced resources and a growing number of skilled professionals are leaving local authority elections teams. They are also increasingly reliant on a relatively small pool of specialist software and print management suppliers. Problems in some places meaning that some voters received inadequate service, and significant issues in Plymouth and Newcastle-under-Lyme illustrate that more action must be taken now to deal with the increasing challenges that ROs are facing in delivering well-run elections. We will continue to work with the UK's governments, Electoral Registration Officers and Returning Officers to collect and review evidence about the challenges to well-run elections and to identify changes which could help reduce these risks.

Recommendations We also want to see progress by the UK's governments towards implementing recommendations that we and others have made, including:

- Implementing the UK Law Commissions' proposals to simplify electoral law and Sir Eric Pickles' recommendations on electoral fraud.
- Improving the rules for nominating candidates, appointing emergency proxies and making it easier for overseas voters to cast a vote.
- Making electoral registration more joined-up with other public services to make it simpler for the public and more efficient for EROs, and reducing the risk of people voting in more than one constituency.

Download our full report The administration of the June 2017 UK general election Related content Results and turnout at the 2017 UK general election View the results and turnout at the 2017 general election Report: Political finance regulation at the June 2017 UK general election Read our report about political finance regulation at the 2017 general election Report: Electoral registration at the June 2017 UK general election Read our report about electoral registration at the 2017 general election Report: Voting in 2017 Read our report about voting at the general election in 2017

These recommendations need to be seen in the context of a wider electoral reform agenda which including proposals made by the Law Commissions of Scotland, England & Wales and Northern Ireland and the consultation on Scottish elections which the Scottish Government has indicated it will undertake via its Programme for Government.

Key findings Our research with voters and campaigners found high levels of confidence that the council elections held on 4 May 2017 were well-run: Total electorate was 4,110,790 and a total of 1,889,657 votes were cast at the elections, representing a turnout of 46.9% - the highest level of turnout for a set of stand-alone ordinary council elections since 1977. More than eight in ten respondents (82%) said they were confident that the polls were well run, up from 75% at the 2012 council elections.

Nearly nine in ten people (88%) said they were very or fairly satisfied with the process of registering to vote and 78% expressed satisfaction with the procedure for voting. Nearly all those voters who responded to our survey (94%) said that they found it easy to fill in their ballot paper. The level of rejected ballots was 1.95%, slightly up from 1.74% in 2012. The vast majority (95%) of candidates and agents who responded to our survey said that they were satisfied with the overall administration of the election.

Recommendations: Voter participation Recommendation 1 We recommend that the Scottish Government consult on and bring forward legislation extending the emergency proxy provisions so that those who have unforeseen caring responsibilities would also be eligible to apply for an emergency proxy. Recommendation 2 The Commission will review its own voter information materials with a view to expanding the provision of material which helps voters to understand the voting system and the effect of their vote. We also recommend that: Parties review their campaigning strategies and the messaging that is given to voters on the doorstep to ensure that it does not contribute to any misunderstanding of the voting system. ROs and the EMB review the provision of training for polling station staff and the written instructions in polling stations and postal voting stationery, to ensure that information is consistent and as accessible as possible for voters. Should this review highlight any changes necessary for prescribed forms then this will require action from the Scottish Government. For future elections ROs should also assess each ward to identify those at risk of higher ballot rejection rates (whether as a consequence of multiple candidates standing for a particular party or higher rates of deprivation within the ward) The Commission and the EMB should work with ROs to identify strategies which militate against higher rejection rates in these wards. The Commission will review its work with the media to help improve voter understanding of the electoral system. Further work should be undertaken by all relevant stakeholders, including the Commission, local authorities and education bodies to identify opportunities for targeting information on the voting system at first time voters via schools, colleges, universities and through social media platforms. Recommendation 3 Given that there are no scheduled elections in which 16 and 17 year olds in Scotland can vote in until the 2021 Scottish Parliament election; consideration needs to be given to how to engage young people who will reach the age of electoral majority in the next four years. In order to do this the Commission will work with educational partners and councils to identify opportunities for supporting ongoing political literacy in schools and encouraging young people to register when they attain the age to do so. Recommendations: Electoral administration framework Recommendation 4 The Scottish and UK Governments must now legislate to provide the EMB with statutory powers for Scottish and UK Parliament elections. The legal status and funding of the EMB also needs to be reviewed to allow it to undertake the management roles it was initially envisaged it would undertake, including overseeing the procurement and delivery of the e-counting project for council elections. Recommendation 5

Transparency in the count centre is important and helps the RO achieve an accurate result which is accepted by those present. We recommend that the EMB lead a review, in consultation with political parties and other stakeholders, of the transparency of the e-count processes within the count centre, including the use and content of information screens to ensure the highest levels of transparency and confidence in the count. Recommendation 6 In the event that e-counting continues to be used for future council elections, ROs must take full control and responsibility for the planning and delivery of the e-counting solution ahead of future council elections.

This work should be led by the EMB and needs to begin at least three years ahead of the next scheduled elections in 2022. The EMB will need to be adequately resourced to take this forward. Recommendation 7 The provision of a Scotland-wide results service requires planning, resources and practice to ensure smooth running; we recommend that ahead of the next set of all-out council elections further work is carried out to ensure that this service can be delivered accurately and in good time to meet legitimate public expectations. Recommendations: Regulation of campaigning

Recommendation 8 We suggest that any changes to the rules relating to the use of the register should be considered alongside a review of the regulation of political parties as set out in recommendation 9. Recommendation 9 The Scottish Government should review and modernise the regulation of campaigning at council elections in time for any changes to be implemented for the next elections in 2022. The review should consider and respond to the Electoral Commission's recommendations following the 2012 Scottish council elections as well as the issues highlighted in this report including: Introducing donation controls for candidates at council elections Giving the Commission a statutory role to provide guidance for candidates and agents at council elections Specifying a list of activities that count against candidates' spending limits at council elections Clarifying whether candidates employed by 'arms-length' bodies delivering council services would need to resign from their employment in order to be a councillor at the relevant council Requiring ROs to publish candidates' spending returns online as well as through existing methods of public inspection Reviewing the rules on the publication of candidates' home addresses The Scottish Government should consult the political parties that contested the 2017 elections, the Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Service, the Commission and any other interested stakeholders on these issues as part of this review. Download our full report The administration of the Scottish council elections held on 4 May 2017

1. The wards that were uncontested were; Shetland South (Shetland Islands), Stromness and South Isles (Orkney Islands), and South Kintyre (Argyll & Bute). ■ Back to content at footnote 1 Related content Report on the May 2022 Scottish council elections Read our report on the May 2022 Scottish council elections. Report: Voting in 2017 Read our report about voting at the general election in 2017 Results and turnout at the 2017 Scottish local council elections View the results and turnout at the 2017 Scottish local elections Local councils Find out about local councils and how to vote in local council elections.

Recall petitions by numbers: Peterborough | Electoral Commission Search Recall petitions by numbers: Peterborough You are in the The process to challenge a sitting MP: review of the 2019 recall petitions section Home Recall petitions The process to challenge a sitting MP: review of the 2019 recall petitions
On this page Running the petition Signing the petition Campaigning First published:
10 October 2019 Last updated: 10 October 2019 Running the petition Notification of petition Tuesday 5 March Petition open Tuesday 19 March-Wednesday 1 May Number of signing places (maximum of 10) 10 Extended hours (outside 9am-5pm, Monday to Friday)
Open from 7am on Tuesdays; closed 10pm on Thursdays Count Took place immediately after signing places closed at 5pm Signing the petition For a recall petition to result in an MP being recalled, over 10% of people eligible to sign must do so within the six-week signing period. We can see from petition data that the majority of those who signed did so within the first two weeks of the petition opening. How many people were eligible to sign 69,673 How many signatures needed to recall MP 6,967 Number who signed 19,261 - this was 28% of people eligible to sign Spoilt signing papers 62 We can also see from this data how people chose to sign the petition. How people chose to sign the petition Campaigning People or organisations wishing to campaign for or against the recall petition and intending to spend over £500 were required to notify the PO that they wished to be a registered campaigner. There were five registered campaigners in Peterborough. Only three of these have submitted donation and spending returns. Spending and donation returns

Investigation: Vote Leave Ltd, Mr Darren Grimes, BeLeave and Veterans for Britain | Electoral Commission Search Investigation: Vote Leave Ltd, Mr Darren Grimes, BeLeave and Veterans for Britain You are in the Investigations section Home Investigations On this page Summary Offences and penalties

Investigation findings Offences committed Legal and regulatory framework First published: 17 July 2018 Last updated: 7 May 2020 Overview This investigation mainly concerned five payments made in June 2016 to a Canadian data analytics firm called Aggregate IQ. The payments were for services provided to campaigners in the EU Referendum. Three of the payments, totalling £675,315.18, were reported by Mr Grimes as donations from Vote Leave, and as spending by him on services from Aggregate IQ. Another payment of £50,000 from Mr Anthony Clake was reported by Mr Grimes as a donation from Mr Clake, and as spending by Mr Grimes on services from Aggregate IQ. The final payment of £100,000 was reported by Veterans for Britain as a donation from Vote Leave and as spending on services from Aggregate IQ. There were four persons under investigation: Mr Halsall in his capacity as the responsible person of Vote Leave, Vote Leave itself, Mr Grimes and Mr Banks. No other person was under investigation by us.

Update - 7 May 2020 The Commission has now paid a further and final sum of £235,000 in respect of Mr Grimes' legal costs and this litigation is now concluded.

Update – 14 August 2019 Vote Leave Limited and Darren Grimes both appealed against the sanctions set out in the following report. Veterans for Britain paid their fine of £250. Vote Leave subsequently paid their fines totalling £61,000 in March 2019 and withdrew their appeal. Darren Grimes was successful in his appeal. The judgement, given on 19 July 2019, withdrew the £20,000 sanction imposed by the Commission. The Central London County Court found that Darren Grimes had properly notified the Commission that BeLeave would be a campaigner in the EU referendum, meaning that BeLeave had not breached the spending limit for an unregistered campaigner. The Court also found that Darren Grimes' inclusion of BeLeave's spending in what the Commission had regarded as his own return did not mean he had submitted an inaccurate spending return.

Summary of findings This investigation mainly concerned five payments made in June 2016 to a Canadian data analytics firm called Aggregate IQ. The payments were for services provided to campaigners in the EU Referendum. Three of the payments, totalling £675,315.18, were reported by Mr Grimes as donations from Vote Leave, and as spending by him on services from Aggregate IQ. Another payment of £50,000 from Mr Anthony Clake was reported by Mr Grimes as a donation from Mr Clake, and as spending by Mr Grimes on services from Aggregate IQ. The final payment of £100,000 was reported by Veterans for Britain as a donation from Vote Leave and as spending on services from Aggregate IQ. There were four persons under investigation: Mr Halsall in his capacity as the responsible person of Vote Leave, Vote Leave itself, Mr Grimes and Mr Banks. No other person was under investigation by us.

Joint spending by Vote Leave and BeLeave Joint spending by Vote Leave and BeLeave We are satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that all Mr Grimes' and BeLeave's spending on referendum campaigning was incurred under a common plan with Vote Leave. This spending, including the £675,315.18 for services from Aggregate IQ reported by Mr Grimes, should have been treated as incurred by Vote Leave. To comply with PPERA, Vote Leave should have made a declaration of the amounts of joint spending in its referendum spending return. As the declarations were not made, Mr Halsall failed, without reasonable excuse, to deliver a complete campaign spending return, committing an offence under section 122(4)(b) PPERA. Vote Leave's spending limit Vote Leave's spending limit As referendum spending by Mr Grimes and BeLeave was joint with Vote Leave, the 'common plan' provisions in the EURA meant the spending was treated as if incurred by Vote Leave. Vote Leave's referendum spending was therefore £7,449,079. Its statutory spending limit was £7m. We are satisfied that Mr Halsall knew, or should reasonably have known, that this spending would exceed the spending limit. We are satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that Vote Leave exceeded the spending limit for a designated lead campaigner and Mr Halsall committed an offence under section 118(2)(c)(i). Vote Leave also committed an offence under section 118(2)(c)(ii). Other issues with Vote Leave's spending return Other issues with Vote Leave's spending return We are satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that Vote Leave's spending return was not a complete statement of all its referendum payments. It was inaccurate in respect of 43 items of spending, totalling £236,501.44. Mr Halsall provided no reasonable excuse for these inaccuracies, which are an offence under section 122(4)(b) PPERA. We also found that eight payments of over £200 in Vote Leave's return did not have an invoice or receipt with them, as required by PPERA. These payments came to £12,849.99. Mr Halsall did not have a reasonable excuse for these omissions, and committed a further offence under section 122(4)(b). BeLeave's spending return BeLeave's spending return BeLeave was never registered with us as a campaigner in the EU Referendum. Unregistered campaigners could only legally spend up to £10,000 on referendum campaigning. But Mr Grimes, acting on BeLeave's behalf, incurred spending of over £675,000. All this spending took place after BeLeave met the criteria for registering as a campaigner. This spending was joint spending with Vote Leave. Under the common plan provisions in EURA, it had to be treated as campaign spending incurred by Vote Leave. But it was still spending by BeLeave, and counted against its spending limit, even though only Vote Leave were required to report it. We are satisfied that Mr Grimes knew, or should reasonably have known, that BeLeave was not a permitted participant. We are satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that Mr Grimes incurred referendum spending in excess of £10,000 on behalf of a body that was not a permitted participant, and that he knew, or should reasonably have known, he was doing this. Mr Grimes committed an offence under section 117(3) PPERA. BeLeave also committed an offence under section 117(4) Mr Grimes' spending return Mr Grimes' spending return After the referendum, Mr Grimes delivered a spending return in his capacity as an individual campaigner. Although he put the name 'Darren Grimes/BeLeave' on it, it wasn't a return for two campaigners; it was a return for him as an individual campaigner. He included payments of £675,315.18 of BeLeave's spending. This was substantially inaccurate reporting that has resulted in a lack of transparency about whose spending this was. We are satisfied, beyond reasonable doubt, that Mr Grimes failed to deliver a referendum spending return to us that complied with PPERA. He thereby committed an offence under section 122(4)(b) PPERA. Veterans for Britain Veterans for Britain Veterans for Britain's spending return included a donation of £100,000, reported as a cash donation received and accepted on 20 May 2016. In fact, this donation was a payment by Vote Leave to Aggregate IQ for services provided to Veterans for Britain in the final days of the EU Referendum campaign. It was paid by Vote Leave on 29 June 2016. We are satisfied that the responsible person for Veterans for Britain, Mr Banks, without reasonable excuse, delivered a spending return that contained an inaccurate donation report. He committed an offence under section 122(4)(b) PPERA. That donation was for services provided by Aggregate IQ, who were also providing services to Vote Leave at the same time. The evidence we have seen does not support the concern that the services were provided to Veterans for Britain as joint working with Vote Leave. Vote Leave investigation notice Vote Leave investigation notice Where we are conducting an investigation we can issue an 'investigation notice' requiring any person to give us information, explanation or documents to progress the investigation. We can impose a reasonable deadline. We issued an investigation notice to Vote Leave during this investigation. We set out a discrete list of documents directly related to the investigation. We gave a reasonable deadline. Vote Leave did not respond to the notice until after the deadline had passed and that response did not comply with the notice in any way. Vote Leave did not give any indication that it was unable to comply with the notice. We are therefore satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that Vote Leave failed, without reasonable excuse, to comply with an investigation notice issued under Schedule 19B paragraph 3 PPERA on 21 February 2018. Vote Leave thereby committed an offence under Schedule 19B paragraph 13(1). Offences and penalties Mr David Halsall and Vote Leave We have determined that Mr David Alan Halsall, the responsible person for Vote Leave, committed an offence under section 8 122(4)(b). He delivered a referendum spending return for Vote Leave that failed, without reasonable excuse, to be a complete statement of payments worth £236,501.44. He failed to declare common plan spending of £676,015.87. We have fined Vote Leave £20,000 for this offence. Mr Halsall committed a further offence under section 122(4)(b) PPERA by failing, without reasonable excuse, to include required invoices and receipts for eight payments. We have fined Vote Leave £1,000 for this offence. Mr Halsall and Vote Leave both committed offences under section 118(2)(c) PPERA. Mr Halsall incurred spending of £449,079.34 which he knew, or ought reasonably to have known, was in excess of the statutory spending limit for Vote Leave. We have fined Vote Leave £20,000 for this. Vote Leave committed a further offence during this investigation, under Schedule 19B paragraph 13(1) PPERA. Vote Leave failed, without reasonable excuse, to comply with an investigation notice issued by us under Schedule 19B paragraph 3. We have fined Vote Leave £20,000 for this offence. Mr Darren Grimes and BeLeave We have determined that Mr Darren Grimes committed an offence under section 117(3) PPERA, and BeLeave committed an offence under section 117(4). Mr Grimes incurred spending on behalf of BeLeave which he knew, or ought reasonably to have known, exceeded by £666,015.87 the statutory limit for a non-registered campaigner. We have fined Mr Grimes £20,000 for this. Mr Grimes also committed an offence under section 122(4)(b) PPERA in that he failed, without reasonable excuse, to deliver a referendum spending return as an individual registered campaigner that was a complete statement of all his referendum spending. In light of its decision to impose a fine on Mr Grimes for his offence under section 117(3) PPERA, we decided not to impose a further fine on Mr Grimes for this offence. Mr David Banks and Veterans for Britain We have determined that Mr David Banks, the responsible person for Veterans for Britain, committed an offence under section 122(4)(b) PPERA. He failed, without reasonable excuse, to deliver a referendum spending return that included an accurate report of relevant donations. We have fined Mr Banks £250 for this offence. The decision to investigate This investigation mainly concerned five payments made to a Canadian data analytics firm called Aggregate IQ in June 2016. The payments were for campaign services for the EU Referendum. Three of the payments, totalling £625,315.18, were made by Vote Leave to Aggregate IQ between 13 and 21 June 2016. They were reported by Mr Grimes as donations from Vote Leave. Another payment, of £50,000, was made by Mr Anthony Clake to Aggregate IQ on 17 June 2016. Mr Grimes reported it as a donation from Mr Clake. Mr Grimes reported total spending on services from Aggregate IQ of £675,315.18. This spending was funded by these payments. The final payment was of £100,000 and made by Vote Leave to Aggregate IQ on 29 June 2016. Veterans for Britain reported it as a donation from Vote Leave, but with an incorrect date of 20 May 2016. They also reported spending it on services from Aggregate IQ. Vote Leave, Mr Grimes and Veterans for Britain were all subject to regulatory action by us during 2017. We carried out assessments into Vote Leave and Mr Grimes in February and March 2017. An assessment is a process of getting and examining evidence so we can decide whether to open an investigation. We only investigate if we have reasonable grounds to suspect an offence or contravention of PPERA has happened, and if it is in the public interest for us to act. In these assessments, we looked at whether to investigate allegations that Vote Leave had broken its spending limit for the EU Referendum, by channelling money to Aggregate IQ via BeLeave. Based on the evidence we saw at the time, we decided not to investigate. During 2017 we conducted an investigation into Vote Leave because its referendum spending return appeared to be incomplete. We had reached initial conclusions, and then we opened this new investigation. We then combined all the issues into this one investigation. We started investigating Veterans for Britain in August 2017. It reported a donation of £100,000 from Vote Leave in its spending return after the referendum. It said the donation was accepted on 20 May 2016. But it was not in the pre-poll donation report, delivered during the campaign, for the period covering 20 May 2016. Throughout 2017 we received a number of requests for information under the Freedom of Information Act 2000 that were about Vote Leave and Mr Grimes. Claims also emerged in the media that Vote Leave and Mr Grimes had been working under a 'common plan'. If true, these claims would mean that Vote Leave had failed to declare joint spending, and Mr Grimes had misreported the spending. We asked the journalist concerned for sight of the evidence to substantiate the claims, in order to assist us in looking at the claims. This evidence was not provided to us. Then, during September and October 2017, we found out that Veterans for Britain had told us the wrong details for its donation from Vote Leave. Rather than being given on 20 May 2016, that donation was given on 20 June 2016 and paid on 29 June 2016. This coincided with the dates of the payments Mr Grimes reported as donations from Vote Leave. Therefore, by late October 2017 we knew that Vote Leave had made payments to Aggregate IQ in the ten days before the referendum on 23 June 2016, apparently on behalf of two separate campaigners. Given this new information suggested a pattern of action by Vote Leave, we decided to review our assessment decision not to investigate. Having done so, in November 2017 we opened an investigation. What we investigated What we investigated We investigated the following matters, some of which only arose during the investigation: Whether Mr Halsall, Vote Leave's responsible person, without reasonable excuse delivered a referendum spending return that failed to include declarations of common plan spending with Mr Grimes, BeLeave and/or Veterans for Britain (offence under section 122(4)(b) PPERA) Whether Vote Leave spent more than its legal spending limit for referendum campaigning, and Mr Halsall knew or ought reasonably to have known this when incurring spending over that limit under the common plan provisions (offences under section 118(3)(c) PPERA) Whether Mr Halsall without reasonable excuse delivered a spending return that was not complete in other ways such as missing payments and invoices or receipts (offences under section 122(4)(b) PPERA). Whether Mr Grimes authorised spending to be incurred by or on behalf of BeLeave when he knew or ought reasonably to have known that the spending would be more than the £10,000 legal limit for an unregistered campaigner (offences under section 117(3) and 117(4) PPERA) Whether Mr Grimes without reasonable excuse delivered an incomplete referendum spending return (offence under section 122(4)(b) PPERA) Whether Mr Banks, the responsible person for Veterans for Britain, without reasonable excuse delivered a spending return that failed to report accurately a relevant donation (offence under section 122(4)(b) PPERA) Whether Mr

Banks without reasonable excuse delivered a spending return that inaccurately reported joint spending with Vote Leave (offence under section 122(4)(b) PPERA) Whether Vote Leave failed without reasonable excuse to comply with an investigation notice issued by the Commission under Schedule 19B PPERA (offence under Schedule 19B paragraph 13 PPERA) The people under investigation by us were therefore Mr Halsall, Vote Leave, Mr Grimes and Mr Banks. The relevant legal and regulatory regime for referendum campaign finance is set out in Annex A to this report. The investigation in detail Vote Leave We contacted Vote Leave on 20 November 2017. We explained that we had opened an investigation and set out its scope. We invited Vote Leave to give us any relevant explanation or documents. We asked Vote Leave to attend an interview and asked for representatives of Vote Leave who would be well placed to discuss the matters under investigation. During December and January, Vote Leave expressed an intention to cooperate. It gave some explanation of its position on the suspected offences. It also asked procedural questions about the proposed interview and objected to the investigation being opened. We responded to these questions with further detail on the opening of the investigation and the interview process. We offered interview dates for representatives of Vote Leave, but Vote Leave did not respond to our suggested dates. In January 2018 Vote Leave's lawyers sent a Pre-Action Protocol Letter indicating that it intended to judicially review the opening of the investigation. We gave them more detail about our decision to investigate. Vote Leave did not start legal proceedings. During February 2018 we made two further offers of interview dates. Vote Leave began to repeat procedural questions we had already answered. It still did not agree an interview date and said it had not decided whether an interview was appropriate. By mid-February we were concerned that Vote Leave had not given us the information we needed about the matters under investigation, nor agreed to put up representatives for interview. We issued Vote Leave with a formal investigation notice requiring it to produce certain documents. Vote Leave did not reply by the deadline we gave, or produce the documents. Instead, shortly after the deadline Vote Leave sent a letter objecting to the fact we were investigating them, raising concerns about the scope of the notice, and saying that it had collected the documents it considered relevant at its lawyer's office. It said that we could inspect them there. After explaining that we required complete disclosure, we asked Vote Leave again to produce the documents. We then had a number of exchanges with Vote Leave where it repeated its assertion that we had no power to open the investigation. It ignored our repeated clarification on this point. Still no documents were disclosed. After weeks of correspondence Vote Leave then made its offer of inspection of the documents contingent on us meeting it to discuss why the investigation should be closed. We did not consider such appropriate or helpful. We sent authorised officers to Vote Leave's lawyers to take copies of the documents they held. Vote Leave had no reasonable excuse for failing to comply with this investigation notice. We have fined them £20,000 for this. Upon inspection, we found that Vote Leave had not given us everything we had asked for. Shortly afterwards, it gave us some further documents after making the wrong ones available to our authorised officers. In March 2018 Vote Leave told us that it was holding an internal investigation after allegations about its work with Mr Grimes and BeLeave were raised in the media. It said that the internal investigation would look at the media allegations. We explained that would be separate from our investigation but we would expect anything relevant to be told to us. After telling us, in early April, that a forensic IT team was working for them, Vote Leave did not provide any further information about its internal investigation. Mr Grimes We contacted Mr Grimes on 20

November 2017 and told him about the investigation. He gave us some further information about the events under investigation and agreed to be interviewed. The interview took place in January 2018. In February 2018 we asked Mr Grimes some follow up questions. During March and April we asked him for more detail about the involvement of Vote Leave in his and BeLeave's activities. We also asked for copies of the adverts Aggregate IQ placed for BeLeave, and for details of the reports he received from Aggregate IQ on their use. Mr Grimes replied to our questions. Veterans for Britain We contacted Mr Banks, the responsible person for Veterans for Britain, on 20 November 2017. We told him about the investigation and asked him for information about the donation from Vote Leave. Mr Banks replied to our letter with the information we asked for. He also agreed to be interviewed. We interviewed Mr Banks in January 2018. He gave us a full and detailed account of the donation and the services Veterans for Britain got from Aggregate IQ. As we had already asked Mr Banks about his reporting of the Vote Leave donation, we didn't need any more information from him about this. Other individuals During the investigation we received information from three individuals, Mr Christopher Wylie, Mr Mark Gettleson and Mr Shahmir Sanni. They provided documentary and other evidence about Vote Leave and BeLeave. We met with them to discuss what they had given us. In compliance with notices under Schedule 19B paragraph 3 PPERA, they provided further information and explanation about their evidence. These individuals also provided information to the media, which was widely reported. We issued Mr Anthony Clake with a notice under Schedule 19B paragraph 3 PPERA requiring him to disclose information and documents about a donation he made to BeLeave. Mr Clake complied with our notice. We issued Mr Dominic Cummings with a notice under Schedule 19B paragraph 3 PPERA requiring him to disclose information and documents about Vote Leave and BeLeave. This followed posts Mr Cummings published on his blog referencing the allegations of joint working between the two campaigners. Mr Cummings complied with our notice. We were approached by Facebook during the investigation with some information about how Aggregate IQ used its services during the EU Referendum campaign. After the media reporting of allegations made by Mr Wylie, Mr Gettleson and Mr Sanni, we were approached by the lawyer for three Vote Leave officials, its Operations Director, Head of Outreach and National Organiser. We were told that the all three individuals willing to speak to us (This sentence was revised on 19 July 2018 to clarify that all three individuals were willing to speak to us). We responded that in the first instance we would wish any evidence to be sent to us. Determination of offences In June 2018 we were satisfied that we had sufficient evidence to make initial determinations on the offences under investigation. As required by PPERA, we issued formal notices to Vote Leave, Mr Grimes and Veterans for Britain, explaining our initial decisions and proposing penalties. These notices were accompanied by copies of the evidence on which we had relied, so that the recipients had the opportunity to see and respond to it. We invited representations within the statutory 28 day period. Vote Leave requested an extension to this period. After carefully considering the request we were satisfied that they had not given a persuasive reason why 28 days was insufficient. We therefore did not extend the deadline. During the 28 day period we were contacted again by the legal representatives for Vote Leave's Operations Director, Head of Outreach and National Organisation. We were told that these individuals now had evidence to give us. None was sent, but the legal representatives did send a letter and some documents commenting on the notices we had issued to Vote Leave. We were also contacted by legal representatives for Mr Halsall, acting for him in his personal capacity rather than as the responsible person for Vote Leave. We received a letter from them commenting on the notices we had issued to Vote Leave. By 3 July 2018 we had received representations from Vote Leave, Mr Grimes and Veterans for Britain. These were considered carefully before we made final determinations on offences and penalties. We also considered the letters we had received from the legal representatives for the Operations Director, the Head of Outreach, and the National Organiser of Vote Leave, and Mr Halsall. We issued our final determinations to Vote Leave, Mr Grimes and Veterans for Britain on 17 July 2018. What our investigation found Joint spending by Vote Leave and BeLeave We are satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that all Mr Grimes' and BeLeave's spending on referendum campaigning was incurred under a common plan with Vote Leave. This spending, including the £675,315.18 for services from Aggregate IQ reported by Mr Grimes, should have been treated as incurred by Vote Leave. To comply with PPERA, Vote Leave should have made a declaration of the amounts of joint spending in its referendum spending return. As the declarations were not made, the responsible person for Vote Leave Mr Halsall failed, without reasonable excuse, to deliver a complete campaign spending return, committing an offence under section 122(4)(b) PPERA. 'BeLeave' was initially a name used by Mr Grimes in his activities in support of the UK leaving the EU. From early 2016, Vote Leave gave Mr Grimes infrastructure and resource support to carry out his BeLeave activity. In May 2016, when Vote Leave was engaged in an unsuccessful attempt to get funding for Mr Grimes's BeLeave activity, Vote Leave drafted a constitution for BeLeave. When the individuals who became the BeLeave Board agreed this constitution, they effectively created an unincorporated association that could have been registered as a referendum campaigner. All of BeLeave's funding came directly from Vote Leave, or was arranged by Vote Leave. Vote Leave had significant influence over how that money was spent by BeLeave, to the extent that Vote Leave made a commitment to a different BeLeave donor to about how his money would be used. We are satisfied that spending by Mr Grimes (which only came to £21.51) on campaign activity prior to BeLeave being established was under the significant influence of Vote Leave. We are also satisfied that BeLeave's creation, strategy, funding and activities throughout the time it existed as an unincorporated association in May and June 2016 were all under the significant influence of Vote Leave. Evidence Evidence and analysis Mr Grimes' reported donations and spending Mr Grimes reported a series of donations and spending that related to Aggregate IQ. In chronological order, these were: a donation from Vote Leave and a payment to Aggregate IQ, both of £400,000, on 14 June 2016 a donation from Mr Anthony Clarke and a payment to Aggregate IQ, both of £50,000, on 17 June 2016 a donation from Vote Leave and a payment to Aggregate IQ, both of £40,000, on 20 June 2016 a donation from Vote Leave and a payment to Aggregate IQ, both of £185,315.18, on 21 June 2016 Mr Grimes said that he incurred the spending with Aggregate IQ for services provided to BeLeave. He had sent in invoices from Aggregate IQ with his return that listed activity to be carried out for BeLeave. Mr Grimes said that he incurred this spending after he was offered donations by Vote Leave in June 2016. He asked Vote Leave to pay the donations direct to Aggregate IQ because he did not yet have a working bank account for BeLeave. Mr Grimes gave the same explanation for the donation from Mr Clarke being paid to Aggregate IQ. Vote Leave told us that it had surplus funds towards the end of the referendum campaign. It took the decision to donate these to BeLeave. It said that Vote Leave had no input into how BeLeave decided to use the funds. The creation of BeLeave While accounts differ, we understand that from some point during January 2016, Mr Grimes started volunteering in Vote Leave's 'Outreach Team'. This team ran a campaign strategy adopted by Vote Leave to support a range of groups appealing to different demographics. Prior to May 2016, Mr Grimes was using the name BeLeave to campaign online for the UK to exit the EU. From March 2016, Mr Sanni also did some work in the name of BeLeave, such as helping develop proposals for a prospective donor. There is no evidence that a distinct entity or body called BeLeave existed at that time. For example, it had no constitution that defined its purpose, nothing saying who was involved or what they did, and nothing saying how it worked. It is not clear how much referendum campaigning Mr Grimes did in the name of BeLeave at this point. He reported campaign spending totalling £21.51 between 9 February and 13 June 2016. Vote Leave gave infrastructure support and advice to Mr Grimes to build his BeLeave brand. For example, Vote Leave's Head of Outreach directed a Vote Leave contractor to build the BeLeave website. The contractor reported to the Head of Outreach on the completion of the work. Mr Grimes got advice from Vote Leave on website content. He also got practical help with the content, including using Vote Leave staff and facilities to film videos and take photos. He told Vote Leave when he registered with the Commission as an individual campaigner. Vote Leave's Head of Outreach, in response, said that she 'owed' him a donor. In May 2016 Vote Leave's Legal Director drew up a constitution for BeLeave. According to Mr Grimes, this was because he asked Vote Leave's Head of Outreach about opening a bank account for BeLeave so that it could receive funds from prospective donors. She advised him to get a constitution, and according to Mr Grimes Vote Leave gave him a blank template he could use. Vote Leave also gave us this explanation. These accounts are not consistent with the email chain between Mr Grimes and Vote Leave, however. This shows Vote Leave providing him with a complete draft, and advising on the purpose and dissolution clauses to allow BeLeave to continue its activities after the referendum. It is clear from the evidence that the catalyst for the creation of the constitution was the fact that Vote Leave had found a potential donor for BeLeave. Discussions with the donor took place, but in the event no donation was made. In order to meet the legal definition of an unincorporated association, BeLeave had to be an association "of two or more persons... which carries on business or other activities wholly or mainly in the UK and whose main office is there" (section 45(2)(h) PPERA). By the act of drafting a constitution, Vote Leave facilitated the creation of BeLeave as an unincorporated association. By agreeing to that constitution, BeLeave's Board members created an unincorporated association. That association, BeLeave, came into existence on or around 18 May 2016. Donations to BeLeave BeLeave's only donors were Vote Leave and Mr Anthony Clake. All its donations, barring £1,000 given to BeLeave for expenses, were paid to Aggregate IQ. We got copies of email exchanges between Mr Dominic Cummings, acting on behalf of Vote Leave, and Mr Clake. These set out how Mr Clake's donation to BeLeave came about. A summary is given below. On 11 June 2016 Mr Cummings wrote to Mr Clake saying that Vote Leave had all the money it could spend, and suggesting the following: "However, there is another organisation that could spend your money. Would you be willing to send the 100k to some social media ninjas who could usefully spend it on behalf of this organisation? I am very confident it would be well spent in the final crucial 5 days. Obviously it would be entirely legal. (sic)" Mr Cummings explained to us that the 'ninjas' were Aggregate IQ Mr Clake asked about this organisation. Mr Cummings replied as follows: "the social media ninjas are based in Canada – they are extremely good. You would send your money directly to them. the organisation that would legally register the donation is a permitted participant called BeLeave, a "young people's organisation". happy to talk it through on the phone though in principle nothing is required from you but to wire money to a bank account if you're happy to take my word for it. (sic)" On 15 June 2016 Mr Clake wrote to Mr Cummings saying that he would split a donation between Vote Leave and BeLeave. Mr Cummings replied the same day to say “we are also giving money to them – you can just send us the full amount and we’ll add yours onto what we are giving them and save you the admin.” Mr Clake responded saying that he would like to give £50,000 to each campaigner (Vote Leave and BeLeave). Later on 15 June 2016, Mr Cummings asked Vote Leave’s Operations Director to send Mr Clake the bank details for both Vote Leave and BeLeave. The Operations Director sent Mr Clake these details. Shortly afterwards she sent Mr Clake contact details for BeLeave. Mr Clake then emailed Mr Grimes to offer a donation to BeLeave. He specified that this donation would made “via the AIQ account.” We have seen no evidence that BeLeave was at all involved in obtaining this donation or had any control over it or what it would be used for. Instead, by 11 June 2016 the Vote Leave officials dealing with donations to other campaigners knew that BeLeave would commission services from Aggregate IQ. They knew that these would be used in the final five days of the campaign. Vote Leave actively encouraged a donor to fund that work and offered to act as an agent for that donation. It was Vote Leave that provided the donor with BeLeave’s account details and afterwards it gave the donor BeLeave’s contact details. By the time the donor approached BeLeave, the recipient of his donation, Vote Leave had told him how the money would be used. We also got copies of various internal emails from Vote Leave and emails with Mr Grimes about the donations from Vote Leave. A summary is below. On 13 June 2016 Mr Grimes emailed Vote Leave’s Operations Director following a discussion they had about a donation. He thanked Vote Leave for considering a donation, and said: “We’d be very interested in working with data specialists like those at Aggregate IQ.” He went on to say that he wanted to work with Aggregate IQ. Vote Leave’s Operations Director replied to Mr Grimes later on 13 June 2016 saying that she would need to speak to the Finance Committee and then would ask Mr Grimes to “confirm that you are happy to transfer the money to Aggregate IQ.” On 14 June 2016 Vote Leave’s Operations Director emailed Mr Grimes to offer a donation of £400,000. Mr Grimes replied asking for the funds to be transferred to Aggregate IQ. On 17 June 2016 Vote Leave’s Operations Director emailed Mr Grimes to offer “a further donation to BeLeave.” The next day Mr Grimes replied, asking for the funds to be “sent directly to AIQ” On 21 June 2016 Vote Leave’s Operations Director emailed Mr Grimes to ask if he could make use of a £181,000 donation. He replied shortly afterwards asking for £180,000 to go to AIQ and £1,000 to BeLeave to cover travel expenses. Vote Leave gave us a minute of a Finance Committee meeting held on 14 June 2016. The minute shows that Vote Leave did anticipate a surplus of funds and it decided that these would be given away as donations. The minute agreed the £400,000 donation to BeLeave, and authorised further donations at the discretion of “the executive with supervision”. Vote Leave also gave us a minute of a Responsible Person Meeting on 21 June 2016. These show Mr Halsall, Vote Leave’s responsible person, authorising a donation of up to £440,000 to BeLeave, again after talk about surplus funds.

BeLeave’s activities Before May 2016, when Mr Grimes was using the BeLeave name in campaign material, Vote Leave had a significant influence over his activities. This is clear from Vote Leave’s input of advice and resources to the BeLeave website. It is also clear from Vote Leave’s role in trying to find donors for BeLeave activity. Mr Grimes and Vote Leave told us that BeLeave commissioned its own material from Aggregate IQ. Evidence from June 2016 does show that Mr Grimes and others from BeLeave had significant input into the look and design of the BeLeave adverts produced by Aggregate IQ. However, Vote Leave messaging was still influential in their strategy and design. For example: On 15 June 2016 Mr Grimes told other BeLeave

Board members and Aggregate IQ that BeLeave's ads needed to be: "an effective way of pushing our more liberal and progressive message to an audience which is perhaps not as receptive to Vote Leave's messaging." On 17 June 2016 Mr Grimes told other BeLeave Board members: "So as soon as we can go live. Advertising should be back on tomorrow and normal operating as of Sunday. I'd like to make sure we have loads of scheduled tweets and Facebook status. Post all of those blogs including Shahmirs, use favstar to check out and repost our best performing tweets. Copy and paste lines from Vote Leave's briefing room in a BeLeave voice" BeLeave's ability to procure services from Aggregate IQ only resulted from the actions of Vote Leave, in providing those donations and arranging a separate donor for BeLeave. While BeLeave may have contributed its own design style and input, the services provided by Aggregate IQ to BeLeave used Vote Leave messaging, at the behest of BeLeave's campaign director. It also appears to have had the benefit of Vote Leave data and/or data it obtained via online resources set up and provided to it by Vote Leave to target and distribute its campaign material. This is shown by evidence from Facebook that Aggregate IQ used identical target lists for Vote Leave and BeLeave ads, although the BeLeave ads were not run. Joint spending by Vote Leave and BeLeave Vote Leave and BeLeave told us that the BeLeave AIQ payments were donations, and Vote Leave had no influence over how BeLeave used them. We are satisfied that many parts of this explanation are not consistent with the evidence. Mr Grimes said that BeLeave was his initiative from the outset. The evidence shows that BeLeave as an unincorporated association was created when Vote Leave advised Mr Grimes on getting a constitution in place, and wrote that constitution for him. This happened because it was a necessary precursor to Vote Leave obtaining funding for the BeLeave campaign. Mr Grimes also said he ran his own campaign using his own facilities. The evidence shows that his BeLeave campaign website was set up by Vote Leave, its content was created by Vote Leave, he consulted Vote Leave on campaigning and Vote Leave actively sought funding for his work. Mr Grimes said that he chose to spend the donations from Vote Leave and Mr Clarke on Aggregate IQ. But Vote Leave officials channelled funds to Aggregate IQ in the name of BeLeave, without Mr Grimes being involved. Vote Leave said that its work with BeLeave was consistent with the duty on it as a lead campaigner to represent and engage with other 'leave' campaigners. The fact that Vote Leave and BeLeave were incurring spending as part of a common plan is consistent with that duty. However, Vote Leave and BeLeave were also under a legal obligation to report the spending accurately. The £675,315.18 reported by Mr Grimes as BeLeave spending with Aggregate IQ was incurred in pursuance of a common plan with Vote Leave. That common plan included spending incurred by Vote Leave on the infrastructure and other support given to Mr Grimes when he was using the BeLeave name, and to BeLeave itself. Further, the remaining amount of campaign spending reported by Mr Grimes (£700.19) was also incurred under the same common plan. The entire amount - £676,015.37 – should have been treated as incurred by Vote Leave and a declaration of the amounts should have been included on Vote Leave's referendum spending return. Vote Leave's spending limit Vote Leave's spending limit As referendum spending by Mr Grimes and BeLeave was joint spending with Vote Leave, Vote Leave's referendum spending was in fact £7,449,079. Its statutory spending limit was £7m. We are therefore satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that Vote Leave exceeded the spending limit for a designated lead campaigner of £7m. Mr Halsall knew, or ought reasonably to have known, that this spending would be in excess of the spending limit. He was the responsible person for a designated lead campaigner. His experience and expertise were highlighted by Vote Leave in its application for designation. He was responsible for Vote Leave's financial and compliance processes. He was aware of the donations in question and either personally authorised them or delegated others to do so. Mr Halsall was aware of BeLeave. He was aware of the common plan or joint spending provisions in law. He had a legal duty to adhere to the campaign finance rules, including the spending limit. The Commission is therefore satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that Mr Halsall committed an offence under section 118(2)(c)(i). Vote Leave also committed an offence under section 118(2)(c)(ii). Evidence Evidence and analysis The evidence of a common plan between Vote Leave and BeLeave, and Vote Leave and Mr Grimes, is set out above. In its application for designation as lead campaigner for the ‘leave’ outcome, Vote Leave described its Board, of which Mr Halsall was a member, as being “responsible for the overall management and direction of the campaign and Vote Leave’s activities.” It said the Board would meet fortnightly. Mr Halsall was also listed as a member of the Finance Committee, which was “responsible for internal financial governance, fundraising and budgeting.” He was also listed as a member of the Compliance Committee, which was “responsible for supervision of the effective governance of [Vote Leave]; its compliance with the law; effective financial and operational process and control; managing conflicts of interest; and ensuring [Vote Leave] obtains value for money.” The application noted that the responsible person was responsible for enforcing regulatory compliance. Vote Leave’s application went on to say – in further evidence it provided at our request – that the Board was not responsible for the daily running of Vote Leave’s campaign. This was the responsibility of the Campaign, Finance and Compliance Committees. Mr Halsall sat on two of these. The further information said: “At the centre of the Vote Leave governance structure is the Responsible Person... who is a solicitor, a member of the Board of Directors, a member of the Finance Committee, a member of the Compliance Committee, as well as being a respected entrepreneur and business leader.” We saw a minute of the Vote Leave Finance Committee meeting on 14 June 2016, given to us by Vote Leave. Mr Halsall was there, along with other senior Vote Leave figures. They agreed that an initial donation be given to BeLeave of £400,000 and that subsequent donations might be given subject to the discretion of “the executive with supervision”. According to the minute, those present thought that “subject to a favourable legal opinion”, Vote Leave could donate to other campaign groups. We saw an internal Vote Leave email exchange on 14 June 2016 with the title “Donations to other campaigns”. Mr Halsall was amongst the recipients, along with other senior Vote Leave figures. In this chain: At 15:02 a Vote Leave Board Member emailed to say the donation to BeLeave was “ok for me – on the understanding that there is no “coordinated plan or arrangement”, and based on the communications we received earlier from the Electoral Commission, which say that this is what we are allowed to do.” At 15:07 Mr Halsall emailed: “Having read the advice from our Lawyer happy to agree to this donation. I assume we will ensure that BeLeave understand they have to register the donation as our Lawyer suggests.” We saw a minute of a Responsible Person Meeting on 21 June 2016. Again, Mr Halsall was present along with other senior Vote Leave figures. The majority of the minute, provided by Vote Leave, was redacted but the following paragraph was disclosed. “It was noted that, as donations are not (by definition) referendum expenses, they did not fall within [the responsible person’s] remit as Responsible Person AH took the view that as he was the only individual who was a member of the Board, the Compliance Committee and the Finance Committee, and given the shortness of time, he could authorise transfers on other grounds.” The minute also said that Vote Leave authorised donations to BeLeave based on a proposal put forward by its Operations Director. Those present agreed that any surplus funds exceeding its cash reserve requirement should be donated to BeLeave and Muslims for Britain, a registered campaigner, until 23 June 2016. On 19 August 2016 Mr Halsall signed a letter to us setting out the approach Vote Leave took to donations to BeLeave. He said that Vote Leave had legal advice on this, although he declined to provide it. He said that Vote Leave relied on the experience of multiple volunteers who were familiar with our guidance and PPERA, and that an “honest assessment” took place before each donation was made. Mr Halsall wrote to us when he received notice of our intention to fine Vote Leave for exceeding its spending limit. He told us that when he agreed to be the responsible person for Vote Leave, he understood that he would be supported by its Finance Director, Operations Director and Legal Director. He said that “with their assistance he was confident he was introducing robust and effective systems of compliance control, both in general and specifically in relation to concerted [common plan] expenditure.” Mr Halsall said that he was “not consciously aware” of BeLeave or Mr Grimes prior to 14 June 2016. He “reasonably believed” that the Operations Director, in whom he had significant confidence, was satisfied that there was no common plan with BeLeave prior to proposing a donation. Mr Halsall, as Vote Leave’s responsible person, had a number of legal obligations under PPERA and the EURA. This included ensuring that the statutory spending limit of £7 million was not exceeded. He put himself forward as the responsible person for an organisation seeking to be designated as lead campaigner. The organisation told us that it had “the resources, skills and expertise to run a responsible and professional campaign.” Its application in support of this claim set out an internal structure of committees and explained that Mr Halsall sat on both the Finance and Compliance committees. The application explicitly placed him at the centre of its regulatory compliance processes, saying that he was “responsible” for these (reflecting the obligations PPERA places on responsible persons). Compliance with the regulatory framework was clearly within the remit of the responsible person for Vote Leave. It seems that he did delegate many of his duties to others, which is allowed under PPERA. However, this did not relieve him of overall responsibility. Further, he was copied in on much of the correspondence, and was present at key meetings. He took responsibility for decisions in relation to these donations, either directly or, it appears, by setting the terms of delegation for others. On the facts, therefore, he can be taken to have known about the donations and where they were going. Mr Halsall is not personally copied in on any of the emails we have seen between Vote Leave and BeLeave. He may not have known the extent of the control and influence that Vote Leave exercised over BeLeave. But the evidence shows that joint working between them was an issue he considered. Although he said that Vote Leave based its “honest assessment” upon legal advice, and he was supported in his role by others within Vote Leave, it was still his legal responsibility to satisfy himself that he was acting in line with the campaign finance rules. Other issues with Vote Leave’s spending return Other issues with Vote Leave’s spending return We are satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that Vote Leave’s spending return included amounts totalling £234,275.40 that were not referendum spending. Another four payments, of £1,828, were included when they should not have been. They were for an event that took place after 23 June 2016. Another 10 payments were incorrectly aggregated as one. Mr Halsall provided no reasonable excuses for these. They meant that Vote Leave’s return was inaccurate in respect of another 43 items of spending, totalling £236,501.44, which was an offence under section 122(4)(b) PPERA. We also found that eight payments of over £200 in Vote Leave’s return did not have an invoice or receipt with them, as required by PPERA. The total value of these payments was £12,849.99. Mr

Halsall did not have a reasonable excuse for this omissions, and committed a further offence under section 122(4)(b). Evidence and analysis Evidence and analysis The return originally delivered by Vote Leave included two large amounts that didn't have any supporting invoices. The first, for £91,275.43, was described by Vote Leave as "value of unused material on hand at 14 April – stocktake provided in lieu of invoice". Vote Leave described the second, for - £142,999.97, as "value of unused material on hand at 24 June – stocktake provided in lieu of notice". We found out, however, that these were not individual payments of referendum expenses. They were a proportion of 34 individual payments for items that were not fully used during the campaign. They should not have been in the return at all. Vote Leave said that this was an honest error. However, inadvertence is not a reasonable excuse. We found out that another four reported payments, totalling £1,828, should not have been in the return. They related to an event that took place after 23 June 2016, outside the regulated period. Another ten payments were aggregated into one, of £393.05. As a result, the return was missing the individual items of spending. Vote Leave disputed the need to include individual payments in its return, although as we explained this is clear in law. It did not put forward any reasonable excuse for its actions. Eight items of spending of over £200 were included in the return, but no supporting invoice or receipt was provided. In two instances some alternative documentation was supplied, but these did not meet the requirements of PPERA (in that they were not an invoice or a receipt). In respect of the remaining spending, Vote Leave advised the Commission that "having made enquiries of the supplier [it] believed that [invoices] were not available". Vote Leave did not, however, evidence this belief or indicate why it could not deliver receipts. Vote Leave said that as the invoices did not exist it was not under an obligation to get them. This, however, ignored the issue of why they were not obtained when the spending was paid, when Vote Leave knew they would need to give them to us. Further, invoices were subsequently provided on 9 and 14 February 2017. We therefore do not consider that a reasonable excuse has been put forward for these omissions. We are satisfied that when Vote Leave's return was delivered on 23 December 2016, eight items totalling £12,849.99 were missing supporting invoices or receipts.

BeLeave's spending BeLeave's spending BeLeave was never registered with us as a campaigner in the EU Referendum. Unregistered campaigners could only legally spend up to £10,000 on referendum campaigning. But Mr Grimes, acting on its behalf, incurred spending of over £675,000. On 15 March 2016 Mr Grimes applied to register a permitted participant for the EU Referendum. He put down the name of the campaigner as 'BeLeave', but ticked the box to say he was applying as an individual. We treated the application as for an individual and approved it. At the time BeLeave was not eligible to register as a permitted participant. If we had treated Mr Grimes' application as an attempt to register BeLeave, it would have been rejected. It only met the eligibility criteria in May 2016. Mr Grimes knew that BeLeave was not a permitted participant. He knew that he was. He also knew, or ought reasonably to have known, that while he could incur referendum spending of up to £700,000, BeLeave, as an unregistered campaigner, was limited to spending of £10,000. Despite this BeLeave – with Mr Grimes acting on its behalf – incurred spending of £675,315.18. This spending was joint spending with Vote Leave. Under the common plan provisions in EURA, it had to be treated as campaign spending incurred by Vote Leave. But it was still spending by BeLeave, and counted against its spending limit, even though only Vote Leave were required to report it. We are therefore satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that Mr Grimes incurred referendum spending in excess of £10,000 on behalf of a body that was not a permitted participant, and that he knew, or ought reasonably to have known, he was doing this. Mr Grimes committed an offence under section 117(3) PPERA. BeLeave committed an offence under section 117(4) PPERA. Evidence Evidence and analysis On 15 March 2016 Mr Grimes made a notification to register a permitted participant for the EU Referendum. He wrote on the notification form that the name of the campaigner was 'BeLeave'. He put himself down as the responsible person. However, he ticked the box to say he was registering as an individual. We checked the form on the basis that Mr Grimes was registering as an individual. He met the criteria, and we registered him. When we sent him confirmation of registration, we asked him to check a print out of the register entry. This made clear that he had been registered in an individual capacity, and that BeLeave had not been registered. Mr Grimes did not tell us that there was anything wrong, in his view, with the register entry. Mr Grimes has argued that we should have done more to point out to him the error on his registration form, either at that point or since. However, as in March 2016, BeLeave did not meet the definition of an unincorporated association and was not eligible to register, we processed his application correctly and gave him the opportunity to review it. The responsibility to comply with the registration and reporting requirements rested with him. BeLeave did not become eligible to register until on or around 18 May 2016. On or around 18 May 2016 a group of five people, including Mr Grimes and Mr Sanni, agreed a constitution for an unincorporated association called BeLeave. Those five people were listed as Board members in the constitution. They carried out campaign activity within the framework of this constitution. From around 18 May 2016, therefore, BeLeave was eligible to register as a campaigner. No attempt was made to register it. Between 14 and 21 June 2016 Mr Grimes entered into four separate contracts with Aggregate IQ, each time specifying that he was acting on behalf of BeLeave. Each contract was documented by an 'insertion order'. Each insertion order is clearly shown as being between Aggregate IQ and BeLeave. Further, Mr Grimes has told us that he was acting on behalf of BeLeave. Vote Leave has told us that its donations were to BeLeave, and it paid for services given to BeLeave. We are therefore satisfied that Mr Grimes was acting on behalf of BeLeave when entering into these contracts, and not in an individual capacity. The contracts totalled £675,315.18. This is far in excess of the £10,000 limit on BeLeave as an unregistered campaigner. Mr Grimes argued that as the spending was still reported, albeit not by BeLeave, there was no loss to transparency from these events. However, these events contributed to a lack of clarity about BeLeave's status. Mr Grime's spending return Mr Grime's spending return After the referendum Mr Grimes delivered a spending return in his capacity as an individual campaigner. Although he put the name 'Darren Grimes/BeLeave' on it, it wasn't a return for two campaigners; it was a return for him as an individually registered campaigner. He included payments of £675,315 that was not his spending, but BeLeave's. This was a substantial amount of inaccurate reporting that has resulted in a lack of transparency. We are satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that Mr Grimes failed to deliver a complete referendum spending return to us. He thereby committed an offence under section 122(4)(b) PPERA. Evidence Evidence and analysis Between 14 and 21 June 2016 Mr Grimes incurred spending of £675,315.19 on behalf of BeLeave with Aggregate IQ. He included this spending on a return delivered against his individual registration as a campaigner. But it was not his spending; it was BeLeave's spending. Mr Grimes' spending return demonstrates that he, as an individual campaigner, did not incur more than £10,000 referendum spending. He didn't have to make a spending return at all. He could have made a declaration of spending under £10,000 within three months of the referendum. But if he did decide to make a return, it shouldn't have reported any spending. All his spending was incurred under a common plan with Vote Leave. In any scenario, therefore, Mr Grimes delivered an inaccurate spending return. The fact that he may have been acting under a misapprehension is not a reasonable excuse for this, particularly given the steps we took to publish guidance and a form to notify us for registration, and to request that he checked the details of the register entry. Veterans for Britain Veterans for Britain Veterans for Britain's spending return included a donation of £100,000, reported as a cash donation received and accepted on 20 May 2016. In fact, this donation was a payment by Vote Leave directly to Aggregate IQ for services provided to Veterans for Britain in the final days of the EU referendum campaign. It was paid by Vote Leave on 29 June 2016. We are satisfied that the responsible person for Veterans for Britain, Mr Banks, without reasonable excuse delivered a spending return that contained an inaccurate donation report. He committed an offence under section 122(4)(b) PPERA. That donation was for services provided by Aggregate IQ. Aggregate IQ was providing services to Vote Leave at the same time. The evidence we have seen does not support the concern that the services were provided to Veterans for Britain as joint working with Vote Leave. Evidence Evidence and analysis Donation report The responsible person for Veterans for Britain, Mr Banks, has confirmed that he inaccurately reported some of the details of a £100,000 donation. He reported this donation with his spending return. He said it was a donation from Vote Leave, received and accepted on 20 May 2016. However, he put the wrong date, as it was actually paid on 29 June 2016. He also reported it as a cash donation when in fact it was paid by Vote Leave directly to Aggregate IQ for services provided to Veterans for Britain. This was, on Mr Banks' own account, a typographical error on his part. Such inadvertent errors do not amount to a reasonable excuse in law. Such errors do impact on transparency and that in turn impacts on public confidence in the campaign finance regime. Joint working concerns The correct date of the donation and its circumstances mean that it took place at the same time that Vote Leave donated to BeLeave. BeLeave and Vote Leave were working under a common plan. We looked at whether there was evidence that Veterans for Britain and Vote Leave were also working under a common plan. We saw a number of emails originating from within Vote Leave's Outreach Team in early 2016. Veterans for Britain appeared in a small number of these. We also got a detailed account of events from Mr Banks, and he gave us copies of email chains from the time. From these, we saw that Veterans for Britain had some interaction with the Vote Leave Outreach Team and may have got some help with building its infrastructure (mainly its website). But there is no evidence that it had extensive support or resources from Vote Leave. We saw that in mid-June 2016 Veterans for Britain expected to receive a £50,000 donation. Given the lateness in the campaign, it decided to use the money on digital campaigning. It asked Vote Leave's Head of Outreach for a recommended supplier. The Head of Outreach introduced Veterans for Britain to Aggregate IQ. Following that introduction, no one from Vote Leave was involved in the exchanges we have seen between Veterans for Britain and Aggregate IQ. Veterans for Britain started to arrange its campaign with Aggregate IQ. But on 22 June 2016 the campaign stopped because the funds had run out. Veterans for Britain asked Vote Leave if it knew of any possible donors. In response Vote Leave offered to make a donation of £100,000. Veterans for Britain asked for this to be paid direct to Aggregate IQ because it was having trouble making rapid financial transfers to the company. We saw evidence of these difficulties. This evidence is consistent with two legally separate campaigners who knew each other and had worked closely prior to the regulated referendum period starting. However, they did not appear to be collaborating on a campaign. While Vote

Leave recommended Aggregate IQ as a supplier, Veterans for Britain built a direct relationship with them. Unlike BeLeave, Veterans for Britain asked for more money for its campaign, rather than being offered it by Vote Leave. Vote Leave investigation notice Vote Leave investigation notice Under Schedule 19B PPERA, when we are conducting an investigation we can issue an ‘investigation notice’ requiring any person to disclose information, explanation or documents to us. We can give a reasonable deadline for disclosure. We issued an investigation notice to Vote Leave. Vote Leave failed to comply with the notice by the deadline we gave. It did not reply until after the deadline has passed, and while initially offering the documents for inspection, it then imposed conditions on this happening. None of the arguments Vote Leave put forward as to why it did not comply amount to a reasonable excuse. It had told us that the relevant documents were being preserved. It did not indicate any logistical challenge with producing them by the deadline. There is no evidence to suggest that it was unable to produce them. Vote Leave’s failure to comply appears to have resulted from misconceived objections, already dealt with by us, to being under investigation. We are therefore satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that Vote Leave failed, without reasonable excuse, to comply with an investigation notice we 30 issued under Schedule 19B paragraph 3 PPERA on 21 February 2018. Vote Leave thereby committed an offence under Schedule 19B paragraph 13(1). Evidence Evidence and analysis We opened an investigation on 20 November 2017 into suspected offences relating to Vote Leave, Mr Grimes and Veterans for Britain. In its first response to us after we opened that investigation, on 1 December 2017, Vote Leave’s lawyers said its clients were “anxious to be cooperative”. They went on to say: “We wish to assure you that whatever records are held are being maintained and are being reviewed to see what if anything is relevant to your re-opened inquiry”. In later letters, Vote Leave objected to the investigation. It sent us a PreAction Protocol Letter saying it was going to judicially review the decision to investigate. We responded. Vote Leave did not start judicial review proceedings. Having been unsuccessful in a number of attempts to invite Vote Leave to an interview, on 21 February 2018 we issued an investigation notice requiring Vote Leave to disclose a discrete set of documents we needed for our investigation. We sent the investigation notice to Mr Halsall as Vote Leave’s responsible person, copied to its lawyers. We gave a formal deadline of 1pm on 6 March 2018. The letter with the notice explained that Vote Leave should contact us as soon as possible if it could not meet that deadline. We heard nothing from Vote Leave or Mr Halsall until 3.50pm on 6 March 2018. At that point we got a letter from its lawyers, but none of the required documents were produced. Instead Vote Leave offered to let us inspect the documents it considered relevant at its offices. We asked Vote Leave why it hadn’t complied with the notice. In response, Vote Leave said it “has complied with the Commission’s Statutory [investigation] Notice dated February 21 2018 in all key respects. The only failing was not to reply by the arbitrary 1300 hours deadline on March 6th 2018, however a reply was sent to and received by the Commission on the afternoon of March 6th before 1600 hours.” We then had a number of exchanges with Vote Leave during which it raised misconceived objections, which we had already answered, to the investigation being opened. It repeated its assertion that we had no power to open what it called a ‘third investigation’ into this matter. It ignored our repeated clarification that this was our first investigation. It claimed our Enforcement Policy had no statutory basis and could not be relied upon either when opening investigations or issuing notices. Our Enforcement Policy does have a statutory basis. It is made under Schedule 19B paragraph 14 PPERA. Still no documents were disclosed. After weeks of correspondence Vote Leave then made its offer of inspection contingent on us meeting it to discuss why the investigation should be closed. Concerned that this was another delay by Vote Leave, we sent authorised officers to inspect and take copies of the documents that Vote Leave said it had collated in response to our notice. In the event, these documents were incomplete and some were not the correct documents. It is a matter of fact that Vote Leave did not comply with our investigation notice. None of the required documents were produced or even made available to us for inspection by the deadline we gave. Vote Leave's response – after the deadline – still didn't produce the documents. The notice was not complied with in any respect. We looked at whether Vote Leave had a reasonable excuse for failing to comply with the notice. Vote Leave explained its approach by saying that "the investigation was not justified" and it was "concerned that the width of the notice was over reaching". It also said that the notice did not follow the wording of PPERA by saying that the documents had to be produced "for inspection". We already knew that Vote Leave objected to our decision to investigate, although it didn't challenge that decision by judicial review. But its opinion did not change the fact that our decision to investigate was properly taken in line with our Enforcement Policy, and an investigation was being conducted. PPERA allows us to require documents that we reasonably require to progress our investigation. In this instance, the notice required Vote Leave to give us copies of communications with Aggregate IQ, Mr Grimes and Veterans for Britain from a limited period during June 2016. It also required copies of adverts placed by Aggregate IQ on behalf of Vote Leave during the same timeframe. The defined scope of the request related directly and obviously to the offences under investigation. The notice said that we preferred the documents to be emailed to us but it did not require this or any other method of production. There was nothing to prevent Vote Leave making the documents available for us to inspect by 1pm on 6 March 2018 and thus complying with the notice. It did not do this. Further, Vote Leave could have asked us about the method of production in good time before the deadline. It did not do so. Vote Leave made further representations on this when sent notice of our intention to fine it for failing to comply with the notice. It said that the time we had allowed for the documents to be produced (13 days) was unreasonable. Its lawyers said that Vote Leave had given them the documents only a few days before the deadline. Neither point was a reasonable excuse for the failure to comply. In December 2017 Vote Leave had told us that its records were being maintained and reviewed. In the context of a period of time from December 2017 to March 2018, giving Vote Leave an additional 13 days was reasonable. Further, Vote Leave was given the opportunity to ask for the deadline to be extended. It did not do so.

Potential related offences

Under section 123(2)(a) and (b)(i) of PPERA, referendum spending returns must be accompanied by a declaration to us made by the responsible person of the campaigner. The responsible person is required to state that they have examined the return and, to the best of his or her knowledge and belief, it is complete and correct as required by law. It is an offence for the responsible person to knowingly or recklessly make a false declaration. Civil sanctions do not attach to this offence; it can only be pursued by prosecution. We are satisfied that we have reasonable grounds to suspect that Mr Halsall either knowingly or recklessly signed a false declaration accompanying the Vote Leave spending return. We are also satisfied that we have reasonable grounds to suspect that Mr Grimes either knowingly or recklessly signed a false declaration accompanying the spending return he delivered as an individually registered campaigner. Vote Leave's spending return was inaccurate. It was incorrect for it to fail to include a declaration that Vote Leave had engaged in joint working with Mr Grimes and BeLeave. It incorrectly stated that Vote Leave had spent under its spending limit. Mr Grimes' spending return was also inaccurate. It incorrectly stated that he had incurred over £675,000 of referendum campaign spending when this was not in fact the case. We have shared our evidence in respect of Mr Halsall and Mr Grimes with the Metropolitan Police Service. We have also shared our investigation files with the Metropolitan Police in relation to whether any persons have committed related offences which lie outside our remit. Offences committed We have determined that Mr David Alan Halsall, the responsible person for Vote Leave, committed: an offence under section 122(4)(b) PPERA in that Mr Halsall failed, without reasonable excuse to deliver a referendum spending return for Vote Leave that was a complete statement of all payments made. We have fined Vote Leave £20,000 for this offence. a further offence under section 122(4)(b) PPERA in that Mr Halsall failed, without reasonable excuse, to deliver a referendum spending return for Vote Leave that was accompanied by all the required invoices and receipts. We have fined Vote Leave £1,000 for this offence. an offence under section 118(2)(c)(i) PPERA in that Mr Halsall incurred spending which he knew or ought reasonably to have known was in excess of the statutory spending limit for Vote Leave. Vote Leave also committed an offence under section 118(2)(c)(ii). We have fined Vote Leave £20,000 for this. We have determined that Vote Leave Limited committed an offence under Schedule 19B paragraph 13(1) PPERA in that it failed, without reasonable excuse, to comply with a requirement imposed by us to produce documents by a specified date. We have fined Vote Leave £20,000 for this offence. We have determined that Mr Darren Grimes committed: an offence under section 117(3) PPERA in that Mr Grimes incurred spending on behalf of BeLeave that exceeded the statutory limit for a nonregistered campaigner. BeLeave also committed an offence under section 117(4). We have fined Mr Grimes £20,000 for this. an offence under section 122(4)(b) in that Mr Grimes failed, without reasonable excuse, to deliver a referendum spending return as an individual registered campaigner that was a complete statement of all his referendum spending. In light of our decision to impose a fine on Mr Grimes for his offence under section 117(3) PPERA, we decided not to impose a further fine on Mr Grimes for this offence. We have determined that Mr David Banks, the responsible person for Veterans for Britain, has committed an offence under section 122(4)(b) PPERA. He failed, without reasonable excuse, to deliver a referendum spending return that included an accurate report of relevant donations received. We have fined Mr Banks £250 for this offence.

Legal and regulatory framework Referendum campaign spending returns Under section 122(2) of the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000 ("PPERA"), a permitted participant must deliver to the Commission a return that is a statement of referendum spending. Section 120 PPERA says that a referendum spending return must specify the referendum to which the expenditure relates. Under section 120(2)(a) it must contain a statement of all payments made in respect of referendum spending incurred by or on behalf of the permitted participant during the referendum period in question. Under section 120(2)(d), where the permitted participant is not a registered political party, the return must also contain a statement of relevant donations received in respect of the referendum which complies with the requirements of paragraphs 10 and 11 of Schedule 15. Paragraph 10 of Schedule 15 requires that the statement must include the total value of any relevant donation, other than those specified, which are accepted by the permitted participant. Under section 120(3) the referendum spending return must be accompanied by all invoices and receipts relating to these referendum payments. Under section 122(4)(b) PPERA, the responsible person for a permitted participant commits an offence if, without reasonable excuse, they deliver a return which does not comply with the requirements laid down in sections 120(2) or (3) PPERA. Section 120A PPERA provides that a return need not be made if the referendum expenses incurred by a permitted participant do not exceed £10,000, and within three months of the end of the referendum period the responsible person makes and delivers a declaration of the total amount of referendum expenses incurred.

Common plan expenses Under the European Union Referendum Act 2015 ("EURA") Schedule 1 paragraph 22, "common plan expenses" are expenses that: are referendum expenses incurred by or on behalf of an individual or body during the referendum period, and those expenses are incurred in pursuance of a plan or other arrangement by which referendum expenses are to be incurred by or on behalf of that individual or body and one or more other individuals or bodies, and with a view to promoting or procuring a particular outcome in the referendum. Under the same paragraph, if any of the individuals or bodies involved is a designated ('lead') organisation, then those referendum expenses are treated for the purpose of sections 117 and 118 and Schedule 14 PPERA as having been incurred by the designated organisation only. Schedule 1 paragraph 23(4) EURA requires a return under section 120 PPERA to include a declaration of whether there are any common plan expenses as defined in paragraph 22 incurred by or on behalf of another individual or body, and in the case of each individual or body, its name and the amount of common plan expenses. The same paragraph requires a further declaration of whether there are any common plan expenses incurred by or on behalf of the campaigner concerned that must be treated as having been incurred by another campaigner. The Commission published guidance on working together in the EU Referendum. That explained that the rules were engaged when "spending money as a result of a coordinated plan or arrangement between two or more campaigners during the referendum period that is intended to, or is otherwise in connection with, promoting or bringing about a particular outcome in the referendum." It goes on to say that it is highly likely that two campaigners are working together if they spend money on joint advertising campaigns, they coordinate spending or another campaigner can approve or has significant influence over the spending Spending limits for the designated lead campaigners Under section 118(1) PPERA, Schedule 14 imposes limits on referendum expenses incurred by or on behalf of a permitted participant during a referendum period. For the EU Referendum, Schedule 14 PPERA was amended to set the limit on referendum expenses for a designated lead campaigner at £7m. Under section 118(2)(c)(i) a responsible person for a non-party non-individual campaigner commits an offence if he or she authorises expenses to be incurred by or on behalf of that campaigner and he or she knew or ought to have known that the expenses would be incurred in excess of the statutory limit. Under section 118(2)(c)(ii), the campaigner is also guilty of an offence. Spending limit for a non-permitted participant Section 105 PPERA defines "permitted participants" for the purpose of a referendum. It includes any of the following by whom a notification has been made under section 106 relating to the referendum: a registered political party, 37 an individual resident in the UK or registered in an electoral register, or any body failing within any of the paragraphs (b) and (d) to (h) of section 54(2).

Section 106 states that a notification for this purpose is a notification to the Commission which identifies the referendum to which it relates and the outcome for which the giver of the notification intends to campaign. Section 54 sets out permissible donors. Section 54(h) lists the following body: any unincorporated association which does not fall within any of the preceding paragraphs but which carries on a business or other activities wholly or mainly in the UK and whose main office is there. Schedule 1 Paragraph 6 of the EURA prohibits any person from being the responsible person for more than one permitted participant, including as an individual permitted participant. Section 117 PPERA sets out certain financial limits for referendums. Section 117(1) states that the total referendum expenses incurred by or on behalf of an individual or body during a referendum period must not exceed £10,000 unless the individual or body is a permitted participant (ie registered as a campaigner with the Commission). Sections 117(2) and (3) create associated offences. Section 117(3) says that where during the referendum period any referendum expenses are incurred by or on behalf of any body in excess of £10,000, and the body is not a permitted participant, any person who authorised the expenses to be incurred by or on behalf of the body is guilty of an offence if he knew or ought reasonably to have known that the expenses would be incurred in excess of that limit. Where a person commits an offence under section 117(3), the body that was not a permitted participant is also guilty of an offence under section 117(4). Paragraph 6(3) of Schedule 1 to the European Union Referendum Act 2005 states that a person cannot be the responsible person for more than one permitted participant (including as an individual). The Commission published guidance for the section 105/106 PPERA notification (hereinafter referred to as ‘registration’) as a permitted participant in the EU referendum. That guidance explained the rules as above, and included a registration form, EUR1. Investigation notices Under Schedule 19B paragraph 3 of the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000 (“PPEREA”), where the Commission has reasonable grounds to suspect that a person has committed an offence under that Act, the Commission may by notice require any person to produce, for inspection by the Commission or a person authorised by the Commission, any document that it reasonably requires for the purposes of investigating the suspected offence or contravention. Under paragraph 3(3), a person to whom such a notice is given shall comply with it within such reasonable time as is specified in the notice. Under paragraph 13(1) a person who fails, without reasonable excuse, to comply with any requirement imposed under or by virtue of Schedule 19B commits an offence. In accordance with Schedule 19B paragraph 14 PPERA the Commission has published guidance as to the circumstances in which it is likely to give a notice under paragraph 3.

This guidance takes the form of the Commission’s published Enforcement Policy.

Related content about our enforcement work Electoral law is out of date. Find out where we want to see improvements Political parties, campaigners and other groups have to report their finances to us. Find out about campaign spending, donations and loans and annual accounts.

Ballot paper ordering at Scottish council elections | Electoral Commission Search Ballot paper ordering at Scottish council elections You are in the Our research section Home Our research On this page Key findings Findings from voters What electoral administrators and their suppliers told us What political parties told us First published: 23 September 2019 Last updated: 26 November 2019 Summary The Scottish Government asked us to assess the impact on voters of any changes to the ordering of candidates on ballot papers for Scottish council elections. We carried out research with the public, and talked to organisations which represent disabled people to understand the potential implications of any proposed changes for voters.
We also talked to the people who run elections, and to political parties, to understand how any changes may impact them. We tested two approaches: ordering candidates A to Z and then Z to A on alternating ballot papers drawing the order of candidates by lot Key findings in the testing we undertook, the order of the candidates had no impact on voters' ability to find and vote for their preferred candidates on the ballot paper organisations representing disabled people were concerned that any changes would impact on a disabled person's ability to familiarise themselves with the order and layout of the ballot paper before they come to vote.
This might impact on the accessibility of the poll for these voters while electoral administrators were confident that they could manage any processes resulting from differently ordered ballot papers, they wanted clearly prescribed rules for administering any change to the ballot to ensure transparency around the process electoral administrators also raised concerns about the potential for voter confusion and increased costs resulting from any changes there was no clear consensus amongst political parties about the ordering of names on ballot papers Findings from voters
The ordering of candidates on the ballot paper does not affect voters' ability to locate and vote for their preferred candidate it took voters no longer to locate their preferred candidate on the ballot paper when the names were ordered other than A to Z we found that voters rarely noticed or thought about the order of candidates on the ballot paper While our research could not replicate the exact voter experience of completing ballot papers at a real election, we did clearly find that the ordering of candidates on ballot papers did not affect voters' ability to navigate and complete the ballot paper in the way they intended. This was the case regardless of whether they were looking for a specific candidate on the ballot paper or were voting along party lines. Do voters notice the order of candidates? During the interviews with voters, the order of candidates on the ballot paper was rarely raised, with only 15 out of 118 participants doing so spontaneously. Even when specifically asked to look at and comment on the order of the candidates on the ballot paper, only a minority of voters noticed whether their ballot paper had the candidates in alphabetical, reverse-alphabetical or random order. Can the order of candidates make it easier or harder for voters to find their preferred candidate(s)? Our research found that the order of the candidates had no impact on participants' ability to find and vote for their preferred candidate(s). We asked 70 of the 118 research participants to find and vote for a specific fictitious candidate on the ballot paper. 20 out of the 70 participants failed to give their vote to this candidate. However, this was never because they were unable to locate the name. The reasons given were that they had forgotten the name of the candidate, and even though it was a test, some preferred to vote for a candidate from the party they usually support, or did not want to give a vote to a candidate they knew nothing about. We asked all of the participants in our eye tracking research to find a specific candidate on the ballot paper and timed how long it took them to find that candidate on the differently ordered ballot papers. We found little difference in the time taken to find the candidate based on the order of the ballot papers, with it taking participants less than three seconds on average across all ballot papers. Table one: Average time to find a specific candidate by ballot paper order Ballot paper order Average time to find a specific candidate (in seconds) A to Z 3.2 Z to A 3.6 Ordered by lot 1.3 Overall 2.7 The data in table one shows that, on average, voters took slightly longer to find the candidate in the Z to A order and less time to find the candidate when the candidates were ordered by lot. However, this is likely to be because participants tended to read from the top to the bottom of the ballot paper and is therefore related to the position of the specified candidate on the test ballot paper. The specified candidate was higher up the ballot paper order in the version ordered by lot, and further down in the version ordered Z to A. Do voters have a preference for how the candidates are ordered on the ballot paper? When specifically asked, a small majority of the voters participating in our research preferred an A to Z order (60 out of 118 participants) although over a third (41 out of 118) expressed no preference because they, in general, did not think it would make any difference to people's ability to navigate and complete the ballot paper. Some participants expressed a view that a change to the traditional A to Z order might raise questions about how the order was decided and whether it was fair. Reasons for preferring A to Z Participants who expressed a preference for A to Z order did not tend to have a strong preference, nor did they think it would make it much easier or quicker for people to find their preferred candidate. The main reasons given by participants expressing a preference for A to Z were that A to Z is a commonly used and therefore familiar system for voters. Consequently it may be considered more transparent and – by extension – 'fair'. Some also expressed a belief that it would be easier or quicker for other voters to find the preferred candidate on the ballot paper However, the belief that it would be easier to find a candidate when the names are set out in A to Z order is not substantiated by our research, as most participants did not notice the order. Where the order of candidates on the ballot paper was other than A to Z, or where the participants did not realise it was A to Z, there was some suspicion and speculation amongst a few participants as to how the order had been arrived at and whether it had been designed to advantage parties or candidates nearer the top of the ballot paper. Given the potential for any random or Z to A ordering to potentially appear as a non-random order (say with a particular party's candidates grouped at the top of the ballot paper) the concerns from participants noted above indicate there will be a need for transparency about how any order is arrived at, with information easily available for voters to dispel any concerns. Reasons for preferring Z to A Of the very small number of participants who expressed a preference for Z to A ordering (7 out of 118), the reasons seemed to be less about the concept of a reverse alphabetical approach and more to do with the coincidental aspects of the Z to A ballot paper they had been given, such as candidates from their preferred party being nearer the top. Reasons for preferring ordering by lot Amongst the few participants who preferred the ballot papers to be ordered by lot (9 out of 118), reasons offered included a belief that a lack of order would encourage people to look more carefully at the full list of candidates, and a belief that it might be fairer for candidates. Understanding of the STV voting system Even when voters were able to find their preferred candidate on the ballot paper without difficulty, our research found that many voters still made errors in completing the ballot which, in an election, would lead to their vote not counting at all or not counting in the way they intended. These included: voters marking all their choices with an X or a tick participants not realising they could vote for more than one candidate from the same party or that they could vote for more than one candidate a small number confusing independent with independence and/or the UK Independence Party Our findings demonstrate that there is an ongoing and pressing need for us, Returning Officers and poll staff, political parties and candidates to continue to educate voters on the STV voting system. Findings from specific groups of voters We included participants with as a second language and people with learning difficulties. We also included people with low literacy levels and people with sight loss. Our findings with these groups were no different to participants overall, in that they did not notice the order of candidates on the ballot paper and it had no impact on their ability to complete the paper. as a second language Participants in our research included ten voters with as a second language. Some said they found the ballot papers easy to complete and some said they found it hard. However, where participants found it hard to complete the ballot paper, it did not relate to the order of candidates' names, but to confusion or uncertainty about how to vote using the Single Transferable Vote system, such as whether to use an 'X' or how many candidates they could vote for. Voters with learning difficulties We tested the order of ballot papers with twelve voters with mild to moderate learning difficulties and, again, we found no evidence that the order of candidates impacted on their ability to complete the ballot paper. However, some participants spoilt their ballot paper by voting using multiple ticks or Xs. As with other participants, people with learning difficulties tended to express a preference for an A to Z ballot when specifically prompted to give an opinion. Two participants with dyslexia thought that an A to Z ballot would be easier for people with dyslexia to complete, although both had completed non-A to Z ballots with no difficulty. Two participants with learning difficulties said that the list of names on the ballot was very long and this had made voting harder for them. Voters with low literacy levels We found no evidence that ballot order had an effect on how easy people with low literacy levels found it to complete the ballot paper. However, we did find that some spoilt their ballot by using multiple ticks or Xs. The term 'independent' caused some issues for a small number of participants with low literacy levels, with some confusing 'independent' with 'independence'. Voters with sight loss Nine voters who participated in our research had significant sight loss. In order to replicate the polling station experience as closely as possible, large print ballot papers were provided for reference, as they would be in the polling station at an election. These are to assist voters to locate their preferred candidate, before voting on a standard sized ballot paper. We did not supply the Tactile Voting Device (TVD), which a small number of blind and partially sighted voters use in the polling station. A number of concerns have been raised about its usability at STV elections and we did not want to conflate these issues with our findings related to ballot ordering. We found no evidence that the order of names had any effect on their ability to complete the ballot paper. Some participants with sight loss spoilt their ballot papers by putting multiple crosses or ticks, but, this did not relate to ballot order. We did note that the participants with sight loss seemed less likely to look at the instructions, which may have been because they were trying to minimise the amount of text they had to read. Participants with sight loss tended to say they had no preference about the order. However, two indicated a preference for A to Z with one saying that she would find A to Z easier because she relied on her memory to find her preferred candidate on the ballot paper – although she had nonetheless found the name of the fictitious candidate (on the Z to A ballot) as required and had not noticed the order at the time. What we learnt from accessibility groups While the findings from our research did not identify any specific evidence to suggest that ballot paper order would have a negative impact on disabled voters' ability to find their preferred candidate, we recognise that this was based on a small number of participants in our research. We also looked at the views submitted by accessibility groups and those representing disabled people in response to the Scottish Government's consultation on electoral reform and invited further comment from these groups. Inclusion Scotland and RNIB provided further information for us to consider. Whether responding directly to us, or to the Scottish Government, the majority of accessibility organisations raised concerns about the potential impact of any change to ballot ordering on disabled people. Many highlighted that it was helpful for them – particularly for those with sight loss – to be able to familiarise themselves with the order of candidates on the ballot paper before going to vote at a polling station. Concerns were raised about whether any alternative system may make this more difficult to do. Respondents suggested an A to Z order might give disabled people more certainty about where the candidate(s) they favoured were located on the ballot paper ahead of them voting. Some respondents also highlighted that any additional uncertainty about how to find their preferred candidate(s) on the ballot paper might lead to an increasing reliance on polling station staff to assist disabled voters in completing their ballot paper. They believed that this would compromise the secrecy of the vote. Respondents also highlighted that parties often produce election material containing an image of the relevant ballot paper, in order to assist voters to locate their candidate(s) on the ballot when they come to vote. They thought it may be confusing for voters if that order does not match the real ballot paper. Respondents suggested that an early decision about the ballot paper order would be helpful in enabling parties to produce campaign material which reflects the actual order of candidates on the ballot paper. It was acknowledged that two versions of the ballot paper would make this more difficult to achieve. RNIB Scotland provided feedback from the RNIB Scotland Committee on the specific options being considered. They found that the majority of Committee members favoured the current system of A to Z ordering as it was familiar to them and they thought any change could disproportionately impact on voters with sight loss. Of the two alternative options for ordering presented, their Committee members preferred the option of ordering by lot as it provided more certainty on the order in which candidates would appear on their ballot paper. Alternating A to Z and Z to A ballot orders also raised questions for them about the provision of accessible materials in polling stations, as there would need to be two versions of the large print ballot paper available for blind and partially sighted voters' reference. While outside of the scope of our research, some respondents with sight loss suggested that it would be easier to find their preferred candidates on the ballot paper if they were grouped by party. What else we learned from our research with voters While not necessarily within the scope of the research we did find some additional issues arising which may inform the design of any future ballot papers. How do voters typically navigate the ballot paper? Our eye-tracking data enabled us to better understand how voters navigated the ballot paper and identify which sections they paid more attention to. Participants who used the paper ballot, and also those who participated in the eye-tracking research, told us that, unless they were looking for the specific name of a candidate, the party emblems were the most useful section of the ballot paper to help them find their preferred candidate rather than candidate or party name. The data from our eye-tracking research told us that participants spent almost as much time looking at party emblems as they did the names and addresses of candidates (7.9 seconds looking at emblems as opposed to 9.6 seconds looking at names and addresses). The instructions and party names were looked at for the least amount of time (4 and 3.9 seconds respectively). The interest in party emblems from voters perhaps explains the fact that there was a perception amongst some participants that it was unfair that independent candidates did not have an emblem. What electoral administrators and their suppliers told us Electoral administrators and their suppliers told us that they could implement and deliver any of the alternative ballot orders being proposed. However, they were concerned that any changes may lead to the following: confusion for voters if two different versions of the ballot paper were used across a ward pressure on the electoral timetable which may delay the printing of ballot papers and the issue of postal votes increased costs which councils would need to meet Electoral administrators would want to see prescribed in legislation the detailed rules for administering any alternative order. What electoral administrators said about alternating A to Z and Z to A ballot papers The electoral administrators we spoke to questioned how ballot papers would be issued in the polling station. Their strong preference was to have one book of ballot papers in which the order alternated rather than two books of ballot papers in which each ballot followed the same order. This approach would be reliant on polling staff alternating between two books as they issued the papers. Returning Officers were concerned that voters may be confused if two versions of the ballot paper were in circulation and may even question the veracity of one version, thereby undermining confidence in the poll. This was seen as a particular concern in the case of postal voters where two people in the same household may receive differently ordered ballot papers. It was noted that particular consideration would need to be given to the instructions in postal ballot packs under this option. Returning Officers also identified potential issues over the procedure for re-issuing ballot papers, either in the polling station or to postal voters (where a voter has unintentionally spoilt their ballot paper or postal ballot statement). The voters would have familiarised themselves with one order and may receive a differently ordered version as a replacement. Returning Officers were clear that the election rules should explicitly require the re-issued ballot to replicate the order of the initial ballot issued. This may complicate the compilation of the corresponding numbers list, which polling staff are required to complete to record which ballot paper has been issued to which voter. This is an important safeguard against potential fraud. Returning Officers also noted that the two differently ordered ballot papers could slow down the process of printing ballot papers (as two sets of data would need to be sent to the printer), and also for proofing ballot papers. Two differently ordered ballots could also impact the speed and accuracy of a manual STV count at a by-election, where count workers would need to familiarise themselves with the two different ballot orders. What electoral administrators said about drawing the order by lot Electoral administrators thought that if a change had to be made to the ballot paper, in general, the drawing of order by lots may present less difficulties for the administration of the poll as all ballots would be in the same order. Electoral administrators did, however, highlight the need for clear rules and consistency on how the drawing of lots was completed, including details of those who would have a right to observe the process and how any objections to the process could be recorded. Their preference was for prescription via the election rules or by direction from the Elections Convener. However, some suggested that a good practice approach could be set out in our guidance. Electoral administrators raised concerns that in local government areas with large numbers of wards the drawing of lots may take up to one day to complete for all wards in that area. This could put pressure on the election timetable by delaying the printing of ballot papers and any subsequent issue of postal ballot packs. This would further limit the time available for postal voters to receive, complete and return their postal ballot packs in time for their vote to be counted. What electoral administrators said about changing the order of ballots In general, Electoral administrators were clear that any change, regardless of what it was, would need to be reflected across all formal election notices including the notice of poll, tendered ballot papers, polling station posters and large print ballot papers. Some Returning Officers believed that the STV ballot paper was already complex enough for voters without risking any additional complexity with a change to ballot order. Electoral administrators also noted that any suggestions of alphabetical bias on ballot papers were a concern for parties rather than voters and might be better managed through more vigorous local campaigning to familiarise voters with the different candidates. Electoral administrators also told us that any changes, particularly if adopting an alternating A to Z and Z to A ballot, would increase printing and potentially counting costs. Councils currently meet all local government election costs – other than the costs of e-counting – from their own budgets. They were keen to establish whether the Scottish Government would be meeting any additional costs that were incurred as the result of any changes. What political parties told us We invited views from all the parties currently represented in the Scottish Parliament. We received comments from party officials from the Scottish Conservative Party, the Scottish Liberal Democrats and the Scottish National Party. There was no clear consensus amongst parties about whether the system should change and, if so, in what way. This may be because not all parties stand multiple candidates in the majority of Scottish council wards and so they do not consider the perceived problem of alphabetical order effect as an issue for them. Only the Scottish National Party expressed a strong desire for change. They believed that the current system should be changed to alternating ballots of A to Z and Z to A. They argued that this would mitigate the effect of alphabetical order effect whilst also giving earlier certainty as to the order of their candidates on the ballot paper. In their view this would enable earlier planning for election material and vote management strategies across wards. They believed that the drawing of order by lot would not mitigate any ballot order effect (by merely replacing the alphabetical advantage with the lot drawing advantage). Background Background to this report The Scottish Government is considering whether to change the order in which candidates' names appear on ballot papers at Scottish council elections. Scottish council elections use the Single Transferable Vote (STV) electoral system where, instead of using a single X, voters number candidates in order of preference. Currently three to four councillors are elected for each council ward and parties may stand multiple candidates. Candidates are listed on the ballot paper in alphabetical order by surname. The Scottish Government is concerned that this has led to an 'alphabetic order effect', whereby voters tend to number their preferences down the ballot paper so that a candidate who appears lower down the ballot paper may be less likely to receive a first preference vote, and therefore to be elected than a candidate from the same party who appears higher up the ballot paper. In order to mitigate the potential for an 'alphabetic order effect', the Scottish Government is considering two different ballot ordering approaches and has asked us to test these with voters, alongside the existing system. These are: ordering candidates A to Z and then Z to A on alternating ballot papers drawing the order of candidates by lot The Scottish Government asked us to assess whether the alternative approaches had any positive or negative effects on a voter's ability to cast their vote for their intended candidates(s). They also wanted to understand whether there may be any particular categories of elector more or less impacted by any changes, including disabled voters. Our aim with this research was to better understand the potential issues and problems which may be encountered in the use of differently ordered ballot papers. Alongside our research with voters, we also talked to electoral administrators and political parties to understand any potential impacts on them. Our research did not assess whether the alternative approaches mitigated the perceived ballot order effect. How we carried out our research We used a qualitative research approach to allow us to explore in detail how easily voters could find their preferred candidate(s) on the ballot papers and whether they had any preferences for a particular ordering of candidates. Voters The findings from voters set out in this report are based on in-depth interviews with 102 voters across seven locations in Scotland, both rural and urban. We commissioned Ipsos MORI to carry out the fieldwork with voters. During these interviews participants were invited to complete ballot papers with different ordering of candidates and then were asked to discuss how easy they found it to navigate the ballot paper and find the candidate(s) they wished to vote for. In addition to the current approach to ordering ballot papers (A to Z), two alternate approaches were tested – ballot papers in reverse alphabetical order (Z to A), and papers with the order of candidates drawn by lot. Examples of these papers and the detailed research methodology are set out in the full report on the Ipsos MORI research . Participants were recruited to represent a range of ages and levels of education. As we wanted to understand whether the impact of any alternative ballot ordering may be different for specific groups of voters, we actively recruited participants who speak as a second language, those with learning difficulties and/or low literacy levels, and also voters with sight loss. Alongside the in-depth interviews, we also carried out eye-tracking interviews with 16 participants, where a camera tracked how the participants navigated the ballot paper in order to find their preferred candidate(s). This provided more detail about how people read the ballot papers (for example, top to bottom) and measured the length of time participants looked at different elements of the ballot paper. In 2017 the Scottish Government consulted on proposals for electoral reform. This consultation invited respondents to give their views on alternative orders for ballot papers at Scottish council elections. A number of organisations representing disabled people submitted their views. We reviewed the responses to that consultation and invited a number of those organisations to discuss their views with us in more detail. Inclusion Scotland and RNIB Scotland provided further information to us to inform this report. Returning Officers and suppliers We held three focus groups with Returning Officer staff across Scotland. Participants included electoral administrators representing 18 out of the 32 Returning Officers in Scotland. We also talked to companies who supply services to Returning Officers, including those that print ballot papers. The sessions involved structured discussions to ascertain any potential administrative impacts from changing the order of candidates on the ballot paper. Political parties We invited political parties who are represented in the Scottish Parliament to provide us with their views on the options proposed by the Scottish Government. The Scottish Conservative Party, Scottish Liberal Democrat Party and the Scottish National Party provided comment.

2021 Scottish Parliament candidate spending | Electoral Commission Search
2021 Scottish Parliament candidate spending You are in the Campaign spending:
Candidates section Home Campaign spending: Candidates First published: 2 February 2022 Last updated: 27 October 2022 About the data At the May 2021 Scottish Parliament election, there were 369 constituency and independent regional candidates who had to submit a spending return, listing details of what they spent during the election campaign. The dataset includes the headline figures for the spending incurred and donations received by candidates at the 2021 Scottish Parliament election. We publish these figures to enhance transparency and provide voters with information on donations to candidates' election campaigns and their spending and to ensure that this information can be seen together in one place. The full individual candidate returns are available for public scrutiny from the relevant Returning Officers for a period of two years after an election. The returns include the total the candidate spent, as well as a breakdown of how much they spent on things like advertising, transport and public meetings. They also include any donations the candidate received above £50 during the short campaign. The data taken from the spending returns reflects what candidates and their agents submitted to Returning Officers in Scotland. We publish this information exactly as it appears on the candidate's return so that there is an accurate record of what was reported. Spending limits vary between constituencies. The vast majority of Returning Officers have sent us the returns submitted to them for inclusion in this dataset. Where information is missing, this may be because the Returning Officer didn't send them on to us, or because the candidate didn't submit their return to the Returning Officer. Under the law spending on promoting regional party list candidates counts as party spending, and was therefore reportable by the party in its election spending return.
Information about candidate spending data for previous devolved elections is available online in the National Archive. 2021 Scottish Parliament candidate spending Download the data 2021 Scottish Parliament candidate spending

Report: How the 2016 Scottish Parliament election was run | Electoral Commission Search Report: How the 2016 Scottish Parliament election was run

You are in the Scottish Parliamentary elections section Home Scottish Parliamentary elections On this page About the elections Registration and turnout The voter experience 16 and 17 year olds The administration of the poll Candidates and parties Recommendations: Voter experience Recommendations: Administration of the poll Recommendations: Candidates, parties and campaigners Download our full report First published: 28 June 2019 Last updated: 7 August 2019 About the elections This report is about the administration of the Scottish Parliament election held on 5 May 2016.

Overall, our assessment is that the 2016 election was well run. People were satisfied with the process of both registering to vote and with the process of voting, whether they cast their vote in person at a polling station, post or by proxy. Registration and turnout A total of 4,098,462 people were registered to vote in the Scottish Parliament election on 5 May 2016. Turnout was 55.8% of the registered electorate in the constituency vote and 55.9% in the regional vote. This is the highest turnout recorded since the first Scottish Parliament election in 1999 where 58.8% of the eligible electorate voted in the constituency ballot and 58.7% in the regional ballot. Turnout across constituencies varied with the highest turnout in Eastwood (68.5%) and the lowest in Glasgow Provan (43.2%). Across Scotland 726,555 postal votes were issued amounting to 17.7% of the total electorate. This compares to 14.1% in 2011, 11.2% in 2007 and 3.6% in 2003. Nearly 77% of postal votes issued were returned by electors (76.6% in the constituency vote and 76.7% in the regional vote) and postal votes accounted for 23.7% of all votes included in the count for the constituency contests and 23.8% of all votes included in the count for the regional contests.

The voter experience Our public opinion research found that most voters believed the election to be well-run and were satisfied with the experience of registering and voting. The help and support available inside polling places was highly regarded by voters. The vast majority (93%) of respondents to our public opinion research said that they had found it easy to access information on how to cast their vote and nearly all (97%) said they had found it easy to complete the ballot papers. This confidence is evidenced by the low rate of rejected ballot papers with just 0.41% of constituency ballots and 0.17% of regional ballots rejected at the count. There were very few allegations of electoral fraud at this election and the majority of respondents (86%) believe that voting in general is safe from fraud. However, nearly a third thought that some fraud may have taken place at this election with nearly one half of these citing concerns about identity fraud and the lack of a requirement for ID in polling stations. The Commission has previously recommended the introduction of a requirement for voters to provide ID in polling stations and we will continue to make this case to governments.

16 and 17 year olds This was the first Scottish Parliament election at which 16 and 17 year olds were entitled to vote. Approximately 80,000 of them registered to vote in the election accounting for two per cent of the electorate. Awareness of the ability to register to vote online was highest amongst this age group with 90% aware of the online registration facility compared with only 66% of all survey respondents. However, 16 and 17 year olds were less likely to say that they knew about the election at 69% compared with 85% of all respondents. The majority (89%) said that it was very or fairly easy to access information on how to cast their vote and almost all of them (99%) said that they found it easy to complete the ballot paper. The administration of the poll Overall, the Scottish Parliament election was administered efficiently and professionally with all Returning Officers meeting the Commission's performance standards. The Electoral Management Board for Scotland (EMB) played a key role in coordinating the delivery of the poll and promoting best practice for improving the voter experience at the election. The EMB continues to rely on consensus and good will to promote consistency of practice at Scottish Parliament elections as the EMB and its Convener have yet to be established on a statutory basis in relation to this election. The provisions of the Scotland Act 2012 and the forthcoming commencement of sections of the Scotland Act 2016 will devolve responsibility for the administration of the Scottish Parliament elections to the Scottish Parliament and this will provide an opportunity for the Parliament to underpin the EMB's role at Scottish Parliament elections on a statutory footing as it already has done in respect to local government elections.

Electoral Registration Officers continue to raise concerns about duplicate registration applications from electors which cause an unnecessary activity for electors and create an administrative burden on electoral registration staff in the busy period before an election. This burden could be eased by the provision of an online facility for individuals to check their registration status before applying to register. Candidates and parties A total of 313 candidates contested constituency seats at the election, an average of 4.3 candidates per constituency. This is the smallest number of candidates to date at any Scottish Parliament election. Ten parties stood candidates in constituency contests, down from twelve in 2011. The number of independent candidates standing in constituency contests declined from 14 in 2011 to eight in 2016. A total of 15 parties and three independent candidates contested the regional elections. This is down from the 21 parties and 15 independent candidates who stood in the regional elections in 2011. Our survey of candidates suggested that, on the whole, the nomination process went smoothly: 95% of candidates said that the nomination process was well-run and 93% found the process to be straightforward. However, access to information about candidate spending and donations could be improved by making candidates' election returns available for viewing online. Concerns continue to be raised by some voters about the descriptions used on ballot papers. While at Scottish Parliament elections the party name must always appear on the ballot paper before any description the party chooses to use, this is not the case at other elections including local government elections in Scotland. We continue to be concerned that the legal provisions for the registration of party descriptions present risks that voters are misled when a description appears without any reference to the party identity and we will encourage governments to work with the Commission to reform the provisions on party descriptions. Recommendations:

Voter experience Recommendation 1: Postal voting The requirement to check postal voting identifiers is a critical safeguard for protecting the postal voting system from theft and misuse. However, it is also vital that voters find it as easy as possible to complete the postal voting statement in order to verify their identity. The Commission will continue to work with the EMB to identify opportunities to increase awareness of the postal voting rules and to promote the use of waivers where appropriate. The Scottish Government should continue to keep the postal voting statement under review to ensure it is as user friendly as possible for voters and that the design and instructions minimise the opportunity for voters to make inadvertent errors which lead to their postal votes being rejected.

Recommendation 2: Voter information The Commission will review our public awareness activities aimed at all voters and specifically 16 and 17 year olds to ensure robust voter information plans are in place ahead of the 2017 council elections so that voters understand how to complete their ballot papers so they can be counted in the way they intended.

Recommendation 3: Polling station ID The Commission reiterates our recommendation that there should be a requirement for electors across Great Britain to present an acceptable form of identification prior to being issued with a ballot paper and voting at the polling station. Similar requirements are already in place in Northern Ireland and several other comparable democracies. This measure would almost entirely remove the opportunity for personation at polling stations. Recommendations:

Administration of the poll Recommendation 4: Checking registration status Providing a way for electors to check their registration status at the beginning of the online registration application process would reduce the action required by voters to keep their register entry up to date, and would also reduce the impact on EROs of processing duplicate applications. The UK Government should develop an online service to allow people to check whether they are already correctly registered to vote before they complete a new application to register. Given the registration digital service is reserved we would urge UK Government to discuss these matters with Scottish Government where it affects devolved registration issues Any such service would need to carefully manage and protect voters' personal information. Recommendation 5: Law Commissions' review of electoral law The Law Commissions of Scotland, England and Wales and Northern Ireland are currently reviewing electoral law with the aim of consolidating, simplifying and modernising the many existing sources of electoral law. The Law Commissions require the approval of the Scottish and UK Governments before they can move onto the next and final stage of the project, which will consist of drafting new electoral legislation. We continue to urge the Scottish and UK Governments to support the work of the Law Commissions to enable the project to move on to the next stage. This will allow the Law Commissions to start drafting new law in time for it to be implemented before the Scottish Parliament election in 2021.

Recommendation 6: Ensuring legislation is clear in good time before elections We continue to recommend that Governments with legislative competence over elections within the UK should manage the development and approval of legislation so that it is clear (either by Royal Assent to primary legislation, or by laying secondary legislation for approval by Parliament) at least six months before it is required to be implemented or complied with by campaigners or electoral administrators. All governments should normally be able to plan to ensure that legislation for elections is clear at least six months before it is required to be implemented or complied with. If a government has not been able to ensure that legislation is clear by this point, it should table a formal statement in the relevant legislature explaining why it has not, and set out its assessment of the likely impact of the late confirmation of legislation for voters, campaigners and electoral administrators. Recommendation

7: Electoral Management Board for Scotland We continue to urge both the Scottish and UK Government to establish the EMB in statute for all elections. With the provisions of the Scotland Act 2012 and the forthcoming commencement of the sections of the Scotland Act 2016 which relate to Scottish Parliament elections the Scottish Government will become responsible for electoral administrative matters relating to Scottish Parliament elections. We recommend that the Scottish Government use this opportunity to establish the EMB's statutory remit for the Scottish Parliament elections and provide the Convener with a power of direction at these elections. The long-term funding and legal status of the EMB must also be secured and clarified so that it can undertake long-term strategic planning to develop its role and work programme. As the role of the EMB develops we would wish to discuss with Scottish Government any implications this may have for the Commission's current roles and responsibilities in relation to Scottish Parliament and local government elections.

Recommendation 8: Timeliness of Commission guidance resources The Commission recognises that some of its guidance materials were delivered late to electoral administrators and will take this into account when planning activities for future electoral events. Recommendation 9: EMB Convener - Power to prescribe forms We believe that giving a power of direction to the Convener of the EMB to prescribe the forms would allow the Forms Working group to develop forms that are consistently used across Scotland and allow them to react quickly to the need of developing further forms. The EMB will need to be adequately resourced in the future to ensure that its Forms Working Group is resourced to carry out this task ahead of future elections.

Recommendation 10: Co-ordination of postal vote dispatch We welcome the EMBs approach to co-ordinating the dispatch of postal voting packs as it enables voters who will be away from their address at the time of the election to make informed choices about the most appropriate method of voting for their circumstances. We recommend that the EMB continues to co-ordinate postal vote dispatch dates in this way. Recommendation

11: Additional dispatches of postal votes We recommend that the EMB consults with ROs and EROs and parties with regard to the EMB recommending or directing an additional or second date of dispatch for postal votes in the period between the first dispatch and the postal voting deadline. As part of this consultation the EMB will need to have regard for the additional resource burden on ROs as well as the potential benefits for voters. The EMB should also consult with ROs and their suppliers to ensure that any future directions on the dispatch of postal votes can be planned into the negotiations for new contracts with suppliers. Recommendation 12: Deadlines for replacement of postal votes We recommend that the Scottish Government considers the impact of having two different deadlines for replacing postal votes ahead of future elections. The Government needs to consider the interest of postal voters and the issues raised by ROs. Recommendation 13: Awareness of implications of different voting methods The Commission will continue to work with EROs, ROs and other partners to promote awareness amongst voters of the practical implications of different voting methods (such as postal voting or appointing a proxy) particularly if they are making an application during the last month before polling day. Recommendations: Candidates, parties and campaigners Recommendation 14: Home address details of candidates and agents We recommend that Scottish Government reviews the rules relating to access to candidates and agents home address details, seeking the views of parties, candidates and electoral administrators, including the Commission, with the aim of maintaining transparency, while seeking to increase the safety of candidates. Recommendation 15:

Withdrawal of a party list candidate We would recommend that when it comes to review the rules for the 2021 election, the Scottish Government reviews the rules relating to withdrawal of a party list candidate from the ballot paper and seeks the views of other stakeholders in the electoral community. Recommendation 16: Party descriptions on the ballot paper We continue to recommend that where a candidate represents a political party on a ballot paper, it should be clear to voters which party the candidate represents. While legislation for Scottish Parliament elections already ensures that it is clear which party a candidate represents, this is not the case for other elections in Scotland. The legal provisions for the registration and use of party descriptions on ballot papers present risks of confusion for voters and restrict the participation of political parties. The Scottish Government and other Governments of the UK should work with the Electoral Commission to reform the provisions on party descriptions. Recommendation 17: Candidate and agent briefings We would recommend that ROs consult with candidates and agents prior to setting dates for briefings. We will also ensure that this recommendation is highlighted in our guidance for Returning Officers. Recommendations 18: Costs relating to an individual's disability Scottish Government should review the rules relating to personal expenses and disability exemptions with a view to amending the definitions of political party and candidate spending, so that reasonable expenses that can be attributed to an individual's disability are exempt, (as was recently set out in the revised PPERA rules for non-party campaigners). Recommendation 19: Reporting requirements for spending and donations The discrepancy in the reporting requirement between spending and donations during the long campaign at the Scottish Parliament election should be carefully considered by the Scottish Government ahead of the next Scottish Parliament election due to be held in May 2021. Recommendation 20: Candidate spending returns To improve transparency and accessibility of candidate spending returns, we have previously recommended that Returning Officers should be required to publish spending returns online as well as through the existing methods of public inspection. We support recommendation 12-5 of the Law Commissions' review 12 of Electoral Law which proposes a method for implementing this change through legislation. Recommendation 21: Legibility of imprints The purpose of an imprint is to show who is responsible for the production of campaign material. If the imprint is difficult for the voter to read it could lead to a loss of this transparency for the voter, and we recommend that all imprints must be legible. Recommendation 22: Regulating candidate spending and donations We continue to recommend extending our investigative and sanctioning powers at major elections for offences relating to candidate spending and donations, including at Scottish Parliament elections. It will be important for the Scottish Parliament and Scottish Government to work with Governments and Parliaments across the UK on introducing the Commission's new powers for different sets of elections. Recommendation 23: Reporting campaign spending on social media We will give further consideration to how campaigners should report spend on social media at future elections. As spend in this area grows, there is the potential for less transparency if expenditure on social media is not easily identifiable within the spending returns because social media is not a specific reporting category. This will need to be considered as part of reviewing all of the expenditure reporting categories to ensure that they remain proportionate and relevant to future trends in campaigning. In case any of these changes would need to be implemented through legislation, we recommend that the Scottish Government and Parliament should consider the timing needed for implementing changes before the UK Parliamentary General Election in 2020 and the Scottish Parliamentary election in 2021. Recommendation 24: Appointment of Counting Agents To ensure consistency in approach across Scotland in determining how many counting agents are permitted at counts for future Scottish Parliament elections, Scottish Government should consult relevant stakeholders ahead of the next election to find an appropriate solution. This would ensure certainty on how counting agents are appointed across Scotland, and the approach could be implemented either through legislative change or through direction from the Convener of the EMB. Recommendation 25: Guidance on count declarations For future elections we will work with the EMB to develop a guidance note for ROs to streamline the declarations. This would include general guidance on the template script for the declaration, backdrops for declarations and other pertinent issues ROs may wish to consider before the declarations are made. Recommendation 26: Collation of election results data We recommend that the EMB continues to publish collated Scottish results data in order to provide transparency for voters. In taking this forward the EMB should consult with stakeholders, including parties and academics, in order to identify the most useful content and format for the publication of results data. Recommendation 27: Reporting on the costs of the election We recommend that Scottish Government, when in a position to be able to do so, publicly report on the administration of the fees and charges order for this election in order to ensure transparency of process and make any recommendations necessary for improvements in the way the process is administered. Recommendation 28: Resourcing the election We recommend that the issue of local government staff resource for elections be addressed by the Scottish Government, the EMB and individual ROs, set in the context of the future role of the EMB and with consideration of how that can assist through any economies of scale that are available. We would be happy to assist in any such undertaking. Download our full report 2016 Scottish Parliament election report Related content Results and turnout at the 2016 Scottish Parliament election View the results and turnout at the 2016 Scottish Parliament election Report on the Scottish Parliament election on 6 May 2021 Read our report about how the 2021 Scottish Parliament election was run Report: How the 2011 Scottish Parliament election was run Read our report about how the 2011 Scottish Parliament election was run Results and turnout at the 2011 Scottish Parliament election View the results and turnout at the 2011 Scottish Parliament election

Our role as a regulator | Electoral Commission Search Our role as a regulator You are in the section Home On this page Registering political parties Registering non-party campaigners Helping parties and campaigners comply with the rules Publishing political finance data Regulating imprints on campaign material What happens when the law is broken First published: 1 August 2022 Last updated: 3 October 2022 Summary As a regulator, we: maintain registers of political parties in Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and register non-party campaigners provide guidance for anyone who might want to stand or campaign in an election publish political finance data regulate the imprint rules for parties and campaigners take action if we have reason to suspect the political finance law has been broken Registering political parties We maintain the registers of political parties in Great Britain and Northern Ireland . If a party wants to stand candidates at an election using a party name, description or emblem, they need to register with us . about how political parties are registered An application to register includes:
a party name formal documents, including the party's constitution, and its financial structure, showing the party can comply with election finance laws details of important roles, such as leader, treasurer and nominating officer An application can also include party descriptions and emblems (these are optional). We check each application to make sure only permitted names, descriptions and emblems are approved for use on ballot papers. They all must pass certain legal checks , including not risking voters being confused or misled when they look at a ballot paper. Once registered, a party has legal responsibilities under electoral law, including only accepting money from specified permissible sources, and submitting regular financial reports to us. Did you know? Did you know? Anyone can comment on a party registration application . Parties can have up to 12 registered descriptions. Candidates can choose to use any of these on the ballot paper. At some elections, candidates can use a party description, instead of a party name, on the ballot paper. It must be clear which party they're standing for. In Scottish Parliament elections, parties can add 'Scottish' to their name without needing to register an additional description. In Senedd and local council elections in Wales, parties can add 'Welsh' or 'Cymreig' to their name without needing to register an additional description. Registering nonparty campaigners Non-party campaigners are individuals or organisations that campaign in the run-up to elections, but are not standing as political parties or candidates. They often campaign on certain issues, or in support or opposition to particular parties or candidates. When they spend over a certain amount on campaigning, they need to register with us, and report on their finances . We publish a list of registered non-party campaigners . Helping parties and campaigners comply with the rules We provide guidance for anyone who might want to stand or campaign in an election, from political parties and campaigners, to candidates and their agents.
This guidance helps them to understand what electoral rules they need to follow, and what they need to report to us. It should be possible for election campaigning to be innovative and engaging. To help parties comply with the law, and be innovative, we offer an advice service. We're available to explain to parties and campaigners what impact their campaign activity may have on their financial reports. There is a strong culture of compliance with political finance law in the UK. We work with parties and campaigners before elections to ensure high levels of compliance, so that we don't have to take enforcement action afterwards. Publishing political finance data We publish financial data every quarter about donations and loans for parties and campaigners in the UK. These data sets show how parties and campaigners are being funded throughout each year. We publish statements of accounts annually. After elections, we publish spending returns from parties and campaigners . This shows what they have spent on campaigning to influence the way that people vote. Parties and campaigners must send their donations and loans reports, accounts, and spending returns to us by deadlines set out in law. We may take action if we don't receive them on time, especially when that delays transparency of the data. View all financial data in our database Regulating imprints on campaign material We regulate the 'imprint' rules for parties and campaigners (but not candidates), which requires that campaign material includes information identifying the person or organisation who paid for it. In England, Wales and Northern Ireland, all printed campaign material, such as leaflets, must contain this information In Scotland, the rule also applies to digital campaign material, like social media adverts. What imprints must include What imprints must include Printed campaign material must include the name and address of: the printer the promoter who it's being promoted for (for example, the candidate or party) In Scotland, digital campaign material must include: the promoter who it's being promoted for (for example, the candidate or party) Learn more about imprints on campaign material What happens when the law is broken We will take action if we have reason to suspect the political finance law has been broken. The laws for political parties and other campaigners can also be enforced by the police, and some offences can only be investigated by the police. If we identify one of those offences we can notify the police so that they can decide whether to investigate. about our enforcement work

Board minutes: 4 December 2019 | Electoral Commission Search

Board minutes: 4 December 2019 You are in the Electoral Commission Board section Home How we make decisions Electoral Commission Board On this page Apologies and introductions Declarations of interest Minutes of the Commission Board meeting of 25 September 2019, note from the informal session on 25 September 2019, the Commissioner Day on 30 October 2019, and the Audit Committee on 30 October 2019 Update on electoral events and related matters Supplementary Estimate Corporate and business planning Forward plan of Board business 2019/20 Commission Board action tracker Chair and Chief Executive's meetings and meetings of note in Scotland, Wales, and Northern Ireland First published: 12 June 2020 Last updated: 19 June 2020 Meeting overview Date: Wednesday 4 December 2019 Time: 10am to 12:15pm Location: Boothroyd Room, 3 Bunhill Row, London Date of next scheduled meeting: Wednesday 22 January Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting John Holmes, Chair Alasdair Morgan Alastair Ross (Video conference) Anna Carragher Elan Closs Stephens (Video conference) Joan Walley Rob Vincent Sarah Chambers Stephen Gilbert Sue Bruce Bob Posner, Chief Executive Craig Westwood, Director, Communications, Policy and Research Kieran Rix, Director, Finance and Corporate Services Louise Edwards, Director, Regulation Ailsa Irvine, Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance Amanda Kelly, General Counsel David Bailey, Head of Strategic Planning and Performance David Meek, Senior Adviser, Governance Petra Crees, Planning, Performance, and Governance Manager Tom Hawthorn, Head of Policy Katy Knock, Policy Manager (for item 4 only) Kate Engles, Policy Manager (for item 4, 5 and 6 only) Priyani Peruma, Lawyer (for item 4 only) Ben Rayner, Regulations Assistant (for item 4 only) Tracey Blackman, Financial Controller (for item 5 and 6 only) Apologies and introductions No apologies. The Chair introduced the staff observing the Board. Declarations of interest No new declarations of interest. Minutes of the Commission Board meeting of 25 September 2019 (EC 67/19), note from the informal session on 25 September 2019 (EC 68/19), the Commissioner Day on 30 October 2019 (EC 69/19), and the Audit Committee on 30 October 2019 (EC 70/19) Resolved: That the minutes of the Commission Board meeting on 25 September 2019 be agreed. The records of the informal session on 25 September 2019 and of the Commissioner Day on 30 October 2019 were noted. Update on electoral events and related matters (oral update) The Chief Executive gave an update on the work of the Commission in supporting the delivery of the UK Parliamentary General Election (UKPGE) on 12 December 2019. The Chief Executive noted that there had been a strong reliance on us from registration and returning officers, as well as their teams, throughout the election period. The Board was reminded of the information it had received in the regular updates from directors during the election campaign. The Chief Executive advised the Board of the work we had done with law enforcement agencies around the country to seek to support candidate safety, as well as measures that had been introduced to keep staff safe and secure. The Chief Executive informed the Board of the Commission's participation in the National Defending Democracy Election Cell. This cell included government and other public officials tasked with ensuring a well-run election process. Our involvement helped ensure that the Cell had the correct information on how elections work, to ensure that they got their interventions right, including appropriate responses for a number of potential scenarios that could affect the election. The Board discussed other upcoming electoral events, including the likelihood of an assembly election in Northern Ireland early in 2020, and forthcoming likely changes to electoral law in Wales and Scotland. The Chief Executive highlighted that some of our policy recommendations had been taken on board in new legislation. The Chief Executive noted the progress the Commission had been able to make on our existing work while also administering recent electoral events, including the European Parliamentary Election. The Director of Electoral Administration and Guidance advised the Board of the large number of electoral queries we had responded to so far – significantly more than in the past. Some errors had been reported to us by local authorities but so far they were minor and localised. We had used our electoral coordination and advisory board forum to discuss the high volume of registration applications received by local authorities, and the number of duplicate applications they had received, and the impacts of this. We were unable to confirm the number of duplicates received at this stage, although anecdotal evidence suggested it would be close to figures seen at the UKPGE in 2017. The Board heard that the guidance for the 2020 local elections would be published before the end of the year. The Electoral Administration and Guidance directorate were also preparing for possible assembly elections in Northern Ireland. There would be further work on canvass reform after the legislation was passed in Westminster before the election, but the devolved administrations still had to pass their necessary legislative changes. The Board discussed the planned observations of polling stations on election day, and the desire of Commissioners to contribute to this. The Director of Electoral Administration and Guidance noted that we had scaled back observations significantly in the last 10 years, as we focused on providing support from the office to ensure we were able to respond to the needs of election teams. Commissioners were also advised not to observe at polling stations on election day this time round, due to heightened security warnings it would be irresponsible to ignore. We would stay in contact with local authorities on polling day and had a team on stand-by to observe if the need arose. There were over 1,000 accredited observers from a range of organisations, including international observers, which was significantly higher than in recent General Elections. The Board discussed the security advice given to candidates and political parties. The Director of Regulation noted that this advice came from the Police. Where the Parliament Security Team was provided to former Members of Parliament (MPs), this was not an election expense. But other candidates for office were required to report any expenditure on private security contractors as an election expense, even if the Police had advised them to do this. The Board discussed the merits of introducing an exemption on this spending, similar to that in place for candidates with disabilities. This would require legislative change. The Board discussed the fact that a candidate who decided to hold a campaign event in their constituency that required security might also incur significant election expenses. The Director of Communications, Policy and Research outlined the media engagement work the Commission had undertaken. The focus had now shifted from registration promotion to regulatory work two weeks out from polling day. The week leading up to polling would be used to promote information relating to polling day. The Board heard about the efforts of social media companies to spot misinformation and disinformation. The Policy and Research teams were meanwhile beginning to focus on preparing for post-poll reporting. The research team had set up a number of surveys that would be distributed to various stakeholders, with results contributing to post-poll reporting. The team had undertaken an analysis of the manifestos of the major parties on areas that affected electoral law, and would circulate this to Commissioners. The Director of Regulation advised the Board of the work the Commission had done with newer parties and campaigners to ensure they complied with their regulatory requirements. The issues dealt with were broadly comparable to the 2017 General Election. We had received a number of comments from the public about the content of campaign material, and had taken time to ensure that the public were aware of what we were responsible for and what was outside our remit. There had been an increase in the number of non-party campaigners, with an impact on the administrative work of the team. The Director noted that the deadline for the larger parties to declare their spending on the European Parliamentary Election fell within the timeframe of this campaign, and scrutiny work had begun on these returns. The Director of Finance and Corporate Services advised the Board of our routine contact with the National Cyber Security Centre (NCSC), which had been reassuring. The NCSC had not identified any areas where we should be doing additional work. The Director also confirmed the continued contingency planning for any effect of a Brexit date before elections in 2020. Supplementary Estimate (EC 71/19) The Director of Finance and Corporate Services outlined the need for a supplementary estimate. In addition to the spending required to administer the General Election, the Director highlighted areas of pressure on the budget during the current financial year, including the late confirmation of participation in the European Parliamentary Election and the number of recall petitions. Resolved: The principle of the estimate and delegated responsibility to the Chief Executive to make any appropriate changes before the Supplementary Estimate was submitted be agreed. Corporate and business planning (EC 72/19) The Chair explained the statutory requirement to prepare business and corporate plans, noting that this work needed to continue before the outcome of the election and the policy agenda of the new Government was known. The Board would obviously need to take a further close look in January, when the context would be clearer. The Chief Executive noted that the Board had a clear strategic agenda for the Commission. We also needed to ensure that we were ready to respond to the policy programme set by a new government. The Board heard of pending changes to reporting requirements, in the context of changes to accountability to the devolved administrations. The Chief Executive advised the Board of the progress made against the commitments made in the most recent business plan, which had provided for some growth. The Director of Finance and Corporate Services explained that the Commission was required by law to produce a new five-year corporate plan for consideration by the Speaker's Committee by March following a general election. In this instance, there was insufficient time to prepare a new comprehensive five-year plan in time for submission in early 2020. The Director proposed a two-stage process, where an outline corporate plan would be submitted in March 2020, and the Speaker's Committee would be recommended to require a full new corporate plan from us later in the year. This would allow us the necessary time to prepare a comprehensive plan. The Board endorsed this approach. The Board was interested in understanding the different areas to which we could allocate our resources, including the expected impact of any changes. The Director of Communications, Policy and Research highlighted the areas of new activity covered in the draft corporate plan. The Board agreed that efforts to improve digital literacy were worthwhile, but wanted to see more about how this could best be done in practice. The Chief Executive confirmed that the Commission would aim to work in partnership with other organisations, with each focussing on areas of their particular expertise. Initial contacts suggested support from such organisations for this approach. Electoral commissions in other countries had taken similar action in this area. The Board recognised the scope of our public awareness role and remit and how this had changed over time. The Board requested greater clarity on the link between the four themes previously agreed for possible new areas of work, and the proposed budget requests. Each theme was discussed in turn: promoting local authority resilience, promoting compliance, promoting voter confidence, and responding to governments' initiatives. The approaches suggested for each were broadly endorsed, but more details were requested about both the inputs being proposed, and the expected outputs. The Director of Communications, Policy and Research provided further context for the proposed Open Data Initiative. The General Counsel provided an update on the proposed changes to the Legal team. The Director of Finance and Corporate Services updated the Board on proposed improvements resulting from the Ways of Working project, including updating the video-conferencing and hot-desking facilities, and new roles to support the digitisation work that the Commission was undertaking. Action: The Executive Team consider the scrutiny points raised by the Board and reflect them in a refined version of the proposed business and outline corporate plans, for approval at the Board meeting on 22 January 2020. Resolved: That the paper be agreed. Forward plan of Board business 2019/20 (EC 73/19) The Chair of the Audit Committee proposed scheduling a risk workshop for the whole Board. This would assist in the creation of the new corporate plan. Action: A risk workshop for the Board be scheduled as part of the creation of the new corporate plan. Resolved: That the paper be noted. Commission Board action tracker (EC 74/19) Resolved: That the paper be noted Chair and Chief Executive's meetings and meetings of note in Scotland, Wales, and Northern Ireland (EC 75/19) Resolved: That the paper be noted. The chair invited the General Counsel to provide an update on an ongoing case.

Application: Individual electoral observer | Electoral Commission Search Application: Individual electoral observer You are in the Apply to be an individual accredited observer section Home Observing elections and referendums
Apply to be an individual accredited observer First published: 25 July 2019 Last updated: 2 November 2021 Individual electoral observer application form Apply to be an individual electoral observer (new) Are you over the age of 16? Yes No You can't apply to be an electoral observer if you're under 16. Your details Your name First name Last name Your email address Your contact number Home address: House number or name Home address: Street name Home address: Town or city Home address: Postcode Home Address: Country If you live in the UK, please specify whether you live in England, Wales, Scotland or Northern Ireland Accreditation details Is this a new accreditation application? Yes, this is a new accreditation No, this is a renewal Your accreditation will be valid for three years. Do you want to be accredited for a shorter period? Yes No Select the date you want your accreditation to be valid until. How do you want to receive your observer badge? By post to your home address By post to a different address Alternative address: House number or name Alternative address: Street name Alternative address: Town or city Alternative address: Postcode Alternative Address: Country Declaration Confirm that you have: Provided information that is true and correct Read and agree to the Code of Practice Click here to read the Code of Practice Not been convicted of an electoral offence in the last five years Read, understood and agree to our Privacy Policy Click here to read our Privacy Policy Leave this field blank

1. Our findings | Electoral Commission Search

1. Our findings You are in the May 2019 voter identification pilot schemes section Home Our research Voter identification pilots May 2019 voter identification pilot schemes First published: 11 July 2019 Last updated: 11 July 2019 Contents Overview Our findings Impact on voters: experience Impact on voters: confidence Impact on security Impact of administration of the polls Background to our evaluation Our findings The ten pilots in May 2019 have provided more evidence about what it would mean for people to show ID at polling stations in Great Britain, building on the five pilots held in 2018. More local areas took part this year. There was a wider range of rural areas and urban areas, and they included a better mixture of people: different areas have different populations, with varying socioeconomic profiles. There were also fewer differences between the pilots using each model, which meant that the evidence from this pilot scheme is more robust. However, as was the case with the five 2018 pilots, the ten areas piloting in 2019 are not fully representative, in socio-demographic terms, of many areas of Great Britain. Looking at the evidence from these pilots and our previous research, we can say that: A large majority of people already have access to an acceptable form of officially issued photo ID from the lists used in these pilots. These people would not have a problem showing it in a polling station if they had to do so. Allowing only existing forms of officially issued photo ID would not be accessible for everyone. Some groups of people would find it harder than others to show photo ID in a polling station, although this could be mitigated if locally issued photo voter cards were easily available for all. Locally issued ID that includes a photo – like the electoral identity card currently provided in Northern Ireland – would be more secure than locally issued ID without a photo. Asking people to show two pieces of non-photo ID would not necessarily be more secure than showing their poll card. It would be more secure if one piece of ID had to be an official document like a birth certificate, but that would make it less accessible. Asking people to show their poll card would be less secure than a locally issued photo ID. The poll card could be made more secure, for example through changes to the form of the poll card with the addition of printed security features, and by reviewing the process for checking them in polling stations. These would still be accessible for everyone, but could be more complicated for Returning Officers to produce. Using scanners or other technology to check the validity of poll cards in polling stations would be much more complicated and costly for Returning Officers and polling station staff to deliver. These checks would not necessarily add more security than visual checks by polling station staff. The experience of taking part in the pilot scheme appears to have had a positive impact on people's perception of the security of the polling station process, and on their confidence in it. This varied within each pilot model, across individual local authority areas. Returning Officers and their staff ran the elections successfully in the pilot scheme areas, and there were no significant administrative issues in any pilot area. Polling station staff were satisfied with how polling day went and were confident that they could manage the process of people showing voter identification at future elections. Introducing a voter ID requirement The data and findings presented in our evaluation build on the evidence base provided by the 2018 pilot scheme. This evidence further clarifies the way in which a voter ID scheme could be delivered in Great Britain. However, we are not able to draw definitive conclusions, from these pilots, about how an ID requirement would work in practice, particularly at a national poll with higher levels of turnout or in areas with different socio-demographic profiles not fully represented in the pilot scheme. If the policy is to be developed further, Government and Parliament should consider carefully the available evidence about the impact of different approaches on the accessibility and security of polling station voting in Great Britain. This should include evidence from the experience of polling station voters in Northern Ireland, who have been required to show ID since 1985 (including requiring photo ID since 2003), as well as the evidence from the local pilot schemes in both 2018 and 2019. We have identified three key areas for further consideration:

Any ID requirement should deliver clear improvements to current security levels A photo ID requirement would provide the greatest level of security, but each of the models that have been piloted in 2018 and 2019 would provide some level of improved security compared with the current rules. Government and Parliament should consider what level of security is proportionate to the risk of personation fraud in polling stations. Any ID requirement should ensure accessibility for all voters While a large majority of people already have access to an acceptable form of photo ID, allowing only existing forms of officially issued photo ID would not be accessible for everyone. To make sure voting at polling stations remains accessible, there would need to be other options for people who do not already have an acceptable form of photo ID. This could involve providing free of charge locally issued photo ID, as currently provided for electors in Northern Ireland. Alternatively, it could involve allowing voters to use their poll card – on the current model or a different model – as the primary or secondary route to proving identity, depending on the level of security required. Any ID requirement should realistically be deliverable, taking into account the resources required to administer it The pilot scheme has shown that some ID options would be more complicated for Returning Officers and polling station staff to deliver. The relative security benefits of these options would need to be considered alongside the impact on the administration of election procedures, particularly polling station processes.

Report navigation links

- Next 2. Impact on voters: experience
- Related content
- Register to vote
- All you need to register to vote
- is 5 minutes and your National Insurance number.
- Our Commissioners
- Donations and loans
- Find out about donations and loans to a political party, individual or other organisation
- Report: How the 2017 UK general election was run
- Read our report about how the 2017 general election was run

Wales Electoral Practitioners Working Group | Electoral Commission Search Wales Electoral Practitioners Working Group You are in the Boards and Groups in Wales section Home How we make decisions Boards and Groups in Wales Minutes: Wales Electoral Practitioners Working Group 28 March 2018 Minutes: Wales Electoral Practitioners Working Group 17 October 2018 Minutes: Wales Electoral Practitioners Working Group 20 June 2018 Terms of reference: Wales Electoral Practitioners Working Group First published: 28 November 2019 Last updated: 28 August 2020 Wales Electoral Practitioners Working Group The Wales Electoral Practitioners Working Group (WEPWG) brings together officials from the Electoral Commission, Wales and Regional Representatives of the Association of s in Wales. The group discusses delivery of elections and electoral registration in Wales and shares information and experiences.
Read the terms of reference of the WEPWG . Minutes of the Wales Electoral Practitioners Working Group 2018 17 October 2018 20 June 2018 28 March 2018

You are in the section Home In this section How investigations work Report of investigation into the Conservative and Unionist Party - recording and reporting of payments Conservative and Unionist Party campaign spending returns in 2014 and 2015 Liberal Democrats 2015 UK Parliamentary General Election campaign spending return Leave.EU Group Limited Vote Leave Ltd, Mr Darren Grimes, BeLeave and Veterans for Britain UK Independence Party (UKIP) Payments made to Better for the Country and Leave.EU Momentum Detailed and complex investigations When an investigation is more detailed or complex, or where we believe it involves significant issues of public interest, we will publish case summaries. These cases are available above. Closed investigations We publish information about recently closed investigations every month. These tables include the possible offence(s) we investigated, what we found, and what action we took. If you are looking for information on investigations not included here, please contact us April 2022 - Present Last updated 19 September 2023.

Subject Investigated for Decision Summary of reasons(s) Breakthrough Party (registered political party) Failure to report two donations by due date Offences 2 x £200 penalties Paid on initial notice on 4 September 2023 Sanctions were appropriate in the case of both late reported donations, in line with our enforcement policy.

Conservative and Unionist Party (registered party) Failure to report four donations by due date 3 x £200 penalties Due for payment by 20 September 2023 Sanctions were appropriate in the case of three of the four late reported donations, in line with our enforcement policy. Liberal Democrats (registered political party) Failure to report 21 donations by due date Failure to report two new loans and four changes to existing loans by due date Offences £3,300.00 total penalties 4 x £200 Fixed Monetary Penalties 9 x Variable Monetary Penalties (4 x £250 and 5 x £300) Paid on 15 August 2023 Sanctions were appropriate in the case of some late reported donations and loans, in line with our enforcement policy. Others were not of such significant value as to merit action. Social Democratic and Labour Party (registered political party in Northern Ireland) Failure to report a donation by due date Offence £1,000 Variable Monetary Penalty Due for payment by 6 October 2023 A sanction was considered appropriate and proportionate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy.

Precious Life (non party campaigner at the 2022 Northern Ireland Assembly election) Failure to include valid imprint on campaign material. Offence No sanction The campaigner failed to include a full imprint on some material, though did include some of the required information. The campaigner engaged with the Commission and a sanction was not proportionate in this case. All for Unity (political party) Failure to deliver two quarterly donations and loans reports by due date No sanction The party delivered all of the required submissions during the investigation, and as the party is no longer registered, with no indication of intent to re-register, the Commission did not consider that any sanction was proportionate.

Democrats (registered political party) Failure to provide audit report with statement of accounts for 2019 No sanction The party delivered accounts but not the required audit report. The Commission considered the mitigating circumstances, including in relation to the COVID pandemic, meant that a sanction was not proportionate in this case.

Irish Republican Socialist Party (registered political party in Northern Ireland) Failure to deliver quarterly donations and loans reports by due dates No determination of offence The party delivered five quarterly reports late during 2022 and 2023. All were nil reports, and the lateness varied between 4 and 87 days. The Commission made no determination of offence primarily on the basis of the personal circumstances of the registered treasurer during the relevant period. The fact that all of the reports were nil reports was also a relevant consideration. Conservative and Unionist Party (registered party) Failure to report two donations by due date No sanction The two donations at issue were to local branches of the party. They were not of significant value in the context of political finance, and although reported late, were reported in the next quarterly report due. We also recognised that the party had made changes to ensure the errors in these cases did not recur. We concluded that it was not proportionate or in the public interest impose any sanction. Green Party Northern Ireland (registered party) Inaccurate reporting of three donations, late delivery of three donation reports No sanction Two of the three late delivered quarterly report were delivered marginally late. The three donations at issue were not of significant value in the context of political finance and the inaccuracies were minor. We also took into account the personal circumstances of the treasurer at the time, that the party took steps taken to rectify transparency, and engaged effectively with us. We also noted the Party's good compliance record both prior to these matters and since they occurred. We did not consider it proportionate to impose any sanction, and we will continue to provide ongoing support. Irish Republican Socialist Party (registered political party) Failure to deliver spending return for 2022 Northern Ireland Assembly election by due date No sanction The return disclosed no controlled spending, and the registered treasurer co-operated fully with the Commission. We also took into account mitigating personal circumstances. We concluded that it was not proportionate or in the public interest impose any sanction. Labour Party (registered political party) Failure to report six donations by due date 3 x £200 penalties Paid on 13 April 2023 Sanctions were appropriate in the case of some late reported donations, in line with our enforcement policy. Others were not of such significant value as to merit action. Democrats (registered political party) Late delivery of annual statement of accounts Offence Penalty of £1,500 Paid on 2 February 2023 The party's 2021 annual statement of accounts was delivered late. A sanction was appropriate in this case in line with our enforcement policy. Portsmouth Independent Party (registered political party) Late delivery of annual statement of accounts Late notification of change of registered officer Offences No sanction The party's 2021 statement of accounts was delivered late, and notification of a change in registered treasurer was also delivered outside the required timescale. Taking into account all of the facts, the Commission did not consider it proportionate to impose sanctions. Scotland's Independence Referendum Party (registered political party) Failure to deliver annual statement of accounts Offence No sanction The party's 2021 statement of accounts remains outstanding but there was no evidence to indicate any significant transactions and the party was removed from the register in November 2022 having not sought to remain registered. The Commission was satisfied that the loss to transparency was minor and it was not proportionate or in the public interest to take further action. Conservative and Unionist Party (GB) (registered political party) Late reporting of donations Offences 3 x £200 penalties Paid on 2 November 2022 Sanctions were appropriate in the case of some late reported donations, in line with our enforcement policy. Others were not of such significant value as to merit action. Labour Party (registered political party) Late reporting of donations Offences 2 x £200 penalties Paid on 7 November 2022 Sanctions were appropriate in the case of some late reported donations, in line with our enforcement policy. Others were not of such significant value as to merit action. British Independents (registered political party) Failure to deliver annual statement of accounts for 2021 Offence No sanction The accounts remain outstanding but accounts disclosing nil or minimal income and expenditure had been correctly delivered in previous years and the party was removed from the register in November 2022 having not sought to remain registered. The Commission was satisfied that the loss to transparency was minor and it was not proportionate or in the public interest to take further action. Redcar & Cleveland Independent (registered political party) Failure to deliver quarterly donation report and quarterly transactions report by due date No offence Closed without further action The party's Quarter 2 2022 donations and transactions reports were delivered late, but evidence of a reasonable excuse was provided. The offence in question can only be found where there is no reasonable excuse and therefore no offence was committed. Unionist Clubs Scotland (non-party campaigner) Failure to include valid imprint on campaign material No offence Closed without further action The Commission was satisfied that election material did not include the required imprint, but was also satisfied that a potential reasonable excuse existed. The offence in question can only be found where there is no reasonable excuse and therefore no offence was committed. British National Party (GB) (registered party) Late reporting of donations Late delivery of annual accounts Offences Penalties of £2,000 and £750 in relation to two late reported donations. Penalty of £3,000 in relation to late delivery of accounts The party's 2020 annual statement of accounts were delivered late. Two donations were also reported late. Sanctions were appropriate in each case in line with our enforcement policy. Burning Pink (registered party) Late delivery of annual statement of accounts No offence The party's 2021 statement of accounts was delivered late, but evidence of a reasonable excuse was provided. The offence in question can only be found where there is no reasonable excuse and therefore no offence was committed. Liberal Democrats (GB) (registered political party) Late reporting of donations Paying claims for payment received late; paying claims for payment late Offences 5 x £200 penalties; 1 x £500 penalty Sanctions were appropriate in the case of some late reported donations, in line with our enforcement policy. Others were not of such significant value as to merit action. The offences relating to claims received or paid late did not involve significant sums and we did not consider it proportionate to impose sanctions. A Better Way to Govern (registered political party) Late delivery of annual statement of accounts Offence No sanction The accounts were delivered late but considering all of the facts, the Commission did not consider it proportionate to impose a sanction. Political Unity for Progress (registered political party) Late delivery of annual statement of accounts Offence No sanction The accounts were delivered late but considering all of the facts, the Commission did not consider it proportionate to impose a sanction. Holland On Sea & Eastcliff Matters (registered political party) Late delivery of annual statement of accounts Offence No sanction The accounts were delivered late but considering all of the facts, the Commission did not consider it proportionate to impose a sanction. Democratic Network (registered political party) Incomplete quarterly donations reports Offences No sanctions The reports were delivered on time but without the required declarations, which were delivered after the deadline. The Commission did not consider it proportionate to impose a sanction. Reform (GB) (registered political party) Failure to deliver a complete campaign expenditure return for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election (missing invoices); late payment of claims Offences No sanctions The number and value of missing invoices and late payments were minor, and it was not proportionate or in the public interest to propose sanctions. People Before Profit Alliance (NI) (registered party) Failure to return impermissible donations within 30 days of receipt. Offences No sanctions The impermissible donations were returned, albeit outside the statutory timescale, and the donor was at all relevant times eligible to appear on a register.

Conservative and Unionist Party (GB) (registered political party) Failure to return an impermissible donation within 30 days of receipt; late reporting of donations and regulated transactions (loans) Offences 4 x variable monetary penalties totalling £3,080 Paid on 3 August 2022 No sanction was imposed for late reported donations, which were not of significant value, or the failure to return an impermissible donation within 30 days. Sanctions were appropriate in the case of some late reported loans, in line with our enforcement policy. Basildon Community Residents Party (registered political party) Failure to deliver quarterly donation report; failure to deliver quarterly transactions report Offences No sanctions The overdue reports were delivered during the course of enforcement action, and the party is now exempt from donations and loans reporting. The Commission did not consider it proportionate to impose any sanctions. Workers Party of Great Britain (registered political party) Failure to deliver complete campaign expenditure return; failure to provide signed declaration accompanying campaign expenditure return. Offences No sanctions The return did not specify the relevant poll to which it related, and the relevant declaration was not included. The spending reported was however minimal, and the Commission did not consider it proportionate or in the public interest to impose sanctions. Co-operative Party (registered political party) Late reporting of a donation Offence No sanction The donation was reported late but mitigating factors meant no sanction was imposed. All for Unity (registered political party) Failure to deliver complete campaign expenditure return for 2021 Scottish Parliamentary election; failure to delivery quarterly donations and transactions reports. Offences. No sanctions. Closed without further action. Mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. The party has since voluntarily deregistered. British Resistance (registered political party) Failure to deliver annual statement of accounts; late delivery of notification to change party's registered treasurer. Offence and contravention of a prescribed requirement. No sanctions. Closed without further action. Mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. Conservative and Unionist Party (Peterborough accounting unit) Failure to return an impermissible donation within 30 days of receipt. No offence. The accounting unit accepted, and the party reported, a £5,000 donation from Cooper Quinn Holdings Limited. Information subsequently emerged calling into question whether the donor were permissible. The Commission's investigation determined that the donor was permissible and that no offence was committed. Scottish Green Party (registered political party) Late delivery of annual statement of accounts. Offence. £2,300 variable monetary penalty. Due by 13 July 2022. The party's 2020 annual statement of accounts were delivered late. A sanction was appropriate in this case in line with our enforcement policy. Kingston Independent Residents Group (registered political party) Late delivery of annual statement of accounts. Offence. £200 fixed monetary penalty. Paid on initial notice on 28 April 2022. The party's 2020 annual statement of accounts were delivered late. A sanction was appropriate in this case in line with our enforcement policy. Let London Live (registered political party) Late delivery of quarterly donations and transactions reports. Offences. No sanctions. Closed without further action. The party's Quarter 4 2021 donations and transactions reports were delivered late, but mitigating factors meant that no sanctions were imposed. Scotland's Independence Referendum Party (registered political party) Failure to delivery quarterly donations report. No determination of offence. Closed without further action. The party delivered two reports of transactions (loans) for Quarter 4 of 2021, both nil reports, but no donations report. The investigation established that one of the reports was in fact intended to be for donations and no reportable donations had been accepted. It was not therefore proportionate to investigate further and further guidance was provided to the treasurer. HOPE not hate Ltd (registered non-party campaigner) Failure to deliver a pre-poll donation report for the 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election; failure to deliver a complete campaign expenditure return for the 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election (missing invoices). Offences. £1,000 variable monetary penalty Payment due by 9 June 2022. All outstanding invoices were subsequently provided. Mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed for the failure to deliver a complete campaign expenditure return. Labour Party (registered political party) Failure to deliver a complete campaign expenditure return for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election (missing invoices). Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. All but one of the outstanding invoices were subsequently provided. Mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. Labour Party (registered political party) Late reporting of donations. Offences. No sanction. Closed without further action. Sixteen donations were reported late however mitigating factors meant that no sanctions were imposed in each case. Social Democratic Party (registered political party) Late delivery of campaign expenditure return for 2021 Scottish Parliamentary election. Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. The return was delivered late but mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. Liberal Democrats (Edinburgh West accounting unit) Failure to return a donation from an impermissible donor within 30 days. Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. The accounting unit accepted a £1,000 donation from an impermissible donor. The donation was returned to the donor outside of the 30 day period required by law. Mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. Open Britain Limited (registered non-party campaigner) Late delivery of 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election campaign expenditure return; failure to include all required invoices. No offence in relation to late delivery of spending return; offence in relation to the missing invoices. No sanctions. Closed without further action. The spending return was delivered late but mitigating factors related to the COVID 19 pandemic meant that no offence was found. No sanction was imposed for the omission of a small number of invoices of relatively low value. The organisation's registration as a non-party campaigner lapsed on 27 January 2021. Labour Party (Islington South and Finsbury accounting unit) Late delivery of annual statement of accounts. Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. The accounts were delivered late but mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. Conservative and Unionist Party (GB) (registered political party) Failure to deliver accurate quarterly donations report. Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. The name of one donor, Walsall Unionist Holdings Ltd, was misreported in one of the party's quarterly donations reports. Mitigating circumstances meant that no sanction was imposed. Old Windsor Residents Association (registered political party) Late delivery of quarterly donations and transactions reports. Offences. No sanctions. Closed without further action. Four of the party's quarterly donations and transactions reports were delivered late, but mitigating factors meant that no sanctions were imposed. West Dunbartonshire Community Party (registered political party) Late delivery of annual statement of accounts. No offence (reasonable excuse). Closed without further action. The party's 2020 annual statement of accounts were delivered late. However, evidence of a reasonable excuse was provided. The offence in question can only be found where there is no reasonable excuse and therefore no offence was committed. Labour Party (Bath accounting unit) Late delivery of annual statement of accounts. No determination of offence. Closed without further action. The accounting unit's 2020 annual statement of accounts were delivered late. The Commission made no determination of offence due to the personal circumstances of the registered accounting unit treasurer which meant that it was not considered proportionate to investigate. April 2019 - March 2021 April 2021 - March 2022 Subject Investigated for Decision Summary of reasons(s) Liberal Democrats (registered political party) Failure to deliver accurate quarterly donations report. Offence. £1,000 Variable Monetary Penalty. Paid on 30 March 2022. A sanction was appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. Unite the Union (registered non-party campaigner) Late delivery of audit report to accompany campaign spending return for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election; late payment of invoices. Offences. No sanctions. Closed without further action. The late delivery of the audit report was attributable to the COVID pandemic. Two invoices were paid outside 60 days without leave from a court. Mitigating factors meant that no sanctions were imposed.

Independent Sovereign Democratic Britain (registered political party) Late delivery of annual statement of accounts. Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. The party's 2020 annual statement of accounts were delivered late. However, mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. Mark Menzies MP (regulated donee) Failure to return an impermissible donation within 30 days of receipt. No offence. Closed without further action. Mr Menzies accepted a £2,500 donation from Inshmore Properties Ltd in November 2019. Information subsequently emerged calling into question whether the donor was permissible. However, our investigation determined that the donor would have been permissible if the donation had been controlled, but Mr Menzies did not accept the donation in his capacity as a regulated donee and the donation was therefore not controlled under the PPERA regime. No offence was committed. Liberal Democrats (registered political party) Failure to deliver a complete campaign spending return for 2019 European Parliament election; late payment of invoices Offences. No sanctions. Errors relating to the spending return were minor, and missing invoices were subsequently provided. Two invoices were paid outside 60 days without leave from a court. Mitigating factors meant that no sanctions were imposed. Reform UK (registered political party) Failure to deliver a complete campaign spending return for 2019 European Parliament election; late payment of invoices Offences. No sanctions. Errors relating to the spending return were minor, and missing invoices were subsequently provided. Seven invoices were paid outside 60 days without leave from a court. Mitigating factors meant that no sanctions were imposed. Liberal Democrats (registered political party) Failure to return an impermissible donations within 30 days of receipt. No offences. Closed without further action. The party accepted, and reported, a £3,500 donation from Melrose Human Resources Ltd and a £16,000 donation from Inshmore Properties Ltd. Information subsequently emerged calling into question whether the donors were permissible. The Commission's investigation determined that both donors were permissible and that no offences were committed. Conservative and Unionist Party (GB) (registered political party) Failure to return an impermissible donation within 30 days of receipt. No offence. Closed without further action. The party accepted, and reported, a donation of £9,754.98 from 'Conservatives In Ltd' in 2016. Information subsequently emerged calling into question whether the donor was permissible. The Commission's investigation determined that the donor was permissible and that no offence was committed. Conservative and Unionist Party (NI) (registered political party) Late delivery of annual statement of accounts. No offence. Closed without further action. The party's annual statement of accounts for 2020 were delivered late. However, evidence of a reasonable excuse was provided. The offence in question can only be found where there is no reasonable excuse and therefore no offence was committed. Plaid Cymru - The Party of Wales (registered political party) Failing to deliver all required invoices with spending return; late payment of invoices. Offence in relation to failure to deliver all required invoices. No offence in relation to late payment of invoices. The Commission was satisfied that the required invoices were not delivered with the return by the required date, but that this was due to the wrong set of invoices being delivered in error. The required invoices were delivered quickly once the Commission notified the party of the error. Mitigating factors meant that no sanctions were imposed. The investigation also established that no invoices had been paid late. UK Independence Party (UKIP) (GB + NI) (registered political party) Failing to deliver complete and valid notifications of changes to the registered leaders of the party in Great Britain and Northern Ireland; failing to deliver a notification of a change to the party's registered address. Contraventions of a prescribed requirement. No sanctions. Closed without further action. The Commission was satisfied that no contravention was committed in respect of the party's change of registered address. Two contraventions were committed in respect of the change to the registered party leaders. However, mitigating factors meant that no sanctions were imposed. Democrats (registered political party) Late delivery of quarterly transaction report. Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. The report was delivered late but the Commission was satisfied that there were mitigating factors and no sanction was imposed. Conservative and Unionist Party (GB) (registered political party) Failing to deliver accurate quarterly donation report; failing to keep accurate accounting records. Offence and contravention of a prescribed requirement. Penalties totalling £17,800 (£16,250 and £1,550 Variable Monetary Penalties). Paid on 29 December 2021. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. Renew (registered political party) Late delivery of 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election campaign expenditure return. Offence. £2,800 Variable Monetary Penalty. Paid on 8 December 2021. A sanction was appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. Liberal Democrats (registered political party) Failure to deliver accurate quarterly donations reports. Offences. No sanction. Closed without further action. Mitigating factors meant that no sanctions were imposed on the printer. Abolish the Welsh Assembly Party (registered political party and promoter); Solopress Ltd (printer) Failure to include valid imprint on campaign material. No offence in respect of the party as the promoter of the material. Offence in respect of the printer. No sanction. Closed without further action. Mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed on the printer. Centrum Campaign Limited (registered non-party campaigner) Failure to deliver weekly donations reports for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. No offence (reasonable excuse). Closed without further action. The organisation provided evidence of a reasonable excuse. The offence in question can only be found where there is no reasonable excuse and therefore no offence was committed. The organisation's registration lapsed on 16 September 2020. Shaun Bailey (regulated donee) Failure to return an impermissible donation within 30 days of receipt. No offence. Closed without further action. Mr Bailey accepted a £10,000 donation in July 2020. However, the Commission's investigation determined that Mr Bailey did not accept the donation in his capacity as a regulated donee under PPERA and therefore no offence was committed. Scottish National Party (registered political party) Late reporting of donations. No offences. Closed without further action. The party appeared to have reported two donations late. However, the Commission's investigation determined that the two payments were not donations and were therefore not reportable. Space Navies (GB) (registered political party) Late delivery of weekly donation and transaction reports for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election; failure to deliver signed declaration accompanying 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election campaign expenditure return. No determinations of offence. Closed without further action. The weekly reports were delivered late. The Commission made no determination of offence due to the personal circumstances of the registered party treasurer which meant that it was not considered proportionate to investigate. The party was statutorily deregistered on 20 October 2021. Best for Britain Limited (registered non-party campaigner) Failure to deliver a complete campaign spending return for 2019 European Parliament election; Late delivery of weekly donations report for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. Offences. Penalties totalling £3,000 (Variable Monetary Penalties of £2,000 and £1,000). Paid on 6 October 2021. A sanction was appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. UK European Union Party (registered political party) Failure to deliver a complete campaign spending return for 2019 European Parliament election; failure to deliver accompanying signed declaration; failure to deliver quarterly transaction report on time. Offences. £200 Fixed Monetary Penalty in respect of the incomplete campaign spending return. Paid on 18 October 2021. A sanction was appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. Taking the Initiative (registered political party) Failure to deliver annual statement of accounts on time; Failure to notify the Commission of a change to the party's registered treasurer on time. Offence and contravention of a prescribed requirement. No sanctions. Closed without further action. The accounts were delivered late but mitigating factors meant that no sanctions were imposed. Represent Us Ltd (registered non-party campaigner) Payment of campaign expenses claims received after 30 days without leave; payment of campaign expenses claims outside 60 days. Offences. No sanctions. Closed without further action. Three claims were paid without leave from a court and two were paid outside 60 days. Mitigating factors meant that no sanctions were imposed. The organisation's registration as a non-party campaigner lapsed on 2 June 2021. The League Against Cruel Sports (registered non-party campaigner) Payment of campaign expenses claims outside 60 days. Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. One claim was paid outside 60 days. Mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. Labour Together (members association) Failure to deliver donation reports within 30 days of accepting donations, inaccurate reporting of donation, failing to appoint a responsible person within 30 days of accepting a donation. Offences. Penalties totalling £14,250 (Variable Monetary Penalties of £14,000 and £250). Paid on 2 September 2021. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. Labour Party (registered political party) Failure to deliver accurate quarterly donation reports. Offences. Penalties totalling £1,820 (Variable Monetary Penalties of £400, £320, £360, £300 and £440). Paid on 1 September 2021. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. Gwlad (registered political party) Late delivery of weekly donations and transactions reports for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election; late delivery of campaign expenditure return for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. Offences. £200 Fixed Monetary Penalty in respect of late campaign expenditure return. Paid on initial notice on 6 September 2021. A sanction was appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. Green Party (registered political party) Failure to deliver a return containing a statement of all payments made in respect of campaign expenses for 2019 European Parliament Election; failure to deliver a complete return (missing invoices). Offences. No sanctions. Closed without further action. All payments have now been reported and outstanding invoices provided. Mitigating factors meant that no sanctions were imposed. The Justice and Anti-Corruption Party (registered political party) Late delivery of campaign spending return for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. The return was delivered late but mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. Real Change Lab Limited (registered non-party campaigner) Failure to deliver a return containing a statement of all relevant donations accepted for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. All relevant donations have now been reported. Mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. The organisation's registration as a non-party campaigner lapsed on 4 June 2021. Advance Together (registered political party) Failure to deliver quarterly donation and transaction reports on time. Offences. No sanctions. Closed without further action. The reports were delivered late but mitigating factors meant that no sanctions were imposed. The party has now been voluntarily deregistered. Alliance - Alliance Party of Northern Ireland (registered political party) Failure to deliver an accurate quarterly donation report. Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. Mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. Net Tax Payers Consent Party (registered political party) Late delivery of quarterly donation and transaction reports. Offences. No sanction. Closed without further action. The reports were delivered late but mitigating factors meant that no sanctions were imposed. The Cynon Valley Party (registered political party) Failure to deliver complete campaign spending return for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election (missing invoices); failure to deliver a signed declaration with 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election spending return. Offences. No sanction. Closed without further action. Mitigating factors meant that no sanctions were imposed. The party has now been statutorily deregistered. Keep Our NHS Public (publisher); Solopress Limited (printer) Failure to include valid imprint on campaign material. Offences in case of publisher and printer. £500 Variable Monetary Penalty imposed on publisher, no sanction imposed on printer. Paid on 28 June 2021. A sanction was appropriate in relation to the publisher, in line with our enforcement policy. Mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed on the printer or promoter. Conservative and Unionist Party (GB) (registered political party) Failure to deliver accurate weekly pre-poll donations report for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election; failure to deliver accurate quarterly donations reports; Failure to return donations from impermissible donors within 30 days. Offences. No sanctions. Voluntary forfeiture. Closed without further action. Mitigating factors meant that no sanctions were imposed. The party accepted donations totalling £12,200 from five impermissible donors. The Commission accepted the voluntary forfeiture of the donations for the full amount. Global Justice Now Ltd (registered non-party campaigner) Failure to deliver all relevant invoices accompanying 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election spending return; paying an invoice later than 30 days after end of regulated period. No offences. Closed without further action. The Commission was not satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that offences had been committed. Capitalist Worker (registered non-party campaigner) Failure to deliver compliant campaign spending return for 2019 UK Parliamentary general election; failure to include signed declaration with 2019 UK Parliamentary general election return. Offences. No sanction. Closed without further action. A compliant return and declaration have now been delivered. Mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. The organisation's registration has also lapsed. The Best for Luton Party (registered political party) Failure to deliver weekly donations and transactions reports for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election on time. Offences. Penalties totalling £400 (2 x £200 Fixed Monetary Penalty). Paid on Initial Notice on 8 March 2021. A sanction was appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. The party has now been voluntarily deregistered. British National Party (registered political party) Late delivery of campaign spending return for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. Offence. £300 Variable Monetary Penalty. Paid on 21 April 2021. A sanction was appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. April 2020 - March 2021 Subject Investigated for Decision Summary of reasons(s) The Migrant Party (registered political party) Late delivery of quarterly donations and transactions reports; Failure to notify Commission of a change to the party's registered address within 28 days. Offences and contravention of a prescribed requirement. Penalties totalling £400 (2 x £200 Fixed Monetary Penalty). Payment by instalments agreed. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. Mebyon Kernow - The Party for Cornwall (registered political party) Late delivery of campaign spending return for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. Offence. £200 Fixed Monetary Penalty. Paid on 26 February 2021. A sanction was appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. Scottish Green Party (registered political party) Failure to deliver complete campaign spending return for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election (missing invoice). Offence. £200 Fixed Monetary Penalty. Paid on 26 March 2021. The invoice was delivered late. A sanction was appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy.

Conservative and Unionist Party (GB) (registered political party) Failure to deliver complete campaign spending return for 2019 European Parliamentary Election (missing invoices); Late delivery of auditor report accompanying campaign spending return for 2019 European Parliamentary Election. Offences. No sanction. Closed without further action. The auditor report and invoices were delivered late, but mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. Labour Party (registered political party) Failure to return an impermissible donation within 30 days. Offence. No sanction. Voluntary forfeiture. Closed without further action. The party accepted a £6,000 donation from an impermissible donor. The Commission accepted the voluntary forfeiture of the donation for the full amount. Mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed.

Unite the Union (registered non-party campaigner) Late delivery of 2019 European Parliamentary election spending return; Failure to include a compliant declaration with 2019 European Parliamentary election spending return. Offences. Penalties totalling £750 (£350 and £400 variable monetary penalties). Paid on 5 February 2021. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. Cllr Matt Kerr (regulated donee) Failure to report donations within 30 days. Offences. £200 (fixed monetary penalty). Paid on 25 January 2021. A sanction was appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. Campaign Central Ltd (registered non-party campaigner) Failure to deliver complete campaign spending return for 2019 European Parliamentary Election (missing invoices). No offence. Closed without further action. The Commission was not satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that an offence had been committed. Fair Tax Campaign Ltd (registered non-party campaigner) Failure to deliver complete campaign spending return for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election (missing invoice). No offence. Closed without further action. The Commission was satisfied that the missing invoice was not required to be delivered and that no offence had been committed. Tactical.vote (registered non-party campaigner) Failure to deliver complete campaign spending return for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election (missing statement of relevant donations). No offence. Closed without further action. The Commission was satisfied that the return was not required to be delivered and that no offence had been committed. Independent Network (GB) (registered political party) Failure to notify Commission of a change to the party's registered campaigns officer and registered nominating officer within 30 days. Contraventions of a prescribed requirement. Penalties totalling £750 (£450 and £300 variable monetary penalties). Paid on 8 March 2021. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. Shropshire Defend Our NHS (unregistered non-party campaigner) and Bluetree Design and Print Limited (printer) Failure to include valid imprint on campaign material. Offence in respect of Shropshire Defend Our NHS - No sanction. No offence in respect of Bluetree Design and Print Limited – closed without further action. Mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed on Shropshire Defend Our NHS. Bluetree Design and Print Limited provided evidence of a reasonable excuse and the Commission therefore found no offence had occurred. Julian Dunkerton (unregistered non-party campaigner) and Paperbox (printer) Failure to include valid imprint on campaign material. Offences in case of promoter and printer. No sanction. Closed without further action. Mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed on either the promoter or printer of the material. Keep Our St Heliers Hospital (unregistered non-party campaigner) and Leaflet Frog Ltd (printer) Failure to include valid imprint on campaign material. Offences in case of publisher and printer. No sanction. Closed without further action. Mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed on either the promoter or printer of the material. 3rd Party Ltd (registered non-party campaigner) Late delivery of statement of relevant donations for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. The statement of relevant donations was delivered late, but mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. Labour Party (registered political party) Failure to deliver accurate quarterly donations report. No offence (reasonable excuse). Closed without further action. The return delivered was inaccurate however the party provided evidence of a reasonable excuse and the Commission therefore found that no offence had been committed. Greenpeace Limited (registered non-party campaigner) Late delivery of campaign spending return for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election; Failure to deliver complete campaign spending return for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election (missing invoices). No offence (reasonable excuse). Closed without further action. The return was delivered late. Two invoices were also not included with the return and a further invoice was incomplete when delivered. However the organisation provided evidence of a reasonable excuse and the Commission therefore found that no offence had been committed. Labour Party (registered political party) Failure to deliver accurate quarterly transactions reports. Offences. Penalties totalling £2,750 (£1,000, £250, £750, £500, £250 variable monetary penalties). Paid on 16 December 2020. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. Momentum Campaign Services (Ltd) (authorised non-party campaigner) Failure to return impermissible donations within 30 days. Offences. No sanctions. Closed without further action. The organisation accepted donations totalling £3,500 from two impermissible donors. The donations were returned to the donors outside the 30 days required by law. Mitigating factors meant that no sanctions were imposed. Conservative and Unionist Party (Walsall South accounting unit) Failure to return impermissible donations within 30 days. Offences. No sanctions. Voluntary forfeiture. Closed without further action. The accounting unit accepted donations totalling £2,500 from an impermissible donor. The Commission accepted the voluntary forfeiture of the donations for the full amount. Mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. The accounting unit has now been deregistered. Scientists for EU (authorised non-party campaigner) Failure to deliver accurate campaign spending return for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. No offence. Closed without further action. The Commission was not satisfied that an offence had been committed beyond reasonable doubt. Working 4 UK Ltd (authorised non-party campaigner) Failure to deliver accurate campaign spending return for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. No offence. Closed without further action. One invoice appeared to be missing from the return but the Commission was not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that an offence had been committed. Burnley and Padiham Independent Party (registered political party) Failure to deliver as required weekly donations and transactions reports at 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. Offences. Penalties totalling £400 (2 x £200 fixed monetary penalties) Paid on 1 December 2020. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. Independent Network (GB) (registered political party) Late delivery of campaign expenditure return for 2019 European Parliament Election; Failure to deliver a compliant declaration as to notional expenses; Late delivery of campaign spending return for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. Offences. No sanctions. Closed without further action. The returns were delivered late and a compliant declaration was later delivered. Mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. The Citizens Movement Party UK (registered political party) Late delivery of campaign spending return for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. The return was delivered late, but mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. Sinn Féin (registered political party) Failure to deliver accurate campaign spending return for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. The return did not include one of the required invoices although this was later provided. Mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. I'm with Corbyn North Wales (unregistered non-party campaigner), Donna Jones (promoter) Failure to include valid imprint on campaign material at 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. No offence. Closed without further action. The Commission was satisfied that a complete imprint was included on the campaign material and that no offence had therefore been committed. Rhyl People's Assembly (unregistered non-party campaigner) Failure to include valid imprint on campaign material at 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. No determination of offence. Closed without further action. The Commission was satisfied that the campaign material was not produced by, or at the direction of, the non-party campaigner. Parent's Choice (registered non-party campaigner) Failure to deliver accurate campaign spending return for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. No determination of offence. Closed without further action. The return did not include all of the required invoices, but there may have been a reasonable excuse for the omissions which would have required further investigation to establish. Taking into account all of the circumstances however, the Commission did not consider it proportionate to investigate further as to whether a reasonable excuse existed. Conservative and Unionist Party (GB) (registered political party) Failure to return a donation from an impermissible donor within 30 days of receiving it. Offence. No sanction. Voluntary forfeiture. Closed without further action. The party accepted a £3,000 donation from an impermissible donor. The Commission accepted the voluntary forfeiture of the full value of the donation. Mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. Keep Penrith Special (non-party campaigners, promoter and publisher) Penrith Posters Ltd (printer) Failure to include valid imprint on campaign material. Offence in respect of Keep Penrith Special - No sanction. No determination of offence in respect of Penrith Posters Ltd – closed without further action. Mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed on Keep Penrith Special. No determination of offence was made in respect of Penrith Posters Ltd. Communities United Party (registered political party) Failure to deliver campaign spending return for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. No offence. Closed without further action. The Commission was not satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the party failed to deliver the campaign spending return.

Independent Group for Change (registered political party) Failure to deliver accurate campaign spending return for 2019 European Parliamentary Elections. No offence. Closed without further action. The Commission was satisfied that the party did deliver an accurate campaign spending return and that no offence was committed. The party has since been voluntarily deregistered.

Lincolnshire Independents, Lincolnshire First (registered political party) Late delivery of campaign spending return for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. No determination of offence. Closed without further action. The return was delivered late, however the Commission made no determination of offence in respect of the failure.

Scottish Green Party (registered political party) Failure to deliver accurate quarterly donations reports. Offences. Penalties totalling £5,349.75 (7 x variable monetary penalties). Paid on 24 September 2020. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy.

Conservative and Unionist Party (GB) (registered political party) Failure to deliver accurate quarterly donations reports. Offences. Penalties totalling £4,400 (£3,600, £550 and £250 variable monetary penalties). Paid on 22 September 2020. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy.

Ian Paisley MP (registered donee) Failure to return donations from impermissible donors within 30 days of receiving them. Offences. Penalties totalling £1,300 (£650 and £650 variable monetary penalty). Paid on 8 October 2020. Mr Paisley accepted two donations totalling £2,600 from two impermissible donors. Mr Paisley agreed to return the donations to each donor and has done so. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy.

The Brexit Party (registered political party) Failure to deliver an accurate quarterly donations report. Offence. £200 fixed monetary penalty. Paid on Initial Notice on 24 August 2020. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy.

British Resistance (registered political party) Late delivery of annual accounts (2018). Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. The accounts were delivered late, but mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed.

Matt Hancock MP (registered donee) Failure to return a donation from an impermissible donor within 30 days of receiving it. Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. Mr Hanock accepted a £1,000 donation from an impermissible donor. He returned the donation to the donor outside the 30 day period required by law. Mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed.

Veterans and People's Party (GB) (registered political party) Late delivery of weekly donations and transactions reports for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. The reports were delivered late, but mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed.

Liberal Democrats (London accounting unit) Failure to return a donation from an impermissible donor within 30 days of receiving it. No offence. Closed without further action. The Commission is satisfied that the accounting unit did not accept a donation from an impermissible donor.

Prosper UK (registered political party) Failure to deliver quarterly donations and transactions reports. No determination of offence. Closed without further action. No determination of offence was made in respect of the offence in this case. The party has now been voluntarily deregistered.

Green Party (GB) (registered political party) Failure to deliver accurate quarterly donations report; Late delivery of quarterly transactions report. Offences. Penalties totalling £1,950 (£800 and £1,150 variable monetary penalties). Paid on 23 July 2020. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy.

Manchester Labour

Group (unincorporated association) Failure to provide notification of gifts to a political party exceeding £25,000 and notification of gifts received by due date. Offences. £1,800 (variable monetary penalty). Paid on 21 August 2020. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. Compass (registered political party) Failure to notify Commission of a change to the party's registered leader. Contravention of a prescribed requirement. £700 (variable monetary penalty). Due for payment by 21 August 2020. Unpaid after 56 days. Penalty increased to £1,050. Paid 29 October 2020. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. John Stevenson MP (regulated donee) Failure to return a donation from an impermissible donor within 30 days. No offence. Closed without further action. The Commission was satisfied that Mr Stevenson did not accept a donation from an impermissible donor. Conservative and Unionist Party (GB) (registered political party) Failure to return a donation from an impermissible donor within 30 days. No offence. Closed without further action. The Commission was satisfied that the party did not accept a donation from an impermissible donor. Renew (registered political party) Late delivery of quarterly donations and transactions reports; Late delivery of weekly donations and transactions reports for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election; Failure to deliver annual accounts (2018); Failure to notify Commission of a change to the party's registered treasurer by due date. Offences and contraventions of a prescribed requirement. Penalties totalling £5,580.00 (10 x variable monetary penalties). Paid 20 July 2020. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. Duma Polska = Polish Pride (registered political party) Late submission of annual accounts (2018); Late delivery of quarterly donations and transactions reports. Offences. £400 (variable monetary penalty). Paid on 27 July 2020. Mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed for the late delivery of the quarterly reports. A sanction was imposed for the late delivery of the annual accounts in line with our enforcement policy. The party was voluntarily deregistered on 2 October 2019. Conservative and Unionist Party (registered political party) Failure to notify Commission of a change to the registered treasurer of the accounting unit by due date. Contravention of a prescribed requirement. £300 (variable monetary penalty). Paid on 20 July 2020. The party failed to notify the Commission of a change to the registered treasurer of its East Lothian accounting unit by the due date. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. North East Party (registered political party) Late delivery of weekly donations and transactions reports for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. Offences. £200 (fixed monetary penalty). Paid on Initial Notice on 10 June 2020. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. Dr John Lister (promoter), Health Campaigns Together (registered non-party campaigner) and Reach Printing Services Limited (printer) Failure to include valid imprint on campaign material at 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. Offences. £200 (fixed monetary penalty) in respect of Dr Lister. Paid on Initial Notice on 29 June 2020. Mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed on Health Campaigns Together and Reach Printing Services Limited. Sanctions were appropriate in respect of Dr Lister in line with our enforcement policy. Church of the Militant Elvis party (registered political party) Late delivery of campaign spending return for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. No offence. N/A. Closed without further action. The return was delivered late, however the investigation concluded that there was a reasonable excuse for the failure identified. Liberal Democrats (registered political party) Failing to return a donation from an impermissible donor within 30 days. No offence. N/A. No forfeiture sought. Closed without further action. The party's Haringey Borough accounting unit accepted a £565 donation from an impermissible donor. However, the party took all reasonable steps to verify the donor's permissibility and a defence was made out. Forfeiture of the full amount of the donation was also not appropriate in this case because the donor was eligible to be on an electoral register at the time the donation was accepted. Plaid Cymru (registered political party) Failure to notify Commission of a change to the registered treasurer and registered second officer of an accounting unit by due date. Contraventions of prescribed requirements. Penalties totalling £750 (2 x £375 variable monetary penalties). Paid on 16 June 2020. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. National Party (registered political party) Late delivery of annual accounts (2018). Offence. £350 (variable monetary penalty). Paid on 27 July 2020. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. Scottish Unionist Association Trust (unincorporated association / members association) Failure to report a donation by the required deadline. Offence. £300 (variable monetary penalty). Paid on 9 June 2020. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. Stand up to Racism (Non-party campaigner) Failure to include valid imprint on campaign material at 2019 Newport West Parliamentary by-election. Offence. £300 (variable monetary penalty). Paid on 25 May 2020. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. Conservative and Unionist Party (North Ayrshire and Arran accounting unit) Late delivery of annual accounts (2018). Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. The accounts were delivered late, but mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. Aontú (registered political party) Late delivery of weekly donations and transactions reports for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. Offences. No sanction. Closed without further action. The reports were delivered late, but mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. Ecotricity Group Limited, Mr Dale Vince and CR Signs (Stroud) Limited Failure to include valid imprint on campaign material at 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. No offence / no determination of offence. N/A. Closed without further action. No offence was found in respect of Mr Vince. No determination of offence was made in respect of Ecotricity Group Limited and CR Signs (Stroud) Limited. This was due to matters having previously been addressed by the police by way of advice given. Lambeth Labour Group (members association and unincorporated association) Failure to provide notification of gifts to a political party exceeding £25,000. Offence. £600 (variable monetary penalty) Paid on 18 May 2020. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. Labour for a People's Vote (members association) Failure to deliver two donation reports within 30 days of accepting donations. Offence. Penalties totalling £400 (2 x £200 fixed monetary penalties). Paid on 14 May 2020. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. Shropshire Party (registered political party) Late delivery of weekly donations and transactions reports for 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. Offences. Penalties totalling £400 (2 x £200 fixed monetary penalties). Paid on Initial Notice on 29 April 2020. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. The Cynon Valley Party (registered political party) Late submission of annual accounts (2018). Offence. £200 (fixed monetary penalty) Paid 18 May 2020. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. Ulster Unionist Party (Fermanagh and South Tyrone accounting unit) Late submission of annual accounts (2017). Offence. £200 (fixed monetary penalty). Paid on Initial Notice on 17 April 2020. Sanctions were appropriate in this case, in line with our enforcement policy. Kingston Independent Residents Group (registered political party) Late submission of annual accounts (2018). Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. The accounts were delivered late, but mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. The Commission concluded two investigations into potential failures to comply with PPERA by two Northern Ireland regulated donees, relating to donations accepted prior to 1 July 2017. The Commission made no determination of offence in either case. Alliance European People's Party UK (registered political party) Failure to deliver accurate quarterly transaction reports. Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. The party delivered inaccurate reports of loans, insofar as it reported loans that were not reportable. The Commission was satisfied this was based on the party misinterpreting the requirements, but that the issue was now resolved and no sanction was appropriate. Andover Alliance (registered political party) Late delivery of quarterly donations and transactions reports. Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. The accounts were delivered late, but mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. Barnet Labour Group (Members association) Failure to deliver a donation report within 30 days of acceptance. Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. The association made some reports late, but the Commission was satisfied that there were mitigating factors and decided to impose no sanction. Conservative and Unionist Party (Berwick Upon Tweed accounting unit) Late submission of annual accounts (2017); Failure to keep accurate financial records. Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. The accounts were delivered late, but mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. Conservative and Unionist Party (Northumberland and Tyne & Wear accounting unit) Late submission of annual accounts (2017) No offence. N/A. Closed without further action. The accounting unit was merged with others during the relevant year, and the Commission was not informed. The former accounting unit was not required to deliver accounts as its income and expenditure were not above the required threshold. Conservative and Unionist Party (Thurrock accounting unit) Late submission of annual accounts (2017) Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. The accounts were delivered late, but mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. Leigh, Atherton & Tyldesley Together (registered political party) Late submission of annual accounts (2018) Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. The accounts were delivered late, but mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. Northamptonshire Independents (registered political party) Late submission of annual accounts (2018) Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. The accounts were delivered late, but mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. Nova Forte (registered political party) Late submission of annual accounts (2018) Offence. No sanction. Closed without further action. The accounts were delivered late, but mitigating factors meant that no sanction was imposed. Related content How we make decisions Find out about our Board, committees and groups Make an allegation Find out how to make an allegation What we do in elections about what we do in elections

5. Supporting local electoral services delivery and resilience | Electoral Commission Search

5. Supporting local electoral services delivery and resilience You are in the Corporate plan 2022/23 to 2026/27 section Home Our plans and priorities Corporate plan 2022/23 to 2026/27 On this page Setting challenging performance standards for local electoral services Providing accessible guidance and support for electoral administrators Supporting increased resilience of local electoral services Focus on England Ensuring the electoral system works effectively Focus on Scotland and on Wales First published: 25 April 2022 Last updated: 25 April 2022 Summary Local electoral services face significant economic, social and environmental challenges which risk impacting on their ability to deliver well-run elections and referendums. We will help local authorities and electoral administrators to respond to these pressures. We will work to support the consistent delivery of high-quality services for voters, and the development of resilient local electoral services by: setting challenging performance standards for local electoral services providing accessible guidance and support for electoral administrators supporting increased resilience of local electoral services ensuring the electoral system works effectively Setting challenging performance standards for local electoral services We will continue to support Returning Officers to deliver the elections scheduled to take place during the period of this Corporate Plan, and remain prepared to respond to unscheduled polls if required to do so. We will also support Electoral Registration Officers to deliver electoral registration services, including the annual canvass in England, Scotland and Wales, for each year of this Corporate Plan. We will set and ensure compliance with challenging performance standards. We will provide guidance and advice to help electoral administrators meet the standards and challenge them when we identify areas for improvement. We will review the performance standards framework for Returning Officers to further enhance its role in identifying and driving performance improvements, and providing accountability for the elections they deliver. Providing accessible guidance and support for electoral administrators We published accessible digital guidance for Electoral Registration Officers in May 2021 to support the delivery of the first reformed annual canvass in Great Britain. We are working to ensure all guidance for Returning Officers, candidates and agents is published in this accessible format on our website, and we will continue to refresh this guidance on an election-by-election basis. We seek the views of electoral administrators after each set of elections, and over three-quarters of administrators that responded to our survey after the May 2021 elections told us they had found our guidance very or fairly useful. We will continue to seek feedback from and consult with electoral administrators to ensure our guidance meets their needs. We will continue to provide in person and telephone support, to help electoral administrators in their work. Supporting increased resilience of local electoral services Our research and the feedback we gather from electoral administrators after each set of elections tells us about the pressures on the electoral system that are currently being experienced at the local level. In response we will develop and deliver a programme of activity to support resilient electoral services. We will work collaboratively with electoral administrators to understand the challenges they face and identify solutions to address them. We will implement agreed measures to build resilience, working in partnership with local authorities and the wider electoral community to ensure maximum impact. We will also explore how data on the costs of electoral services can be collected and used to identify and drive efficiencies in the delivery of electoral processes. Focus on England Focus on England: Supporting electoral administrators We will work closely with key partners across the electoral community to explore initiatives such as an induction and mentoring programme for new Returning Officers. We will also do more to identify, recognise and share examples of good practice, supporting the delivery of efficient and consistent electoral services. All of this will be underpinned by a review of the support and coordination structures that exist across England, to understand and realise the benefits that could be achieved through working collaboratively across local authority areas. Ensuring the electoral system works effectively Electoral administrators need confidence that the electoral system works effectively. We will continue to conduct research to report on how elections have been run, including to secure a detailed understanding of electoral administrators' experiences. This will enable us to raise concerns and make evidence-based recommendations where appropriate, ensuring electoral administrators have confidence in the electoral system as a whole.

Focus on Scotland and Wales

Focus on Scotland: Supporting the work of the Electoral Management Board We will continue to engage closely with the Electoral Management Board, providing advice, support and challenge to maintain and drive forward the effective and efficient running of elections in Scotland. This will be particularly important in terms of the varied voting systems and franchises across the elections that will be held during the period of this Corporate Plan.

Focus on Wales: Developing the role of the Wales Electoral Coordination Board We will continue to work closely with and support the work of the Wales Electoral Coordination Board which is in a key position to lead on the delivery of electoral events and activity in Wales. We continue to recommend that this group should become a statutory board similar to the Electoral Management Board in Scotland. This, we believe, will not only assist with the effective planning of electoral events in Wales but also will ensure greater resilience of the electoral system.

Navigation 4. Supporting and securing campaigner compliance with the law

Section 4 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan

6. Making sure electoral law is fair and effective

Section 6 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan

You are in the Our research section Home Our research On this page Modernising elections research People value wide public participation in elections and like current methods for voting Improvements can be made but should not undermine the perceived importance of the process Most people know how they can cast their vote Not everyone knows why they should vote Download the full report First published: 14 October 2021 Last updated: 14 October 2021 Modernising elections research Modernising elections research This qualitative research looks at public attitudes to voting and the information available around elections. It considers views on current voting methods and explores ideas and attitudes about possible new ways of casting a vote in the future. This is part of a wider project looking at the future of voting. The evidence provided by the research will inform further work to examine the needs and aspirations of other key groups, including electoral administrators, campaigners and civil society organisations. Ultimately, this work will be used to support recommendations to the UK's governments about how the electoral system can continue to support participation in the democratic process. People value wide public participation in elections and like current methods for voting On the whole, people are content with the current options they have for voting and found them straightforward, especially once they had voted a couple of times and were familiar with the process. In-person voting is the default and preferred option for most people. Postal voting is mainly used in situations where people could not get to the polling station or were following their parents' usual method of voting. For those who had only voted in polling stations, postal voting was perceived to take more effort and be less reliable than in-person voting. However, everyone valued that there were different methods available as, above all, people wanted everyone be able to vote with ease and confidence. Whilst some issues were raised, such as around accessibility, there is no evidence to suggest that current voting processes are responsible for people choosing not to vote, or that people don't vote because they do not know how to cast their vote. For most people, procedural information was seen to be readily available. Improvements can be made but should not undermine the perceived importance of the process Innovations that made voting quick, convenient and physically accessible were seen as attractive by people who took part in the research. While ease of access to voting is important to people – and they therefore broadly support methods that might increase ease – there is also a strong sense that voting should not be so easy that it can be done with little thought. People saw it as crucial that the voting process continues to feel significant and important, and that it should allow for a sense of control, shared purpose and community. People also said that security was important and that they wanted to be certain that their vote had been counted correctly and would be stored securely. Privacy was also seen as a key element of voting. Some people were concerned that this might be lost with innovations for voting remotely, as people may be voting with others close by. Overall people liked the idea of online voting and saw it as being flexible, familiar to other online activities such as banking and shopping, and potentially could encourage more people to vote. However, there were some concerns about the security of online voting; the risk of not maintaining voters' anonymity; digital literacy; and the possibility that some people could be coerced to vote in a certain way. Most people know how they can cast their vote Overall, people had enough information to understand how to vote, except for a small number of people who had not yet voted. For young people and first-time voters to feel prepared to vote, it was important for them to know about the process of voting and the electoral system, how candidates are elected, and the difference between elections. It was said to be important for people with mental health needs or physical disabilities to have clearer information about how to get 'extra support' if they needed it. People's knowledge about the nature of different voting methods varied considerably, with proxy voting being the option people were least familiar with. Not everyone knows why they should vote People told us that the main challenges to voting were knowing what elections were taking place and when, why it is important to vote, and how to make an informed decision about who to vote for. These challenges sometimes prevented people from voting, even though they practically knew how to cast their vote. People often said the information available during an election was 'overwhelming'. Some didn't know where to start searching, others were unsure how to identify sources they could trust, and others lacked confidence in analysing information to make a decision about who to vote for. In general, people had a desire for clear and comparable information in one place, as opposed to receiving lots of information from different sources. People also valued having 'neutral' sources of information about candidates and their policies from independent, non-partisan sources. How we carried out this research Methodology This was a large-scale qualitative project with a diverse sample covering all four nations. Interviews in Welsh were also carried out. The work was carried out by Revealing Reality. During January, February and March 2021 we conducted a total of 50 focus groups, 48 depth interviews and 15 follow up interviews, speaking to over 300 people about their voting experiences. The research covered: ages 18 to 85 in UK 16-17 in Scotland and Wales a range of socio-economic groups urban and rural locations across the four nations the disenfranchised and the highly engaged those who have voted all their lives and those who have never voted before those spanning the political spectrum The research also ensured representation from those with health needs, such as physical disabilities, hearing / visual impairments and mental health issues. It also included non-internet users and participants with low digital confidence. Objectives of the research To identify what the public think about the current ways people can cast their vote at elections in the UK To understand what is important to people when they vote To understand what would improve people's voting experience To explore what people think about proposed alternative ways of being able to cast their vote, and why they may prefer some options over others To understand whether there are differences in views and opinion by demographic or voting method To identify what information the public wants about elections, voting and politics To examine why people want this information, and what would change if they had it To explore what information is most important to different groups of people To understand how people assess whether information is good information To understand the importance to people of the source of any information Download the full report Electoral Commission Report: Future of voting Related content Electoral law is out of date. Find out where we want to see improvements Public attitudes Read our reports about public attitudes towards voting Elections Act about the UK Government's Elections Act and what it means for voting and campaigning Elections in your area Enter your postcode to find your electoral services team at your local council. You need to send your postal and proxy vote application forms to them.

Electoral registration in Great Britain in 2021 | Electoral Commission Search
Electoral registration in Great Britain in 2021 You are in the Our research
section Home Our research Currently reading: of 2 - Show page contents On this page Size of the electoral registers Effectiveness of the reformed canvass Overview About this report This report looks at how the 2021 canvass in Great Britain was run and considers the ongoing impact on the electoral registers of the changes to the annual canvass process introduced in 2020. The 2021 canvass was the second using the new processes introduced in 2020. These changes involve comparing the registers with other public data in order to give EROs information they can use to target their resources at households where residents' details are most likely to have changed.
While we cannot yet draw conclusions on the impact of the new process on the accuracy and completeness of the registers, our analysis of available data suggests potential issues with the effectiveness of the reformed canvass in keeping pace with population movement: The data matching process and/or the lag between matching and canvassing means some households are being allocated to the 'wrong' route – nearly a fifth of responses from households allocated to Route 1 (where no change in household composition was expected) reported significant changes to electors' details.
Necessary changes to electors' details may not be reflected on the registers – 2.4 million households, one third of those allocated to Route 2 (where a change in household composition was expected), did not respond to the canvass. The reduction in the frequency of communication with Route 1 households may be contributing to the under-registration of attainers (those who will soon reach voting age) – the decline in the number of registered attainers, which began following the introduction of individual electoral registration (IER) in 2014, continued in 2021. The number of registered attainers dropped by 28.7% relative to 2020. While we know that new registration applications are most readily driven by large scale electoral events, it is nevertheless important that the canvass and other year-round registration activity supports accurate and complete registers. This can help to reduce the large volumes of registration applications received immediately in advance of major polls, when Electoral Registration Officers' (EROs) staff capacity is already stretched. Our research studies into the accuracy and completeness of the registers are the definitive assessments of their overall quality. The next study, planned for the December 2022 registers, will allow us to fully assess the overall impact of the new canvass processes. Over the next year we will continue to support and challenge EROs using the performance standards framework , and work with them to ensure we all make full use of the data that is available. This should help to provide a better understanding of the impact of particular practices within the current framework and support us with identifying and sharing good practice. We also continue to recommend that the electoral registration system in Great Britain should be further modernised, to provide the best possible opportunity for ensuring that as many people as possible are correctly registered. This should include better use of public data, for example from other government services, to make registration easier for voters, and a more joined-up electoral registration system to reduce duplicate registrations and encourage registration all year round. Size of the electoral registers Table 1 below shows the percentage change in the number of entries on the parliamentary registers in each nation of Great Britain between 2020 and 2021. Table 1. Change in the number of parliamentary entries 2020-21 Area 2020 2021 % change England 39,298,264
38,889,429 -1.0% Scotland 4,012,429 4,028,717 0.4% Wales 2,304,640 2,307,877 0.1% Great Britain 45,615,333 45,226,023 -0.9% Scotland and Wales were the only areas to see an increase in the number of local government register entries relative to 2020.

In each of the regions, the number of local government entries declined, albeit by varying degrees. The largest decrease was in London (-1.6%). Table 2. Change in the number of local government register entries 2020-21

Area	2020	2021	% change
England	41,186,293	40,882,721	-0.7%
North East	1,956,275	1,946,010	-0.5%
North West	5,461,941	5,421,090	-0.7%
Yorkshire and the Humber	4,025,884	4,009,237	-0.4%
East Midlands	3,583,548	3,554,099	-0.8%
West Midlands	4,276,920	4,253,449	-0.5%
East of England	4,653,094	4,633,193	-0.4%
London	6,116,260	6,021,139	-1.6%
South East	6,813,201	6,775,409	-0.6%
South West	4,299,170	4,269,095	-0.7%
Scotland	4,208,923	4,245,217	0.9%
Wales	2,342,478	2,348,576	0.3%
Great Britain	47,737,694	47,476,514	-0.5%

Variations in levels of registration can be driven by changes in the size of the eligible population or by policy changes such as extensions to the franchise. Changes can also be driven by changes to the canvassing approaches used by EROs as well as national and local voter registration campaigns. Our analysis below looks at this and what the available data tells us about the effectiveness of the canvass.

Attainers

People who will reach voting age and become eligible to vote during the lifetime of the register are known as attainers. Attainers can be included on the electoral registers. The number of attainers has been falling for several years. On the parliamentary registers in Great Britain the number fell by -28.7% between 2020 and 2021 (see Table 3 below). In percentage terms, this marked the steepest year-on-year decline since 2014. The introduction of individual registration in 2014 meant that attainers had to make their own application to register (rather than being added through a single household form) and this change coincided with a decline in numbers. In 2014 and 2015, the number of attainers dropped by 33.3% and 10.3%, respectively. Numbers rose again by 23.0% in 2016 but fell slightly each year between 2017 and 2019. This more stable trend was broken in 2020, when the number of attainers on the parliamentary registers in Great Britain fell by 21.0%. As was the case in 2020, the overall decrease in 2021 was driven by the change in England (-40.6%). This marks a considerably steeper decline in the number of registered attainers than seen in England in 2020 (approximately -26%). In contrast, in Scotland and Wales, the number of attainers increased in 2021 (as in 2020). This is likely to be the result of increased registration activity among younger people following the extension of the franchise for devolved elections to 16 and 17 year olds. This increased activity may therefore be offsetting a systematic problem with the registration of attainers which is evident in England. The reformed annual canvass may be exacerbating the decline seen from 2014 onwards, as the need to add an attainer to the register will not be identified through the data matching process. For example, many households in Route 1 will have potential attainers but now receive fewer communications from EROs to encourage them to become registered. Our forthcoming accuracy and completeness research will give us an updated assessment of the registration rate for attainers, which was 25% in our 2018 study. Attainer numbers are unlikely to increase through the existing registration and canvass processes alone. This is an area where more automated registration process could be beneficial. Data from the education sector – such as information held by the Education and Skills Funding Agency Learning Records Service, which collects data relating to learners in England, Wales and Northern Ireland registering for relevant post-14 qualifications, and the Scottish Qualifications Authority – could help EROs identify attainers and other young people. Also, data from the Department for Work and Pensions could potentially be used by EROs to register young people to vote automatically when they are allocated their National Insurance number ahead of their 16th birthday. Table 3. Number of attainers on the parliamentary registers in Great Britain 2013-21

England	Scotland	Wales	Great
41,186,293	4,208,923	2,342,478	47,737,694
40,882,721	4,245,217	2,348,576	47,476,514
-0.7%	-0.5%	0.3%	-0.5%

Britain Attainers % change Attainers % change Attainers % change Attainers % change 2021 111,958 -40.6% 40,871 6.1% 19,374 34.2% 172,203 -28.7% 2020 188,472 -25.9%
38,518 0.9% 14,437 11.6% 241,427 -21.0% 2019 254,384 -1.4% 38,171 -7.6% 12,942 0.0%
305,497 -2.1% 2018 257,938 -4.1% 41,296 -4.8% 12,948 1.2% 312,182 -4.0% 2017 269,092
-5.4% 43,357 4.3% 12,794 -6.3% 325,243 -4.3% 2016 284,522 19.0% 41,561 67.4% 13,651
10.6% 339,734 23.0% 2015 239,019 -6.2% 24,827 -36.3% 12,339 -12.3% 276,185 -10.3%
2014 254,836 -32.8% 38,963 -38.6% 14,065 -24.4% 307,864 -33.3% 2013 379,284 NA 63,471
NA 18,595 NA 461,350 NA Other register statistics Other register statistics 16 and 17 year olds (Scotland and Wales) In Scotland and Wales, 16 and 17 year olds can vote in Scottish Parliament, Senedd and local council elections. This change was introduced in 2015 in Scotland and 2020 in Wales. Figures here relate to the annual registers published on conclusion of the 2021 canvass. The data does not, therefore, include those 16 and 17 year olds who may have registered to vote in the run up to the May 2022 local elections in Scotland and Wales. Data on the numbers of 16 and 17 year olds registered for the May 2022 elections will be published alongside the Commission's reports on those polls. In Scotland, at the publication of the annual registers in 2021, 77,958 16 and 17 year olds were registered on the local government registers (see Table 4). This represents a 6.4% increase on 2020. Taken with ONS population estimates, this indicates that roughly two thirds of 16 and 17 year olds are on the local government registers in Scotland. 1 EROs across Scotland continued to engage with 16 and 17 year olds after publication of the revised registers to ensure they were registered ahead of the May 2022 polls. This work included undertaking engagement activities such as direct mailing, phone/text, contact with schools and universities, press releases, social media, newsletters and local advertising, as well as local activity with partner organisations. Table 4. Number of 16 and 17 year olds on the local government registers in Scotland 2015-21 Year 16 and 17 year olds 2015 48,962 2016 79,621 2017 83,536 2018 78,383 2019 73,777 2020 73,272
2021 77,958 In Wales, 33,241 16 and 17 year olds were on the local government registers on 1 December 2021 (a 115.1% increase on 2020). Comparison with the ONS population estimates suggests that just under half of 16 and 17 year olds in Wales are on the local government registers. 2 Across Wales, EROs carried out a range of activity to encourage registration amongst 16 and 17 year olds. Using grant funding from Welsh Government, many authorities appointed temporary public engagement officers and, in those areas, there appears to have been an increase in the range of engagement that was undertaken. In addition to more standard engagement activities such as direct mailing, phone/text, contact with schools, press releases, newsletters and social media, some authorities undertook additional activities such as: creating website banners and TikTok videos to share with schools working with youth councils, youth partnership groups and Young Farmers Wales sending 16th birthday cards advertising in bus shelters pop-up sessions in city centres teacher training sessions using Electoral Commission resources After the publication of the registers but ahead of the May 2022 polls, the majority of authorities sent out a household notification letter, with funding provided by Welsh Government, and many of these included extra information promoting the extension of the franchise and some also highlighted answers to FAQs. Case study: Vale of Glamorgan Council - outreach with 16/17 year olds The Vale's Electoral Registration Public Awareness Officer delivered presentations to a school that held a Personal and Social Education day. Teaming up with a member of the council's youth service, they produced a comprehensive package on registering to vote, how to vote and why we vote. The package also included information on elections and politics to try to demonstrate the importance of these to a young person. It covered a who's who in politics and what politicians do, what elections they stand in and also how this links back to the things that young people might find important, so that they had a broader understanding of the whole voting process. A few simple tasks were set for them to do during the session to help keep them engaged. This outreach work helped to increase voter registration rates in the area amongst 14 and 15 year olds in the space of a year by 31.4% (1,263 to 1,660).

Overseas electors A UK citizen living abroad who has been registered to vote in the UK in the past 15 years can apply to be an overseas voter. These registrations currently need to be renewed annually. The total number of overseas electors on the 2021 registers in Great Britain was 104,665. Table 5. Number of overseas electors on the parliamentary registers in Great Britain 2015-21

Area	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021
England	97,572	241,097	205,687	113,833	185,513	170,196	94,908
Scotland	7,729	15,230	12,790	6,679	11,587	9,617	6,799
Wales	2,940	7,567	6,995	3,678	6,969
Great Britain	5,169	2,958	108,241	263,894	225,472	124,190	204,069
						184,982	104,665

 This is a decrease of 43.4% since the publication of the annual register in 2020. This decline is likely a consequence of the fact that there has not been an election in which overseas electors can vote since the 2019 UK Parliamentary general election. The Elections Act 2022 extends the number of overseas citizens who will be eligible to register and vote, and also changes the requirement to renew registration annually to every three years. The extension of eligibility could result in a high volume of applications close to the next UK parliamentary general election, which EROs will need to be prepared to manage.

Anonymous electors The number of anonymous electoral register entries on the parliamentary registers in Great Britain decreased from 3,374 in 2020 to 3,097 in 2021. Anonymous registration is available for people meeting certain requirements, whose safety, or the safety of someone in the same household, is at risk. People registered anonymously appear on the electoral register without their name and address. Table 6. Number of anonymous electors on the parliamentary registers in Great Britain 2015-21

Area	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020	2021
England	2,151	2,194	2,440	2,550	3,214	3,064	2,788
Scotland	111	117	116	130	194	196	187
Wales	74	74	85	108	138	114	122
Great Britain	2,336	2,385	2,641	2,788	3,546	3,374	3,097

 Effectiveness of the reformed canvass Route allocations At the beginning of the canvass, all registers are matched against Department for Work and Pensions (DWP) data. The results are used by EROs to allocate properties to 'routes' which determine how many times they will contact a household to attempt to get a response (see Background section for more detail). EROs can also carry out further matching using local data, such as council tax records. The majority of EROs carried out local data matching and, as in 2020, council tax records were the most popular datasets used, followed by housing benefit data. The local data matching step had a significant impact on the number of households allocated to each route, as shown in Table 7. When asked whether their approach to local data matching was the same as or different to last year: a majority (87%) of those EROs who responded said that their approach was the same as last year. For those that decided to take a different approach, the responses suggest that they used a broader range of data sources and allowed more time to do data matching, earlier on in the process. Table 7. Number of properties allocated to each route after national and local data matching

Route	Number of properties allocated after DWP match % change	1	19,639,236	21,752,578	10.8%	2	9,281,876	7,397,346	-20.3%	3	NA
NA	310,910

 As in 2020, the proportion of properties allocated to Route 2 (25.1%) is in line with the expectations set out in the statement of policy for canvass reform published by the UK, Scottish and Welsh governments in 2019, which predicted that approximately one quarter of properties would need to be allocated to Route 2 nationally. The proportion of households allocated to Routes 1, 2 and 3 is also fairly stable across Great Britain, although London continues to allocate a lower percentage of households to Route 1 (66.3%) and a higher proportion to Route 2 (32.7%). This reflects population movement in London: as the rate of change in household composition is higher in London, fewer properties are successfully matched against existing DWP and local data. Table 8. Percentage of properties allocated to each route by nation and region

Region	Route 1	Route 2	Route 3
England	73.6%	25.4%
1.0% North East	80.2%	19.5%	0.3%
North West	74.0%	25.2%	0.7%
Yorkshire and the Humber	72.9%	25.7%	1.4%
East Midlands	76.2%	22.1%	1.8%
West Midlands	73.9%	24.5%	1.6%
East of England	76.3%	22.8%	0.8%
London	66.3%	32.7%	1.0%
South East	73.9%	25.3%	0.8%
South West	75.4%	23.7%	0.9%
Scotland	74.8%	23.9%	1.3%
Wales	76.1%	22.9%	1.1%
Great Britain	73.8%	25.1%	1.1%

The changes to the annual canvass were designed to allow EROs to direct their resources at households whose composition was most likely to have changed. The effectiveness of the new canvass, based on this targeting of activity, will therefore be strongly determined by two things: the accuracy of the data matching and the level of response achieved. We can draw some conclusions about both from an analysis of household response within the two allocated routes. Household response rates per route As expected, the proportion of responses is significantly higher among Route 2 households, where changes are expected, than Route 1 households, where they are not (68.1% vs. 18.3%). The lower response rate among Route 1 households (the vast majority of all households) partly explains the smaller number of total responses under the reformed canvass. In 2019, before the changes to the canvass, 23.8 million household responses were received. This compares to 9 million responses during the 2021 canvass, a similar number to that received in 2020. However, almost a third of households in Route 2 also did not respond. These are households where the data suggests a change may be needed. It is important for the accuracy and completeness of the registers that the response rate for Route 2 households is as high as possible. We asked EROs about the sorts of barriers that canvassers may face when trying to encourage Route 2 households to respond. Many highlighted that the increasing rate of COVID-19 infections in the latter months of 2021 reduced the opportunities for canvassers to visit Route 2 properties, and in several cases local authorities were limited by area-wide policies that prohibited door knocking. Several EROs described the challenges associated with reaching communities who have historically been reluctant to engage with canvassers; and a number suggested that a loss of staff experienced in engaging with local residents may have affected the response rate among Route 2 properties. We will continue to monitor the response rates in future years and work with EROs in the meantime to help them use their local data to mitigate against the risks to the accuracy and completeness of their electoral registers. Variations in response rate Variations in response rate The Route 2 response rate continued to vary significantly in 2021 (see Table 9), as it had done in 2020. For the second year, Scotland reported the lowest response rate among Route 2 properties (50.7%) and England reported the highest (70.1%). Table 9. Response rate for Routes 1 and 2, by nation and region

Region	Route 1	Route 2
England	19.0%	70.1%
North East	7.0%	62.7%
North West	15.3%	63.2%
Yorkshire and the Humber	14.0%	67.3%
East Midlands	18.8%	75.6%
West Midlands	17.8%
East of England	71.2%	19.9%
London	75.8%	20.4%
South East	65.9%	26.0%
South West	74.2%	22.6%
Scotland	13.6%	50.7%
Wales	15.6%	65.4%
Great Britain	18.3%	68.1%

Major and minor changes per route Major and minor changes per route The nature of the responses received is also important. Responding households can record a major change

(e.g. reporting that a potential new elector is resident), a minor change (e.g. amending the name of an existing elector) or no change (i.e. confirming the existing details of household members). Understanding the distribution of these changes can tell us about the accuracy of the data matching. Of the 9 million responses received across all routes, 2.7 million households reported a major change (30.4%). Table 10 shows how these major changes were distributed across the three routes. The pattern is broadly in line with 2020. Table 10. Distribution of major changes across routes

	Number of major changes	% of major changes across all routes	Route 1	Route 2	Route 3	Total	100.0%
Route 1	830,743	30.4%	830,743	1,856,309	49,339	2,736,391	100.0%
Route 2	1,856,309	67.8%	1,856,309	49,339	1.8%	2,736,391	100.0%
Route 3	49,339	1.8%

The highest proportion of major changes were reported by Route 2 households – i.e., those identified during the data matching step as the households most likely to report changes to residents' registration details. However, as in 2020, nearly a third of the major changes reported relate to Route 1 households, where the DWP and/or local data had indicated no change was likely to be needed. As in 2020, of all the households allocated to Route 1 (21.7 million) the proportion reporting a major change (830,743) is small (3.8%). However, as Figure 1 below shows, of those that did respond, a fifth reported a major change. Importantly for the quality of the registers, it is also unlikely that all of the Route 1 households that needed to report a major change have done so – particularly as they would have received limited contact from the ERO. We do not have comparative data on the number of major changes reported by households during the canvasses preceding the reforms. It is therefore not clear to what extent the 2020 and 2021 canvasses are out of line with historic figures. However, it is clear that either the data matching process does not accurately identify all properties where changes will be needed and/or there is an impact from the lag time between the matching and the canvassing taking place. Figure 1. Percentage of responding households in Routes 1 and 2 who reported major / minor / no change (data collected from 4/5 LAs where a revised data specification was implemented)

1 As part of our work with EROs throughout the 2021 canvass, we have sought to understand the potential reasons for the proportion of changes reported for route 1 households. Many of those we spoke to highlighted potential reasons such as house moves within areas, marriages, attainers and deaths. It could also be a product of data accuracy, for example, with records used for matching not being up to date.

We will continue to build on this over the 2022 canvass, to develop a deeper understanding of the data and how the process is working in practice. Additions and deletions

Canvassing households does not directly result in new registrations. When a household reports that a potential new elector is resident, that individual still needs to submit an application to be added to the register. Where a household reports that electors need to be removed from the registers, a second piece of evidence (e.g. locally held data) would be needed before the ERO could confirm the deletion. Entries need to be added to, and deleted from, the registers for several reasons including migration, home movement and deaths. The level of these additions and deletions provides insight into whether registration activity is keeping pace with population change. As population mobility varies across the country, so does the scale of the challenge faced by EROs. As in 2020, the distribution of additions and deletions across the routes is largely as expected, with Route 2 households accounting for the highest proportion of changes (see Table 11). However, as with the household major changes, more than a third of both additions and deletions came from households whose composition was assumed to be unchanged following the data matching. Again, this suggests either a degree of inaccuracy in the allocation of households to routes or an impact from population movement between matching and canvassing. Table 11.

Percentage of additions and deletions per route

	Route 1	Route 2	Route 3	Additions
37.1%	59.6%	3.4%	Deletions	39.4% 57.3% 3.3%

This data suggests that at least some population change is not being picked up by the registers. However we cannot draw clear conclusions on the overall impact – partly because of the variable impact of electoral events outside the canvass. Table 12 below shows the levels of additions and deletions in recent years (for the full year, not just the canvass). Both 2020 and 2021 have recorded lower figures than many previous years. However, it is usual to see higher levels, of additions in particular, in years with significant UK-wide electoral events (such as UK general elections and the EU referendum). The lower figures in 2020 may relate directly to the effects of the pandemic – both on EROs' ability to canvass and through depressing levels of population movement. Table 12.

Percentage of additions and deletions 2010-21

Year	Additions	Deletions
2010	13%	12%
2013	15%	15%
2015	15%	15%
2016	15%	13%
2017	13%	13%
2018	11%	12%
2019	13%	10%
2020	10%	10%
2021	11%	11%

As Table 13 sets out, we also expect to see a higher proportion of changes being picked up during the canvass period, compared to the rest of the year, in years without UK-wide elections (e.g. 2018) – a trend that continues in 2020 and 2021. Table 13. Percentage of additions during and outside of canvass period

2015-21 Year	Additions During canvass	Outside canvass	Deletions During Canvass
Outside canvass	2015 40%	60%	58% 43%
2016	38%	64%	54% 47%
2017	39%	61%	56% 44%
2018	68%	32%	68% 32%
2019	62%	38%	61% 39%
2020	56%	44%	64% 36%
2021	61%	39%	61% 39%

This point is also supported by the 2021 data on the proportion of additions and deletions recorded during the canvass period across the three nations of Great Britain (see Table 14). The proportion of additions and deletions during the canvass were lowest in Scotland (39.0% and 55.0%, respectively), followed by Wales and then by England. This is in line with the level of engagement at the May 2021 elections where turnout was highest in Scotland, then in Wales and lowest across England. Table 14. Additions and deletions during full year and canvass period per nation

Full year	Canvass period % during canvass	Deletions	Full year	Canvass period % during canvass
England	4,308,807	2,777,863	64.5%	4,674,707	2,875,974	61.5%	Scotland	455,341	177,552	39.0%	415,722	228,843	55.0%	Wales	245,670	112,310	45.7%	232,649	137,629	59.2%	Great Britain	5,009,818	3,067,725	61.2%	5,323,078	3,242,446	60.9%

It is important that the canvass and other year-round registration activity continues to provide a high quality register at all times in order to avoid significant updates needing to be made in advance of major polls. We have previously highlighted our concern that the registration system, including the canvass, is unlikely to be sustainable in the longer term and have recommended that governments should explore more automated registration processes. For example, regular access to reliable data from a wider range of public services about people who have recently updated their address details would allow EROs to make contact directly with them at their new address to encourage them to register to vote. Integrating electoral registration applications into other public service transactions could also make it easier for individuals to keep their registration details up to date and accurate. While canvass reform has addressed one aspect of sustainability – the resource and capacity taken up through unnecessarily chasing households where there has been no change – it is not yet clear what its impact is on the other key aspect – the system's ability to pick up population changes away from major electoral events. Our next accuracy and completeness study will allow us to more clearly assess the overall impact on the registers, as it will take place after three years of the reformed canvass in Great Britain.

Background Electoral registers

There is no national electoral register for the United Kingdom. 368 separate electoral registers are compiled and maintained by Electoral

Registration Officers (EROs) across Great Britain, and one register for Northern Ireland is compiled and maintained by the Chief Electoral Officer. Electoral Registration Officers (EROs) are required to maintain two electoral registers:

Parliamentary register – used for UK Parliamentary elections Local government register – used for Scottish Parliamentary, Senedd, Northern Ireland Assembly, local government and Police and Crime Commissioner elections The electoral register is a property based database, with register entries linked to a property. This means that the quality of its information is affected by ongoing population change and EROs need to add and delete records for home-movers, electors who have died and newly eligible electors. New registers are published annually and reviewed most months. In Great Britain, there is a process of auditing the register annually before a revised version is published, which is known as the annual canvass. Each ERO is required by law to conduct an annual canvass of all properties in their area to confirm their electoral register entries and to identify electors who have moved or were not previously registered. The reformed canvass The 2021 canvass was the second to take place under a new model which incorporates data matching between the electoral registers and a combination of national and local data at the outset of the process. This data matching informs the ERO which properties are likely to have an unchanged household composition to enable them to target their canvass activity accordingly.

The ERO will then follow one of three routes for each property: Route 1: Properties are placed into Route 1 if the entries of registered electors match with other data, such as that held by the DWP, and the composition of the household is therefore assumed to be unchanged. The ERO will contact Route 1 households to invite them to provide information on any changes which have occurred. Where there are no changes to report, the household is not required to respond. Route 2: Properties are placed into Route 2 if any of the entries of registered electors do not match with other data, such as that held by the DWP, and the composition of the household is therefore assumed to have changed such that the electoral register needs to be updated. These households are required to respond to requests for information regardless of whether or not they do in fact need to report a change. Route 3: This route is available for those properties where the ERO thinks they can most effectively and efficiently obtain information on residents through a ‘single responsible person’ acting on behalf of all residents. Care homes and student halls of residence are examples of typical Route 3 properties. Should the ERO be unable to successfully obtain information about the property from the ‘single responsible person’, the property is placed into Route 2.

Engagement with EROs The Commission has the statutory power to set and monitor performance standards for EROs in Great Britain and has been doing so since 2008. In January 2020 we began a consultation on a new set of standards for EROs. However, as a consequence of the coronavirus pandemic, we deferred finalising the standards before the 2020 canvass. We did, however, make the draft standards and accompanying tools available to EROs, and these formed a key part of our guidance, support and challenge package relating to the delivery of the first reformed canvass in Great Britain. The new standards were then finalised and laid before the UK, Scottish and Welsh Parliaments in June 2021. Over 2020 and 2021 we have used the standards to inform our engagement with EROs about electoral registration, and to support and challenge them in their work to maintain the electoral registers in their area. We have placed a significant focus in our engagement with EROs on supporting them to develop relevant and appropriate KPIs, helping them establish a baseline of their own performance and set targets which take into account their own specific circumstances, and supporting them with using available data to identify areas where improvements may be made. Now that the standards have been in operation for two years, we can use the data and information gathered to identify potential patterns that are emerging. We will continue to use the performance standards framework over the course of this year to build on the work we have carried out with EROs in 2021, continuing to support them to better understand and report on the impact of their activity using the data available to them. In particular we have identified areas of practice and key pieces of data that we want to focus on in our engagement with EROs during the 2022 canvass – for example, where there are a high number of major changes reported from properties allocated to Route 1 and non-responses from households in Route 2. The data we have gathered to date will help to inform and shape that engagement with individual EROs, with the aim of developing a deeper understanding of the impact of particular practices and approaches, which in turn can help us to identify and share examples of good practice. Download the electoral registration data 2021 Electoral registration data 2021 1. ONS (2021) Analysis of population estimates tool for UK ■ Back to content at footnote 1 2. ibid. ■ Back to content at footnote 2 1. HM Government, Scottish Government and Welsh Government (2019) Reform of the Annual Canvass: Statement of Policy ■ Back to content at footnote 1 1. In 2021, we implemented a slightly revised data specification. In previous years, data on changes to household composition were broken down into two metrics: the number of households reporting a major change and the number of households reporting a minor or no change. This year, we disaggregated the second metric so that we could report separately on the number of households reporting a minor change vs the number reporting no change. However, only about four in five local authorities were able to implement this change within their electoral management software (EMS). ■ Back to content at footnote 1 Page history First published: 16 May 2022 Last updated: 25 May 2022 Related content Northern Ireland electoral registration canvass 2021 Read our report about the electoral registration canvass which took place in Northern Ireland in 2021. Analysis of electoral registration data about electoral registration data Accuracy and completeness of electoral registers about the quality of the electoral registers in the UK Public attitudes Read our reports about public attitudes towards voting

Consultation on draft guidance for Returning Officers: Assistance with voting for persons with disabilities | Electoral Commission Search

Consultation on draft guidance for Returning Officers: Assistance with voting for persons with disabilities You are in the Our consultations section Home Our consultations Draft guidance for Returning Officers: Assistance with voting for persons with disabilities On this page Summary How to respond How we developed the draft guidance What the draft guidance includes Background First published: 5 September 2022 Last updated: 7 December 2022 Consultation closed The consultation has now closed. The feedback provided during this consultation was used to inform the further development of the guidance, in advance of our statutory consultation which is running from 5 December 2022 until 16 January 2023. Summary Summary There should be no barriers to voting for people with disabilities. Everyone should have the right to vote on their own and in secret. The Elections Act 2022 includes provisions relating to assisting people with disabilities to vote, and introduces a duty on the Commission to provide guidance to Returning Officers (ROs) on the requirement to provide reasonable equipment to assist voters with disabilities in polling stations.

ROs must have regard to this guidance, which will support them to make accessibility arrangements for the May 2023 elections and beyond. In requiring this, the Act has provided a timely opportunity to review our existing guidance to help ensure everyone can vote independently and confidently. We want the updated guidance to help ROs and their teams to understand the barriers to voting faced by those with disabilities and make informed decisions on what they can do to help make voting accessible for all.

Your views will play an important role in ensuring that the guidance (that we will publish for formal consultation from late November 2022) sets out actions that can have a real and positive impact for voters with disabilities, and help to inform ROs with planning for future elections. This consultation is also available in easy read and BSL formats . How to respond This consultation is open from 5 September 2022 until 17 October 2022. You can respond by: filling in our online form emailing your views to EAConsultation@electoralcommission.org.uk or writing to us at: Electoral Administration Guidance Team The Electoral Commission 3 Bunhill Row London EC1Y 8YZ Your feedback will inform the further development of the guidance, in advance of our statutory consultation which we expect to run from 28 November 2022 until 10 January 2023. If you have any questions or require any help to be able to respond, please get in touch on 0333 103 1928. How we developed the draft guidance To help inform the guidance, we have engaged with a range of civil society, charity and third-sector organisations across the whole of the UK. These represent people with physical and learning disabilities, mental health conditions, and invisible disabilities. We asked them about: the barriers voters with disabilities experience at the polling station possible solutions to make voting more accessible how the changes made by the Elections Act could be used to improve the accessibility of elections We also shared information via Department of Levelling Up, Housing and Community (DLUHC) officials with members of their Access to Elections working group. This provided the opportunity for members to get in touch with us directly and be involved in developing the guidance. In addition, we discussed the changes introduced by the Elections Act and the development of the guidance with representatives of the Society of Local Authority Chief Executives and Senior Managers (Solace) and members of the Elections, Registration and Referendums Working Group (ERRWG), which includes the Association of s (AEA), electoral administrators and government officials. What the draft guidance includes The draft guidance covers: Understanding and identifying the barriers to voting faced by those with disabilities or specific accessibility needs

Providing accessible information about what to expect in the polling station, how to vote in a polling station and what support is available. The equipment that should be made available as a minimum at the polling station, and what other equipment or support may also be helpful to provide. Providing specific accessibility training for polling station staff, and what that training should cover. Working with civil society, third sector and charity organisations to raise awareness of accessibility measures among voters. Some groups we engaged with also raised points about how voter information could be made more accessible, such as about different types of elections and how to register to vote and apply for an absent vote. Whilst this is not in the scope of this specific guidance, we are considering how we can address this in our wider guidance and resources for voters. Also raised consistently by those we spoke to was early and accessible information before elections about the candidates and parties standing, and their policies and manifestos. Whilst the management of this information is the responsibility of political parties and candidates, we have previously called for action in this area. We have recommended that political parties make sure their information is easy to read and understand; ensure they send their information in good time so everyone can read it; and publish accessible manifestos at the same time as other versions. We will continue to encourage parties and candidates to do this and we will highlight this feedback in our continued engagement with political parties in particular.

View the draft guidance

Background Who we are . We provide comprehensive guidance for ROs, which covers information about what they should be doing to help support voters with disabilities to participate. It includes specific resources to help and support voters with disabilities at polling stations. For example, we produce a polling station accessibility checklist to highlight practical accessibility considerations, and a handbook for polling station staff with information on how to ensure voting at the polling station is accessible. We have also worked with RNIB and Mencap to create videos for use during polling station staff training, to help staff better understand the challenges voters with disabilities may face when going to a polling station. You can find out more about our role and responsibilities on our website.

Elections Act 2022 The UK Elections Act 2022 includes provisions relating to assisting people with disabilities to vote whether they are blind, partially sighted or have another disability.

1 These provisions will require ROs to provide such equipment as is reasonable for the purposes of enabling, or making it easier for, relevant persons to vote independently and in secret. Relevant persons are defined in the legislation as those who find it difficult or impossible to vote due to blindness, partial sight or another disability. Independently refers to voting without assistance from another person, not without any form of assistive device. These provisions will apply to: UK parliamentary general elections Police and Crime Commissioner elections in England and Wales Northern Ireland Assembly and local elections Local elections in England

ROs are personally responsible for the conduct of elections. In Northern Ireland, the Chief Electoral Officer (CEO) is the RO, so references to 'ROs' throughout this document and the guidance should be read to include the CEO.

1. Elections Act (legislation.gov.uk)

■ Back to content at footnote 1

Executive Team and Senior Leadership Team | Electoral Commission Search
Executive Team and Senior Leadership Team You are in the section Home In this section Our Executive Team Our Senior Leadership Team Our salaries Travel and subsistence Interests, gifts and hospitality Chief Executive's external meetings Related content Interim corporate plan 2020/21 - 2024/25 Our interim corporate plan was published following the 2019 UK Parliament general election. It has now been replaced by our 2022/23 to 2026/27 plan. Our spending about our spending estimates, reports and accounts Our Commissioners Register to vote All you need to register to vote is 5 minutes and your National Insurance number.

6. Making sure electoral law is fair and effective in Wales | Electoral Commission

Search

6. Making sure electoral law is fair and effective in Wales You are in the Corporate Plan for Wales 2022/23 to 2026/27 section Home Our plans and priorities Corporate Plan for Wales 2022/23 to 2026/27 On this page Supporting effective consideration and implementation of legislation in the Senedd and the UK and Scottish parliaments Engaging with governments' current electoral law reform agendas, while continuing to make the case for further reform Continuing to provide expert advice on the practicability and impact of any changes which could be made to improve the electoral system First published: 25 April 2022 Last updated: 25 April 2022 Summary Our electoral system is underpinned by a legal framework which establishes how elections are delivered. It sets out who is allowed to vote and the various ways they can cast their vote. It sets out who can stand for elections, who can campaign, and how much they can spend. And it sets out how electoral administrators should deliver elections, including counting and declaring the results. Given its cross cutting impact, we want to work with parliamentarians and governments to improve electoral law so that it is fit for purpose, reduces complexity, inefficiencies and risk, and enables innovation. We will work with others to reform electoral law by: supporting effective consideration and implementation of legislation in the Senedd and the UK and Scottish parliaments engaging with governments' current electoral law reform agendas, while continuing to make the case for further reform continuing to provide expert advice on the practicability and impact of any changes which could be made to improve the electoral system Supporting effective consideration and implementation of legislation in the Senedd and the UK and Scottish parliaments We will continue to scrutinise new electoral legislation and provide expert briefings to Welsh Government and the Senedd, and to other UK governments and parliaments, on legislative proposals. We will focus on providing an evidence-based analysis of any proposed changes to electoral law, to support informed consideration of any changes. We will also work to support effective implementation of any new legislation, ensuring that voters, electoral administrators and campaigners understand what it means for them in each case. We will work closely with Welsh Government and the Senedd as it develops legislation for Welsh elections. This may include reform ahead of the next local government elections in May 2022, a wider local government elections Bill and reform of Senedd elections ahead of the 2026 polls. We will provide advice on the practical implementation of proposals which reflect the views of the electoral community. Through our role in designing forms and our public awareness activity, we will also play a key role in implementing any changes, such as making the postal voting system more accessible. We also expect to play a key role in evaluating and publishing a report on the piloting of any reform measures, which may include early voting centres, mobile polling stations and voting in educational establishments. Engaging with governments' current electoral law reform agendas, while continuing to make the case for further reform There is an urgent need for the Welsh Government and other UK governments to simplify and modernise electoral law. It is increasingly complex, which is not just a technical or legal problem. There are real costs and consequences for voters, campaigners and electoral administrators, as well as for the regulators and enforcement bodies which struggle to uphold and enforce the law. The UK's Law Commissions have produced a blueprint for simplified and modernised electoral law, which is supported by us, parliamentary select committees, electoral administrators, electoral lawyers and academics. We will continue to make the case for the implementation of this electoral law reform, while supporting parliamentarians and governments with reform when it happens. Continuing to provide expert advice on the practicability and impact of any changes which could be made to improve the electoral system. We want to maintain high levels of public confidence in the electoral process, including perceptions of the legitimacy of the results. We will continue to research public attitudes to understand how the electoral system could be improved to meet voters' needs. We will also continue to conduct research on the delivery of and participation in elections and referendums, and use this research to identify reforms to electoral law and process that would improve them. We will continue to support governments to successfully implement changes to electoral law, and will provide evidence-based recommendations, expertise and practical advice. Technological advances in digital campaigning bring new challenges, and we know that lack of transparency is already a concern for voters. Results from our 2021 public opinion tracking survey show that 33% of people in Wales disagree that they can find out who has produced the political information they see online (37% UK wide). And, 37% are concerned about how or why online political ads are targeted at them (40% UK wide). We will therefore continue support to the Welsh Government and other UK governments to implement our recommendations on digital campaigning, while encouraging further improvements.

Navigation 5. Supporting local electoral services delivery and resilience in Wales
Section 5 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan for Wales
7. A modern and sustainable electoral system in Wales
Section 7 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan for Wales

You are in the Party panels section Home How we make decisions Party panels On this page Minutes, and actions of the meeting and matters arising (ECPPP 01/09/2015) Strategic Review EU Referendum Bill Transition to IER Enforcement Policy Consultation Commission Update Report Any other business Date of the next meeting Actions First published: 1 December 2015 Last updated: 2 September 2019 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting Conservative Party (Chair): Andrew Stedman (AS) Daisy Woods (DW) Labour: Margaret Lynch (ML) Mike Creighton (MC) Liberal Democrats: Darren Briddock (DB) Plaid Cymru: Geraint Day (GD) Scottish National Party: Scott Martin, Scottish National Party (SM) Electoral Commission: Claire Bassett, Chief Executive (CB) Alex Robertson, Director of Communication (AR) Bob Posner, Director of Party & Election Finance and Legal Counsel (BP) Lisa Camps, Communications Officer (LC) Minutes, and actions of the meeting and matters arising (ECPPP 01/09/2015) The minutes from 01/09/2015 were agreed with no clarifications sought or noted. There were no other matters arising from the minutes. Strategic Review CB explained that, as part of her role, she will be conducting a strategic review of the role of the Commission and its remit. PPP members were asked to consider what they want from the Commission going forward so that this can be discussed at the group's next meeting. MC suggested consideration might want to be given to the role of the Commission in the administration of elections, specifically around the Commission having more power to intervene. AS suggested that the Commission might want to consider looking at gaining more statutory powers over local authorities, especially where they might be underperforming. He cited electoral registration as a particular area where this might be effective. CB replied that these are good indications of the kind of conversations the Commission is looking to have, but added that we do need to be mindful that any changes will need buy-in from Parliament. EU Referendum Bill AR updated that, following a likely amendment to the Bill, the Commission will now be able to designate on one side of the campaign only if appropriate. AR explained that, once the Bill becomes an Act and provisions are commenced by order, an initial tranche of guidance will be published. On the voting age for the referendum, AR reported that there are a lot of measures that will need to be carried out to effectively enact votes at 16, including secondary legislation and changes to the Government Digital Service registration system. He added that, when the referendum date is known, the Commission will be issuing an assessment of how much of the preparation has taken place and what will still need to be done. ML asked if the timescale was longer for the Scottish Independence Referendum and AR replied that it was a lot longer. MC asked if there are any legal problems around 16 year olds registering to vote, and BP responded that there are sensitivities around holding data on 16 year olds, but that measures were put in place at the Scottish Independence Referendum to manage this. Transition to IER GD noted a lot of awareness raising usually takes place in universities but not as much seems to be targeted at young people that aren't in education. AR responded that the main way to remind people to register is through Electoral Registration Officers and that their activity is aimed at everyone. Then, in addition, the Commission runs campaigns targeted at those groups that have been found to be typically under-registered, of which students are one. Enforcement Policy Consultation BP explained that the Enforcement Policy came in in 2010 and that, now five years have passed, it is felt that it's time to revisit the policy through consultation. He added that there will be a focus on targeting resources most effectively, and gave as an example the fact the team currently spend a lot of time reminding people to meet requirements, whereas this time might be more effectively spent on more substantive areas of work. He explained that, if appropriate, the revised Policy will be brought in before the polls in May 2016. AS commented that cases can take quite a long time to be resolved and that this can prolong the period of worry for the party volunteers involved. BP responded that, although the team need to be thorough, he is hoping to streamline the process on more straightforward matters. MC asked if the Commission will be looking at the impact of other legislation on its Enforcement Policy. BP responded that there are sometimes overlapping regulatory regimes and the Commission is mindful of this. Commission Update Report ML asked if the Commission is happy that everything is in place to ensure the register is complete and accurate, and added that she is concerned that the register could 'erode' over time. BP responded that all statutory duties on local authorities / EROs remain and that the canvass will still take place. He added that the Commission has a responsibility to monitor performance to seek to ensure that EROs work effectively, particularly as local authority resources get tighter. AR commented that, now the transition to IER is complete, the Commission now has the opportunity to make registration better, and cited the use of behavioural insights and the sharing of best practice across local authorities as ways in which this might be done. ML mentioned that the issue of CORE had been raised again recently, and wondered how much longer local authorities could continue to compile separate registers. AS reported that parties have been discussing a standard data format for the register and that he and others will be meeting with Paul Avery at the Cabinet Office to discuss it. BP explained that the Commission are planning to make updates to PEF online as it can currently be difficult to use. He added that the Commission also want to introduce online guidance and forms, but that the project would require funding. DB responded that, on the spreadsheet version of the form, there are four dates required for every transaction, and that two of them (incurred date and invoice date) aren't actually required in statute. He also added that there are different fields in the spreadsheet to those on PEF Online. BP responded that this can be looked into. AS commented that he was disappointed to see that Commission had said in July in its post elections report that there should be full compliance now that PPERA had been around for 15 years, considering that accounting units are run by volunteers with limited terms. BP replied that the Commission does recognise that there are occasions where compliance might be more challenging. Members asked about the online consultation on new party registration applications. BP explained that there is currently a pilot whereby new applications are put online and people can them comment. BP agreed to circulate the details of how members could get involved with the consultation. Any other business ML explained that there is a difficulty around banker's drafts from the Cooperative Bank being accepted as payment for election deposits, and asked if the Commission had looked into enabling electronic transfers. BP replied that he would feed this back to the Electoral Administration team. AS commented that problems are posed by the fact that letters from local authorities confirming that someone will be added to the register don't confirm when they will be added, which causes challenges around the permissibility of donations. AR responded that the template letter has been changed so that the date will now be included. Date of the next meeting The date of the next meeting is 8 March 2016 – SNP to Chair Actions Action Owner Status Commission to circulate details of the Party Registration Consultation to members BP Email sent 3 December 2015 Related content Party registration decisions View our decisions on political party names, descriptions and emblems View current applications View the political party names, descriptions and emblems which we are currently considering as part of our assessment process Donations and loans Find out about donations and loans to a political party, individual or other organisation Registers of unincorporated associations Download and view the registers of unincorporated associations

Looking ahead to 2020/21 and using our resources to support the delivery of our goals | Electoral Commission Search Looking ahead to 2020/21 and using our resources to support the delivery of our goals You are in the Annual Report and Accounts 2019/20 section Home Our plans and priorities Annual Report and Accounts 2019/20 On this page Looking ahead to 2020/21 Using our resources to support the delivery of our goals Our environmental impact Using our financial resources efficiently First published: 30 June 2020 Last updated: 17 August 2020 Looking ahead to 2020/21 One of our challenges for the year ahead is to ensure local authorities can continue delivering well-run elections. We supported the UK Government's decision to postpone the polls scheduled for May 2020, due to the Covid-19 pandemic. There are significant challenges to delivering the combination of polls now scheduled for May 2021. We are working with the UK's governments and supporting local authorities, to ensure they can deliver the polls successfully, safely and in line with relevant guidelines. There is already pressure on local authority resources because of outdated and complex legislation. There are more than 50 Acts and 170 Statutory Instruments relating to the delivery of elections. This leads to real costs, consequences and risks for voters, candidates and campaigners, regulators and governments. Proposals from the UK's Law Commissions provide a well-researched basis for further work. In 2020-21, we will continue calling on the UK's governments and parliaments to take these forward. While annual canvass reforms in Great Britain are welcome, governments need to do more to modernise the registration system. The existence of more than 370 separate registers that do not communicate with each other leaves the system vulnerable, while voters being unable to check online whether they are already registered leads to duplicate applications before every election. In the coming year, we will continue to encourage the UK's governments to commit to making registration more automated and connected to address these challenges. The nature of political campaigning continues to change, with parties spending a greater portion of their advertising budgets on digital advertising. In response to these changes, we need the right powers and tools to continue regulating political finance effectively. In 2020-21, we will work with all concerned to encourage compliance and we will run a new campaign to help voters understand digital campaigning rules. We welcome the Committee for Standards in Public Life (CSPL) review of electoral regulation in the UK. The nature of political campaigning has significantly changed, as has the public's expectations since the UK Parliament wrote the rules 20 years ago. We will be ready to provide CSPL and others with information and advice to help deliver outcomes and recommendations that best enable people to continue recognising the UK as a leading and robust democracy. Whilst acknowledging the likely continuing impact of the Covid-19 pandemic, our 2020-21 work programme includes: continuing with our transition towards providing our guidance in a new modern, more accessible format working with partners on improving the accessibility of elections so that everyone has equal access to election information and processes supporting the UK's governments' annual canvass reforms supporting the 2021 canvass in Northern Ireland developing a strategy to support increased resilience in the delivery of electoral services at a local level publishing new performance standards for EROs engaging with the Scottish and Welsh governments' policy and legislative agendas for changes to the franchise for their elections reviewing our compliance with our Welsh language obligations, to a standard the Welsh Language Commissioner is satisfied with completing a review of political parties' and campaigners' registered descriptions to make sure only those meeting the legal tests are included delivering a new political finance online system to support parties and campaigners to deliver their financial returns efficiently building the capacity to prosecute suspected offences and consulting on the way we approach the use of prosecutions engaging with government policy and legislative agendas for political finance strengthening our engagement with social media companies and other providers of digital advertising, to ensure their services and policies support transparency for election and referendum campaign activity enhancing our public awareness activity to help people understand digital campaigning rules and by producing education materials for young people improving the accessibility of our information by developing our website further including work to share open data developing a new five-year Corporate Plan implementing our new people strategy delivering digitally-enabled business change to reflect the expectations on a modern employer continuing to work with the Scottish and Welsh parliaments to implement our new accountability arrangements reviewing how we deliver legal services that effectively meet our changing requirements reviewing quality management processes across our main services and functions Using our resources to support the delivery of our goals Our people Staff relations and engagement The expertise, hard work and high level of commitment of our workforce enable successful performance and delivery of our Corporate Plan. We value the positive and constructive relationship we have with colleagues and work hard to maintain it. Our staff engagement group meets on a regular basis to seek input from colleagues on emerging issues and help to maintain good relations with staff. We also actively encourage staff involvement as part of the day-to-day process of line management, and we share information on current and prospective developments widely and regularly. To support this, we have a recognition agreement with the Public and Commercial Services Union. We completed our latest staff survey in March 2020 and 86% of employees responded. Our employee engagement score was 72% (up from 65% in 2018-19). Our scores compared most positively to the Civil Service benchmark in areas such as our people agreeing that: we took action after the previous survey they feel a strong personal attachment to our organisation and its work they would recommend the Electoral Commission as a place to work The areas where we compared least positively to the Civil Service benchmark and we need to improve on include people agreeing that: there are opportunities for them to progress in their careers at the Electoral Commission they have the IT systems and equipment they need to do their jobs effectively we are committed to creating a diverse and inclusive workplace Equal opportunities and diversity We are committed to the principle of equality of opportunity and the value of diversity. Our single equality scheme sets out our duties and commitments across the whole of the UK and includes an action plan that we update annually. The scheme reflects the public sector equality duty, which prohibits discrimination on the grounds of age, disability, gender reassignment, marriage and civil partnership, pregnancy and maternity, race, religion or belief, sex and sexual orientation. We have designed our scheme to ensure: that everyone who is eligible is able to participate in the democratic process, by identifying barriers, making recommendations and working with others to remove them that we embed equality and diversity in all our work, treat all customers fairly and with respect, and are transparent in the decisions we make equality of opportunity for everyone and that all staff are treated fairly and with respect We completed equality impact assessments on relevant policies and procedures throughout 2019-20. The equality impact assessments support a commitment to evidence-based policy making. In addition to arrangements for consultation and monitoring, the assessment process helps to develop effective policies that meet the needs of people in respect to any protected characteristics. Our staff group on equality, diversity and inclusion met regularly and supported our activities in these areas. Our latest staff survey includes questions about equality, diversity and inclusion. Results showed that an area of concern for our staff is that our organisation does not reflect the diversity of the people we serve, and they do not think we are doing enough to show our commitment to creating a diverse and inclusive workplace. We will start to address these concerns as we embed a new people strategy in 2020, which includes work to review and improve our recruitment and selection procedures. Occupational health and safety We review our health and safety policy annually. We also have procedures, guidance and risk assessments in place to cover our core activities. A health and safety group oversees our arrangements. They meet regularly and report to our senior leadership group. However, primary responsibility for health and safety sits with people managers. We initiate independent health and safety audits of our premises each year, which involves inspecting working environments and reviewing safety management systems. These audits tell us if our arrangements are suitable and highlight any improvements we need to make. Findings from audits completed in 2019-20 were generally satisfactory and arrangements were compliant with legislation and best practice. Our environmental impact Our environmental impact We recognise that delivering our activities has an impact on the environment and we continue to work towards minimising this impact. The following information summarises our use of energy and water, and the production and disposal of waste material. We lease office space in four cities from a combination of public and private sector property owners. We do not have direct control of utility supplier and waste disposal targets and management at our premises. For a number of our offices, the property owner manages energy and water consumption as well as waste disposal and recovers costs through a consolidated service charge. This report includes consumption and waste disposal data from the London office only, which is our largest property and the base for the majority of our staff. Offices in Edinburgh, Cardiff and Belfast have relocated to smaller, more environmentally efficient premises in the last 10 years. The lease on our London office ends in 2020. After reviewing our accommodation options, we have decided to renew the lease. Other initiatives are in place, in order to help minimise environmental impact. Since 2011-12, we have: reduced printed resources provided to electoral administrators and other groups, focusing on electronic provision wherever possible encouraged the use of video and teleconferencing to avoid unnecessary travel with consequential CO₂ emissions operated recycling facilities in all our offices upgraded to more energy efficient information communication technology equipment Summary (London office) Area: greenhouse gas emissions 2019-20 Actual 1 2019-20 Target * 2018-19 2017-18 CO₂e in tonnes Not available 211 187 235 Area: estate energy 2019-20 Actual 1 2019-20 Target * 2018-19 2017-18 Consumption (kWh) Not available 661,061 639,526 682,595 Expenditure Not available Not available Not available Not available Area: estate waste 2019-20 Actual 1 2019-20 Target * 2018-19 2017-18 Amount (tonnes) Not available 9.84 10.00 9.67 Expenditure Not available £1,111 £1,227 £994 Area: estate water 2019-20 Actual 1 2019-20 Target * 2018-19 2017-18 Consumption Not available 795 m³ 742 m³ 847 m³ Expenditure Not available Not available Not available Not available *The annual target shown is calculated as an average of the previous two years. Emissions report (London office) Greenhouse gas emissions: Non-financial indicators (CO₂e in tonnes) 2019-20 2018-19 2017-18 2016-17 Total gross emissions Not available 187 235 268 Gross emissions - fossil fuel consumption Not available 151 198 227 Gross emissions - travel Not available 36 37 41 Related energy consumption (kWh) 2019-20 2018-19 2017-18 2016-17 Electricity Not available 446,018 487,611 495,414 Gas Not available 193,508 211,990 187,181 Financial indicators (£) 2019-20 2018-19 2017-18 2016-17 Expenditure on energy Not available

Not available Not available Not available Expenditure on travel £138,514 £125,450 £113,852 £166,585 Performance commentary on emissions Reported fossil fuel consumption has decreased year on year, an ongoing effect of the property owner's introduction of measures to reduce levels of electricity consumption, including lower 'out of hours' operation of plant and machinery and the introduction of energy-efficient lighting. Waste report (London office) General waste and recycling figures are based on a proportion of total building waste and are not directly controllable by us. Confidential waste disposal for the organisation is handled separately from that for other building occupants. We shred the confidential waste we generate on-site before it is recycled into low-grade paper Non financial indicators (tonnes) 2019-20 2018-19 2017-18 2016-17 Total waste Not available 10.00 10.01 9.67 Non-hazardous waste: Confidential 2.13 5.58 2.81 2.48 Non-hazardous waste: General waste reused or recycled Not available 7.22 7.26 7.19 financial indicators 2019-20 2018-19 2017-18 2016-17 Total disposal cost Not available Not available Not available Not available Confidential £1,169 £1,227 £1,134 £994 General waste reused or recycled Not available Not available Not available The figure for the general and recycled waste is based on a proportion of total building waste. All general waste produced in the building, including that generated by us, is sent to a nearby energy from waste plant, instead of landfill sites. Using our financial resources efficiently Using our financial resources efficiently In 2019-20, the resource initially made available to us by the UK Parliament was £19.4m for voted activity. We received non-voted funding of £200k to pay Commissioners' fees. In January 2020, £2.8m was added to our resource to fund expenditure on the 2019 UK Parliamentary general election, and our Annually Managed Expenditure (AME) budget was increased by £285k to manage the risk of variations in legal provision. This augmented our net cash requirements by £3m. In achieving our objectives, we have used £20.0m worth of resources for the whole year. This was out of the available sum of £22.2m approved by the UK Parliament in our Supplementary Estimate (HC 64) for the net resource requirement. The graphic below summarises our financial performance on the 'voted' element of our budget. Financial performance 2019-20 Our financial performance follows our strategic performance, being dominated by a shifting electoral timetable.
For the year 2019-20: our staff costs represent 47% of our expenditure, which is the same as 2018-19 our operating costs rose from 28% to 36% of our allocated budget due to additional public awareness work for the European Parliamentary elections and the UK Parliamentary general election we saw a similar spend for EU referendum operating costs, which represent the costs of litigation defended net of costs received during the year our capital expenditure had a slight increase from 4.3% to 4.5% We report our underspend on the Treasury's usual measure ("R-DEL excluding depreciation") as this reflects in-year operational decisions. In 2019-20 this was £1.5m against the voted budget of £20.3m (7.4%). This was predominantly due to unused contingency and other savings in delivering the unscheduled UK Parliamentary general election. The cancellation, in March 2020 of the May 2020 polls, by the UK Government also caused the deferral of significant costs into 2020-21, increasing the underspend in this year. Excluding these exceptional factors, the underspend was £0.369m (1.8%), meeting our corporate objective. However due to these exceptional factors we have chosen to report that objective as unmet within our performance report. The underspend is comprised of: £599k underspend on the UK Parliamentary general election £589k in reduced campaign spending due to the cancellation of the May 2020 elections £96k in reduced staffing costs £76k of unexpected income from the Senedd and Scottish Parliament. £103k as a combination of smaller underspends £33k of unclaimed policy development grant Other £235k in depreciation due to reduced capital spend £415k in provisions due to lower than expected legal costs £111k in capital projects The £21k underspend against non-voted funding is due to lower than expected costs for Commissioners. Our income in our accounts relates to charges for registering political parties and work completed for the Senedd and Scottish Parliament. We collect fines raised against political parties and individuals for failure to comply with the rules on party and election finance and then surrender these to the Consolidated Fund as required by law. The penalties due was £232,980 in 2019-20 received by 31 March 2020 and surrendered to the Consolidated Fund. In addition to monitoring performance against budgets, we also managed within our cash limits set by Parliament. We required cash amounting to £20.2m in 2019-20 to finance our voted activities, which was £1.5m less than the sum of £21.7m approved by the UK Parliament in our Supplementary Estimate. The reconciliation of net resources outturn to net cash requirement provides a reconciliation from our outturn to the net cash we required in-year. The Statement of Cash Flows shows that the cash balance as at 31 March 2020 was £197k. The Statement of Financial Position as at 31 March 2019 shows negative taxpayers' equity of £0.4m due to outstanding invoices accrued for. Supplier payments Although we are independent of government, we aim to comply with the Prompt Payment Code that operates across the public sector. The target is to pay undisputed invoices within 30 days. In 2019-20, we paid 81.6% of invoices (99.9% in 2018-19) within 30 days. The reduction was due to a required change in process for purchase orders, which is now in place meaning we anticipate performance now increasing again. Freedom of Information, complaints and parliamentary questions We are committed to the principles of openness and transparency in public life and acknowledge the duty to provide information to the public. In 2019-20, we received 287 Freedom of Information (FOI) requests, a significant increase on the 224 we received in the previous year. We responded to 59.4% of these within the 20 working days statutory timeframe (against a target of 90%) due to an increased number of large and complex requests during the electoral events. The proportion of large, complex and repeated requests has also increased compared to previous years. We responded to 13 FOI internal review requests, 4.5% of the total requests answered. The Information Commissioner's Office (ICO) notified us of six complaints, one related to a subject access request and five related to FOI requests; this is less than 2% of the total FOI requests answered in 2019-20. We received 20 subject access requests, compared to five in 2018-19. We responded to all of these promptly. We received one complaint and this is pending closure from the ICO. We also received six requests for erasure under the General Data Protection Regulation/Data Protection Act 2018. The holding of the European Parliamentary elections and UK Parliamentary general election contributed to most of the increase in the volume of requests we received in 2019-20. We handled 51 complaints, compared to 37 in 2018-19. We upheld three complaints and partially upheld a further three. These complaints were mainly due to administrative errors and delays in responding to queries. We received 11 requests for review. While none of these reviews changed the original outcome of the complaint, they did enable further explanation and assistance. The Parliamentary Ombudsman is considering one complaint and we are awaiting the outcome of that. In addition, we received correspondence from 709 members of the public complaining about difficulties in being able to vote due to the Brexit-related short lead in notice to the European Parliamentary elections. We responded to 49 parliamentary questions during 2019-20, including questions about digital campaigning, electoral fraud, the accuracy and completeness of the electoral registers and the effectiveness of electoral law. Bridget Phillipson MP, a member of the Speaker's Committee, was our spokesperson in the UK Parliament and answered questions on our behalf. Supply estimate for 2020-21 Our supply estimate for 2020-21 (HC303) provides for a net resource requirement of £21.9m. The Speaker's Committee approved this on 29 April 2020. There is no reason to believe that future approvals will not be forthcoming. We plan to use these resources to continue delivering our four goals around the delivery of elections, the regulation of political finance, the use of our expertise to improve democratic processes and the best use of our resources.

1. Due to Covid-19 restrictions, the data was not available from our landlord at the time of publishing. We will publish this data on our website in due course.

■ Back to content at footnote 1 a b c d Related content Testing the EU referendum question Find out about our testing of the EU referendum question Report: Voting in 2017 Read our report about voting at the general election in 2017 Report: How the 2017 UK general election was run Read our report about how the 2017 general election was run Results and turnout at the 2017 UK general election View the results and turnout at the 2017 general election

Changes to legal requirements for parties and non-party campaigners | Electoral Commission Search Changes to legal requirements for parties and non-party campaigners You are in the Elections Act section Home Elections Act On this page Changes Our role First published: 5 July 2021 Last updated: 2 February 2023 Summary From November 2022, there are new legal requirements for political parties and non-party campaigners (NPCs). Changes Political parties There is now a new registration requirement for political parties. Parties wishing to register with us are required to declare whether they have assets or liabilities over £500 and where they do, provide a record of these assets and liabilities. The declarations and records will be published on our registers . Further information about this new requirement can be found in our guidance . Parties are no longer able to register with us if they are already registered as an NPC. NPCs There is now a new registration threshold for NPCs at UK Parliamentary general elections. NPCs are required to register with us if they spend over £10,000, either in England or spread across the UK. These NPCs will then need to provide financial returns when they reach the existing reporting thresholds. The reporting threshold is £10,000 in Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales, and £20,000 in England. During a regulated period, certain categories of campaigners will be banned from spending more than £700. For example, this includes overseas groups campaigning an UK election. NPCs are no longer able to register with us if they are already registered as a political party. Our role Our public register has been updated to reflect the asset and liabilities changes for political parties, and the changes to NPC registration thresholds. We have also updated the website that parties and NPCs use to submit applications (PEF Online) as well as our printable forms, to facilitate the new requirements. The changes to do with registration of parties and NPCs came into force on Thursday 24 November. We have published an updated suite of guidance on party registration, including the new rules for registration of new parties. We will produce a Code of Practice on controlled expenditure, which will include guidance on the NPC changes. You can read the draft version of the NPC Code of Practice . Related content Elections Act about the UK Government's Elections Act and what it means for voting and campaigning About the Elections Act about the Elections Bill, including the measures it contains and which elections it applies to. Changes to notional spending Read about the proposals to clarify the rules that relate to notional spending for candidates and agents. The Electoral Commission's ability to bring prosecutions about the proposal that would stop us from being able to bring prosecutions against those who break electoral law relating to parties and campaigners.

How investigations work | Electoral Commission Search How investigations work You are in the Investigations section Home Investigations

On this page Why we investigate Who we investigate How and why we work with the police When we investigate The investigation process Concluding an investigation The sanctioning process Our sanctions First published: 9 December 2021 Last updated: 9 December 2021 Our role As the regulator of political finance in the UK, we ensure that parties and campaigners follow the law. If we believe that the law may have been broken we take action so that voters, parties and campaigners can be confident in the fairness of the system. There is more detail about investigations and sanctions in our Enforcement Policy . Why we investigate The Political Parties Elections and Referendums Act (PPERA) sets out the law and our role in enforcing it. We produce guidance, but Parliament makes the law. The law for parties covers: money spent on campaigning ahead of elections all donations and loans keeping registered party officer details up to date annual accounts For other campaigners, the controls are less wide-ranging but there are still legal obligations around financial transparency. We aim to ensure that: the law is followed all parties and campaigners abide by the financial rules voters can be confident in the integrity and transparency of party and election finance in the UK Where we do find offences have taken place, it is also important that voters know that there are consequences for those who break the law. Who we investigate We regulate the finances of registered political parties throughout the year, and non-party campaigners around general elections and elections to the devolved parliaments. We also regulate the donations made to regulated donees, which include: elected officials members of political parties members associations unincorporated associations that make donations totalling more than £25,000 a year to political parties At referendums, we regulate the finances of campaigners too. How and why we work with the police The Political Parties Elections and Referendums Act (PPERA) contains a wide range of offences, and as the regulator, we will investigate most offences and take appropriate action. However, the police can also investigate all PPERA offences if they choose to. A small number of offences can only be investigated by the police. We work closely with the police to ensure that potential offences are investigated, and that the appropriate action is taken. Occasionally, we may notify the police of offences if we do not have the power to take action, or we believe a police investigation is more suitable. Police investigations may lead to criminal prosecutions if appropriate.

When we investigate We open investigations where we have reasonable grounds to suspect that an offence has occurred, and it is proportionate and in the public interest to investigate. We will always consider whether a situation can be resolved without the need of an investigation if that is more proportionate or in the public interest. To decide whether to open an investigation, we look at the evidence and circumstances as part of a process called an assessment. We consider a number of factors when deciding whether to open an investigation. These include, but are not limited to: the seriousness of the suspected offence the strength of the evidence the impact, including the deterrence effect on others, of an investigation and/or any sanction that might be imposed the compliance history of the person(s) who may have committed the suspected offence any steps already taken to rectify the breach The investigation process The purpose of an investigation is to establish whether or not the suspected offence has taken place, and if it has, who committed it. During an investigation, we gather evidence about potential offences from those we believe hold relevant information about what happened. When doing this, we actively look for evidence to prove or disprove our reasonable suspicion that an offence has occurred.

Evidence-gathering can take many forms, from asking people to provide information voluntarily, through to interviewing witnesses or suspects or requiring evidence to be provided to us. For example, we have the power to issue a legal notice to any person or organisation that we believe to hold relevant documents or information. That notice sets out what the recipient must supply us with and the deadline for doing so. Failure to comply with the notice is a criminal offence, and so is knowingly or recklessly providing false information to us during an investigation. Also, if someone doesn't comply with our notice, we can apply for a disclosure order from a court to gain the relevant information. The time it takes to complete an investigation varies on a case-by-case basis. It depends on a range of factors, such as the number and complexity of the potential offences, and the level of cooperation from those we're investigating or from witnesses. Our priority is always to conduct a fair and thorough investigation, and we always try to conclude investigations as quickly as possible. This is both in the public interest and the interests of those involved.

Concluding an investigation

At the end of an investigation there are three possible outcomes:

- We are satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that an offence has been committed
- We are not satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that an offence has been committed
- We make no determination of offence. This means that after opening the investigation, we decided that it was not in the public interest to continue the investigation, and decided to close it without making a determination of offence

The sanctioning process

If we find an offence has been committed, we will consider whether a sanction is appropriate. Someone not involved in the investigation will make this decision. If we decide to impose sanctions, we issue an initial notice to the person we propose to sanction, setting out: our proposed sanction the reasons for it including the grounds for finding an offence the timeframe for the recipient to respond

The person or organisation then has a period of time to make representations, either about the finding of offence, or the proposed sanction. After considering any representations, we take a final decision about the offence and the sanction. We may conclude that the offence did not take place, or we can change the level of any fine, or decide not to impose any sanction. If we remain satisfied that an offence was committed and a sanction is appropriate, we will issue a final notice. This sets out why the sanction was imposed, how and when to pay any fine or take any required action, and how to appeal to the court. We publish the outcome of every investigation, setting out what we found and whether a sanction was imposed. Where an investigation highlights important lessons for others about the law, or providing more details about it may strengthen confidence in the law being followed, we may choose to publish a report summarising the investigation.

Our sanctions

A sanction could be a fine of between £200 and £20,000. Or we may require the person or organisations to improve their internal compliance procedures, spending money on internal improvements rather than on fines. This might involve:

- A compliance notice, where we set out the action that the person or organisation must take so that the breach of the law does not continue or recur.
- A restoration notice, where we set out the action that the person or organisation must take to restore the position, as far as possible, to what it would have been had no offence occurred.
- Enforcement undertakings, where the person or organisation that has, or may have, committed offences, offers to take specific actions within an agreed timescale to prevent, as far as possible, any potential offences continuing or recurring.

We then decide whether to accept the undertakings. If the people or organisations do not implement the requirements of compliance or restoration notices, or the elements of their undertakings within the agreed timeframe, we can issue further sanctions relating to the offences.

Codes of Practice on spending by candidates and political parties at elections to the National Assembly for Wales: a consultation | Electoral Commission Search

Codes of Practice on spending by candidates and political parties at elections to the National Assembly for Wales: a consultation You are in the Our consultations section Home Our consultations On this page How to respond Introduction What this consultation is for Explaining the Codes of Practice Download the Codes The consultation First published: 25 October 2019 Last updated: 19 March 2020 How to respond This consultation closed on 31 January 2020. We will soon be publishing our consultation report. Introduction Elections legislation enables the Commission to prepare Codes of Practice about election spending for political parties and candidates. A Code of Practice is a statutory document that provides detailed practical guidance on how to comply with legal obligations. Our aims in preparing the Codes are: To provide guidance for candidates, their agents and political parties about what items of spending count towards the spending limits and are to be reported To provide enhanced clarity to political parties and candidates about when spending (including notional spending) should be in a candidate return and when it should be in a party return To ensure that there is clarity and consistency in the reporting of spending, including digital campaigning by parties and candidates. The Codes set out what is and isn't included in the categories of spending for elections that are listed in the legislation. The Codes also allow us to give guidance on the cases and circumstances when spending will be regarded as for the purposes of a candidate's election. These Codes, once finalised, will be presented to the Minister for Housing and Local Government for approval (with or without modification), before being laid before the National Assembly for Wales for approval. These Codes will apply to elections to the National Assembly for Wales. When in force, political parties and candidates must have regard to the Codes, particularly when organising their campaigns and when completing their spending returns after an election. Following the Codes will provide parties and candidates with a statutory defence. We have previously drafted and consulted on Codes of Practice for elections that fall within the remit of UK Parliament. These Codes have been submitted to the Minister for Cabinet Office to approve and lay before Parliament. The Scottish Parliament has responsibility for the law on Scottish Parliament and Scottish local government elections, and separate Codes for those elections would be needed. The Electoral Commission will be drafting codes for elections to the Scottish Parliament and we will consult on those separately. We would welcome views on the draft Codes for National Assembly for Wales elections from candidates and political parties in Scotland. There are number of similarities between elections to both legislatures, and we would find any feedback from stakeholders in Scotland valuable. What this consultation is for We are the independent body which oversees elections and regulates political finance in the UK. . Codes of practice for National Assembly for Wales elections We have the power under Schedule 8, paragraph 3 Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act (PPERA) 2000, to prepare a Code for political parties on what does and does not fall in Part 1 of that Schedule. The Welsh Government intend to amend the National Assembly for Wales (Representation of the People) Order 2007, to provide us with the formal power to draft a Code of Practice for candidates. The purpose of this consultation is to seek views to ensure that our aims are achieved in making the Codes as clear and comprehensive as possible, and to promote consistency in reporting. As part of this work we will be consulting with Government, political parties and other stakeholders from across the electoral community. Once the consultation process is completed and we have made any necessary changes to the Codes, they will be presented to the Minister for Housing and Local Government, and then will be laid before the National Assembly for Wales. The Codes we are currently consulting on for National Assembly for Wales elections, will not apply to other elections. We are consulting on these Codes now to ensure that the Code of Practice for both parties and candidates can be in force for the National Assembly for Wales elections in May 2021. Other Codes of Practice and consultations We prepared Codes of Practice for parties and candidates for UK Parliamentary elections and other elections that fall under the remit of UK Parliament. We consulted on these Codes, published our response to that consultation and presented the codes to the Minister for the Constitution in July 2019. These UK Codes will apply to elections to the UK Parliament, the Northern Ireland Assembly, local elections in England and to other elections in some circumstances. Responses received during the UK Codes consultation were analysed and several suggestions incorporated into the final version of the Codes. This included feedback on: transparency of spending on digital campaigning; costs of items used at several elections and the treatment of overheads. This feedback has been reflected in the Codes for National Assembly for Wales elections, and due to the fragmented nature of electoral law, we hope this will provide some consistency for parties and candidates across the various Codes we will have made.

Explaining the Codes of Practice How election spending works Spending by parties and candidates in the lead up to elections is regulated. The law places separate limits on how much candidates and parties can spend on campaigning. There are also controls on who can incur and pay for spending to make sure election spending is within the legal limits. Candidates at a National Assembly for Wales election can stand as a candidate in a constituency, or as a candidate on a regional list, or they can do both if the constituency is located within the region where they are standing.

Candidates that stand in a constituency and on a regional list are known as dual candidates. Campaign spending promoting the regional list candidates counts towards the party campaign spending limit and must be reported in the party return. Spending promoting the constituency candidate counts toward the separate candidate limit.

There may be some instances where campaign material promotes both the regional list candidates and a constituency candidate. In these instances, campaign spending may need to be split between the candidate return and the party return. Sometimes candidates make use of items their supporters (such as their party or a non-party campaigner) have transferred or made available to them at less than market value. The law requires an amount to be treated as spending by the candidate. This is called notional spending. A candidate's notional spending must be included in their spending return. A similar rule applies to parties. A party's notional spending must be reported in the party return. Parties and candidates are required to report spending within certain categories. These categories are set out in the legislation. Some of the categories for parties and candidates are the same and some are different. For example both sets of rules include categories called 'advertising' and 'unsolicited material'. However, the rules for political parties have additional separate categories for 'party political broadcasts' and 'manifestos'. What the codes do The Codes set out what should be included in each category of spending, as well as listing what isn't included. The Codes are designed to give illustrative examples rather than an exhaustive list. In particular, the Codes seek to address: the circumstances when something should be in a candidate return and when something should be reported by a political party; how to account for spending that promotes dual candidates (a candidate standing in both a constituency and in an electoral region). Why we are making the codes In writing these Codes we have drawn on our experience of regulating elections and reviewing spending returns. We learnt a lot from the feedback we received on the UK Codes. We asked parties about their experiences and incorporated their views. We want to gather more feedback through this consultation. The aim of the Codes is to ensure that the rules are as clear and comprehensive as possible. This should make it easier for candidates and parties to comply with the law. This will improve transparency, fairness, and consistency, and therefore improve public and campaigner confidence. For example: The Codes will promote consistency in reporting, so everyone knows what to expect in a spending return of a candidate or party. Parties and candidates should find it easier to comply with the law and this should make it easier for people to compare returns and spending, and check that the rules are being followed. In turn, this will increase transparency of election spending. Given the commentary around spending on digital campaigning at elections, the Codes are one way we are able to be clear where money spent on digital campaigning at elections should be reported. Since these are statutory Codes having been approved by the National Assembly for Wales, they will create an enforceable framework of how election spending law will be applied. This strengthens the regulatory framework of spending at elections. Download the Codes The consultation We are seeking your views on whether we have achieved our stated aims. Please answer the questions below in your consultation response. You are welcome to send us any comments you may have outside of the questions we have asked. The language in the Codes The Codes are a piece of statutory guidance. They will be laid before the National Assembly for Wales. This means we need to use formal language. However we also want the Codes to be easy to read and understand. Deciding where to account for an item of spending What is candidate spending and what is party spending? The political party and candidate Codes are intended to give clear guidance as to what should be in a candidate spending return and what should be in a party spending return. The candidate Code explains when something is candidate spending. You can find this section on pages 9-10 of the candidate Code under the heading, "When will expenses be regarded as incurred for the purposes of a candidate's election?" This will help the candidate and their agent know what is candidate spending. It will also help parties with knowing what is not candidate spending, and needs to be reported as party spending. This will include any spending by the party to promote regional party list candidates. In elections to the National Assembly for Wales, some campaign materials will encourage voters both to vote for a constituency candidate, and to vote for a political party in the regional elections using their second vote. Therefore, while some campaign activity can be regarded as used wholly for the purposes of the candidate's election in a constituency, in other circumstances the costs of campaign material will need to be split between the candidate and the party. The Codes will provide guidance on when to apportion costs between the two spending returns. Under our powers to draft Codes of Practice, we are limited in what we are able to include in the Codes about splitting spending between the candidate and party return. So we will provide further guidance on how to split spending alongside the Codes. The candidate Code also explains how to account for spending which promotes dual candidates (where a candidate stands both in a constituency, and on a regional party list). Examples in the Code The Codes currently include specific examples for illustration purposes. These can be found set out in the boxes on pages 10 to 11. So we can keep these up to date with, for example, technological advances and changes to the way candidates and parties campaign, the example boxes do not form part of the Code. The examples are currently contained in the body of the Codes and, as such, in order for them to be updated, the Codes would need to go back through the National Assembly for Wales approval process. The examples will therefore likely remain fixed, and will not be able to be updated over time. Alternatively, we could remove the examples boxes and put them in supporting guidance instead, which can be more easily updated as necessary. We intend that the text in the Codes, even without the example boxes, will give clear guidance on how to treat different types of expenditure. Further comments We welcome any further comments that you may have in relation to the Codes. Related content Consultation: Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Strategy Statutory consultation on guidance for Returning Officers: Assistance with voting for disabled people Draft guidance for Returning Officers: Assistance with voting for disabled voters (statutory consultation) Consultation response: Draft performance standards for Electoral Registration Officers Read the response to our draft performance standards for EROs consultation

You are in the Annual Report and Accounts 2022/23 section Home Our plans and priorities Annual Report and Accounts 2022/23 First published: 4 July 2023 Last updated: 27 September 2023 Title Summary Our work in Northern Ireland over the last year has largely been dominated by electoral events, from supporting the May 2022 Northern Ireland Assembly election at the start of the year, through to preparations for the May 2023 local council elections over the later part of the year. This work has been delivered against a backdrop of political uncertainty, with the Assembly unable to elect a First Minister and Deputy First Minister following the May 2022 election. As a responsible regulator, we have maintained up to date contingency plans for an unscheduled election, and throughout this period we have continued to work closely with the Chief Electoral Officer, political parties and the electoral community across Northern Ireland to provide advice and support on issues relating to electoral law, financial reporting, campaigning and voter registration. Work done to achieve our aims We supported the successful delivery of the May 2022 Northern Ireland Assembly election. Following the Northern Ireland Assembly election, we published a report reflecting data and evidence gathered on voting, campaigning and delivering the election. This included recommendations for improving the system further. We ran a mass-media voter registration campaign ahead of the Assembly election, supported by press and partnership activity. We developed new resources for democratic engagement with schools and other learning providers. Welcome to Your Vote Week took place at the end of January, with a involvement from 20 schools across Northern Ireland. We published campaign spending from the Northern Ireland Assembly election. The Commission's Board travelled to Belfast to meet with the Chief Electoral Officer, academics, youth groups and political parties. Our May 2022 election report found that 71% of candidates in Northern Ireland had experienced some kind of abuse or intimidation. As a result, the Board met with female representatives of all the major parties in Northern Ireland to hear their experiences of abuse while campaigning and to consider ways to increase the safety of candidates at future polls. Ahead of the May 2023 local council elections, in partnership with the Police Service for Northern Ireland (PSNI), Public Prosecution Service and the Electoral Office for Northern Ireland (EONI), we published joint guidance for candidates to help them recognise and respond to intimidatory and criminal behaviour. We launched our voter registration campaign for the May 2023 Northern Ireland local council elections. In partnership with EONI, Royal Mail and the PSNI we hosted pre-election seminars in Belfast, Omagh and online for candidates and agents taking part in the May 2023 local elections. We also offered one-to-one surgeries to support those participating in the election. Despite the absence of a functioning Assembly, the Northern Ireland Political Parties Panel continued to meet during the year. The panel provides an important link for sharing information between the Commission, the Chief Electoral Officer and political parties. Looking ahead Our report on the May 2023 Northern Ireland local council elections will be published in autumn 2023. We will continue to support parties and campaigners to comply with the law, while ensuring that political finance is transparent. We will also continue to provide support and guidance to EONI. In March 2023 the Chief Electoral Officer stood down and an interim appointment was made to ensure the delivery of the local council elections. When a new Chief Electoral Officer is appointed, we will work closely with them to support the delivery of well-run elections and electoral registration in Northern Ireland. We will publish our latest assessment of the accuracy and completeness of the electoral register in Northern Ireland in autumn 2023. We will continue to provide expert advice and recommendations for improving the current system, including making the case for reform of the canvass and wider electoral registration process in Northern Ireland. We will build on the work we have already done to provide educational resources, and will seek to establish new partners to promote and improve political literacy across demographics less likely to be engaged in the democratic process. The implementation of the Elections Act will continue to impact on our work in Northern Ireland. Working closely with the Northern Ireland Office, the Chief Electoral Officer, and other stakeholders, we will support the implementation of the changes made to the electoral process in Northern Ireland through the Act. This will include responding to relevant consultations on secondary legislation, updating and producing new guidance, and promoting awareness of these changes to the electoral community in Northern Ireland. We will maintain up to date planning for a Northern Ireland Assembly election, which is due to be held before April 2024 if an executive is not formed by January 2024.

Commitment to EDI The Electoral Commission serves a diverse democracy in Northern Ireland. We published our new Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Strategy and Single Equality Scheme for Northern Ireland in autumn 2022. Under new legislation, Ulster-Scots and Irish language commissioners are expected to be appointed and will be tasked with developing best practice standards and promoting the services provided by public authorities. The Commission will monitor this in relation to its own work and services. Navigation Previous Next Powers and sanctions report Wales annual report

You are in the section Home In this section Accuracy and completeness of electoral registers at the May 2023 local elections in England Public attitudes 2023 Attitudes to voter registration research report Electoral registration in Great Britain in 2022

Advance voting pilots evaluation Electoral registration in Great Britain in 2021

Northern Ireland electoral registration canvass 2021 Modernising elections research

Public attitudes Northern Ireland political transparency research Public attitudes towards voting in the context of COVID-19 Conducting elections under coronavirus restrictions Analysis of electoral registration data Ballot paper ordering at Scottish council elections Electoral fraud data Referendum question research Voter identification pilots Overview of what our research involves We conduct research on a wide range of subjects, which helps inform our work and our policies. We measure the quality of the electoral registers and carry out surveys on public attitudes about democracy and the process of voting. Following elections and referendums, we collect data such as the size of the electorate, turnout and rejected ballot papers.

Descriptions of our different research projects and responsibilities Accuracy and completeness of electoral registers We measure the quality of the electoral registers in the UK. Accuracy means we look at the number of false entries on the electoral registers and completeness means measuring whether those eligible to register are on the registers. Analysis of electoral registration data Our analysis looks at key data relating to entries on the electoral registers, such as the number of entries, attainers, additions and deletions. It also looks at the results of the annual canvass activities that electoral registration officers at local councils carry out each year. Public attitudes We carry out public opinion surveys covering a range of electoral issues such as voting, registering to vote, party finance and electoral fraud. Electoral data We collect data following elections and referendums in the UK.

This includes data such as the size of the electorate, turnout, the number of rejected ballot papers and information on postal voting. Voter identification pilots

We evaluated the Government's pilot schemes in 2018 and 2019, where voters were required to bring identification to vote at the local government elections in England. Reporting on electoral fraud We collect data from all police forces across the UK about allegations of electoral fraud. Referendum question research For referendums in the UK, we look at the way the proposed referendum question is worded to make sure it is easy for voters to understand. As part of our assessment, we carry out research with the public. Modernising elections research We carried out some qualitative research to look at public attitudes to voting and the information around elections. The research considers views on current voting methods and explores ideas and attitudes about possible new ways of casting a vote in the future. Related content

Elections in your area Enter your postcode to find your electoral services team at your local council. You need to send your postal and proxy vote application forms to them. Types of elections about the types of elections in the UK. Past elections and referendums Read our reports and view data about past elections and referendums Electoral law is out of date. Find out where we want to see improvements

6. Background to our evaluation | Electoral Commission Search

6. Background to our evaluation You are in the May 2019 voter identification pilot schemes section Home Our research Voter identification pilots May 2019 voter identification pilot schemes Pilot areas by numbers and equality: feedback from local and national organisations Confidence assessment: findings and recommendations First published: 12 July 2019 Last updated: 12 July 2019 Contents Overview Our findings Impact on voters: experience Impact on voters: confidence Impact on security Impact of administration of the polls Background to our evaluation Previous pilot scheme In 2017, the UK Government asked local councils in England to test different ways of identifying voters at polling stations. At the local elections in May 2018, people in five areas had to show ID before they could vote in a polling station. We published our independent evaluation of the 2018 pilot scheme in July 2018. Overall we found that the scheme worked well, but we said that a wider range of local authorities should run more pilots in 2019. The May 2019 pilot scheme The Government decided to run more pilots at the May 2019 local elections. People in ten areas had to show ID before they could vote in a polling station: Local authorities holding pilots in May 2019 Photo ID only Pendle and Woking Photo or non-photo ID Braintree, Broxtowe, Craven, Derby and North Kesteven Poll card Mid Sussex, North West Leicestershire and Watford Local Returning Officers ran the processes in each area, and the Cabinet Office oversaw the pilot scheme as a whole. The legislation that allowed the pilot scheme to take place was published in March 2019. Northern Ireland At elections held between 1985 and 2002, voters at polling stations in Northern Ireland had to show one of a number of specified pieces of ID before they could be issued with their ballot paper. The list of specified ID included a number of non-photographic identity documents. This requirement had been introduced to address concerns about electoral fraud, which at the time were widely perceived to be a problem in Northern Ireland. The list of specified ID was changed in 2002, and in elections since 2003 voters at polling stations in Northern Ireland have been required to show specified photo ID. The Government said this change was needed because of the ease with which identity documents could be falsified and the fact that non-photographic documents were regarded as providing insufficient proof of identity. The ID does not need to be current, but the Presiding Officer must be satisfied that the photograph is of a good enough likeness before issuing a ballot paper. The list of acceptable photo ID includes an Electoral Identity Card, which an elector can apply for free of charge from the Electoral Office. When the photo ID requirement was first introduced in Northern Ireland we found that the uptake of the electoral identity card varied between areas, and also that a number of disadvantaged groups were less likely to have eligible identification. However, our public opinion research after subsequent elections since 2003 suggests that voters in Northern Ireland have not experienced any difficulties in meeting the photo ID requirement. Other areas of the electoral system This evaluation has only looked at the process of voting at a polling station and the potential impact of ID to reduce the risk of fraud at polling stations. It does not look at other areas of the electoral system where further strengthening might also be needed, such as improving protections for postal voters. We have made other recommendations for improvements to strengthen postal voting . The UK government also needs to make progress on implementing these recommendations and others that were highlighted in 2016 by Sir Eric Pickles in his review of electoral fraud . Aims of this report The law says that we have to publish an independent review of the pilot scheme within three months of the election, and there are specific questions that we have to consider: Whether the turnout of voters was higher than it would have been if the scheme had not applied Whether voters found the procedures provided for their assistance by the scheme easy to use Whether the procedures provided for by the scheme led to any increase in personation or other electoral offences or in any other malpractice in connection with elections Whether those procedures led to any increase in expenditure, or to any savings, by the authority We collected information from different sources to make sure that our review of the 2019 voter ID pilot scheme is thorough and robust. This included: A survey asking people in each local area what they thought of the scheme A survey of people who worked in polling stations Data about what ID people showed to vote, and the number of people who were turned away for not having the right ID Views and evidence from organisations that represent different groups of voters, including local groups in each area Information about how much it cost to run the pilot scheme An expert review of the security of the different voter ID models Alongside this report we have also published key figures about each of the ten local authority areas that ran pilots in May 2019 . Report navigation links Previous 5. Impact of administration of the polls Related content Party registration decisions View our decisions on political party names, descriptions and emblems View current applications View the political party names, descriptions and emblems which we are currently considering as part of our assessment process Donations and loans Find out about donations and loans to a political party, individual or other organisation Report: How the 2017 UK general election was run Read our report about how the 2017 general election was run

About the Elections Act | Electoral Commission Search About
the Elections Act You are in the Elections Act section Home Elections Act First published: 5 July 2021 Last updated: 5 July 2021 About the Act The UK Government is making changes to the UK electoral system. The Elections Act contains measures that affect: elections and the way we vote campaigning and the rules on campaign spending and funding parliamentary oversight of the Electoral Commission The changes in the Act apply to UK Parliament elections, Police and Crime Commissioner elections in England and Wales, and local elections in England. Some provisions will apply to Northern Ireland Assembly elections and local elections in Northern Ireland. The Act seeks to improve the security, accessibility and transparency of elections and campaigning. The changes it introduces will need to be well planned, with implementation phased and properly funded to ensure that electoral administrators and others involved in running elections can implement the measures as intended. As devolution leads to different rules for different parts of the UK, it will be important to ensure that the entirety of the system continues to work well and that everyone can understand what rules are in place at different elections. Now that the Act has been passed into law – and there are new rules for elections, voting and campaigning – we will work with voters, local councils, political parties, campaigners and representative bodies, to ensure everyone involved in elections understands and is prepared for the changes. Further reading Further reading Read the full Elections Act Significant changes proposed to UK elections - our response

You are in the Party panels section Home How we make decisions Party panels First published: 14 July 2020 Last updated: 14 July 2020 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting Conservative Party: Alan Mabbutt (AM) Chair of the meeting Andrew Steadman (AS) Megan Tucker (MT) Liberal Democrats: Darren Briddock (DB) Labour: Andrew Whyte (AW) Scottish National Party: Scott Martin (SM) Electoral Commission: Craig Westwood, Director of Communications & Research (CW) Louise Edwards, Director of Regulation (LE) Laura McLeod, Public Affairs Manager (LM) Minutes of the last meeting and actions arising (PPP 04/12/2018) The minutes were agreed. AM asked for an update on the Commission's review of the registers of political parties. LE advised that the Commission has reviewed party descriptions on the Northern Ireland register; the review for Great Britain would now take place after the May polls. AM asked for clarification on the deadline for new parties registering ahead of May local elections. LE stated the deadline was 4 February to guarantee a decision before the May polls. Codes of Practice on election spending by candidates and political parties AS highlighted the practical difficulties in terms of timing that would exist if implemented in April, as May is a particularly busy time with local elections. LE outlined the current timetable the Commission is working to and noted timing concerns. AS reiterated a proposal for a joint meeting take place with the Commission and all parties to 'test' the draft codes. DB noted that there are some common themes to feedback so would be a useful exercise. CW and LE agreed a meeting would be scheduled. Preparations for May 2019 local elections in England and Northern Ireland CW gave an outline of the Commission's public awareness work ahead of the May local elections. AS asked if the Commission micro targets specific groups; CW explained that the Commission doesn't micro target audiences on multiple data points, but does undertake broader targeting to reach under registered groups and specific demographics, for example overseas voters and students. AM asked if the Commission had been consulted on the change of wording on the nomination forms for standing as a candidate, from 'witness' to 'attest' a candidate recording his or her home address. DB stressed the need for parties to advise people about the change. CW agreed to consult with colleagues and update accordingly. Potential recall petition in Peterborough AS had proposed the agenda item and mentioned the recommendations in Commission's report following the first recall petition in North Antrim. He said that it has been noted there is a tight timetable to deliver any recall petition. CW explained the Commission has been advising Peterborough Council accordingly, to support its contingency planning. The Commission's Enforcement policy AS stated his concerns with the tone of the language being used by the Commission in some regulatory correspondence. DB and AW expressed similar views. DB noted that volunteer treasurers were resigning due to accusatory language being used in correspondence. AM explained many volunteer inherit unfavourable situations and the current tone of communication is unhelpful. AS stressed that the Commission's current approach makes it more likely volunteers won't tell the parties of their mistakes which ultimately impacts on transparency. LE stated her commitment to looking into the tone of letters being issued, in line with feedback from the parties. AW explained his concerns regarding the Commission's current enforcement approach. He highlighted his view that despite having a range of options available, there has been a shift in Enforcement Policy, and large fines are being issued. LE referred to the Commission's Enforcement policy that was revised, following consultation, and been effective from April 2016. LE noted that decisions to impose fines, and the size of that fine, are determined in line with the Policy and on the facts of each case. AM asked in light of public interest, and volunteers trying to help not hinder the democratic process, if the Commission would review its Enforcement Policy. LE explained the Commission is due to consult this year on the policy and will be interested in feedback from the parties. GDPR text for electoral registration forms AS flagged the issue of GDPR wording on forms and stated his support for informing voters clearly on the form 'your data will be given to political parties'. He highlighted many voters are unaware that even with GDPR rules, it doesn't apply to political parties. CW agreed it is important for voters to know who has access to their data and explained the Commission's canvass reform project will undertake a review of the full suite of form, including the wording relating to GDPR on forms. DB noted a particular issue with nomination forms, where signatories may not realise that their names will be made public. AM suggested as part of that work, the Commission look at the self-nominating election forms used in Scotland. Commission Update Report AM noted that at previous PPP meetings, members had had the opportunity to engage with Commissioners. LE and CW agreed to explore the possibility of involving Commissioners at a future meeting. MT asked for information on the delivering modern guidance project and what would be available to see at user group meeting scheduled for 27 March. CW agreed to update the PPP after the meeting. AS noted that minutes from meetings are now only available for the previous year on the Commission's website. LM agreed to share with him older copies of minutes. DB emphasised the need for the Commission to assist parties and ensure new PFR Online portal starts at the beginning of their financial year (calendar year). AM explained the parties were at the very early stages of thinking about potential legislation to change regulated periods. LE stated the Commission would be keen to have a discussion with the PPP on their thinking Any other business LE explained the Commission would shortly consult with parties on a prosecutions policy being part of the Enforcement Policy. Action Status LM to arrange a meeting with the PPP to discuss draft Codes of Practice. Completed Investigate if the Commission was consulted on the change of wording on home address forms. Update to be provided at 4 June meeting LE and CW agreed to explore the possibility of involving Commissioners at a future meeting. Update to be provided at 4 June meeting LM share a copy of previous minutes with AS Completed

Parliamentary Parties Panel minutes: 4 June 2019 | Electoral Commission Search
Parliamentary Parties Panel minutes: 4 June 2019 You are in the Party panels section Home How we make decisions Party panels First published: 14 July 2020 Last updated: 15 July 2020 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting Scottish National Party: Scott Martin (SM) Chair of the meeting Conservative Party: Andrew Steadman
(AS) Liberal Democrats: Natalia Villazan (NV) Darren Briddock (DB) Labour Party:
Andrew Whyte (AW) Change UK: Sian Green (SG) Electoral Commission: Craig Westwood, Director of Communications & Research (CW) Ailsa Irvine, Director of Electoral Administration and Guidance (AI) Laura McLeod, Public Affairs Manager (LM) Minutes of the last meeting and actions arising (PPP 21/02/2019) The minutes were agreed. SM asked for an update on whether the Commission had been consulted on the change of wording on the nomination forms for standing as a candidate, from 'witness' to 'attest'. AI confirmed the Commission was consulted on the draft legislation last autumn and did not highlight any issues with the change of wording. AS noted that the tone of language being used by the Commission in some regulatory correspondence had not changed since discussions at the February PPP meeting. CW agreed to feed back to colleagues. SM asked when the Commission will consult on its Enforcement Policy. CW explained the Commission is due to publicly consult in the autumn. On the subject of holding a PPP meeting with commissioner representatives, CW confirmed the Commission is happy to explore the possibility for the December meeting if parties are similarly willing to be represented at a more senior level of chair and/or treasurers. Parties agreed to consider this and report back. Members asked about the membership of the Commission's Parliamentary Advisory Group (PAG), particularly with a view to mapping interested peers within parties. LM offered to share the PAG membership list. SM and DM explained that one year of rolling minutes was unsuitable. SM gave the example of minutes from the PPP meeting, following the 2014 European Parliamentary election in 2014, showed discussion at the meeting on UC1 forms for EU citizens. DB suggested five years as a suitable period for minutes to be available on the website. SM asked the Commission's policy on limiting the availability of PPP minutes on the website.
CW explained this is in line with migration to a new website. LM restated her offer to share copies of older minutes on request. AW asked for an update on the Commission's PFR online and modern guidance projects. CW explained work on PFR online had been delayed by the elections. AI explained the modern guidance system is lined up with the Commission's website project and transfer over to the new system will be coordinated in a way that coordinated with the electoral cycle. Post-election review
– May 2019 local elections AI gave an outline of the Commission's public awareness work for the elections and explained that during our campaign, 570,000 applications to register were submitted online across England and Northern Ireland. AS complimented the Commission's campaign and asked when data on duplicate applications to register would be available. CW confirmed this would follow in the autumn and be shared with the PPP. CW asked the PPP for any observations or comments on how the new advertiser verification/registration rules , Google and Twitter worked for the parties. AW explained they had internal discussions on how to meet the requirements and didn't have any problems meeting them. Other attendees noted that they had not had feedback from campaigns/marketing colleagues. pilots and evaluation SM asked how the pilots had gone and DB highlighted his concerns over voters being turned away at polling stations. CW outlined the Commission was collecting data from a range of sources to feed into its statutory evaluation report. He explained that over 170 charities and organisations had been contacted and the Commission would welcome any feedback from the parties. AW and AS agreed to encourage agents or party staff to send over any relevant examples. Post-election review –European Parliamentary elections (EPEs) AI explained that the poll being delivered at short notice was testament to the work of Electoral Registration Officers, Returning Officers and their teams across the UK. AI noted the issues with EU citizens resident in the UK and by UK overseas voters, who found they were unable to vote at this poll when they wished to do so. NV asked if the Commission can quantify the number who were unable to vote. AI explained we are unlikely to be able to quantify precisely how many of them were unable to vote on polling day itself. AI highlighted the Commission's post poll reporting would consider in particular the experiences of EU citizens who were unable to correctly register to vote. She explained it will look at what happened in the months leading up to the elections, on where responsibilities lay for enabling EU citizens to vote and what actions were taken. AI welcomed any feedback from the PPP. SM asked if the Commission will be able to identify how many EU citizens registered for the 2019 EPEs compared with 2014 figures. AI confirmed that it would. SM noted the straight forward process in some other Member States and asked about the Commission's recommendations following the 2014 European Parliamentary elections. CW said that the Commission had made the case for making the process easier for EU citizens and met with the Cabinet Office, adding that following the EU referendum the Government was clear that the UK would not participate in the EPEs in 2019 so no changes to the process were introduced. DB asked if the Commission conducted a review of seats for this election, as it normally does. CW agreed to consult with colleagues and update accordingly. SM asked if the problems with overseas voters receiving postal ballot packs too late was due to the late confirmation of the UK taking part in the EPEs. AI detailed this was not an issue which related solely to these most recent elections as at any election postal votes cannot be sent out until the close of nominations for candidates and then need to be sent overseas. CW detailed the recommendations the Commission has previously made to the Government to improve access to the voting process for overseas electors. CW reiterated the Commission's offer of support and help to the parties if needed in preparing their spending returns, particularly with regard to the retrospective regulatory period. Progress update from Parties on joint code of conduct on intimidatory behaviour The Commission proposed the agenda item and invited an update from the PPP on the joint code of conduct. AW explained the parties had met in late March and agreed to work towards a statement of principles. NV explained the Jo Cox Foundation had recently been appointed to act as independent support to the group in to agree a cross-party approach and this work is ongoing. Commission Update Report CW highlighted the Commission submitted evidence to the Public Administration and Constitutional Affairs Committee's inquiry on electoral law reform and is due to give oral evidence before summer recess. Any other business No item was raised. Action Status CW to feed back regarding the tone of language still being used by the Commission in regulatory correspondence Complete: Louise Edwards to write to the PPP LM to circulate membership of the Commission's Parliamentary Advisory Group Complete: circulated with minutes CW to update on whether the Commission conducted a review of the allocation of seats for European Parliamentary election. Complete: The Commission did not as the requirement for it to do the statutory review was removed by the Government in legislation.(European Union (Withdrawal) Act 2018 Sch.9 para.1) Commission to share data breakdown on registrations from the May 2019 local elections Ongoing: LM to share with PPP when breakdown is available Party representatives to advise whether they would be able to be represented by chair and/or treasurer at the 3 December meeting, alongside commissioner representatives. Ongoing: Pending confirmation from parties. Conservative Treasurer confirmed To be discussed at September meeting.

The Electoral Commission's ability to bring prosecutions | Electoral Commission Search These are the views we set out to parliamentarians before the Elections Act became law. We last updated these views in early 2022. Close alert The Electoral Commission's ability to bring prosecutions You are in the Elections Act section Home Elections Act On this page Changes proposed by the government Our view Further reading First published: 5 July 2021 Last updated: 5 July 2021 Last updated These are the views we set out to parliamentarians before the Elections Act became law. We last updated these views in early 2022. Changes proposed by the government Laws introduced by the UK Parliament when the Electoral Commission was established allow us to bring prosecutions against those who break electoral law relating to parties and campaigners. The UK Government is proposing a change that would stop us from being able to bring such prosecutions. Our view Effective enforcement when the rules are broken gives voters confidence in the electoral system. The UK Government does not consider this to be an area of work we should undertake. In the public interest, in order to fill any regulatory gap, the Police and Crown Prosecution Service will need to work with us to take forward appropriate prosecutions. This means prosecuting the full range of offences, from the lower order criminal offences often brought to light through our investigatory work, right through to the more significant offences. We would welcome the government making it clear in the passage of the Bill that this will be the case. Voters have the right to expect that any political party or campaigner which deliberately or recklessly breaks electoral law will face prosecution. Further reading Further reading The Government's Written Ministerial Statement: Increasing Parliamentary Accountability in Electoral Policy Related content Elections Act about the UK Government's Elections Act and what it means for voting and campaigning About the Elections Act about the Elections Bill, including the measures it contains and which elections it applies to. Changes to legal requirements for parties and non-party campaigners about proposals to change the law affecting parties and non-party campaigners. A strategy and policy statement for the Electoral Commission about the UK Government's proposal for the Electoral Commission.

Results and turnout at the 2012 Greater London Authority elections | Electoral Commission Search Results and turnout at the 2012 Greater London Authority elections You are in the Greater London Authority (GLA) elections section Home Greater London Authority (GLA) elections First published: 15 August 2019 Last updated: 28 October 2019 Download You can download the: full dataset as an XLS You can also download our full report , written by Colin Rallings and Michael Thrasher (Elections Centre, Plymouth University, Drake Circus, Plymouth, PL4 8AA). Summary Local elections were held for just under 2,400 seats in 128 authorities in England. In six authorities the whole council was elected following boundary changes; in the other authorities either a third (115 councils) or a half (seven councils) of members were elected. In 11 cities there were referendums on an elected mayor; direct elections for the new post of Mayor in both Liverpool and Salford; and the fourth contest for the election of the Mayor and Assembly of the Greater London Authority. Some 8,800 candidates contested the local elections, yielding a candidate/seat ratio of 3.6 overall. Just 4 councillors were elected unopposed. The 2012 local elections gave over 15.9 million registered electors the opportunity to vote: 40% of the total electorate in England. Nearly 75,000 electors (0.5% of the total) registered in the weeks leading up to the election under the so-called '11 day rule'. Some 4.94 million valid local election votes were cast at the ballot box, making the overall turnout 31.0%. This was some four percentage points below the turnout at the comparable stage in the electoral cycle in 2008. The proportion of ballots that are rejected at the official count continues to be small. In 2012 it was about one in every two hundred votes cast. Over 2.6 million postal votes were issued -16.6% of all those with a contested election in their ward. In five council areas more than 30% of the electorate had a postal vote; in another ten fewer than 10% had a postal vote. More than two in three (68.0%) of those with a postal ballot returned it. In contrast fewer than a quarter of those electors required to vote 'in person' did so (24.2%). The proportion of postal votes rejected or otherwise not included in the count was 4.2%. Rejection following a mismatch of signature and/or date of birth was much more common than rejection for incomplete information. In a little under one in five of these cases voters returned their postal voting envelopes but failed to include either the ballot paper itself or the verification statement or both. About one half of one percent of electors with a postal vote were granted a waiver to use their date of birth as their sole identifier. Some 16,000 local electors (0.10% of the total electorate) appointed proxies to act on their behalf. The proportion of ballot papers rejected at the count, and of postal votes rejected before the count, was higher at the mayoral referendum than at the local elections in those cities which had a combined electoral event. The pattern of postal voting and postal vote rejection at the GLA contests was similar to that in other parts of England with local elections only. Related content Report: How the 2012 GLA elections were run Read our report about how the 2012 Greater London Authority elections were run Report: How the 2016 GLA elections were run Read our report about how the 2016 Greater London Authority elections were run Results and turnout at the 2016 Greater London Authority elections View the results and turnout at the 2016 Greater London Authority elections Report: Voting in 2017 Read our report about voting at the general election in 2017

You are in the Party panels section Home How we make decisions Party panels First published: 14 July 2020 Last updated: 14 July 2020 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting Conservative Party: Alan Mabbutt (AM) Chair of the meeting Andrew Steadman (AS) Megan Tucker (MT) Liberal Democrats: Darren Briddock (DB) Labour: Andrew Whyte (AW) Scottish National Party: Scott Martin (SM) Electoral Commission: Craig Westwood, Director of Communications & Research (CW) Louise Edwards, Director of Regulation (LE) Laura McLeod, Public Affairs Manager (LM) Minutes of the last meeting and actions arising (PPP 04/12/2018) The minutes were agreed. AM asked for an update on the Commission's review of the registers of political parties. LE advised that the Commission has reviewed party descriptions on the Northern Ireland register; the review for Great Britain would now take place after the May polls. AM asked for clarification on the deadline for new parties registering ahead of May local elections. LE stated the deadline was 4 February to guarantee a decision before the May polls. Codes of Practice on election spending by candidates and political parties AS highlighted the practical difficulties in terms of timing that would exist if implemented in April, as May is a particularly busy time with local elections. LE outlined the current timetable the Commission is working to and noted timing concerns. AS reiterated a proposal for a joint meeting take place with the Commission and all parties to 'test' the draft codes. DB noted that there are some common themes to feedback so would be a useful exercise. CW and LE agreed a meeting would be scheduled. Preparations for May 2019 local elections in England and Northern Ireland CW gave an outline of the Commission's public awareness work ahead of the May local elections. AS asked if the Commission micro targets specific groups; CW explained that the Commission doesn't micro target audiences on multiple data points, but does undertake broader targeting to reach under registered groups and specific demographics, for example overseas voters and students. AM asked if the Commission had been consulted on the change of wording on the nomination forms for standing as a candidate, from 'witness' to 'attest' a candidate recording his or her home address. DB stressed the need for parties to advise people about the change. CW agreed to consult with colleagues and update accordingly. Potential recall petition in Peterborough AS had proposed the agenda item and mentioned the recommendations in Commission's report following the first recall petition in North Antrim. He said that it has been noted there is a tight timetable to deliver any recall petition. CW explained the Commission has been advising Peterborough Council accordingly, to support its contingency planning. The Commission's Enforcement policy AS stated his concerns with the tone of the language being used by the Commission in some regulatory correspondence. DB and AW expressed similar views. DB noted that volunteer treasurers were resigning due to accusatory language being used in correspondence. AM explained many volunteer inherit unfavourable situations and the current tone of communication is unhelpful. AS stressed that the Commission's current approach makes it more likely volunteers won't tell the parties of their mistakes which ultimately impacts on transparency. LE stated her commitment to looking into the tone of letters being issued, in line with feedback from the parties. AW explained his concerns regarding the Commission's current enforcement approach. He highlighted his view that despite having a range of options available, there has been a shift in Enforcement Policy, and large fines are being issued. LE referred to the Commission's Enforcement policy that was revised, following consultation, and been effective from April 2016. LE noted that decisions to impose fines, and the size of that fine, are determined in line with the Policy and on the facts of each case. AM asked in light of public interest, and volunteers trying to help not hinder the democratic process, if the Commission would review its Enforcement Policy. LE explained the Commission is due to consult this year on the policy and will be interested in feedback from the parties. GDPR text for electoral registration forms AS flagged the issue of GDPR wording on forms and stated his support for informing voters clearly on the form 'your data will be given to political parties'. He highlighted many voters are unaware that even with GDPR rules, it doesn't apply to political parties. CW agreed it is important for voters to know who has access to their data and explained the Commission's canvass reform project will undertake a review of the full suite of form, including the wording relating to GDPR on forms. DB noted a particular issue with nomination forms, where signatories may not realise that their names will be made public. AM suggested as part of that work, the Commission look at the self-nominating election forms used in Scotland. Commission Update Report AM noted that at previous PPP meetings, members had had the opportunity to engage with Commissioners. LE and CW agreed to explore the possibility of involving Commissioners at a future meeting. MT asked for information on the delivering modern guidance project and what would be available to see at user group meeting scheduled for 27 March. CW agreed to update the PPP after the meeting. AS noted that minutes from meetings are now only available for the previous year on the Commission's website. LM agreed to share with him older copies of minutes. DB emphasised the need for the Commission to assist parties and ensure new PFR Online portal starts at the beginning of their financial year (calendar year). AM explained the parties were at the very early stages of thinking about potential legislation to change regulated periods. LE stated the Commission would be keen to have a discussion with the PPP on their thinking Any other business LE explained the Commission would shortly consult with parties on a prosecutions policy being part of the Enforcement Policy. Action Status LM to arrange a meeting with the PPP to discuss draft Codes of Practice. Completed Investigate if the Commission was consulted on the change of wording on home address forms. Update to be provided at 4 June meeting LE and CW agreed to explore the possibility of involving Commissioners at a future meeting. Update to be provided at 4 June meeting LM share a copy of previous minutes with AS Completed

Parliamentary Parties Panel minutes: 4 June 2019 | Electoral Commission Search
Parliamentary Parties Panel minutes: 4 June 2019 You are in the Party panels
section Home How we make decisions Party panels First published: 14 July 2020 Last updated: 15 July 2020 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting Scottish National Party: Scott Martin (SM) Chair of the meeting Conservative Party: Andrew Steadman
(AS) Liberal Democrats: Natalia Villazan (NV) Darren Briddock (DB) Labour Party:
Andrew Whyte (AW) Change UK: Sian Green (SG) Electoral Commission: Craig Westwood,
Director of Communications & Research (CW) Ailsa Irvine, Director of Electoral Administration and Guidance (AI) Laura McLeod, Public Affairs Manager (LM) Minutes of
the last meeting and actions arising (PPP 21/02/2019) The minutes were agreed. SM asked for an update on whether the Commission had been consulted on the change of wording on the nomination forms for standing as a candidate, from 'witness' to
'attest'. AI confirmed the Commission was consulted on the draft legislation last autumn and did not highlight any issues with the change of wording. AS noted that the tone of language being used by the Commission in some regulatory correspondence had not changed since discussions at the February PPP meeting. CW agreed to feed back to colleagues. SM asked when the Commission will consult on its Enforcement Policy. CW explained the Commission is due to publicly consult in the autumn. On the subject of holding a PPP meeting with commissioner representatives, CW confirmed the Commission is happy to explore the possibility for the December meeting if parties are similarly willing to be represented at a more senior level of chair and/or treasurers. Parties agreed to consider this and report back. Members asked about the membership of the Commission's Parliamentary Advisory Group (PAG), particularly with a view to mapping interested peers within parties. LM offered to share the PAG membership list. SM and DM explained that one year of rolling minutes was unsuitable. SM gave the example of minutes from the PPP meeting, following the 2014 European Parliamentary election in 2014, showed discussion at the meeting on UC1 forms for EU citizens. DB suggested five years as a suitable period for minutes to be available on the website. SM asked the Commission's policy on limiting the availability of PPP minutes on the website.
CW explained this is in line with migration to a new website. LM restated her offer to share copies of older minutes on request. AW asked for an update on the Commission's PFR online and modern guidance projects. CW explained work on PFR online had been delayed by the elections. AI explained the modern guidance system is lined up with the Commission's website project and transfer over to the new system will be coordinated in a way that coordinated with the electoral cycle. Post-election review
– May 2019 local elections AI gave an outline of the Commission's public awareness
work for the elections and explained that during our campaign, 570,000 applications to register were submitted online across England and Northern Ireland. AS complimented the Commission's campaign and asked when data on duplicate applications to register would be available. CW confirmed this would follow in the autumn and be shared with the PPP. CW asked the PPP for any observations or comments on how the new advertiser verification/registration rules , Google and Twitter worked for the parties. AW explained they had internal discussions on how to meet the requirements and didn't have any problems meeting them. Other attendees noted that they had not had feedback from campaigns/marketing colleagues. pilots and evaluation SM asked how the pilots had gone and DB highlighted his concerns over voters being turned away at polling stations. CW outlined the Commission was collecting data from a range of sources to feed into its statutory evaluation report. He explained that over 170 charities and organisations had been contacted and the Commission would welcome any feedback from the parties. AW and AS agreed to encourage agents or party staff to send over any relevant examples. Post-election review –European Parliamentary elections (EPEs) AI explained that the poll being delivered at short notice was testament to the work of Electoral Registration Officers, Returning Officers and their teams across the UK. AI noted the issues with EU citizens resident in the UK and by UK overseas voters, who found they were unable to vote at this poll when they wished to do so. NV asked if the Commission can quantify the number who were unable to vote. AI explained we are unlikely to be able to quantify precisely how many of them were unable to vote on polling day itself. AI highlighted the Commission's post poll reporting would consider in particular the experiences of EU citizens who were unable to correctly register to vote. She explained it will look at what happened in the months leading up to the elections, on where responsibilities lay for enabling EU citizens to vote and what actions were taken. AI welcomed any feedback from the PPP. SM asked if the Commission will be able to identify how many EU citizens registered for the 2019 EPEs compared with 2014 figures. AI confirmed that it would. SM noted the straight forward process in some other Member States and asked about the Commission's recommendations following the 2014 European Parliamentary elections. CW said that the Commission had made the case for making the process easier for EU citizens and met with the Cabinet Office, adding that following the EU referendum the Government was clear that the UK would not participate in the EPEs in 2019 so no changes to the process were introduced. DB asked if the Commission conducted a review of seats for this election, as it normally does. CW agreed to consult with colleagues and update accordingly. SM asked if the problems with overseas voters receiving postal ballot packs too late was due to the late confirmation of the UK taking part in the EPEs. AI detailed this was not an issue which related solely to these most recent elections as at any election postal votes cannot be sent out until the close of nominations for candidates and then need to be sent overseas. CW detailed the recommendations the Commission has previously made to the Government to improve access to the voting process for overseas electors. CW reiterated the Commission's offer of support and help to the parties if needed in preparing their spending returns, particularly with regard to the retrospective regulatory period. Progress update from Parties on joint code of conduct on intimidatory behaviour The Commission proposed the agenda item and invited an update from the PPP on the joint code of conduct. AW explained the parties had met in late March and agreed to work towards a statement of principles. NV explained the Jo Cox Foundation had recently been appointed to act as independent support to the group in to agree a cross-party approach and this work is ongoing. Commission Update Report CW highlighted the Commission submitted evidence to the Public Administration and Constitutional Affairs Committee's inquiry on electoral law reform and is due to give oral evidence before summer recess. Any other business No item was raised. Action Status CW to feed back regarding the tone of language still being used by the Commission in regulatory correspondence Complete: Louise Edwards to write to the PPP LM to circulate membership of the Commission's Parliamentary Advisory Group Complete: circulated with minutes CW to update on whether the Commission conducted a review of the allocation of seats for European Parliamentary election. Complete: The Commission did not as the requirement for it to do the statutory review was removed by the Government in legislation.(European Union (Withdrawal) Act 2018 Sch.9 para.1) Commission to share data breakdown on registrations from the May 2019 local elections Ongoing: LM to share with PPP when breakdown is available Party representatives to advise whether they would be able to be represented by chair and/or treasurer at the 3 December meeting, alongside commissioner representatives. Ongoing: Pending confirmation from parties. Conservative Treasurer confirmed To be discussed at September meeting.

Board minutes: 31 March 2021 | Electoral Commission Search

Board minutes: 31 March 2021 You are in the Electoral Commission Board section

Home How we make decisions Electoral Commission Board On this page Who was at the meeting Apologies and introductions Declarations of interest Minutes of the previous Board Meeting Update on elections Annual review of governance Risk framework Update on Board Effectiveness review action plan Governance matter Commission Board action tracker Forward plan of Board business Annual review of schedule of policies Annual declaration of interests Registers of interests, gifts, donations and hospitality

First published: 14 October 2021 Last updated: 14 October 2021 Meeting summary Date: Wednesday 31 March 2021 Time: 9.30am to 1pm Location: By video conference Date of next scheduled meeting: Wednesday 21 April 2021 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting Board members: Rob Vincent - Meeting chair Sue Bruce Alex Attwood Sarah Chambers Elan Closs Stephens Stephen Gilbert Alasdair Morgan Joan Walley In attendance: Bob Posner, Chief Executive Craig Westwood, Director, Communications, Policy and Research Louise Edwards, Director, Regulation (joined the meeting at item 4) Ailsa Irvine, Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance Kieran

Rix, Director, Finance and Corporate Services Chantelle Shokar, Legal Officer Zena Khan, Senior Adviser, Governance Apologies and introductions Apologies were received from Binnie Goh, General Counsel. The Meeting Chair welcomed all to the meeting advising that Royal Warrants had been received for Sue Bruce, Elan Closs Stephens and Alex Attwood. Declarations of interest There were no new declarations of interest.

Minutes of the previous Board Meeting (EC 20/21) Resolved: That the minutes of the Commission Board meeting on 24 February 2021 be approved. Update on elections (Oral) The Board received an oral update from the Chief Executive, Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance and Director, Communications, Policy and Research. The Board noted that we're continuing to engage at a UK-wide level, through national and regional forums and individually with local authority chief executives and election teams. We have started our weekly meetings of the Electoral Coordination and Advisory Board which brings together officials from the three governments, Regional Returning Officers from across the UK and representatives from stakeholder groups such as Solace, the AEA and the SAA. We have been working closely with the Electoral Management Board in Scotland and the Electoral Coordination Board in Wales to support them in their work to coordinate the delivery of the polls, and working similarly with London Elects and the GLA team in relation to the London elections. The Board noted that the Cabinet Office election cell is standing up, and will also be incorporating security issues for Scotland and Wales. The cell brings together the various agencies and departments with responsibility for security, law enforcement, civil contingency, disinformation and the Commission, and seeks to manage strategic risks to the election. The Board noted that we are continuing to work with Royal Mail closely, to understand progress with their preparations and their contingency planning, with weekly meetings in place between Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance and their Head of Elections. It was noted that a meeting was scheduled after Easter Bank holiday for our and their Chief Executive to meet. The Board noted that we had been working with the CPS and the NPCC, and in Scotland with Police Scotland, to revise and reissue our joint guidance for candidates on how to minimise the risk of intimidation while campaigning and how to report if it happens. This guidance was widely welcomed in 2019. The Board noted that as of 30 March, we had taken decisions on all 59 party registration applications received in January, for which we had guaranteed a decision by the end of March. Thanks to a significant effort from the party registration team and assistance by staff from other teams, we have also taken decisions on 11 more applications that arrived in early February. Two parties were seeking urgent decisions on descriptions they wanted to use in Scotland, which have not yet been taken because of the lateness of the applications they made. The Commission had successfully defended court action from one of these parties. The Board noted progress with communications activity, in particular the 'Got 5?' voter registration campaign, which was progressing strongly against targets, with a total of 405K applications to register in Great Britain in the period 9 to 26 March, and over 37 million impressions/views of digital adverts in a similar period. Plans were progressing well to enable the postcode lookup to function well as a voter resource, with polling station data in so far from c.60% of councils. It was noted that the team was handling a spike in public queries, following the distribution of the voter information booklet in Scotland last week, and there was a continued push by us to generate media coverage to raise voter awareness of the need to register, the options for voting methods, and the safety arrangements for polling stations. Resolved: That the oral updates be noted. Annual review of governance (EC 21/21) The Board received the report as part of the annual review of the Corporate Governance Framework, highlighting changes already taken place and proposed minor changes. It was noted that minor amends to sections of 'Responsibilities of Individual Commissioners' and 'Members attending meetings by video or teleconference' will be reviewed and updated. Resolved: That the Board noted the following changes already taken place: agreed change of name of the Audit and Risk Committee agreed updates to the Terms of Reference for the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee at Annex H, as previously approved by the Board on 16 September 2020 agreed the amendment to the quoracy rules (Commission Board paper eEC 19/21) which was approved at the Extraordinary Board meeting of 4 March 2021 by email circulation, that this will no longer be incorporated into the Standing Orders, following the receipt of the Royal Warrants appointing Susan Bruce and Dame Elan Closs Stephens, by the terms of new standing order 15a, the approved amendment¹ automatically expired before incorporation. There are now four Commissioners appointed under the provisions of section 3A of the Act. Together with the appointment of Alex Attwood as Commissioner for Small Parties, there are eight Commissioners on the Board and the risk of permanent inquoracy has now been averted. Following these developments, the applicable rule on quorum is now standing order A132. Resolved: That the Board approved the proposed minor changes: the paragraphs on the Commissioner's accountabilities to the devolved governments at paragraphs 1.3 and 1.10, delegation of powers and duties diagram at page increased meetings for the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee at paragraphs 2.10 and Annex H10 removal of section on Steering Groups at paragraphs 2.19 – 2.20 now that they are defunct the transfer of Governance and other responsibilities to the General Counsel removal of reference to powers relating to European Parliamentary elections at page 20 the Guidance for Commissioners on claiming fees and travel and subsistence at appendix 4 of the Corporate Governance Framework to reflect the 2021 rates Risk framework (EC 22/21) The Board received a report providing the Board with an opportunity to review the Commission's risk management framework, and consider the headline actions from our risk improvement plan. It was noted that the plan was our response to the recent internal audit on risk maturity. The Audit and Risk Committee have endorsed this approach. That the Board noted the actions in the risk improvement plan. That the Board has scheduled a discussion on risk appetites, linked to the new Corporate Plan 2022/23 – 2026/27. Update on Board Effectiveness review action plan (Oral) This item was deferred to a future Board meeting. Governance matter (EC 23/21) At this point the chairmanship was handed over to the Chief Executive to chair this item for avoidance of conflict. Resolved: That the Board noted the term dates of Rob Vincent's membership of RemCo from March 2020 until March 2023 and Chair of that Committee. Resolved: That the Board approved the reappointment of Elan Closs Stephens as member of Audit and Risk Committee from January 2021 until January 2024. The chairmanship was resumed by Rob Vincent for the remainder of the agenda. Commission Board action tracker (EC 24/21) The Board received the Commission Board action tracker noting further updates. Resolved: That the Commission Board action tracker be noted. Forward plan of Board business (EC 25/21) Commissioners discussed items of business for future meetings. These would be reflected in the Forward plan of Board business at the April meeting. Resolved: That the Forward plan of Board business be noted. Annual review of schedule of policies (EC 26/21) The Board received the report of our key policies setting out in table form, whether statutory or discretionary, their purpose, the policy 'owner', and when each policy is due for review. Resolved: That the Board was content that the Schedule of Policies had been reviewed and updated in line with the Corporate Governance Framework. Annual declaration of interests (EC 27/21) The Board received the report which shows Commissioners interests and any changes made. This is a regular requirement at the start of each Board meeting. Once a year, a paper is prepared with a list of all declared interests of Commissioners. Resolved: That the Board noted the annual declaration of interests and is content for this to be published on the Commission's website. Registers of interests, gifts, donations and hospitality (EC 28/21) The Board received a paper presenting the Commission's Registers of Interests, Donations, and Gifts and Hospitality. Resolved: That the Board noted the registers and for them to be published on the Commission's website

Northern Ireland Assembly Parties Panel minutes: 29 January 2019 | Electoral Commission Search Northern Ireland Assembly Parties Panel minutes: 29 January 2019 You are in the Party panels section Home How we make decisions Party panels On this page Welcome and introductions Notes of previous meeting on 10 April 2018 Issues raised by the political parties Planning for local government elections – May 2019 Electoral Commission issues Update from Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland Next meeting date – 19 March 2019 First published: 12 June 2019 Last updated: 2 September 2019 Meeting overview Date: 29 January 2019 Time: 9.30 am Location: Radisson Blu Hotel, Belfast Date of next scheduled meeting: 19 March 2019 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting DUP: Lee Reynolds Green Party: Kate Barry Sinn Féin: Gary Fleming UUP: Barbara Knox The Electoral Commission: Anna Carragher, Commissioner Ann Watt, Head of Electoral Commission, Northern Ireland Cahir Hughes, Manager, Electoral Commission, Northern Ireland Roisin McDaid, Senior Officer (Political Parties Liaison) Caralyn Morton, Business Support Officer Electoral Office for Northern Ireland: Virginia McVea, Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland Royal Mail: Rachel Winham, Head of Elections and Political Parties Scott Forsyth, Special Events Planning Manager NI Claire Connolly, Elections Manager NI Apology: Alliance Party, Sharon Lowry SDLP, Catherine Matthews Welcome and introductions The Chair, Anna Carragher, welcomed everyone to the meeting, introducing Rachel Winham, Claire Connolly and Scott Forsyth from Royal Mail. Notes of previous meeting on 10 April 2018 The Panel agreed the notes of the previous meeting. There were no matters arising. Issues raised by the political parties No items had been raised by the parties in advance of the meeting. Planning for local government elections – May 2019 Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland The Chief Electoral Officer (CEO) gave an update on the Electoral Office for Northern Ireland's (EONI) plans for the May local government elections. As discussed at the Panel's last meeting, training of Council staff was a key part of the planning process as many trained staff had moved on since the local government review. The scenario based training schedule had included a masterclass for Council Chief Executives and STV training featuring a mock count. Most councils intended to run their own mock count training, and Chief Executives had plans for count centres in place. The CEO highlighted other training materials including videos on the EONI website. She thought there could be potential to do videos of Royal Mail freepost mailing processes in a similar way. She advised that following the recent review, the polling stations scheme was to be published within a week and reminded the Panel of the recently introduced app showing the location of polling stations for all addresses in Northern Ireland. Following engagement by the Northern Ireland Office on a Fees and Charges Order, a draft of NIO proposals was anticipated in the very near future. One party raised concerns about the closure of local EONI offices and the centralisation of EONI's work in Belfast. In particular the party said that those who needed to hand deliver application forms (for registration or absent votes) would have to travel to Belfast if it was too close to the deadline to post the forms. The CEO said she was confident that the centralisation of EONI offices in Belfast would have little impact on the forthcoming elections and absent voting in particular. The new data management system would offer more flexibility for managing workloads. A centralised absent voting process had been used successfully at the recent West Tyrone by-election and the recall petition in North Antrim. However, she acknowledged that parties would not be able to drop off collections of absent vote applications at the deadline in Banbridge for example, but freepost was available. People wishing to register would be encouraged to do so via the quicker online process. Plans were currently being considered for dropoff facilities for registration forms to be available at the 11 local councils venues and additional facilities (i.e. kiosk or other IT hardware) to be piloted in mid-Antrim and Dungannon where broadband coverage was limited. If electors experienced difficulties, they would be able to contact the EONI helpline who would be able to send out freepost forms. The centralisation of the EONI's services had followed significant funding cuts. Staff from Banbridge and Newtownabbey had now been relocated to Belfast and it is intended that the Derry/Londonderry and Omagh offices would remain open until after the election in May 2019. The CEO would be happy to engage in discussions with parties to explore issues of concern. Information on arrangements, including how-to videos would be shared via the EONI website and Councils hoped to also use these voter information resources at a local level. Meetings had also been held with NILGA to share information. The CEO was also currently reviewing capacity to hold registrations clinics. The Chief Electoral Officer (CEO) gave the Panel an update on online registration statistics. From 19 June 2018 to 29 January there had been 37,299 online and 13,461 paper applications. The Electoral Commission Public awareness The Commission will launch a large scale public awareness campaign on 21 February with the key message that the public can now register online ahead of the local council elections. The campaign will run until the registration deadline of 12 April and will include TV, radio, press, digital and outdoor advertising. This will be supported by public relations work to highlight key information and deadlines, such as the absent vote deadline, and how to complete the ballot paper. Guidance for candidates on spending and donations The Commission published its guidance on spending and donations for candidates and agents on its website in December. Parties were alerted to possible changes affecting personal and disability expenses ahead of the election. It was stressed that parties should check the website regularly for any updates to this guidance and contact Róisín McDaid with any queries. There was a discussion relating to Brexit and the possibility of a European Parliamentary election – for which the regulated period would have started on 23 January 2019. Ann Watt said that as a responsible regulator, the Electoral Commission had to prepare for a range of possible unexpected events. The Commission would keep the parties updated as and when they knew more. Royal Mail Rachel Winham gave the Panel an overview of the Royal Mail's contingency planning for various potential electoral event scenarios. She explained the structure of its elections operation, with the Doxford team as the hub for elections operations, Clare Connolly the lead in Northern Ireland and main contact for candidates, and Scott Forsyth in charge of overall planning for Northern Ireland and East of Scotland. Rachel talked the Panel through the free mailing process, highlighting the introduction of Streetsort, artwork checks and electronic billing. There would be 11 drop-off points across the 11 council areas with 26 April being the final drop-off day. She also offered as much support as was needed to parties, asking them to contact her by phone. Information on local elections would be emailed to Panel members following the meeting. Pre-election seminars EONI, the Electoral Commission and Royal Mail would jointly be delivering seminars for candidates and agents in March 2019. The Commission would inform representatives of dates and venues as soon as possible, and encouraged party officials to publicise these widely so those standing for election could attend these briefing sessions. Electoral Commission issues Recent Commission publications Report on recall petition in North Antrim On 5 November the Commission published its report on the North Antrim recall petition. The overall assessment was that the petition was well-run with no significant problems affecting voters or campaigners. The petition was the first to take place across the UK since the Recall of MPs Act was introduced in 2015, and therefore the first time the legislation was tested. The report noted that there was a lot of debate about the number and location of signing venues. Some parties had said that three signing venues was insufficient. The Chief Electoral Officer's view was that three venues were adequate when combined with the availability of postal signing on demand. In the report the Commission concluded they had seen no evidence that more signing venues would have increased the number of people who signed. The report identified a number of practical issues which the UK Government should consider addressing to help voters, campaigners and administrators at any future petition. It had been circulated to all APP members and was also available on the Commission's website. 'Protecting the debate' report The Commission had responded to the UK Government's consultation on the above report, urging the Government to introduce urgent changes to the law so that voters could see who was responsible for online election and referendum campaign material. The Commission had recommended: all non-printed material should contain an imprint new regulations should apply to any online platform, even those yet to developed, to future-proof legislation The Commission should have enhanced powers to obtain information from digital platforms Code of Practice for electoral observers Cahir Hughes said that following the 2018 review and consultation on a proposed Code of Practice for Electoral Observers, a revised Code of Practice had been laid on 19 December 2018 in the UK Parliament and Scottish Parliament. The new Code is more accessible and easier to read and has been strengthened to ensure observers are aware of their obligation to remain politically impartial. There is also an increased period of accreditation from 1 to 3 years. The observer scheme has also introduced an online application system with new ID badges and enhanced security. Further information about the Code of Practice, application process and additional guidance is available on the Commission's website. To date there have been fifty applications to the revised scheme. Legislation to postpone an election to the Northern Ireland Assembly The Commission had expressed its concern to the Government about its recent legislation postponing the requirement to call an election to the Northern Ireland Assembly. Whilst the Commission Board recognise the realities of the current political situation, it wanted to express its concerns about the postponement of an election that is due. New Commissioners The Chair made the Panel aware that three new Commissioners nominated by the political parties had been approved by the House of Commons to serve on the Electoral Commission Board. They replace individuals whose terms had come to an end. Lord Gilbert of Panteg, Chair of the House of Lords Communication Select Committee - Conservative Party nominated Commissioner. Joan Whalley, a former Labour MP for Stoke on Trent North – Labour Party nominated Commissioner. Alastair Ross, a former DUP MLA – Commissioner nominated by the smaller parties. The CEONI extended an invitation to the new Commissioner for the smaller parties to meet her. Update from Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland Schools registration project The CEO told the Panel of her ongoing work to reach young people. She had now been able to access the NI system with unique access to each pupil on the C2K database – which she hoped would help increase the number of attainers registered. She asked for the parties help in her continued efforts to explore how best to reach people with influence over young people. Political finance – statutory return deadlines Parties were reminded of the following deadlines: Quarter 4 - 2018 donation and loan returns to be submitted by 30 January 2019. Statement of accounts for the year ending 31 December 2018 for parties with income and expenditure of £250,000 or less must be submitted by 30 April 2019. Statement of accounts for accounting units with income of expenditure over £25,000 but under £250,000 must also be submitted by 30 April 2019. Next meeting date – 19 March 2019 The next Panel meeting is scheduled for Tuesday 19 March 2019 at 9.30am at the Radisson Blu Hotel. List of agreed actions Action Responsible Royal Mail – Mailing information to be circulated Rachel Winham and Caralyn Morton Submit donation and loan returns for Quarter 4 by 30 January 2019. Party representatives Submit Statement of Accounts up to £250,000 by 30 April 2019. Party representatives Submit Statement of Accounts for Accounting Units as detailed by 30 April 2019. Party representatives

Board minutes: 25 September 2019 | Electoral Commission Search

Board minutes: 25 September 2019 You are in the Electoral Commission Board section Home How we make decisions Electoral Commission Board On this page Apologies and introductions Declarations of interest Minutes of the Commission Board meeting of 26 June 2019, note from the Commissioner Day on 17 July 2019, and note from meeting of Commissioners on 5 September 2019 Discussion on imminent political events affecting the Commission (oral update) Policy development grants scheme for 2020/21 Public awareness plans for the May 2020 elections Business planning 2020/21 – planning strategy and themes Performance report Quarter 1 2019/20 Schedule of Commission Board and Committee meetings 2020/21 Chief Executive's update Forward plan of Board business 2019/20 Action tracker Chair and Chief Executive's meetings and meetings of note in Scotland, Wales, and Northern Ireland First published: 20 January 2020 Last updated: 6 February 2020 Meeting overview Date: Wednesday 25 September 2019 Time: 9:30am to 1:15pm Location: Boothroyd Room, 3 Bunhill Row, London Date of next scheduled meeting: Commissioner Day, Wednesday 30 October 2019 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting John Holmes, Chair Alasdair Morgan Alastair Ross Anna Carragher Elan Closs Stephens Joan Walley Rob Vincent Sarah Chambers Stephen Gilbert Sue Bruce (Videoconference) Bob Posner, Chief Executive Craig Westwood, Director, Communications, Policy and Research Kieran Rix, Director, Finance and Corporate Services Louise Edwards, Director, Regulation Amanda Kelly, General Counsel David Bailey, Head of Strategic Planning and Performance David Meek, Senior Adviser, Governance Tim Crowley, Head of Campaigns and Corporate Communications Mel Davidson, Head of Support and Improvement Niki Nixon, Head of External Communications (for item 4) Mette Christiansen, Senior Policy Adviser (for item 5) Jess Cook, Senior Communications Officer (for item 6) Apologies and introductions Ailsa Irvine, Director of Electoral Administration and Guidance, gave her apologies. The Chair asked the Board to observe a few moments silence for Jessica Holmes, a valued colleague who had recently passed away. Declarations of interest No new declarations of interest. Minutes of the Commission Board meeting of 26 June 2019 (EC 52/19), note from the Commissioner Day on 17 July 2019 (EC 53/19), and note from meeting of Commissioners on 5 September 2019 (EC 54/19) Action: Amend paragraph 8.2 in the minute from the 26 June 2019 Board to note that the percentage of voters who did not return to vote after being turned away, while small in absolute terms, could still amount to a significant number of voters across all polling stations at an election and therefore affect the outcome. Resolved: That, after an amendment to 8.2, the minutes of the Commission Board meeting on 26 June 2019 be agreed. The records of the Commissioner Day on 17 July 2019 and of the Meeting of Commissioners on 5 September 2019 were noted. Discussion on imminent political events affecting the Commission (oral update) The Chief Executive gave an overview of political events relevant to the Commission, including a new Speaker, the approaching Brexit date, and potential electoral events. There was also consideration of the recent outcomes of referrals of certain individuals to the police. The Director of Corporate and Financial Services provided an update on our no-deal Brexit planning. It was noted that we had calibrated our thinking with the release of Operation Yellowhammer documents. For our own internal operations outside of an electoral event we did not expect to be significantly affected. We had offered support to non-UK European Union staff. One possible area of wider concern for local authorities was supplies of paper in the event of a snap election. The Board discussed contingency planning for an unscheduled UK Parliamentary General Election. We would continue to work with Returning Officers and the Cabinet Office to support their contingency planning. The Board discussed complications associated with a possible winter poll, including the proximity to the annual canvass, potential issues resulting from bad weather, and the fact that many polling stations were usually located in schools, which might be in session on the day of a potential election. There was discussion of the potential difficulties for overseas British nationals registering and participating in any unscheduled election. We had recommended that Returning Officers contact registered overseas voters to inform them of the advantage of appointing a proxy to vote for them to mitigate any difficulties. The Board discussed the anticipated Queen's Speech and what impact legislation being developed by the government would have on the Commission's work programme. There was an expectation that the new Speaker would be elected in early November. There would also be a new Clerk to the Speaker's Committee. Plans were in place to ensure that both were well-briefed on the work of the Commission, as soon as they were in place. The Board received an update on recent police and National Crime Agency (NCA) investigations of cases we had referred to them. We were following up with the police, the NCA and the Crown Prosecution Service (CPS) to understand better how they had reached their conclusions. In due course the Board might need to consider how best the Commission should proceed in future when evidence of possible criminal behaviour not covered by the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act (PPERA) was uncovered. Policy development grants scheme for 2020/21 (EC 55/19) The Director of Communications, Policy, and Research outlined the recommendations made and the associated considerations of timing. Owing to the volatile political environment, further recommendations might be required before the 7 March 2020 deadline. The Cabinet Office had nevertheless said that recommendations now would be helpful. The Board discussed the value of a more fundamental look at the system in the future, including whether providing funding for compliance might be more appropriate than providing funding for policy development. This would of course require new legislation. It was confirmed in response to questions that the political parties, including the smaller parties for whom the grants were proportionately more important, were already aware of our likely recommendations. Resolved: That the Commission recommend to government that they amend the statutory instrument so that: the Independent Group for Change, which currently had more than two Members of Parliament (MPs), be included in the list of eligible Great Britain-wide parties for the coming year the European Parliamentary Election data be removed from the formula once the United Kingdom had left the European Union The Board delegated responsibility on agreeing any necessary further recommendations to government on including or removing a party from the scheme in accordance with the statutory eligibility criteria, for example following a General Election, to the Chief Executive, in consultation with the Chair. Public awareness plans for the May 2020 elections (EC 56/19) The Director of Communications, Policy, and Research noted that this was the usual annual consideration of the plans and budget related to the scheduled May polls. He highlighted the value of a campaign planned well in advance, both for its own sake and to ensure that the Commission had scope to react quickly to any unscheduled polls. The Board heard that the May 2020 media-buying environment would be less complicated than the May 2019 environment as the areas were more closely geographically located. There had been conversations with large social media organisations about their involvement in potential voter registration campaigns. The Board considered the difficulties in collecting information that would assist with decision-making on these campaigns. The Board noted that it was not possible to track the number of voters who took action as a result of our media spend, how many of those who took action were already registered, nor how many of those then went out and voted. The Board heard that research conducted around the May 2019 elections had found that there was high awareness of our campaign, but that this did not always lead to action by voters. This had been factored in to our brief to agencies in developing the 2020 campaign. The Board discussed the possibility of focussing our resources more in advance of national elections where there was a higher level of public awareness. The Head of Campaigns and Corporate Communications confirmed the continued refinement to the 'Got 5?' campaign, including changing the mix of media (broadcast, out-of-home, social, and digital). The Board noted that our creative and media planning agency would submit three fully costed options as part of the campaign. In response to questions about the merits of a campaign promoting online registration, when some of our target audience could not access online registration options, the Director of Communications, Policy, and Research noted that a simple message that promoted one method of registration was more likely to result in action. Voters who could not access online registration options would be targeted separately through partner agencies who already had relations with these audiences. The Board sought an assurance that there was sufficient provision to influence hard-to-reach groups, including through partnerships. The Board heard that the current partnership strategy had evolved significantly over the past five years and that this strategy was kept under review to ensure the appropriate balance between resource, potential impact, and supporting partners working with hard-to-reach groups. The Board heard that a generic partner pack would be launched during National Democracy Week, to support partner organisations to register voters throughout the year. The Board encouraged continued and indeed increased focus on the harder to reach groups, making the most of existing networks, including schools, colleges and universities. The Board asked whether the level of duplicate registrations had dropped. The Head of Campaigns and Corporate Communications confirmed some progress in reducing this, but it was still a continuing challenge. Action: The Director of Communications, Policy, and Research to circulate the list of partner organisations used in voter registration campaigns. Resolved: That the paper be agreed. Business planning 2020/21 – planning strategy and themes (EC 57/19) The Chief Executive explained why this was being considered earlier in the year for 2020/21, to guide work by the Executive before it became set in stone. More specific, costed ideas would come to the Board in December. He identified four new priority areas for possible extra work and funding: building local authority resilience and capacity, promoting compliance, improving voter education, and responding to government initiatives and priorities. The Board encouraged the Chief Executive to ensure that the Commission's own existing reform agenda was being pushed forward, in addition to efforts to support government reforms. The Chief Executive noted that in the current year we had demonstrated our ability to improve our effectiveness and efficiency, and to maintain projects and work-streams while delivering on unexpected events. The extra resources agreed by the Speaker's Committee for the current year had been an important part of this. The Chief Executive invited each director to explain any possible new corporate initiatives in their area. The Board discussed the four priority areas. This included the initiative to enhance our support work on democratic education and digital literacy. There was also consideration of opportunities from effective partnership working, for example with other regulators. The new priority areas looked promising, including new support for compliance. Nevertheless the Commission should be clear in ensuring the scope and nature of new initiatives e.g. over digital literacy is consistent with the Commission's role and remit. The Board encouraged an approach that emphasised building the resilience of the electoral system. This would allow us not only to help local authorities directly ourselves but also to promote support for them in receiving the resources they needed to achieve what was asked of them.

Resolved: That the paper be agreed, taking into account the specific points noted above. Performance report Quarter 1 2019/20 (EC 58/19 and 59/19) The Chief Executive explained the details of the new format of the report. The Chief Executive reminded the Board of the changes in how performance was rated. For example, we had reinterpreted red to mean action must be taken in a particular area, not that there was necessarily a major concern across the whole of that area. This allowed a more open approach to problems. The Director of Finance and Corporate Services provided more detail of the rating of Goal Two, and the first quarter issues in delivering Political Finance and Regulation online. We were using agile project management, where we actively tested stages of the project throughout the development of the new system. Progress on the project was now getting back on track. The Director of Finance and Corporate Services provided an update on the budget forecast, which was currently projecting an overspend. He explained that the volume of litigation had been higher than expected, meaning higher associated costs. There was also a further impact from the costs arising from the European Parliamentary Election: more of the spending than anticipated had fallen in this financial year, compared to the previous one, because of the very late confirmation of these elections. The Director said that budgets were being closely managed to compensate for these pressures but there could still be a need for supplementary budget approval from the Speaker's Committee at some stage. Action: The Director of Finance and Corporate Services agreed to provide more information in future quarterly performance reports on the next steps of the projects detailed in slide 22 and 23 of this paper. Resolved: That the paper be noted. Schedule of Commission Board and Committee meetings 2020/21 (EC 60/19) Action: That the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee meeting proposed for 24 June 2020 be moved to 22 July 2020. Resolved: That, subject to the amendment above, the paper be agreed. Chief Executive's update (EC 61/19) The Chair invited the Director of Finance and Corporate Services to comment on the search for an effective formula for funding for the devolved legislatures in Wales and Scotland, given the need to make progress with this quickly. The Director noted that this was under consideration by finance officials in the devolved legislatures, and raised complex questions for them both about the source of the funding, and how it should be accounted for. He agreed that it needed constant and timely attention. The Board passed on their congratulations on the appointment of Cahir Hughes to the recently vacated position of Head of the Electoral Commission, Northern Ireland. The Board discussed the impact of an unscheduled UK Parliamentary General Election on the registration of new political parties. The Director of Regulation confirmed that party registrations were assessed on a first-come, first-assessed basis, and that given the multiple legal tests involved, a six-week notice period before a poll would likely be too short to register a party that applied only once an election was called. The Board noted the outcome of the recent court case regarding BeLeave, including costs associated with the case. Resolved: That the paper be noted. Forward plan of Board business 2019/20 (EC 62/19) The Chief Executive confirmed that the prosecutions policy discussion scheduled for December would be deferred for a short period to allow for a delay to the public consultation on this item in the light of the current uncertain political situation. The Board asked for further discussion of modernising voting registration to be scheduled for a future meeting. The members of the Audit Committee would discuss outside the meeting any contingency plans for the October 2019 Audit Committee. Resolved: That the paper be noted. Action tracker (EC 63/19) Resolved:

That the paper be noted. Chair and Chief Executive's meetings and meetings of note in Scotland, Wales, and Northern Ireland (EC 64/19) Resolved: That the paper be noted.

Northern Ireland Assembly candidate spending 2021 Scottish Parliament candidate spending 2021 Senedd Cymru candidate spending 2019 UK Parliamentary general election candidate spending Overview There are limits on how much candidates can spend at an election, and controls on the sources of funding for that spending. After elections, candidates and their agents have to submit a candidate spending return to the Returning Officer at the local council. The spending return lists what the candidate spent during the election campaign and also any donations they received. For major contests, such as UK Parliamentary general elections, Returning Officers send copies of the candidate spending returns to us. We then make this data available for you to view. Although we look at the returns to monitor compliance with the rules, we can't take further action ourselves if we find inaccuracies. It is the responsibility of the police to deal with any allegations that a return is inaccurate. Spending limits The spending limit for candidates depends on the constituency they are standing in. The spending limit is calculated based on the number of eligible voters in a constituency. The more eligible voters there are, the higher the spending limit. This is why the spending limit can vary greatly between constituencies. The smallest constituency has around 20,000 eligible voters, whereas the largest has over 100,000. Candidates and their agents are responsible for calculating their spending limit, using estimated figures from the Returning Officer. Spending returns The candidate spending returns include the total the candidate spent, as well as a breakdown of how much they spent on things like advertising, transport and public meetings. They also include any donations the candidate received above £50. Explore the data Scottish Parliament elections Explore the candidate spending returns data and download the spreadsheet for the 2021 Scottish Parliament election. Senedd Cymru elections Explore the candidate spending returns data and download the spreadsheet for the 2021 Senedd Cymru election. UK Parliamentary general elections Use our tool to explore the data from the December 2019 UK Parliamentary general election. The tool uses data taken from the spending returns that candidates submitted to Returning Officers across the UK. We publish this information as it appears on the candidate's return so that there is an accurate record of what was reported. Information about candidates' share of the vote in each constituency has been taken from data provided by the House of Commons Library in January 2020. This data may not reflect any subsequent revisions or updates made by local councils. You can also download spreadsheets for the candidate spending returns data from the: 2017 UK Parliamentary general election 2015 UK Parliamentary general election If you would like further information about any of the data included in the tool or our spreadsheets, you can contact us. Reforming electoral law We don't have a responsibility to regulate or enforce candidate spending, and neither do Returning Officers. Although we look at the returns to monitor compliance with the rules, we can't take further action ourselves if we find inaccuracies. It is the responsibility of the police to deal with any allegations that a return is inaccurate. This is one area of electoral law that we want to see reformed. We are responsible for enforcing the rules relating to party and campaigner spending, but continue to recommend that we should also have the powers to enforce the candidate spending rules and to sanction breaches. Find out about other changes to electoral law we want to see. Related content Past elections and referendums Read our reports and view data about past elections and referendums Campaign spending: Political parties and non-party campaigners Find out about campaign spending for political parties and non-party campaigners Donations and loans Find out about donations and loans to a political party, individual or other organisation Annual accounts Find out about political parties' annual accounts

Report: The costs of delivering the June 2016 referendum on the UK's membership of the European Union | Electoral Commission Search Report: The costs of delivering the June 2016 referendum on the UK's membership of the European Union You are in the EU referendum section Home EU referendum On this page Summary How the referendum was funded The cost of the referendum Electoral Commission costs Costs of mailings for the designated lead campaigners Regional Counting Officer and Counting Officer costs First published: 10 June 2019 Last updated: 30 July 2019 Summary On 23 June 2016 a referendum was held across the United Kingdom and Gibraltar about whether the UK should remain a member of the European Union or leave the European Union. We had a number of specific responsibilities and functions in relation to the referendum, which included our then Chair, Jenny Watson, acting as Chief Counting Officer (CCO) with overall responsibility for the administration of the poll. The CCO appointed a Regional Counting Officer (RCO) for each of the eleven electoral regions in Great Britain. The local government Returning Officer (RO) for each local authority in Great Britain was the Counting Officer (CO) for that area. The Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland was the CO for the whole of Northern Ireland. We were also responsible for overseeing and accounting to the UK Parliament for the payment of fees to RCOs and COs for running the referendum and the reimbursement of the costs they incurred in doing so. About this report and about the referendum About this report This report sets out the operational cost of running the referendum. The objective of publishing this information is to ensure transparency and accountability in the use of public funds in the running of major polls. This report covers: the Electoral Commission's costs, including grants given to the designated lead campaigners the costs of mailings for the designated lead campaigners the costs of RCOs and COs Although we published a costs report following the last UK wide referendum in May 2011 (on the UK Parliamentary voting system), we haven't carried out comparisons between the costs of that poll in 2011 and the costs of the referendum in 2016. The referendum of May 2011 was held on the same day as a number of other elections, which meant that many of the costs incurred in running the referendum, such as the hire of polling stations and count venues, were shared with those other elections. As a result it is difficult to compare the figures in any meaningful way. We are publishing this report now as we have only recently settled the final claims from COs. Completing the claims process took longer than originally thought as the majority of claims were submitted close to the deadline and generated more queries than had been anticipated. As a result, our analysis of the claims was delayed. The announcement of the early UK Parliamentary General Election in April 2017 also exacerbated this as resources had to be diverted – by both local authorities and the Commission – to ensure the successful delivery of that poll. This report does not cover spending by campaigners or referendum campaign broadcast costs. Details of the expenditure of registered campaigners, including designated lead campaigners, are available on our searchable online database, PEF Online , and are discussed in more detail in our ' Report on the regulation of campaigners at the referendum on the UK's membership of the European Union held on 23 June 2016 ' (March 2017). About the referendum Our report on the EU referendum , published in September 2016, provides an analysis of the administration of the referendum. This included the experience of voters and campaigners, the management and delivery of the poll, the regulation of campaigners at the referendum and the provision of information for voters. At the referendum on 23 June 2016: a total of 46,500,001 people were registered to vote 33,577,342 electors cast a vote – a turnout of 72.2% 16,141,241 people voted Remain – 48.1% of all valid votes 17,410,742 people voted Leave – 51.9%

of all valid votes there were 25,359 rejected ballot papers 382 COs set up 41,050 polling stations 107,100 staff worked in those polling stations over 51,500 staff worked on verifying and counting the ballot papers over 8.5 million postal votes were issued to electors, representing 18.4% of the UK electorate, of which 7.3 million (87.6%) were returned there were 123 registered campaign groups, and two official lead campaign groups were designated by the Electoral Commission: Vote Leave Britain Stronger in Europe (Britain Stronger in Europe was the campaign name for The In Campaign Ltd) the Electoral Commission distributed 28 million information booklets to households across the UK View the local totals for all voting areas and the overall result . Referendum total cost and cost breakdown Cost of the referendum The total cost of the conduct of the referendum was £129.128m. Cost breakdown £7.998m in operating costs by the Electoral Commission, including: £1.642m direct staff costs £6.025m public awareness activity costs £0.331m costs of the administration of RCO and CO claims £26.589, relating to the designated organisations: £1.200m grants to Designated Organisations £25.389m in designated organisation mailings and other Royal Mail costs £94.541m in CO and RCO costs including: polling station costs postal vote costs poll card costs count costs fees for RCO and CO services A more detailed breakdown per category can be found in section 3: The cost of the referendum. How the referendum was funded The legislative framework Detailed information about how the referendum was funded Background Legislation enacted by the UK Parliament, the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000 (PPERA), sets out the legal framework for referendums and gives the Electoral Commission specific responsibilities. It also specifies that there will be a Chief Counting Officer (CCO), with overall responsibility for running a referendum. Before a referendum under this legislative framework can take place, specific additional legislation is needed, covering details such as: the date of the referendum the referendum question specific rules for running the referendum The UK Government was responsible for the detailed legislation for this referendum. The European Union Referendum Bill was introduced to Parliament on 28 May 2015 and passed into law on 17 December 2015. Several pieces of secondary legislation were also required before the referendum could take place. This included regulations to specify the detailed rules for the administration of the poll and to provide funding for the Counting Officers (COs) and Regional Counting Officers (RCOs) to deliver the referendum. Administration of the poll The European Union Referendum Act 2015 enabled the CCO to appoint an RCO for each of the eleven electoral regions in Great Britain. These regions were the same as those used for European Parliamentary elections. There were nine regions in England, with Gibraltar included in the South West electoral region, plus Scotland and Wales. Northern Ireland was a single voting area, with the Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland as the CO. The European Union Referendum (Conduct) Regulations 2016, which were made on 25 February 2016, specified the rules for the administration of the poll and were largely modelled on those used for the May 2011 referendum on the voting system for UK Parliamentary elections. Funding of the poll The funding allocation for the EU Referendum followed the existing framework established by the UK Government for the funding of both UK Parliamentary and European Parliamentary elections. Under this framework the Cabinet Office calculated a Maximum Recoverable Amount (MRA) for each Counting Officer and Regional Counting Officer within which they could allocate resources as they saw fit, provided that sums spent were necessary for the efficient and effective conduct of the referendum. This calculation of the overall MRA by the Cabinet Office was based on the amount actually spent for the last relevant national poll, adjusted for factors such as inflation and other increased costs. The European Union Referendum (Counting Officers' and Regional Counting Officers' Charges) Regulations 2016, which were made on 22 March 2016, set out how the MRAs RCOs and COs could recover for their costs in running the referendum. This included both their personal services in delivering those roles and the expenses they incurred in administering the poll. In addition, with the consent of the Treasury, we were able to authorise the payment of more than the MRA if we were satisfied that it was necessary to incur the expense for the efficient and effective conduct of the referendum and the charge for it was reasonable. Legislative requirements, along with directions issued by the CCO, determined some of the costs that needed to be incurred. These included the need to provide staff and venues, and the number that should be provided. COs were able to control other costs incurred by decisions taken locally. For example, some local authorities were able to negotiate costs for the hire of polling stations. We were given responsibility for administering the process by which RCOs and COs were paid their fees and reimbursed for their costs in running the referendum. We were also given powers to make regulations setting out the detailed procedures for that process. We did this in The Counting Officers', Regional Counting Officers' and Chief Counting Officer's Accounts (European Union Referendum) Regulations 2016. In March 2016 we published comprehensive guidance for RCOs and COs on how they should account for their expenditure, and to support them with the process of submitting their claims. In line with the UK Government's previous practice, once we had the statutory authority to do so, we paid COs an advance of 75% of their MRA from April 2016. The purpose of this was to allow COs to meet any immediate pre-poll costs and pay for staff, venues, equipment and other services immediately after the poll. That left the remaining 25% of the MRA for each CO to be reimbursed as soon as their claim was submitted and settled. Also in line with previous practice, we allowed COs who thought their 75% advance would be insufficient to meet their immediate costs to apply for an increased advance (up to 90% of the MRA in total). No CO took advantage of this facility.

Processing of claims As had been the case in 2011, we engaged the Elections Claims Unit (ECU), part of the Cabinet Office, as subject matter experts to receive and process claims from COs for reimbursement of their costs. The cost for ECU's services, which included staffing, accommodation and associated administrative costs, was £0.331m. COs were asked to submit referendum claims to the ECU within 6 months of the date of the poll. This made the deadline 23 December 2016. The ECU was then responsible for checking that: costs had been accounted for correctly the necessary supporting evidence had been supplied the items claimed were reimbursable in line with the guidance we had provided As part of this process the ECU was able to request additional information or evidence from COs and query items of expenditure. The ECU followed the model of three levels of scrutiny introduced by the Cabinet Office in 2014. The three levels were: plain accounts, light touch and full scrutiny. Each level of scrutiny had different requirements for supporting evidence. While in every category a Counting Officer was required to account for their expenditure, those in the Plain Accounts scrutiny category only needed to supply invoices etc. for IT services and payments to staff in excess of £2,500. Those in the Light Touch category had to supply the same information but additionally had to supply invoices/receipts, etc. for the costs of printing and postage. Counting Officers in the Full Scrutiny category were required to supply receipts/invoices, etc. for all their expenditure associated with the referendum. A risk based approach was adopted to selecting which category a CO would be placed in. This was supplemented by a system of random selection. View a full list of the category of scrutiny allocated to each voting area. Any CO exceeding the MRA was automatically subjected to a full scrutiny review. Once the ECU had scrutinised a claim and all queries were resolved, we were responsible for approving the final settlement and raising the payment of the remaining balance to the CO, or requesting any reimbursement of funds that might be due. Where the final amount agreed was greater than the MRA, final payment was subject to approval by the Treasury.

The cost of the referendum The overall cost of the referendum was £129.128m. This includes:

- Electoral Commission costs
- costs of mailings for the designated lead campaigners
- Regional Counting Officer (RCO) and Counting Officer (CO) costs
- Electoral Commission costs

Breakdown of our role and funding Our role At a referendum held under the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000 (PPERA), we are responsible for:

- commenting on the intelligibility of the referendum question
- registering organisations or individuals who want to campaign in the referendum
- considering and approving applications for designation as the lead campaign group for each referendum outcome
- making grant payments to the approved designated organisations monitoring spending on referendum campaigning, in line with the referendum spending limits imposed by PPERA
- providing advice and guidance on the rules to campaigners monitoring and securing compliance with campaign donation, loan and spending controls
- promoting public awareness of the referendum, its subject matter, and how to vote in it
- reporting on the administration of the referendum and referendum campaign spending

Ahead of the EU referendum, we ran a multimedia public awareness campaign to give people the essential information they needed to take part. Our activity, aimed at all voters, began on 15 May 2016. It included advertising, a voting guide, public relations and partnership activities. At the EU referendum, the Chair of the Commission was the Chief Counting Officer (CCO) with responsibility for the conduct of the referendum and for ensuring the accuracy of the overall result. The CCO's role involved:

- a power of direction over RCOs and COs relating to preparations for the referendum and the discharge of their functions
- certifying and declaring the total number of ballots counted and the total number of votes cast in favour of each answer to the question in the referendum
- Funding We are accountable to the UK Parliament for our expenditure. In accordance with PPERA, we are required to submit our budget in the form of a Parliamentary Estimate each financial year to the Speaker's Committee. After review, the Speaker's Committee lays the Estimate before the House of Commons. These Estimates are the means by which we seek authority from Parliament for our spending each year. In accordance with the EU Referendum Act 2015, we were also able to draw down funds for:
 - RCOs' and COs' expenses and services
 - the delivery of campaign information by the designated lead organisations
 - sweeps by the Royal Mail on polling day

These are all funded directly from the Consolidated Fund and are therefore outside the Commission's Estimate.

Breakdown of our total costs

Category	2015-16 (£m)	2016-17 (£m)	2017-18 (£m)
Total Lead campaigner grants	0.000	1.2000	0.000
EC public awareness (a credit is shown for public awareness in 2017-18 due to the receipt of a credit note from the advertiser)	0.802	5.252	-0.029
6.025 EC staffing and operational costs	0.287	1.463	0.223
RCO and CO fees and charges	1.973	0.000	25.389
Royal Mail costs	0.000	25.389	0.000
Total	1.089	127.845	0.94
129.128

The Electoral Commission is not VAT registered therefore all costs shown are inclusive of VAT where applicable. Further details of our activity, performance and use of financial resources (including detailed financial statements) can be found in our Annual Report, which is published yearly.

Costs of mailings for the designated lead campaigners We had a statutory duty to appoint designated lead campaign groups for each side of the referendum campaign. We could designate for one side of the debate only, or for neither side if we received no applicants for an outcome or if we were not satisfied that any of the applicants adequately represented those supporting a particular outcome. Registered campaigners could apply to be designated lead campaign groups. On 13 April 2016, we designated: The In Campaign Ltd (also known as Britain Stronger in Europe) as the lead campaigner for the Remain outcome Vote Leave Ltd as the lead campaigner for the Leave outcome

Lead campaign groups have certain benefits in addition to those given to registered campaigners, including the sending of a referendum address to each elector or each household in the referendum area. This is a statutory entitlement under Section 110(4) of PPERA. From the non-voted funds allocated for the EU Referendum, the largest actual expenditure we incurred, excluding RCOs and COs' fees and charges, was for the provision of mailings on behalf of the designated lead campaigners. This covered the cost of delivering campaign materials, not the cost of producing those materials, which the campaigners met themselves. The table below shows details of this cost by campaign group:

Designated lead campaigner	Number of deliveries	Cost (£m)
Vote Leave	44,936,142	12.942
Britain Stronger in Europe (Britain Stronger in Europe was the campaign name for The In Campaign Ltd)	40,760,719	11.739

Details of Royal Mail costs Royal Mail costs We used the services of Royal Mail Ltd as the universal service provider to deliver the designated lead campaigners' mailings.

Funding was provided from the Consolidated Fund for both the Leave and Remain designated organisations to exercise their statutory entitlement to send a referendum address to every household or elector. Final day sweeps and International Business Response Licences also incurred costs. Final day sweeps take place on polling day, when Royal Mail check their sorting offices for postal vote packs that have been posted very close to, or on, polling day. The sweeps ensure that those votes are delivered to the relevant CO before the close of the poll, so that they can be included in the count. The costs incurred in relation to the International Business Response Licence were to enable overseas electors to be able to return their votes on a "reply-paid" basis. The total cost amounted to £25.389m. The table below shows a detailed breakdown of this cost:

Description	Cost (£m)
Campaign mailings	24.681
Administration fee	0.444
Final day sweeps	0.202
International Business Response Licence (overseas voters)	0.063
Total	25.389

Regional Counting Officer and Counting Officer costs The role of Regional Counting Officers and Counting Officers Our Chair as CCO for the referendum appointed an RCO for each of the 11 electoral regions in Great Britain. Appointments were generally based upon officers who had been designated by the Secretary of State as Regional Returning Officers for electoral regions at the 2014 European Parliamentary elections. The RCOs were responsible for co-ordinating the planning and administration of the poll across their electoral region and for managing the collation of the local totals into a total for the electoral region. They were also responsible for reporting those totals to the CCO to feed into the UK-wide result. In Great Britain, appointment as Counting Officer flowed automatically from appointment as local government Returning Officer. Each local authority is required to appoint a senior officer who acts as the Returning Officer for local elections in that authority's area. For the purposes of the referendum in Great Britain, the local authority area was known as the voting area. Each local authority was a separate voting area. In Northern Ireland, the CO for the Northern Ireland voting area was the Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland. COs were personally responsible for the conduct of the referendum. The role of the CO was to ensure that the referendum was administered effectively in their voting area. This included managing the conduct of the poll, counting the votes and transmitting the local area totals to the RCO. COs and RCOs were also personally responsible for the expenditure incurred for the purpose of conducting the referendum in their voting areas, and for preparing and submitting the accounts relating to their own activities. Regional Counting Officers' costs The role of an RCO included planning and coordination at a regional level, managing the collation of regional count totals and reporting those totals to the CCO. The Charges Order (The European Union Referendum (Counting Officers and Regional Counting Officers Charges) Regulations 2016) specified that RCOs were entitled to a fixed fee of £12,000 for their services. All RCOs claimed the fee for their services in full at a total cost of £132,000. RCOs were also entitled to recover the expenses necessarily incurred in relation to their duties. The Charges Order specified the Maximum Recoverable Amount (MRA) which could be claimed by each RCO for expenses, £320,486 in total. Following scrutiny of all claims, the total cost for expenses was £259,445, an underspend of £61,041 (13%). Ten RCOs spent less than their allocated MRA and one RCO exceeded the MRA. Of the total cost for expenses, RCOs spent £151,303 on administering the regional element of the result collation and the remainder (£108,142) on other costs.

MRA Total cost Services £132,000 Expenses £320,486 £259,445 Total £252,486
£391,445 Counting Officers' costs The Charges Order listed what a CO could claim in respect of services and expenses. Overall, the total MRA which COs could claim was £2,078,342 for services and £99,649,604 for expenses, a total of £101,727,946.

Following settlement of all claims, the cost was £2,073,163 for CO services, with £5,179 CO fees unclaimed, and £92,076,530 for expenses, a total of £94,149,693. This represented an underspend of £7,578,253 (7%). MRA Total cost Services £2,078,342 Expenses £99,649,604 £92,076,530 Total £101,727,946 £94,149,693 287 COs spent less than their allocated MRA, 93 exceeded the MRA and two spent their exact allocation. 208 claims fell within a range of +/- 10% of the MRA, while 353 claims fell within a range of +/- 25% of the MRA. We will be undertaking some further analysis of spend compared to the performance of COs to try to ascertain if there is any discernible link between performance and expenditure. Our focus will be on count expenditure and will take into account factors such as: numbers of staff used numbers of ballot papers counted recorded times of key stages of the count process We intend to use this information to help us to identify and subsequently share examples of good practice to support the counting of votes at future electoral events.

Counting Officers' expenses The Order set a Maximum Recoverable Amount (MRA) for expenses for each voting area. An advance of 75% of the MRA for expenses was paid to each CO from April 2016, with the balance paid on settlement of their claim. CO expenses, covered by the MRA, included the costs of providing and paying staff, conducting the referendum and the count and all the ancillary activities necessary to discharge the COs functions. Polling station costs Expenditure on polling stations includes: the costs of both permanent and temporary venues to house 41,050 polling stations across the UK and Gibraltar at the referendum (£8.308 million) the costs of equipment used in polling stations such as polling booths, ballot boxes, stationery and notices (£1.303 million) the costs of preparing and transporting equipment for use in polling stations (£3.487 million) the costs of printing ballot papers (£2.837 million) payments made to the 107,100 polling station staff and staff who supervised polling stations (£23.521 million). This includes costs associated with training those staff in advance of polling day Description Cost (£m) Presiding Officers 8.901 Poll clerks 9.307 Supervising officers 1.323 Travel and subsistence 0.858 Training 3.131 Accommodation: permanent 6.455 Accommodation: temporary 1.854 Preparation and transport 3.487 Equipment 1.303 Printing ballot papers 2.837 Total 39.456 Postal vote costs There were 8.488 million registered postal voters at the referendum. A total of 8.536 million postal ballot packs, including replacement ballot packs, were issued across the UK by COs. 7.476 million votes were returned. The total spent by COs on postal votes was £19.383 million. The average cost per postal voter was £2.28 and the average cost per postal vote returned was £2.59. Expenditure on postal votes includes: the cost of printing and postage (both outward and return – postal voters are given a pre-paid return envelope) (£13.904m) payments made to staff working on the issue, receipt and checking of postal votes, including training (£3.589m) the costs, where applicable, of venues used to house the postal vote operation (£0.913m) the costs of equipment used in issuing, receiving and checking postal votes such as insertion machines, letter openers and scanning machines for checking dates of birth and signatures (£0.977m) Description Cost (£m) Staff: preparation and issue 0.602 Staff: opening and verification 2.953 Training 0.033 Printing and stationary 5.672 Postage: outbound 4.624 Postage: inbound 3.609 Accommodation 0.913 Equipment 0.977 Total 19.383 Poll card costs Poll cards were issued to each of the 46.5 million registered electors at the referendum at a total cost of £15.485 million. Expenditure on poll cards includes: the cost of printing and delivering poll cards to all electors (£15.259m) the cost of payments to staff involved in this exercise (£0.161m) equipment costs (£0.065m) Description Cost (£m) Staff: preparation 0.161 Equipment 0.065 Printing and stationary 2.003 Postage or delivery 13.256 Total 15.485 Count costs The total spent by COs on the count was £12.557 million. The average cost per elector across the UK for administering the count was £0.27. This ranged from £0.20 in Wales to £0.47 in Scotland. Expenditure on the count includes: the costs of venues to house the counts, including venue security costs (£2.889m) the costs of transporting ballot papers from polling stations to count centres (£0.718m) the costs of equipment used at count centres (£0.666m) payments made to 51,000 count centre staff – this includes travel and subsistence and costs associated with training those staff (£8.283m) Description Cost (£m) Count staff 5.454 Supervising staff 2.552 Travel and subsistence 0.098 Training 0.179 Accommodation 2.583 Equipment 0.666 Transport 0.718 Security 0.306 Total 12.557 Other costs The total spent by COs on other costs was £5.195 million. This category includes: costs of staff employed on clerical and administrative support to the CO throughout the referendum period (i.e. not specifically related to the specific exercises covered above) costs of materials and services that could not be accounted for under other categories of expenditure, such as costs of printing statutory and other notices, general stationery, general postage, software licence fees, telephone bills and bank charges Description Cost (£m) General clerical 2.851 Travel and subsistence 0.036 Providing training 0.696 Materials and services 1.605 Nominations 0.000 Translation: Welsh 0.001 Legal advice 0.006 Staff superannuation 0.000 Total 5.195 Counting Officers' services The Charges Order provided for COs to recover an MRA for the services specified in the Order which included conducting the referendum, discharging the COs duties at the referendum and making arrangements for the referendum. The Maximum Recoverable Amount (MRA) was calculated based on the number of electors in the voting area for which the CO was responsible. We had the power to reduce or remit the fee of any COs if we considered they had not performed their services adequately. View our procedure for evaluating performance of services . Fees for services To ensure that payment was related to overall satisfactory performance of the duties by RCOs and COs, including timely submission of accounts, we made clear the separation between claims for expenses and claims for the fee for services. 75% of the CO's specified fee for their services was paid immediately following the poll. The remaining portion of each CO's fee was paid after submission and clearance of their claim, subject to their satisfactory performance. No CO was considered to have performed unsatisfactorily and therefore none of the fees were withheld. Details of payments made to COs for their services can be found in Appendix B.

Superannuation

The regulations which govern superannuation payments are the responsibility of the Department for Communities and Local Government (CLG) in England and Wales and of the Scottish Government in Scotland. While fees paid to Returning Officers at elections are pensionable, currently fees for CO duties are not. The current regulations do not provide for superannuation payments to be made in relation to the fees of a CO at a referendum (as opposed to an RO at an election). Insurance and indemnity COs already had their own arrangements to insure themselves against any risks they face in taking forward their statutory duties at elections. In many cases the local authorities' own insurance arrangements for elections would contain provisions enabling cover to be extended to cover referendums. COs were therefore asked to check what cover they had in place. It was recognised that, while the local authority insurance may cover certain risks, COs may also be liable for claims of a type not covered by existing insurance policies. As a result we arranged through Parliament for a specific indemnity for the referendum to be provided to RCOs and COs to supplement any insurance policies that already existed locally. This indemnity would only come into force where existing insurance cover had been exhausted by the CO i.e. all claims should, in the first instance, be met by existing policies. In the event, no claims were made by RCOs or COs under the indemnity arrangement.

Lessons learned

We had hoped that the categorisation of claims and the associated levels of scrutiny would have enabled those COs in the lower categories of plain accounts and light touch, to submit their completed claims well in advance of the 23 December deadline. This would have enabled the ECU to start examining and processing larger numbers of claims much earlier than proved to be the case in practice. In fact, the ECU received the majority of claims in the last few weeks before the deadline. The calling of the early UK Parliamentary General Election for June 2017 also led to time being lost in considering claims. For the period before and immediately after that poll, COs and their key staff were necessarily involved in administering the election. We therefore asked ECU to pause their work in following up on observations and outstanding queries with COs during this period. The large number of claims that exceeded the MRA was another unforeseen factor that lead to a delay in completing the claims process.

Overall 94 claims out of 393 (24% of the total) were in excess of the MRA, requiring RCOs and COs to submit business cases to justify their expenditure. Each claim that exceeded the MRA immediately went into the full scrutiny category, requiring the provision of further evidence from RCOs and COs. Each claim then had to be presented for consideration to the Treasury prior to finally agreeing settlement. As a comparison, at the 2011 Referendum on the UK Parliamentary Voting System, only four RCOs and COs (1% of the total) submitted claims that exceeded the MRA. Although the overall settlement was close to the overall total MRA, the variances for individual COs suggests that further analysis needs to be undertaken by the UK Government to achieve a more accurate allocation of funding for future electoral events. We will review the processes involved in processing and settling claims now that all claims have been settled. We will feedback to Cabinet Office the lessons learnt from this review, to enable them to reflect these in the processes they follow for future elections.

Summary data

Region	Actual expenditure (£)	MRA (£)	Variance (£)
East Midlands	22,383.00	21,845.20	537.80
Eastern	22,670.00	21,845.20	537.80
Region	Actual expenditure (£)	MRA (£)	Variance (£)
London	22,861.00	21,845.20	537.80
Region	Actual expenditure (£)	MRA (£)	Variance (£)
18,137.42	21,845.20	537.80	22,670.00

4,723.58 North East 10,019.00 9,978.09 40.91 North West 55,910.00 45,177.33 10,732.67
Scotland 43,794.00 43,766.05 27.95 South East 36,520.00 19,900.95 16,619.05 South West and Gibraltar 35,000.00 18,136.96 16,863.04 Wales 38,118.00 24,579.17 13,538.83
West Midlands 22,273.00 19,681.53 2,591.47 Yorkshire and the Humber 10,938.00
7,942.45 2,995.55 Total 320,486.00 259,445.15 61,040.85 Counting Officers' expenses Counting Officers' expenses Region Funding allocation for expenses (MRA) (£) Actual expenditure (£) + / - (£) East Midlands 7,170,798 6,524,485 646,313 Eastern 8,613,431
7,922,373 691,058 London 12,023,242 12,865,583 -842,341 Northern Ireland 3,292,686
2,579,076 713,610 North East 4,130,203 3,691,992 438,211 North West 10,937,858
9,661,359 1,276,499 Scotland 12,166,220 9,818,505 2,347,715 South East 12,220,262
11,923,666 296,596 South West 8,371,085 8,006,517 364,568 Wales 4,911,921 4,441,805
470,116 West Midlands 8,315,347 7,461,687 853,660 Yorkshire and the Humber 7,496,551
7,179,484 317,067 Total 99,649,604 92,076,530 7,573,072 Counting Officers' expenses
by category Region Polling stations (£000) Postal voting (£000) Poll cards (£000)
Count (£000) Other (£000) Total (£000) East Midlands 2,676 1,440 1,167 769 472 6,524
Eastern 3,460 1,701 1,451 902 408 7,922 London 5,955 2,346 1,794 2,138 632 12,866
Northern Ireland 1,142 62 422 493 460 2,579 North East 1,411 1,161 552 397 171 3,692
North West 3,926 2,232 1,753 1,311 440 9,662 Scotland 4,210 1,980 1,376 1,864 388
9,819 South East 4,817 2,645 2,325 1,463 674 11,924 South West 3,433 1,722 1,430 964
457 8,007 Wales 2,084 913 753 444 249 4,442 West Midlands 3,277 1,506 1,216 1,013 451
7,462 Yorkshire and the Humber 3,066 1,675 1,247 797 394 7,179 Total 39,456 19,383
15,485 12,557 5,195 92,077 Counting Officers' expenses per elector and votes cast Per elector/vote costs by electoral region Region Total expenses (£) Electorate Votes cast Cost per elector Cost per vote East Midlands 6,524,485 3,384,299 2,510,496 1.93
2.60 Eastern 7,922,373 4,398,796 3,331,312 1.80 2.38 London 12,865,583 5,424,768
3,781,204 2.37 3.40 Northern Ireland 2,579,076 1,260,955 790,523 2.05 3.26 North East
3,691,992 1,934,341 1,341,387 1.91 2.75 North West 9,661,359 5,241,568 3,668,627 1.84
2.63 Scotland 9,818,505 3,987,112 2,681,179 2.46 3.66 South East 11,923,666 6,465,404
4,963,110 1.84 2.40 South West 8,006,517 4,138,134 3,174,909 1.93 2.52 Wales
4,441,805 2,270,272 1,628,054 1.96 2.73 West Midlands 7,461,687 4,116,572 2,965,369
1.81 2.52 Yorkshire and the Humber 7,179,484 3,877,780 2,741,172 1.85 2.62 Total
92,076,480 46,500,001 33,577,342 1.98 2.74 Per elector/vote costs by category
Category Total cost (£m) Electorate (millions) Votes cast (millions) Cost per elector (£) Cost per vote (£) Counting Officer services 2.073 46.500 33.577 0.04 0.06 Polling stations (Excludes electors registered to vote by post) 39.456 38.012 26.101 1.04
1.51 Postal votes (Only includes electors registered to vote by post) 19.383 8.488
7.476 2.28 2.59 Poll cards 15.485 46.500 33.577 0.33 0.46 The count 12.557 46.500
33.577 0.27 0.37 Other costs 5.195 46.500 33.577 0.11 0.15 Elector costs by category
Category Total cost (£) Electors (millions) Cost per elector (£) Poll cards (printing) 2.003 46.500 0.04 Poll cards (delivery) 13.256 46.500 0.29 Ballot papers (printing) 2.837 38.012 0.07 Postal ballots (printing) 5.672 8.488 0.67 Postal ballots (delivery) 4.624 8.488 0.54 Postal ballots (return) 3.609 8.488 0.43
Breakdown of expenditure by each Regional Counting Officer and Counting Officer Regional Counting Officers' data RCO RCO services Count costs Other costs East midlands £12,000 £13,958 £7,887 Eastern £12,000 £15,750 £14,550 London £12,000
£11,387 £6,750 North East £12,000 £6,933 £3,045 North West £12,000 £33,671 £11,506
Scotland £12,000 £43,766 - South East £12,000 £1,570 £18,331 South West £12,000
£8,076 £10,061 Wales £12,000 £3,307 £21,273 West Midlands £12,000 £9,682 £10,000
Yorkshire and the Humber £12,000 £3,203 £4,740 Total £132,000 £151,303 £108,142
Counting Officers' data Full table of Counting Officers' data Related content Testing

the EU referendum question Find out about our testing of the EU referendum question Results and turnout at the EU referendum View the results and turnout at the EU referendum Report: The regulation of campaigners at the referendum on the UK's membership of the European Union held on 23 June 2016 Read our report about the regulation of campaigners at the 2016 EU referendum Campaign spending at the EU referendum View data about campaign spending at the EU referendum.

What we do in elections | Electoral Commission Search What we do in elections You are in the section Home On this page Before the election During the election After the election First published: 31 May 2019 Last updated: 15 September 2019 Overview of what we do in elections We make sure elections are run well, and that people have all the information they need. We don't run the polling stations, count the votes or announce the results at elections. The Returning Officer at your local council does this if you live in England, Scotland or Wales. If you live in Northern Ireland, the Chief Electoral Officer at the Electoral Office of Northern Ireland runs the elections. We have a different role in referendums . Before the election Before the election, we: give guidance and support to Returning Officers, so they can run the election well give guidance to political parties and people standing in the election, so they know what the rules are run campaigns so people know when the deadlines are for registering to vote, and applying for postal and proxy votes publish information about the donations political parties, campaigners and other groups receive, and how much money they are spending During the election During the election, we: look at how well the Returning Officers are doing, and whether they are working to our performance standards make sure people have all the information they need to vote, including how to find their polling station answer the questions people ask us on polling day visit polling stations on polling day, and observe how well run they are After the election After the election, we: publish reports on how well-run the election was, and recommend what would improve future elections publish information about the donations political parties, campaigners and other groups receive, and how much money they spent publish electoral data including the size of the electorate, turnout, the number of rejected ballot papers and information on postal voting

In depth: campaigning at the 2019 UK Parliamentary general election | Electoral Commission Search In depth: campaigning at the 2019 UK Parliamentary general election You are in the UK general elections section Home UK general elections On this page Misleading campaign techniques risk undermining voters' trust The rules for campaigners need modernising for the digital age Tackling intimidation of candidates requires a holistic approach Steps taken to secure the democratic processes must continue What next First published: 21 April 2020 Last updated: 21 April 2020 Overview People were concerned about misleading campaign techniques from across the political spectrum, and bias in the media. We received a large number of complaints raising concerns about the presentation, tone and content of election campaigns Transparency about who is behind political campaigns online at elections is important for people in the UK. In our research after the election, nearly three quarters of people agreed that it was important for them to know who produced the political information they see online, but less than a third agreed that they can find out who has produced it A significant number of candidates who responded to our survey said they experienced intimidation, with a sixth experiencing significant levels. Online abuse was the most common activity mentioned by those who had experienced problems The UK Government and other bodies monitored digital campaigning during the election period for risks to democratic processes from foreign interference and organised disinformation. The UK Government has said that work to examine these aspects after the election is ongoing Misleading campaign techniques risk undermining voters' trust Democracies rely on campaigners being able to communicate with voters. In return, voters need to be able to trust the information that campaigners are giving them. Campaigning at the 2019 election At the 2019 general election, voters were concerned about the use of misleading campaign techniques by campaigners from across the political spectrum. During the campaign period, we reminded campaigners that voters are entitled to transparency and integrity, and called on all campaigners to undertake their vital role responsibly.

Voting at a polling station A voter casting their vote in a polling station Where voters got information Voters got information about candidates and parties at the election from a range of different sources. Over half the people who took part in our survey after the election said they saw campaign materials from parties and candidates. Around a third said they got information from the televised leader debates or online sources. 55% of people who took part in our research after the election said that they got information from leaflets/flyers 32% from a party leader debate on television 29% from newspapers or news websites 24% from social media posts and adverts by campaigners During the election period, voters raised concerns directly with us and other regulators about both printed and digital material that some campaigners were using at the election. They were concerned about the presentation, labelling or layout of campaign material that they thought was misleading, and also about the messaging and content of some campaigns. Public concerns about misleading campaign techniques Public concerns about misleading campaign techniques Some campaigners branded their social media pages in ways that meant it wasn't clear who was responsible for them, or used misleading website links to encourage people to visit their sites. Other examples used edited video clips to present their opponents negatively Information about who was responsible for printed campaign material wasn't always clear or easily readable. Some digital campaign material didn't have any information about its source at all Some leaflets were designed to look like local newspapers. Others used colours normally associated with other parties Some statistics were incorrectly quoted or presented in misleading ways, and without important context Use of imprints s should include information about themselves – called an ‘imprint’ – on their campaign material. The law already requires them to do this for printed material in Great Britain, but not in Northern Ireland. At this election there were issues with some campaigners’ materials in Northern Ireland that didn’t say who was responsible for them. The UK Government should update the law so that election campaigners in Northern Ireland have to put imprints on their printed materials. There were also complaints from voters in Great Britain because some campaigners included imprints that were not clear on letters or leaflets. All campaigners should respect the spirit of the imprint rules and provide easily readable information about themselves. There is evidence from our research after the election that concerns about truthfulness and transparency are having an impact on public trust and confidence: More than half of people (58%) agreed with the statement that, in general, “campaigning online is untrue or misleading” A similar proportion (60%) disagreed that “information available online about politics is trustworthy” Overall, nearly one in five people (18%) said they were not confident the election was well-run, and of these people nearly half (49%) selected as a reason that “campaigning was based on incorrect information/made untrue claims” When we asked people to prioritise their concerns about the election from a list of issues, two thirds of people (67%) said “media bias” was a problem and half (52%) said “inadequate control of political activity on social media” was a problem We have signalled our concern about these issues before. If voters lose trust and confidence in political campaigning, democracy as a whole will suffer. s, candidates and parties themselves need to take greater responsibility for the presentation and content of campaigns they run and the impact of their activities on public confidence in elections. We cannot afford to miss the window of opportunity between now and the next scheduled general election. There needs to be real change to protect trust and confidence in campaigns at future elections and the integrity of our democracy. It will take governments, parties, campaigners, social media companies and regulators to work together to agree new laws or standards of conduct. We will support this work. The rules for campaigners need modernising for the digital age New digital tools and channels have changed the campaigning landscape in the UK significantly in the last decade. Digital campaigning can be a force for good, by encouraging political dialogue and debate. However, we are seeing evidence that concerns about transparency are beginning to overshadow these benefits. This is having an impact on public trust and confidence in campaigns. electoral law Election law books concerns about transparency Our research after the election confirmed that transparency about who is behind political campaigns online at elections is important for people in the UK: Nearly three quarters of people (72%) agreed that it was important for them to know who produced the political information they see online Less than a third (29%) agreed that they can find out who has produced the political information they see online Nearly half (46%) agreed that they were concerned about why and how political ads were targeted at them The imprint rules only apply to printed material and don’t cover digital material. This is a major gap in the rules that require campaigners to provide information about themselves on their campaign material. The UK Government has confirmed that it will consult on new rules for imprints on digital campaigning. We will help develop these new rules so they provide transparency for voters and are workable for campaigners. The social media companies should make it straightforward for campaigners to put imprints on both unpaid and paid digital material when it is a legal requirement. The UK Government should also set out plans to modernise the rules for campaigners to keep pace with the digital age. The law should tell campaigners and digital platforms the amount and type of information they need to give to voters, the media, other campaigners and regulators, including to us. At this election, Facebook, Google and Snapchat published libraries and reports of the political advertising run on their platforms and channels during the election. They also required political advertisers to put 'Paid for by' disclaimers on their political adverts. These measures are a step in the right direction and they enabled us to see who is paying to place adverts. But they still don't provide enough information about digital campaigning. Limitations of social media transparency measures and ways forward Limitations of social media transparency measures and ways forward The social media companies each have different definitions of political advertising which do not completely align with election law. They should ensure their policies fit the legal definitions of election campaigning The 'Paid for by' disclaimers don't always make it clear who is behind advertising. Disclaimers should include the name of the person or organisation who authorised the election campaign advert, not just a campaign name or slogan The companies' policies don't require unpaid election campaign material to be labelled as political material, and this means they won't appear in the advert libraries. Their policies should cover unpaid election campaigning that campaigners publish to reach voters and to be shared by others Facebook and Google provide very broad information about where adverts were targeted. They should show which constituencies were targeted, if this is the case. This information should be embedded in the advert itself and in the advert libraries The advert libraries contain ranges of amounts campaigners spend. They should provide precise figures for amounts spent. Advert libraries These measures are voluntary, and not every company that runs political advertising has created special labelling or advert libraries. They should be a legal requirement so that we and voters can see more information about who is campaigning. Social media companies should be required to provide more detailed and accurate data about election campaigns and spending in their ad libraries so we and voters can see more information about who is campaigning. The companies themselves have said that they would welcome clear and consistent requirements for how they should deal with campaign material. The UK Government should set out how it might be possible to achieve this. For example, through the proposed new online harms regulatory framework. But it is not just social media companies that need to provide greater transparency about campaign spending at elections. s should also be responsible for increasing transparency about their campaigning. In 2018 we said they should have to provide more detailed information about their spending after an election. We continue to recommend this and will talk with campaigners about how it could work in practice. The UK Government should include proposals for implementing this recommendation in its planned consultation on electoral integrity to refresh our laws for the digital age. Tackling intimidation of candidates requires a holistic approach Open political debate is an essential part of elections, but there has been increasing concern at recent elections about intimidating and threatening behaviour towards candidates and campaigners. Police in a count centre Police officers in a count centre Responding to intimidation of candidates In response to these concerns, we asked candidates a wide range of questions about whether they had experienced, or had concerns about, threats, abuse or intimidation. This was the first time we have focused on this topic in our survey of candidates after the election. Some told us that they experienced significant and unacceptable levels of threats, abuse or intimidation. Online abuse was the type of activity most commonly mentioned by those who had experienced problems. We received feedback from 776 candidates, representing just under a quarter of the total who stood for election. Only a quarter of those candidates who responded (27%) said that they had no problem at all with threats, abuse or intimidation More than half (54%) of those candidates who gave us feedback said they had concerns about standing for election that related to threats, abuse or intimidation Three quarters of respondents (73%) said that they had experienced some abuse, threats or intimidation, and a sixth said they experienced significant levels. Some candidates felt there was co-ordinated abuse and intimidation by supporters of other parties or causes The most common type of abuse, threats or intimidation was online (mentioned by 82% of people who gave us feedback), but we also heard reports of verbal abuse and printed material Nearly one in ten who said they had experienced abuse (9%) said it had included physical abuse Data provided by UK police forces after the election shows that just over half (54%) had received reports of threats, abuse or intimidation towards candidates or those campaigning on their behalf. Feedback from candidates "In order to protect our democracy we need to be much more visible in dealing with intimidation and show a zero tolerance for what is at the end of the day election interference and trying to influence the outcome of an election." "It's a more complex issue than it being 'someone's' fault or responsibility. It's a wider social problem encompassing democracy, respect for the democratic process and the undermining and constant hyena like obsession with finding fault and chastising those in public life." Feedback from candidates Candidate survey responses Many candidates told us that they felt supported by their political party or the police when it came to combating intimidation or abuse. The majority of respondents felt well supported by their political party (57%) and around two-fifths (43%) by the police. There was support to help candidates run respectful campaigns and to protect themselves from abuse online or at public events. This included guidance that we published jointly with the National Police Chiefs' Council Crown Prosecution Service and the College of Policing. There were also a number of initiatives that highlighted positive behaviours that candidates could pledge to contribute to a respectful election campaign. During the election, some of the social media companies also provided guidance for candidates about online safety and set up a reporting channel to flag intimidating content. Despite this, nearly seven in ten candidates (69%) said that they did not feel supported at all by social media companies. We agree with the conclusions of a review into intimidation in public life by the Committee on Standards in Public Life (CSPL) which recommended in 2018 that tackling intimidation of candidates and others needs a holistic approach. It is up to everyone involved in the political process to consider the effects of their behaviour on UK democracy. Political parties must continue to work together with the CSPL on the Joint Standard of Conduct for parties and their members that they have developed with independent support from the Jo Cox Foundation. The UK Government should continue with measures to tackle intimidatory behaviour. It should set out how it intends to create an electoral offence for intimidation of candidates and campaigners, and confirm whether it will place a duty of care on social media companies through its proposed online harms regulatory framework Social media companies themselves should actively take steps to limit intimidatory behaviour online; this includes taking forward the actions for social media companies proposed by the CSPL Steps taken to secure the democratic processes must continue Many people and organisations were and remain concerned about the risks of foreign interference or organised disinformation. Several bodies monitored these risks during the election. What UK Government did in 2019 The UK Government put a coordinated structure in place to identify and respond to emerging issues and protect the safety and security of democratic processes, and we took part in this group A number of academic researchers and groups studied how people accessed and shared news about the election on social media like Facebook and Twitter. This included monitoring for evidence of junk news or disinformation It is important not to be complacent about these risks and the UK Government has said that work to examine these aspects after the election is ongoing. In 2018, we identified areas where election law could be improved to strengthen protections against foreign interference at future elections. The UK Government should set out how it will take these recommendations forward as part of its planned consultation on foreign interference: The law should be clear that spending on election or referendum campaigns by foreign organisations or individuals is not allowed The controls on donations and loans for political parties and campaigners should be improved, building on approaches for enhanced due diligence and risk assessment used in financial regulation We will work with the government to consider how these proposed laws could be enforced and ensure they do not have a disproportionate impact on free speech. What next? What next? Read about how the 2019 general election was run Find out what we're doing to make digital campaigning more transparent Or, go back and read our overview Related content Report overview: 2019 UK Parliamentary general election Read our full report on the 2019 UK Parliamentary general election. Find out how it was run, voters' experience, candidates' experience, challenges faced, and how they'll be addressed In depth: delivering the 2019 UK Parliamentary general election Take an in depth look at how the 2019 UK Parliamentary general election was run. Find out about the experience for voters and electoral administrators Report: How the 2017 UK general election was run Read our report about how the 2017 general election was run Results and turnout at the 2017 UK general election View the results and turnout at the 2017 general election

Wales Electoral Coordination Board | Electoral Commission Search
Wales Electoral Coordination Board You are in the Boards and Groups in Wales section Home How we make decisions Boards and Groups in Wales Minutes: Wales Electoral Coordination Board 30 May 2018 Minutes: Wales Electoral Coordination Board 11 October 2018 Minutes: Wales Electoral Coordination Board 5 March 2018 Minutes:
Wales Electoral Coordination Board 9 November 2017 First published: 28 November 2019
Last updated: 26 October 2021 Wales Electoral Coordination Board The Wales Electoral Coordination Board (WEBCB) was set up as a result of our report on the National Assembly for Wales elections in 2016. The Board co-ordinates the planning of all Wales electoral events, activity, electoral modernisation and reform and helps collaboration between Returning Officers, Electoral Registration Officers and key partners in Wales. Wales Electoral Coordination Board Read the terms of reference for the WEBCB. Wales Electoral Coordination Board minutes 2020 29 May 2020 28 February 2020 2019 25 November 2019 2 September 2019 2018 11 October 2018 30 May 2018 5 March 2018 2017 9 November 2017 Capacity and Readiness Risk Assessment Advisory Template Capacity and Readiness Risk Assessment Advisory Template

Scottish Parliament Political Parties Panel Minutes: 22 January 2020 | Electoral Commission Search Scottish Parliament Political Parties

Panel Minutes: 22 January 2020 You are in the Party panels section Home How we make decisions Party panels On this page Minutes of previous meeting Feedback on the UK Parliamentary General Election Scottish Government update Scotland Office update Scotland Boundary Commission update EMB update All Scotland polling scheme Electoral Commission update Date of next meeting Action items First published: 19 June 2020 Last updated: 6 July 2020 Meeting overview: Date: 22 January 2020 Time: 2pm Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting Scottish Green Party: John Hardy (Chair) Scottish Liberal Democrats: Paul Moat Scottish Conservative and Unionist Party: Matt Edmonds Scottish National Party: Scott Martin Scottish Labour Party: Michael Sharpe Scottish Boundary Commission: Isabel Drummond-Murray Scottish Government: James Newman Electoral Management Board for Scotland: Chris Highcock Scottish Assessors Association: Pete Wildman, Chair of the Electoral Registration Committee Scotland Office: Craig Chalcraft The Electoral Commission: Dame Susan Bruce, Electoral Commissioner, Scotland Andy O'Neill, Head of the Electoral Commission, Scotland Martin McKeown, Senior Adviser, Elections & Mette Christensen, Senior Policy Advisor Lindsey Hamilton, Business Support Officer (Minutes) Apologies for absence: Kate Crawford, Scottish Assessors Association Alasdair Morgan, Electoral Commissioner Maria McCann, Scottish Government Introduction: The Chairperson John Hardy (JH) welcomed those present to the meeting and introductions were made. Andy O'Neill (AON) intimated apologies from those unable to attend. Minutes of previous meeting The minutes from the previous meeting held on 7 June 2019 were approved. There were no action points outstanding. Feedback on the UK Parliamentary General Election The PPP discussed the conduct of the UK Parliamentary election held in December 2019. The aim was to identify areas where improvements might be made. The following areas were highlighted: Chris Highcock (CH) confirmed the recommendations the EMB made to Returning Officers with a view to achieving consistency in delivery and certainty for voters around e.g. dates for the publication of the notice of poll, issue of poll cards and postal votes; Scott Martin (SM) noted that the Early Parliamentary General Election Act 2019 had been amended to avoid any specific issues related to the St Andrew's Day Bank holiday in Scotland; (SM) commented that if the UK Parliamentary election had been held a week earlier, no delay to the publication of the electoral register would have been required. Pete Wildman (PW) replied that software very much drove what could be produced ahead of elections and this was a body of work to look at. Action 4.1 (SM) confirmed he would provide (PW) with information on this. CH noted that candidate meetings hosted by ROs had fewer attendees but felt this was due to experienced election agents. PW noted not as many calls had been received following the distribution of postal vote rejection notices after the election. CH advised that he had fed back from Police Scotland that their offer to hold security briefings for candidates had low uptake and this might have been because the offer was not made early enough. Permission from candidates had to be sought through ROs and it was suggested a form could be included in the nomination pack. The parties agreed this was a good idea. Action 4.2 AON advised that the Commission would look at including such a form in Nomination Packs for future elections if there was a demand for it; Matt Edmonds (ME) reported issues with delivery of election communication but said they would raise directly with Royal Mail. This was probably due to the level of mail already being handled at that time of year; SM advised that the Electoral Commission candidate spending form did not clarify a donation is over £50 (i.e. £50.01) and said some councils had been issuing old-style returns. SM agreed to email

the Electoral Commission on issues with the form. It was agreed that any actions for improvement be fed back and considered by relevant bodies. Scottish Government update James Newman (JN) provided updates on:- the passage of the Scottish Elections (Franchise and Representation) Bill including amendments accepted at Stage 2; the passage of the Scottish Elections (Reform) Bill which will have its Stage 1 debate on 6 February 2020; the imminent Royal Assent of the Referendums (Scotland) Act 2020; The laying of the Regulations in relation to canvass reform in Scotland, including regulations to facilitate data testing by EROs; Progress of the procurement exercise in relation to the e-counting solution for the 2022 Scottish Council elections. Scott Martin (SM) indicated that it looked as if the election return provisions of the Scottish Elections (Reform) Bill had been drafted on the basis that the election expenses section in the Local Electoral Administration and Registration Services Act 2006 had been commenced, when it hadn't. SM asked JN what the intentions were in relation to that. Noted. Action 5.1 (SM) confirmed he would email (JN) with further details on this. Scotland Office update Craig Chalcraft (CC) reported on the UK Government's legislative programme which includes various elements related to electoral law, including plans to repeal the Fixed Term Parliaments Act was being progressed and introduce an ID requirement for elections under the remit of the UK Parliament. Noted. Scottish Boundary Commission update Isabel Drummond-Murray (ID-M) updated on the boundary provisions in the Scottish Elections (Reform) Bill. These included number of councillors per ward which she and (SM) discussed. She commented that the proposal for 5 year electoral terms has implications for review scheduling. Local Government Boundary Commission for Scotland were currently conducting a review of the Scottish Parliament constituency boundary between Glasgow Provan and Coatbridge and Chryston constituencies and the Scottish Parliament region boundary between Glasgow and Central Scotland regions at Cardowan by Stepps. (ID-M) reported it would go to the minister in the next couple of months. The proposed changes will allow the SP constituency and regional boundaries to be aligned with the council area boundary in time for the next Scottish Parliament elections in May 2021. Noted. EMB Update (PW) said the increase in the electorate was welcome but brought challenges and lessons learned included taking steps to ensure software could handle the increase. He reported the 5 year postal vote signature refresh had commenced on 20 January. Under the new canvass rules there would be only one communication to households where there were no changes and work was ongoing to allow foreign nationals to be able to register. CH reported the focus had been on the results rather than process. Referendum Bill – draft guidance for electoral administration was to begin shortly. Polling place and polling district reviews in the last 18 months. There were a few by-elections upcoming including Clackmannanshire and Dumfries and Galloway. The tender for e-counting had taken effort and mental space, particularly local government. Ensure in good position – potential change 2021 SP elections – complexity and constituency and regional element. Starting to work on comments. Matt Edmonds (ME) asked if the ready reckoner spreadsheet could be updated as the existing one was running out. Action 8.1 (CH) confirmed he would supply a new one. All Scotland polling scheme SM spoke to his papers which related to the potential development of an all Scotland Polling Scheme. (CH) and (PW) said they would discuss a bit more with relevant agencies to consider how to put in place and said there would be a bit of work involved in setting up, hosting and maintaining it. The other political parties felt it would be useful as discrepancies between Scottish Parliament, UK Parliament and local government boundaries exist. Action 9.1 (SM) would provide drafts of what it could look like. Electoral Commission update Andy

O'Neill (AON) said the Electoral Commission had been planning for 2021 Scottish Parliament elections. He referenced links to 4 reports which had been circulated prior to the meeting, in particular that of ballot paper ordering at Scottish council elections. He said concerns had been received from disability organisations and there was a desire for consistency of approach. Scottish Government had been looking at the merits of piloting ballot paper ordering and the Electoral Commission was ready to be asked to do something if required. Martin McKeown (MMcK) provided an update on progress made by the Commission to develop Codes of Practice on spending for candidates and political parties. Codes for elections under the remit of UK Parliament were submitted to the Cabinet Office and the Commission was considering feedback received. A consultation exercise on Codes for devolved Welsh elections was due to close shortly. Draft Codes for devolved Scottish elections will be drafted and a consultation commenced in due course. The intention is to have Codes in place for the 2021 Scottish Parliamentary elections and the Electoral Commission will work with Scottish Government to achieve this aim. SM suggested it might be possible to combine the candidate and party Codes. Mette Christensen (MC) advised that the Electoral Commission is looking at ways to improve the way that spending is reported at elections and referendums. This is following the recommendations for changes to the reporting rules that the Commission made in their Digital Campaigning report. The parties agreed that Commission staff could speak to them later this year in order to get their input on the recommendations. MMcK further provided an update on progress to redevelop the Commission's online portal to improve the user experience. The intention is to roll out the new system by January 2021. Training will be provided to users after summer 2020. MMcK provided an update on the publication of revised performance standards for electoral registration officers in Great Britain. The consultation closes on 31 March 2020. PPP members had been issued with a copy of the consultation documentation. Dates for meetings in 2020/21 Action 11 AON advised a list of dates would be circulated. Action items Action Items Owner(s) Deadline 4.1 Scott Martin ASAP 4.2 Andy O'Neill ASAP 5.1 Scott Martin ASAP 8.1 Chris Highcock ASAP 9.1 Scott Martin ASAP 11 Andy O'Neill ASAP

Performance analysis 2019/20: Goal three | Electoral Commission Search

Performance analysis 2019/20: Goal three You are in the Annual Report and Accounts 2019/20 section Home Our plans and priorities Annual Report and Accounts 2019/20 On this page Key achievements Performance measures First published: 30 June 2020 Last updated: 17 August 2020 Goal three To be an independent and respected centre of expertise, using knowledge and insight to further the transparency, fairness and efficiency of our democratic system, and help adapt it to the modern, digital age. This area of work focuses on innovation and strengthening our evidence base. Our expertise in policy, research and communications are core to enabling this work. Key achievements To contribute to innovation and strengthening our evidence base, we: reported on the three sets of elections and two recall petitions from 2019 and made recommendations to help improve future events reported on the accuracy and completeness of the electoral registers in the UK evaluated the UK Government's pilot schemes testing polling station voter ID in parts of England at the May 2019 local elections provided the Scottish and Welsh governments and parliaments with independent expert advice on legislative and policy changes arising from their respective electoral reform agendas assessed the impact on voters of any changes to the ordering of candidates on ballot papers for Scottish council elections, at the request of the Scottish Government published feasibility studies on options for modernising electoral registration provided oral evidence to three UK Parliament committees and written evidence to two House of Lords select committees provided written evidence to three National Assembly for Wales committees and gave oral evidence on two occasions provided written evidence on three bills to two Scottish Parliament committees and gave oral evidence on three occasions Performance measures Measures Performance Delivering a project to understand the landscape of public democratic engagement in the UK Achieved 1 Deliver a project to develop and explore the feasibility of proposals to modernise electoral registration and meet voters' needs and expectations in our digital society. Achieved Publish our evaluation and response to the 2019 voter ID pilots Achieved Work in support of the electoral law reform recommendations from the England and Wales, Scotland and the Northern Ireland Law Commissions Ongoing Innovation and strengthening our evidence base We provided expert advice and support to the Scottish and Welsh governments and parliaments, to help with their electoral reform agendas. This included extending the franchise for their elections to younger people in Wales and new categories of electors in both countries. We advised on proposals and draft legislation and our input helped to ensure these would work in practice. We evaluated the UK Government's ID pilots, which took place during the local elections in parts of England in May 2019. Our independent assessment will help the UK Government to assess the accessibility and security of different approaches, before introducing any requirement to show ID in polling stations across Great Britain. Our major studies into the accuracy and completeness of the electoral registers are the only UK studies on this topic. Many people use these findings and they provide evidence to inform the policy and legislative changes governments need to make to modernise our electoral registration systems. They are also a vital resource to inform our own and other organisations' efforts to target public awareness work to increase voter registration. The latest study found that while the proportion of people registered to vote remains largely stable, young people and private renters are still less likely to be correctly registered, and overall levels of accuracy and completeness remain in need of further improvement. We published feasibility studies that explore different ways public data could improve the registration system and how reforms to processes could work in practice. This gives governments a starting point to make the types of changes that would address pressures on electoral administrators' resources as well as making it easier for individuals to register. We are using the outcomes from these studies to inform and encourage a wider policy debate about the future of electoral registration, and to support our own policy development work. In Scotland, we carried out research to assess the impact on voters of any changes to the ordering of candidates on ballot papers for council elections. Our final report to the Scottish Government provides it with an evidence base to consider the impact of any changes on voters, electoral administrators and political parties. We continued working to identify and make the case for ways to simplify, modernise and consolidate electoral law, including implementing the Law Commissions' recommendations, made initially in their 2016 report and given final weight in their closing report this year. We gave evidence to parliamentary committees to ensure our expert analysis about elections and regulation would inform their work. In the UK Parliament, this included the Digital, Culture, Sport and Media Committee inquiry on disinformation; the Public Administration and Constitutional Affairs Committee inquiry on electoral law; and the Exiting the European Union Committee on rules for any future citizens' assembly and referendum. We also gave evidence to the House of Lords select committees on Democracy and Digital Technologies and on the Electoral Registration and Administration Act 2013. In the National Assembly for Wales, we gave evidence to the Equality, Local Government and Communities Committee on the Local Government and Elections (Wales) Bill, and to the Assembly Electoral Reform Committee's inquiry into electoral systems and boundaries, and the Constitutional and Legislative Affairs Committee on the Senedd and Elections (Wales) Bill. In the Scottish Parliament, we gave evidence to the Standards, Procedures and Public Appointments Committee on the Scottish Elections (Franchise and Representation) Bill and the Scottish Elections (Reform) Bill. We also gave evidence to the Finance and Constitution Committee on the Referendums (Scotland) Bill. Report navigation links Previous Next Performance analysis: Goal two Performance analysis: Goal four 1. We focussed on identifying gaps in youth democratic engagement initiatives. We delivered the project as we had scoped it and in 2020-21, we will start new projects based on the findings, including a project to develop education resources. ■ Back to content at footnote 1 Related content Annual Report and Accounts 2019/20 Read our annual report and accounts for 2019/20, including key figures about the year at a glance. Performance analysis 2019/20: Goal one This is goal one of the performance analysis section of our annual report and accounts Performance analysis 2019/20: Goal two This is goal two of the performance analysis section of our annual report and accounts Performance analysis 2019/20: Goal four This is goal four of the performance analysis section of our annual report and accounts

Parliamentary Parties Panel minutes: 3 March 2015 | Electoral Commission Search Parliamentary Parties Panel minutes: 3 March 2015 You are in the Party panels section Home How we make decisions Party panels On this page Minutes, and actions of the meeting and matters arising (ECPPP 25/11/2014) Law Commission consultation IER Postal vote sampling Mass mailings International observers Third party campaigners
Any other business Date of the next meeting Actions First published: 29 August 2019
Last updated: 2 September 2019 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting Conservative Party: Andrew Stedman, Compliance Manager Labour: Margaret Lynch, Compliance Manager Mike Creighton, Director of Audit and Risk Management Liberal Democrats: David Allworthy, Head of Compliance and Constitutional Support Darren Briddock Plaid Cymru: Elin Roberts, Plaid Cymru Scottish National Party (Chair):
Scott Martin, Scottish National Party UK Independence Party: Matthew Richardson, Secretary Electoral Commission: Peter Wardle, Chief Executive Andrew Scallan, Director of Electoral Administration Alex Robertson, Director of Communications Bob Posner, Director of Party and Election Finance and Legal Counsel Mazda Khatun, Communications Officer Law Commission: Nicholas Paines QC Henni Ouahes David Connolly Gethin Thomas Minutes, and actions of the meeting and matters arising (ECPPP 25/11/2014) The minutes from 25/11/2014 were agreed with no clarifications sought or noted. There were no other matters arising from the minutes. Darren Briddock (DB) asked for the Electoral Commission to check its mailing list for PPP members, as he was not receiving messages or meeting invitations. Action: MK to check PPP members mailing list and update as necessary. David Allworthy (DA) enquired about what had happened with the Guide for Canvassers, discussed at the previous meeting. Andrew Scallan (AS1) agreed to circulate the guide to PPP members. Action: AS to send Guide for Canvassers to PPP members. DB also raised concerns that spending reports submitted during the campaign period of Sundays to the Electoral Commission office would not be passed on to the right team in time to ensure that they met the deadlines. BP reminded the PPP that the online system is always available and gave assurances that the Electoral Commission is confident that if documents are dropped off at the Electoral Commission's reception, they are 'delivered to the Electoral Commission' and will be passed on to the right team. BP also thanked all PPP members for agreeing the dates of their Policy Development Grant audits now. Law Commission consultation Andy Stedman (AS2) began by praising the Law Commission's consultation paper on electoral law reform and asked about common data format which EROs use, but would also be useful for political parties to have. Nicholas Paines (NP) noted the remark and went on to outline the role of the Law Commission. He stated that the electoral law reform project had begun in 2011 with scoping studies which concluded that the project was necessary and that its focus would be on technical aspects of law, rather than those matters such as franchise which are political matters. He noted that the consultation ends on 31 March 2015 and urged PPP members to respond to the consultation. He further stated that the hope was to have the new statutes on the books by 2020 elections, which required the report and draft Bill to be published by 2017. Henni Ouahes (HO) then outlined some of the problems with the current legislative framework e.g. its volume and fragmented nature. He stated that the aim is to rationalise the law. He also raised the specific issue of regulation of campaigners handling postal votes and urged PPP members to respond on this matter to the consultation. Mike Creighton (MC) stated that current postal vote applications are not sufficiently clear on how long the postal vote is valid or give options for opting-in for a postal vote in all elections. The wording on the forms produced by the Electoral Commission goes some way to assist voters but the legislative provision of applications for a particular election rather than a particular day for non-permanent postal voters was the problem. Scott Martin (SM) enquired about whether a single Bill containing electoral law would work across devolved legislatures too. NP responded that there is no confirmed policy on this matter, but was something that the Law Commission was looking into. He stated that the project was sensitive to the opinions of the nations and started from a point of accepting devolved arrangements as a given which the project would not interfere with. HO confirmed that separate Bills reflecting the legislative competence of devolved legislatures, may well be the final position. IER AS1 highlighted that the Electoral Commission's analysis of 1 December 2014 registers in England and Wales had been outlined in the written update provided to the PPP. Alex Robertson (AR) added that political parties could get involved with the public awareness raising campaign and would receive more information on this. MC stated that a complaint had been made against the Labour Party to the police concerning their 'How Many of Me' website. He explained that they were confident that the website was an appropriate use of the electoral register as allowed by law. In response to a question about whether there would be regular updates on the quality of electoral registers AS1 said that the Electoral Commission's next report would be published in April 2015 and would be about registers in Scotland. The report on IER in Great Britain would be published in June 2015. He reiterated that issues with data about registers had precluded full analysis and that the data might be too unreliable to use as a basis for answering complex questions. He also said that the Cabinet Office was working differently with the Electoral Commission and the suppliers now, and the data will now go through a testing and development stage which should resolve the issues which had been encountered. PW added that although monthly updates on the register might be desirable, the risks of providing updates that might be based on unreliable data were not resolvable without a great deal of additional work, which the Electoral Commission was unable to carry out on a regular basis. He also said that EROs were working hard to register people locally, but if there were concerns about registers at a local level, then the ERO should be contacted. He noted that the Electoral Commission was monitoring the work of EROs e.g. making sure that the household notification letter (HNL) was being sent and that the HNL was already having a positive impact on registration as evidenced by what EROs were saying. SM enquired whether early data would be available for Scotland registers, before the April report. PW replied that interrogation of the raw data was needed before it could be reported on. MC raised concerns that data quality could be so bad, especially so close to the general election. PW assured MC that while the raw data may be unreliable, the Electoral Commission works on the data so that it is as reliable as possible once it is included in the reports and that these issues did not impact on the ability of people to register. AS2 noted that his experience this year was that registers had been supplied in a timely manner and there had not been a repeat of the delays which had characterised previous years. Postal vote sampling MC raised the issue of permissibility of postal vote sampling as outlined in Section 66 of the Representation of the People Act 1983. AS1 confirmed that the Electoral Commission had looked at its guidance in light of the request to do so by the Labour Party but in its view, the guidance was correct. He noted that there was an ongoing case in Scotland that police were looking into; Bob Posner (BP) stated that the police were looking at the evidence as a basis for their investigations. MC stated the Electoral Commission's guidance does not touch on sampling of postal votes and that it was the opinion of their legal counsel that sampling was not precluded by Section 66. He urged the Electoral Commission to take action now to prevent the possibility of police being called to counts, as the Labour Party would not advise campaigners they should not undertake this activity which he believes is important for maintaining confidence in elections. AS1 responded that Electoral Commission guidance was based on considered legal opinion and that they could explain more fully why this line has been taken. MC stated that criminal law is not open to interpretation and focused on the wording of the law, and asked the Electoral Commission to look again at its guidance. PW said that the Electoral Commission would consider the parties' request for its guidance to be clearer in relation to sampling; and would share any updated guidance as soon as possible. He noted, however, that he could not offer the parties any comfort that the effect of the Electoral Commission's guidance would change as a result of this further consideration. However, he said that the Electoral Commission would explain its reasoning. Action: Electoral Commission will share with the parties the outcome of its consideration of the issue. Matthew Richardson (MR) asked whether political parties should seek further legal opinions on the matter, or seek a Declaratory Relief from the High Court. PW suggested that the first step should be for the Electoral Commission to follow up as set out above. As with all Electoral Commission guidance in this area, parties and Returning Officers were able to take their own advice and form their own view, and the Electoral Commission accepted this. However, the Electoral Commission aimed to produce definitive and clear guidance wherever possible. Mass mailings AS1 advised that if any parties intend to do mass mailings in a region or nationally, the Electoral Commission is available to review the materials to check content and formatting and encouraged them to make contact. Should parties seek to do these on a local basis, they are advised to contact the local ERO. International observers AS flagged that he had met with the OSCE-ODIHR which was considering whether to send observers to the general election. Third party campaigners DA said that the inter-action of the third party campaigning rules and Section 75 of the RPA 1983 is not clear. He asked whether the Lord Hodgson review would be covering this. BP responded that the terms of reference of the review do not seem to include this aspect and the PPP members may wish to flag this to the Cabinet Office. DA reported that breaches of Section 75 had already been encountered and that he had instructed people to report these instances to the Electoral Commission rather than the police. He raised concern that campaigners could be issuing materials without disclosing who they really represent. He also stated that in Somerset he had been told that one of the instances he had recorded there was no offence as it was not covered in legislation. AS2 also asked how the Electoral Commission was contacting third party campaigners to explain to them their responsibilities. BP reported that the Electoral Commission had undertaken a significant amount of activity on this point before the Act was implemented and that following the May elections the Electoral Commission would report on how the new regime had worked. DB further enquired as to whether small local organisations were likely to understand that they might exceed the spending limits and therefore should register with the Electoral Commission. BP responded that the Electoral Commission undertakes monitoring work but also relies on people to bring additional instances to its attention so that necessary action can be taken. DA asked whether further guidance could be issued so that it is clear what is relevant to candidates and what is not. Action: Electoral Commission to continue to use its bulletin to nonparty campaigners to remind on current issues. Any other business Campaign imprints MC reported that he had been told by the Met Police that they have a standard letter to caution those that have not adhered to law on campaign imprints and sought assurances that the police and Electoral Commission would not take contradictory actions on cases, given that the Electoral Commission can issue fines to those who break the law. BP confirmed that the Electoral Commission can issue civil sanctions, and that it works with the police on cases. He noted that the Scottish Independence Referendum was the first time the Electoral Commission had this power and it worked well then. MC asked for further clarification that imprints on the same document for multiple candidates in a local area were permissible and that individual imprints on separate documents were not required. BP confirmed that this was the case.

Date of the next meeting The date of the next meeting is 2 June 2015 – Labour to Chair Actions Actions from March 2015 PPP meeting Action Owner Status Check PPP members mailing list and update as necessary. MK Completed Electoral Commission to send Guide for Canvassers to PPP members. AS1 Completed Electoral Commission to share with the parties the outcome of its consideration of Section 66 of RPA 1983. BP/AS1 Completed Electoral Commission to continue to use it bulletin to non-party campaigners to remind on current issues. BP Completed Related content Party registration decisions View our decisions on political party names, descriptions and emblems View current applications View the political party names, descriptions and emblems which we are currently considering as part of our assessment process Donations and loans Find out about donations and loans to a political party, individual or other organisation Registers of unincorporated associations Download and view the registers of unincorporated associations

Report on the May 2021 elections in Wales | Electoral Commission Search
Report on the May 2021 elections in Wales You are in the Senedd elections section Home Senedd elections Currently reading: of 3 - Show page contents On this page Voting at the elections Campaigning at the elections Delivering the elections Summary In July 2020, during a time of rising concern about the coronavirus pandemic, discussions began around the management and administration of the Senedd elections in a pandemic environment. Whilst there had been speculation that the elections might be postponed, in February 2021, the Welsh Government announced its firm intention that the elections would go ahead as planned on 6 May 2021. The UK Government also confirmed that the Police and Crime Commissioner elections postponed from May 2020 would take place on the same date. Rules for the Senedd election were made by Welsh Government while rules for the Police and Crime Commissioner election were made by the UK Government. This combination, which included the difference in voter eligibility between the two sets of elections, together with the pandemic, resulted in a high level of complexity for those administering the polls. However, people were able to register to vote and take part in the elections. There were 51,500 applications to register made from 26 March to 27 April, and a total of 2.3 million were registered to vote in the elections in Wales. For the first time 16 and 17 year olds and foreign citizens resident in Wales were able to register to vote at the Senedd elections. Turnout across the elections was similar to previous years, suggesting Covid-19 did not stop voters from taking part. Voting by post or appointing a proxy were highlighted as options for those who did not feel comfortable, or safe, voting in person, and there was a small increase in the number of people who applied to vote by post at these polls. Alongside the usual challenges for Returning Officers and electoral administrators in running and overseeing successful elections, there were a number of extra requirements imposed by Covid-19 to comply with public health guidance and regulations and ensure that everyone could participate safely. The experience of these polls has again highlighted concerns about the resilience and capacity of electoral administration structures in Wales, which are coupled with the challenges of delivering elections within an outdated and increasingly complex electoral law framework. For campaigners, the changing public health regulations and restrictions caused uncertainty, and they had to adapt their plans as official guidance changed before and during the campaign period. They were able to communicate with voters using a number of methods including online, through printed material and eventually face-to-face. However, feedback from candidates shows that campaigning ahead of these elections was challenging. Digital campaigning was particularly important to campaigners for the May polls and this trend is likely to continue in future years. Transparency around who is responsible for producing campaign material online remains of critical importance, and lessons from elsewhere in the UK about digital imprint rules should be a consideration for future devolved elections taking place in Wales. Overall, the evidence and feedback we have collected indicates that the 2021 elections in Wales on 6 May 2021 were well-run and voters and campaigners had confidence in the management of the polls, despite the difficulties they encountered as a result of the Covid-19 restrictions Voting at the elections The experience of voters at the May 2021 elections Most people were confident that the elections were well-run, even though they took place in unprecedented and challenging circumstances. People were highly satisfied with the process of registering to vote and casting their vote. Changes that were put in place helped to support and reassure voters. People were confident that they could vote safely at the elections, and the overwhelming majority were able to vote using their preferred method. New rules allowed people who were required to isolate to appoint a proxy to vote on their behalf as late as 5pm on polling day. This positive change helped to provide a safeguard for anyone whose circumstances changed close to the polls. Overview On 6 May 2021 an election took place to elect 60 members of the Senedd, 40 representing the constituencies of Wales and 20 representing the regions. The election was combined with the Police and Crime Commissioner elections, postponed from May 2020 due to the Covid-19 pandemic. In some constituencies, local authorities also held by-elections. The franchise for each election was different with 16 and 17 year olds and foreign citizens legally resident in Wales able to vote in the Senedd election for the first time. Two different voting systems were used: the Additional Member System in the Senedd election, and the Supplementary Vote for the Police and Crime Commissioner election. Returning Officers, consistent with Electoral Commission guidance, put in place new procedures in polling stations to comply with public health guidelines and to ensure that voters were confident that they could vote safely. To make sure everyone knew about the different voting options available to them and the safety measures in place, the Commission, along with local authorities, took a lead role in communicating these messages before the elections. Voters continue to have positive views about how elections are run Notwithstanding the challenges of a complex set of polls held during the Covid-19 pandemic, people had high levels of satisfaction with the process of registering to vote and voting, and thought they had enough information about the elections to enable them to take part. Our research showed that: 86% of people were satisfied with the process of registering to vote 95% of people who voted at the election were satisfied with the process of voting the vast majority (94%) of voters in Wales said it was easy to fill in their ballot papers for the Senedd election whereas only 83% of those who voted at the Police Crime Commissioner said the same first time voters were more likely to say they were dissatisfied with the process of voting (10%) and were significantly more likely to find the electoral system confusing compared to repeat voters (55% compared to 22%) Three-quarters of people said they were confident that the elections were well-run; however, at least one in 10 were not. This figure is lower than the proportion of people in 2016 who thought the elections were well run (83%). Reasons given by those who said they were not confident the election was well-run were: there wasn't enough information about the candidates (25%) did not think it was safe for people to vote at polling stations because of Covid-19 (22%) did not feel it was appropriate for the election to take place during the pandemic (20%) there wasn't enough information about the elections (20%) The pandemic does not appear to have stopped people from turning out to vote Turnout, at 46.8%, was slightly higher than at the 2016 elections (45.6%). Turnout among 16 and 17 year olds seems largely in line with other younger age groups and notably lower than turnout among the over 55s. Postal and proxy voting were highlighted as alternative ways of voting due to the pandemic and the number of voters choosing these methods did increase, although perhaps not as highly as some had anticipated in a pandemic environment, with 458,928 issued with a postal vote in 2021 compared to 395,878 in 2016 (19.2% compared with 17.6%). Turnout compared with other elections 2016 2021 Senedd election 45.6% 46.8% PCC election 45.2% 45.7% People were confident that they could vote using their preferred method Although public health restrictions were in place at the time of the elections, people had a choice of how to cast their vote. They could choose to vote in person at their polling station, by post, or by asking someone to do so on their behalf (proxy voting). 94% of people who voted said they were able to use their preferred method of voting. Voters using polling stations were confident that they were safe places to vote Voters using polling stations were confident that they were safe places to vote overview Across Wales, measures were in place to make sure that voting at polling stations was as safe possible during the pandemic. To support and advise on what changes should be made to voting in polling stations, the Electoral Commission worked with public health experts across the UK to provide guidance for electoral administrators . The Wales Electoral Coordination Board also worked closely with the AEA Wales to set out a minimum safety standard which constituency Returning Officers should put in place at polling stations. The Commission also provided resources to local authorities designed to reassure voters that polling stations would be safe places to vote, including highlighting the other ways to vote, for those vulnerable or concerned and encouraging voters to start thinking about their preferred voting option early. Resources included material for use on social media, animated videos, posters and template press releases. Polling stations were set up and managed to minimise public health risks Almost all of the respondents to our research who voted in person said that they felt safe at a polling station with the provisions in place: 95% of electors who voted in person say that they felt safe at a polling station with Covid-19 safety provisions in place – with almost two thirds feeling very safe. Only a very small proportion of voters said that they felt unsafe nearly three-quarters of electors aged 35-54 and 55+ felt it was very safe compared to just over half (57%) of those aged 16-34 almost all (99%) polling station voters said that they noticed at least one of the various safety provisions that had been put in place People were most likely to notice People were least likely to notice Hand sanitiser provided on exit and entry Cleaning of pencils Staff wearing face coverings Cleaning of booths A one-way system with floor markings Polling station staff also felt that polling stations were safe places to work (90% of staff responding to our survey agreed) and that the safety of voters was adequately provided for by the changes introduced (91%). Candidates were also satisfied with Covid-19 safety measures in polling places, with three-quarters saying they were fairly or very satisfied. The new safety measures, including the limits on the number of people who could enter the polling station, meant that voting took longer for some people. The combination of polls, where voters had more than one ballot paper to complete, may also have contributed to this. Our research showed that: half of those people questioned said that voting in these elections took about the same time as usual despite the Covid-19 safety provisions being in place. However, 42% said it took longer 48% of electors who voted in person said they waited less than five minutes, 34% waited five to 10 minutes and 16% said they waited more than 10 minutes before they were able to vote There were reports of queues at some polling stations There were reports in the media on polling day of queues at certain polling stations and instances where voters felt unable to cast their vote as a result. To better understand the situation across Wales, we asked Returning Officers and electoral administrators to provide detail on the voter experience in their areas. All authorities responded and 10 reported receiving some complaints about queuing including: a small number (21) of people across Wales complained about being disenfranchised (11 in one authority area) the last polling stations to close were in Cardiff at 23:40, in Rhondda Cynon Taf at 23:20, and Newport at 00:45 the reasons cited for why queues formed were: adhering to Covid-19 guidance, and less availability of suitable buildings for use as polling station because of requirements relating to the pandemic This showed that while there were instances of queuing, it was not perceived by voters as a widespread problem in Wales. Generally, voters understood that Covid-19 procedures were being followed, and in most instances people were prepared to queue. Electors appreciated the steps being taken to ensure their safety. Returning Officers felt that having polling station 'marshals' or 'greeters' worked well, and that these staff were able to direct and help voters, making the experience more 'welcoming', particularly for young and new voters. The Wales Electoral Coordination Board have concluded that this arrangement should be continued at future polls, resource permitting. People who didn't want to go to a polling station had options for voting remotely. People who don't want to vote in person at the polling station can apply to cast their vote by post or appoint someone to vote on their behalf, known as a proxy. If their situation changes close to an election due to work or disability, people can appoint an emergency proxy up to 5pm on polling day to vote on their behalf. The law was changed ahead of these elections so that so that anyone who had to self-isolate close to polling day because they had tested positive for Covid-19, or had been in close contact to someone who had tested positive, could also appoint a proxy. Most people knew what options they had if they didn't want to vote in a polling station. Our research showed that: 75% of people said that they found it easy to get information about the different methods of voting that they could choose from. Older voters were more likely than younger voters to say it was easy to get this information. One in five first time postal voters said they chose to vote that way because they were prompted by information sent by their local authority. A similar number (21%) said that they chose to vote by post because they saw advertising from the Electoral Commission over three-quarters (78%) of those electoral administrators that replied to our survey said that they had run a campaign about postal voting in their area. The majority of calls from the public to the Electoral Commission's public information helpline in Wales related to the postal voting process, with callers not having access to a printer in order to print off and complete the form, or being unclear about where to return their postal vote application form. Remote voting continued. People found postal voting straightforward. At these elections we saw a small increase in the proportion of voters choosing to vote by post, but the number of proxy voters remained at the same level: 2021 2016 % of postal voters 19.2% 17.6% % of proxy voters 0.14% 0.13% Of those who were first-time postal voters, half said they voted this way because of Covid-19 safety concerns, while 25% say it is more convenient. A third of electors who voted by post did so for the first time. An overwhelming majority (96%) said that it was easy to understand what to do in order to return their postal vote. First time voters (15%) and those aged 16-34 (14%) were more likely to say it was difficult. The most common reasons for saying it was difficult were receiving more ballot papers than they were expecting, not being clear which envelopes they should return the completed ballot(s) in and not being clear on what information they had to provide. Rates of postal vote rejections rose slightly. When a postal ballot pack is returned to the Returning Officer, the signature and date of birth (known as the personal identifiers) provided on the postal vote statement (PVS) are checked against those previously provided by the elector. Where either or both the signature and date of birth are missing or do not match, the postal vote is rejected and is not included in the count. This is a security measure to ensure that the ballot paper has been returned by the elector it was sent to. Data from electoral administrators shows that 13,695 (3.9%) of returned postal votes were not included in the count after the required checks on voters' personal identifiers. The rate of rejection is slightly higher than at the 2016 Senedd election where 9,291 (3.24%) postal votes were rejected as invalid. The most common reasons for rejection were mismatched identifiers (signature/date of birth), these account for 46% of rejections. Postal vote rejection rates. Most common reasons for rejection % of postal votes rejected Mismatched date of birth Mismatched signature 2016 3.2% 20% 16% 2021 3.9% 28% 12% While the percentage of postal votes not included in the count is relatively small, it remains a matter of concern that some postal votes are not counted because voters do not complete the PVS correctly. The Electoral Commission will continue to work with Returning Officers and Electoral Registration Officers to support voter understanding of how to complete and return their postal ballot pack correctly. The postal vote stationery used plays an important role in aiding voter understanding with the application and voting process, and they should continue to review the information they provide to make sure it is as clear and helpful as it can be to voters. People who needed to isolate because of Covid-19 could appoint a proxy to vote on their behalf. Voters whose situation changes close to an election due to work or disability can appoint an emergency proxy up to 5pm on polling day to vote on their behalf. Changes to these rules in March 2021 gave voters the option to apply for an emergency proxy if they tested positive for Covid-19 close to polling day, or had to self-isolate due to someone close to them testing positive. Of all proxies appointed, 5% were emergency proxies and 2% were due to Covid-19. Recommendation 1: Retain an emergency proxy option for isolating voters. Legislation introduced for these elections to allow emergency proxy votes for anyone who tested positive for Covid-19, or had to self-isolate, helped provide a safeguard for anyone whose circumstances changed close to the polls and ensure that they were not prevented from participating. Although the provision was not widely relied upon in practice, it was nevertheless an important change to ensure that no one lost their ability to vote. We recommend that Welsh Government should ensure this option continues to be available if people are required to self-isolate as part of the public health response to Covid-19. Further education and engagement is required to support new voters to understand and participate in Welsh elections. The Senedd and Elections Wales Act 2020 extended the voting franchise for Welsh elections to 16-17 year olds and qualifying foreign citizens. This meant that approximately 100,000 new voters were eligible to vote for the first time in the Senedd election. To ensure new voters understood this change and knew how to register, the Electoral Commission worked with the Welsh Government, the Senedd Commission and partners across Wales including NUS Wales, the Welsh Refugee Council and the Trussell Trust to encourage registration and educate new voters about their vote. Further education and engagement is required to support new voters to understand and participate in Welsh elections. Breakdown Welcome to Your Vote - a new voter registration campaign In the run up to the election we ran a new voter registration campaign targeted at the newly enfranchised, titled 'Welcome to your vote'. This ran alongside our 'Got 5?' registration campaign, which targeted the whole of the electorate in Wales, but was more heavily weighted towards known under-registered audiences, such as private renters and those under 35. Alongside the campaigns, we sent a voter information booklet to all households in Wales containing key election messages including how to register, how to vote by post or proxy and what to expect when voting at a polling station. Earned press and media activity also helped us to spread these messages. During the campaign period a total of 71,562 people in Wales applied to register to vote, including 7,704 16-17 year olds and 935 qualifying foreign citizens. The foreign nationalities with the most applications were USA, Syria, China and Turkey. We worked with partners to reach under-registered groups. We also supplemented our campaigns with partnership work to fully explain the complexities of the election to new voters, and other groups who are typically under-registered or disengaged. We worked with local authorities and 33 different third sector and democratic organisations on a number of initiatives. These included the provision of bespoke resources and 'train the trainer' sessions, and working with the Senedd Commission on joint activities for 16-17 year old voters during 'Welcome to your Vote Week'. A sub-group of the Wales Electoral Coordination Board was also established to specifically look at communication with these new audiences. This group will continue to operate moving forward towards next year's local government elections in Wales.

Partnerships case study: The Democracy Box In January 2021, as part of our partnership working ahead of the May elections the Commission became a collaborator on the Democracy Box project – a non-partisan research and development project looking at how young people can creatively inform and engage all generations in our UK democracy. The project's research found that many people do not have a sound basic understanding of UK democracy and how local, devolved and UK Governments all work together and why. The project's goal of informing and educating people about the different administrations, voting systems and democratic participation aligned closely to the goals of our own education work. 32 young people aged 16-30 from across Wales led the project as paid content creators, identifying how and where they want to see the educational content. To date they have produced a podcast , Instagram , TikTok and YouTube channels all exploring key themes like how to get in touch with your MP, how to vote and devolution. "It's a great opportunity to use my skill set in politics, technology, software, design and video editing. It's a fantastic chance to just do something completely positive, and help other people engage in democracy." Young Co-Creator aged 16 We supported the project via our education resources and attended feedback and brainstorming sessions with the young co-creators. This allowed us to gain valuable insight into the effectiveness of the resources and our 'Welcome to Your Vote' campaign. Further education and engagement is required to support new voters to understand and participate in Welsh elections continued Some new voters found taking part more difficult than returning voters Our research found that the majority of people were satisfied with the processes of registering to vote and voting. However, first time voters were more likely to say they were dissatisfied with the process of voting (10% compared to 3% of repeat voters) and were significantly more likely to find the multiple electoral systems confusing compared to repeat voters (55% compared to 22%). First time voters were also less likely than repeat voters to say that it was easy to get information on how to register (82% compared to 94%) and cast their vote (75% compared to 88%). Approximately 50% (32,121, of an estimated 70,000) of eligible newly enfranchised 16-17 year olds registered to vote in this election. There is insufficient data available to enable us to report on qualifying foreign nationals. More focus on political education is needed Last year the Commission published a new set of online resources to educate young people about the democratic process. The resources aimed to support young people, including those who were voting for the first time at the Senedd elections, and prepare educators to teach political literacy with confidence. We worked with our partners to promote and gain feedback on the resources, which were also published on the Hwb platform alongside resources from the Welsh Government and Senedd Commission. Covid-19 did impact both schools and colleges in being able to deliver political literacy training to students ahead of the Senedd elections in May. We plan to extend the reach and impact of our education programme ahead of the local government elections in 2022 and Senedd election in 2026. We want to build on the work already achieved by engaging further with young people and educators across Wales to identify more themes and topics our resources can address. We will work with all relevant partners in Wales, including the Welsh Government and Senedd Commission, to ensure that the Commission's focus in this area is appropriate and effective. This could mean not only enhancing existing resources but also developing support programmes for those working with these groups as well as expanding networks with the groups themselves. Campaigning at the elections The experience of campaigning at the May 2021 elections s communicated with voters using a number of methods including online, through printed material, and eventually face-to-face. However, feedback from candidates shows that a sizeable amount said they could not campaign effectively with the Covid- 19 restrictions in place.

Communication about legislative changes and new restrictions was generally good; however, there was a sizeable minority of candidates who remained unclear about the changes. Transparency about who is responsible for producing campaign material online remains important for voters, and lessons from elsewhere in the UK about digital imprint rules should be considered for future elections in Wales. Campaigning at the elections overview Campaigning is an essential element of a healthy democracy. This includes publishing and distributing campaign material, sending election communications to electors, displaying advertising hoardings and banners, canvassing door to door, and speaking to voters on polling day. s had to adapt their activities due to the pandemic and there was a lack of certainty when planning for the elections which meant it was not straight forward for campaigners to plan and deliver their activities. Parties and candidates did not appear to be deterred from participating in the poll A total of 308 candidates stood for election across the 40 Senedd constituencies in 2021. The number of constituency candidates represents an increase from the 248 candidates who stood at the National Assembly for Wales election in 2016. In May 2021, a total of 326 candidates stood on a regional list at the Senedd elections. This again, was an increase from the 305 candidates that stood on a regional list in 2016. For the Police and Crime Commissioner elections, 21 candidates stood in May 2021, which was an increase from 19 candidates in 2016. The changing public health context caused uncertainty for campaigners Some changes to legislation were made close to the start of the election period Given the changing context of the pandemic, it was understandably more difficult for Welsh Government to ensure changes to legislation were in place at least six-months before campaigners or electoral administrators needed to comply with them. However some changes to help the nomination process were made very close to when they would affect campaigners, and this added to the uncertainty and risk for candidates and electoral administrators. Just over half of the candidates who responded to our survey (56%) agreed that they were well informed about legislative changes made as a result of the pandemic, however a sizeable minority (24%) disagreed. Official guidance on campaigning activities changed during the election period Under the public health restrictions during the campaign period, leafletting activities could not begin in Wales until 15 March 2021. Prior to this date, campaigning took place primarily online. Door-to-door canvassing was only a permitted campaign activity in Wales after 12 April and campaigners had to follow specific Covid-19 guidelines. Some changes to campaign-related rules came after the start of the regulated period, particularly the updates to Covid-19 restrictions for campaigning. Four in five (79%) candidates who responded to our survey said their concerns about the restrictions placed on campaigning impacted their campaign 'a lot'. Only 3% said it had no impact. It was very difficult to run a campaign. I had a lot of anxiety because of the uncertainty. We published guidance to support candidates and agents in these Covid-19 safe elections, informed by the latest expert advice from public health bodies. Of those who used it, 73% found the guidance clear and helpful. From December 2020, and on a rolling basis after each three week review by the First Minister, we also circulated to political parties the latest guidance from Welsh Government that reflected changes to methods of campaigning allowed under the ‘stay local’ and social distancing Covid-19 rules. We were able to engage with voters while following public health regulations and guidance. We used a range of digital, print and in-person campaigning to communicate with voters. Despite the initial restrictions on in-person campaign activities in early 2021, people continued to receive information about candidates and parties at the elections from a range of different sources, and in a variety of formats. The most common ways voters reported seeing information on parties and candidates are shown in the following table:

Campaigning method	Percentage
Candidate/political party leaflet or flyer	52%
Another source	29%
Party leaders debate on TV	21%
On news websites	17%
In newspapers	16%
Posters or billboards	15%
TV advert or message	14%
On social media	14%
By word of mouth	14%
Party leaders debate on TV	21%

After the elections, we surveyed candidates about their campaigning activities. Some candidates told us that digital campaigning was particularly important during early 2021, when in-person activities were less manageable and they were unsure how voters would react to door-knocking and face-to-face campaigning. However, other candidates told us that relying on social media to campaign as a result of the pandemic restricted opportunities to get their views across to voters: Fewer hustings events with all candidates, and being mostly restricted to broadcasting our messages meant that there was little opportunity to listen to voters rather than just tell them what we think. Digital campaigning was an important activity for some candidates who responded to our survey. One in 10 (12%) estimated that over 75% of their campaign was digital activity, and 15% said digital made up 51-75% of their campaign. However, the largest segment of candidates who responded said that digital activity was not such an important part of their campaign: two-fifths of candidates (40%) said it made up less than 25% of their campaign and nearly a quarter (23%) estimated it was between 25-50% of their campaigning activity. Candidates told us they used more unpaid social media messaging on various platforms compared to paid-for adverts. Two-thirds (68%) of candidates who responded put posts about their campaign on social media and over half (53%) asked supporters to share their posts. Other popular methods were uploading videos to social media (44%), and emailing supporters (38%). Paying for ads on social media was the most popular method of paid digital campaigning (32%). Although campaigners used a variety of methods to put their message to voters prior to the election, our research shows that 57% of people responded saying that they had enough information to make an informed decision, which is down from 75% in 2016. Some candidates said they were not able to campaign effectively. Over half (55%) of candidates who responded to our survey said that they were unable to campaign effectively due to the impact of the Covid-19 pandemic. A third (32%) said they were able to campaign ‘fairly effectively’ and only 5% said they could do so ‘very effectively’. The biggest impact on campaigning due to Covid-19 related to the opportunities for face-to-face campaigning. Almost nine in 10 (87%) said concerns about face-to-face campaigning impacted their campaign ‘a lot’. The election should have been deferred. We were not permitted to leaflet until far too late. By the time we were permitted to canvass it wasn’t a viable option as my campaign team was me. Every door knocked takes ten to twenty times as long as leafleting. I believe that failing to defer the election has benefited incumbent candidates and hamstrung the rest of us. We were unable to do full door to door canvassing because of time constraint/ limited number of volunteers due to anxieties regarding Covid-19. Transparency about who is responsible for producing campaign material online remains important. During the last 10 years, digital campaigning has become commonplace, and voters are now subjected to many political adverts on social media and via other methods online. Digital campaigning accounts for an increasingly large proportion of spending reported by campaigners after elections. An imprint on printed material, which includes details showing who has produced and paid for the material, is a legal requirement. We have long recommended that digital campaigning could be further improved for voters if the imprint rules were extended to cover all material from campaigners. This would help improve public trust and confidence in digital campaigns. Our research after the election confirmed that people continue to value transparency about who is responsible for political campaign activity online at elections with: a majority (69%) of people agreeing that it is important for them to know who has produced the political information they see online three in five agree (59%) they would trust digital campaigning material more if they knew who produced it At the 2021 Scottish Parliament elections, the requirement for imprints on digital campaign material was introduced for the first time in any election in the UK. The UK Government has also published a Bill that would introduce digital imprint rules for both UK Parliamentary general elections, and Police and Crime Commissioner elections taking place in Wales.

Recommendation 2: We recommend that the Welsh Government should legislate on a digital imprint law

We recommend that Welsh Government should legislate to ensure that a digital imprint is required for online campaign material for future Senedd and Welsh local government elections. Processes for submitting nominations prioritised access and safety Changes to nomination processes to minimise public health risks were welcomed and candidates agreed the process was well-run The publication of notice of election took place a week earlier than usual to allow for a longer period of time for candidates and parties to submit their nomination forms. Extended hours for submission were also introduced to help with the process of informally checking nomination forms and then formally submitting the paperwork. While completed nomination forms were still required to be submitted by hand, electoral administrators made changes to their processes to minimise the risk to those involved: a legislative change was made to allow the consent to nomination form to be signed and submitted electronically instead of by hand informal checking of nomination forms prior to submission was offered more frequently using email arrangements for safe hand delivery of nomination forms ensuring social distancing measures were in place candidate and agent briefing sessions were generally held via video conferencing Of the candidates who responded to our election survey, nine in 10 (90%) agreed that the nomination process was well run. Nearly three in five (58%) agreed that longer hours for delivery of nomination forms was useful. Four in five (80%) agreed that the electronic submission of consent forms was useful. Feedback from stakeholder groups in Wales was that digitisation worked well at these elections, improving the nomination process through online checks and increasing attendance by moving briefing sessions online. Embedding these changes for future elections has the potential to benefit both candidates and electoral administrators, as would further consideration of how electronic methods could improve the nomination process. Codes of practice provided clarity on spending New codes of practice on election spending were introduced to support candidates and parties Under electoral legislation, the Commission can prepare guidance on what is, and is not, included in the categories of campaign spending that appear on the spending returns for parties and candidates. For the Senedd elections, the Commission developed statutory codes of practice on election spending for both candidates and political parties taking part in the Senedd elections. The codes are the first statutory codes of their kind in the UK. The codes help parties, candidates and agents meet their legal obligations and improve transparency for voters. The codes provide: clarity on campaign spending how this campaign activity should be reported whether the spending should appear in a candidate or party spending return give people confidence that election spending is reported correctly Of those who used them, two-thirds (66%) found the Commission's codes of practice clear and helpful. Regulators strengthened collaboration during the election period For the May 2021 elections, we worked with regulator partners to run an online public awareness campaign and encourage voters to find more information from a new section of our website . The campaign aimed to encourage people to think more carefully about political campaign adverts they see online, and it provided information about which regulators or other organisations they could contact if they had concerns. Evaluation of the campaign showed that over 7.6 million people across Britain saw our adverts on websites and social media platforms. The number of people who clicked through to find more information from the adverts was encouraging, and provides a good foundation for further awareness-raising activity at future elections.

Delivering the elections

The experience of electoral administration at the May 2021 elections The elections were well run, notwithstanding their complexities and challenges, due to the significant efforts of electoral administrators and Returning Officers over a prolonged planning period. Voters and campaigners reported high levels of satisfaction and confidence and there were only a small number of issues that had an impact on their experience in some areas. The particular circumstances that led to the development and introduction of legislative changes in February and March 2021 were unprecedented, but the timing of these changes close to the start of the election period created additional challenges and risks for the delivery of the elections. The experience of these polls has highlighted concerns about the resilience and capacity of electoral administration structures in the UK, coupled with the challenges of delivering elections within an outdated and increasingly complex electoral law framework. We will work in partnership with members of the Wales Electoral Coordination Board, the wider electoral community, Welsh Government, and local authorities to identify and implement solutions to develop and deliver more resilient electoral services.

Delivering the elections overview

Overall, our evidence shows that the polls were well-run. Voters and campaigners reported high levels of satisfaction and confidence, and there were only a small number of issues that had an impact on their experience. For Returning Officers and electoral administrators, however, these elections presented unique and difficult challenges and it was only thanks to their considerable effort and commitment that the polls were delivered successfully. Early planning helped in managing the elections Planning groups helped in decision making The elections that were postponed from May 2020 meant that the Senedd and Police and Crime Commissioner elections were combined across Wales. The establishment of the First Minister's Elections Planning Group in June 2020 provided a useful forum for discussion and early decision making. The group, which brought together political parties, Regional Returning Officers (RROs), Welsh and UK Government officials, the AEA and the Commission met regularly to consider the required changes to legislation to maximise democratic participation whilst also protecting public health. Welsh Government also established a Senedd Elections Operations Group which again provided a high level forum to discuss the management and operation of the elections during the pre-election period. The Wales Electoral Coordination Board played a valuable role supporting administrators and promoting consistency The Wales Electoral Coordination Board was established in 2017. The Board co-ordinates the planning for all Wales electoral events, as well as activity related to electoral modernisation and reform, and helps collaboration between Regional and Local Returning Officers, Electoral Registration Officers and key partners in Wales. The Board played a significant and important role in the planning and preparation for these elections, and in ensuring that the safety requirements could be effectively and consistently delivered across Wales. The Board was represented on the First Minister's Elections Planning Group and participated in the Senedd Elections Operations Group, providing a link between government and Returning Officers throughout the extended pre-election period. Key examples of the importance of this group included: The introduction of minimum safety requirements for polling stations and the count agreed through effective joint working between the Wales Electoral Coordination Board and AEA Wales advice given to Ministers and Welsh Government officials about proposed changes to the rules, including those aiming to ensure the elections were Covid-secure agreement on daytime counting across Wales the colour of the ballot papers We recommended in our May 2017 report on the local government elections that Welsh Government should consider how the role of the Board could be developed to support Welsh Government's overarching electoral modernisation programme. We also recommended that the Government give consideration to the Board becoming a statutory group, as is the case in Scotland. Four years on, this recommendation is now even more relevant, given that Welsh Government is responsible for legislating for elections in Wales and intends to bring forward a range electoral reforms in the coming years. Recommendation 3: Statutory role for the Wales Electoral Coordination Board The Wales Electoral Coordination Board is in a unique position to provide a link between governments and Returning Officers in Wales and to provide advice on the delivery of elections and introduction of electoral reforms. We continue to recommend that the Board should be strengthened and that it should have a statutory role, similar to the role of the Electoral Management Board in Scotland. The capacity and resilience of electoral administration teams and suppliers are significant risks for future polls The challenging circumstances of these elections exposed pressures on the capacity of local electoral services teams Electoral administrators' ability to plan and deliver their work for these elections was impacted by Covid-19 restrictions in the months leading up to them: 88% said that the Covid-19 restrictions had made their job more difficult, with 75% of respondents saying that their workload had increased because of the Covid-19 restrictions during the elections 63% said that they were concerned for their own health because of Covid-19 Some electoral administrators told us they had seen a significant impact on the capacity and wellbeing of their teams. Others told us that delivering the election had left them feeling totally overwhelmed and that they felt they had no choice but to put their work life before their family life. Support that would have been relied on at previous election from other parts of the local authority was unavailable due to Covid-19. ...well-run elections come at a cost and I think you will see a lot of elections officers leaving this role because we are worried about our health. Administrators also highlighted the difficulty they had finding suitable venues to use as polling stations. Covid-19 restrictions meant it was harder to contact people to make bookings, and in some venues there were issues with the facilities as they had been shut down for long periods in advance due to lockdowns. Temporary porta cabins were also difficult to secure as many were being used as vaccination centres. Lots of polling stations had been shut up in the last year – we had to carry out six chlorination processes as they had not checked water – all this had to be checked out. Finding staff to work on polling day was a key challenge for Returning Officers and their staff. The complexity of these elections and the extra requirements that were needed in terms of Covid-19 restrictions placed added pressure on Returning Officers and electoral teams during the pre-election period and on polling day and throughout the counts. 76% of those who responded to our survey said they had difficulty recruiting polling station staff. Concerns were also expressed about the reduction in the number of experienced Presiding Officers and it was noted that poll clerks with several years' experience were reluctant to step-up. Recommendation 4: Build resilience and capacity for electoral administration We have repeatedly highlighted concerns about the resilience and capacity of electoral administration structures in the UK, which are coupled with the challenges of delivering elections within an outdated and increasingly complex electoral law framework. We will work in partnership with the Wales Electoral Coordination Board and the wider electoral community to develop and deliver proposals to support resilient electoral services for the future but this approach will need to be supported through appropriate resourcing. Late confirmation of legislation and interventions made it harder for Returning Officers to plan in some areas On 26 February 2021, Welsh Government confirmed that the Senedd election would go ahead on 6 May and provided £1.5 million to support Returning Officers to secure venues, staffing and run Covid-19 secure elections. Cabinet Office provided additional funds to support the running of the Police and Crime Commissioner election. The Coronavirus Act 2020 (Emergency Bill) was introduced on 16 March giving the Llywydd powers to postpone the election, in the event this was required in the interests of public health. The conduct order setting out the rules for the election did not receive royal assent until 18 March, only four days before the date for publishing the notice of election and seven weeks before polling day. In addition to our usual core suite of guidance and resources to support administrators with the delivery of elections, we also worked with public health bodies, the UK and Welsh Governments and the electoral community to develop and publish supplementary guidance to support the delivery of Covid-19 safe elections. This was issued on a rolling basis from September 2020, and was informed by both the requirements of administrators and the latest expert advice from public health bodies. It was kept under review throughout the election period, and was updated to reflect the legislative changes to the nominations and proxy voting process as a result of Covid-19. Many electoral administrators said they found that uncertainty about the elections made it difficult for them to plan effectively. Three-quarters of administrators (75%) who responded to our survey after the elections said that they felt the initial uncertainty about whether the elections would go ahead made it difficult for them to plan. The particular circumstances that led to the development and introduction of changes to electoral law ahead of the May 2021 polls were unprecedented. While the legislative changes due to Covid-19 were understandable they demonstrated, in practice, the risks and challenges of introducing late legislation. The timing of these changes created additional challenges and risks for the delivery of the elections. It affected when Electoral Commission guidance and resources to support the delivery of the polls, such as amended nomination forms, could be provided and when electoral administrators could implement them. Late confirmation of legislation and interventions made it harder for Returning Officers to plan in some areas breakdown New electoral reforms being considered very close to the election created additional pressures and uncertainty Welsh Government also considered introducing significant electoral reform for the Senedd elections in the final months before the poll. Potential changes included the introduction of early voting centres, and changes to the postal voting statement. Neither of these options were in the end introduced for May 2021, but the discussions around these proposals resulted in confusion and introduced uncertainty and speculation during the election planning process, in what was already a highly pressured environment. This approach must be avoided for future national elections, and the agreed six month principle should continue to be applied when developing any new legislation. Early clarity of legislation, together with good communication and engagement, supports the effective preparation and the delivery of well-run polls. It also ensures that guidance and resources can be made available to electoral administrators and candidates and agents well in advance of the elections, and that complex planning is not disrupted by unforeseen change. It will also support the provision of early, clear information to voters, to help them understand what to expect and how they can take part in the elections. We call on Welsh Government to ensure that any legislation related to electoral reform or changes to the voting process is in place six months before the election and that Ministerial intent should be shared with the electoral community well before this time. Broad agreement reached on the timing of the count A national consensus on the timing of the count was reached by the Wales Electoral Coordination Board in early January resulting in a decision that the Senedd election count should take place the day after polling day and not overnight. This was necessary as the verification and count processes would require more staff and take longer to perform because of Covid-19 restrictions.

Whilst there was positive feedback from Returning Officers and electoral administrators on the approach to the timing of the count, we did gather some feedback from the political parties that suggested there were some reservations about adopting this approach at all future Welsh elections. Some political parties suggested that elections taking place outside of a pandemic situation should revert back to overnight counts rather than counting the next day, as candidates would prefer to know the outcome of the election as soon as possible. Also, there was a concern that not enough counting agents would be available to scrutinise the verification and count processes efficiently if polling day and the count were carried out across multiple days. The Wales Electoral Coordination Board should carefully consider all views, including those of political parties and candidates, ahead of any decision on timing for the 2026 elections. Voting processes generally ran smoothly despite challenging conditions The planning and preparation before the elections was shown to be worthwhile by the limited number of issues with the delivery of voting processes on polling day. Voting processes generally ran smoothly despite challenging conditions breakdown An error with the regional ballot paper in parts of North Wales affected the experience of voters In the North Wales region there was a local printing error which led to the name of an independent candidate not being included on the regional ballot paper issued in two North Wales constituencies. The error affected ballot papers issued both by post and at polling stations. It was detected during the second hour of polling and immediate action was taken to address the problem. While recognising the pressures faced by Returning Officers and their teams and the challenging circumstances of the elections, it is important that voters, candidates and political parties can have confidence in the election process and that the ballot papers they receive are accurate. After the polls, we considered the issue in line with our performance standards for Returning Officers and concluded that in both cases the Returning Officers did not fully meet those standards 1 . Both Returning Officers have agreed to surrender a part of the fee they receive for carrying out their role. Further work is also being undertaken by the Wales Electoral Coordination Board to develop a protocol and guidance to assist Returning Officers when ballot paper proofing in future elections. Election teams updated count processes to support social distancing while maintaining transparency. Some authorities' usual count centres were in use as mass vaccination centres so alternative venues needed to be found which would be large enough to allow for social distancing of both count staff and observers. The minimum PPE requirements agreed upon by the Wales Electoral Coordination Board were implemented across all count centres in Wales. Count centres adhered to all social distancing measures set out in Welsh Government guidance and reflected the supplementary guidance published by the Commission. This included: prominent signage reminding people to keep a two metre distance apart ensuring everyone at the count wore a face covering at all times (unless exempt) one way systems and a separate entrance and exit using perspex screens to separate count staff from observer. Overall, new innovations introduced at count venues to address the need for social distancing were largely seen as a welcome addition to the process. For example, in Ceredigion County Council 2 in order to address the fact that a limited number of candidates and agents were able to be in the count centre, activities were live streamed to them in an adjacent hall within the count venue. A camera above each count table allowed attendees in an adjacent hall to have full sight of the verification and count process for each table. The candidates and agents were able to request that the angles be changed as required, and this was done remotely. Doubtful ballot papers were also placed on a visualiser and the images shown on screens for the candidates and agents to see. These measures helped ensure social distancing could be maintained, while also ensuring that the count remained open and transparent. Election teams updated count processes to support social distancing while maintaining transparency.

Observation and scrutiny of the count by candidates was affected by social distancing measures. Positive feedback has been received from candidates and agents regarding the arrangements that were put in place to ensure the integrity of the elections but also to keep all present as safe as possible. However, while the majority of candidates were confident that the elections were well run, fewer were satisfied with their ability to observe and scrutinise the count. Whilst 72% of candidates agreed that election staff made it clear what was happening throughout the count process and 75% agreed that the delayed/daytime count was acceptable for Covid-19 safety, only half (51%) agreed that it was possible to observe and scrutinise the count effectively, and over a third (38%) disagreed. Some parties have reported that due to the Covid-19 safety provisions in place at count venues, they were not permitted to appoint as many counting agents as they considered were needed to enable full scrutiny, and that layouts at some of the count centres were not clear and impeded proper observation of the verification and count processes. Positive work was delivered nationally and locally through good dialogue between the political parties and election managers and, whilst not always what we would expect in normal times, the arrangements were broadly effective in ensuring transparency in the circumstances. Regular and effective communication between Returning Officers and political parties and candidates through established forums such as the Wales Electoral Coordination Board should continue to ensure that any concerns of parties and candidates can be properly considered and acted upon.

Supporting Evidence Supporting Evidence Welsh Public Opinion Tables 2021 Senedd Elections Administrative data 2021 PCC 2021 electoral data including Wales 1. Gwynedd County Council and Isle of Anglesey County Council ■ Back to content at footnote 1 2. Count centre for the regional Senedd election in Mid and West Wales and the Police and Crime Commissioner election for the Dyfed-Powys police area. ■ Back to content at footnote 2 Page history First published: 13 September 2021 Last updated: 20 September 2021 Related content Report: How the 2016 National Assembly for Wales elections were run Read our report about how the 2016 National Assembly for Wales elections were run Results and turnout at the 2016 National Assembly for Wales election View the results and turnout at the 2016 National Assembly for Wales election Report: How the 2011 National Assembly for Wales elections were run Read our report about how the 2011 National Assembly for Wales elections were run Results and turnout at the 2011 National Assembly for Wales election View the results and turnout at the 2011 National Assembly for Wales election

Board minutes: 24 June 2020 | Electoral Commission Search

Board minutes: 24 June 2020 You are in the Electoral Commission Board section

Home How we make decisions Electoral Commission Board On this page Apologies

Declarations of interest Minutes and matters arising Annual report of the Audit Committee to the Commission Board Annual report of the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee to the Commission Board Annual report Chief Executive's update Business items taken via electronic means since the previous board meeting First published: 29 July 2020 Last updated: 21 June 2021 Meeting overview Date: Wednesday 24 June 2020 Time: 9:30am to 12:40pm Location: by video conference Date of next scheduled meeting: Wednesday 22 July Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting John Holmes, Chair Alasdair Morgan Anna Carragher Elan Closs Stephens Joan Walley Sarah Chambers Stephen Gilbert Sue Bruce Rob Vincent (until 12 midday) Bob Posner, Chief Executive Craig Westwood, Director, Communications, Policy and Research Louise Edwards, Director, Regulation Ailsa Irvine, Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance Kieran Rix, Director, Finance and Corporate Services Amanda Kelly, General Counsel David Bailey, Head of Strategic Planning and Performance Madeleine Spink, Senior Advisor, Governance Apologies There were no apologies Declarations of interest There were no new declarations of interest. Minutes and matters arising (EC 53/20)

Action: The minutes be amended to clarify that decision making was via electronic means. Resolved: That the minutes be agreed, with the additional point above.

Annual report of the Audit Committee to the Commission Board (EC 54/20) Commissioner Sue Bruce introduced the report and presented a summary of the Audit Committee discussion on it to the Commission Board. The internal auditors had given a 'substantial' rating to the Commission, which was good and better than previous years. The National Audit Office (NAO) had also given an unqualified rating to the accounts. The independent advisor to the Audit Committee Paul Redfern had conducted an effectiveness review and concluded that the Committee was working effectively and robustly. The Committee was planning to make more deep dives into issues in the future, including risk management and investigations. Meanwhile the Committee was happy to support the draft Annual Report and Accounts. On outstanding audit recommendations it was noted that these had significantly reduced, and it was now intended by staff to complete the limited number remaining. The situation would continue to be monitored. The Chair picked up the suggestion in the Audit Committee report that the Board should commission the Committee to consider specific issues in detail on a more frequent basis. This was agreed. The Committee had already considered procurement in this way. It was suggested that the Committee should look at the implications of the coronavirus pandemic on Commission work delivery. The Board discussed the value of having legal cases presented in a tracker format, and the progress of Freedom of Information (FOI) requests.

Action: The Chair of the Audit Committee to give a verbal update to the Commission Board after each Committee meeting. Action: A legal case tracker to be established by the General Counsel and regularly provided to the Board for information. Resolved: That the paper be agreed, subject to these points.

Annual report of the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee to the Commission Board (EC 55/20) The Chair of the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee (RemCo) introduced the report. The Committee Chair noted that the RemCo had met staff on two occasions, as well as their formal meetings. The new People Strategy was now an excellent basis for future work in the area of staff well-being. The Committee had already been looking closely at issues such as staff turnover and retention, where the recent trends were positive, as well as recruitment policy and the importance of diversity. The Board discussed the results of the Staff Survey, which had been positive overall but revealed some areas where further efforts were needed. The Board discussed the importance of Black, Asian and Minority Ethnic (BAME) inclusion in the Commission. The Black Lives Matter movement had moved this issue to the fore and it was important for the Commission to take a further serious look at diversity and inclusion issues internally in relation to staff and externally around the face the Commission presented to the world. The Board discussed how the Human Resources team and other teams worked together, and the importance of managers taking responsibility for managing their teams, rather than relying too much on the Human Resources team. The Board noted that the annual review process reflected the number of meetings of the Committee, and that three meetings per year should be the norm, as well as engagement between meetings. Action: The Chair of the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee to give a verbal update to the Commission Board after each Committee meeting.

Resolved: That the paper be agreed, subject to these points. Annual report (EC 56/20) The Chief Executive introduced the draft Annual Report, which Board members had seen and commented on before. The National Audit Office was content to endorse the accounts without qualification. Commissioners raised comments to ensure that external meetings and full Commissioner term lengths were recorded accurately. Otherwise the Board praised the effort which had gone into the content and format of the Report, and were content with it. Resolved: That the paper be agreed, subject to these points. Chief Executive's update (EC 57/20) The Chief Executive updated the Board on how the Commission was continuing to cope with the challenge of the coronavirus pandemic. Good progress was being made on all fronts. The Board discussed the upcoming review of the regulatory framework by the Committee for Standards in Public Life; plans for returning to more regular office-based working after lockdown; and ensuring that party registration processes were compliant with Welsh language requirements. The Board discussed the implications of the Coronavirus pandemic for by-elections and for the electoral registers to be used for the upcoming boundary review. It was noted that there was a different picture across the UK in terms of when by-elections could take place. In relation to the upcoming boundary review, the electoral register from 2 March 2020 would be used. It was noted that the impact of the Coronavirus pandemic on these matters would be considered as part of items scheduled for the July and October meetings. The Board noted a delay in the UK Government's willingness to lay in Parliament the codes of conduct on candidate and party spending. The Government's priority was their planned bill on limited electoral law reform in line with their manifesto commitments. In Scotland and Wales work on equivalent codes was proceeding. In the UK wide and context, wording from the code of conduct would for the time being be reflected in Commission guidance. Resolved: That the paper be agreed, subject to these points. The Chair introduced a discussion on equality, diversity and inclusion, building on the earlier discussion under the RemCo item. The Chair emphasised the need for new and concentrated attention on these important issues, including in terms of diversity in our workforce, Board composition and our work to ensure that all communities could be fully engaged in the electoral process. The Chief Executive acknowledged that more could and should be done to improve diversity in the Commission. Some staff had formed a sub-group on BAME matters, which was welcomed. The Executive Team had encouraged dialogue and were working to promote an internal environment where people felt comfortable about speaking out. It was noted that the first step was to listen to peoples' experiences. The Board noted that 11% of the UK population are from an ethnic minority, and 9% of Commission staff had declared themselves to be from an ethnic minority, although not all were willing to complete such surveys. However, diversity is not consistent at all levels of the organisation. The Board discussed how internal development and our approach to recruitment, including job specifications, could help to change this. Commissioners discussed specific methods to increase diversity through changed recruitment practices. The Board emphasised its commitment that outreach in electoral registration campaigns should include a greater focus on BAME communities. The Commission worked with a number of organisations in this area, and although the lack of grant funding restricted the potential for some possible partnerships, there was a willingness to look at how problems of this kind could be overcome going forward. The Board noted a desire to build on its knowledge of the experiences of BAME communities before offering suggestions or taking any specific decisions, including through engagement with more outside stakeholders through either one-off or ongoing advisory relationships. The Board also noted that equality, diversity and inclusion in its broadest sense included age, class, social background, geography and diversity of thought. This should be reflected in our approach. The Board acknowledged the lack of Commissioners from BAME communities, and the importance of doing something about this. The recruitment processes for Commissioners were in the hands of the Speaker's Committee, but the Commission should encourage further efforts to ensure a greater diversity of candidates. The Board agreed that there was a need to be ambitious and link up with the work of RemCo. Understanding of inequality should be embedded in engagement and partnership strategies. The Commission should be using best practice from other organisations. Business items taken via electronic means since the previous board meeting No matters were raised.

You are in the UK general elections section Home UK general elections In this section In depth: delivering the 2019 general election In depth: campaigning at the 2019 general election Overview This is a summary of our report on the 2019 UK general election. The report continues in two in-depth sections, covering delivering the election and campaigning at the election . Download the full report as a PDF Jump to

The election was well-run Challenges faced in running elections, and by new campaign techniques Actions and recommendations The election in depth Overview More than 40 million people were registered to vote in the 2019 general election. The turnout of registered voters was 67% The election was generally well-run, but there is new evidence showing challenges for the future The 2019 UK Parliamentary general election was held on Thursday 12 December. More than 40 million people were registered to vote, and the turnout of registered voters was 67%. There were high levels of satisfaction with the processes of registering to vote and voting. These were similar to other recent elections in the UK. Beneath this generally positive picture, however, we have also seen evidence about concerns and problems at this election.

Some people did not receive the service they should be able to expect, and many were not confident that the election was well run. Although more than two thirds of people said they were confident the election was well-run, a significant minority of nearly one in five people told us they were not confident. Many of these people selected reasons related to concerns about campaigning, or the media, to explain why they were not confident. Some people also selected concerns that related to the way the registration or voting process worked. Our report describes how the UK's electoral administration structures are operating under significant strain, and shows that people have growing concerns about some aspects of election campaigns. The report makes recommendations about how the running of elections may be improved. It precedes consideration of the full impact of the COVID-19 pandemic, which is only beginning to be felt at the time of publication. There may be further recommendations to ensure the effective delivery of future elections. Challenges of delivering elections

Challenges of delivering elections Electoral Registration Officers (EROs) were under pressure from large numbers of applications to register to vote made close to the deadline. They had to spend time and effort at a critical point dealing with many duplicate applications Some overseas electors did not have enough time to receive and return postal votes before polling day, as has happened before, which meant their votes could not be counted The December timing brought specific challenges for Returning Officers (ROs), who found it harder to recruit staff and secure polling stations and counting venues Challenges from changing election campaign techniques Challenges from changing election campaign techniques Misleading content and presentation techniques are undermining voters' trust in election campaigns It is too often unclear who is behind digital election campaign material. Significant public concerns about the transparency of digital election campaigns risk overshadowing their benefits Some candidates experienced significant and unacceptable levels of threats, abuse or intimidation Addressing these challenges ahead of the next UK general election Many of the challenges described in this report are not new. We have seen similar issues arise at other recent elections in the UK. But the evidence we have seen after this election shows significant concerns from the public and electoral administrators. Opportunities There is an opportunity between now and the next scheduled general election to make real change. This will protect confidence in how elections are run and increase trust in campaigns. Action needs to begin now

to ensure confidence is not further damaged at future elections. Areas for improvement There are areas where governments, EROs, ROs, political parties, campaigners, social media companies, and regulators need to work together to agree new laws, processes or standards of conduct. We will support this work to ensure changes are workable, will benefit voters, and improve public confidence. Action needed Supporting EROs and ROs to meet voters' expectations The UK Government needs to identify improvements to the online register to vote service, electoral management software systems and the funding model for elections, to help EROs effectively manage large numbers of registration applications (including duplicate applications) ahead of major electoral events The UK Government should also explore reforms that would make it easier for people to register or update their details throughout the year, such as by integrating registration applications into other public service contacts The UK Government needs to consider innovative new approaches to improve voting for overseas electors, using evidence from other countries, particularly given its plans to increase the number of British citizens living abroad who are eligible to vote The UK's three governments need to set out how they will simplify and modernise electoral law, building on the comprehensive and well-supported recommendations by the Law Commissions Supporting trust and confidence in election campaigns s, candidates and political parties need to take greater responsibility for the presentation and content of campaigns they run and the impact of their activities on public confidence in elections The UK Government needs to make progress on its planned consultation on legislation to ensure campaigners have to include information about themselves on digital campaign material Social media companies need to provide more detailed and accurate data about election campaigns and spending in ad libraries on their platforms so we and voters can see more information about who is campaigning Supporting people who want to stand as candidates Political parties and other campaigners, the UK Government and social media companies should continue to take steps to tackle intimidation so that people are not discouraged from standing for election or campaigning because of the risk of abuse, threats or intimidation The election in depth Take an in depth look at the top issues faced at this election: How electoral registration officers and returning officers found delivering the election The challenges posed by campaigning Supporting evidence Supporting evidence Supporting evidence: main data tables for the 2019 UK Parliamentary general election Electoral data: 2019 UK Parliamentary general election Related content Report: Voting in 2017 Read our report about voting at the general election in 2017 Results and turnout at the 2017 UK general election View the results and turnout at the 2017 general election Report: Political finance regulation at the June 2017 UK general election Read our report about political finance regulation at the 2017 general election Report: Electoral registration at the June 2017 UK general election Read our report about electoral registration at the 2017 general election

2018 electoral fraud data | Electoral Commission Search 2018
electoral fraud data You are in the Electoral fraud data section Home Our research Electoral fraud data On this page Case outcomes with convictions or cautions Types of allegations Data by police force Types of allegations since 2010 First published: 23 July 2019 Last updated: 31 March 2021 Overview There is no evidence of large-scale electoral fraud relating to the 2018 local elections. Of the 266 cases that were investigated by the police, four led to convictions and two suspects were given police cautions. Outcomes of cases where the suspect was either convicted or accepted a police caution A conviction for false information on a nomination paper
The Metropolitan Police received a report that a Conservative party election agent (who also stood as a candidate) had submitted nomination forms with false signatures for local elections in the London Borough of Hackney. The police investigation found that a number of these forms contained the names and signatures of voters who had either been misled into believing they were signing for a different candidate, or where their name had been entered on the nomination form with someone else's signature. Following a police investigation the suspect was found guilty on 11 September 2020 and: sentenced to 6 months in prison, suspended for 18 months ordered to complete 200 hours of community service ordered to pay a £2,000 fine and court costs A conviction for false information on a nomination paper In June 2018, the Metropolitan Police received a report that a councillor elected in the May elections for the London Borough of Redbridge had made a false declaration about his home address on his nomination form. He did not live in the council area, but pretended he did so he could run as a Labour councillor for the area. Following a police investigation he was found guilty on 19 October 2020. On 24 November 2020 he was: sentenced to 17 months in prison ordered to pay £18,368 compensation he received in expenses as a councillor since May 2018, £10,000 towards the costs of running the by-election in 2021 to replace him, and £10,000 towards prosecution costs barred from standing for election for the next 5 years A conviction for false information on a nomination paper Norfolk police received a report that a Conservative party election agent for Norwich City council elections had submitted nomination forms that included forged signatures. Following a police investigation the suspect was found guilty and:
fined £300 ordered to pay victim surcharge of £30 pay costs of £85 A conviction for a nomination offence At the local elections in 2018, a Peterborough Green Party candidate pleaded guilty to forging all signatures on his nomination form so that he could stand in the election. When police questioned him, he admitted it and withdrew his papers before the close of nominations. He didn't appear on the ballot paper. He was sentenced to two months in prison, suspended for 12 months. He was also given 100 hours of community service, and a £200 fine. A caution for false registration and voting (by post) more than once At the local elections in 2018, a Labour Party candidate seeking re-election registered to vote at two different addresses in Rochdale. He applied to vote by post at both addresses and voted twice in the Rochdale council elections. It is an offence to vote more than once in the same local election area. The candidate was interviewed by police and admitted he had voted twice. He accepted a caution from police. A caution for using someone else's postal vote by mistake West Yorkshire police received a report that a postal vote cast in the 2018 local elections appeared to have been completed and returned by someone who had died. Police interviewed the deceased elector's widow. She had been his sole carer and often did his paperwork. It appeared to be a genuine mistake in the midst of grief. The widow accepted a conditional caution and wrote a full letter of apology to the Returning Officer. An unsuccessful election petition An election petition is a legal challenge to the result of an election. An unsuccessful candidate at the local elections claimed that the successful candidate had accused him of being a liar and had circulated election material without an 'imprint' - details about the printer, promotor, or publisher on election material. There wasn't enough evidence to prove the imprint allegation, or that the election material had been produced by the candidate. False statements about a candidate must relate to the personal character of the candidate and not their political character. This allegation was based on a difference of opinion and not related to the candidate's personal character or conduct.

Outcome of all reported cases

Outcome	Number
No further action	204
Locally resolved	57
Conviction	4
Caution	2

Types of electoral fraud allegations

Type of offence	Number
Campaigning	128
Voting	57
Nomination	41
Registration	39
Administration	1

Allegations data by police force

Police Force	Number of Allegations
2018	Use this table to search for data from specific police forces, by category of offence or outcome.

Electoral fraud cases - 2018

If you require this information in another format, please contact us

Types of electoral fraud allegations since 2010

Letter: Response to Recommendation 5 of the Child Sexual Abuse Westminster Investigation Report | Electoral Commission Search Letter:

Response to Recommendation 5 of the Child Sexual Abuse Westminster Investigation Report You are in the Key correspondence section Home Key correspondence First published: 3 July 2020 Last updated: 6 July 2020 Summary of the letter Date: 3 July 2020 To: Martin Smith, Solicitor to the Enquiry, Independent Inquiry into Child Sexual Abuse Address: PO Box 76107, London, SE1P 6HJ From: Amanda Kelly, Interim General Counsel Format: Sent by email Full letter Dear Martin I am writing in response to your email of 25th February 2020 drawing my attention to Recommendation 5 of the Inquiry's Westminster Investigation Report. I will set out the recommendation in full. 'All political parties registered with the Electoral Commission in England and Wales must ensure that they have a comprehensive safeguarding policy. All political parties must also ensure that they have procedures to accompany their policies, in order that politicians, prospective politicians, staff and volunteers know how to enact their party's policy, which must be published online. All political parties must update their policies and procedures regularly, and obtain expert safeguarding advice when doing this. The Electoral Commission should monitor and oversee compliance with this recommendation.' You asked me to draw this recommendation to the Commission's attention and provide its response to you in due course. We have now had an opportunity to discuss it internally. First, it may be helpful to provide some detail about the Electoral Commission and its role. The Commission was set up by the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act (PPERA) 2000. It is an independent body directly accountable to Parliament. While the Inquiry's recommendation is primarily addressed to political parties in England and Wales, the Commission's remit extends to the whole of the United Kingdom. It: oversees electoral matters including elections, registration and referendums registers political parties and regulates compliance with the financial regime set out in PPERA, and, publishes details of where parties and other campaigners get money from and how they spend it. Therefore, its regulatory remit is as a financial regulator of political parties, election and referendum campaigners and elected representatives. The Commission fully supports the work of the Inquiry and the recommendation that political parties should have high quality safeguarding and child protection procedures, that these are disseminated throughout the party and its membership and that senior officials understand how to respond properly to allegations. As safeguarding and child protection is so important, we understand why the Inquiry concluded that compliance should be monitored and overseen by an appropriate body Although the Commission maintains Registers of Political Parties for Great Britain and Northern Ireland, registration is not a compulsory part of UK politics. Indeed parties can only register if they intend to field candidates in a UK election. It is always possible for candidates who are not members of a registered party to stand as independents. The main benefit of registration is that the party's name, description and emblem can appear on the ballot paper. The main consequence of registration is that political parties must submit annual accounts, quarterly reports of donations and loans and reports on election spending. Accordingly, the statutory registration process involves consideration of these party identity marks and is relatively restricted to assessing proposed names, descriptions and emblems against the statutory tests in PPERA and reviewing the constitution and financial scheme. The Commission's compliance processes are focused on verifying that parties submit accurate financial records on time and that their declared donations and spending comply with the controls set out in PPERA. Given the current statutory scope of the Commission's remit, introducing a requirement that we should monitor and oversee compliance with the Inquiry's recommendation on the safeguarding policies of political parties would require a change in the law. Furthermore, while the Commission has experience and expertise on financial regulation, it does not have experience and expertise in child protection matters. I am sure that the Inquiry envisages a robust approach to monitoring and compliance with appropriate scrutiny of relevant policies and procedures and how they are disseminated and implemented within the party. This requires skills that the Commission does not currently possess. There are other organisations which have that experience and expertise and which are therefore much better placed to evaluate the quality of procedures and how they are implemented. We would suggest that it would be more appropriate for this recommendation to be directed toward one of these organisations. Obviously, the Commission would be happy to work with that organisation and furnish it with its registers. While the Inquiry is considering who would be best to carry out this work, it might also wish to consider the how the recommendation about political parties would work in the context of the diversity of such bodies. PPERA distinguishes between 'political parties' that are registered to contest all types of elections, and so called 'minor parties' that are registered simply to contest parish and / or community elections in England and Wales. There are currently 344 parties on the Great Britain Register of political parties, and 325 can contest elections in either England or Wales. There are also 23 minor parties registered to contest parish and / or community elections in England and Wales. This means that in practice any safeguarding policy and process, as well as monitoring and oversight, has to be suitable for, or differentiate between, the smallest party run by two volunteers operating occasionally from their home(s) through to the UK's major parties with many paid officials and members. I hope that this letter is helpful. Although we do not believe that the Commission could have a lead role in this important initiative, I would like to emphasise that the Commission is supportive of the recommendation and the importance of the work involved in implementing it. We are of course very willing to provide whatever assistance we can consistent with our statutory role, and the resources we have at our disposal. The Inquiry has also asked the Commission to publish its response within six months and so we will be putting this letter on our website. Please do not hesitate to contact me again if I can be of further assistance.

Board minutes: 24 January 2018 | Electoral Commission Search
Board minutes: 24 January 2018 You are in the Electoral Commission Board section
Home How we make decisions Electoral Commission Board On this page Apologies Declaration of interests Minutes of 13 September 2017 Draft Corporate Plan 2018-19 to 2022-23 Main Estimate for 2018/19 Chief Executive's Update for January Appointment to Committees Forward Plan of Board Business 2018-19 Decision/Action tracker for January Chair's and Chief Executive's meetings, and meetings in devolved legislatures Commissioner wash-up First published: 23 July 2019 Last updated: 23 July 2019 Summary
Date: 24 January 2018 Time: 9:30am to 12:20pm Location: Boothroyd Room, 3 Bunhill
Row, London Date of next scheduled meeting: Wednesday 13 March Who was at the meeting
Who was at the meeting Sir John Holmes (JEH) Chair Sue Bruce (SB) (by v/c) Anna
Carragher (AC) Elan Closs Stephens (ECS) John Horam (JRH) David Howarth (DH) Alasdair
Morgan (AM) Bridget Prentice (BP) Rob Vincent (RV) Claire Bassett (CB) Carolyn Hughes
(CH) Ailsa Irvine (AI) Robert Posner (RP) Craig Westwood (CW) Katharine Sparrow (KS)
Polly Wicks (PW) Katy Thomas (KT) Louise Footner (LF) Apologies There were no apologies. The Board noted the vote in the House of Commons the previous evening rejecting the appointment of Professor Sir Ian Kennedy as Commissioner. JEH noted he had been in contact with the Clerk to the Speaker's Committee. The Committee coincidentally had a meeting later that day where they would be discussing the next steps. Declaration of interests All the nominated Commissioners had stood for election, and been nominated as Commissioners by political parties that had contested recent elections and also registered as campaigners in the EU Referendum. AC was a member of the Board of the Arts Council of Northern Ireland (which received money from the EU Peace 3 Programme, and the Corners programme for individual artists). A Trustee of the Wildfowl and Wetlands Trust, a recipient of EU funding, she had now returned to that role at the conclusion of the Referendum. AC declared her sister was Head of BBC News in Northern Ireland. DH in 2008 drafted and put forward in parliament an amendment to the then European Union (Amendment) Bill, proposing an EU referendum in the terms 'Should the United Kingdom remain in the European Union?' DH had stood for election on a manifesto supporting an in-out referendum on the European Union. DH was a council member of Justice, an organisation which had in the past received EU funding. DH reported that the European Parliament subsidised a regular annual visit by his Public Policy students to Brussels. DH declared that he had been awarded a research grant of over €40,000 from the European Parliament. DH declared that he had been at university with Jon Lansman, but had no current contact with him.
JRH was a member of the pro-Europe Conservative Europe Group, the parliamentary group Conservative European Mainstream, and of the all-party parliamentary group on Reform, Decentralisation and Devolution Group, chaired by Lord Foulkes. CB noted she had joined the Board of the Internet Watch Foundation. Minutes of 13 September 2017 Agreed: with an amendment to correct the date, that the minutes of the Commission Board meeting held on 6 December 2017 be approved as an accurate record and the Chair be authorised to sign them. Draft Corporate Plan 2018-19 to 2022-23 CB introduced the paper noting it was an evolution of the previous Plan that the Board had approved last year. Unfortunately this plan had not been reviewed and signed off by the Speaker's Committee due to the calling of the UK Parliamentary General Election. CH reminded the Board that once any comments and amendments suggested by the Board had been incorporated, the Plan would be presented to the Speaker's Committee along with the Main Estimate and a Value for Money Study from the NAO around the end of March.
KT noted that a key change to the Plan was the addition of a new goal, which covered value for money and best use of resources. This ensured all work of the Commission was covered and meant all staff could see where they were contributing to the work of the Commission. KT explained that the Plan included planning for a European Parliamentary election, but this would be kept under review and updated as and when changes were known. The funding for this area of work would be kept separate and returned if it was not required and this would be explained in the narrative accompanying the budget. The Plan also highlighted the Commission's work across the UK and noted that changes in accountability were due to be implemented over the next couple of years. The Board agreed it was a strong Plan with a good narrative and clear sense of direction. During discussion it was suggested that the Plan should be more explicit about the Commission's relationship with the voter and its work around regulating political spending and parties. CB agreed that while the plan did cover these areas it could be clearer, and thought the regulation side would probably come across more strongly once the Forewords had been written. A section specifically about voters could be added. It was agreed more could be included about the work the Commission was already doing to develop the skills and capability the organisation would require to deliver its future work as a centre of expertise on all matters electoral. The changes in devolved accountability were discussed along with what this might mean for future plans, but it was noted that until there was more clarity it was difficult to go much further on the specifics. A question was asked around the provisions for the Local Government Boundary Commission for England pensions. CH explained that advice at the time of the separation of the two organisations was that the provisions had to remain with the Electoral Commission. However, this was something that could be investigated again to establish if there had been any changes. In response to a question as to whether the Budget was flexible enough to deal with any unplanned electoral events, CB said that it should be, and if necessary the Commission would go to the Speaker's Committee with a Supplementary Estimate. Contingency planning was regularly reviewed so the organisation had a clear idea of the likely costs, so we would be able to move quickly should the need arise - once a significant, unplanned electoral event was announced a supplementary estimate could be prepared very quickly. In response to a question about a contingency provision only being included for the first year, CB explained the assumptions underlying the five year budget and how it attempted to cover planning for unknown circumstances the organisation might need to deal with. She said overall the organisation was taking a relatively cautious approach over the longer term, but the Speaker's Committee agreed one year's funding at a time. If circumstances were to change this could be reflected in future Main Estimates along with explanations for any changes. CH updated the Board on the NAO's Value for Money Study which would be a short guide to the Commission, similar to what they had done for other organisations. Agreed that with the amendments, changes and additional suggestions, the Draft Corporate Plan was approved. Amendments agreed were: Addition of a section on voters The foreword/introduction to pull out key issues such as workload in PFR and devolution Further information about skills and capacity development to be added Agreed to review provision arrangements for Boundary Commission pensions and whether these could be changed Main Estimate for 2018/19 CH introduced the paper, noting it brought together the budget for the work the Board had been discussing over the last year. KT highlighted that the Capital budget was higher than in previous years; this was mainly a result of a lot of planned project activity originally scheduled for 2017 having to be paused and postponed as a result of the UK parliamentary general election in June. CB also highlighted the revised approach to contingency for the coming year which she hoped would give more flexibility to the budget overall. In response to a question about how the assumptions and explanations would be presented to Speaker's Committee, CH said that a detailed covering letter would be sent alongside the Main Estimate. CB gave some additional reassurance to the Board around the discipline behind the planning for the project work and capital spend. Agreed that subject to suggested amendments the Main Estimate for 2018/19 was approved.

Chief Executive's Update for January As noted in the Update CB confirmed Kieran Rix would be joining the Commission as the new Director of Finance and Corporate Services, on 1 March. AI said preparations for the May 2018 polls were going well across the organisation. Orders for four of the five Cabinet Office Pilots had been signed. However as yet we had not received details for the postal and proxy voting pilots due to take place in Tower Hamlets, Peterborough and Slough. The pilots had not been explicitly designed as comparator studies, but she noted that further pilots were expected in 2019 so there should be an opportunity to learn lessons from this round. AI said planning for any unscheduled electoral events was being kept under review. She noted that the uncertainty around the potential for a Northern Ireland Assembly election had led the Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland to push back the introduction of on-line registration. The Commission was working closely with the Cabinet Office and others to try and identify options for improvements to the canvass process that could be implemented through secondary legislation. AI noted the scope for change was limited, but that the Commission was working to ensure any changes were a stepping stone for the longer term changes we wanted to see implemented. At the first meeting of the Commission's Modernising Registration Steering Group the following week they would be reviewing and agreeing a set of key principles that could then underpin all the Commission's work around electoral registration. AI updated the Board on the Delivering Modern Guidance Project which had recently completed its first phase of work. This had found that the Commission's suite of guidance was comprehensive, thorough and well respected, but difficult to navigate and maintain. The Project Board had taken the decision that it should move to an online web based system, and was now developing a delivery plan for implementation. Subject to a gateway review in the summer, the delivery phase would commence in the autumn. CW updated the Board on development with the public awareness and voter registration campaign for the May polls. The team were currently finalising detailed media plans which would specify where and when the advertising would appear. The creative approach for the new campaign had also been signed off and would be moving into production in the next couple of weeks. On the recently approved fraud campaign the team were working with the project's partners at the Cabinet Office, CrimeStoppers and key local authorities to ensure the messages were appropriate, would translate well and would be useable in as many different authorities as possible. CW said his team were also providing expertise to the Cabinet Office for the public awareness plans for the pilots. CW said planning was also underway for the public information support for the May polls, which including looking at some quick fixes to pick up the increasing number of queries through social media. He said this would be something that would be looked at more thoroughly after May. RP updated the Board on work to draft Codes of Practice to further define the split between candidate and party spending. RP updated the Board on themes that were starting to emerge as the major party returns from the General Election were examined. RP updated the Board on some of the work the Party Registration Team were dealing with, including a new party that a group wanted to register in Tower Hamlets. The Northern Ireland Transparency Order was still waiting for a date for the debate in the House of Lords. If this didn't take place till late February it would mean another publication date would go by where the Commission was not able to publish details of donations and Loans in Northern Ireland. Noted. Appointment to Committees Agreed That: ECS would take up the vacant position on the Audit Committee RV would become Chair of the Remuneration and HR Committee AC's membership of the Remuneration and HR Committee would be extended Forward Plan of Board Business 2018-19 Noted. Decision/Action tracker for January It was agreed the first action could be made clearer. The Board reviewed the allocation of Commissioners to the different Steering Groups. Modernising Registration: BP and RV Modernising Elections: AM and SB Regulatory New Commissioner – to be kept under review Digital and Infrastructure: AC Noted Chair's and Chief Executive's meetings, and meetings in devolved legislatures Noted. Commissioner wash-up

Parliamentary Parties Panel minutes: 4 July 2017 | Electoral Commission Search Parliamentary Parties Panel minutes: 4 July 2017 You are in the Party panels section Home How we make decisions Party panels On this page Minutes of the last meeting and actions arising (ECPPP 21/02/2017) Experiences of the May and June elections Post-election regulatory assurance plans Delivering Modern Guidance Project Commission Update Report Any other business Actions First published: 4 July 2017 Last updated: 2 September 2019 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting Conservative Party: Andrew Stedman (AS) Megan Tucker (MT) Democratic Unionist Party: Christopher Montgomery (CM) Labour: John Stolliday (JS) Andrew Whyte (AW) Liberal Democrats:
David Allworthy (DA) Darren Briddock (DB) Scottish National Party: Scott Martin (SM) Electoral Commission: Claire Bassett, Chief Executive (CB) Craig Westwood, Director of Communications & Research (CW) Melanie Davidson, Head of Support & Improvement, (MD) Louise Edwards, Head of Regulation (LE) Tom Hawthorn, Head of Policy (TH) Ben Wilkinson, Head of External Communications (BW) Carol Sweetenham, Head of Guidance and Strategy, (CS) Cary Mitchell, Communications Officer (CM1) Minutes of the last meeting and actions arising (ECPPP 21/02/2017) The minutes from 21/02/2017 were agreed. SM raised that 'Guidance and support for Returning Officers' had been agreed at the last meeting as a future agenda item for this meeting but that it did not appear on the issued agenda. MD clarified that due to the unexpected general election this project had been delayed and had been included in the update report circulated before the meeting. CB said feedback would be welcomed from the Panel to support the project to evaluate and improve the performance standards frameworks for ROs and EROs. DA noted that, when recently surveyed, ROs did not see political parties as part of their customer base and stated his opinion that ROs often see parties as problems to be dealt with. CB committed to involving political parties in the consultation process when creating new guidance on RO's performance standards. SM suggested the Information Commissioner's Office (ICO) be involved to help provide guidance. CB suggested the ICO should be invited a future Panel meeting in December and it was agreed that a request would be made. Experiences of the May and June elections SM suggested covering this item in a series of subjects including electoral registration; nominations; postal votes; polling day; election counts; campaigning; integrity issues. SM said the main focus was likely to be the UKPGE rather than local elections and asked whether there were any matters to raise that were not covered in this list. DA said there were some issues relating to the local elections in May, mainly to do with commonwealth and EU citizens and their rights to vote but that he intended to raise the cases by email with relevant persons. DA also raised an inconsistency in law with an issue where a candidate who was registered anonymously on the electoral register was able to be nominated to stand in the UKPGE without releasing her address but her address was made public in her nomination to stand in local elections. SM mentioned Perth & Kinross Council's approach to Notices of Poll, which was to publish a redacted version online which did not include candidates' addresses. He noted that the full version was still available upon request. AS asked whether the Electoral Commission could provide template certificates for EROs to use to provide proof of permissibility for donations as some local authorities' certificates are too vague. MD indicated that this would be looked into. SM asked whether there were any problems to be reported around electoral registration. CW responded that the problems had already been reported and in the public domain and there was not anything further to report to the Panel. He noted the Commission's reports on the administration of the elections were currently being drafted and that (on the issue of duplicate registration applications) we will be reviewing messaging

around registrations and working with the Cabinet Office on our recommendations for improvements. SM asked about the idea of a system to allow voters to check their registration status online and CW confirmed that although the Cabinet Office has reiterated that the Government does not intend to pursue this, it remains a Commission recommendation, that it would support a number of positive innovations in the administration of elections. SM asked whether anyone had anything to raise regarding candidate nominations. DA raised commonly used names and the particular case of Elizabeth Evans, a candidate in Ceredigion. DB explained that the RO would not accept her nomination as Elizabeth is her middle name but they would accept her nomination as Liz. He said it seems to be a particular problem in Wales as similar names are very common. CB agreed the Wales office would look into the issue. JS raised the issue of deposits and said many ROs refused to accept deposits paid by certified cheque because the legislation uses the wording 'banker's draft'. He said that although the Electoral Commission provided guidance to help, the short timescale for this election meant many candidates decided to pay the deposit in cash from their own pockets. DB agreed that this was a common issue. CB said we would take another look at our guidance on this subject to see if it was possible to make it clearer for ROs. SM asked whether there were any issues around postal voting to be discussed. DB noted that secrecy requirements at postal vote openings were being interpreted by ROs more rigorously at each election and there were cases where agents were not even allowed in the same room as the opening and therefore could not perform their function of observing that postal vote packs were being opened correctly and checked according to the rules. DA explained that candidates have a right to object if agents cannot see the process but that some ROs did not seem to understand that this right existed. MD said we are more than happy to address the issues if specific examples are provided and we would look at the guidance on this matter. SM asked if anyone had any issues to raise about polling day. DB said Sutton council had issued 'emergency regulations' to ban tellers from talking to voters on their way into polling stations in the borough and was concerned that this caused confusion and made it difficult for tellers to do the task as many voters discard their poll cards once they vote. CB asked whether there had been an incident that led to the council's decision and DB said the RO cited past incidents but did not give any specific examples. MD confirmed that we would look into this with the RO and clarify our guidance. SM said there should be proportionality and that restrictions should only be used if there is a history of issues at a particular location. SM, moving on to election counts, raised that he felt there was a general feeling that there should be more guidance on recounts and potentially even a number when recounts should take place. He suggested a difference of 50 votes between the leading candidate and the one with the next most votes. DB said the doubtful ballots guidance issued by the Commission for recent elections has been incredibly successful and that more guidance around recounts would be welcome. He also suggested guiding ROs on a time at which it was expected that the count would be adjourned to start again the following day, preferably with a fresh set of counting agents, if no result had been reached. DA and DB pointed out that nobody operates well if they are tired whether they are counting or scrutinising or making decisions. SM suggested that there equally needs to be finality, particularly where successive recounts came to the same figure, and that multiple recounts should be avoided where possible. AS returned to the suggestion of a number at which a recount is expected and suggested that 50 was too low as 50 votes could easily be lost when ballots are counted in bundles of 100. SM said that a suggested figure for re-counts would depend on whether there had been a bundle check in front of agents.

SM noted that at the North East Fife count, the RO had switched to counting in 20s, which was a good method of dealing with very close contests. DA noted that he would like to see guidance that specifies the candidates' right to request bundle counts and that this does not constitute a recount. SM noted that the next subject is campaigning but suggested that could be covered later unless any of the panel had anything they would like to raise. DA mentioned an incident where a candidate was refused entry to their count because they did not have photo ID and was only allowed entry when a copy of the candidate's leaflet was produced. Post-election regulatory assurance plans LE introduced the item and explained we will be conducting assurance work to reassure voters that they can be sure campaign spending and political donations are transparent and that our regulations are clear. She explained we will be looking at spending by non-party campaigners, spending on digital campaigning and spending on and services received from non-UK companies and that these areas have been chosen not because we expect anything against the rules has occurred, but because they are areas that are in the media and public interest, and where we might be able to reassure the public that the rules were being followed. LE asked the Panel to feed back whether they think these are the right areas to be looking at and to help feed into the work itself. DB said he would like to share how difficult it is for parties to complete their spending return given the large numbers of volunteers and temporary staff involved in collecting the required information. LE said she would be happy to meet with DB to go through the process used in his party, and hear his perspective. AS agreed that the number of staff and volunteers increases during election periods and JS explained that often these people leave as soon as the election is over, often leaving invoices and important information locked in their temporary email accounts. AS asked for more information about the mention of overseas companies and LE explained that we were not responding to particular concerns. Instead, we wanted to ascertain what if any such spending took place, how it was recorded and what was reported. CB suggested that there was a perception about what has been called 'dark money' in the media and that we were looking to reassure voters on this. DA mentioned 'dark ads' which he said are so-called because they are targeted and not everyone is supposed to see them. LE replied that this is another thing we hope to address in this work, to explain to voters that just because something is targeted it does not make it illegal. AS raised that often non-party campaigners are not fully aware of all the rules and DA mentioned that he had found it useful to remind parties that had withdrawn candidates that they still had spending limits. SM questioned why splitting spending between national and local campaigns had not been included on the list of issues given the media and public interest in this. DA said he found the Commission's guidance really useful, and that it was particularly helpful to meet with the Commission at an early stage in the campaign to discuss the issue. This helped the party make decisions during the campaign. LE said she was glad to hear it was useful and that we would repeat the early meeting at future elections. SM raised regulated periods and the fact that the unexpected UKPGE meant that spending incurred a year before the election now needs to be included in spending returns. There is also the added factor that local elections had recently taken place and spending for those campaigns falls within the UKPGE regulated period. DB noted that the issue for them is they need to be able to clearly tell their volunteers in the field exactly what they need to tell the central party about and JS concurred that the task of coordinating information gathering from local parties is complex. LE explained that the law set out what was and was not party campaign spending. However, we would look at whether we could provide assistance on the factors parties might want to consider when taking decisions and what had to be reported in spending returns this year. DB asked whether LE would be available to meet with each party to provide advice on spending returns and LE confirmed that we were already intending to meet with each of the Panel on our assurance work. CB said our preference is to meet early in the process to make sure everyone has the understanding to get it right. SM raised concerns about the fact that local election campaigns incurred spending before the UKPGE announcement without authorisation for national spending from central parties but the back-dated regulated period for the general election means that some of that spending that was not authorised in advance must be included in national spending returns. AW agreed and suggested an element of pragmatism from the Commission would be welcomed as it would not be ideal to have to issue a blanket authorisation to all local parties to incur national spending. LE agreed to look at our position on this. SM said that there were questions over whether the 365 day regulated period of UK Parliamentary general elections remained appropriate and fit for the purpose. DB pointed out that regulated period for EU elections is just four months. SM raised the issue of spending limits for Scotland. All current party spending limits are based on the estimated party spending at the 1997 General Election, so are now 20 years out of date. The figure for Scotland was originally calculated based on 72 MPs. There are now 59, and this is set to be reduced again. The spending figures for Wales will be considerably reduced if the boundary review is implemented. The fixed costs for high cost items such as PEBs and PPBs can be absorbed in the much higher England figure, but now less easily in the figures for other nations, which have separate parties and a practice of UK parties producing nation-specific broadcasts in Scotland and Wales. The Scotland figure has become a pinch point in spending and there is no longer any reflection of these fixed costs (as there was in 2000 when there were 72 MPs in Scottish constituencies, which was more MPs than population share). Delivering Modern Guidance Project CS introduced the project. The aim is to make it easier for people to navigate and use our guidance as well as making it easier for us to produce and amend it. We are planning, for example, to identify what is redundant, what needs to be added and what can be removed or simplified. We are also looking at the online presentation of the guidance. Initial decisions are likely to be taken around the turn of the year. CS asked Panel members to help by joining groups or participating in individual interviews to aid our evidence gathering and assist with user testing. DA suggested this project would benefit from a wider perspective of how parties actually use the guidance. He explained that party candidates are generally unlikely to go direct to the Commission's guidance: they are usually directed to candidate or agent handbooks produced by the party that incorporate it but put it in the context of the party structure and campaign. AS agreed that this was common practice and CB suggested that it would be useful for us to see copies of party handbooks to understand how we can produce guidance in the most useful way. DA also suggested that his preference is to have one manual to refer to that can be annotated and entries found quickly, rather than the current guidance provided in a number of separate PDF documents. DB commented that it is currently difficult to be sure that you have the most recent version and older versions often remain available online. This point was echoed by MT. DB also expressed a preference for guidance to be provided as a Wiki, to allow easier searching and make sure old guidance can be completely removed. CB thanked the Panel for their feedback and said it is important for us to understand how the guidance is actually used. DA suggested independent candidates and smaller parties should also be involved in the project as they may use guidance differently. CS confirmed that we will be seeking discussion with independent candidates. DA and AS confirmed they would be happy to take part and provide feedback and user testing. DB noted the quick turnaround of guidance produced by the Commission for the snap general election. Commission Update Report SM asked whether anyone had anything to raise from the update report circulated before the meeting. AS asked for parties to be involved in reviewing performance standards for ROs and CB agreed. DA mentioned that ROs often seem to perceive party campaigning to sign voters up for postal votes as an interference in the registration process rather than parties helping to increase voter turnout. Any other business There was no other business. Actions Action Owner Status Invite ICO to December PPP meeting. CM1 Complete Electoral Commission to contact RO in Ceredigion to clarify commonly used names guidance. MD Complete Electoral Commission to contact Sutton RO regarding guidance for tellers at polling stations. MD Complete Electoral Commission to meet with parties to provide advice and guidance on the spending return process for the UKPGE. LE Incomplete Related content Party registration decisions View our decisions on political party names, descriptions and emblems View current applications View the political party names, descriptions and emblems which we are currently considering as part of our assessment process Donations and loans Find out about donations and loans to a political party, individual or other organisation Registers of unincorporated associations Download and view the registers of unincorporated associations

Board minutes: 9 April (extraordinary meeting) | Electoral Commission Search Board minutes: 9 April (extraordinary meeting) You are in the Electoral Commission Board section Home How we make decisions Electoral Commission Board On this page Apologies and introductions Declarations of interest European Parliamentary Elections decision-making discussion (EC 23/19) Update on recruitment of new Chief Executive First published: 26 July 2019 Last updated: 26 July 2019 Meeting overview
Date: 9 April 2019 Time: 9am to 10am Location: Boothroyd Room, 3 Bunhill Row, London
Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting John Holmes, Chair Alasdair
Morgan (Videoconference) Alastair Ross (Teleconference) Anna Carragher (Teleconference) Elan Closs Stephens Joan Walley Rob
Vincent (Teleconference) Sarah Chambers (Teleconference) Stephen Gilbert Bob Posner, Chief Executive Ailsa Irvine, Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance
Louise Edwards, Director, Regulation (Videoconference) Craig Westwood, Director, Communications and Research David Meek, Senior Adviser, Governance Jennifer Hartland, Head of Human Resources Apologies and introductions Sue Bruce sent her apologies. Declarations of interest No new declarations of interest. European Parliamentary Elections decision-making discussion (EC 23/19) Bob Posner explained that the Government had confirmed that the European Parliamentary Election would be held on 23 May 2019, unless an agreement had been reached for the UK to leave the European Union and the polls were consequently cancelled. We were therefore preparing for these elections on the assumption that they would go ahead on this day. Craig Westwood introduced the paper setting out options for the proposed registration awareness raising campaign related to the European Parliamentary Election, with different spending plans attached to each. The Commission had a statutory duty to conduct such campaigns, but there was also an obvious need for a proportionate campaign, given the relatively short period available on this occasion, and the need to ensure that any budget spent could achieve a significant impact. The Commission would also be working with our usual partners, including local authorities, which provided a lot of extra impact without requiring extra spending. The Board was assured that, if it became clear at any stage that the European Parliamentary Election would probably or definitely not go ahead, spending on the registration campaign could and would be delayed/paused or – ultimately – cancelled, to the extent possible. The Board discussed the targeting of the campaign funding and noted the clear evidence base that existed relating to under-registered groups. There was also a discussion of the duties and obligations on the Commission during election periods.
Anna Carragher left the meeting at 9.40. Resolved: That the Commission should mount a campaign on the lines recommended, up to a maximum spend of £500,000. Update on recruitment of new Chief Executive Officers were asked to leave the meeting, except for Jennifer Hartland, who took the official note for this item. John Holmes recalled the note from the recruitment panel that he had sent to Board members the previous day and provided an oral update. The Board noted the rigour of the selection process, involving an outside recruitment agency and an interview panel including an independent outside member, and the high calibre of the candidates under consideration. The Board discussed the selection and adopted the panel's recommendation. Resolved: That Bob Posner be appointed to the post of Chief Executive.

Consultation: Draft performance standards for Returning Officers and updated performance standards for Electoral Registration Officers | Electoral Commission

Search Consultation: Draft performance standards for Returning Officers and updated performance standards for Electoral Registration Officers

You are in the Our consultations section Home Our consultations RO performance standards consultation form On this page How to respond How we developed the new standards About the draft standards Using the standards Supporting implementation Reporting What happens next? First published: 14 June 2022 Last updated: 14 June 2022

Overview We have the power to set, monitor and report on performance standards for Returning Officers (ROs), and have done so since 2009. The performance standards framework for ROs was last updated in 2013. Together with our guidance and resources, the performance standards form an important part of our package of support for ROs in planning for and delivering elections across Great Britain. The introduction of the Elections Act has provided a timely opportunity to review the RO framework. We want the standards to provide a robust framework for the delivery of well-run elections, to support the effective and consistent implementation of legislative changes, and to enable transparent reporting on how elections have been delivered at a local level and across Great Britain. The changes arising from the Elections Act will also impact on the role of Electoral Registration Officers (EROs), and we have identified a number of areas where the current ERO framework, which was last reviewed in 2021, will need to be updated to reflect these new responsibilities. We want to hear your views on the draft standards, how they should be used and whether they will support the achievement of these aims.

How to respond The consultation has now closed. The feedback provided during this consultation will be used to inform the final standards ahead of them being laid in the UK, Scottish and Welsh Parliaments and published by the end of this year. Alongside the final standards we will also publish a response to this consultation, showing the feedback we received and how we have addressed it.

Meetings Throughout the consultation period we will attend scheduled meetings - such as Association of s (AEA) branch meetings - and will also be discussing the standards at meetings with individual stakeholders. We will take these opportunities to get views on the draft standards and how we use them. We are happy to consider meeting with any other groups or interested individuals on request. We have also scheduled a series of virtual drop in sessions which any groups or interested individuals can join to ask questions and provide feedback. These will be held on 29 June, 21 July and 5 August. Please email us at performancestandardsinbox@electoralcommission.org.uk if you wish to attend a session.

How we developed the new standards How we developed the new standards We started developing the new RO performance standards last autumn, using the ERO performance framework structure as our basis. The ERO framework was last updated in June 2021 and focuses on outcomes rather than the processes that have been followed. We have informally discussed the approach with a number of ROs from across Great Britain to get their input at an early stage, and their feedback has helped shape the draft we are now consulting on. This has included discussions with small groups of ROs across England, as well as engagement with the Wales Electoral Coordination Board and the Electoral Management Board for Scotland. The draft standards have also benefitted from input from the Association of s, at an official level as well as through discussions around the high-level approach with members at their regional branch meetings. The draft standards have also been discussed with government officials and the elections leads at the Society of Local Authority Chief Executives (Solace). About the draft standards The proposed new standards are focussed on the outcomes that should be delivered, rather than the processes that are followed, with the objective of helping ROs and their teams to understand and demonstrate the impact of their election activities. This should help ROs to make informed decisions on what activities are undertaken, how these activities are carried out and how their limited resources can be deployed efficiently and effectively. There are four proposed new standards which are focused on the following outcomes: Electoral services are robust and support the delivery of well-run elections Everybody who is eligible and wants to vote is able to do so and has confidence in the voting process Everybody who is eligible and wants to stand for election is able to do so and has confidence in the process Everyone can have confidence that the election process is well managed and in the accuracy of the results The four draft standards are designed not only to support ROs in the delivery of well-run elections but also to cover the ongoing planning and preparations that are needed to be ready to deliver polls whenever they may take place. Performance standard one is focused on ensuring that ROs have the structures and resources in place to enable and support their teams to deliver elections in practice, and can be used throughout the year to support and challenge performance. Performance standards two, three and four then focus on the operational delivery of elections, ensuring that all involved in the process can take part and have confidence in the results. Although these are more operational, they have been designed to ensure ROs are focussed on the outcomes that should be achieved for the various participants in the electoral process - namely voters, candidates and campaigners - rather than simply covering the activities to be carried out. While the standards will be kept under review and further updates made if necessary, the framework has been designed to give some flexibility to accommodate future legislative change, with the accompanying guidance being the vehicle for outlining the detail of what ROs should be doing to ensure they meet the standards. For example, we recognise that further legislative change is expected over the next few years, particularly in the devolved nations where the Scottish and Welsh Governments have each stated that they intend to bring forward their own reform legislation over the life of the current parliaments. The changes in the Elections Act will impact on the role of EROs as well as on ROs, and we have identified a number of areas where the current ERO performance framework will need to be updated to reflect these new responsibilities, which we are also seeking views on through this consultation. The draft amendments reflect our current understanding of how the changes in the Act will impact on the role of EROs but given much of the detail on how these provisions will work in practice is still to follow in secondary legislation, the precise content may be subject to further change. What the draft standards comprise of What the draft standards comprise of We have used the framework created for the ERO performance standards as our starting point for the RO standards. This framework is comprised of the following elements: An outcome: This states the broad goal that ROs should be seeking to achieve. What inputs are needed? This sets out the resources that will need to be put into the service to enable the necessary activities to be delivered. What activities are being undertaken? This does not provide an exhaustive list of activities, but instead summarises the headline activities that ROs are likely to need to undertake to be able to meet the outcome. Our guidance and resources for ROs will support them in determining the specific activities that will need to be carried out. What information is needed to understand the impact of the activities? This highlights the data and qualitative information which will help to demonstrate the impact of the activities and which should form the basis of how ROs and the Commission can determine the success of their work. Again this is not an exhaustive list and the information listed may be supplemented by additional data or information that is relevant to their performance. What difference is being made? This summarises the combined effects that the activities should have and which, taken together, would contribute to the delivery of the overall outcome. How can we determine the success of the work? This sets out measures that will help to demonstrate what difference the work is making. In some cases the difference will not be straightforward to quantify or otherwise measure, and so an aggregation of several measures may be relied upon to demonstrate what the work is achieving.

Questions Questions Are the standards focussed on the right outcomes? If not, what outcomes should be reflected? Do the draft standards demonstrate a clear link from inputs through to the overall outcomes? Do the standards focus on the right activities? If not, what activities should be included? Do you have any thoughts on the measurability of the impact of the activities set out in the draft standards? Do the standards cover the full range of responsibilities of the RO? Are there any gaps, or is there anything included in the standards that shouldn't be there? Do the standards provide sufficient flexibility to accommodate future legislative change?

Using the standards The standards will be used in three main ways: to support and challenge the performance of ROs; to support the effective and consistent implementation of legislative changes; and to report transparently on RO performance and how elections are delivered. Support and challenge The standards, alongside our guidance and advice, form a central part of the Commission's work to support and challenge ROs in the delivery of well-run elections. The new framework has been designed to be used not only in the period leading up to polls but throughout the whole year. The first of the standards in particular aims to provide a basis for year-round engagement between the Commission and ROs and their teams, including in relation to local structures and approach to elections delivery. The intention is that this will help with identifying and addressing any issues further out from elections and with ensuring readiness for polls, whenever they may take place. This will complement the work we are taking forward as part of our strategy to support increased local authority capacity and resilience, to develop a range of tools and resources to support local authorities with designing and managing their electoral services. Taken together, we will use these to offer tailored advice, support and resources which will help local authorities to develop the resilience and capacity to deliver well-run elections in their own specific circumstances. The second aspect of our support and challenge is focussed around targeted engagement in the period leading up to and during an election. This builds on our already-established process, where we undertake risk assessments to inform how we prioritise our engagement. These risk assessments take into account a range of factors, including the experience of the RO and their team, any staffing changes, demographics of the area and electoral fraud risks. While we aim to engage with all ROs with elections, we have more frequent and deeper engagement with those we have identified as being at greater risk of not being able to deliver well-run polls. The framework of the standards will be used to support structured conversations with ROs and their teams. This will enable us to understand more about the preparations that are being made, to challenge where things are not progressing as we would expect, and to provide support and advice to help refine the arrangements. The intention is that the new standards can be used by ROs, alongside our guidance, to plan for and deliver consistent and high quality experiences for all who are involved in the electoral process. The information and data set out in the standards will be used to shape the structured discussions. We may not work through it all in all cases, but we would expect ROs and their teams to be using the information and data themselves anyway to help them to understand the impact of their activities - so they can identify what works, what doesn't, and where improvements can be made - so we would hope it should be straightforward to make it available and go through it with us on request. Our emphasis in each case will be dependent to some extent on our rationale for engagement: so, for example, if there has been a previous issue around counts, we would expect to focus in particular on those aspects of the standards in our discussions. Alongside this, we will also collect management information from all ROs, which aligns with the information and evidence outlined in the standards. As well as giving us an important source of information to analyse and use to inform engagement with local ROs, it also provides a picture of progress at a national level and gives us data we can use proactively and reactively to tell the story of how the elections are being managed. We don't plan to collect significant amounts of information routinely, with our focus instead being around key information during an election period which would provide an overview of the key preparations that have been made (for example, around polling station venues and staffing, count venues and timing, and postal vote despatch arrangements). Questions Questions Will the proposed approach to how the Commission will use the standards to engage with ROs enable the identification and provision of effective support and challenge? Is there anything more or different the Commission should be using the standards to do? Do you think the standards will support ROs to provide a consistent, high-quality experience for voters, candidates and agents? Do you think the standards, alongside our guidance, will be effective in supporting ROs with planning for and delivering elections? Are there any other tools and guidance that would help to support ROs in using the standards to understand and improve their performance? Supporting consistent implementation of legislation Along with our guidance and advice, the standards will also play an important role in supporting the effective and consistent implementation of legislative changes, including the significant changes resulting from the Elections Act. Our approach to supporting and challenging ROs, as outlined above, will have a particular emphasis on helping to ensure the necessary arrangements to deliver the range of changes are in place ahead of the May 2023 and May 2024 polls, and the data and information we collect will also help to inform our evaluation and reporting. For example, for the changes relating to accessibility – where the legislation now provides flexibility for ROs in what arrangements they put in place to support disabled voters in the polling station – the framework will be used to support the structured conversations with ROs around the adjustments they propose and how these take account of those recommended in our guidance, and to help ensure appropriate arrangements are in place. We will also be able to collect the listed information to illustrate what adjustments were made by ROs, which will support us in meeting our statutory duty to report on this after the polls. In relation to the ERO standards we have made some changes to cover the new responsibilities relating to applications for voter cards, and we have also added additional detail to cover the extension of the franchise for overseas electors and the introduction of changes to the absent vote application process. We expect to monitor and report on the operation and impact of the new and changed provisions arising from the Elections Act as part of our existing statutory powers and duties to keep electoral law under review and to report on elections. Our wider engagement with ROs and EROs, underpinned by the standards frameworks, will enable us to develop a deeper understanding of the challenges and successes around implementation of the Act, which will inform this reporting. Questions Questions Do the standards, including the updates to the ERO standards, appropriately reflect the range of changes being introduced as a result of the Elections Act? Do you think the standards, along with our guidance, will help with the consistent implementation of the legislative changes introduced? Do you think that the data and information set out in the standards covers the right areas and will provide robust evidence to inform our reporting on the implementation of the Act? Reporting When issues arise during the conduct of polls, our immediate priority is to support ROs and their teams with guidance and advice to help them address the issue and mitigate the impact of any issues on voters and campaigners. We then work with them after the polls to support them as they learn lessons and help them identify and take forward any actions required to help ensure that the issue does not happen again. However, we also need to ensure that where issues have arisen, we are transparent about these, being open and clear about what has happened, the impact, and the learning. To this end, the standards play an important role in enabling us to report on the administration of elections. The standards should also help ROs to demonstrate, and report locally on, the impact of their election activities. Where issues arise, the relevant pieces of data and information listed in the standards are collated and analysed to enable us to reach an assessment about whether or not the relevant aspects of the standards have been met in practice. We have an established process for doing this which includes consultation with a panel of Electoral Coordination and Advisory Board members (i.e. senior ROs from across the UK) to gather their feedback on the evidence, impact and provisional assessment of performance, before a final decision is taken. As well as highlighting areas where there have been issues, we will also use our reporting to highlight examples of good practice. This will be particularly important as we gather examples of new processes to support implementation of legislative changes, which we can then share with other local authorities to help inform their local arrangements. The information we gain through our engagement with ROs and their teams will not only provide us with an understanding of local performance but will also help us to build up a picture of how the system is working more generally. By capturing and collating the key points from our individual discussions with ROs we can identify emerging themes and issues, which can in turn inform our reporting and recommendations after elections. Questions Do you think the proposed approach to reporting would support transparency, promotes confidence that elections are well-run and enable the sharing of good practice? Is there anything more or different the Commission should be doing to support ROs and their teams when issues arise? What happens next? The feedback provided during this consultation will be used to inform the final standards ahead of them being laid in the UK, Scottish and Welsh Parliaments and published by the end of this year. Alongside the final standards we will also publish a response to this consultation, showing the feedback we received and how we have addressed it. We are also undertaking work to update our guidance and resources to support ROs and EROs in England, Scotland and Wales with delivering elections and electoral registration services, including to reflect the changes to processes that will be required as a result of the Elections Act. These updated materials will provide more detailed information to support EROs and ROs with delivering against the objectives set out in the standards. Draft performance standards for Returning Officers Draft Returning Officer Performance standards framework 2022 Draft performance standards for Returning Officers Outcome 1: Electoral services are robust and support the delivery of well-run elections What inputs are needed? RO understanding and delivery of role and responsibilities – management and oversight of the delivery of elections, including the range of statutory functions of the RO, and an understanding of the strategic landscape, including any legislative changes that will impact on delivery.

Stakeholder engagement – establish and maintain strong relationships with key stakeholders. Planning – maintain plans for the delivery of elections, scheduled and unscheduled, ensuring they are kept under review. Resources – identification and allocation of budget and permanent staffing; and management of contractors and suppliers. What activities are being undertaken? Understanding of statutory responsibilities Polls are delivered in accordance with legislation, guidance and directions (where issued). RO knowledge and understanding of role and responsibilities is developed and maintained, including through training. Formal appointment of deputies, ensuring clear delegations in place and roles are allocated and understood. Development and maintenance of robust delivery plans Establish project team to support preparations for and delivery of elections Clear plans in place, with objectives and success measures Contingency planning to ensure readiness for unscheduled events Business continuity planning Risk register in place, with risks monitored and mitigations identified and implemented Recruitment of necessary staff and identification of training needs Robust arrangements in place for managing issues Appropriate funding is accessed from the local authority Working with contractors and suppliers Identification of external services required of services Contract development and management of delivery Maintaining effective relationships with key stakeholders Engagement with key stakeholders on plans Ongoing engagement with stakeholders throughout the delivery of the polls Coordination and management of the poll (by ROs with a power of direction) Work across local authority boundaries with other ROs to develop guidance and issue directions where necessary to support consistent delivery of polls Engage with local Returning Officers on the arrangements they have in place to deliver the elections in their area What information is needed to understand the impact of our activities? Understanding of statutory responsibilities Awareness of guidance and legislation Records of training/meetings attended Evidence of quality assurance of the whole electoral process Notification of appointment of deputies Development and maintenance of robust delivery plans Clear agendas for and records of project team meetings, to support focus on outcomes Project planning documentation which is kept under regular review Evaluation of previous events and identification of lessons learned Analysis of wider context within which polls are being conducted Succession plans which are regularly monitored Training needs analysis and records of training Reconciliation of project costs against available budget Working with contractors and suppliers Records of formal procurement decisions Contracts in place with all suppliers, with mechanisms to manage and monitor performance Contract monitoring tools and escalation mechanisms, including supplier issues logs and risk registers Service level agreements Details of supplier business continuity plans Maintaining effective relationships with key stakeholders Minutes of meetings with stakeholders Consultation with and feedback from local stakeholders on plans and election arrangements Assessment of local accessibility requirements and demonstrated understanding of needs Records of issues or concerns raised by stakeholders and resolutions implemented Coordination and management of the poll (by ROs with a power of direction) Plans for communication with local ROs Plans for coordinating and delivering public awareness activity and engaging with electors across the electoral area Arrangements for the collation of results Records of any guidance issued and whether and how the power to issue directions has been used Analysis of post-election feedback What difference is being made? A consistent high-quality experience for electors, candidates and agents Public confidence in and satisfaction with election processes Teams delivering electoral services are supported to effectively deliver electoral processes The RO has the right skills, knowledge and influence to support the effective delivery of the polls How can we determine the success of our work? Events are delivered in accordance with legislation Elections delivered without legal challenge Analysis of team resilience, capability and capacity Analysis of feedback on the delivery of polls and any complaints received Performance against measures and objectives set out in your project plans Outcome 2: Everybody who is eligible and wants to vote is able to do so and has confidence in the voting process What inputs are needed? RO understanding and delivery of role and responsibilities - management and oversight of the delivery of elections, including the range of statutory functions of the RO Planning – maintain plans for the delivery of elections, ensuring they are kept under review and actively used to support delivery Resources – identification and allocation of budget and temporary staffing; and management of contractors and suppliers. Training – identification and delivery of training to meet the needs of both permanent and temporary staff What activities are being undertaken? Providing information to ensure voters understand how they can take part Develop and deliver a public awareness strategy, ensuring that electors are provided with the information they need to understand how they can take part Ensure all required election materials are accurate and made available as soon as practicable Production of election materials Production and publication of election notices Production and delivery of poll cards Proof-checking of election materials Production of ballot papers Managing absent voting Production and delivery of postal ballot packs Opening and processing returned postal votes Managing voting in person Identifying and booking suitable polling stations Assessing accessibility of polling stations Identifying and providing equipment to support voters with accessibility needs Ensuring appropriate staffing levels at polling stations Providing training for polling station staff What information is needed to understand the impact of our activities? RO understanding and delivery of role and responsibilities - management and oversight of the delivery of elections, including the range of statutory functions of the RO Analysis of different communication methods, to support targeting of messaging Evidence of working with partners to deliver public awareness Ballot paper rejection rates and postal vote rejection rates, contributing to an understanding of whether voters have been able to follow the instructions Feedback from polling station staff and data relating to those who were unable to vote due to not having appropriate identification (at relevant polls) (Wales only) Plans in place to ensure all information for electors is provided equally in English and Welsh, including all election materials Planning – maintain plans for the delivery of elections, ensuring they are kept under review and actively used to support delivery Accuracy of statutory notices Information on method and timing of delivery of poll cards and postal ballot packs Accuracy and timeliness of election materials: Record of arrangements for any outsourcing of production and delivery of poll cards, postal votes and ballot papers Record of proof checking processes Examples of election materials Record of data protection processes Resources – identification and allocation of budget and temporary staffing; and management of contractors and suppliers. Accuracy and timeliness of postal ballot packs: Record of arrangements for any outsourcing of production and delivery of postal ballot papers Audit trail of issuing of postal votes Record of checking processes Accurate records of postal vote openings including audit trails of postal votes opened, verified and rejected Training – identification and delivery of training to meet the needs of both permanent and temporary staff Evaluation checklists for polling stations to demonstrate suitability for use Polling station layout plans Approach taken to allocating electors and staff to polling stations

Checklists of required polling station equipment Analysis of voter needs informing decisions about equipment to be provided to support voting Feedback from voters and local interest groups on equipment provided to support voting Guidance/training provided to polling station staff Records of those refused a ballot paper, by reason Records of postal votes handed into polling stations What difference is being made? Voters understand the different ways in which they can cast their vote Voters are able to cast their vote using their preferred method Voters are able to cast their vote in secret at polling stations Barriers to voting are minimised How can we determine the success of our work? Evaluation of public awareness activities Analysis of feedback and complaints from eligible voters, staff, candidates and agents Analysis of available data relating to voters who have not been able to cast their vote (for example, due to not having appropriate Identification (at relevant polls)) No voters are prevented from casting their vote due to inaccessibility of polling station arrangements Outcome 3: Everybody who is eligible and wants to stand for election is able to do so and has confidence in the process What inputs are needed? RO understanding and delivery of role and responsibilities - management and oversight of the delivery of elections, including the range of statutory functions of the RO Planning - maintain plans for the delivery of elections, ensuring they are kept under review and actively used to support delivery Stakeholder engagement – establish and maintain strong relationships with key stakeholders Training – staff understand their responsibilities in relation to the processes to be followed for candidates seeking to stand for election What activities are being undertaken? Providing information to support anyone wishing to stand as a candidate in understanding what they need to do Ensuring accessibility and awareness of electoral processes Provision of information and guidance to parties, candidates and agents, including in relation to election spending rules Briefings offered to candidates & agents Gathering feedback from attendees to inform continuous improvement Administration of the nominations process Provision of informal checks Determination of nomination papers Close of nomination processes Ensuring accurate ballot papers Management of access to electoral processes to ensure transparency and enable scrutiny Receipt of notifications of appointment of polling, postal voting and counting agents Provision of information relating to polling stations, postal vote opening sessions and the count (layout plan, process documents, etc.) What information is needed to understand the impact of our activities? Providing information to support anyone wishing to stand as a candidate in understanding what they need to do Records of attendance at briefings Records of enquiries received from candidates and agents Evaluation of feedback from candidates and agents on the information/briefings provided to those wanting to stand for election Analysis of process queries from candidates and agents to support provision of relevant information Number of nomination papers rejected by the RO, by reason Administration of the nominations process Records of arrangements in place for candidates to have their nominations informally checked Timeliness and accuracy of publication of the statement of persons nominated Accuracy of the ballot paper Assessment of GDPR requirements and records of management of personal data received as part of the nominations process Management of access to electoral processes to ensure transparency and enable scrutiny Record of those entitled to access election processes Information provided to attendees What difference is being made? Candidates are aware of the process they need to follow to stand for election Nominations are accurately processed and everyone who is validly nominated is included on the ballot paper Candidates and appointed agents are aware of their entitlement to attend electoral processes and are able to carry out their scrutiny role effectively How can we determine the success of our work? No errors on the statement of persons nominated or ballot papers Analysis of feedback and complaints from candidates, agents or parties Outcome 4: Everyone can have confidence that the election process is well managed and in the accuracy of the results What inputs are needed? RO understanding and delivery of role and responsibilities - management and oversight of the delivery of elections, including the range of statutory functions of the RO Planning - maintain plans for the delivery of elections, ensuring they are kept under review and actively used to support delivery Stakeholder engagement – establish and maintain strong relationships and manage communications with key stakeholders Resources – identification and allocation of budget and staffing Training – identification and delivery of training to meet the needs of both permanent and temporary staff What activities are being undertaken? Postal vote opening Accurate processing of returned postal votes Verification of postal vote identifiers Managing the verification and count Development of venue layout and processes to ensure an accessible and transparent count Managing attendance at the verification and count Managing the verification and count processes Managing media liaison Managing the declaration of results Declarations are accurate and accessible Publication of results is timely and accurate Maintaining electoral integrity Ensuring the security of election materials Engagement with local SPOC Develop a fraud/integrity plan and work with the appropriate authorities to support the investigation of any allegations of electoral fraud/integrity issues What information is needed to understand the impact of our activities? Postal vote opening Audit trail of receipt and opening of postal ballot packs Arrangements for the secure storage of returned postal votes Number of postal vote rejections, by reason Postal vote opening venue layout information Records of those entitled to attend Managing the verification and count Evaluation of previous count venues and processes Assessment of access needs, with actions taken to address any issues Count venue layout information Audit trail of receipt and opening of ballot boxes Audit trails of count processes Number of rejected ballots for each contest, by reason Strategy for dealing with both proactive and reactive communication with the media Managing the declaration of results Processes in place to quality assure results Accurate declarations of results (in Wales, in both and Welsh) Audit trails of verification and count paperwork Statement of results (in Wales, in both and Welsh) and where they are published Maintaining electoral integrity Risk register showing security risks and associated mitigations Fraud/integrity plan, including risk assessments and mitigations Allegations of electoral fraud/integrity issues referred to the police What difference is being made? Voters have confidence their vote will be counted in the way they intended Candidates and agents have confidence in the accuracy of the result All those who have observed the election have confidence in the conduct of the election Voters can easily access the results of the election Voters have confidence their vote is secure How can we determine the success of our work? Elections delivered without legal challenge Analysis of feedback and complaints from candidates, agents and other observers Election results are accurate and readily available Analysis of police data relating to allegations of electoral fraud/integrity issues Draft updated performance standards for Electoral Registration Officers Performance standards for EROs 2022 Draft updated performance standards for Electoral Registration Officers Outcome 1: Electoral registers are as accurate and complete as possible, ensuring that everyone who is eligible and wants to vote is able to do so denotes updated text What inputs are needed? ERO understanding and delivery of role and responsibilities – management and oversight of delivery of the electoral registration service, including the statutory functions of the ERO, and stakeholder engagement Planning – maintaining a plan for registration throughout the year, ensuring it is kept under review and evaluation is undertaken, with lessons learnt fed back in, and a risk and issues register, identifying any risks to the effective delivery of your registration plan and corresponding mitigating actions Resources – identification and allocation of budget and staffing for electoral registration activities Training – identification and delivery of training to meet the needs of both permanent and temporary staff What activities are being undertaken? Identification of those not registered, including hard to reach groups Using available data and information sources, identify those not registered, including hard to reach groups Develop and maintain a public engagement strategy, ensuring planned activities are tailored to meet the needs of different groups of electors Undertaking year-round registration activity Maintain the property database Contact potential eligible electors, including carrying out work to target hard to reach groups Ensure those no longer entitled to be registered are identified and removed Develop and implement processes to identify and address potential integrity issues Manage special category electors Administering the canvass Using available data and information, identify the most appropriate method to canvass properties in your area Make arrangements to deliver the planned canvass activities Undertake the planned canvass activities Administering the voter card process Develop and maintain an engagement strategy for those less likely to hold a required form of ID on how to obtain a voter card* Process voter card applications* Manage production and distribution of (temporary) voter cards* What information is needed to understand the impact of our activities? Identification of those not registered, including hard to reach groups Analysis of the scope and usefulness of data and information Ward level analysis of the registration area Identification of priority areas to target registration activity Evaluation of communications channels and approaches, including cost / benefit analysis of previous activity, supporting development of engagement strategy and activities Undertaking year-round registration activity Number of properties with UPRN/as a percentage of properties Analysis of any issues reported with the allocation of properties to polling districts to reflect relevant electoral boundaries The accuracy and usability of data sources used Analysis of response rates by channel, to understand impact of different approaches Number of ITRs sent (by channel) Number of ITRs followed up Number of ITRs not responded to after the reminder and personal visit stages Number of electors whose identity has not been verified and have yet to provide documentary evidence by type e.g. ordinary electors, overseas electors, etc.* Number of registration applications received by type e.g. ordinary electors, overseas electors, etc.* Number of additions to the register by type e.g. ordinary electors, overseas electors, etc.* Number of reviews of registration and number of deletions as a result Number of deletions not as a result of a review, by type Number of registration applications referred to the police Number of renewals sent by elector type* Number of special category elector applications (both new and renewals) processed, from different elector groups (overseas, service etc.) Number of special category electors renewed by elector type* Administering the canvass The accuracy and usability of local data sources used Results of data matching (national and local) Number of households intended for each route Analysis of available communications channels (e-communications, telephone, mail, etc.), to inform contact with individual properties Number of households canvassed, by route and channel Number of communications sent, by route and channel Number of responses by route and channel Assessment of success of canvass communication channels used Number of canvassers recruited and trained Evaluation of canvasser performance Administering the voter card process* Identification of those less likely to hold a required form of ID, supporting targeting of activity*

Evaluation of communications channels and approaches, supporting development of engagement strategy and activities* Number of voter card applications received by channel* Number of voter card applications received and processed by type (i.e. temporary/permanent)* Number of voter card applications rejected by type* Number of voter cards issued by type* What difference is being made? The demographics of the registration area and the needs of groups of electors within it are understood, enabling services to be targeted and designed to meet the needs of residents Barriers to registration are minimised, enabling all eligible individuals, including those from different elector groups, to register Potential new electors are identified and are given every opportunity to register to vote Changes in the registration status of individuals are captured and applied to the register in a timely manner Elections are effectively supported by the register Voters without one of the required forms of ID are able to obtain a voter card to enable them to cast their vote in person* How can we determine the success of our work? Performance against the KPIs/objectives set out in your registration plans Evaluation of public engagement activities undertaken, including of changes made to the register as a result of the activity Changes in levels of registration within and across the registration area, both generally and within identified under-registered groups An assessment of levels of additions and deletions, during the canvass and throughout the year. A year-on-year analysis of additions and deletions Assessment of the numbers of eligible electors who tried to vote on polling day but were unable to do so as a result of not being registered to vote or who were unable to vote due to not having appropriate identification (at relevant polls)* Outcome 2: Absent voting is accessible, ensuring that everyone who is eligible and wants an absent vote is included on the relevant absent vote list *

denotes updated text What inputs are needed? ERO understanding and delivery of role and responsibilities – management and oversight of delivery of the absent voting function, including the statutory responsibilities of the ERO, and stakeholder engagement Planning – maintaining a plan throughout the year, including arrangements for managing the absent voting process, and a risk and issues register, identifying any risks to the effective delivery of your plan and corresponding mitigating actions. Resources – identification and allocation of budget and staffing for absent voting activities Training – identification and delivery of training to meet the needs of both permanent and temporary staff What activities are being undertaken? Supporting electors to engage with the absent voting process Develop and implement a communications plan to ensure that electors are aware of the absent vote options available to them Ensure that all electors can access the absent vote process Administering absent vote processes Process new applications Process requested changes to absent voting preferences Maintain absent vote records and lists Undertake postal vote refresh process* Develop and implement processes to identify and address potential integrity issues What information is needed to understand the impact of our activities? Supporting electors to engage with the absent voting process Evaluation of information made available to electors on the absent voting process to help them understand the options available to them Number of absent vote applications from different elector groups (overseas, service etc.), by type (postal or proxy) Number and type of complaints received about ability to access the absent vote process from different elector groups (ordinary, overseas, service etc.) Administering absent vote processes Number of absent vote applications received by channel* Number of absent vote applications received by type (postal or proxy) Number of absent vote applications rejected Number of absent vote confirmations sent Number of changes to voting arrangements processed Number of absent vote refresh notices sent, followed up and responses processed by type (e.g. ordinary elector, overseas elector, etc.)* Number of postal vote applications for postal votes to be redirected to one address Number of postal applications from one address Number of proxy applications from one address Number of emergency proxy applications by type Number of applications referred to the police for investigation What difference is being made? Electors are able to make an informed decision on what voting method is best for them Barriers to absent voting are minimised, enabling all eligible individuals, including those from different elector groups, to apply Changes to voting arrangements are captured and applied in a timely manner The integrity of absent voting records and lists is maintained How can we determine the success of our work? Performance against the KPIs/objectives set out in your plans Analysis of complaints and feedback received about ability to access the absent voting process Assessment of the numbers and types of errors in the absent voter lists Related content Report: How the 2017 UK general election was run Read our report about how the 2017 general election was run Report: The costs of delivering the June 2016 referendum on the UK's membership of the European Union Read our report about the costs of delivering the 2016 EU referendum 2017 electoral fraud data about electoral fraud in 2017 and view the data Draft guidance for Returning Officers: Assistance with voting for disabled voters (statutory consultation)

National estimates of accuracy and completeness | Electoral Commission Search National estimates of accuracy and completeness You are in the Accuracy and completeness of electoral registers section Home Our research Accuracy and completeness of electoral registers On this page Overview Breakdown by area First published: 2 September 2019 Last updated: 26 September 2019 Overview This chart shows the accuracy and completeness estimates for England, Scotland and Wales for both the parliamentary and local government registers published in December 2018. In England, the local government registers were found to be 89% accurate and the accuracy of the parliamentary registers also stood at 89%. The local government register was 83% complete, while the parliamentary register was slightly more complete, at 85%. In Wales, the accuracy of the registers was similar to Great Britain as a whole with the local government register 89% accurate and the parliamentary register 88% accurate. The completeness of the local government and parliamentary registers was a little lower than the Great Britain average (81% and 82% respectively). In Scotland parliamentary registers were 87% accurate and the local government registers were 86% accurate. Completeness was close to the Great Britain average at 83% for local government registers and 84% for the parliamentary registers. Breakdown by area England The results for England in December 2018 show that: Parliamentary registers were 85% complete and 89% accurate Local government registers were 83% complete and 89% accurate The findings lead to an estimate of between 7.0 to 8.1 million people in England who were eligible to be on the local government registers but were not correctly registered and an estimate of between 4.0 and 4.8 million inaccurate entries on the local government registers in December 2018. Completeness Region There is some variation in completeness by region, with completeness ranging from 76% in London to 91% in the North East. Local government register completeness by region, England, December 2015 and 2018 Region December 2015 December 2018 England 84% 83% North East 78% 91% North West 84% 85% Yorkshire and the Humber 82% 87% East Midlands 83% 83% West Midlands 88% 86% East of England 85% 79% London 81% 76% South East 87% 84% South West 84% 84% Urban/rural In England the local government registers in 2018 were: 84% complete in rural areas 83% complete in urban areas Length of residence Previous research into the registers has found a connection between home movement and completeness: as registration is residence-based, greater mobility is associated with lower levels of completeness, while the longer an individual has been resident at their property, the more likely they are to appear on the electoral register. As these figures demonstrate, this pattern continues in the local government registers for England, with completeness at: 36% among those who have lived at their address for up to a year 83% for those who have lived at their address for two to five years 90% for those resident between five and 10 years 88% for those living at their address for 10 to 16 years 92% for those resident for more than 16 years Tenure In England, homeowners (both those who own their home outright and those buying on a mortgage or shared ownership) are more likely to be registered than people in other types of tenure. Completeness was highest among those who own outright (91%) compared to those in households buying with a mortgage (85%), social renters (83%) and private renters (58%). Variations in completeness by tenure are closely linked to length of residence, with private renters much more likely to have lived at their address for a shorter period of time than those living in other tenures. Age Levels of completeness were found to vary by age group, with older groups more likely to be registered. This is a finding that has been consistent throughout our research. Completeness stands at 72% for those aged 18-34, while it is higher for those aged 35-54 (85%) and those aged 55+ (93%). Summary of completeness measures This table provides a summary of the level of completeness across all key measures and a number of other measures associated with completeness, such as socio-economic group and nationality. These are also compared to the figures for Great Britain as a whole. Summary of completeness measures, England and Great Britain, 2018

	England	Great Britain	Urban	Rural	84%	85%	Gender	Male	82%	83%
Female	83%	83%	Age 18-34	72%	71%	35-54	85%	86%	55+	93%	93%
Mortgage/shared ownership	91%	91%	Tenure	Own outright	91%	C1	84%	84%	C2	80%	80%
Rent-free/other	71%	69%	Socio-economic group	AB	86%	86%	DE	79%	80%	80%	80%
80% Adults in household	1	86%	86%	2	84%	84%	3 to 5	81%	81%	6+	79%
Length of residence	Up to 1 year	36%	36%	Between 1 year and 2 years	70%	71%	Between 2 and 5 years	83%	84%	Between 5 and 10 years	90%
years or more	88%	88%	16 years	90%	90%	Between 10 and 16 years	88%	88%	16 years	92%
Nationality	UK and Irish	85%	86%	EU	54%	54%	Commonwealth	62%	62%	92%

Accuracy This table shows the types of error found on the December 2018 local government registers. As for Great Britain overall, the most significant proportion of major errors - those which would prevent someone from voting, or incorrectly allow someone to vote – relate to entries that refer to individuals who no longer live at the property (10%). In England, 9% of entries contain minor errors, which would not prevent them from voting. This is the same proportion as in Great Britain as a whole.

Accuracy errors, England and Great Britain, 2018

	England	Great Britain
Major errors total	10.9%	11.2%
Major errors-(a)	10.1%	10.4%
No corresponding name taken at address
Major errors-(b)	0.5%	0.4%
First name and/or surname wrong on register	0.3%	0.3%
and/or surname missing on register	0.0%	0.0%
UK/Irish/Commonwealth marker present
Major errors- (c)	0.2%	0.2%
Name on survey corresponds to ineligible name on survey	0.2%	0.2%
Attainers- DOB missing or wrong	0.1%	0.1%
EU citizens marker missing	0.2%
Accurate with minor errors	8.9%	9.1%
First name and/or surname on register misspelled	1.3%	1.2%
First name/surname on register incomplete	0.5%	0.5%
Middle name missing from register	6.1%	6.4%
Middle name or initials misspelled or incomplete on register	0.0%	0.0%
Middle name or initial wrong on register	0.1%	0.1%
Person does not have a middle name but middle name on registers (respondents only)	1.3%	1.3%
Surname is/assumed to be previous surname	0.5%	0.5%
First/middle/surname in different order on register	0.1%	0.1%
DOB earlier on register for attainer	0.0%	0.0%
Scotland The results for Scotland in December 2018 show that: Parliamentary registers were 84% complete and 87% accurate Local government registers were 83% complete and 86% accurate The findings lead to an estimate of: between 630,000 and 890,000 people in Scotland who were eligible to be on the local government registers but were not correctly registered between 400,000 and 745,000 inaccurate entries on the local government registers in December 2018 Completeness Urban/rural In Scotland, the local government registers in 2018 were: 89% complete in rural areas 82% complete in urban areas Length of residence Previous research into the registers has found a connection between home movement and completeness. As registration is residence-based, greater mobility is associated with lower levels of completeness, while the longer an individual has been resident at their property, the more likely they are to appear on the electoral register. This chart shows that this pattern continues in the local government registers for Scotland, with completeness at: 32% among those who have lived at their address for up to a year 84% among those who have lived at their address for two to five years 91% for those who have lived at their address between five and 10 years 95% for those living at their address for 10 to 16 years 94% for those living at their address for more than 16 years Tenure In Scotland, homeowners are more likely to be registered than people in other types of tenure. Completeness was highest among those who own outright (95%), compared to those in households buying with a mortgage (87%), social renters (81%) and private renters (49%). Variations in completeness by tenure are closely linked to length of residence, with private renters much more likely to have lived at their address for a shorter period of time than those living in other tenures. Age Levels of completeness were found to vary by age group, with older groups more likely to be registered.

This is a finding that has been consistent throughout our research. Completeness stands at 68% for those aged 18-34 while it is higher for those aged 35-54 (87%) and those aged 55+ (92%). Summary of other completeness measures The table below provides a summary of the level of completeness across key measures, and a number of other measures associated with completeness, such as socio-economic group and nationality.

These are also compared to the figures for Great Britain as a whole. Summary of completeness measures, Scotland and Great Britain, 2018 Scotland Great Britain

Urban/rural	Urban	82%	83%	Rural	89%	85%	Gender	Male	85%	83%	Female	82%	83%	Age	18-34
68%	71%	35-54	87%	86%	55+	92%	93%	Tenure	Own outright	95%	91%	Mortgage/shared ownership	87%	86%	Social renter	81%	83%	Private renter	49%	58%	Rent-free/other	73%
69%	Socio-economic group AB	88%	86%	C1	85%	84%	C2	80%	80%	DE	78%	80%	Adults in household	1	79%	86%	2	84%	84%	3 to 5	85%	81%	6+ - 78%	Length of residence	Up to 1 year	32%	36%	Between 1 year and 2 years	65%	71%	Between 2 and 5 years	84%	84%	Between 5 and 10 years	91%	90%	Between 10 and 16 years	95%	88%	16 years or more	94%	92%
Nationality	UK and Irish	85%	86%	EU	58%	54%	Commonwealth	58%	62%	Accuracy	This table shows the types of error found on the December 2018 local government registers.

As for Great Britain, the most significant proportion of major errors which would prevent someone from voting, or incorrectly allow someone to vote, relate to entries that refer to individuals who no longer live at the property (13%). In Scotland 11% of entries contain minor errors which would not prevent someone from voting. This figure is close to that for Great Britain (9%). Accuracy errors, Scotland and Great Britain, 2018 Scotland Great Britain Major errors total 14.0% 11.2% Major errors-(a) 13.1% 10.4% No corresponding name taken at address Major errors-(b) First name and/or surname wrong on register 0.3% 0.4% First name and/or surname missing on register 0.0% 0.0% UK/Irish/Commonwealth marker present 0.4% 0.3% Major errors- (c) Name on survey corresponds to ineligible name on survey 0.1% 0.2% Attainers- DOB missing or wrong 0.2% 0.1% EU citizens marker missing 0.2% 0.2% Accurate with minor errors 11.2% 9.1% First name and/or surname on register misspelled 0.9% 1.2% First name/surname on register incomplete 0.3% 0.5% Middle name missing from register 9.3% 6.4% Middle name or initials misspelled or incomplete on register 0.0% 0.0% Middle name or initial wrong on register 0.0% 0.1% Person does not have a middle name but middle name on registers (respondents only) 1.3% 1.3% Surname is/assumed to be previous surname 0.5% 0.5% First/middle/surname in different order on register 0.0% 0.1% DOB earlier on register for attainer 0.0% 0.0% Wales The results for Wales in December 2018 show that: Parliamentary registers were 82% complete and 88% accurate Local government registers were 81% complete and 89% accurate The findings lead to an estimate of between 410,000 and 560,000 people in Wales who were eligible to be on the local government registers but were not correctly registered. There were an estimate of between 200,000 and 330,000 inaccurate entries on the local government registers in December 2018. Completeness Urban/rural In Wales, the local government registers in 2018 were: 82% complete in rural areas 81% complete in urban areas Length of residence Previous research into the registers has found a connection between home movement and completeness. As registration is residence-based, greater mobility is associated with lower levels of completeness, while the longer an individual has been resident at their property, the more likely they are to appear on the electoral register. This pattern continues in the local government registers for Wales, with completeness at: 30% among those who have lived at their address for up to a year 83% for those who have lived at their address for two to five years and between five and 10 years 88% for those who have lived at their address for 10 to 16 years 91% for those who have lived at their address for more than 16 years Tenure In Wales, homeowners are more likely to be registered than people in other types of tenure. Completeness was highest among those who own outright (91%) compared to those in households buying with a mortgage (78%), social renters (81%) and private renters (60%). Variations in completeness by tenure are closely linked to length of residence with private renters much more likely to have lived at their address for a shorter period of time than those living in other tenures. Age Levels of completeness were found to vary by age group, with older groups more likely to be registered. This is a finding that has been consistent throughout our research. Completeness stands at 67% for those aged 18-34 while it is higher for those aged 35-54 (84%) and those aged 55+ (95%). Summary of completeness measures This table summarises the level of completeness across key measures, and a number of other measures associated with completeness, such as socio-economic group and nationality. These are also compared to the figures for Great Britain as a whole. Summary of completeness measures, Wales and Great Britain, 2018 Wales Great Britain Urban/rural Urban 81% 83% Rural 82% 85% Gender Male 80% 83% Female 82% 83% Age 18-34 67% 71% 35-54 84% 86% 55+ 95% 93% Tenure Own outright 91% 91% Mortgage/shared ownership 78% 86% Social renter 81% 83% Private renter 60% 58% Rent-free/other 51% 69% Socio-economic group AB 87% 86% C1 82% 84% C2 82% 80% DE 76% 80% Adults in household 1 82% 86% 2 83% 84% 3 to 5 77% 81% 6+ - 78% Length of residence Up to 1 year 30% 36% Between 1 year and 2 years 68% 71% Between 2 and 5 years 83% 84% Between 5 and 10 years 83% 90% Between 10 and 16 years 88% 88% 16 years or more 91% 92% Nationality UK and Irish 82% 86% EU 57% 54% Commonwealth 59% 62% Accuracy The table below shows the types of error found on the December 2018 local government registers. As for Great Britain overall, the most significant proportion of major errors which would prevent someone from voting, or incorrectly allow someone to vote, relate to entries that refer to individuals who no longer live at the property (11%). In Wales, 10% of entries contain minor errors, which would not prevent someone from voting. Accuracy errors, Wales and Great Britain, 2018 Wales Great Britain Major errors total 11.7% 11.2% Major errors-(a) 10.8% 10.4% No corresponding name taken at address Major errors-(b) First name and/or surname wrong on register 0.3% 0.4% First name and/or surname missing on register 0.0% 0.0% UK/Irish/Commonwealth marker present 0.0% 0.3% Major errors- (c) Name on survey corresponds to ineligible name on survey 0.3% 0.2% Attainers- DOB missing or wrong 0.0% 0.1% EU citizens marker missing 0.3% 0.2% Accurate with minor errors 9.7% 9.1% First name and/or surname on register misspelled 0.8% 1.2% First name/surname on register incomplete 0.6% 0.5% Middle name missing from register 8.1% 6.4% Middle name or initials misspelled or incomplete on register 0.0% 0.0% Middle name or initial wrong on register 0.0% 0.1% Person does not have a middle name but middle name on registers (respondents only) 0.6% 1.3% Surname is/assumed to be previous surname 0.3% 0.5% First/middle/surname in different order on register 0.0% 0.1% DOB earlier on register for attainer 0.0% 0.0%

Performance analysis 2019/20: Goal one | Electoral Commission Search

Performance analysis 2019/20: Goal one You are in the Annual Report and Accounts 2019/20 section Home Our plans and priorities Annual Report and Accounts 2019/20 On this page Key achievements Performance measures First published: 30 June 2020 Last updated: 26 August 2020 Goal one To enable the continued delivery of free and fair elections and referendums, focusing on the needs of electors and addressing the changing environment to ensure every vote remains secure and accessible. This goal captures our role in overseeing the delivery of elections across all parts of the UK and focuses on three areas: delivering well-run electoral events, maximising and modernising electoral registration, and tackling electoral fraud. Key achievements To help deliver well-run electoral events, we : supported the elections in May 2019: local government, local Mayoral and combined authority Mayoral elections across parts of England, Northern Ireland local government elections, and European Parliamentary elections supported the UK Parliamentary general election in December 2019 worked with organisations supporting people with a disability to raise awareness of how to take part in elections and what support they can expect to receive worked with the National Police Chiefs Council, CPS and the College of Policing to provide new guidance for candidates and campaigners on recognising and reporting intimidation prepared for the scheduled, but then postponed, May 2020 elections: Mayor of London and London Assembly elections, local government elections, local Mayoral and combined authority Mayoral elections in parts of England, and Police and Crime Commissioner elections across England and Wales published guidance and resources, and provided support to electoral administrators, candidates and agents for the scheduled elections in May 2020 To help maximise and modernise electoral registration, we: supported the implementation of a reformed annual canvass in Great Britain, making better use of local and national data, including advising on proposals and producing new guidance for Electoral Registration Officers (EROs) and forms for the public carried out a consultation on new performance standards for EROs advised on proposals from the Northern Ireland Office and the Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland to run their electoral registration canvass, now expected to take place in 2021 To help tackle electoral fraud, we: worked with the police and local authorities to provide training and review integrity plans to help prevent electoral fraud published data on alleged cases of electoral fraud reported during 2019 worked with partners to run campaigns to raise awareness of electoral fraud, timed with elections in May and December 2019 Performance measures Measure Performance We publish 100% of guidance products relating to electoral registration on time with no substantive errors 100% Achieved We provide accurate advice to Returning Officers (ROs) and EROs within three working days of receipt of the request. (Target 100%) 99.7% Achieved (Within tolerance) Additions to electoral registers during our public awareness campaigns meet or exceed our targets (specific targets agreed ahead of each poll) 100% Achieved We review 100% of integrity plans from local authorities identified to be at a higher risk of fraud 100% Achieved We publish 100% of our reports to planned deadlines 60% 1 Achieved We comment on 100% of relevant legislation and policy proposals 100% Achieved Delivering well-run electoral events Since 2017, we have developed and continuously reviewed contingency plans so we would be ready to support elections called at short notice. We saw the benefits of this in 2019, when we worked quickly to support two UK-wide polls. Despite the tight timescales and pressures on those involved in running elections, our research shows voters thought all polls were well-run. We delivered public awareness campaigns ahead of each poll and provided guidance to electoral administrators, parties, candidates and campaigners, to help them fulfil their roles. In addition, we published financial information to help the public understand where parties got their money from and how they spent it. Two recall petitions took place in 2019, which we supported by providing guidance to those campaigning and by observing the administration of the process. We then reported on how the petitions were run, identifying practical ways to improve these in the future. Maximising and modernising electoral registration We have done a lot of work to support annual canvass reforms in Great Britain. The new process will give EROs access to robust national-level data about the resident population, to identify addresses where there is likely to have been a change in the people who are eligible to register to vote. This will allow EROs to focus their resources in areas of greatest need. Our support for these reforms included commenting on proposals; providing advice on the legislation; writing guidance to help electoral administrators understand their new responsibilities; and producing new forms for the public. These forms include versions for Wales, Scotland and England to reflect different franchises for elections in each country. Our input helped to ensure the proposals would make it easier for electoral administrators to run the canvass and for the public to respond to it. We see these reforms as an important step towards improving our electoral registration system and look forward to seeing outcomes from their first implementation in 2020. Our scrutiny of proposals from the Northern Ireland Office and Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland to run a canvass of electors – originally planned for 2020 but now scheduled to take place in 2021 – ensured plans would be workable and help to improve registration levels in Northern Ireland. This work is important as our most recent research found that one in four eligible electors in Northern Ireland were not registered correctly at their current address. Tackling electoral fraud We provided guidance and advice to support EROs, ROs and the police to deal with electoral fraud. In 2019, for the third year in a row, we worked with the City of London Police Economic Fraud Academy to host and contribute content to three training courses for police. We also jointly hosted the 15th Annual National SPOC (Single Point Of Contact) seminar in Birmingham with the National Police Chiefs' Council, supported SPOC seminars in Scotland and Wales, and provided dedicated election briefings for new SPOCs. Throughout the year, police forces across the UK sent us data about allegations of electoral fraud that they received and investigated. Every year we report on the number, type, and outcome of these allegations, to understand what has happened and how cases are resolved. For the early May and December polls in 2019, we worked in partnership with Crimestoppers and Cabinet Office to run our 'your vote is yours alone' campaign. This aims to help voters understand what constitutes electoral fraud and how to raise concerns. Our campaign contributed to more than 10,000 visits to the Crimestoppers website, where people could find out more information and report any concerns. Crimestoppers passed on 30 pieces of actionable information to the police. Report navigation links

Previous Next Annual Report and Accounts 2019/20 Performance analysis: Goal two 1. We published five reports, two of them a month late. This was because data collection and analysis for the European Parliamentary elections report took longer than expected, particularly to ensure we had data on EU citizens who could not vote. This had a knock-on impact on the recall petition report. ■ Back to content at footnote 1 Related content Annual Report and Accounts 2019/20 Read our annual report and accounts for 2019/20, including key figures about the year at a glance. Performance analysis 2019/20: Goal two This is goal two of the performance analysis section of our annual report and accounts Performance analysis 2019/20: Goal three This is goal three of the performance analysis section of our annual report and accounts

Performance analysis 2019/20: Goal four This is goal four of the performance analysis section of our annual report and accounts

Scottish Parliament Political Parties Panel Minutes: 29 September 2020 | Electoral Commission Search Scottish Parliament Political Parties

Panel Minutes: 29 September 2020 You are in the Party panels section Home How we make decisions Party panels On this page Who was at the meeting Minutes of the last meeting and matters arising Preparations for the Scottish Parliament Election 2021 Scottish Government The Electoral Commission Scottish Government update Scotland Office/Cabinet Office update Scottish Boundary Commissions update Royal Mail update EMB update The Electoral Commission update Dates of future meetings First published: 15 December 2020 Last updated: 16 December 2020 Meeting details Date: Tuesday 29 September 2020 (by video conference) Time: 11:00am Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting Rachel Palma Randle, Scottish Liberal Democrats (Chair) Gordon Dickson, Scottish Green Party John Hardy, Scottish Green Party Matt Edmonds, Scottish Conservative and Unionist Party Michael Sharpe, Scottish Labour Party Scott Martin, Scottish National Party Isabel Drummond-Murray, Scottish Boundary Commissions Penny Curtis, Scottish Government Maria McCann, Scottish Government James Newman, Scottish Government Iain Hockenhull, Scottish Government Chris Highcock, Electoral Management Board for Scotland Pete Wildman, Scottish Assessors Association (Chair of Electoral Registration Committee) Eleanor Tankard, Office of the Secretary State for Scotland Rachel Winham, Royal Mail Scott Forsyth, Royal Mail The Electoral Commission: Dame Susan Bruce, Electoral Commissioner, Scotland Alasdair Morgan, Electoral Commissioner Andy O'Neill, Head of Electoral Commission, Scotland Sarah Mackie, Manager, Electoral Commission, Scotland Martin McKeown, Senior Adviser, Elections & s, Scotland Catherine Heggie, Partnerships and Information Officer Mairaid McMahon, Manager, Electoral Commission, Northern Ireland Lindsey Hamilton, Business Support Officer (Minutes) Apologies Malcolm Burr, Convener Electoral Management Board for Scotland Paul Moat, Scottish Liberal Democrats Welcome and introductions Rachel Palma Randle (RPR) welcomed those present. Minutes of the last meeting and matters arising The minutes of the previous meeting held on 29 April were approved. On matters arising, Scott Martin (SM) confirmed that he had sent an email on the 80% cut-off for the e-Counting screens updating. It was confirmed that this and any other larger policy issues in relation to the e-Counting system would be brought back to the meeting at an appropriate time. Preparations for the Scottish Parliament Election 2021 The Panel received updates on preparations for the Scottish Parliamentary election in 2021. Scott Martin asked if the Electoral Commission had ever refused a request to give advice to governments. Andy O'Neill (AON) advised that the Commission had never refused such a request. Scottish Government Iain Hockenhull (IH) reported that the Scottish Government expected the Scottish Parliament election would go ahead on 6 May 2021. Ministers were working with representatives from political parties, Scottish Parliament officials, The Electoral Management Board (EMB) and the Electoral Commission on contingency plans for running the May 2021 polls in the context of Covid-19. (IH) advised that ongoing discussions had identified the need for further legislation this autumn to mitigate the effect of any postponement to the poll. Measures under consideration included: Modifying the provisions on dissolution and the date Parliament meets for the first time following the vote; Providing for the selection of the new Presiding Officer; Polling over multiple days (Thurs/Fri more desirable and to avoid bank holiday on Monday 3 May 2021); Providing the Presiding Officer with power to delay the poll by up to six months; Steps required to avoid Parliament not being able to sit; Moving the deadline for postal vote applications as massive increase in uptake was likely Scott Martin (SM) asked what changes would be made to the election expenses provisions given that they currently relied on the date of dissolution. (IH) replied that the aim was for it to be functionally the same. The Electoral Commission Andy O'Neill (AON) reminded the Panel that The Electoral Commission would produce relevant guidance for any changes made and understood this was required sooner rather than later. Martin McKeown (MMcK) advised that core guidance would start to roll out early to mid-October but would have to be updated in coming months to reflect future legislative provisions coming forward. There would likely be regular updates towards the end of the year. (SM) asked about the format of the Electoral Commission guidance, MMcK said he would check and later confirmed it would be in the existing .pdf format. Scott Edgar (SE) provided an overview of the research commissioned by the Electoral Commission in to public attitudes to holding elections in the context of COVID-19. The survey asked eligible voters in Scotland about their attitudes towards voting in the 2021 Scottish Parliament election. SE pointed out that the survey took place 3-7 August 2020 and reflected how people felt at that time. The findings of the survey, therefore, should be treated as an indicative snapshot of views, not a prediction of voter behaviour. Many of the views expressed may also be weakly held and subject to significant change depending on the wider context. However, the findings do highlight the potential implications of the impact of Covid-19 on resourcing and processes for the delivery of the 2021 Scottish Parliament elections if voters' attitudes remain unchanged ahead of the poll. The preferred method of casting a vote if an election were to take place at that time was at a polling place with appropriate hygiene measures. The survey also found that the preferred method of casting a vote if an election were to take place now was at a polling place with appropriate hygiene measures in place (54%). 38% said they would prefer to vote by post and 1% by proxy. A further 3% said they would prefer to vote another way. According to the Commission's own analysis, 20% of those who generally vote at a polling place said that if an election were to take place now they would prefer to vote by post, indicating a potential increase in the use of postal voting. These figures should not be taken as reliable predictions of behaviour in May 2021. However, for context, if this did happen it would mean approximately 350,000 who would have voted at a polling station opting to vote by post. (SM) commented it would be interesting to gauge postal voting uptake at the up-coming by-elections and compare the levels with those run under non-Covid-19 conditions. (AON) said the Electoral Commission was sending representatives to observe the up-coming by-elections so they could feed back centrally should there be any lessons to be learned or unusual patterns of applications for postal votes shared. Pete Wildman (PW) remarked that one Electoral Registration Officer (ERO) had reported an increase in applications for postal votes. Whilst the annual canvass was an initial indicator of trends, whole households had been seen to apply for postal votes. He advised the challenge would be if people left it late to apply; typically half the applications came in six months and the final half in the last month. Sarah Mackie (SMA) outlined the Electoral Commission's campaign targeted at all foreign nationals with leave to remain who had been enfranchised by the Scottish Parliament from 3 August 2020. They had worked in partnership with agencies such as the Refugee Council to get information out and encourage voter registration. She advised the paid advertisement would run for a further month and would be used in the run up to the 2021 Scottish Parliament election. The branding 'Welcome to your vote' also works for 16 plus year olds. The voter registration campaign was scheduled to begin 3-4 weeks before the electoral registration deadline and would target under registered groups. (SMA) introduced Catherine Heggie (CH), the Electoral Commission's Partnerships and Information Officer who is tasked with leading on our work to develop partnerships with under-registered groups and those who face particular barriers to voting, including disabled people. Due to the complexity of messages next year (SMa) advised that communications around Covid-19 would start earlier for certain audiences (e.g. those in care homes, people shielding and the vulnerable) to give warning about shifting their route of voting and avoid a last minute rush. This would be rolled out just as soon as information was settled by Government, parties and administrators. (SM) asked if there were plans for holding hustings in prisons. (SMa) replied that was a matter for the Scottish Prison Service and other groups advocating for prisoners. The Commission would work with the Scottish Prison Service Education Service to educate eligible prisoners about voting, however, the matter of hustings was out with the Electoral Commission remit. Maria McCann (MMcC) said preparation of the Scottish Parliament (Elections etc.) Amendment (No.2) Order 2020, for next May's Scottish Parliament election was at an advanced stage and was expected to be laid before the Scottish Parliament in late October 2020. She expressed gratitude for the comments received from panel members. (IH) said most sections of the Scottish Elections (Reform) Act 2020 would be commenced on 1 October 2020 including the switch to five year terms as well as the provisions relevant to the Electoral Commission. (SM) enquired about the imprints provisions in the draft Amendment Order. (MMcK) confirmed that as currently drafted, the Order provided for a minimum font size of 11 point size as measured in Times New Roman with 3mms between each line space. (SM) thought that was not a good final policy and felt that a better solution would have been legibility backed with guidance rather than something as strict as a specific point size, which does not work particularly with survey cards. (MMcC) said they had received a wide range of opinions on this which were listened to and which she would share soon. Guidance Development – (MMcK) advised that the Electoral Commission's core guidance for the Scottish Parliament election 2021 had two sides; electoral administration and candidates and agents. He confirmed again that core guidance would start rolling out in October and the Candidates and Agents part would cover the usual areas related to qualifications, standing as a candidate, spending and donations and post-election requirements. He said that in addition to the core guidance The Commission would be issuing supplementary guidance to cover Covid-19 related advice which electoral administrators might wish to factor into their planning. Chris Highcock (CH) said much of the Electoral Commission guidance was working around some Electoral Management Board guidance for this year's by-elections; safe nominations, conducting the postal vote opening process safely and to deliver a count which preserved the safety of stakeholders whilst preserving the transparency of the processes. Scottish Government update (MMcC) referred the Panel to the tabled update and invited questions. The Panel requested a list of up-dated by-elections and it was agreed the Electoral Commission would circulate the EMB web page link. Scotland Office/Cabinet Office update Eleanor Tankard (ET) spoke to a previously circulated written update. She highlighted the following areas: the current advert for a new member of the Boundary Commission for Scotland; the Parliamentary Constituencies Bill had completed House of Commons stages on 14 July and the Lords Grand Committee on 15 September. The Government amendment on using electoral data from March 2020 rather than December 2020 for the next boundary review, due to the potential impact of Covid-19 on the canvass; the Government-backed amendment to create an additional protected constituency for Ynys Mon (Anglesey) were both successfully passed during Commons stages. Scottish Boundary Commissions update Isabel Drummond-Murray (ID-M) advised that she was closely following the Parliamentary Constituencies Bill for the next review of the Westminster constituencies and thought the data might be published in October but said the Bill needed to complete its passage. She commented that it would be a good time for a new Commissioner to start as it would be at the beginning of the next review. In relation to Local Government Boundary Commission work, she advised that the Islands review would be finished as soon as possible and this covered Argyll and Bute, North Ayrshire and Highland council areas. The Commissioners would consider their responses before the consultation in early November and remarked that this was running behind due to Covid-19. She said a commitment had been made to submit to the Scottish Government next May recommendations for all six council areas.

The Scottish Elections (Reform) Bill had a number of potential implications for the LGBCS including a name change to Boundaries Scotland and the introduction of the use of two and five member wards next spring. The draft Scottish Parliament Order to amend Cardowan has been laid before the Scottish Parliament. Royal Mail update Rachel Winham (RW), through Lindsey Hamilton, provided an update on the following areas:

Next week we will start looking at the Candidates' Mail SLA with the Scottish Government Any candidate or political party wishing to submit artwork for pre-checking of Candidates' Mail is welcome to do so at any time At the request of Scotland election bodies we are looking at a contingency plan for the return of postal voting. Over the coming months they would be ramping up their service and working with candidates and parties and Local Authorities and their print partners to develop individual mailing plans. They were also interested to know how they could provide better support in the May 2021 election and any further contingency planning they were required to be party to. EMB update Chris Highcock (CH) informed the Panel of their preparations for the 13 by elections which had either been postponed from earlier dates, having been reassessed on risk or subsequently arisen. He said a number of Returning Officers were reassessing proposed dates and could be subject to further postponement. He mentioned the supplementary guidance for delivering safe events and advised that this was being maintained as draft guidance to be fed into planning for the Scottish Parliament election. As all Returning Officers are asked to review their polling places in general, issues around capacity and physical distancing were under consideration as was implementation of regular cleaning throughout the day. Policy ideas being considered were a two day poll which would allow the volume of electors to spread over two different days; early voting which could cope with fewer polling places but spread over a number of days. The usual pinch points which occurred around 8 am and 5:30 to 7.30pm might not be so relevant if the majority of people would be working at home. Pete Wildman (PW) reported the annual canvass had started slightly later due to the franchise change and the majority of people had received a single communication. He said that the practice of house to house enquiry may or may not happen with each ERO deciding on that but there was the opportunity to delay publication of the electoral register until 1 February 2021 if the unexpected happened. There would be a review at the end to assess what had and had not worked. A flyer highlighting the change to the franchise for foreign nationals had been included with the canvass and we could see how many had actually applied once the register was published. He said EROs would be writing to prisoners inviting them to register. (SM) remarked that prison registers by their nature were very fluid and asked if there would be more regular correspondence coming out from prisons. (PW) replied that updates would be received from prisons every three months and lessons would be learned as the process progressed. He reminded the panel that prisoners are registered at their home addresses. The Electoral Commission update Sarah Mackie (SMA) advised the Panel that the Electoral Commission welcomed the Commission on Standards in Public Life review of their regulation of elections which had taken place over the summer and said it was right the work of the Commission was reviewed. The Public Administration and Constitutional Affairs Committee (PACAC) has also announced an enquiry into the work of The Electoral Commission. (SMa) advised that the consultation was due to close on 16 November. Again The Commission welcomed the scrutiny of their work. (SMa) Late last week the Electoral Commission produced and circulated a list of objectives to support the delivery of successful elections a week or two ago. She invited feedback on the list of objectives. The Commission's Annual Report and Accounts 2019-20 had been laid in the Scottish Parliament. The Commission was now accountable to The Scottish Parliament and would shortly lay estimates for 2021/22 before the Scottish Parliament for the costs in delivery of their devolved functions. The Commission looked forward to reporting on a formal basis from now on. (MMcK) advised that the Commission welcomed the two SSIs published by the Scottish Government in the last week which introduced controls around online campaigning at Scottish Parliament and Scottish Council elections by requiring an imprint to be included on all online campaign material and publications. The new provisions would be reflected in Commission guidance. (MMcK) also advised on the UK Government consultation on imprints which runs until 4 November 2020. The Commission will await the outcome of that consultation. (SM) expressed his surprise at not being told about these instruments in advance. The power had been on the statute book for 20 years, partly because the issue had always been in the detail – particularly twitter character restrictions. He was only able to see them now by accessing the UK legislation database online during the meeting. The Cabinet Office consultation had identified a number of issues which, on a brief reading of the two SSIs, did not appear to be addressed and which would have been if subject to proper discussion and consultation. (MMcC) assured (SM) that she would take back the fact that there had been no prior discussion about the SSIs with parties. (RPR) suggested that the issue be dealt with separately from the meeting by email. (MMcK) thanked those who had responded to the Electoral Commission's consultation on draft Codes of Practice on Spending by Candidates and Parties at the Scottish Parliament election. The Commission was considering the feedback received and draft Codes would be submitted to Scottish Ministers for approval and laying before the Scottish Parliament in due course. It was hoped the Codes would be in place in early January 2021 but that was dependent upon the progress of the Codes through Parliament. The Panel would be updated on progress in due course. (MMcK) advised the Panel that the Electoral Commission had recently published guidance regarding online party conferences. He agreed to circulate a link to the document to Panel members. Dates of future meetings 2020 Tuesday 24 November 2020 10:30am 2021 Thursday 21 January 10:30am Thursday 10 March 10:30am Related content Party registration decisions View our decisions on political party names, descriptions and emblems View current applications View the political party names, descriptions and emblems which we are currently considering as part of our assessment process Donations and loans Find out about donations and loans to a political party, individual or other organisation Registers of unincorporated associations Download and view the registers of unincorporated associations

Board minutes: 21 July 2021 | Electoral Commission Search

Board minutes: 21 July 2021 You are in the Electoral Commission Board section

Home How we make decisions Electoral Commission Board On this page Who was at the meeting Apologies and welcomes Declarations of interest Minutes of the previous Board meeting (EC 49/21) Reporting on the May 2021 polls (EC 50/21) Corporate Plan 2022/23 – 2026/27 (EC 51/21) Elections Bill Update (EC 52/21) Modernising Voting research (EC 53/21) Public awareness plans for scheduled elections in May 2022 (EC 54/21)

Governance Matter – Audit and Risk Committee (ARC) membership (EC 55/21) Commission Board Action Tracker (EC 56/21) Forward Plan of Board business (EC 57/21) First published: 14 October 2021 Last updated: 14 October 2021 Meeting summary Date:

Wednesday 21 July 2021 Time: 9:30am to 12:45pm Location: By video conference Date of next scheduled meeting: Wednesday 22 September 2021 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting John Pullinger, Chair Rob Vincent Alex Attwood Sarah Chambers Elan Closs Stephens Stephen Gilbert Alasdair Morgan Joan Walley In attendance: Bob Posner, Chief Executive Craig Westwood, Director, Communications, Policy and Research Louise Edwards, Director, Regulation Ailsa Irvine, Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance Kieran Rix, Director, Finance and Corporate Services Binnie Goh, General Counsel Zena Khan, Senior Advisor, Governance Hannah Kavanagh, Legal Officer (for all items) Alicia Diaz, Legal and Governance Officer (for all items) Phil Thompson, Head of Research (for items 4 and 7) Rhidian Thomas, Head, Electoral Commission, Wales (for item 4) Sarah Mackie, Manager, Electoral Commission, Scotland (for item 4) Katy Knock, Policy Manager (for items 4, 6 and 7) Tom Hawthorn Head, Policy (for items 5, 7 and CSPL item) David Bailey, Head, Strategic Planning and Performance (for item 5) Niki Nixon, Head, External Communications (for items 6 and 7) Laura Mcleod, Public Affairs Manager (for item 6) Mark Williams, Policy Manager (for item 6) Kate Engles, Policy Manager (for items 6 and CSPL item) Orla Hennessey, Media Relations and Public Information Manager (for item 7) Andreea Ghita, Senior Communications Officer (for item 7) Susan Crown, Head, Campaigns and Corporate Identity (for item 8) Dan Adamson, Head, Monitoring and Enforcement (for CSPL item) Apologies and welcomes Apologies were received from Commissioner Sue Bruce. The Board noted that Commissioner Sarah Chambers' appointment to the Commission Board for a second term ending in 2026 had been confirmed. The Board further noted that the appointment of the new Commissioner for Northern Ireland, Katy Radford has now been approved by the House of Commons and subject to timely receipt of the Royal Warrant will start with the Commission on 1

September 2021. Declarations of interest Commissioner Joan Walley declared the end of her term of office as Chair of Aldersgate Group ending 19 July 2021. The Board noted that the Commissioners Register of interests would be updated and this reflected on the Commission's external website in line with the Commissioners Code of Conduct.

Minutes of the previous Board meeting (EC 49/21) Resolved: That the minutes of the Commission Board meeting on 23 June 2021 be agreed. Reporting on the May 2021 polls (EC 50/21) The Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance introduced the report providing information gathered and analysed from voters, campaigners and electoral administrators which forms an important part of our evidence base for reporting on the polls, which will be published in September 2021. The Board discussed reviewing comparable data trends on areas such as turnout and voter confidence. The Board also discussed the inclusion of narrative in the reporting to provide context around voting / elections in the context of COVID. The Board noted that we are continuing to engage at a UK-wide level, through national and regional forums and individually with local authority chief executives and election teams, to enhance the evidence base before the reports are finalised. Resolved: That the Board noted the update on emerging findings from the post May 2021 elections research and the key themes for reporting on the polls, to be published in September 2021. Corporate Plan 2022/23 – 2026/27 (EC 51/21) The Chief Executive introduced the draft Corporate Plan 2022/23 – 2026/27 building on the previous discussions on financial strategy at the June meeting. The Board welcomed how the plan was developing and agreed to move forward from previous discussions, with offers of further review of the developing parts of the draft Plan from some Commissioners. Resolved: That the Board noted the draft Corporate Plan 2022/23 – 2026/27 subject to further planned work. Elections Bill Update (EC 52/21) The Director, Communications, Policy and Research introduced the report, providing an overview of the key points and updates since they last met in June and further to the Bill's publication on 5 July 2021. The Board discussed elements of the key provisions, looking at the impact and evidence supporting the Commission's position. The Board welcomed the update and look forward to further updates as work streams develop. Resolved: That the Board noted the update on the Bill and actions arising. Modernising Voting research (EC 53/21) The Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance introduced the report providing the Board with a summary of the key research findings on voters' attitudes to voting and setting out proposed next steps for the project on the feasibility of introducing reforms to the current voting process. Resolved: That the Board noted the update on the research findings and agreed initial next steps on the project. Public awareness plans for scheduled elections in May 2022 (EC 54/21) The Director, Communications, Policy and Research introduced the report providing information on the Commission's plans to deliver its function of providing public information ahead of the next scheduled set of elections across the UK. Resolved: That the Board agreed the plans and budget for the voter registration campaign, identified issues and/or risks that should be taken into account. Governance Matter – Audit and Risk Committee (ARC) membership (EC 55/21) The General Counsel introduced the report providing an update to the membership changes of the Audit and Risk Committee. The Board acknowledged Alasdair Morgan's sound service on the ARC. Resolved: That the Board agreed the appointment of Stephen Gilbert onto the ARC for a three year term from 1 October 2021. Resolved: That the Board agreed the renewal of the Independent Advisor Paul Redfern onto the ARC for a second three year term from 1 November 2021. Commission Board Action Tracker (EC 56/21) Resolved: That the Board noted the progress against actions requested by the Board. Forward Plan of Board business (EC 57/21) Commissioners discussed items of business for future meetings. These would be reflected in the Forward Plan of Board business at the September meeting. Resolved: That the Board reviewed and noted the Forward Plan of Board business scheduling further topics for the next few meetings. At this point the Board concluded their business and this was followed by an informal briefing session on CSPL report recommendations. The Board received a presentation on the recommendations made by the Committee on Standards in Public Life in its report on the regulation on electoral finance law, with initial analysis, led by the Director, Regulation. The Board noted the CSPL report recommendations and thanked the Director, Regulation and the teams.

You are in the How we make decisions section Home How we make decisions Scottish Parliament Political Parties Panel meeting minutes: 9 November 2022 Northern Ireland Assembly Parties' Panel: 7 June 2022 On this page Parliamentary Parties Panel

Northern Ireland Assembly Parties Panel Scottish Parliament Parties Panel Wales Assembly Parties Panel First published: 11 June 2019 Last updated: 6 December 2022

About our party panels We have four party panels, which represent the different areas of the UK. These panels give political parties the chance to tell us about any issues that are affecting them. Each of the panels usually meet four times a year, but they can meet more or less often if they need to.

Parliamentary Parties Panel has a representative from each of the parliamentary political parties that have two or more sitting MPs. Currently, there are representatives from: the Conservative and Unionist Party the Labour Party the Scottish National Party the Liberal Democrats the Democratic Unionist Party the Social Democratic and Labour Party Plaid Cymru the Alba Party Meeting minutes Read the full minutes of the: 6 June 2023 meeting 7 February 2023 meeting 6 December 2022 meeting

6 September 2022 meeting Previous Parliamentary Parties Panel meeting minutes 7 June 2022 meeting 1 February 2022 meeting

7 December 2021 meeting 7 September 2021 meeting 1 June 2021 meeting 2 February 2021 meeting

1 December 2020 meeting 1 September 2020 meeting 2 June 2020 meeting 3 February 2020 meeting

3 September 2019 meeting 4 June 2019 meeting 21 February 2019 meeting 4 December 2018 meeting

4 September 2018 meeting 5 June 2018 meeting 20 February 2018 meeting 5 December 2017 meeting 4 July 2017 meeting

6 December 2016 meeting 6 September 2016 meeting 23 February 2016 meeting 1 December 2015 meeting 1 September 2015 meeting

2 June 2015 meeting 3 March 2015 meeting Northern Ireland Assembly Parties Panel The Northern Ireland Assembly Parties Panel has a representative from the political parties that make up the Northern Ireland Assembly. Currently, there are representatives from: Sinn Féin the Social Democratic and Labour Party the Democratic Unionist Party the Ulster Unionist Party Alliance the Traditional Unionist Voice Party Meeting minutes Read the full minutes of the: 28 March 2023 meeting

25 January 2023 meeting 7 June 2022 meeting 8 March 2022 meeting 18 January 2022 meeting

21 October 2021 meeting 27 April 2021 meeting 26 January 2021 meeting 6 October 2020 meeting

28 January 2020 meeting 1 October 2019 meeting 11 June 2019 meeting 29 January 2019 meeting Scottish Parliament Parties Panel The Scottish

Parliament Parties Panel has a representative from the political parties that make up the Scottish Parliament. Currently, there are representatives from: Scottish

National Party Scottish Labour Party Scottish Liberal Democrats Scottish Green Party

Scottish Conservative Party Meeting minutes Read the full minutes of the: 9 November 2022

16 May 2022 meeting 8 March 2022 meeting 20 January 2022 meeting 10 November 2021 meeting

15 September 2021 meeting 19 May 2021 meeting 4 March 2021 meeting 21 January 2021 meeting 24 November 2020 meeting

29 September 2020 meeting 29 April 2020 meeting 22 January 2020 meeting 7 June 2019 meeting

23 October 2018 meeting Welsh Parliament Parties Panel The Welsh Parliament Parties panel has a representative from each of the Parliament's political parties that have two or more sitting Members of Welsh

Parliament. Currently, there are representatives from: Welsh Labour Plaid Cymru Welsh

Conservatives Welsh Lib Dems Meeting minutes Read the full minutes of the: 18 June 2018 meeting

29 March 2018 meeting

Corporate Plan for Wales 2022/23 to 2026/27 | Electoral Commission Search

Corporate Plan for Wales 2022/23 to 2026/27 You are in the Our plans and priorities section Home Our plans and priorities Contents 1. The electoral system in Wales Section 1 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan for Wales 2. The Electoral Commission in Wales Section 2 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan for Wales 3. Putting voters first in Wales Section 3 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan for Wales 4. Supporting and securing campaigner compliance with the law in Wales Section 4 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan for Wales 5. Supporting local electoral services delivery and resilience in Wales Section 5 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan for Wales 6. Making sure electoral law is fair and effective in Wales Section 6 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan 7. A modern and sustainable electoral system in Wales Section 7 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan for Wales 8. Underpinning this work in Wales Section 8 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan for Wales 9. Managing our costs in Wales Section 9 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan for Wales 10. Measuring our performance in Wales Section 10 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan for Wales 11. Managing risks and opportunities in Wales Section 11 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan for Wales Foreword This five-year Corporate Plan has been prepared and is submitted pursuant to paragraph 16B of Schedule 1 to the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000. It covers the Electoral Commission's activities in Wales for the period 2022/23 to 2026/27, and replaces and develops our interim plan put in place after the December 2019 UK general election. The Electoral Commission works independent from governments to promote public confidence in the electoral system, ensuring the integrity of elections and the legitimacy of their results. We aim to deliver our responsibilities impartially, ensuring independence of thinking and decision making that can be trusted. We have UK wide responsibilities, are accountable to the UK Parliament, the Senedd and the Scottish Parliament, and our work is directed to meeting the needs of each of the four parts of the UK. Our statutory responsibilities are integral to the electoral system – whether regulating political finance laws; providing oversight, guidance, or support on the delivery of elections; supporting voters to engage with the democratic process with confidence; or providing evidence and insights to inform future improvement. Working with others, we constantly strive to improve the electoral system for the benefit of voters, campaigners and electoral administrators. Elections in both Wales and the UK as a whole are well-run. Our survey work shows very high levels of public satisfaction in the processes in place for voters to register and cast their votes. We also have one of the most transparent systems of political finance in the world. However, there are pressures on the whole electoral system which need our attention. We will continue to seek to remove barriers that deter people from registering or casting their vote. Alongside our ongoing activities to encourage voter registration and protect against electoral fraud, we will work to retain voter confidence in political campaigning as it evolves. We will support parties and campaigners to comply with the law, while continuing to ensure political finance is transparent. We will support local authorities to meet the significant economic, social and environmental challenges they face in delivering well-run electoral services. We will also support electoral administrators to adapt to the increasingly diverse approach to the way elections are delivered, brought about by devolution and the changing needs of voters. During the period of this plan, we will work with others to secure changes in the law and in the operation of the electoral system that will ensure it is resilient to changes in society. Critical to this will be taking on board advances in digital technology, seeking sustainable solutions and improving the coherence and efficiency of how organisations involved in the electoral system work together. Underpinning the plan is the requirement to provide value for money and maintain a well-run organisation. The plan incorporates a renewed focus on equality, diversity and inclusion, and is designed to encourage staff engagement, development of skills and use of the technology required to support effective ways of working and continuous learning and improvement. We look forward to working constructively with the Welsh Government, Senedd, other UK governments and parliaments, parties and campaigners, electoral administrators and other interested groups to maintain voter confidence in our electoral system. Download the corporate plan Corporate plan for Wales 2022/23 to 2026/27

Draft Disability Action Plan: A Consultation | Electoral Commission Search
Draft Disability Action Plan: A Consultation You are in the Our consultations section Home Our consultations On this page Introduction Action measures Action plan Arrangements for consultation and publication Consultee list Feedback form First published: 13 January 2021 Last updated: 15 April 2021 Responding to this consultation Thank you for your interest in our draft Disability Action Plan, on which consultation has recently closed. We are currently considering the responses and will be publishing the final version in due course. If you need any further information on any aspect, please email us at infonorthernireland@electoralcommission.org.uk or call on 028 9089 4020 to speak to one of our team Introduction Under Section 49A of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 (DDA 1995) (as amended by Article 5 of the Disability Discrimination (Northern Ireland) Order 2006), the Electoral Commission is required when carrying out its functions to have due regard to the need to: promote positive attitudes towards disabled people; and encourage participation by disabled people in public life ('the disability duties'). Under Section 49B of the DDA 1995, the Electoral Commission is also required to submit to the Equality Commission a disability action plan showing how it proposes to fulfil these duties in relation to its functions. As Head of the Electoral Commission, Northern Ireland, I can confirm that we are committed to implementing effectively the disability duties and this disability action plan. We will allocate the necessary resources (in terms of people, time and money) in order to implement effectively this plan and, where appropriate, build objectives and targets relating to the disability duties into corporate and annual operating plans. We will also put appropriate internal arrangements in place to ensure that the disability duties are complied with and this disability action plan effectively implemented. We will ensure the effective communication of the plan to staff and to providing all necessary training and guidance for staff on the disability duties and the implementation of the plan. Responsibility for implementing, reviewing and evaluating this disability action plan and the point of contact within the Electoral Commission will be: Name: Mairaid McMahon Title: Manager, Electoral Commission Northern Ireland Address: Ground floor, 4 Cromac Place, The Gasworks, Belfast, BT7 2JB Telephone number: 028 9089 4029 Email: mmcMahon@electoralcommission.org.uk If you require this plan in an alternative format (such as in large print, in Braille, on audio cassette, easy read or on computer disc) and/or language, please contact the above person to discuss your requirements. We confirm our commitment to submitting an annual progress report on the implementation of this plan to the Equality Commission and carrying out a five year review of this plan, or plans submitted to the Equality Commission over the five year review period. A copy of this plan, our annual progress to the Equality Commission and our five year review of this plan will be published in the near future. Functions Outlined below are the range of functions of the Electoral Commission. . Our vision is to be a world-class public sector organisation – innovative, delivering great value and getting right what matters most to voters and legislators. We plan to achieve this vision through a five year work programme with four goals: To enable the continued delivery of free and fair elections and referendums, focusing on the needs of electors and addressing the changing environment to ensure every vote remains secure and accessible To ensure an increasingly trusted and transparent system of regulation in political finance, overseeing compliance, promoting understanding amongst those regulated and proactively pursuing breaches To be an independent and respected centre of expertise, using knowledge and insight to further the transparency, fairness and efficiency of our democratic system, and help adapt it to the modern, digital age To provide value for money, making best use of our resources and expertise to deliver services that are attuned to what matters most to voters. This goal underpins and supports all of our work. Public life positions The range of public life positions which the Electoral Commission has responsibility for is as follows. Together our ten Electoral Commissioners constitute the Board of the Commission and ensure that the Commission discharges its functions. One of these Commissioners is the Chair of the Commission, and one is appointed specifically as a lead Commissioner for Northern Ireland. The Commissioners are appointed by Royal Warrant to exercise the functions of the Commission. The Commissioners are independent, non-partisan and accountable directly to Parliament. Action measures Outlined below are the measures which we propose to take over the three year period of this disability action plan, together with performance indicators or targets. The actions outlined below are designed both to promote positive attitudes towards disabled people and to encourage their participation in public life. During the lifetime of this plan, there are several key activities and events that we will use to structure our activities:

Modernising Voting research: this UK-wide study will explore views around what people think about the current way they can cast their vote, what is important to people when they vote and what would improve their voting experience. This study will include identifying any findings on the experiences of disabled people. We will use the findings to help us to identify any improvements to processes within the current framework as well as to inform any recommendations for changes to the system.

Northern Ireland Canvass 2021: this exercise, carried out by the Electoral Office for Northern Ireland, will form the basis of a new electoral register, by canvassing households across Northern Ireland to ensure as many people as are eligible are registered accurately. We will run a Northern Ireland-wide public awareness campaign to encourage people to sign up to the electoral register. Accuracy and Completeness research: after the electoral canvass is complete, we will undertake research to assess both the accuracy and completeness of the new register. In this context, accuracy is a measure of the number of major and minor errors in the register, while completeness considers the percentage of people who are eligible to be on the register who are actually registered.

Northern Ireland Assembly election 2022: we will run a Northern Ireland wide public awareness campaign to encourage people to register to vote and to provide them with the information they need to be able to cast their vote. We will publish a set of digital learning resources to promote the political literacy amongst young people in Northern Ireland. These resources will increase understanding of the provisions in place to ensure disabled people are able to cast their vote. The resources will also include guidance for educators to support the delivery of sessions in formal and informal educational settings. We will also conduct research and analysis to assess levels of participation amongst varying demographics, including disabled people.

Northern Ireland Local Government elections 2023: we will run a Northern Ireland wide public awareness campaign to encourage people to register to vote and to provide them with the information they need to be able to cast their vote. Our digital learning resources will provide information on the provisions in place to ensure disabled people are able to cast their vote. We will also conduct research and analysis to assess levels of participation amongst varying demographics, including disabled people. We will also use the findings of previous and forthcoming post-election research, as well as reports such as Elections for everyone , to inform our work on engaging with representative groups in Northern Ireland, to identify any specific barriers or issues that exist in achieving higher levels of participation in elections. This will form the basis of our engagement with the Electoral Office for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Assembly Parties' Panel as outlined below. Underpinning this will be our ongoing work to ensure Commissioners and staff across the organisation are aware of their responsibilities under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995, and that our communications and engagement work is designed to both enable access and promote positive attitudes towards disabled people. We have brought in an interim consultant ahead of appointing to a permanent role in spring 2021; their specific responsibilities will include the provision of advice and expertise to management to ensure organisational compliance with all equality legislation, as well as the incorporation of this Plan within the priorities for Equality, Diversity and Inclusion. Action plan Measures to promote positive attitudes towards disabled people and encourage the participation of disabled people in public life Part 1: commencing 2021 Measure Timescale Performance indicator/target Build objectives and targets relating to the disability duties into workplans and annual operating plans, whilst ensuring the corporate planning process is informed by adherence to all relevant equality duties. 2021 and ongoing Relevant plans include objectives and targets that will enable the disability action plan priorities to be addressed Identify opportunities to portray positive images of disabled people, in both internal and external communications, as well as ensuring all communications are accessible 2021 Positive images of disabled people used in both internal and external communications Identify a disability champion and develop a description for the role, at a senior level, to communicate on its importance and drive organisational engagement. The Champion will play a key role in ensuring that the EDI Officer provides reports on progress against the implementation of the DAP at 6-monthly intervals to the Senior Leadership Group (SLG). 2021 and ongoing Disability Champion appointed, to sit on Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Group Skynet posts to inform and engage with staff across the organisation Bi-annual reports to ET Ensure all staff and office holders aware of the Disability Duties and the public authority's DAP. Undertake this by: Including information in induction of new staff/office holders, at staff/office holders training sessions Alerting staff/office holders to information on the internet and/or intranet, articles in staff and sectoral magazines and newsletters. Where possible, we will include people who have lived experience of a range of disabilities in training and awareness raising activities. 2021 and ongoing Induction and training programmes include reference to Disability Duties in Northern Ireland and an overview of the DAP Recruitment and selection training - Ensure all those involved in recruitment and selection panels have been trained in disability awareness and disability equality legislation to ensure no negative attitudes in recruitment and selection processes. 2021-2 All staff involved in recruitment and selection activities to have been trained by December 2022 Submit annual review of DAP 2021 Review submitted to Equality Commission and published online Engage with representative bodies for disabled people to build relationships, identify any barriers to registration for people with disabilities and encourage participation in the 2021 Canvass in Northern Ireland 2021 Relationships established with key representative bodies Information shared in advance of the Canvass to encourage greater participation Use the findings of the Modernising Voting research to identify barriers for disabled people in casting their votes, and work with EONI and to ensure they are addressed. 2021 Issues identified and raised with EONI by end of 2021 in preparation for Northern Ireland Assembly election in May 2022. Engage with representative bodies for disabled people to encourage participation in 2022 Northern Ireland Assembly election 2021-2 Tailored information, where required and available, shared with representative bodies to encourage participation in the election Building on existing organisational approach to promoting mental health and wellbeing, consider signing up to the Equality Commission's Mental Health Charter. 2021-2 Internal review of mental health and wellbeing policies complete by end 2021 Evidence gathered through staff surveys Part 2: commencing 2022-3 Measure Timescale Performance indicator/target Include questions in post-election research to enable an assessment to be made of the experience of disabled people in participating in the election, or reasons why they did not. Identify any immediate actions/areas that can be addressed to enhance the experience of disabled people when voting. 2022 Establish baseline data to inform decision making and use as a comparator for 2023 analysis. Immediate actions, if applicable, identified and addressed in advance of 2023 polls Consider how the views of disabled staff are incorporated in the promotion of disability equality in the workplace and in policies, practices and procedures. 2022 Incorporate into EDI agenda and EDI officer role description Submit annual review of DAP 2022 Review submitted to Equality Commission and published online Engage with representative bodies for disabled people to encourage participation in 2023 Northern Ireland Local Government elections 2022-3 Tailored information, where required and available, shared with representative bodies to encourage participation in the election Include questions in post-election research to enable an assessment to be made of the experience of disabled people in participating in the election, or reasons why they did not 2023 Evidence gathered on participation the election Analyse responses to post-election research and compare to 2022 data. Identify short, medium and long term actions that can be taken to enhance the experience of disabled people when voting. 2023-4 Trends/themes identified from 2022 Assembly election and 2023 Local Government election Submit annual review of DAP 2023 Review submitted to Equality Commission and published online Arrangements for consultation and publication Following engagement with the Equality Commission, we will publish this Plan for consultation in early 2021, using our website and social media channels to raise awareness and encourage responses. We will also engage directly with a range of organisations (outlined below) which represent disabled people, and endeavour to gather responses from those with lived experience of disability including mental health conditions through that process. The consultation will last for 3 months, and we will review responses and update the Plan accordingly. We will submit the final version of the Plan to the Equality Commission and make it available on our website.

Consultee list Voluntary and Community Sector Action on Hearing Loss ADAPT Northern Ireland Advice NI Age NI Age Sector Platform Association of Talking Newspapers Autism NI Aware British Deaf Association (NI) Bryson Charitable Group Carers Northern Ireland Cedar Foundation Children in Northern Ireland (CiNI) Children's Law Centre Commissioner for Older People NI Community Development and Health Network (NI) Council for the Homeless (NI) Diabetes UK NI Disability Action Disability Sport NI Down's Syndrome Association Employers for Disability Equality Commission for Northern Ireland Inspire Marie Curie Mencap Mindwise Motor Neurone Disease Association National Autistic Society Northern Ireland NI Commissioner for Children & Young People Northern Ireland Council for Voluntary Action (NICVA) Northern Ireland Association for Mental Health Northern Ireland Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders (NIACRO) Northern Ireland Chest Heart and Stroke Association Northern Ireland Dyslexia Centre Northern Ireland ME Association Northern Ireland Union of Supported Employment NOW Group Praxis Care RNIB Sense NI Start 360 The National Deaf Children's Society Northern Ireland Stakeholders Electoral Office for Northern Ireland Northern Ireland Office Northern Ireland Parties Alliance Party of NI Democratic Unionist Party Labour Party People Before Profit Alliance SDLP Sinn Féin The Green Party in Northern Ireland Traditional Unionist Voice Ulster Unionist Party Workers' Party Local Government Antrim and Newtownabbey Borough Council Ards and North Down Borough Council Armagh City, Banbridge and Craigavon Borough Council Belfast City Council Causeway Coast and Glens Borough Council Derry City and Strabane District Council Fermanagh and Omagh District Council Lisburn and Castlereagh City Council Mid and East Antrim Borough Council Mid Ulster District Council Newry, Mourne and Down District Council Northern Ireland Departments The Executive Office Department for Economy Department for Infrastructure Department of Agriculture, Environment & Rural Affairs Department for Communities Department of Education Department of Finance Department of Health Department of Justice Feedback form

Public attitudes towards voting in Wales in the context of COVID-19 | Electoral Commission Search Public attitudes towards voting in Wales in the context of COVID-19 You are in the Public attitudes towards voting in the context of COVID-19 section Home Our research Public attitudes towards voting in the context of COVID-19 On this page Introduction Key findings Polling station voting Postal voting Other findings First published: 20 January 2021 Last updated: 19 March 2021 Introduction In February 2021, we asked a representative sample of eligible voters in Wales about their attitudes towards voting during the pandemic. The questions covered attitudes towards postal voting and other options for the safe running of the election in 2021. This is a repeat of the work carried out in December 2020. This page provides a summary of findings from the latest of these studies, makes comparison with December. Key findings There was an increase, between December and February, in the proportion of people who said they would vote in person if an election were held now. Voting in a polling place is the preferred option amongst a majority of voters but, compared with how people normally vote, the findings suggest a likely increase in the proportion of voters opting to use a postal vote. Polling station voting There was a large increase in the proportion of people who said they would vote in a polling station. In December, 44% said they would vote in a polling station if an election were held now, this rose to 56% in February. When we explain the planned Covid safety measures for polling stations, based on Electoral Commission guidance, the proportion who say it's safe to vote in a polling station rises from 73% to 81% (or 86% of people who usually vote in person). Over 4/5 (82%) of those who say its unsafe think that there is no measure that could be taken at polling stations that would make them feel safe. While we are not able, from this research, to report specifically on BAME respondents in in Wales we can report for Great Britain as a whole. 61% of BAME respondents said voting in person was safe compared to 75% of White respondents. Once told about the Electoral Commission guidance around safety measures 73% of BAME respondents feel safe voting in person compared with 84% of White respondents. Postal voting 19% of those who say they usually vote in person said they would vote by post although this has declined significantly from the 27% who indicated this in December. While this should not be taken as a reliable indicator of the number of people who will vote by post it does indicate that there could be an uplift in May. Other findings There has been an increase in the willingness to vote if an election were to take place now. 85% said they would vote in February compared to 75% in November. While the most common preferred method for holding the poll remained using the same voting methods as usual (37%) there was an increase in the number of people who wanted the polling stations to be open more than one day. In December 23% of people wanted the polling station to be open more than one day, by February this had risen to 32%. This is potentially a result of the increased discussion and coverage of this approach. Just under a third (32%) of those people who intend to vote in person said that if their household had to isolate due to Covid-19 then they would not know someone able to vote for them. Just over half (53%) said they would. There was no change since December in the proportion of people (52%) who said they would apply for a postal vote if encouraged to do so. Background notes Background notes All figures, unless otherwise stated, are from work done for the Commission by YouGov Plc. February 2021: Total sample size was 508. Fieldwork was undertaken between 29 January- 20th February 2021. The survey was carried out online. The figures have been weighted and are representative of all adults in Wales (aged 16+). December 2020: Total sample size was 1,031 adults. Fieldwork was undertaken between 7 - 11 December 2020. The survey was carried out online. The figures have been weighted and are representative of all adults in Wales (aged 16+). Full tables Wales Related content Public attitudes towards voting in England in the context of COVID-19 Public attitudes towards voting in Scotland in the context of COVID-19 Read more about public attitudes towards voting in Scotland in 2021 2019 electoral fraud data about electoral fraud in 2019 and view the data Public attitudes Read our reports about public attitudes towards voting

Appendix 3 of the Code of Conduct for Electoral Commissioners: Guidance on Acceptance of Gifts and Hospitality, and Declaring Meetings | Electoral Commission Search
Appendix 3 of the Code of Conduct for Electoral Commissioners: Guidance on Acceptance of Gifts and Hospitality, and Declaring Meetings You are in the Code of Conduct for Electoral Commissioners section Home Commissioners Code of Conduct for Electoral Commissioners On this page Introduction Frequently Asked Questions First published:

19 December 2022 Last updated: 18 June 2023 1. Introduction Introduction 1.1

Commissioners are expected to observe exceptionally high standards of personal honesty and integrity. 1.2 The registration of gifts and hospitality, as well as interests, helps ensure public confidence in the Commission, and maintains accountability and transparency of decision-making by avoiding any real or perceived bias or influence. 1.3 Commissioners are required to record all gifts and hospitality offered or received (other than those in a purely personal or private capacity, unless there is a connection which might make disclosure advisable) - including any which is refused - in writing using the forms at Appendix A or B (one for hospitality and gifts received, and the other for hospitality and gifts offered).

1.4 In certain circumstances it is less the refreshment that has been offered and accepted that is worth recording, than the person with whom a meeting is taking place. Encounters with people either closely involved in the sphere of the Commission's concerns, or where discussion includes areas of the Commission's concerns should be declared. It is not designed to include the many incidental and purely social contacts which all Commissioners, but perhaps more particularly former politicians, are bound to have on an almost daily basis. 1.5 The arrangements for gifts and hospitality were last reviewed and updated by the Commission Board in 2023.

Principles 1.6 Integrity and public confidence in the UK's democratic process, and transparency in party funding, are among the aims and objectives of the Electoral Commission, and fairness, impartiality and transparency our declared organisational values. It is therefore especially important for the Commission to observe the highest standards of probity in its own practices. 1.7 Commissioners should always undertake their duties according to the "Nolan principles" (appended to Code of Conduct), and not use their official position to receive gifts, hospitality or benefit of any kind which might reasonably be seen to compromise the Commission's position or an individual's personal judgement or integrity. 1.8 The conduct of Commissioners should not foster the suspicion of any conflict of interest between their Commission duties and their private interests. 1.9 The actions of Commissioners should not give the impression that they could be, or may have been, placed under some kind of obligation, or influenced by a gift or consideration, to show favour or disfavour to any person or organisation when acting as a Commissioner.

What this means for you a) Be aware of the policy and your obligation: you must register any gifts and hospitality that you receive or have refused, or that you offer to others, where there might be a perception that the offer was made in connection with your role with the Commission. If you have external interests which you have declared, you are required also to declare gifts and hospitality associated with those roles, not only those directly relating to your role at the Commission.

It is likely that these will have been sanctioned by the organisation on whose behalf you have been involved, but for the sake of transparency it is better that all gifts and hospitality are recorded even if, for example, you receive them in your capacity as a trustee of a charity or you are a member of another board. These will be recorded by the Commission but not published on its website. (You must also declare) If you have any meetings (that take place) with people who are closely involved with areas of the Commission's concerns, or where a meeting with a significant or influential figure involves a discussion which includes areas of the Commission's concerns, then advise the Chair by letting him know the brief details (or by using the form below). b) Openness: if there is any doubt about the propriety of accepting a gift or hospitality it should be refused. c) Seek advice: if still in doubt about any aspect, or in the event of queries in relation to a particular case, consult the Chair, Chief Executive or Secretary to the Commission Board at the earliest opportunity; d) Complete the form: annotated examples of the forms are at Appendix A and B. Commissioners should complete the Declaration of Gifts and Hospitality Form, together with the necessary counter-signature, within 28 days of receiving it, and return it to the Secretariat. The Secretariat adds the declaration to the register which is published on our website. e) Get the form counter-signed/or signed in advance for hospitality offered: forms must be countersigned as shown below. If you are proposing to offer hospitality, prior approval must be obtained in advance from the Chief Executive or another member of the Executive Team. f) Monitoring and publication: the Secretary to the Commission Board will maintain the Register of Gifts and Hospitality (Appendix D), which is reviewed on a quarterly basis by the Audit and Risk Assurance Committee and published on the Commission's website. Approval arrangements Declaration: Countersigned by Chair, Chief Executive Commissioners, Chair Chief Executive, Chair Executive Team, Chief Executive Independent Member of the Audit and Risk Assurance Committee, Chief Executive Management Team, Relevant member of ET Other staff, Relevant Management Team Declarations by the Chair and Chief Executive (who counter-sign one another's declarations) are sent also to the Chair of the Audit and Risk Assurance Committee prior to each meeting of the Committee as an additional safeguard. All declarations are held in a register by the Secretary to the Commission Board, and periodically reported to the Audit and Risk Assurance Committee and published. Reviewed March 2023 Frequently Asked Questions I've been offered a gift I didn't want and couldn't give back without being discourteous or causing offence and I just want to get rid of it – can I simply bin it or ignore it? Answer: No, unless it is a de minimis gift (biro, mouse mat, key-ring) of very low value. Complete the form for gift received, explain the circumstances which prevented your refusing it, get it counter-signed, and pass the form and gift to Secretariat, who will arrange for appropriate disposal. We have avoided specifying a de minimis amount as even very small gifts can appear significant depending on the context and the donor. If the gift is perishable (flowers, plant, chocolates or similar), share it with your colleagues. I've been sent a gift (e.g. a bottle of wine) as a thank you by a contact/supplier – can I keep it? Answer: Not usually, and never alcohol. Declare it on the form and pass the gift to Secretariat for appropriate disposal to a registered charity. However, if you want to keep it and it is of low value (with the exception of alcohol), and your manager/the Chair authorises retention, declare it on the form and report it to Secretariat. If it is of some value and you are prepared to pay for it, establish a value, include it on the declaration form with your intention to pay for the item, seek authorisation by getting it counter-signed by your manager/the Chair, and if approved make a payment to the Commission. I was offered a gift of more than de minimis value and I'd like to keep it – what should I do? Answer: With the exception of alcohol, which should never be retained, try to ascertain or estimate its value for an equivalent payment to the Commission and include that on the declaration form (together with any supporting information including a description of the item and what it's made of, equivalent items for sale on the internet, rates of exchange for the date the gift made if applicable). So, inexpensive cufflinks may be acceptable to keep, but if made of gold and diamonds, would need to be handled differently. Give the declaration form and supporting information to Secretariat and once it is countersigned, including as appropriate by the Chair of the Commission or the Chair of the Audit and Risk Assurance Committee, you may make a cheque out (payable to the Electoral Commission) for the amount determined. If not authorised by counter-signature, the gift is to be provided to the Commission and either retained or disposed of for charitable purposes as it thinks fit. At a meeting hosted by a local authority at which I was present, we were offered lunch – should I declare this? Answer: If it is a basic sandwich lunch, then no, but if it is a hot meal away from the building, then yes. I met by chance a junior minister at the Department of Education whom I knew from my days as a constituency MP (or other party role) and we had a chat over a cup of coffee (she bought) which was catching up about mutual colleagues and one another – do I need to declare this? Answer: No. This is an incidental, social meeting with an acquaintance who is not obviously involved in any area of the Commission's concerns and where you did not touch explicitly on Commission work. If the same circumstance had involved, say, a meeting with a former colleague now in the Department for Levelling Up, Housing and Communities , involved in work on referendums, or individual electoral registration, then yes, with a note to say whether Commission areas of concern were touched on. I have been approached to give advice on a Bill relevant to the Commission's area of work – should I declare it? Answer: Yes. I've been asked to attend a meeting with Party colleagues to cover a number of matters – is this something I need to declare? Answer: It would depend what was covered at the meeting, but probably. It might be best to preface your meeting with your colleagues by advising them that you will need to declare the fact of any discussion relevant to the Commission's areas of concern, so that everything is clear and open from the outset. I've been offered a (low-value) item as a thank you for a lecture carried out in a Commissioner capacity – what should I do? Answer: If of de minimis value, disclose the gift and keep it. The disclosure will be recorded and reported to the Audit and Risk Assurance Committee for its information in the usual way, if it's not of de minimis value. If other than de minimis, the gift should be declared, reported, and handed to Secretariat for disposal for charitable purposes. I've been sent a sample box of chocolates as a marketing device – what should I do? Answer: Declare the gift, contact the senders (if practicable) and explain our policy and politely ask them not to repeat it; then share the chocolates with your Commission colleagues. Does a gift I've been offered have to be disposed of by Secretariat, or can I route it to something/somebody I've identified as a suitably deserving cause? Answer: You must pass it to Secretariat for the sake of transparency and to avoid any imputation of impropriety, bias or attempt to gain advantage or influence another. It will be disposed of to a suitable charity, in an auditable way. I've been offered lunch/dinner/tickets to an event by a company/organisation on behalf of another organisation with which I'm involved – not the Electoral Commission. How should I treat this? Answer: Make a practice of declaring all gifts other than those in a purely personal or private capacity unless there is a connection which you think would make disclosure advisable (having had them separately recorded and if applicable their acceptance sanctioned by the relevant organisation) to avoid the risk of unknown connections subsequently coming to light which make acceptance of the gift appear suspicious or inappropriate. Staff-related FAQs (the staff Code of Conduct refers to this Guidance) Our contract to use a venue was of a high enough value to trigger a gift [e.g. of a Nintendo] – is it declarable, and what should happen? Answer: Declare it, and hand it to Secretariat where it will be recorded and disposed of for charitable purposes (with a suitable audit trail). I won a prize for completing an evaluation form at the end of a conference as the result of a draw of all those completing forms – must I declare the prize and relinquish it? Answer: You must declare it, but you will be able to keep it. You won the prize as an individual and as the result of random chance, rather than by a firm intending to foster any relationship or commercial advantage with the Commission by targeting you to receive the prize. You have been lucky! Our loyalty card with an airline and our travel framework provider resulted in two free economy flights which were used on business – does this count as a gift? Answer: No – it isn't a gift or hospitality for the benefit or enjoyment of the individuals, but is a benefit (a saving) to the business. I have been given a Christmas present of (eg) a bottle of wine by a police officer with whom we work on Commission issues – may I keep it? Answer: You must not accept gifts or hospitality or receive other benefits from anyone who might reasonably be seen to compromise your personal judgement or integrity... However, with the exception of alcohol, which must never be kept, with the agreement of your manager and appropriate disclosure, a case may be made for accepting a gift, providing it is of low value, and the details recorded (including estimated value) for declaration and report to the Audit and Risk Assurance Committee in the usual way. A Commissioner has given a present to a member (or group) of staff, as an acknowledgement of work done – must this be declared? Answer: Reasonable low value gifts from a Commissioner (or a line manager) to a member of staff to thank them for their work or acknowledge some celebration are acceptable (e.g. bottle of wine, chocolates). I have been paid royalties for a chapter I contributed as part of my Commission role to a book on electoral practice – do I keep the royalties or pay them to the Commission? Answer: Executive Team and Management Team members should not accept royalties or fees in any circumstances and the practice of paying the fee over to the Commission or advising the requesting organisation to donate the fee to charity should prevail. If you are approached or are considering undertaking external work, such as editing or writing a chapter for an external publication or speaking at an external conference you should always disclose such work to your Head of function (or Director in the case of Heads) in advance of agreeing to it, and refer to paragraph 3.3 of the Staff Code of Conduct, for more detailed guidance.

Letter to Minister for Levelling Up regarding secrecy of voting in polling stations |
Electoral Commission Search Letter to Minister for Levelling
Up regarding secrecy of voting in polling stations You are in the Key correspondence section Home Key correspondence First published: 29 March 2022 Last updated: 27 April 2023 Summary of the letter Date: 29 March 2022 To: The Rt Hon Kemi Badenoch MP - Minister for Levelling Up Communities From: Bob Posner, Chief Executive Format: Sent by email Full letter Dear Minister, Thank you for your letter dated 22 March on the secrecy of voting in polling stations. I am pleased to agree that the law is clear and to confirm that is the Commission's established and consistent position on this important subject. The right to vote in secret is set out in UK electoral law. Anyone attempting to steal someone else's vote, or to influence inappropriately how another person votes, is committing an offence. For this reason, and as stated in your letter, voters should not be accompanied in the polling booth except in specific defined circumstances. On this the law is clear, and the Commission's position follows the law. While the police are responsible for enforcing the law on secrecy requirements and other electoral fraud, the Commission works to support voters, electoral administrators, police and prosecution authorities, as well as law abiding campaigners to deter, prevent and detect electoral fraud of all kinds, including 'family voting'. For voters, we raise awareness of the importance of keeping votes secret and secure. Our 'Your Vote is Yours Alone' campaign – run in partnership with Crimestoppers – highlights what constitutes electoral fraud and aims to empower people to protect their vote and report any concerns. This campaign is focused in areas where there have been historic concerns about electoral fraud. We also produce a range of resources, including posters, leaflets, video adverts for social media and other channels, and template press releases, which local authorities can and do use to support the campaign and promote these important messages in their area. We give Returning Officers and their staff clear guidance that voters should be supported to vote in secret and free from influence. Our polling station handbook highlights the issue of 'family voting', advising staff: "Make sure voters go to polling booths individually so that their right to a secret vote is protected. No other person is allowed to accompany a voter to a polling booth unless a voter who is disabled or unable to read has requested assistance to vote." We have taken additional steps in areas with a history of concerns about electoral integrity, such as Tower Hamlets. We continue to be in regular contact with the Tower Hamlets electoral services team, including in preparation for this year's elections. Polling station staff there are being briefed on the need for vigilance. They should be proactive in the polling station to address issues such as family voting, involving the police as required. We have worked with the local authority to produce a poster for display at polling stations emphasising that only one voter at a time can enter a polling booth. This will be displayed outside each polling station and on the desks where voters receive their ballot papers from polling station staff. Additional members of staff will also be assigned by the Returning Officer to polling stations to help direct voters individually to polling booths. Finally, as with other elections, Commission staff will be observing at polling stations and counts, though I should emphasise that while my colleagues would highlight to polling station staff any potential legal breaches witnessed, they have no powers themselves to intervene.
While it is the case that only the police and prosecution authorities can take decisions on allegations of 'family voting', we work with the police to support officers to understand the law, both through the National Police Chiefs' Council and with individual forces and officers. In the context of elections in Tower Hamlets, we have advised the Metropolitan Police that someone accompanying another person into a polling booth, other than in permitted cases to support someone with a disability with casting their vote, would bring into consideration for the police Section 66 of the Representation of the People Act 1983. This could include an attempt to interfere with a voter or to obtain information about how someone has voted. We fully share your view on the importance of the secrecy of the ballot and hope that this letter provides assurance that we will continue to play our part, working with others, to ensure it is upheld. Yours sincerely, Bob Posner Chief Executive

Performance analysis 2019/20: Goal three | Electoral Commission Search

Performance analysis 2019/20: Goal three You are in the Annual Report and Accounts 2019/20 section Home Our plans and priorities Annual Report and Accounts 2019/20 On this page Key achievements Performance measures First published: 30 June 2020 Last updated: 17 August 2020 Goal three To be an independent and respected centre of expertise, using knowledge and insight to further the transparency, fairness and efficiency of our democratic system, and help adapt it to the modern, digital age. This area of work focuses on innovation and strengthening our evidence base. Our expertise in policy, research and communications are core to enabling this work. Key achievements To contribute to innovation and strengthening our evidence base, we: reported on the three sets of elections and two recall petitions from 2019 and made recommendations to help improve future events reported on the accuracy and completeness of the electoral registers in the UK evaluated the UK Government's pilot schemes testing polling station voter ID in parts of England at the May 2019 local elections provided the Scottish and Welsh governments and parliaments with independent expert advice on legislative and policy changes arising from their respective electoral reform agendas assessed the impact on voters of any changes to the ordering of candidates on ballot papers for Scottish council elections, at the request of the Scottish Government published feasibility studies on options for modernising electoral registration provided oral evidence to three UK Parliament committees and written evidence to two House of Lords select committees provided written evidence to three National Assembly for Wales committees and gave oral evidence on two occasions provided written evidence on three bills to two Scottish Parliament committees and gave oral evidence on three occasions Performance measures Measures Performance Delivering a project to understand the landscape of public democratic engagement in the UK Achieved 1 Deliver a project to develop and explore the feasibility of proposals to modernise electoral registration and meet voters' needs and expectations in our digital society. Achieved Publish our evaluation and response to the 2019 voter ID pilots Achieved Work in support of the electoral law reform recommendations from the England and Wales, Scotland and the Northern Ireland Law Commissions Ongoing Innovation and strengthening our evidence base We provided expert advice and support to the Scottish and Welsh governments and parliaments, to help with their electoral reform agendas. This included extending the franchise for their elections to younger people in Wales and new categories of electors in both countries. We advised on proposals and draft legislation and our input helped to ensure these would work in practice. We evaluated the UK Government's ID pilots, which took place during the local elections in parts of England in May 2019. Our independent assessment will help the UK Government to assess the accessibility and security of different approaches, before introducing any requirement to show ID in polling stations across Great Britain. Our major studies into the accuracy and completeness of the electoral registers are the only UK studies on this topic. Many people use these findings and they provide evidence to inform the policy and legislative changes governments need to make to modernise our electoral registration systems. They are also a vital resource to inform our own and other organisations' efforts to target public awareness work to increase voter registration. The latest study found that while the proportion of people registered to vote remains largely stable, young people and private renters are still less likely to be correctly registered, and overall levels of accuracy and completeness remain in need of further improvement. We published feasibility studies that explore different ways public data could improve the registration system and how reforms to processes could work in

practice. This gives governments a starting point to make the types of changes that would address pressures on electoral administrators' resources as well as making it easier for individuals to register. We are using the outcomes from these studies to inform and encourage a wider policy debate about the future of electoral registration, and to support our own policy development work. In Scotland, we carried out research to assess the impact on voters of any changes to the ordering of candidates on ballot papers for council elections. Our final report to the Scottish Government provides it with an evidence base to consider the impact of any changes on voters, electoral administrators and political parties. We continued working to identify and make the case for ways to simplify, modernise and consolidate electoral law, including implementing the Law Commissions' recommendations, made initially in their 2016 report and given final weight in their closing report this year. We gave evidence to parliamentary committees to ensure our expert analysis about elections and regulation would inform their work. In the UK Parliament, this included the Digital, Culture, Sport and Media Committee inquiry on disinformation; the Public Administration and Constitutional Affairs Committee inquiry on electoral law; and the Exiting the European Union Committee on rules for any future citizens' assembly and referendum. We also gave evidence to the House of Lords select committees on Democracy and Digital Technologies and on the Electoral Registration and Administration Act 2013. In the National Assembly for Wales, we gave evidence to the Equality, Local Government and Communities Committee on the Local Government and Elections (Wales) Bill, and to the Assembly Electoral Reform Committee's inquiry into electoral systems and boundaries, and the Constitutional and Legislative Affairs Committee on the Senedd and Elections (Wales) Bill. In the Scottish Parliament, we gave evidence to the Standards, Procedures and Public Appointments Committee on the Scottish Elections (Franchise and Representation) Bill and the Scottish Elections (Reform) Bill. We also gave evidence to the Finance and Constitution Committee on the Referendums (Scotland) Bill. Report navigation links Previous Next Performance analysis: Goal two Performance analysis: Goal four 1. We focussed on identifying gaps in youth democratic engagement initiatives. We delivered the project as we had scoped it and in 2020-21, we will start new projects based on the findings, including a project to develop education resources. ■ Back to content at footnote 1 Related content Annual Report and Accounts 2019/20 Read our annual report and accounts for 2019/20, including key figures about the year at a glance. Performance analysis 2019/20: Goal one This is goal one of the performance analysis section of our annual report and accounts Performance analysis 2019/20: Goal two This is goal two of the performance analysis section of our annual report and accounts Performance analysis 2019/20: Goal four This is goal four of the performance analysis section of our annual report and accounts

Objective: Transparent political campaigning and compliant political finance |
Electoral Commission Search Objective: Transparent political campaigning and compliant political finance You are in the Annual Report and Accounts 2022/23 section Home Our plans and priorities Annual Report and Accounts 2022/23 On this page What we are working to achieve Work done to achieve this aim Performance indicators First published: 4 July 2023 Last updated: 27 September 2023
What we are working to achieve It is a fundamental part of the democratic process that campaigners are able to get their messages to voters. s, including parties, must be able to communicate with voters to explain their views and policies, so that voters are informed when they vote. It's important that voters hear from a wide and diverse variety of campaigners. s must be able to campaign without facing undue actual or perceived barriers, while we continue to ensure political finance is transparent. We are working to improve the transparency of political campaigning, and help parties and campaigners to comply with the law by: ensuring campaigners can access support to understand the law in the way and at the time that works best for them ensuring political finance laws are enforced fairly, working with police services and other regulators to support their work in areas outside our legal remit publishing complete and accurate political finance data providing insights to campaigners and parliaments on how campaigning methods directly affect voter confidence in elections. Work done to achieve this aim Ahead of the May 2022 elections, the Commission ran its digital transparency campaign, encouraging voters to think critically about the campaign information they see. Our candidate surveys following the May 2022 polls found that over 40% of candidates across the UK experienced intimidation or abuse during the campaign. As a result, the Commission has taken steps to convene relevant stakeholders to discuss ways to improve their experience, as well as providing candidate guidance and advice on protecting their safety. As a result of the Elections Act, we updated our guidance to reflect new political finance laws for parties and campaigners to support compliance. We worked with campaigners to design a new code of practice for non-party campaigner spending.
We consulted on the code and submitted it to Ministers as the law required. We also consulted on new digital imprints guidance to support changes in the law in this area. We held webinars for parties, candidates, agents and others before the May 2022 elections to explain the law, and did the same again for the May 2023 polls. We held virtual advice surgeries that allowed candidates and agents to discuss specific issues around the spending and donation laws with one of our expert advisers. We also offered further advice surgeries in advance of the reporting deadlines, to provide practical and ongoing support with spending returns. We delivered targeted advice and guidance resources to the full range of parties and campaigners. We improved the accessibility and usefulness of our guidance by increasing consultation with parties and campaigners when drafting it. This also enhanced our evidence base on how the law is applied in practice, to inform future compliance resources. We bolstered our advice service on the political finance laws with the recruitment of additional advisors. We launched a new initiative that provides targeted support for newly registered parties, who are likely to be less familiar with the law and their obligations and responsibilities. To ensure our Enforcement Policy is as clear as possible, we made changes to it and consulted parties and campaigners. The Policy sets out how we approach our regulatory investigations and sanctions. Our annual tracker of public opinion found that confidence in the transparency of political finance is in decline. We continue to make recommendations for improving controls on the system to improve confidence, including through engagement with the government, with parliamentarians, and through the national media. Member of Parliament on their contact with the Commission Very informative and easy to work with. Highly engaging with a broad knowledge Member of Parliament on their contact with the Commission Performance indicators Indicator Target 2022-23 Timely publication of donation and loan reports which are received by the statutory deadline 100% 100% Publication of statements of accounts within 60 working days 100% 5.02% Timely progression and conclusion of investigations 90% 91.18% Timely notification / issuance of decisions on sanctions 90% (final notices) following representations period 90% 100% Timely notification of outcome of party and non-party campaigner registration applications (for new and change of details) 90% 81.91% Timely responses to requests for regulatory advice on financial reporting 90% 99.17% Effective regulatory guidance products / resources delivered to support compliance with the law N/A 59 Guidance product related queries that help identify existing and/or new areas of the guidance that provide additional clarity with the law 100% 100% There are different deadlines by which parties with income and expenditure under and over £250,000 need to submit their annual statement of accounts to the Commission. Owing to internal resource constraints, a decision was taken in 2022 to combine publication of the two tranches. This meant postponing the publication of a large number of statements until after the reporting deadline for the larger parties. 100% of statements were published on the agreed publication date. Ongoing and future work Following consultation, the Commission's revised Enforcement Policy comes into force after the May 2023 elections and will continue to be used as the basis on which we make decisions relating to enforcement. We will monitor changes as a result of the measures for parties and campaigners in the Elections Act implemented during 2022-23 and, subject to parliamentary process, publish a non-party campaigner code of practice and new digital imprint guidance to support our regulated community to understand the changes. The Commission will continue to monitor potential threats and risks to the electoral system, including the integrity of the political finance laws. We will keep advocating for improvements to controls on donations to political parties to prevent the threat of foreign interference, and monitor relevant legislation, such as potential impacts from the National Security Bill. In response to feedback, we are trialling a process of dedicated points of contact for larger parties, or those who contact us frequently for advice, to help support compliance further. We will continue to monitor the themes of queries received to inform and shape our regulatory guidance, enhancing our evidence base on how the law is applied in practice and helping to ensure our guidance is as clear and helpful as possible. Along with the police, we will take proportionate actions to ensure compliance with the digital imprints regime when it commences. The Commission will also continue to work with police forces across the UK on tackling intimidation and harassment of candidates. Member of Parliament on their contact with the Commission Have had good quality conversations about regulation and the pressures facing political parties. Member of Parliament on their contact with the Commission Navigation Previous Next Objective: Accessible registration and voting Objective: Resilient local electoral services

Draft statutory guidance on digital imprints | Electoral Commission Search Draft statutory guidance on digital imprints You are in the Consultation on draft statutory guidance: digital imprints section Home Our consultations Consultation on draft statutory guidance: digital imprints Currently reading: of 6 - Show page contents On this page What is digital material and when does it need an imprint Requirements for the imprint Sharing and republishing material Non-party campaigner imprints Enforcement of the regime Key terms About this guidance The guidance has been prepared by the Electoral Commission, and laid before Parliament, in accordance with section 54 of the Elections Act 2022. It applies throughout the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. The purpose of this guidance is to: explain the operation of Part 6 of the Act, concerned with information that is to be included with digital material and how to comply with its requirements explain how the Electoral Commission and the police will undertake their enforcement functions where there is a breach or suspected breach of Part 6 of the Act. Where the guidance says that something must be done, this means that it is a requirement in either primary or secondary legislation. Key terms are explained throughout the guidance, and also provided as an alphabetical list at the end of the document. The Electoral Commission and the police must have regard to this guidance when exercising their functions under Part 6 of the Act. The Electoral Commission may propose revisions to this guidance from time to time in accordance with the Act or when directed to do so by the Secretary of State. Introduction When certain campaign material is published, it must contain certain details to show who is responsible. These details are known as an 'imprint'. The imprint helps to ensure there is transparency for voters about who is campaigning. There are already laws requiring imprints on printed election, referendum and recall petition material, and on digital election material used at Scottish devolved elections. For these laws, please see the Electoral Commission's non-statutory guidance . Under the Elections Act 2022, there are laws requiring imprints on some kinds of digital material. Examples of the types of digital material that need an imprint are explained in the guidance. The digital imprint requirements do not apply in relation to digital material published prior to the commencement of Part 6 of the Act. What sort of material requires an imprint? There are two different tests to apply to determine if your digital material requires an imprint under the Elections Act 2022. The first test applies to paid adverts. The second test applies to any other material. This guidance refers to material that is not a paid advert as 'organic material'. If you have paid for the material to be published as an advert, then it must have an imprint if it is 'political material'. The imprint laws apply to anyone placing paid adverts. If you have not paid for the material to be published as an advert, then it is organic material. Organic material must have an imprint if it is election-related material, referendum material or recall petition material.
However, the laws for organic material only apply to certain official political entities, such as candidates or registered political parties. An ordinary member of the public does not need to include an imprint on any organic digital material. The two imprint tests are explained in more detail in the following sections. What is digital material? The digital imprint laws can apply to any digital material, provided the material meets the tests which are set out in the following sections.
Digital material is material in electronic form that consists of or includes text, moving images, still images, speech or music. It does not include telephone calls or SMS messages. It can apply to material published in messaging services which do not use SMS, such as WhatsApp or Signal. The imprint laws only apply to digital material that is published, which means made available to the public or a section of the public. For example, they would not apply to a private messaging group between friends, or an email sent out by a party only to its members. Imprints may be required on published material including (though this is not an exhaustive list):

Pop-up ads Social media posts Any advert that appears in any website, search engine result, app or social media platform Adverts on internet radio or other streaming platforms Adverts in podcasts Adverts in online newspapers Messages on WhatsApp, Signal or Telegram MMS messages Websites Images Videos Electronic billboards

Definitions of material in scope of the regime may also be updated by secondary legislation to allow for emerging technology.

Paid adverts If you have paid for digital material to be published as an advert, then it must have an imprint if it is 'political material'. This test applies to anyone placing a paid advert. Payment is not limited to just money. It can also include benefits in kind, for example goods or services being provided for free or at a discount. It does not include payments as part of the costs of creating, setting up, operating or maintaining the material. It is limited to payments specifically to advertisers for the publication of adverts. If the service provider hosting the advert (for example, a digital platform or electronic billboard advertiser) has not been paid, then the material is not a paid advert.

Example For example, if you employ a digital agency to pay social media platforms for placing adverts on their platforms, then these are paid adverts because the agency is paying the platforms for the adverts to be published. By contrast, if you employ a digital agency to publish digital material on their own social media channels, then these are not paid adverts, because the platforms on which the material is published are not being paid. The fact that the agency is being paid does not make the material a paid advert.

Paid adverts 2 Political material Political material is digital material whose sole or primary purpose can be reasonably regarded as intended to influence the public, or any section of the public, to give support to or withhold support from:

- one or more political parties
- a particular candidate or a particular future candidate
- a particular elected office-holder political parties, candidates, future candidates or elected office-holders that are linked by their support for or opposition to particular policies, or by holding particular opinions

other categories of candidates, future candidates or elected office-holders that are not based on policies or opinions – for example, candidates who went to a state school, or MPs who grew up in their constituency

the holding of a referendum, or a particular outcome of a referendum any combination of the above

The laws can apply at any time, not just in election or referendum periods. For example, you could pay for a digital advert promoting a party or elected office-holder at any time, without it being related to an electoral event.

Paid adverts only need an imprint if their sole or primary purpose can reasonably be regarded as one of those on the list above.

Example For example, a sponsored Facebook post of a comedian doing a routine criticising a government Minister would not need an imprint, because the primary purpose of the clip is reasonably regarded as being to promote the comedian.

Paid adverts 3 If you publish digital material on behalf of an organisation, the sole or primary purpose of any given piece of material will not always be the same as the overall purpose of the organisation. It will be a matter of fact in each case whether the sole or primary purpose of any particular piece of material can reasonably be regarded as being one of those in the list above.

Example For example, suppose a campaigning organisation in 2023 has as its main objective to bring back the death penalty. It runs three sets of paid adverts. The first criticises a political party which is opposed to the death penalty. The primary purpose of this material can be reasonably regarded as to influence the public to withhold support from the party.

Therefore it requires an imprint. The second argues for holding a referendum on reinstating the death penalty. The primary purpose of this material can be reasonably regarded as to influence the public to give support to the holding of a referendum.

Therefore it requires an imprint. The third advert lists a number of positive predictions about the effects of reinstating the death penalty. The primary purpose of this material can be reasonably regarded as to influence the public to support the death penalty. Therefore it does not require an imprint. Although the organisation has an overarching primary organisational purpose, the different pieces of digital material it publishes have distinct primary purposes. This means that some of the material requires an imprint and some does not, depending on the facts. Paid adverts 4 Referendums and political material The law for paid adverts can apply to material relating to the holding of, or a particular outcome of, any kind of referendum in the UK, such as: a UK-wide referendum a referendum held in England, Scotland Wales or Northern Ireland, or any combination of those a Senedd referendum a local authority governance referendum a local government referendum a local poll a council tax increases referendum a parish poll a Neighbourhood Planning referendum Any paid digital advert that supports an outcome in a referendum that is being held must have an imprint. Any paid digital advert that promotes an outcome in a potential future referendum must have an imprint, even if that referendum has not yet been called or legislated for. Example For example, suppose there is serious speculation about a referendum on an issue, but it has not yet been officially called or legislated for.

If a campaigner places a paid advert saying 'VOTE YES' to the particular issue, this is reasonably regarded as promoting an outcome (Yes) in a future referendum.

Therefore, under the digital imprint rules, it would require an imprint. Paid adverts 5 Any paid digital advert that expressly advocates the holding of a new referendum must have an imprint. It does not matter if the referendum is unlikely to be held – the imprint laws still apply. Example For example, a paid digital advert calling for a referendum on an independent North of England would require an imprint. Paid adverts 6 Paid adverts relating to referendums held in the past will not be political material under the referendum part of the test. Example For example, a paid advert marking the anniversary of the Good Friday Agreement would not need an imprint simply because of the referendum held in Northern Ireland in 1998. Paid adverts 7 Some paid digital adverts may relate to: the subject matter of a past referendum the consequences of the outcome of a referendum the implementation of a referendum result Since in these cases the referendum is over, this material will only require an imprint if it meets one of the other parts of the test. Example For example, the material would need an imprint if it could be reasonably regarded as having the sole or primary purpose of influencing public support for or against having a second referendum on the same topic, or of promoting parties or categories of elected office-holders with particular views on the past referendum. Paid adverts 8 You should always bear in mind that even if material does not require an imprint because it relates to a referendum, it may require an imprint for other reasons. Organic material If you have not paid for the digital material to be published as an advert – for example, you just posted it on your own social media – then it is organic material. There is a different test for whether organic material requires an imprint. Organic material only needs an imprint if it is published by or on behalf of certain political entities. The political entities are: a registered party a registered non-party campaigner a candidate or future candidate an elected office-holder a registered referendum campaigner a registered recall petition campaigner These organisations and individuals must include an imprint on any digital material, even if they have not paid for it to be published, if it is any of: election-related material referendum material recall petition material Unlike the rules for paid adverts, the rules for organic material are all related to specific electoral events. Organic material is therefore more likely to need an imprint during the campaigns leading up to these events. Election-related material Election-related material is material whose purpose can be reasonably regarded as intending to promote or procure electoral success for: one or more political parties a candidate or future candidate political parties, candidates, or future candidates that are linked by their support for or opposition to particular policies, or by holding particular opinions other categories of candidates or future candidates that are not based on policies or opinions – for example, candidates or future candidates who went to a state school, or independent candidates (who do not stand for a political party) any combination of the above The test is met even if there are other additional purposes which the material could reasonably be regarded as intended to achieve. Referendum material Referendum material is material that wholly or mainly relates to a PPERA referendum, and which is published during the referendum period. This means that in the rules for organic material, referendum material only relates to a referendum that is being held – unlike in the rules for paid adverts, which can also apply to material concerned with referendums that may not happen. A PPERA referendum is a referendum held under Part 7 of the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000, including: a UK-wide referendum a referendum held in one or more of England, Scotland, Wales or Northern Ireland (but not including a Senedd referendum) The rules for organic material do not apply to material relating to any other type of referendum, for example: Senedd referendum local government referendum local authority governance referendum local poll council tax increases referendum parish poll Neighbourhood Planning referendum Recall petition material Recall petition material is material whose purpose can be reasonably regarded as intending to promote or procure the success or failure of a recall petition. Material that does not need an imprint The following types of material do not need to carry an imprint under either the test for paid adverts or the test for organic material: Journalistic material Any party political broadcast or referendum campaign broadcast Certain shared material which still includes the original imprint. See ‘Sharing and republishing material’ for more details Journalistic material Material published on a website or mobile app whose primary purpose (or one of whose primary purposes) is journalism does not need to include an imprint unless the material consists of an advert. This is regardless of whether the placement of the advert is paid for or not. This can include material published on: Online newspapers or news channels Newspaper apps Online radio shows Online TV shows E-books Podcasts Party political broadcast or referendum campaign broadcast Digital imprints are not required on any party political broadcast or referendum campaign broadcast included by a broadcaster in its broadcasting services. A “broadcaster” means: the holder of a licence under the Broadcasting Act 1990 or 1996, the British Broadcasting Corporation, or Sianel Pedwar Cymru. A ‘referendum campaign broadcast’ means any broadcast whose purpose (or main purpose) is or may reasonably be assumed to be to further any campaign conducted with a view to promoting or procuring a particular outcome in relation to any question asked in a referendum to which Part VII of the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000 applies, or otherwise to promote or procure any such outcome. What information must you include in the imprint? You must include the name and address of: the promoter any person on behalf of whom the material is being published (and who is not the promoter) You must use a postal address where you can be contacted. It can be a home address or an office or business address. You can also use a PO Box address, or other mailbox service. The imprint must be in text form, unless it is included as a part of solely audio material. In this case, the imprint must also be included as audio material. The imprint must be legible, or in the case of audio material, audible, no matter what device is used to access the information. In order to comply with the law, you must ensure that a written imprint is on screen for long enough that it can be read. Similarly, an audio imprint must be read at a speed at which it can be heard and understood. If digital material which requires an imprint is published without one, the promoter and anyone on whose behalf it has been published may be liable for an offence under section 48 of the Elections Act 2022. The promoter and anyone on whose behalf the material is being published is the promoter is whoever has caused the material to be published. Both the promoter and any person on behalf of whom the material is being published may be an individual or an organisation.

Material could be published on someone's behalf for a number of reasons, including: the role someone plays in a campaign – for example, an agent who is the promoter may publish material on behalf of their candidate they are paying for a service – for example, an advertising agency who is the promoter may publish adverts on behalf of the political party that has employed them they are part of a wider group involved in publishing the material – for example, a non-party campaigner who is the promoter may publish material on behalf of a coalition of non-party campaigners. The imprint must include the details of both the promoter and anyone else on whose behalf the material has been published. This means that your own details will not always be enough to meet the imprint requirements. Example For example, suppose someone is an agent for a candidate, and also works for a political party. Some of the material they promote will be on behalf of the candidate, and so need to include the details of the candidate and agent. Some of it will be on behalf of the party, and so need the details of the party instead. What information must you include in the imprint? 2 If you are being paid to publish the material, the material must include an imprint which includes the details of whoever is paying you. This is because either they are the promoter, or you are publishing the material on their behalf. If the material is published by an organisation and authorised through the proper channels, then the promoter can be the organisation itself. The details of an individual are not required. If you are acting on behalf of a party and have put together material promoting more than one of your candidates or future candidates, the imprint does not need to include the details of every individual candidate or future candidate. You can instead include the party's details in the 'on behalf of' part of the imprint.

Where must the imprint appear? The imprint must be included as a part of the material, unless it is not reasonably practicable to do so. If the imprint is included as a part of the material, it must be included in such a way that if the material is shared as it is, the imprint will still be a part of it. Example For example, if the material is a picture and contains an imprint, then if the picture is shared unaltered, the imprint will still appear. Where must the imprint appear? 2 If it is not reasonably practicable to include the imprint as a part of the material, then the imprint must appear somewhere directly accessible from the material. In practice, this means it can be reached via a direct link, usually one click or equivalent, where both the link and the imprint are easy for a voter to locate. If the imprint appears somewhere directly accessible from the material, it must be included in such a way that if the material is shared as it is, the imprint will still be accessible from the shared material. Example For example, if the material is a tweet, and the imprint is included in your Twitter bio, then if the material is retweeted, the imprint in your bio will still be accessible from the retweet. Where must the imprint appear? 3 This means that you must not delete the imprint from your bio for as long as an imprint is required and the material remains published. If you were to delete the imprint, then it would no longer be accessible after your material is shared. Similarly, you cannot include your imprint somewhere which would not be accessible by those who can view the material itself. Example For example, the imprint cannot be behind a firewall or otherwise protected area of the internet, if that would mean that voters would see the shared material but would not have the necessary permission to view the imprint itself. Where must the imprint appear? 4 Beyond these requirements, the original promoter of the material is not liable for any imprint offences that are due to the material being shared by other people later on. The liability is on the people republishing the material – see Sharing and republishing . The next sections give some detailed guidance on particular types or categories of digital material, and on what is typically reasonably practicable.

Social media Usually, the material on social media will be the whole social media post. You must include the imprint in the post itself, unless it is not reasonably practicable. For example, for paid adverts , it will usually be reasonably practicable to include the imprint as a part of the material – you can include the imprint in the content of the advert, or in the disclaimer text which appears at the top of the advert. On some digital platforms, the design of the platform, such as there being a character limit on posts, may mean that it is not reasonably practicable to include the imprint as a part of the post. In this case, you must display the imprint legibly somewhere directly accessible from the post. The imprint must be directly accessible from the post no matter what device is used. There are a number of different ways that you can do this. Example For example, , it may often not be reasonably practicable to include the imprint in the post itself because of the design of the platform. If this is the case, your imprint can be included on your profile, for example underneath your name, or as a pinned post or tweet. Where must the imprint appear? 5 Usually the ‘About’ section of a profile on a digital platform is not directly accessible from a post, because the hyperlink to the profile does not directly take you to that section. In this case, the ‘About’ section will only be directly accessible from a post if you add your own direct link to the ‘About’ section into the post. Videos, images and cartoons A video or image can still be required to display an imprint even if it contains no text. If your material is a video or image, it will usually be reasonably practicable to include the imprint in the video or image, especially if you have created it yourself. If this is not reasonably practicable, for example if the material is a very small image, you must include the imprint somewhere directly accessible from it. If your material is a social media post which contains a video or image, then it will usually be reasonably practicable to include the imprint as a part of the post. The best way to do this is to include it in the content of the video or image itself. Alternatively, you can include the imprint somewhere else in the post, for example for a video on YouTube you can include it in the post’s description. It is good practice to include the imprint in the content of the video or image itself. This is because if it is shared, the imprint is more likely to remain a part of the material. This means that voters will see the original imprint as it is shared, which is good for transparency. It is also less likely that people sharing the material will be required to include their own imprint when they share it. Further detail is included in the section ‘ Sharing and republishing ’. Websites Where the digital material is a website or webpage, it will usually be reasonably practicable to include the imprint on the relevant webpage. For example, it could be displayed in the footer. Where the material is just a part of the webpage, for example a social media post embedded in the page, then the imprint must be included as a part of the material unless it is not reasonably practicable. If it is not reasonably practicable, then it can appear somewhere directly accessible from the material – for example, somewhere else on the same webpage, or somewhere hyperlinked from the material. Audio material On solely audio material, the imprint must be included as a part of the material. For example, you could include someone reading out the imprint at the end. The imprint must be audible. The imprint must be read at a speed at which it can be heard and understood. For how long does material need an imprint? In all cases, digital material must include an imprint for as long as both: the imprint is required either by the law for paid adverts or for organic material the material remains published Material remains published for as long as it is being made available to the public or a section of the public. For example, if a post remains available on your social media channels, then it remains published. Organic material For organic material, the imprint is required on published material for as long as the published material remains any of: election-related material referendum material recall petition material Because these tests are all related to a particular electoral event, in many cases the imprint will stop being required once that event is over. For example, a video saying 'Vote NO on 10 May' in relation to an upcoming referendum will cease to be referendum material after 10 May when the referendum is over. Paid adverts For a paid advert, an imprint is required for as long as the material remains political material. How long the material remains political material will depend on who or what your material is promoting support for or against. If the material is linked to a particular electoral event or electoral cycle, then it will have a natural end point. For example: a future candidate either officially becomes a candidate or decides not to stand a candidate ceases to be a candidate on polling day an elected office-holder ceases to be an elected office-holder when their term ends a particular outcome in a referendum cannot be promoted after polling day Some political material will not have such a clear end point. For example, material promoting support for or against a political party could continue doing that for as long as the party exists. Sharing and republishing material When you share material on social media or otherwise republish it, this is a type of publication. The laws on imprints therefore also apply to material that you share – for example, using the 'retweet' function , the 'Share' button , or forwarding an email. However, if you share material that has already been published with a correct imprint and you do not materially alter the material, then you do not need to include a new imprint with your own details. The original imprint will suffice. Materially altering the material includes: changing the material in such a way as to change the meaning of the material removing the imprint (if it originally appeared as a part of the material) sharing it in such a way that the imprint ceases to be accessible from the material (if it originally appeared somewhere directly accessible from the material) If you share digital material that has already been published but you materially alter the material, then you must include your own imprint even if the original material had an imprint. If you do not, you may be committing an offence. Examples of republishing material The following tables show different examples of 'chains' by which material is shared. Each table begins with the same piece of digital material, but in each table it is then republished in a number of different ways. The examples within each table usually follow on from the example in the row above, unless it specifies that it follows from a different example. Chain of sharing organic material where the imprint is included as a part of the material: Example Does it require an imprint? Why? What they did next A political party tweets an image criticising a rival party's election manifesto Yes. It is election-related material and promoted by a party. The party includes their imprint in the image itself. The image is retweeted by one of the party's MPs. No. It is election-related material and has been shared by an elected office-holder, but it is exempt under the sharing rules. It has been shared without being materially altered and the party's original imprint is still a part of the material. The MP does not need to include their own imprint. Another MP retweets their colleague's retweet. No. The sharing exemption still applies – the material is not materially altered and the original party imprint is still a part of the material, so no further imprint is required. The second MP does not need to include their own imprint. Chain of sharing organic material where the imprint is originally in the material but is removed during the republication. Example Does it require an imprint? Why? What they did next A political party tweets an image criticising a rival party's election manifesto Yes. It is election-related material and promoted by a party. The party includes their imprint in the image itself. A registered non-party campaigner screenshots the image and turns it into a Facebook post. They crop the image so that the imprint no longer appears Yes. By removing the imprint, they have materially altered the material. This means the sharing exemption does not apply. Because it is election-related material, and they are a registered campaigner, it requires the campaigner's imprint under the rules for organic material. The registered campaigner does not include an imprint, and so commits an offence. A candidate shares the altered image using the 'Share' button . Yes. The sharing exemption does not apply, because the campaigner in the previous example did not include an imprint. The candidate must include their own imprint. It is reasonably practicable to include it in the post, so the candidate includes it above the image. A member of the public shares the same altered image using the 'Share' button . No. Because it is not a paid advert, the imprint rules only apply to certain political entities. Members of the public do not need to include an imprint on unpaid material, regardless of whether they are publishing it originally or republishing it. No imprint is required. Chain of sharing organic material where the imprint is included somewhere directly accessible from the material: Example Does it require an imprint? Why? What they did next A political party tweets an image criticising a rival party's election manifesto. Yes. It is election-related material and done by a party. The party includes their imprint in the image itself. An MP from a rival party republishes the original image using the 'Quote Tweet' function . They add a lengthy comment which is critical of the material and the party which originally tweeted the image. Yes. The MP has shared the material but turned it into election-related material against the original party. The sharing exemption does not apply because the material has been materially altered. The MP's tweet is a new piece of material which requires an imprint in its own right. In this case, because the MP has used up a lot of the character limit with their comment, it is not reasonably practicable to include the imprint as a part of the tweet. The MP therefore adds their own imprint underneath their name in their Twitter bio. This is directly accessible from the tweet because of the hyperlink to the bio internal to the platform's functionality. An elected mayor retweets the MP's tweet. No. The mayor's tweet still contains a hyperlink with a direct link to the MP's Twitter bio. The imprint is therefore still accessible from the shared material. The mayor does not need to include their own imprint. A future candidate screenshots the mayor's retweet and posts it on another digital platform. Yes. Because of the way the image has been republished, there is no longer a hyperlink to the MP's profile, where the original imprint appears. The imprint is no longer accessible from the future candidate's republishing, so the exemption does not apply. The future candidate therefore includes their own details in the post. Examples where organic material is republished and turned into a paid advert: Example Does it require an imprint? Why? What they did next A political party tweets an image criticising a rival party's election manifesto. Yes. It is election-related material and done by a party. The party includes their imprint in the image itself. A campaigner pays Facebook to 'boost' the party's post, thereby turning it into a paid advert. No. This is now a paid advert, and it is political material. However, the imprint is a part of the original post and is retained. The material has not been materially altered. The sharing exemption applies and the campaigner does not need to include their own imprint. No imprint is required. A member of the public creates and publishes a meme criticising a political party and some of their elected office-holders. They do not pay for it to be published as an advert. No. If material is not published as a paid advert, then only certain political entities are required to display an imprint. Members of the public do not need to display an imprint on unpaid material. No imprint is required. The campaigner pays Facebook to 'boost' the meme, thereby turning it into a paid advert. Yes. The original meme did not require an imprint because it was not a paid advert and was not posted by a political entity. However, by 'boosting' the post, the campaigner has turned it into a paid advert, and it is now political material. Since the original post did not contain an imprint, the campaigner must include their own details in the advert. The campaigner includes their details in the 'disclaimer' section. Non-party campaigners Non-party campaigners are individuals and organisations who campaign around elections without standing candidates themselves. Non-party campaigners who spend over a certain amount on campaigning at elections must register with the Electoral Commission. Being able to get their messages to voters is a fundamental part of the democratic process, and it's important that voters hear from a wide and diverse variety of campaigners.

Unlike a political party, where all or nearly all of their material is likely to require an imprint, if you are a non-party campaigner that campaigns on an issue, you may find that only some of your material requires an imprint. You should consider the imprint tests for each piece of material according to the facts. Paid adverts – all campaigners If you pay an advertiser to publish a digital advert, you will need to determine if the advert is 'political material'. Your advert will be political material if its sole or primary purpose is reasonably regarded as one of the purposes on the list. If you are a non-party campaigner campaigning on an issue, the primary purpose of your overall campaign is likely to be based on that issue. However, what matters for whether your digital advert is political material is not your organisation's overall aim, but whether the sole or primary purpose of a particular paid advert meets the 'political material' test (see paid adverts section). If you are a registered charity, then if you follow charity law and guidance from the relevant charity regulator, your material is unlikely to have a primary purpose on the list, because many of the sorts of campaigns that have those purposes are prohibited. For example, charities must remain independent of party politics and must not support a political party or candidate, or create a perception of support as a result of their actions or participation. This may also apply to other organisations who have limits on their political activities, for example in their constitution.

Imprints are important for transparency in campaigning. It is therefore good practice to include an imprint on paid adverts that relate to elections, referendums and recall petitions, even if the advert does not need to include one by law. Organic material – registered campaigners If you are a non-party campaigner who is registered with the Electoral Commission, then as well as paid adverts, you must also apply the imprints test for your organic material– including anything you post on social media.

The test for election-related material is very similar to the ‘purpose test’ for regulated non-party campaigner spending (see the Commission’s spending guidance for more information). If you have determined that your digital material meets the purpose test, then it will also need to carry an imprint. Examples are included below.

Example Two months before a UK Parliamentary general election, an animal welfare organisation that is registered with the Electoral Commission retweets a news article reporting that the party of government has announced they will legalise fox hunting if they are re-elected. This is not election-related material. This is merely sharing information, and the organisation would share any news relevant to their work. No imprint is required.

Example Once all the main parties have launched their manifestos in advance of a UK Parliamentary general election, a registered non-party campaigner compares their manifesto pledges. They create a graphic comparing the parties with regard to the issues the campaigner works on, giving marks out of ten and saying which party has the best policies in the area. They then publish the graphic on their own social media channels. Because the campaigner has compared the parties and said which is better in this context, they have effectively promoted some over others. The campaign is therefore reasonably regarded as promoting some parties over others and it is election-related material. An imprint is required on the material.

Example During the referendum period for a UK-wide referendum, a registered non-party campaigner publishes a blog post on their website setting out what they see as the consequences of each outcome for their service users. This requires an imprint. For organic material which is published during the referendum period, it does not matter whether or not the material promotes an outcome in the referendum – it only needs to wholly or mainly relate to the referendum.

Non-party campaigner imprints 2 You must also apply the imprints test for your organic material if you are registered with the Electoral Commission as a referendum campaigner in a particular referendum, or if you are registered with your local Petition Officer as a recall petition campaigner in a particular recall petition.

Organic material – unregistered campaigners If you are a non-party campaigner who is not registered with the Electoral Commission, then you do not need to include an imprint on any organic digital material. For unregistered non-party campaigners it is only the rules for imprints on paid adverts that apply. However, even if an imprint is not required by law, imprints are good for transparency, particularly if you are spending money campaigning at elections, referendums and recall petitions. If you are spending money, it is good practice to include an imprint in your material even if you are not registered.

Offences and defences If digital material which requires an imprint is published without one, then both the promoter of the material anyone else on whose behalf the material is published may commit an offence under section 44(1) of the Elections Act. It is a defence for a person charged with this offence to prove that: the failure to comply was due to circumstances beyond their control, and that they took all reasonable steps, and exercised all due diligence, to ensure they did comply. they complied with this guidance in the case of the republication of material, the person charged with the offence reasonably believed that the material was exempt under the sharing exemption (see section Sharing and republishing)

Responsibilities for enforcement of the regime The Elections Act provides for enforcement of the offence under section 48(1) by the police, and the Electoral Commission. Which enforcement body is initially responsible depends on the purpose of the material in question. Political material (paid adverts) and election-related material (organic material) The police will enforce material which relates to: a particular candidate a particular future candidate a particular elected office-holder The Electoral Commission will enforce material which relates to: political parties categories of parties, candidates, future candidates and/or elected office-holders, including those linked by their support for or against particular policies, or by holding particular opinions Recall petition material This will be enforced by the police, both for paid adverts and organic material. Material relating to referendums Any digital material, both for paid adverts and organic material, will be enforced by the Electoral Commission if it both: relates to a referendum held under Part 7 of the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000 (is a PPERA referendum) is published during the referendum period Any other material relating to a referendum will be enforced by the police. This will all be paid adverts, and includes any paid advert which either: relates to a referendum which is not a PPERA referendum relates to a referendum which is a PPERA referendum, but which is published before the referendum period Approach to enforcement The police and the Electoral Commission will seek to enforce the offence under section 48(1) consistently, but the differing nature of roles and powers means that specific actions may vary. Both the police and the Electoral Commission will enforce effectively, proportionately, and fairly.

Specifically: Consider enforcement action only where there are reasonable grounds to suspect an offence under section 44(1) of the Act Take enforcement action only where it is proportionate to do so Take the facts of each situation into account Enforce only where it is in the public interest to do so in the context of organisational priorities and resources. Whether or not a matter is in the public interest and justifies the use of resources in this way will depend on a number of factors. These factors may be different and/or differently weighted depending on the circumstances. Some of the factors that are likely to be considered, though this is not an exhaustive list, are set out below: Evidence of intent, rather than inadvertence or oversight Whether the required imprint is entirely absent or partial The extent of distribution of the material – how many people potentially saw it – and the geographical spread Both the police and the Commission recognise that it is important to conclude investigations as quickly as possible. This is both in the public interest and in the interests of justice for those involved. However, the first priority is always to conduct a fair and thorough investigation, and this will take priority over speed where the two conflict. Use of powers The Elections Act creates two new powers in relation to enforcement of the regime. Use of powers under Schedule 12 of the Elections Act 2022 – obtaining information The police and the Commission have powers under Schedule 12 of the Act to obtain two different types of information. There is a power to give notice in writing to any person requiring the person to provide it with information identified in the notice, which is reasonably required for: the purposes of determining whether electronic material has been published in contravention of section 41, or to enable the police or the Commission to make contact with the promoter of the material or the person on behalf of whom the material has been published. The police and the Commission also have a power to give notice in writing to any person requiring the person to provide it with electronic material identified in the notice, which is reasonably required for the purposes of determining whether electronic material has been published in contravention of section 41 of the Act. In both cases the police may choose to use this power as an alternative to its existing powers to obtain information. The Commission may exercise that power where it is proportionate and in the public interest to do so. Neither the police nor the Commission will do so where that information is easily accessible by other means. Any information obtained under such a notice may not then be used as evidence in any enforcement action against the person who provides the information to the Commission. Compliance with notices Where either of these powers are exercised by either the police or the Commission, a deadline for compliance will be set which must be complied with. The deadline will be proportionate, taking account of the facts of the specific situation, including the urgency of obtaining the information. Where such a notice is not complied with, the police or the Commission may seek a court order requiring the information. Use of powers under section 51 of the Elections Act 2022 – taking down material The Commission has a power under section 51 of the Act to require that material be removed or access to it disabled after the Commission has determined an offence in relation to that material and imposed any sanction, or served a Stop Notice, or agreed an Enforcement Undertaking under its powers in Schedule 19C of the Political Parties Elections and Referendums Act 2000. The Commission may exercise that power where it is proportionate and in the public interest to do so, in accordance with its enforcement objectives. It will not generally exercise that power where, for example, the material has already been removed; the material has been amended to make it compliant; or for any other reason it is not proportionate or in the public interest to require it to be removed. A similar power is available to a court under section 49(2) of the Act, following a conviction for an offence under section 48(1). There is no equivalent power available to the police. It is a criminal offence for any person who receives a notice to take down material to fail to comply with it without a reasonable excuse. Advice and guidance An area of difference between the roles and remits of the police and the Electoral Commission is in terms of providing guidance. The Electoral Commission has a legal duty to take reasonable steps to secure compliance with the law, under which it provides support, advice and guidance. This is different from the police. The Commission may use advice and guidance proactively in order to secure compliance and to give those the Commission regulates a clear understanding of their regulatory requirements, as an alternative to enforcement action. What happens after an investigation The police, where there is evidence of an offence, may refer the matter to the relevant public prosecutor (the Crown Prosecution Service in England and Wales, the Crown Office/Procurator Fiscal in Scotland, and the Public Prosecution Service in Northern Ireland), who will decide whether to launch a criminal prosecution. Where the Electoral Commission is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that an offence has been committed, the Commission may decide to impose a civil sanction using its powers under Schedule 19C of the Political Parties Elections and Referendums Act 2000. The Commission will generally sanction where it considers it appropriate to do so and when it is proportionate and in the public interest to do so. If the Commission seeks to impose a sanction, it will follow the statutory process set out in Schedule 19C of the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000. This involves the serving of a notice proposing a sanction, and a period of time for the person who is the subject of the notice to make representations. When making representations, recipients can put forward any information they consider relevant. In particular, if they have not already done so, the recipient may want to put forward any defence to the offence. They may wish to comment on the reasons for the Commission proposing a sanction, including the facts on which the decision is based. Representations may be made on the application of the factors the Commission has taken into account when determining the type and size of a sanction. Finally, the recipient may want to comment on their ability of the person concerned to pay a financial penalty and/or the cost to the person concerned of any non-financial requirement that might be imposed. Where possible representations or objections should be accompanied by supporting evidence. Any representations or objections will be considered by a senior officer of the Commission who was not involved in the decision to issue the initial notice. This includes determining if the Commission remains satisfied that an offence took place and, if so, that the proposed sanction is reasonable and appropriate. Any representations will be considered as part of this process. If, as a result, the Commission is no longer satisfied that an offence or contravention occurred, the matter will be closed. Otherwise, the senior officer will decide whether to issue a final notice, either reflecting the initial decision or changing it. Where any sanction is imposed, the subject of that sanction has a right of appeal to the county court in England and Wales, a county court in Northern Ireland, or the sheriff in Scotland. Key terms Candidate A candidate is a candidate at an election for a relevant elective office or a relevant Scottish elective office within the meaning of Part 5 of the Elections Act 2022, including a person who is included in a list of candidates submitted in connection with such an election.

Digital material In the Elections Act 2022, digital material is referred to as 'electronic material'. Digital material is material in electronic form which consists of or includes: text, moving or still images, or speech or music. It does not include material that is received by a person in the form a telephone call (e.g. to a landline telephone number) or material that is received via a text message using SMS to a telephone number. Elected office-holder An elected office-holder is a person is to be treated as holding a relevant elective office or a relevant Scottish elective office during any period when— the person has been elected as, or declared to be returned as, the holder of the office, but their term of office has not yet begun

Election-related material Election-related material is material that is reasonably regarded as promoting or procuring electoral success for: one or more political parties a candidate or future candidate political parties, candidates, or future candidates that are linked by their support for or opposition to particular policies, or by holding particular opinions other categories of parties, candidates or future candidates that are not based on policies or opinions – for example, candidates or future candidates who went to a state school, or independent candidates (who do not stand for a political party) any combination of the above Future candidate A person is a future candidate at an election for a relevant elective office or a relevant

Scottish elective office if— the person has been declared, whether by the person or by someone on their behalf, to be a candidate at the election (and the declaration has not been withdrawn), the election is the next scheduled election for the office, and the notice of the election has not been published or, in the case of an election for the office of member of the House of Commons, the writ for the election has not been issued. Organic material Organic material is any material which is not a paid advert. That is, material where neither the promoter of the material, nor the person on behalf of whom the material is published, has paid for the material to be published as an advertisement. Paid advert A paid advert is material where the promoter of the material, or the person on behalf of whom the material is published, has paid for the material to be published as an advertisement. For the purposes of the definitions of 'paid advert' and 'organic material', payments are not limited to just money. They can also include benefits in kind. They do not include payments that are part of the background costs of creating, setting up, operating or maintaining the material. They are limited to payments specifically to advertisers for the publication of adverts. Party officer A party officer is a registered officer of a political party under section 24 or section 25 of the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000. Political entities The certain political entities who must apply the test for including an imprint on organic material are: a registered party a registered non-party campaigner a candidate or future candidate an elected office-holder a registered referendum campaigner a registered recall petition campaigner Political material Political material is material whose sole or primary purpose can be reasonably regarded as intended to influence the public, or any section of the public, to give support to or withhold support from: one or more political parties a particular candidate or a particular future candidate a particular elected office-holder political parties, candidates, future candidates or elected office-holders that are linked by their support for or opposition to particular policies, or by holding particular opinions other categories of parties, candidates, future candidates or elected office-holders that are not based on policies or opinions – for example, candidates or future candidates who went to a state school, or MPs who have had a job outside of politics the holding of a referendum, or a particular outcome of a referendum any combination of the above Promoter The promoter is the person causing the material to be published. Publish To publish is to make available to the public at large or any section of the public. Recall petition A recall petition is a recall petition held under the Recall of MPs Act 2015. Recall petition material Recall petition material is material that promotes or procures the success or failure of a recall petition. Recall petition campaigner A recall petition campaigner is a person who is an accredited campaigner within the meaning of the Recall of MPs Act 2015 in relation to a recall petition. Referendums: Referendums to which the test for paid adverts being political material applies include (but are not limited to) the following: Key terms 2 Council tax increase referendum A referendum held under The Local Authorities (Conduct of Referendums) (Council Tax Increases) (England) Regulations 2012. Local authority governance referendum A referendum held under the section 0MB and 9MC of the Local Government Act 2000. Local government referendum A referendum held under the Local Authorities (Referendums)(Petitions)(England) Regulations 2011 or the Local Authorities (Referendums) (Petitions and Directions) (Wales) Regulations 2001. Local poll A local poll (a form of referendum) held under section 116 of the Local Government Act 2003. Neighbourhood Planning referendum A referendum held under the Neighbourhood Planning (Referendums) Regulations 2012 (as amended). Parish poll A parish poll (a form of referendum) held under section 150 and Schedule 12 of the Local Government Act 1972. PPERA referendum A referendum held under Part 7 of the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000, including a UK-wide referendum a referendum held in one or more of England, Scotland Wales or Northern Ireland But not including a Senedd referendum. Senedd referendum A referendum held under section 64 of the Government of Wales Act 2006. Key terms 3 By contrast, referendum material in the test for organic material only applies to material wholly or mainly relating to a PPERA referendum. Referendum material Referendum material is material that wholly or mainly relates to a referendum under Part 7 of the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000, and is published during the referendum period for that referendum. Referendum period The period before a PPERA referendum during which certain restrictions are in place, under section 102 of the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000 Registered non-party campaigner A registered non-party campaigner is a campaigner recognised by the Electoral Commission under Part 6 of the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000. In the legislation, registered non-party campaigners are referred to as ‘recognised third parties’. Registered party A registered party is a political party registered by the Electoral Commission under Part 2 of Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000. Registered referendum campaigner A registered referendum campaigner is an individual or organisation who is a permitted participant within the meaning of Part 7 of Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000, in relation to a referendum to which that Part applies. In the legislation, registered referendum campaigners are referred to as 'permitted participants'. Relevant election "Relevant election" means: a Parliamentary election, an election to the Scottish Parliament, an election to Senedd Cymru, an election to the Northern Ireland Assembly, a local government election within the meaning of section 191, 203 or 204 of the Representation of the People Act 1983, an election under Part 1A or 2 of the Local Government Act 2000 for the return of an elected mayor, an election for the return of a mayor for the area of a combined authority established under section 103 of the Local Democracy, Economic Development and Construction Act 2009, a local election within the meaning of the Electoral Law Act (Northern Ireland) 1962 (see section 130(1) of that Act), or an election of a police and crime commissioner. Relevant elective office "Relevant elective office" means the office of: member of the House of Commons; member of Senedd Cymru; member of the Northern Ireland Assembly; member of a local authority in England, Wales or Northern Ireland; elected mayor (within the meaning of Part 1A or 2 of the Local Government Act 2000); mayor for the area of a combined authority established under section 103 of the Local Democracy, Economic Development and Construction Act 2009; Mayor of London; member of the London Assembly; police and crime commissioner. "Relevant Scottish elective office" means the office of: member of the Scottish Parliament, or member of a council constituted under section 2 of the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Act 1994. In the definition of "relevant elective office" "local authority" means: in relation to England, a county council, a district council, a parish council, a London borough council or the Council of the Isles of Scilly; in relation to Wales, a county council, a county borough council or a community council; in relation to Northern Ireland, a district council; in relation to City of London, an office to which a person may be elected by a municipal election in the City. Page history First published: 31 October 2022 Last updated: 31 October 2022 published: 11 November 2020 Last updated: 11 November 2020 How political parties are registered Political parties are vital to a healthy democracy. The Commission maintains the registers of political parties – one for Great Britain and one for

Northern Ireland. To register, political parties must show that they are set up to be able to meet the obligations of electoral law. And, so that voters can mark their ballot paper with confidence, parties cannot have names, descriptions or emblems that are offensive, misleading or confusing. Did you know? Did you know? Parties can only be registered if party candidates will be put up to contest elections. Otherwise, candidates can stand as independents and they don't need to register a political party to stand for election Once registered, a party's name, description and emblem can appear on the ballot paper alongside the name of its candidate Once registered a party has legal responsibilities under electoral law, such as reporting financial data to the Commission If we refuse a party's application, we tell the party why and the party can re-apply Applications to register a party can be submitted online – our guidance will help with the process We aim to reach a decision on registration applications as soon as possible. We assess all applications carefully against the legal tests To register a party we need: a completed application form and a fee of £150 a copy of the party's constitution, setting out its structure and organisation a copy of the party's financial scheme, showing that it has the processes in place to comply with electoral finance laws details of at least two officers, who must fill the roles of registered leader, treasurer and nominating officer The registration process Making an application The Commission is responsible for registering political parties and an application to register must be submitted to the Commission to be assessed against the statutory tests The party's structure, organisation and financial processes must be in place and must show the party can comply with electoral law Assessing an application Registration is not automatic. The Commission assesses whether the party's application and identity marks meet the criteria set out in electoral law, as well as legal obligations under equality laws As part of this assessment process, we publish the party's identity marks so members of the public can comment on them. Views can be submitted on this page of our website The Commission will also assess whether the party's constitution is consistent with electoral law and its financial scheme has been adopted and shows the party has the processes in place to comply with electoral finance law There are different legal tests for names, descriptions and emblems. For example, for party names we look at whether the name is too long, is offensive or obscene, could mislead voters or hinder instructions on voting, or is likely to confuse a voter Taking a decision To be registered, as a minimum, we must decide that the application was complete, the constitution and financial scheme were compliant and the party name met the legal tests Once the assessment process is complete and all public comments considered, the decision whether to register a party is taken by the Director of Regulation. In Scotland, the decision is taken by the Head of the Electoral Commission – Scotland.

Outcome If the party registration application is approved, the publicly available register of political parties is updated with the details. The party must follow the political finance rules that ensure integrity and transparency in the system. We provide guidance that can help the party meet its responsibilities, and the party can also contact us with questions If the party registration application is rejected, the Commission will inform the applicant of the reasons for the rejection. The applicants can re-apply and we will work with them to overcome registration difficulties, and enable them to be registered. A new application fee is likely to be needed for a new application.

Enabling activity: A skilled organisation where diversity is valued | Electoral Commission Search Enabling activity: A skilled organisation where diversity is valued You are in the Annual Report and Accounts 2022/23 section Home Our plans and priorities Annual Report and Accounts 2022/23 On this page What we are working to achieve Work done to achieve this aim Performance indicators Ongoing and future work First published: 4 July 2023 Last updated: 27 September 2023 Enabling activity: A skilled organisation where diversity is valued The Electoral Commission is committed to the principle of equality of opportunity, the value of diversity and the benefits of inclusion. We are subject to a range of legislation including the Equality Act 2010, which includes the Public Sector Equality Duty, and Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, which prohibits discrimination and promotes equality of opportunity and good relations across a range of protected characteristics. What we are working to achieve We want our workforce to feel valued and be supported to achieve their potential. We are working to: implement refreshed working practices to reflect wider changes in our work environment and culture attract, retain and develop the people we need maintain and improve high standards of management, with a focus on developing our people further embed equality, diversity and inclusion in all aspects of our work. Work done to achieve this aim We published a new Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Strategy, including the Single Equality Scheme for Northern Ireland. The Commission is a UK-wide body and has therefore ensured that it complies with the requirements of both Great Britain and Northern Ireland on equality, diversity and inclusion. We refreshed and updated our processes for Equality Impact Assessments to ensure they reflect best practice. We appointed an independent adviser to our Board to help us continue our focus on equality, diversity and inclusion. The Adviser has made a number of recommendations around how the Commission delivers its commitments in this area, with a particular focus on governance and internal policy and practice. The Commission Board has accepted these recommendations in full and set up a group attended by Commissioners to oversee delivery. Worked with staff in our EDI group and Race at Work Charter Task Force to identify ways of improving equality, diversity and inclusion in the Commission. We raised internal awareness with events and speakers to mark Black History Month and Pride Month. We made changes to our recruitment process, including new training covering unconscious bias and employment law and adding questions on EDI to our interview question bank. Performance indicators Indicator Target 2022-23 Maintained completeness of workforce diversity information 85% 90.86% Ongoing and future work The Commission's People Strategy has four different strands – Recruitment, Learning & Development, Management, and ICT - all of which are underpinned by EDI. Some of the key areas of focus are ensuring roll-out of training on EDI topics, looking at establishing more diverse and inclusive recruitment options, and improving on our EDI data and reporting capability. In the next year, we will implement a range of changes to recruitment processes and practices, such as updating our recruitment policy, setting out clear management guidance, and rolling out a new recruitment system. We will be strengthening our internal team dedicated to supporting the organisation to deliver EDI related improvements, both internally and externally. The Commission will be looking at the opportunities presented by apprenticeships, and for staff who want to undertake qualifications using this pathway. We will have a new learning and development strategy prospectus in place by autumn 2023, with a full offer in place by 2025. A 'Reverse Mentoring' initiative will be launched, to support internal learning and improvement. The Commission will appoint a Disabilities Champion to communicate on its importance and drive organisational engagement. Navigation Previous Next Enabling activity: Independence and integrity Enabling activity: Improvement is continuous and resources are used effectively Report: How the May 2015 elections were run | Electoral Commission Search Report: How the May 2015 elections were run You are in the UK general elections section Home UK general elections On this page About the elections Registration and turnout Voters' experiences and views Recommendations: Voter experience Recommendations: Administration of the polls Recommendations: Candidates and campaigners Download our full report First published: 20 June 2019 Last updated: 13 August 2019 About the elections On 7 May 2015 elections were held for the 650 members of the United Kingdom Parliament and for local councillors in all 36 metropolitan boroughs, 194 district authorities and 49 unitary authorities in England. There were also elections for Mayors in six local authorities, a council tax referendum in Bedfordshire, and neighbourhood planning referendums in Central Milton Keynes, Malpas & Overton (Cheshire West & Chester) and Wirksworth (Derbyshire Dales). It was also the first time that parish council elections were combined with a UK Parliamentary general election. In almost 280 local authority areas in England, the poll for the UK Parliamentary election was combined with other polls. Of these, 239 local authorities held three or more types of election (including UKPGE, local election, parish council election, referendum or mayoral election) with one authority (Bedford) holding five polls on 7 May. There were no large-scale combined polls in Northern Ireland, Scotland, or Wales, although some local government ward by-elections were held.

Registration and turnout A total of 46.4 million people were registered to vote in the UK Parliamentary elections on 7 May 2015. Some 30.8 million votes were included in the count, representing an overall turnout of 66.4%. Across the four countries of the UK, turnout ranged from 58.4% in Northern Ireland, to 71.1% in Scotland. The electorate for local government elections in England was 31.5 million and approximately 20 million votes were cast. Consistent with previous elections, turnout among postal voters at the UK Parliamentary elections was higher than among those who voted at polling stations: 86.0% of people who were sent a postal ballot pack voted, compared with 63.5% of those who were entitled to vote at a polling station. Postal votes were issued to around 7.6 million electors and 6.2 million postal votes were included in the count. Across England, Scotland and Wales, the proportion of electors who chose to vote by post was 16.9%. In comparison, 1.4% of the electorate were issued with a postal vote in Northern Ireland, where postal voting is not available on demand. Approximately 150,000 electors had appointed a proxy to vote on their behalf, representing 0.33% of the total electorate. In the final days before the close of polls, a further 8,500 electors appointed emergency proxies, across England, Scotland and Wales. Voters' experiences and views Overall the polls on 7 May 2015 were well-run and evidence from our research with voters shows that they had a positive view of the electoral process. Registering to vote Eighty-five per cent of those surveyed said that they were satisfied with the procedure for registering to vote, with 62% saying 'very satisfied'. Just 5% per cent were dissatisfied (3% 'very dissatisfied'). Almost four in five respondents in Great Britain (79%) knew that it was possible to apply to register to vote online, and those aged 18-54 were more likely to say so. Information about the elections Almost nine in ten respondents (88%) said they knew a great deal or a fair amount about the UK Parliamentary general election (UKPGE). Forty-five per cent of respondents said the same about the local elections in their area. Ninety per cent of respondents said that information on how to cast their vote at the UKPGE was very or fairly easy to access, although 3% said it was 'Fairly/very difficult'. Over four-fifths of people (84%) said the same of the local elections in England, although 7% said it was difficult to access. Voting in polling stations Nearly all (94%) of those respondents who voted in person at a polling station reported that they were very or fairly satisfied with the voting process with 72% being ‘very satisfied’. People with disabilities were more likely to be dissatisfied with the process of voting at their polling station (5%) than those with no disability (2%). The majority of polling station voters (54%) found the support provided by polling station staff useful, although 4% said it was not useful.

Voting by post Nearly all (97%) of those respondents who voted by post, reported that they were satisfied with voting in this way. More than nine in ten (92%) respondents who voted by post said it was easy to complete and return the postal ballot, with 5% saying it was difficult. A similar proportion of respondents (91%) found the written instructions on how to vote and return the ballot useful, although 2% said they were not useful. Confidence in the administration and regulation of the elections Nine in ten people (91%) reported that they were either very or fairly confident the elections were well-run on 7 May, although 7% of respondents said ‘Not very confident/not confident at all’. People who voted were more likely to be confident that the May 2015 elections were well-run (93%) than those who did not vote (68%). Almost two-fifths (39%) of respondents did not agree that the funding and spending of political parties and candidates at elections is open and transparent although a third of respondents (33%) agree (22% said ‘Neither’ and 6% said they did not know). Respondents were considerably more confident that the authorities would take appropriate actions if the rules are broken: 63% agreed with the statement, with 36% agreeing strongly (although 22% disagreed). Forty-five percent of respondents thought that hardly any or no electoral fraud took place at the May 2015 polls, although just over one-third (35%) of people said that they thought electoral fraud took place (with 29% saying it happened ‘a little’ and 6% saying ‘a lot’).

Recommendations: Voter experience

Recommendation 1: Registration information provided by broadcasters All broadcasters, particularly those with specific public purposes built into their remit, should continue to identify and take advantage of opportunities to include information about voter registration in their editorial coverage at elections.

Recommendation 2: Providing an online registration status check The UK Government should develop an online service to allow people to check whether they are already correctly registered to vote before they submit a new application to register. Any such service would need to carefully manage and protect voters’ personal information.

Recommendation 3: Introducing online electoral registration in Northern Ireland Given the clear benefits for electors in England, Scotland and Wales, who can now apply to register to vote online, online registration should be introduced in Northern Ireland. The Chief Electoral Officer and Northern Ireland Office should publish a timetable setting out when this will happen. This will require legislative change in the UK Parliament as well as significant changes to the management of the electoral register by the Electoral Office for Northern Ireland.

Recommendation 4: Improving the delivery of postal ballot packs to voters We will continue to encourage Electoral Registration Officers (EROs) and Returning Officers (ROs) to put plans in place to ensure that they make full use of provisions within the statutory election timetable to maximise the time available for electors to receive, complete and return their postal vote. We, along with the Electoral Advisory Board (EAB), have identified that the capacity of print suppliers to fulfil demand is a significant risk to the ability of individual ROs to produce and despatch postal votes in sufficient time. We will work with the EAB to consider ways to improve this area of election delivery and to minimise these risks.

Recommendation 5: Improving access to the voting process for overseas electors We will work with the UK Government and Returning Officers to identify practical steps which could be taken to improve access to the voting process for overseas electors at the next scheduled poll where they are entitled to vote, including: Ensuring that all Returning Officers include the correct postage on postal ballot packs for overseas electors, so that they can be delivered to voters and returned as quickly as possible before polling day, including increasing the funding provided by the UK Government to Returning Officers for this purpose. Explaining the practical implications of different voting methods (such as postal voting or appointing a proxy) for overseas electors, particularly if they are making an application during the last month before polling day, including on the www.gov.uk/register-to-vote website. We will work with the UK Government and Returning Officers to develop workable and effective proposals, which could be included in the proposed Votes for Life Bill if legislation is required, to make it easier for overseas electors to cast their votes in time to be counted at elections. We will also continue our work with the Electoral Advisory Board to consider how technology might be introduced into a wider range of election activity.

Recommendation 6: Extending the qualifying circumstances for appointing an emergency proxy We have previously recommended that the qualifying circumstances for appointing an emergency proxy should be extended, so that those who have unforeseen caring responsibilities or who have experienced the death of a close relative would also be eligible. This recommendation has not yet been taken forward by any government with legislative competence over elections within the UK; we continue to recommend that the UK Government and, for Scottish Parliament elections and local government elections, the Scottish Government, should consult on and bring forward secondary legislation to further extend the qualifying circumstances for appointing an emergency proxy to reflect the concerns highlighted by electors at the May 2015 polls. The UK and Scottish Governments should ensure that any changes to the legislation relating to proxy vote applications for the May 2016 polls are clear by 5 November 2015, six months before polling day. Recommendations: Administration of the polls

Recommendation 7: Ensuring statutory Welsh and language election materials are treated equally We repeat our recommendation that the UK Government should work with relevant partners, including the Welsh Government, to re-examine its approach to the statutory provision of Welsh language forms, notices and ballot papers, and commits to providing the necessary statutory translation in good time before elections, consistent with the timing and approach taken to the provision of corresponding language resources.

Recommendation 8: Ensuring legislation is clear in good time before elections Governments with legislative competence over elections within the UK should manage the development and approval of legislation so that it is clear at least six months before it is required to be implemented or complied with by campaigners or electoral administrators. All governments should normally be able to plan to ensure that legislation for elections is clear at least six months before it is required to be implemented or complied with. While there may be unexpected developments or exceptional circumstances in which legislation is required later than this, it is not acceptable that poor planning has routinely resulted in late legislation in recent years. This is particularly disappointing when the date of polling day has been fixed some time in advance. If a government has not been able to make legislation clear at least six months before the date of a scheduled poll, it should table a formal statement in the relevant legislature, explaining why it has not, and setting out its assessment of the likely impact of the late confirmation of legislation for campaigners, electoral administrators and electors.

Recommendation 9: Clarifying the law relating to candidates' commonly used names The UK Government should amend the law to remove the requirement for the commonly used name to be different to any other forename or surname that the candidate has, while retaining the existing safeguard that ROs may reject the use of a commonly used name on the grounds that (a) its use may be likely to mislead or confuse electors or (b) it is obscene or offensive. Recommendations: Candidates and campaigners Recommendation 10: Registration of party names and descriptions for use on ballot papers We continue to recommend that where a candidate represents a political party on an election ballot paper, it should be clear to voters which party the candidate represents. We are concerned that the legal provisions for registration of party descriptions present risks of confusion for voters and restrict the participation of political parties. The UK Government should reform or remove the provisions on party descriptions. It will be important to consult political parties, other governments with legislative competence over elections within the UK, and the Commission on the practical considerations of achieving this change. Recommendation 11: Transparency and regulation of open primary party selection contests held close to an election or during a candidate regulated period We recommend that governments with legislative competence over elections within the UK should consider transparency and regulation of open primary party selection contests held during a candidate regulated period. If an open primary contest takes place during a candidate regulated period, the campaign spending that promoted the successful open primary contestant should be transparent and subject to appropriate limits, and relevant donations towards this spending should be subject to appropriate controls. Consideration should also be given to transparency of the costs of unsuccessful primary contestants and the central party in relation to such open primaries. We would be happy to work with political parties and relevant governments to discuss how this could be achieved within the existing regulatory framework. Recommendation 12: Costs relating to an individual's disability Governments with legislative competence over elections within the UK should amend the definitions of political party and candidate spending so that reasonable expenses that can be attributed to an individual's disability are exempt, (as was recently set out in the revised PPERA rules for non-party campaigners). Recommendation 13: Costs relating to translation from Welsh to and vice versa As the PPERA non-party campaigner rules now exempt the costs associated with translating Welsh to and vice versa, we recommend that equivalent legal provisions should be introduced into the election rules covering spending by political parties and candidates by the relevant government/s at that time. Download our full report Our report on how the 2015 UK general election was run Related content Results and turnout at the 2015 UK general election Gweld y canlyniadau a'r nifer a bleidleisiodd yn etholiad cyffredinol Senedd y DU 2015 Report overview: 2019 UK Parliamentary general election Read our full report on the 2019 UK Parliamentary general election. Find out how it was run, voters' experience, candidates' experience, challenges faced, and how they'll be addressed Report: How the 2017 UK general election was run Read our report about how the 2017 general election was run Report: Voting in 2017 Read our report about voting at the general election in 2017

1. The electoral system | Electoral Commission Search 1. The electoral system You are in the Corporate plan 2022/23 to 2026/27 section Home Our plans and priorities Corporate plan 2022/23 to 2026/27 On this page Scheduled elections in the period April 2022 to March 2027 First published: 25 April 2022 Last updated: 25 April 2022 Introduction The electoral system enables democracy across and within the nations, regions and local areas of the UK by: encouraging people to register to vote, and to trust and value elections and referendums achieving high levels of compliance with registration, reporting and other political finance laws ensuring the delivery of free and fair elections and referendums A range of bodies operate within the electoral system to enable it to function efficiently and effectively. These include: parliaments and governments candidates, parties and campaigners local electoral services led by the Electoral Registration Officers and Returning Officers, who are responsible for directly delivering elections throughout the UK the Electoral Commission which has specific duties related to the oversight of elections, running referendums and the regulation of political finance, along with other bodies that have regulatory and law enforcement responsibilities relating to elections Scheduled elections in the period April 2022 to March 2027 May 2022 Northern Ireland Assembly Local Government (including London Boroughs) Welsh Local Government Scottish Council Combined Authority Mayoral Local Mayoral May 2023 Local Government Northern Ireland Local Government Combined Authority Mayoral Local Mayoral May 2024 Mayor of London and London Assembly Local Government Police and Crime Commissioners (England and Wales) Combined Authority Mayoral Local Mayoral No later than January 2025 UK Parliamentary May 2025 Local Government Combined Authority Mayoral Local Mayoral May 2026 Scottish Parliament Senedd Local Government (including London Boroughs) Combined Authority Mayoral Local Mayoral Navigation Corporate plan 2022/23 to 2026/27 There are five objectives in our corporate plan, which all contribute to our vision that people trust, value and take part in elections.

2. The Electoral Commission Section 2 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan

Northern Ireland Assembly's Parties Panel: 1 October 2019 | Electoral Commission Search Northern Ireland Assembly's Parties Panel: 1 October 2019 You are in the Party panels section Home How we make decisions Party panels First published: 6 November 2020 Last updated: 3 February 2021 Meeting overview Date: 1 October 2019 Time: 9:30am Location: Boardroom, Ormeau Business Park, Belfast Date of next scheduled meeting: 28 January 2020 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting Alliance Party: Sharon Lowry DUP: Lee Reynolds Green Party: Kate Barry Sinn Féin: Gary Fleming and Seamus Drumm SDLP: Catherine Matthews UUP: Barbara Knox The Electoral Commission: Anna Carragher, Commissioner Cahir Hughes, Head of Electoral Commission NI Roisin McDaid, Senior Officer (Political Parties Liaison) Craig Westwood, Director of Communications, Policy and Research Laura Palts McCarthy, Senior Public Affairs Officer Electoral Office for Northern Ireland: Virginia McVea, Chief Electoral Officer for Ireland Welcome and introductions The Chair, Anna Carragher, welcomed everyone to the meeting and round table introductions were made. Anna congratulated Cahir on his new role and updated the panel on other Commission staffing changes. Notes of previous meeting on 11 June 2019 The panel agreed the notes of the previous meeting. There were no matters arising. Issues raised by the political parties No items had been raised by the parties in advance of the meeting. Electoral Commission updates Anna commented on the current political environment and said that the Commission had contingency plans in place for any unscheduled poll. Electoral Commission assessment on May 2019 local government elections Cahir told the panel that on 8 July we wrote to the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland giving our assessment that the local elections in Northern Ireland had been well run, with feedback from voters and observers being positive. A copy of the letter was provided. The Commission identified a number of minor legislative issues that we have highlighted to the Government. These included issues relating to home addresses on ballot papers, the management of the count and polling scheme reviews. In response the Government has already consulted with us on draft legislation to remove the requirement for home addresses to be on ballot paper and other minor issues. Commission response to draft legislation Cahir updated the panel on draft legislation that the Commission had responded to the Government on: Representation of the People (Electronic Communications and Amendment) (Northern Ireland) Regulations 2020 In August we responded to draft legislation for the canvass, welcoming the opportunity it would give voters to respond to a canvass online for the first time in Northern Ireland. Overall we were content with the draft legislation, although we are waiting on a further draft of the Regulations from the NIO. The Local Elections (Northern Ireland) (Amendment) Order 2020 We have also responded to a draft Order from the NIO that makes some amendments to local government elections. Most notably this brings local government elections into line with other elections by removing the requirement for a candidate to have their home address published. It also addresses the issue relating to the use of capital letters for a candidate's name on the ballot paper. We have welcomed the amendments made by the Order. Report on the accuracy and completeness of the electoral registers On 26 September we published our latest assessment on the accuracy and completeness of the electoral registers in Northern Ireland. A copy of the report was provided. Cahir highlighted the headline figures from the report. Private renters remain the least likely to have up to date register entries (38%) compared to people who owned their houses outright (88%). Registration levels are also low among young people aged 18-34, with only 51% correctly registered, compared to 94% for people aged 65 and over. The 2018 figures show a return to the levels of accuracy and completeness recorded in 2012. The last Northern Ireland canvass was in 2013, with the next one scheduled for 2020. The Commission has renewed calls for modernisation of the electoral registration system in Northern Ireland, recommending that public data could be better used to help keep the electoral register accurate and complete throughout the year. Modernising electoral registration feasibility studies Craig updated the panel on the feasibility studies the Commission published in July. The studies explored how the system could be modernised further to make it easier for people to register to vote and for Electoral Registration Officers to maintain accurate and complete electoral registers. Craig said that our studies provided an evidence base for any future policy. Anna added that compared to NI, it is a more complex picture in GB with 381 separate registers. Gary said that they have serious concerns about the register but they support automatic registration of attainers when they get their national insurance number. Lee made the point of being careful with data and that people have the right not to participate. Anna acknowledged the point but added that people should be registered even if they choose not to vote. Craig mentioned the debate about automatic or automated registration. Update from Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland The CEO welcomed Cahir to his new role and thanked the Commission for its accuracy and completeness report. There are now 1.3m people on the register which is one of the highest levels it's been at. From 1 January to 1 October 2019 there were 21,849 paper applications and 117,089 online applications. The mid-year estimate for attainers is at 50%. EONI is looking at different data options to analyse registration levels and target outreach. Working with property services' data, EONI should be able to identify streets with the lowest levels of registration. The CEO would welcome opportunities to work with the Commission and parties on more raising more targeted public awareness. The CEO is also considering how to contact attainers and an option is to use a C2K network which would allow contact with every pupil on the network. Working with CCEA the EONI is planning to provide lesson plan materials for 11-14, 14-16 and 16+ to support electoral registration. The CEO is working with Start 360 to reach those not in education or training. EONI is working with RQIA to improve engagement with care home residents and to develop care home standards that would support this. There was a discussion about the difficulties of getting access to care home residents and how this needs to be balanced with the pressures and priorities of care homes and families. This led to a discussion around access to apartment blocks and their residents' turnout rate. Anna asked if more could be done to improve and modernise access to electoral ID for attainers and the elderly. The CEO said that a legislative change is needed but highlighted some options that could modernise the process. This included using photos on the C2K network for young people. However GDPR legislation would have to be carefully considered alongside this. These are longer term projects and might need pilots to test if they work in practice. The CEO suggested working with the Commission given its experience of the ID pilots in Great Britain The polling station review is due to be published on or before 1 December. The CEO will confirm with parties when it will be published. The CEO will arrange a meeting with the panel to discuss how data sources could be more effectively used to manage the electoral register. Electoral Commission updates – recent Commission publications Codes of Practice on election spending Roisin updated panel members on the Codes of Practice. In July we submitted two codes of practice on election spending to the Minister for Constitution. One on candidate and one on party spending. The Minister now needs to decide whether to make any amendments to the codes before laying them before parliament to approve. The draft codes and our report on the responses to the consultation process were circulated to members in July and are available on our website. The codes, if enacted will apply to elections to Westminster, Northern Ireland Assembly and Councils in Northern Ireland. These codes would also apply at local government elections in Northern Ireland where the regulated period was combined with the regulated period for another election If you have any questions about the codes, please contact Roisin. Political finance – statutory return deadlines Parties were reminded of the following deadlines: Donation and loan returns for 1 July 2019 – 30 September 2019 (Q3 2019) must be submitted by 30 October 2019. Donation and loan returns for 1 October 2019 – 31 December 2019 (Q4 2019) must be submitted by 30 January 2020. Lee raised concerns about advice received regarding the reporting of loans. Roisin said that we can meet to discuss any individual concerns. AOB – none raised Proposed 2020 meeting dates Tuesday 28 January Tuesday 24 March Tuesday 9 June Tuesday 6 October

You are in the UK general elections section Home UK general elections In this section In depth: delivering the 2019 general election In depth: campaigning at the 2019 general election Overview This is a summary of our report on the 2019 UK general election. The report continues in two in-depth sections, covering delivering the election and campaigning at the election . Download the full report as a PDF Jump to

The election was well-run Challenges faced in running elections, and by new campaign techniques Actions and recommendations The election in depth Overview More than 40 million people were registered to vote in the 2019 general election. The turnout of registered voters was 67% The election was generally well-run, but there is new evidence showing challenges for the future The 2019 UK Parliamentary general election was held on Thursday 12 December. More than 40 million people were registered to vote, and the turnout of registered voters was 67%. There were high levels of satisfaction with the processes of registering to vote and voting. These were similar to other recent elections in the UK. Beneath this generally positive picture, however, we have also seen evidence about concerns and problems at this election.

Some people did not receive the service they should be able to expect, and many were not confident that the election was well run. Although more than two thirds of people said they were confident the election was well-run, a significant minority of nearly one in five people told us they were not confident. Many of these people selected reasons related to concerns about campaigning, or the media, to explain why they were not confident. Some people also selected concerns that related to the way the registration or voting process worked. Our report describes how the UK's electoral administration structures are operating under significant strain, and shows that people have growing concerns about some aspects of election campaigns. The report makes recommendations about how the running of elections may be improved. It precedes consideration of the full impact of the COVID-19 pandemic, which is only beginning to be felt at the time of publication. There may be further recommendations to ensure the effective delivery of future elections. Challenges of delivering elections

Challenges of delivering elections Electoral Registration Officers (EROs) were under pressure from large numbers of applications to register to vote made close to the deadline. They had to spend time and effort at a critical point dealing with many duplicate applications Some overseas electors did not have enough time to receive and return postal votes before polling day, as has happened before, which meant their votes could not be counted The December timing brought specific challenges for Returning Officers (ROs), who found it harder to recruit staff and secure polling stations and counting venues Challenges from changing election campaign techniques Challenges from changing election campaign techniques Misleading content and presentation techniques are undermining voters' trust in election campaigns It is too often unclear who is behind digital election campaign material. Significant public concerns about the transparency of digital election campaigns risk overshadowing their benefits Some candidates experienced significant and unacceptable levels of threats, abuse or intimidation Addressing these challenges ahead of the next UK general election Many of the challenges described in this report are not new. We have seen similar issues arise at other recent elections in the UK. But the evidence we have seen after this election shows significant concerns from the public and electoral administrators. Opportunities There is an opportunity between now and the next scheduled general election to make real change. This will protect confidence in how elections are run and increase trust in campaigns. Action needs to begin now

to ensure confidence is not further damaged at future elections. Areas for improvement There are areas where governments, EROs, ROs, political parties, campaigners, social media companies, and regulators need to work together to agree new laws, processes or standards of conduct. We will support this work to ensure changes are workable, will benefit voters, and improve public confidence. Action needed Supporting EROs and ROs to meet voters' expectations The UK Government needs to identify improvements to the online register to vote service, electoral management software systems and the funding model for elections, to help EROs effectively manage large numbers of registration applications (including duplicate applications) ahead of major electoral events The UK Government should also explore reforms that would make it easier for people to register or update their details throughout the year, such as by integrating registration applications into other public service contacts The UK Government needs to consider innovative new approaches to improve voting for overseas electors, using evidence from other countries, particularly given its plans to increase the number of British citizens living abroad who are eligible to vote The UK's three governments need to set out how they will simplify and modernise electoral law, building on the comprehensive and well-supported recommendations by the Law Commissions Supporting trust and confidence in election campaigns s, candidates and political parties need to take greater responsibility for the presentation and content of campaigns they run and the impact of their activities on public confidence in elections The UK Government needs to make progress on its planned consultation on legislation to ensure campaigners have to include information about themselves on digital campaign material Social media companies need to provide more detailed and accurate data about election campaigns and spending in ad libraries on their platforms so we and voters can see more information about who is campaigning Supporting people who want to stand as candidates Political parties and other campaigners, the UK Government and social media companies should continue to take steps to tackle intimidation so that people are not discouraged from standing for election or campaigning because of the risk of abuse, threats or intimidation The election in depth Take an in depth look at the top issues faced at this election: How electoral registration officers and returning officers found delivering the election The challenges posed by campaigning Supporting evidence Supporting evidence Supporting evidence: main data tables for the 2019 UK Parliamentary general election Electoral data: 2019 UK Parliamentary general election Related content Report: Voting in 2017 Read our report about voting at the general election in 2017 Results and turnout at the 2017 UK general election View the results and turnout at the 2017 general election Report: Political finance regulation at the June 2017 UK general election Read our report about political finance regulation at the 2017 general election Report: Electoral registration at the June 2017 UK general election Read our report about electoral registration at the 2017 general election

Letter: To Facebook about digital campaigning at the EU referendum | Electoral Commission Search Letter: To Facebook about digital campaigning at the EU referendum You are in the Key correspondence section Home Key correspondence On this page Letter summary Read our letter in full First published: 16 November 2017 Last updated: 20 December 2019 Summary of the letter Date: 16 November 2017 To: Mr Gareth Lambe, MD Facebook Ireland From: Louise Edwards, Head of Regulation Format: Sent by email Full letter Dear Mr Lambe Political campaign finance transparency You may be aware that we have recently met with colleagues in your Public Policy team. We would like to thank them for their open and productive approach and look forward to continuing to engage with Facebook on the important issues arising from digital political campaigning. The Electoral Commission is responsible for regulating and enforcing the rules - set out in the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000 (PPERA) - that govern political campaign finance in the UK. These rules cover the funding of and spending on campaign activity, and include provisions and offences about acting as an agent for donations, and arrangements to evade the rules on donations. You will be aware of concerns that individuals or organisations from outside the UK, and notably from or on behalf of Russia, may have been campaigning via social media platforms in the June 2016 referendum on the UK's membership of the EU. Further, concerns have been raised that the individuals and funds behind such campaigning, if it occurred, were hidden from those viewing the campaign material. EU referendum campaign activity Campaign activity in the context of the EU Referendum included activities that were intended to, or were otherwise in connection with, promoting or bringing about a particular outcome in the referendum. This included campaign broadcasts, advertising of any kind, unsolicited material sent to voters and market research or other methods of finding out how people intended to vote. Further clarification on what constituted campaign activity was given in our guidance on referendum spending. The referendum was preceded by a regulated period, which ran from 15 April to 23 June 2016. During this period the rules stated campaign activities carried out by referendum campaigners – any individual or entity engaged in campaign activity, whether registered with the Commission or not – could only be financed from permissible donations. This excluded individuals not on the UK or Gibraltar electoral roll and companies not carrying out a business in the UK or Gibraltar. Request for information The Commission's legal duties include taking all reasonable steps to secure compliance with the campaign finance rules (see section 145 of PPERA). In furtherance of this duty, please provide us with the following information: Any evidence you hold of campaign activity conducted via Facebook during the regulated period for the June 2016 EU Referendum (15 April to 23 June 2016) that was funded from Russia. Please provide any such evidence to us by 8 December 2017. In anticipation of this, thank you for your prompt assistance on this important matter. June 2017 UK parliamentary general election Our work in respect of the June general election is ongoing. We may, as part of our assurance work in respect of these returns, wish to contact you at a later date regarding campaign activity on your platform during the general election campaign. Please contact me if you have any questions regarding this request. Related content Letter: Coronavirus and its impact on the May polls Read our letter to Chloe Smith MP (Minister for the Constitution and Devolution) from March 2020 Letter: To Twitter about digital campaigning at the EU referendum Read our letter to Twitter from November 2017 Letter: Electoral Commission investigations in respect of Leave.EU Read our letter to Mr Arron Banks (Chairman, Leave.EU) from November 2017 Letter: BBC NI Spotlight programme "Brexit, Dark Money and the DUP" Read our letter to Mr Jim

Fitzpatrick from February 2018

View current applications | Electoral Commission Search View current applications You are in the section Home First published: 30 May 2019 Last updated: 2 October 2023 List of current applications We publish names, descriptions and emblems which we are currently considering as part of our assessment process. Political parties can't use these names, descriptions and emblems on a ballot paper until we have approved them. However, a party can use these names, descriptions and emblems in other materials before our approval. Date we published the following notices - 02 October 2023 Fairer Voting Party Part of the UK that this application applies to: All of Great Britain Proposed name: Fairer Voting Party Proposed description: Proposed emblem: Great British National Workers Party Part of the UK that this application applies to: All of Great Britain Proposed name: Great British National Workers Party Homeland Party Part of the UK that this application applies to: All of Great Britain Proposed name: Homeland Party More Police Officers for Thames Valley Part of the UK that this application applies to: England Proposed name: More Police Officers for Thames Valley Proposed description: Proposed emblem: New World Order Resisting Independence Party Part of the UK that this application applies to: All of Great Britain Proposed name: New World Order Resisting Independence Party Proposed descriptions: New World Order Resisting Independence Party New World Order R.I.P New World Order Resistance Party Resisting The New World Order Warning! Communism Ahead Proposed emblem: New World Order Resisting Independence Party Part of the UK that this application applies to: Northern Ireland Proposed name: New World Order Resisting Independence Party Proposed descriptions: New World Order Resisting Independence Party New World Order R.I.P New World Order Resistance Party Resisting The New World Order Warning! Communism Ahead Proposed emblem: Party of Women Part of the UK that this application applies to: All of Great Britain Proposed name: Party of Women Proposed description: Proposed emblem: Somerset Unionist Party Part of the UK that this application applies to: England Proposed name: Somerset Unionist Party Proposed emblem: The Other Party Part of the UK that this application applies to: England Proposed name: The Other Party Proposed descriptions: Decentralise The Nation. Choose The Other Party Choose Pure Democracy The Other Party. Choose Life Proposed emblem: Date we published the following notices - 22 September 2023 Democrats (GB) & UK Independence Party (UKIP) (GB) Part of the UK that this application applies to: All of Great Britain Proposed joint description: Patriots Alliance The People's Independent Party Part of the UK that this application applies to: England Proposed name: The People's Independent Party Proposed description: Local people for local people Proposed emblems: Emblem 1 Emblem 2 Date we published the following notices - 19 September 2023 All 4 Freedoms Part of the UK that this application applies to: All of Great Britain Proposed name: European Party Proposed name: Plaid Ewropeadidd Proposed descriptions: European Party: All 4 Freedoms European Party: fair federal future European Party: UK in EU Plaid Ewropeaidd: y 4 rhyddid Proposed emblem: Bury Independents Part of the UK that this application applies to: England Proposed name: Bury Independents Proposed descriptions: Bury Independents - Whitefield and Unsworth Bury Independents - Prestwich Bury Independents - Ramsbottom Bury Independents - Tottington Bury Independents - Whitefield Proposed emblem: New World Order Resisting Independence Party Part of the UK that this application applies to: All of Great Britain Proposed name: New World Order Resisting Independence Party New World Order Resisting Independence Party Part of the UK that this application applies to: Northern Ireland Proposed name: New World Order Resisting Independence Party The Front for British Unity Part of the UK that this application applies to: England Proposed name: The Front for British Unity Proposed description: The party for British Unity The Yoruba Party in the UK Part of the UK that this application applies to: All of Great Britain Proposed name: The Yoruba Party in the UK Proposed descriptions: Yoruba Diaspora mobilising party Yoruba Diaspora welfare party Proposed emblem: Date we published the following notices - 23 August 2023 Communist Future Part of the UK that this application applies to: All of Great Britain Proposed name: Communist Future Proposed descriptions: Communist Future - there is an alternative! There is an alternative: Communist Future Proposed emblem: Godstone Residents Part of the UK that this application applies to: England Proposed name: Godstone Residents Proposed description: Godstone Residents One Farnworth Part of the UK that this application applies to: England Proposed name: One Farnworth Proposed description: Proposed emblem: Scottish Eco-Federalist Party (SEFP) Part of the UK that this application applies to: Scotland Proposed descriptions: Eco-Federalists - For a Sustainable Federal Model Eco-Federalists - Reject Independence, Reject the Tories Scottish Eco-Federalists - Prioritise fighting climate change Scottish Eco-Federalists - Reject Independence, Reject Anglocentrism Scottish Eco-Federalists - For a Sustainable UK Scottish Eco-Federalists - For a Sustainable Union Scottish Eco-Federalists - Reject Independence, Reverse Brexit Scottish Eco-Federalists - Modernise the Union Scottish Eco-Federalists - More Autonomy for Scotland Scottish Eco-Federalists - For Climate Action Scottish Eco-Federalists - Reject Independence, Reject Labour Scottish Eco-Federalists - Reform the Union The Progressive Unity Party Part of the UK that this application applies to: All of Great Britain Proposed name: The Progressive Unity Party Proposed descriptions: Compassion-driven reform for a better future Let's build a better tomorrow, today. A community that values every voice. Proposed emblems: Emblem 1 Emblem 2 Date we published the following notices - 09 June 2023 United Kingdom Democratic Party Part of the UK that this application applies to: All of Great Britain Proposed name: United Kingdom Democratic Party Proposed descriptions: UKDP Against Cuts UKDP for Direct Democracy UKDP - A Voice For Workers Proposed emblem: Related content Find out about party registration applications and decisions Comment on an application Find out how to comment on a particular political party name, description or emblem as part of our assessment process Party registration decisions View our decisions on political party names, descriptions and emblems How political parties are registered

8. Underpinning this work in Wales | Electoral Commission Search

8. Underpinning this work in Wales You are in the Corporate Plan for Wales 2022/23 to 2026/27 section Home Our plans and priorities Corporate Plan for Wales 2022/23 to 2026/27 On this page 1. We demonstrate independence and integrity 2. We are a skilled organisation where diversity is valued 3. We are a learning organisation where improvement is continuous and resources are used efficiently First published: 25 April 2022 Last updated: 25 April 2022 Summary The preceding sections of this Corporate Plan summarise the work we will undertake to achieve our five strategic objectives. We will ensure we are equipped as an organisation to meet these objectives, focussing on the key enabling activities summarised below.

1. We demonstrate independence and integrity The electoral system depends on the Electoral Commission being an independent non-partisan body, and we therefore hold ourselves to high standards of integrity. We work hard to ensure we are respected for our expertise, and that our advice and decision making are free from bias. Given our unique role, our integrity needs to be clear and demonstrable. We will continue to demonstrate our integrity by: taking decisions on the evidence and being transparent about the reasons for them basing our policy positions and recommendations on analysis of evidence effectively communicating our work and views providing responsive services to those we support maintaining effective governance arrangements

Taking decisions on the evidence and being transparent about the reasons for them In making decisions, of a regulatory nature or otherwise, we will proceed based on the law, evidence, fairness and proportionality, and in accordance with sound governance processes. Our published policies, such as our Corporate Governance Framework and Enforcement Policy, provide a clear understanding of how we operate and make decisions. Wherever and to the extent it is appropriate for us to provide reasons for decisions we will do so, including in accordance with freedom of information and data protection law. To that end we will continue to publish the outcome of every investigation, and highlight instances where learning from investigations could assist other campaigners in understanding and applying the law. We are accountable to the Courts for our decisions and the reasons for them, as well as being accountable to parliaments. Basing our policy positions and recommendations on analysis of evidence Our recommendations must be evidence-based and underpinned by research if they are to be trusted, adopted and taken forward. We will continue to conduct research to understand how elections and referendums have been run and experienced. We will continue to develop our evidence base on all issues that impact the electoral system – from voters' perceptions of the legitimacy of elections, to challenges faced by electoral administrators. We will embed the horizon-scanning approach that underpins our policy development work, and will continue to identify challenges and recommend solutions. Effectively communicating our work and views We want to ensure our work and our considered views have impact. We will therefore continue to ensure all information relevant to Wales is published in English and Welsh. We will use plain English and Clir, avoid jargon to aid understanding, and will communicate clearly to all audiences. We will continue to make our services and the information we provide accessible. Providing responsive services to those we support We support our stakeholders – including voters, campaigners, and electoral administrators – with accessible information and guidance on all aspects of the electoral system. They come to us for advice and support, and expect a responsive service that meets their needs. We will continue to consult our stakeholders to understand their expectations of our services, and will make improvements based on their needs. We will maintain high standards of customer service. Maintaining effective governance arrangements We outline our governance arrangements in Section 12 of this Corporate Plan.

2. We are a skilled organisation where diversity is valued We want our workforce to feel valued and be supported to achieve their potential. In the next five years we will:

implement refreshed working practices to reflect wider changes in our work environment and culture attract, retain and develop the people we need maintain and improve high standards of leadership and management, with a focus on developing our people further embed equality, diversity and inclusion in all aspects of our work ensure the Welsh language is treated no less favourably than the language Implement refreshed working practices to reflect wider changes in our work environment and culture The coronavirus pandemic has impacted our working practices and resulted in new behaviours and approaches. We will learn from this to ensure that we retain the benefits, embedding more flexible working in ways that benefit our people, the Commission as a whole and our stakeholders. We will ensure our culture and behaviours reflect these values. We will also strengthen our approach to internal communications, working hard to keep our people connected, informed and motivated. We provide more information about how we will utilise technology to support new working practices below. Attract, retain and develop the people we need Our people are the core of our organisation. We will enable them to be skilled, with the diverse expertise needed to deliver our work. We will ensure they are capable, with a focus on being effective in everything they do, and committed, with a passion for democracy and our role in supporting it. We don't take these qualities for granted, and we will continue to implement our People Strategy to ensure we continue to attract, retain and develop the best team possible. Maintain and improve high standards of leadership and management, with a focus on developing our people Learning is a key part of our people's day to day work, and we are committed to supporting their development. We will continue to achieve high standards of leadership, management and people development, consulting our people to ensure we support their specific needs. Further embed equality, diversity and inclusion in all aspects of our work We value diversity, and aim to be an open and inclusive organisation. We celebrate the breadth of thinking, skills and experience that our people bring to our organisation. And, we are committed to being an inclusive regulator, with strategies and processes that reflect the diversity of those we serve. We will deliver a renewed equality, diversity and inclusion strategy. We will implement the Business in the Community Race at Work Charter. And, we will work to increase and support diversity at senior levels, including representation on our Commission Board. Ensure the Welsh language is treated no less favourably than the language We are committed to treating the Welsh and languages equally in all our work. We will continue to ensure that people in Wales can access our services and all information we publish which relates to Wales in both Welsh and . We will continue to fulfil our statutory responsibility by meeting the Welsh Language Standards, set by the Welsh Language Commissioner through the Compliance Notice. We plan to strengthen our commitment to these standards, and the Welsh language more generally, by implementing a new Welsh Language Compliance Plan. This will include appointing a senior owner of the Welsh Language Standards within the Electoral Commission. The Electoral Commission in Wales will continue to lead and support other teams throughout the UK to uphold the Welsh Language Standards.

3. We are a learning organisation where improvement is continuous and resources are used efficiently The world around us is changing rapidly. We need to adapt fast to be successful. In order to do this we aim to be rigorous in learning from experience and seek continuous improvement in all that we do. With pressures on public spending set to continue, it is crucial that we continue to manage our costs and make effective use of our technology, funding, time and resources. In the next five years we will: procure and implement value for money IT systems that improve service delivery maintain our financial strategy to keep the Commission within approved budgets continue to develop techniques to learn from experience, seek continuous improvement and become more efficient and effective develop a corporate environmental strategy that meets policy and legislative requirements for reduced environmental impact We will do this through effective leadership and management within a five-year financial plan that is aimed at costs of no more after inflation in 2026/27 than it does in 2021/22. Procure and implement value for money IT systems that improve service delivery Technology and data are crucial to our work. Our website and Political Finance Online database allow us to publish vital information which is in the public interest, bringing transparency to our democracy. Our internal systems are key to ensuring the quality of our work, and enable us to effectively manage risk. We will continue our programme to procure and implement new IT systems. We will ensure our infrastructure is up to date and fit for purpose. We will launch our new Political Finance Online database to make it easier and faster for parties and campaigners to submit financial data. We will also implement a new customer relationship management tool. Maintain our financial strategy to keep the Commission within approved budgets We detail our financial strategy in Section 8. With pressures on public spending and a need to ensure value for money, our spend on core services will be no higher in real terms at the end of the Corporate Plan period than it is at the beginning. We will work to increase the value we deliver for parliaments.

Continue to develop techniques to learn from experience, seek continuous improvement and become more efficient and effective Technology enables us to run an efficient workplace, but our processes are also key to ensuring the quality of our work. We will embed quality management processes across all our services and functions. We want to improve the way we make decisions, and will also make better use of our knowledge. We will develop and implement a new knowledge management framework. We want to meet the needs of voters, parties and campaigners, electoral administrators and parliaments, and will undertake research to understand their expectations of our services. Develop a corporate environmental strategy that meets policy and legislative requirements We outline our plans to reduce the environmental impact of the electoral system in sections 2 and 5 of this Corporate Plan. We are also committed to reducing the environmental impact of our organisation. We will enhance our expertise, ensuring we have the environmental skills we need. We will carry out an environmental audit. We will develop and implement an action plan to achieve our environmental targets in line with legislation. This will include reducing waste and increasing recycling where possible. Navigation 7. A modern and sustainable electoral system in Wales Section 7 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan for Wales 9. Managing our costs in Wales Section 9 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan for Wales

Board notes: 25 September 2019 informal presentation/discussion for Commissioners on accuracy and completeness survey | Electoral Commission Search

Board notes: 25 September 2019 informal presentation/discussion for Commissioners on accuracy and completeness survey You are in the Electoral Commission Board

section Home How we make decisions Electoral Commission Board On this page Accuracy and completeness survey First published: 22 January 2020 Last updated: 6 February 2020 Meeting overview Date: Wednesday 25 September 2019 Location: Boothroyd Room, 3

Bunhill Row, London Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting John Holmes, Chair

Anna Carragher Sarah Chambers Elan Closs Stephens Alasdair Morgan Rob Vincent Stephen Gilbert Joan Walley Bob Posner, Chief Executive Craig Westwood, Director, Communications, Policy and Research Kieran Rix, Director, Finance and Corporate Services Louise Edwards, Director, Regulation Mel Davidson, Head of Support and Improvement David Bailey, Head of Strategic Planning and Performance David Meek, Senior Adviser, Governance Phil Thompson, Head of Research Tom Hawthorn, Head of Policy Mark Williams, Policy Manager Accuracy and completeness survey The Head of Research introduced the presentation, and explained that the purpose of the research

was to provide an overview of the accuracy and completeness of electoral registers in Great Britain and Northern Ireland, inform our guidance for Electoral Registration Officers, and inform our approach to public awareness campaigns. The presentation covered the latest report on the quality of the 372 electoral registers in the UK.

Care was taken to ensure that the sampled households represented geographically spread local authorities across England, Scotland and Wales and wards across Northern Ireland. This was the first time where the sample size in Wales and Scotland allowed us to make robust estimates for those devolved areas. While our response rate of 72% was quite high, the Board understood there was a risk of systematic bias from which households were likely to respond, which was difficult to address. The survey found that around 17% of eligible voters in Great Britain were not correctly registered at their current address. In Northern Ireland, 25% of eligible voters were not correctly registered. In addition, more than 10% of entries on the registers in Great Britain and 20% in Northern Ireland were inaccurate. The Head of Research acknowledged that the study could not accurately measure voters who were registered in more than one constituency. The Board heard that young people, recent home movers, and private renters were much less likely to be correctly registered. People who had lived at their address for under two years were significantly less likely to be correctly registered than those who had lived at their address for longer. Private renters were much less likely to have up-to-date register entries than those who own their homes outright. These findings were similar to results from previous surveys. The Board discussed the registration rates of voters with different characteristics. The study found lower rates of registration among voters aged under 35 as compared to voters aged over 35 in both Great Britain and Northern Ireland. There was concern that the data indicated that lower rates of registration among young people in Northern Ireland was resulting in lower rates of registration in older cohorts; voters who were not accurately registered when younger appeared less likely to be correctly registered as they aged. The Board considered the limitations of existing registration campaigns, and considered new methods to improve accuracy and completeness. The Board noted the proposed reforms to the annual canvass that were already underway. The Board considered options that could improve the accuracy and completeness of the register. Some options included allowing Electoral Registration Officers greater access to existing national data which could support more automated or automatic registration. There was also discussion of integrating electoral registration into other public service transactions, for example applying for or renewing driving licences, to make it easier for voters to keep their registration details accurate. A move towards more automated forms of registration for specific groups, for example registering young voters when they were allocated their National Insurance number ahead of their sixteenth birthday, could also help to improve levels of registration. The Head of Research noted the difficulties of reliably comparing accuracy and completeness figures over time and across different studies. He explained that other factors had to be taken into account, such as the number of European Union nationals living in the UK at the time of comparison. There had also been changes to the franchise over time which would affect the ability to compare figures. The Board asked the Head of Research to consider providing a comparison with other countries. The Board discussed how best to present the findings and the recommendations of the study. The Board considered it appropriate to provide granular information on the characteristics of voters who were less likely to be registered. The Board also suggested recommending changes to registration to reduce the number of duplications in the system. The meeting ended at 2.35pm.

You are in the section Home What is the Elections Act? The UK government is making changes to the UK electoral system. The Election Act contains measures that affect: elections and the way we vote campaigning and the rules on campaign spending and funding parliamentary oversight of the Electoral Commission about the Act Changes to elections and the way you vote Requirement to show ID at polling stations about the UK Government's voter ID proposal. Changes to postal voting The UK Government has proposed a number of changes to postal voting. . Changes to proxy voting about the proposed changes to voting by proxy, where someone you trust votes on your behalf. Changes to elections and the way you vote Improving the accessibility of elections Read about the proposals to make it easier for people with disabilities to vote.

Preventing undue influence Read about the proposals to simplify and clarify the offence of undue influence (when someone uses, or threatens to use, force or violence to make someone vote a certain way). Changes for EU Citizens about proposed changes to EU Citizens' rights to vote and stand in elections. Changes to elections and the way you vote Changes to overseas voting about proposals to remove the 15 year limit on voting rights for British citizens living overseas. Changes to the voting system for mayoral and PCC elections Read about the proposals to change the voting system for mayoral and Police and Crime Commissioner elections in England and Wales. Changes for campaigners and spending and donation rules Introducing digital imprints about the proposed changes to digital imprints on election material. Preventing candidate intimidation Read about the proposals for a new penalty for intimidating candidates, campaigners or elected representatives. Changes to notional spending Read about the proposals to clarify the rules that relate to notional spending for candidates and agents. Changes to legal requirements for parties and non-party campaigners about proposals to change the law affecting parties and non-party campaigners. Changes to how Parliament oversees our work The Electoral Commission's ability to bring prosecutions about the proposal that would stop us from being able to bring prosecutions against those who break electoral law relating to parties and campaigners. A strategy and policy statement for the Electoral Commission about the UK Government's proposal for the Electoral Commission.

Executive Team You are in the section Home First published: 30 May 2019 Last updated: 1 April 2022 Summary Members of our executive team are each responsible for different areas of our work. They provide leadership to their teams, and ensure we deliver the strategies provided by our Commission Board. Our Executive Team Shaun McNally CBE, Chief Executive As Chief Executive, Shaun leads the organisation, putting into practice strategies agreed with our Commission Board. Shaun joined the Commission in April 2022 from the Ministry of Justice, where he led on the Department's planning, preparation and response to major incidents, including the end of the EU transition period and Covid-19. He has more than 35 years working within the UK justice system, with his previous roles including Chief Executive of the Legal Aid Agency, Director of Legal Aid Casework, and Director of Crime at Her Majesty's Courts and Tribunal Service, HM Courts Service. Shaun was awarded a CBE in the January 2008 New Year's Honours list in recognition of his leadership and delivery of the North Liverpool Community Justice Centre. Ailsa Irvine, Director of Electoral Administration and Guidance Ailsa is responsible for our guidance. This includes guidance for electoral administrators on running electoral events, as well as the guidance for candidates and agents, political parties and other organisations. Ailsa has been at the Commission for over a decade, holding a number of different positions since starting as the Policy and Practice Officer in Scotland in 2003. From 2010 to the end of 2016, Ailsa was Head of Guidance, leading on the Commission's guidance, support and performance standards work. She played a key role in supporting the Commission's previous Chair, Jenny Watson, in her role as Chief Counting Officer at the recent EU referendum. Ailsa was appointed Director of Electoral Administration in January 2017. Louise Edwards, Director of Regulation and Digital Transformation Louise Edwards is our Director of Regulation and Digital Transformation. Louise is responsible for our regulatory work and digital, data, technology and facilities infrastructure. This includes funding and spending at elections and referendums, registering political parties, our enforcement work, and data and information management. Prior to joining the Commission, she worked for a range of regulators including the Charity Commission for England and Wales, The Independent Parliamentary Standards Authority, Ofgem and the Home Office. Craig Westwood, Director of Communications, Policy and Research Craig oversees the work of our campaigns, external communications, policy and research teams, which includes our public awareness campaigns right through to our recommendations for policy change. Craig joined the Electoral Commission in August 2016. Between February 2013 and July 2016, Craig was a Partner at the corporate communications agency Pagefield, leading corporate affairs accounts for clients ranging from major multi-national brands to small charities. These included AB InBev, Kellogg's and HS1 Ltd, the British Library, the Fundraising Regulator and the Roddick Foundation. He spent the preceding 10 years in the Civil Service, in a series of policy roles in the Department for Culture, Media and Sport and the Department of Health, concluding with three years as Private Secretary to the Minister for Culture, Communications and Creative Industries. Before joining the Civil Service, Craig worked in corporate press offices including at Fourth Estate publishers and at the British Library. Craig is a trustee of the arts charity Poet in the City, which creates new audiences for poetry through a programme of events, commissions and education work. Related content Our Senior Leadership Team Meet our Senior Leadership Group, and find out what they're responsible for Interim corporate plan 2020/21 - 2024/25 Our interim corporate plan was published following the 2019 UK Parliament general election. It has now been replaced by our 2022/23 to 2026/27 plan. Our spending about our spending estimates, reports and accounts Our Commissioners

Audit and Risk Committee | Electoral Commission Search Audit and Risk Committee You are in the How we make decisions section Home How we make decisions First published: 30 May 2019 Last updated: 25 August 2022 About our Audit and Risk Committee The Audit and Risk Committee supports the Accounting Officer in carrying out their formal accountability responsibilities. The Committee offers objective advice and ensures that the most efficient, effective and economic risk, control and governance processes are in place. The Audit and Risk Committee also acts on behalf of the Board to provide them with assurance on these issues. There shall be three members of the Audit and Risk Committee, which will include the Chair. The Chair is appointed by the Commission Board. An Independent Adviser shall be appointed by the Commission Board, but not be a member of the Audit and Risk Committee . The Audit and Risk Committee minutes will be circulated to the Board and a report of the work of the Audit and Risk Committee will be presented annually to the Board. Related content Electoral Commission Board Find out about our Electoral Commission board, and read the minutes of past meetings Our Commissioners Our Executive Team Meet our Executive Team, and find out more about them Interim corporate plan 2020/21 - 2024/25
Our interim corporate plan was published following the 2019 UK Parliament general election. It has now been replaced by our 2022/23 to 2026/27 plan.

Board minutes: 22 September 2021 | Electoral Commission Search
Board minutes: 22 September 2021 You are in the Electoral Commission Board section Home How we make decisions Electoral Commission Board On this page Who was at the meeting Apologies and welcomes Declarations of interest Minutes of the previous Board meeting Corporate Plan 2022/23 – 2026/27: Final Performance report quarter one 2021/22 Discussion on Board diversity and update on Equality, Diversity and Inclusion (EDI) activities Policy Development Grants scheme Dates of proposed Commission Board and Committee meetings 2022/23 Update from the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee (RemCo) Chair Update from the Audit and Risk Committee (ARC) Chair Annual review of complaints Chief Executive's update Commission Board action tracker Forward Plan of Board business Incoming Chief Executive salary First published: 4 January 2022 Last updated: 4 February 2022 Meeting summary Date: Wednesday 22 September 2021 Time: 9:30am to 12:50pm Location: In person and by video conference Date of next scheduled meeting: Wednesday 20 October 2021 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting John Pullinger, Chair Rob Vincent Sue Bruce Alex Attwood Sarah Chambers Elan Closs Stephens Stephen Gilbert Alasdair Morgan Joan Walley Katy Radford In attendance: Bob Posner, Chief Executive Craig Westwood, Director, Communications, Policy and Research Louise Edwards, Director, Regulation Ailsa Irvine, Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance Kieran Rix, Director, Finance and Corporate Services Binnie Goh, General Counsel Zena Khan, Senior Advisor, Governance David Bailey, Head, Strategic Planning and Performance (items 4, 5, 6 and 12) Bola Raja, Performance and Planning Manager (item 4) Tim Crowley, Head, Digital Communications and Learning (item 4) Marcia Bluck, External Consultant (item 6) Carol Sweetenham, Head of Projects (item 6) Cindy Williams, Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Lead (item 6) Daniel Stoker, Senior Advisor, Policy (item 7) Kate Engles, Policy Manager (item 7) Apologies and welcomes The Chair welcomed all to the first hybrid meeting of the Commission Board, with some attendees joining in person, following social distancing rules, and others joining remotely. The Chair welcomed Katy Radford, the new Commissioner for Northern Ireland, to her first Board meeting, participating as an observer while we wait for her signed Royal Warrant. The Chair advised that they would be joined by an external facilitator, Marcia Bluck at agenda item 6, to facilitate part of the discussions on Equality, Diversity and Inclusion. It was noted that item 9 of the agenda (Incoming Chief Executive salary) would be taken at the end of all business items, as limited staff members would remain. Declarations of interest Commissioner Sue Bruce declared that she had stepped up from Deputy Chair to presently Chair the 'Prince's Foundation'. The Board noted that the Commissioners' Register of interests would be updated and this reflected on the Commission's external website in line with the Commissioners' Code of Conduct. Minutes of the previous Board meeting (EC 58/21) Resolved: That the minutes of the Commission Board meeting on 21 July 2021 be agreed. Corporate Plan 2022/23 – 2026/27: Final (EC 59/21) The Chief Executive introduced the report updating Commissioners on the present position with regards to processes for the three parliaments and on the final budgets. It was noted that Commissioners for Scotland and Wales would further review the cover letters to respectively the Scottish Parliament and the Senedd that will accompany the narrative for the Corporate Plan and Main Estimate. Resolved: That the Board agreed the final Corporate Plan 2022/23 – 2026/27 and associated budgets subject to further review of material to be submitted to the Scottish Parliament and the Senedd by the Commissioners for Scotland and Wales. Performance report quarter one 2021/22 (EC 60/21) The Chief Executive introduced the report providing a summary on progress. The Director, Finance and Corporate Services advised that he was currently confident that financial pressures could be managed within budget, although he and the Chief Executive would be holding meetings with Directors during October to assure the mid-year forecasts. Commissioners discussed several aspects of recent performance including speed of complex investigations and staff turnover. The Board requested a paper to a future meeting showing the process of an investigation including the length of time it takes and outcomes. The Board further requested the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee to report back on staff turnover, liaising as necessary with the Audit and Risk Committee. Action: To bring back to a future meeting a paper on the process of an investigation, time allocated and outcomes.

Action owner: Director, Regulation. Submitted by: December Board meeting. Resolved: That the Board noted the delivery of the work programme and considered areas where more scrutiny was required. Discussion on Board diversity and update on Equality, Diversity and Inclusion (EDI) activities (EC 61/21) The General Counsel introduced the item updating Commissioners on the recent progress made delivering the Commission's commitment to Equality, Diversity and Inclusion (EDI). The second item on well-being was deferred to a future meeting. The Board reviewed and discussed areas within the draft EDI Strategy including widening the range of groups reached such as carers and people with various disabilities and generally to recognise diversity of thought beyond the groups identified in law with protected characteristics. Serious consideration needs to be given to unconscious bias.

Commissioners emphasised the importance of demonstrating commitment to the themes of the strategy rather than simply being compliant with rules. It was suggested that we should explore best practice adopted elsewhere, notably in Northern Ireland. The Board noted the importance of getting the strategy out and for the consultation to be put in place and the work programme introduced. Further progress will be reported to future meetings. The General Counsel introduced Marcia Bluck, an external consultant who led a session on exploring options to improve Board diversity. The Board noted a presentation focussing Commissioners on the following: Improving diversity at Board level Improving representation – protected characteristics and socio-economics Widening the perspectives of the Board Deepening authentic engagement with diverse groups The Board discussed various ways in which to build confidence and reputation and set clear objectives and value for individuals, including recruiting an independent advisor on EDI to the Board. The Board thanked Marcia for a provoking, thoughtful presentation and welcomed discussions. Further detail and job description for an EDI independent advisor to the Board will be brought back to a future meeting for agreeing. Action: The Board delegated authority to the Chief Executive and General Counsel to prepare further detail and job description, for an independent advisor on EDI to the Board and a mechanism for engaging Commissioners. Action owner: Chief Executive and General Counsel. Submitted by: October 2021. Resolved: That the Board noted and agreed the actions taken during this year to promoting equality, diversity and inclusion. Resolved: That the Board agreed for the Commission to go out to consultation on the EDI Strategy and the new EIA material. Policy Development Grants scheme (EC 62/21) The Chief Executive and the Director, Communications, Policy and Research introduced the report. The Executive invited the Board to agree the Alba party joining the Scheme, but wanted to further consider both how the allocation of grant should work and the additional recommendation. The Board agreed that the Alba party join the Scheme and delegated to the Chief Executive, with Director, Communications, Policy and Research, reviewing and then writing to the Board with proposed recommendations to the Minister. Board responses would enable the Chief Executive to finalise the approach and write accordingly to the Minister.

Action: The Board delegated to the Chief Executive, with the Director, Communications, Policy and Research to review how the grant will be allocated with the Alba party being part of the Scheme, then write to the Board with proposed recommendations to the Minister. Action owner: Chief Executive Submitted by: End of October Resolved: That the Board agreed to include the Alba Party as an eligible Scotland-only party. Dates of proposed Commission Board and Committee meetings 2022/23 (EC 63/21) The Chair advised Commissioners to liaise directly with the Board Secretary on slight adjustments to the proposed Board and Committee meeting dates for 2022/23. This would include a meeting outside London and continuing to plan for hybrid meetings. Action: The Board Secretary would revisit the proposed Board and Committee meeting dates for 2022/23 incorporating a meeting outside London and continuation of hybrid meetings. Action owner: Board Secretary Submitted by: December 2021 Resolved: That the Board noted a revised proposal would be circulated by the Board Secretary on Board and Committee meeting dates for 2022/23. Update from the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee (RemCo) Chair (Oral) The Board received an oral update from the Chair of the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee (RemCo) of their meeting held on the 20 July 2021. The Board noted an update on People Strategy followed by a presentation on COVID ways of working and wellbeing from the Head of Information, Communication and Technology. There was an update on the EDI Strategy from the Head of Projects and, a report on recruitment showing a low turnover. A report on the Executive salaries was agreed. Resolved: That the Board noted the oral update. Update from the Audit and Risk Committee (ARC) Chair (Oral) The Board received an oral update from the Chair of the Audit and Risk Committee (ARC) of their meeting held on the 21 September 2021. The Board noted a report on the Risk appetite statement of which recommendations will come to a future Board meeting for discussion, an oral update on the Risk improvement plan and oral updates from our internal and external auditors. It was noted that non-ARC Commission members would be welcome to observe a future ARC meeting. The Board noted a presentation on a deep dive into training and development of ARC members. There was a review of schedule of policies and codes which is done periodically. It was noted that within the post meeting discussion following main ARC business, a discussion was had about recruitment and retention in the Commission and a risk of losing corporate memory. A discussion on an action plan arose and a suggestion was to invite the Chair of RemCo to a discussion on this topic. The Board noted that it was Commissioner Alasdair Morgan's last ARC meeting serving on the Committee for 10 years and Commissioner Stephen Gilbert's first ARC meeting as a participating observer until he joins as a full member in November. Resolved: That the Board noted the oral update. Annual review of complaints (EC 64/21) The Director, Finance and Corporate Services introduced the report providing the Board with the annual review of complaints received during the period 1 April 2020 to 30 June 2021. The period also took into account data related to May 2021 elections. Resolved: That the Board noted and have been assured that complaints are dealt with appropriately and that any necessary action resulting from complaints was taken. Chief Executive's update (EC 65/21) Resolved: That the Board noted the introduction and update from the Chief Executive's report. Commission Board action tracker (EC 66/21) Resolved: That the Board noted the progress against actions requested by the Board. Forward Plan of Board business (EC 67/21) Resolved: That the Board reviewed and noted the Forward Plan of Board business scheduling further topics for the next few meetings. At this point staff colleagues and guests were asked to leave the meeting except for the Chief Executive, General Counsel, Director, Finance and Corporate Services and the Board Secretary. Incoming

Chief Executive salary (Oral) Director, Finance and Corporate Services introduced a paper following an Extraordinary meeting of the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee (RemCo) on 17 September 2021 with recommendations to the Board. Resolved:
That the Board agreed the recommendations of the Committee.

Accredited Organisations: submission of additional names | Electoral Commission

Search

Accredited Organisations: submission of additional names

You are in the Observing elections and referendums section Home Observing elections and referendums Update application: Accredited organisation First published: 9 March 2021 Last updated: 11 August 2022 summary of page Please note this form is for organisations who are already accredited, to provide details of additional individuals for accreditation. If you wish to apply for organisational accreditation please click here. What you and your observers need to apply To add an additional name for accreditation, you will need: your organisation name an email contact for your organisation the names of the people who will be observing for your organisation, as well as a passport style photo and identification The photo needs to: just include the observer be a headshot, so that it includes their face and shoulders clearly show their face, with their eyes open be taken against a plain background The identification needs to show the observer's name and age. You can upload their: passport driving licence national identity card Northern Ireland electoral identity card 700KB is the maximum file size for all of the photos and ID.

Anything above this cannot be processed. You can contact us via observers@electoralcommission.org.uk if any of the observers do not have this form of identification. Update application: Submit additional names Update application:

Submit additional names

Performance analysis 2019/20: Goal two | Electoral Commission Search

Performance analysis 2019/20: Goal two You are in the Annual Report and Accounts 2019/20 section Home Our plans and priorities Annual Report and Accounts 2019/20 On this page Key achievements Performance measures First published: 30 June 2020 Last updated: 30 August 2020 Goal two To ensure an increasingly trusted and transparent system of regulation in political finance, overseeing compliance, promoting understanding amongst those regulated and proactively pursuing breaches This goal captures our regulatory role. This work focuses on two areas at the heart of a healthy democracy: ensuring transparency and good regulation. Key achievements To ensure transparency, we: published annual accounts from registered parties, information about donations and loans, and details of campaign spending, which parties and others are required to report to us registered political parties and other campaigners and published details in online registers continued reviewing party descriptions, to ensure that voters can identify the party for which candidates are standing continued developing a new online portal for party registration and finance, which we aim to launch in 2021 and will improve how parties and campaigners register and deliver financial returns scrutinised advertising transparency proposals from social media companies including Facebook, Google, Twitter and Snapchat, to ensure they provided improved transparency about digital campaign activity at elections in 2019 To support good regulation we: provided advice and guidance to support parties, candidates and campaigners to comply with the rules took action and imposed sanctions when the political finance rules were broken defended legal challenges to our enforcement decisions developed new codes of practice for parties and candidates continued pressing for law changes to strengthen our investigatory and sanctioning powers – including increasing the maximum fine we are able to impose for breaches of PPERA from the current level of £20,000 worked with the National Assembly for Wales to review their Standing Orders and ensure they have a robust plan to develop new rules and guidance for the elections in 2021 and to bring dual reporting to an end

Performance measures Measures Performance We publish routine financial returns from parties and campaigners, including statements of accounts, within 30 working days of receiving them (target 100%) 100% Achieved We check a minimum of 25% of all financial returns for accuracy and compliance each year 57.7% 1 Achieved We publish 100% of guidance products on time with no substantive errors 100% Achieved We provide accurate advice within five to 20 days of receipt of the request, depending on the complexity of the advice (target 90%) 94% Achieved We notify applicants of the outcome of their registration applications within 30 days of a complete application 75% of the time 86.2% Achieved We conduct timely and proportionate investigations of which 90% are completed within 180 days 84.3% 2 Achieved We issue 90% of final notices setting out our sanctions within 21 days of the deadline for representations. We publish the outcome of all our investigations 87.5% 3 Achieved We make timely regulatory recommendations that reflect the principles guiding our approach to effective regulatory framework 100% Achieved Ensuring transparency Throughout the year, we focussed on delivering the responsibilities we are accountable for to the UK's parliaments. We maintained the registers of political parties, ensuring only parties meeting the legal tests are on the register, and we continued reviewing descriptions to help voters identify the party for which candidates are standing. We faced two instances of campaigners seeking, via the court, to have their spending returns removed from our online database. One campaigner withdrew their court application and the court refused the other application. Good regulation Leading up to the UK Parliamentary general election, we registered a record number of non-party campaigners. We also developed our approach to campaign monitoring to be more proactive and quickly identify and intervene when issues came up. This stopped them from escalating and prevented campaigners from breaking the rules. We will continue to focus on this. We continued to use our investigation and sanctioning powers to identify and respond to non-compliance and deter future non-compliance. We imposed fines of £25k and £40k respectively, on two registered parties for multiple failures. The courts heard three appeals against penalties in 2019. One was withdrawn, one refused and one upheld. This brings the total number of appeals against sanctions we have imposed to five, of which the courts have upheld one. The appeals have provided helpful case law and we have learned from each case to improve our enforcement approach. For a number of years we have recommended that the UK's governments should change laws to strengthen our investigatory and sanctioning powers. This year we saw such changes in Scotland, where the Scottish Parliament, through the Referendums (Scotland) Act, increased the level of fines available to us (from £20,000 to £500,000); gave us wider powers to obtain information outside of formal investigations; and established rules to require imprints on digital campaign material. Report navigation links Previous Next Performance analysis: Goal one Performance analysis: Goal three 1. The number of returns we check annually varies and is higher in years with electoral events, when we receive more and larger financial returns. ■ Back to content at footnote 1 2. Where we missed the deadline, the cases were complex and required significant legal advice or evidential analysis. The unscheduled UK Parliamentary general election also required us to re-allocate resource. ■ Back to content at footnote 2 3. Our need to prioritise monitoring and interventions work during the campaign period for the unscheduled UK Parliamentary general election temporarily drew resources away from sanctions decisions. ■ Back to content at footnote 3 Related content Annual Report and Accounts 2019/20 Read our annual report and accounts for 2019/20, including key figures about the year at a glance. Performance analysis 2019/20: Goal one This is goal one of the performance analysis section of our annual report and accounts Performance analysis 2019/20: Goal three This is goal three of the performance analysis section of our annual report and accounts Performance analysis 2019/20: Goal four This is goal four of the performance analysis section of our annual report and accounts

Response to Scottish Government consultation on electoral reform | Electoral Commission Search Response to Scottish Government consultation on electoral reform You are in the Our responses to consultations section Home Our responses to consultations Currently reading: of 5 - Show page contents On this page Candidates Voting Scheduling of elections Campaigning Administration and Governance Introduction by: Enabling the delivery of free and fair elections and referendums, focusing on the needs of voters and addressing the changing environment to ensure every vote remains secure and accessible. Regulating political finance, taking proactive steps to increase transparency, ensure compliance and pursue breaches. Using our expertise to make and advocate for changes to our democracy, aiming to improve fairness, transparency and efficiency. The Commission was set up in 2000 and reports to the Scottish, UK and Welsh parliaments. Response overview This response sets out the Commission's views on the Scottish Government's consultation on electoral reform . It also includes additional recommendations that we suggest the Scottish Government reflect in policy development and legislation. We look forward to working with the Scottish Government in developing its thinking as the process continues. The Scottish Government needs to carefully consider the resilience of local electoral services as it takes forward its programme of reform. The issue of resilience has been clearly set out by us in our recent reports on the administration of elections in Scotland, and also raised by Returning Officers (ROs), Electoral Registration Officers (EROs) and the Electoral Management Board for Scotland (EMB). The proposals set out in the consultation are wide-ranging, and all those involved in delivering or participating in elections will need time to understand and prepare for any changes. For electoral administrators, many of whom have already raised concerns around their capacity, implementation of the Scottish Government's planned reforms is also likely to coincide with ongoing work to deliver changes resulting from the UK Government's Elections Act. In light of this it will be important to review the remit of the EMB in order to develop its capacity to support the delivery of electoral administration across Scotland, including considering any efficiencies which could be gained in delivering electoral services. Further, the Scottish Government will need to provide appropriate funding to local authorities to support the effective implementation of any changes. Failure to do so could create significant risks to the delivery of well-run polls and public confidence in elections. The Scottish Government will need to ensure that any legislation is in place at least six months before it is required to be implemented or complied with by campaigners, ROs or EROs. This will be essential to support effective planning for and delivery of the changes. For changes to be delivered effectively ahead of the 2026 Scottish Parliament election this means at least six months before: the commencement of the 1 July 2025 annual canvass in the case of changes to electoral registration processes the regulated period for campaigners which commences in January 2026 for any changes to campaigner laws the date of the poll on 7 May 2026 for any changes to voter participation in the election We note the Minister's intention to introduce legislation to the Scottish Parliament before the end of 2023. We will continue to monitor timescales for the delivery of any legislation and make Ministers and Parliament aware of any risks to changes being effectively delivered for voters. The Scottish Government should also utilise the opportunities provided by a legislative programme for electoral reform to consolidate, simplify and modernise the many existing sources of electoral law as recommended by the Law Commissions of Scotland, England and Wales, and Northern Ireland. This will help to minimise the impact of any further reform on the resilience of the electoral community by reducing the complexity of electoral law. Candidates Expansion of candidacy rights Question 1: Do you think that 16 and 17 year-olds should be able to stand for election in: Both Scottish Parliament and Local Government elections Scottish Parliament elections only Local Government elections only Neither Scottish Parliament nor Local Government elections Question 2: Do you think that foreign nationals resident in Scotland with limited rights to remain in the UK should be able to stand for election in: Both Scottish Parliament and Local Government elections Scottish Parliament elections only Local Government elections only Neither Scottish Parliament nor Local Government elections Question 3: Do you have any additional comments on candidacy rights for 16 and 17 year-olds, or foreign nationals with limited rights to remain in the UK? We do not take a position on changes to eligibility for candidates at elections, which are significant policy matters for parliaments to decide. Where changes are made, we will work with the electoral community to ensure they are implemented effectively. We have noted below the concerns raised with us by candidates about intimidatory or abusive behaviour directed towards candidates at an election; the Scottish Government should seek advice from relevant organisations with expertise on the health and safety of young people in relation to the candidacy rights of 16 and 17 year-olds. The Government will also need to ensure that any changes are introduced in sufficient time for parties and independent candidates to familiarise themselves with them ahead of the next relevant election, and for us to update our guidance to support them.

Disqualification for intimidatory or abusive behaviour Q4 and 5 summary Question 4: Do you think that anyone found guilty of an offence involving the harassment or intimidation of politicians, candidates or campaigners should be subject to an additional sanction of losing the right to stand for election for 5 years? Question 5: If not, would you suggest another electoral sanction or approach? As noted in the consultation document, we carried out research with candidates and agents following the 2022 Scottish council elections. A notable minority (44%) of those who responded to our survey told us that they had experienced some kind of problem with threats, abuse and intimidation at those elections (rating this as a 2 or above on a scale from 1 to 5). Our research with candidates in other parts of the UK in 2022 found similar levels of concern. Our research in Scotland found that 1 : Of those that said they experienced some kind of abuse, the most common sources were verbal (55%) and online (53%). Over four in five of those reporting abuse (84%) said that it came from members of the public. Three in 10 (31%) said it was from an anonymous/unknown source, while one in 10 (11%) received threats or abuse from other candidates. One in 10 (10%) who experienced threats or abuse said that their experience(s) would discourage them from standing as a candidate in the future. It is vital that action is taken against those who abuse, threaten or intimidate candidates and campaigners, and that this behaviour does not discourage people from standing for election or campaigning. We agree with the Scottish Government's proposal to introduce additional sanctions for those found guilty of the harassment or intimidation of politicians, candidates and campaigners. It would strengthen the deterrent against this behaviour and also align with the sanctions available for UK Parliament elections. We will continue to work with the UK's governments, Police Scotland and the wider electoral community to make sure we understand what is driving candidate abuse and intimidation, and to ensure this issue is addressed as a matter of urgency. Sending of free letters or leaflets by candidates and political parties at elections Q 6,7,8 Question 6: Do you think that the option of sending a freepost letter or leaflet should be extended to Scottish Local Government elections? Question 7: Do you think that the right for candidates to send a free mailing should be limited to one free mailing to each household, rather than to each voter? Question 8: Do you have any other comments on the issue of candidate mailings to voters? Freepost mailings for candidates at Scottish council elections As noted in the consultation document, in our research with voters after the 2022 Scottish council elections we found that more than a quarter (26%) of respondents said they did not have enough information on candidates to be able to make an informed decision on who to vote for. Voters aged 25-34 were most likely to state this (40%). When asked where they had seen information about candidates and parties, the most cited sources were leaflets or flyers from the candidate or party (61%). Respondents were more likely to recall seeing leaflets which had been delivered to their house (81%), however this was significantly lower for 16–24-year-olds (66%), suggesting that another method may be more effective to reach younger voters. The consultation document suggests that one potential solution would be for councils to opt in to authorising and funding a free mailing from candidates to each voter or household. This could lead to an inconsistency of experience for both voters and campaigners participating in council elections across Scotland. Consideration would also need to be given to the transparency of the decision-making process at council level to ensure that it could not provide advantages, perceived or otherwise, to one set of candidates over another. Whether limited to councils who opted-in or in place for all councils, if free candidate mailings were to proceed then wider consideration would need to be given to the considerable logistical, environmental and financial implications of managing the review, printing and distribution of election addresses. This should be done well in advance of the 2027 Scottish council elections to ensure that resources and processes are in place at council level to deliver any such change. In addition to the consideration of printed freepost mailings, the Scottish Government should also explore the use of digital routes to provide voters with information on candidates. This could help to future proof the process and help alleviate any environmental impacts. If freepost mailings for council candidates were to be taken forward, consideration would need to be given to ensuring that the costs met by the council did not count as a donation to candidates or as notional spending. Free mailings at Scottish Parliament elections The Scottish Government consultation paper also considers whether cost savings could be made by limiting candidates and parties to unaddressed material for households rather than to individual voters. We do not have enough evidence to be able to come to a view on this question. However, given the concerns noted above about access to information on candidates, there is a risk that those in multi-occupancy households may find it even harder to access information in the event of a move to unaddressed mailings. We recommend that the Government undertakes research with voters and consults political parties on the potential impact of this proposal. Publication of home addresses Q9 Question 9: Should candidates who are acting as their own agents be able to use a correspondence address for communications? The publication of contact details for agents plays an important role in the democratic process as it retains transparency and accountability, and enables the detection of fraud. However, in our report on the 2016 Scottish Parliament election we noted that security concerns had been raised by candidates who were acting as their own agent, as their home address would be disclosed. We recommended that the Scottish Government review the rules. In general, we are supportive of the proposals, to address concerns around the security of candidates. However, we recommend that consideration is given to extending this provision to all agents who do not have an existing office address. This would cover instances where the agent shares a home address with the candidate. How a candidate's location is shown on the ballot paper Q10 and 11 Question 10: Currently ballot papers show either the candidate's home address or council area. Do you think that the ballot paper should also show the ward in which the candidate lives, if they request it? Question 11: Do you have any further comments on the topic of candidate addresses? We do not have enough evidence available on the suggested change to come to a view at this time. Before making any changes, the Scottish Government should commission research with voters to understand impacts this may have on their ability to navigate and understand the information on the ballot paper, and whether the provision of additional information provides benefits to voters. Voting Increasing registration Question 12: What do you think could be done nationally or locally to improve registration levels, especially among under-represented groups such as younger people and foreign nationals? Modernising electoral registration There is an urgent need to reform electoral registration in the UK, as the current registration system does not work well for voters or administrators. Our research shows that the quality of the registers could be improved, and the process streamlined for administrators, if the UK's governments provided them with greater access to public data. A modern, joined-up electoral register would: Use trusted public data to keep itself accurate and complete throughout the year without relying solely on action by individuals; and Make it as easy as possible for people to ensure their own registration record is accurate and complete, particularly ahead of elections and referendums. More digital methods using existing public data could also help address some of the specific challenges which exist. For example: Regular access to reliable data about recent address changes from other public services would allow EROs to make contact directly with people who have recently changed address (including those who move frequently). Integrating electoral registration applications into other public service transactions could make it easier for individuals to keep their registration details up to date and accurate. This could be particularly effective for people who are already updating their details with other organisations. Existing public data could also help to improve levels of completeness among some of the specific under-registered groups identified in our research. For example, data from the education sector could help EROs to identify attainers and other young people. Data from the Department for Work and Pensions could be used by EROs to register young people to vote automatically when they are allocated their National Insurance number. Access to data for EROs EROs are legally entitled to access local data sets from: the council which appointed them any registrar of births, deaths and marriages any person, including a company or organisation, providing services to, or authorised to exercise any function of, the council; this includes those that are providing 'outsourced' services under any finance agreement. There are no statutory restrictions on this disclosure (including data protection legislation). However, EROs can face issues with the quality and accuracy of this local data, which can mean that they are unable to use it with confidence. There is currently no provision for EROs to access national data that may be of higher quality and reliability. Improving access to data The UK's governments should support EROs to improve the accuracy and completeness of electoral registers – and improve efficiency to alleviate resource burdens – by giving them access to high-quality data from other public service organisations. Depending on the quality coverage of these data sets, this change could support automatic registration, integration of registration applications alongside other public service transactions, or simply enable EROs to send targeted invitations to register to specific individuals not currently correctly registered. As noted above, EROs already have some rights to inspect data from local organisations to enable them to maintain electoral registers. In practice, however, they would be dependent on the UK Government (and in some cases the Scottish or Welsh Government) to give them access to any national or UK-wide data. Our 2019 feasibility studies identified that government departments that are responsible for the data source organisations would need to provide legal gateways to allow data sharing with EROs (for example, the Department for Transport for access to DVLA data). It is likely that a centralised interface would also be needed to manage the flow of data between the data source organisations and individual EROs, similar to the IER digital service that was established by the UK Government. Integrating registration applications alongside other frequently used public service transactions would also require support and some resource investment by data source organisations and relevant departments. They would need to develop and maintain the necessary technical infrastructure to collect and transfer data about potential new electors, and to manage the relationship with any centralised interface. We recommend that the Scottish Government take forward electoral registration reform, in consultation with the UK and Welsh Governments. We note that the Welsh Government is considering further reforms to the electoral registration process, including an all-Wales database of electoral registration data, and the Scottish Government should consider any lessons which can learned from Wales as they take these proposals forward.

Registering young people to vote

The Commission's research into the 1 December 2018 electoral registers found that levels of completeness in Scotland varied by age group, with younger groups less likely to be registered. Completeness stands at 68% for those aged 18-34 while it is higher for those aged 35-54 (87%) and those aged 55+ (92%). The Curriculum for Excellence provides opportunities for young people to be supported to develop their political literacy skills in school and youth work settings. While some young people receive excellent political literacy education through Modern Studies, not all young people will have the chance to develop the necessary skills if they do not progress with Modern Studies after second or third year of secondary education or where schools do not offer Modern Studies as a teaching subject. The Commission has produced a range of free and impartial education resources , designed to help young people understand how to get involved in democracy and support educators to teach political literacy. These can be used in Modern Studies, as well as in other subjects and whole-school activities

The Commission also runs Welcome to Your Vote Week each year, to provide support and encouragement to schools and youth organisations to run political literacy activity. We would support any initiatives from the Scottish Government to embed the teaching of political literacy across other areas of school teaching, including through Personal and Social Education. The Scottish Government should also explore the potential for allowing students to register to vote when enrolling at university, and data sharing agreements between councils and universities could help to facilitate this. Under the Higher Education and Research Act 2017, higher education providers in England that are registered with the Office for Students (OfS) are required to comply with OfS guidance to facilitate the electoral registration of students. We would welcome equivalent provisions being introduced for higher education providers in Scotland. The Government should also consider whether there are other institutions that may be able to assist with the registration of young people, such as further education colleges or large apprenticeship employers.

Improving the accessibility of voting Q13 Question 13: The Scottish Government intends to amend the rule requiring only a specific form of Tactile Voting Device to be provided in polling stations, to allow more flexibility and ensure the accessibility support offered can be adapted to take account of future innovations.

It also intends to place a duty on the Electoral Commission to provide guidance that includes minimum standards. Which of the following options would you prefer: The current legal requirement for a specific Tactile Voting Device is replaced by a general requirement on Returning Officers to provide appropriate support. The current legal requirement for a specific Tactile Voting Device is replaced with a requirement to provide a non-specific form of tactile support. No change to current legislation.

Other. Everyone should be able to register and cast their vote without facing barriers. While there have been significant improvements, we know there is still more to be done to improve the voting experience for disabled people. Provisions within the UK Government's Elections Act 2022 have replaced the specific requirement to provide a tactile voting device in polling stations with a broader duty on Returning Officers (ROs) to provide such equipment as is reasonable to enable, or make it easier, for disabled people to vote independently and in secret at the polling station. Our view is that this will improve the range and quality of support available, and we support a similar approach being taken by the Scottish Government. Introducing similar rules for devolved and reserved elections would also make it easier for people to understand the support they can expect when voting, and less complex for electoral administrators to deliver. It is important that ROs are clear on how to meet their responsibilities in relation to supporting disabled voters. If the Scottish Government were to introduce such a requirement, we would provide guidance and examples of good practice to support them in discharging this duty. Under the Elections Act, we have a duty to provide guidance to support ROs in delivering their duties under the Act and to consult on this guidance . While this guidance applies only to reserved elections, we anticipate that any Commission guidance that would be required for devolved elections in Scotland would cover similar considerations. We have a specific duty to report on the steps taken by ROs to assist disabled voters at elections and this will provide opportunities to learn from how the new duty has worked in practice. If the Scottish Government were to introduce such a duty on ROs, it would need to set out what funding would be available for additional support required as a result of any legislative change, as there is a risk that any new duty for ROs will not be effective if it is not funded appropriately.

Q14 Summary Question 14: Should the limit to the number of times one companion can support voters in casting their votes: Remain at two people per election Rise to five people per election Be changed to another number In our research, disabled voters told us that restrictions on who can act as a companion can make it difficult to find someone to help. Some evidence from learning disability charities suggests that people don't always know who they can take along to the polling station to help them. We support the Scottish Government's proposal to increase the number of voters a companion can support at the same election from the current limit of two. This will make it easier for disabled people to get support from a companion in the polling station if they need it. We have no firm view on what number this should be increased to. The Scottish Government should consider the evidence from disabled voters in coming to any decision in this area. We also recommend that the Scottish Government consider removing the requirement for a companion, who is not a close relative of the voter, to be a qualified elector. This would provide greater choice and flexibility for disabled voters and would align with changes to reserved elections being brought in by the UK Government's Elections Act.

Q15 Summary Question 15: Should there be an option in the future to request a digital poll card instead of a paper poll card for Scottish elections? In principle the option for providing digital poll cards may improve the accessibility of election material for voters with sight loss, and we recommend in our guidance to ROs for reserved elections that they consider providing poll card information in other accessible formats in addition to the printed poll card. However, we would welcome further detail from and discussion with the Scottish Government on this proposal, including how it would ensure that any digital poll cards issued by ROs were compliant with digital accessibility standards.

Q16 Q16 summary Question 16: What more could be done to improve the voting experience for individuals with accessibility needs or requirements? In our ‘Elections for Everyone’ report, published in 2017, we made a range of recommendations on how the UK’s governments, electoral administrators, parties, and candidates could improve the experience of disabled people taking part in elections. We made several specific recommendations for how political parties and campaigners should communicate with voters, including:

- Making sure the information they produce is easy to read. Publishing easy read manifestos at the same time so disabled people have the same time as everyone else to understand what the parties stand for and make an informed decision.
- Sending information in good time so that people have time to read it.

We recommend that the Scottish Government works with parties, the Commission and other relevant organisations to produce good practice guidelines and accessibility standards for accessible election materials.

Clarification of undue influence of a voter Q17

summary Question 17: Do you agree that the offence of ‘undue influence’ should be made easier to understand and enforce? We support the intention to update the definition of the undue influence electoral offence in line with the changes set out in the UK Government’s Elections Act. The Commission has consistently called for the offence of undue influence to be clarified, as it is a complex offence that is not easily understood by voters, and we welcomed the provisions within the Elections Act to deliver this change. This should provide voters with more meaningful protection against exploitation and make clear what is and is not acceptable behaviour. It should also make it simpler for the police to act when allegations of undue influence are made. It is important that legitimate campaigning is not inadvertently prevented by changes to the way this offence is defined. We recommended that the UK Government should introduce a clear, workable definition of what activity should and should not be allowed around polling stations for reserved elections. We will monitor any cases of alleged undue influence at future reserved polls to identify whether the new offence in the Elections Act is clear and workable for voters, campaigners and the police.

Absent voting Q18

summary Question 18: Do you think that we should extend the right to emergency proxies to the companions of anyone who has to attend an unexpected medical appointment or treatment which would prevent them from voting at their normal voting place? The Commission has consistently recommended that the qualifying circumstances for appointing an emergency proxy should be extended, so that those who have unforeseen caring responsibilities or who have experienced the death of a close relative would also be eligible for an emergency proxy. Under current law, where a voter is incapacitated by ill health or an accident after the deadline to apply for a normal proxy vote, the individual would qualify for an emergency proxy on medical grounds but anyone caring for them, or accompanying them for medical treatment, would not. This is of particular concern in island and rural communities where a person may have to travel for medical treatment elsewhere in Scotland. The Commission will work with the Scottish Government and the electoral community to support the development of these proposals. It will be important that the qualification criteria, and any attestation requirements, enable EROs to confidently assess an applicant’s eligibility within the short timescales available ahead of the poll. Acting as a proxy Q19 summary Question 19: Do you have any comments on changes to proxy voting in Scottish Parliament or local government elections? Proxy voting is an important option for people who can't – or don't want to – vote in person in a polling station or by post. We support the Scottish Government's proposal to retain the existing proxy voting provisions for devolved elections. Any move to limit the number of close family members for whom a voter may act as a proxy could disadvantage some people with a genuine need to appoint a proxy. Our 2014 review of electoral fraud did not identify any public support for further restrictions on proxy voting. People said that the current restrictions were reasonable, and would not prevent someone who might need a proxy from being able to vote in this way. There are existing safeguards to protect voters from unwelcome or inappropriate pressure to appoint a proxy. When a voter applies to appoint a proxy, they are required to state their relationship with the proposed proxy. This helps identify suspicious patterns that could be referred to the police for investigation.

An updated offence of undue influence should also act as a deterrent to people who would want to force someone to appoint a proxy. We will ensure that clear information is available to voters so that they can easily understand the different rules in place for reserved and devolved Scottish elections. Postal voting Q20 Question 20: Do you have any comments on the handing in of postal ballots? Postal voting is an important and popular voting method, used by around 24% of voters in Scotland. Strengthening some of the safeguards protecting postal voting could improve voter trust and confidence in the system and address perceptions that electoral fraud or inappropriate activity is taking place. Our 2022 Public Opinion tracker shows that a significant minority of voters in Scotland have concerns about the safety of postal voting: one in five (20%) believe it is not safe from fraud and abuse. However, any changes to postal voting must not only address the security of postal voting but also maintain its accessibility, ensuring everyone who wants to vote by post is able to do so easily. Limiting the number of postal votes handed into the polling station

Limiting who can hand in postal votes at polling stations and the number they can hand in could create barriers for some voters who need assistance. For example, friends or neighbours of voters would not be allowed to provide support by handing in postal votes, and people may be prevented from returning postal votes for family members. In any case, postal votes that are handed in at polling stations must still go through the same security checks as those returned through the postal service before they can be included in the count. Banning the handling of completed postal ballot packs For reserved elections, the UK Government's Elections Act introduces a ban on parties and campaigners handling completed postal votes and postal vote envelopes. This change could improve voter trust and address concerns around the potential for inappropriate activity taking place when postal ballot packs are handled. This formalises a key part of the 'best practice' approach that has been set out in our guidance and our voluntary Code of Conduct for campaigners for more than 15 years. The Code was developed and agreed with political parties, but not all campaigners are aware of or actively comply with it. We would welcome a discussion with the Scottish Government on how similar provisions could work for devolved elections in Scotland. Voting rights Q21, 22 Question 21: Should voting rights in Scottish Parliament and Local Government elections be extended to some or all persons detained on mental health grounds related to criminal justice? Question 22: Do you have any additional comments on voting rights for persons detained on mental health grounds related to criminal justice? The Commission does not take a position on changes to the franchise at elections, which are significant policy matters for Parliament to decide. Where changes are made, we will work with the electoral community to ensure they are implemented effectively. If persons detained on mental health grounds related to criminal justice are included in the franchise, careful consideration would need to be given to the processes by which they would be registered and cast their vote. These should be prescribed in law and take into account the specific challenges that would be faced by these individuals in exercising their right to vote, building on the lessons learned around the enfranchisement of prisoners serving sentences of 12 months or less. This should include how EROs would identify and make contact with potentially eligible individuals, and determine their eligibility, and how such individuals should receive and return any absent votes. Consideration would also need to be given to how these individuals would be able to access information on upcoming elections and the policies and manifesto commitments of candidates and parties.

Q23 Q23 summary

Question 23: Should voting rights in Scottish Parliament and Local Government elections be extended to all people seeking asylum in Scotland? As noted above, the franchise for devolved Scottish elections is an important constitutional decision for the Scottish Parliament to consider and decide. If the franchise is extended to include all people seeking asylum, careful consideration would need to be given to how EROs will be able to determine their eligibility.

Implications of Elections Act 2022 changes

Q24 summary

Question 24: What issues do you think that the changes in the Elections Act 2022 to introduce voter ID and change postal vote renewals raise for elections held in Scotland? There is a potential for voter confusion about the different requirements for voter ID at reserved and devolved elections. From May 2023, voters in Scotland will be required to bring photo ID to vote in person in a polling station for any UK Parliament by-election or recall petition. The requirement for voter ID to be provided at UK Parliament general elections will take effect for polls from October 2023. A new form of identification, the Voter Authority Certificate, has been introduced as a form of free ID for those who do not have another type of accepted ID, as specified by legislation. The Electoral Commission has developed a public awareness campaign aimed at raising awareness of the voter ID requirement and reminding voters to take their ID with them to the polling station. It also advises of the option to apply for a Voter Authority Certificate if they do not already have an accepted form of ID. The campaign includes targeted partnership work with organisations which are a trusted voice in communities where people are less likely to have an accepted form of photo ID. The campaign will be deployed in Scotland ahead of a UK Parliament general election and across specific constituencies in the event of a UK Parliament by-election or recall petition. The Commission has also provided administrators with tailored guidance on planning for and delivering elections, including updated procedures for polling station staff to follow. In developing the guidance we have worked closely with the electoral community and civil society to help ensure that it meets the needs of voters with a range of different circumstances and needs.

Postal vote renewals

As set out in the consultation document, the Elections Act is introducing a change to postal votes for UK Parliament elections, and voters will now need to reapply every three years. With postal votes for devolved Scottish elections remaining on a five-year renewal cycle, the differences in absent vote renewal cycles risk creating confusion for voters and complexity for electoral administrators. Voters would need to respond to two separate renewal/re-application processes to maintain their absent voting status for both devolved and reserved elections. Electoral administrators would have two separate sets of processes to follow, with two sets of personal identifiers for each absent voter. We strongly recommend that aligning these rules for devolved and reserved elections would be in the best interests of voters and administrators. This should be taken forward urgently in order to minimise the impact of divergence of rules on voters and electoral administrators. There may also be further benefits in moving to a three-year cycle of postal vote renewal, ensuring that electoral administrators hold the most up to date signatures for voters, reducing the risk of postal vote rejection. If the Scottish Government does opt to retain the existing five-year renewal cycle for devolved elections, there would be a significant risk of disenfranchisement for voters, who may incorrectly assume they have an active absent vote arrangement in place. The Scottish Government would need to consider whether there are any other changes that could be made to mitigate this risk in practice, to streamline the actions required of voters and electoral administrators and to enable clear communications to support voters' understanding of the process and its consequences.

Online absent vote applications

The Elections Act also contains provisions for the introduction of an online absent vote application (OAVA) system which is expected to go live later in 2023. Under the current proposals, the system would only enable online applications for postal votes at reserved (i.e. UK Parliament) elections; applications for postal votes at Scottish devolved elections would continue to be made on postal vote application forms. During the passage of the Elections Act, we said that an online absent voting application system would improve accessibility by making it easier for people to apply to vote by post. We also highlighted that it would likely result in improvements in efficiency for administrators – for example, by reducing the time taken to process applications. In the best interests of voters, we recommend that the Scottish Government works with the UK Government to ensure that the OAVA system is also available for those applying for a postal vote for devolved Scottish elections. At the latest, this should be in place for the commencement of the 2025 annual canvass in order that voters can easily obtain a postal vote for the 2026 Scottish Parliament election. The implementation of any online absent voting application system would need to be well-planned, phased, and resourced. Careful consideration would need to be given to the digital infrastructure required; the processes electoral administrators will need to develop and follow; ensuring voters understand how to use the system; and ensuring there is the capacity in the system for postal votes to be despatched in time for all those who have applied for one to be able to receive, complete and return it in time for it to be counted.

Q25 summary Question 25: Should there be a presumption against a Scottish devolved election being held on the same day as a UK Parliament election (for example, a UK Parliament by-election on the same day as a national Scottish Parliament election)? Our priority is that voters and campaigners should be able to understand and easily participate in any elections. There are both advantages and disadvantages to holding polls on the same day and these should be carefully considered. For example, holding two polls on the same day may risk voter confusion, particularly where different voting systems are in use or where processes in the polling station are different (for example, different franchises and different ID requirements). It could also lead to the campaign arguments for one poll receiving less media attention than the other poll. However, combining polls can provide convenience for voters, who do not need to attend the polling station on two separate occasions, and lead to cost efficiencies for administrators. On balance, our view is that there should be a presumption against holding a UK Parliament election on the same day as a devolved Scottish election. In the event that polls are held on the same day, it will be important to ensure that combination rules are carefully drafted to minimise the risk of confusion for voters and electoral administrators. Scheduling of elections We recognise the importance of having a backstop provision for responding to any unanticipated events – such as a public health emergency – particularly in light of the impact of the Covid pandemic. However, certainty around elections is of critical importance to the confidence of voters, campaigners and electoral administrators. Consequently, we are strongly of the view that postponement of polls should only take place in very exceptional circumstances, and the process of decision making should be fully transparent and command the confidence of all those involved in delivering and participating in electoral events. Postponement of Scottish Parliament and local government elections Q26 27 summary Question 26: Do you think that the maximum period by which the Presiding Officer can propose the postponement of a Scottish Parliament election should be extended beyond 1 month? Question 27: Do you think that the date of dissolution of the Scottish Parliament in the run up to a general election should be changed to the day before the election, allowing MSPs to continue to hold office in case of emergency? These proposals appear to be a useful backstop for responding to any unanticipated events – including a public health emergency or a UK Parliament general election – which may impact on the smooth running of the poll and compromise the ability of voters and campaigners to participate. The Presiding Officer should be required to consult the Convener of the Electoral Management Board for Scotland (EMB) and the Electoral Commission before taking any such decision. There is precedent for this approach in the Scottish General Election (Coronavirus) Act 2021 . If the date of dissolution of Parliament is moved to one day before the poll, clear rules would need to be developed around MSPs' use of parliamentary resources during the regulated campaign period before the poll to avoid any advantage – perceived or otherwise – for incumbent candidates.

Postponement of Scottish Parliament by-elections Q28 29 summary Question 28: Do you think that the Presiding Officer should have the power to change the date of a Scottish Parliament by-election, if it is no longer possible to hold the election on the originally selected date? Question 29: Do you have any other comments on changing the date of a Scottish Parliament by-election? As with local government by-elections discussed below, there may be very limited circumstances in which to progress with a by-election may risk the health and safety of voters and polling staff, or where the ability of voter and campaigners to participate freely in the poll may be curtailed.

In these cases it would seem useful to have a backstop provision for postponement of the poll. As the date of the poll is set by the Presiding Officer, it would provide consistency if the power to change the date resided with them. However, they should be required to consult the Convener of the EMB and the Electoral Commission, along with the local Returning Officer, before taking any action to postpone. Postponement of scheduled local government elections Q30 summary Question 30: Do you think that the Convener of the Electoral Management Board should be given the power to postpone national Local Government elections in consultation with the Electoral Commission and the Scottish Government? Question 31: Should the law allow a Local Government by-election to be postponed, and if yes, who should make the decision to postpone? No

Yes, Returning Officer Yes, EMB Convener Yes, Other Question 32: Do you have any other comments on rescheduling of elections? Scotland-wide local government elections As the Scottish Parliament would still be sitting in this case, any decision to postpone local government elections across Scotland should remain with the legislative body. The Electoral Commission and the Convener of the EMB should be required to provide advice to Parliament to inform their decision making. Local government by-elections The legislation does not allow a Returning Officer to postpone a poll due to, for example, severe weather conditions or other factors that could potentially prevent a large number of people voting at polling stations.

Concerns about Returning Officers not being able to postpone a poll were raised by some candidates at a by-election held during severe snow storms in March 2018. We have previously recommended that the Scottish Government consider whether such a provision should be introduced. Consideration would need to be given to what conditions could enable the poll to be postponed, who should ultimately be responsible for making that decision and what processes should be put in place to ensure such decisions are made reasonably and consistently. The Commission believes the circumstances for postponements should be exceptional, and the risks of creating such a provision would need to be considered carefully. For example, postponing a poll might cause uncertainty and confusion for voters, and introducing such an element of discretion for Returning Officers might lead to them being subject to unwarranted pressure from campaigners or others. There is precedent in the temporary arrangements put in place to manage the impact of the pandemic on local government by-elections in the autumn of 2020. In this case, the decision rested with the local RO, after consultation with the Convener of the EMB and the Electoral Commission. This process largely worked well and brought consistency to local decision making across Scotland. We recommend that this model is retained, with the local RO, who is accountable in law for the delivery of the poll, retaining the decision making power after consultation with the Convener of the EMB and the Electoral Commission. For transparency purposes, ROs should be required to publish the advice they have received and a statement on the factors they took into account when reaching their decision.

Campaigning Campaigning and Finance Question 33: Do you think that the language clarifying the definition of notional spending adopted in the UK Elections Act 2022 should also apply to Scottish devolved elections? The laws on notional spending ensure that campaigners properly account for and report all goods, services and materials that are donated to them, and which they use to help them in any way with their campaign activities. There is a considerable level of notional spending reported by candidates at elections. Notional spending reported by constituency and independent regional candidates at the 2021 Scottish Parliament election was £1,587,497.82, amounting to over half (52.28%) of all reported spending by constituency and independent regional candidates. Candidates, agents and party or campaigner staff need a clear understanding of when something is “notional spending” or “election expenses” because it counts towards their total campaign spend, which must not exceed the specified spending limit. The current law on notional spending for Scottish devolved elections is long established and has operated in practice for many years. The Elections Act 2022 changes the legal test for when a candidate or agent authorises someone else to use benefits in kind on their behalf. It will apply at UK Parliament elections in Scotland and Wales, and at all types of elections in England and Northern Ireland. Candidates need to report benefits in kind which they have “made use of” themselves or have authorised, directed or encouraged someone else to “make use of” on their behalf. The Act enables an agent to authorise another campaigner to pay for expenses that count towards the candidate’s spending limit - currently, only an agent can pay for these expenses. Differences in political finance rules between devolved and reserved elections inevitably add complexity as campaigners would have to plan, account and have different payment arrangements for their spending for devolved and reserved elections, even if they had undertaken the same kind of activity. However, changing a long-standing and well understood law also brings complexity, at least at first. We would recommend that the Scottish Government test any proposed changes to the notional spending wording with a wide range of parties, candidates and agents to ensure that they are clear and commonly understood. Further, the changes to the notional spending law for UK elections have not yet been tested at any significant elections. We will monitor the practical impact of the changes in the Elections Act at any reserved elections and share any findings with the Scottish Government. We will continue to provide guidance to support the regulated community to understand and comply with the law. If the law is amended for notional expenditure at Scottish devolved elections, the Commission would develop a statutory Code of Practice on candidate expenses to provide further clarity about notional spending and spending under local non-party campaigner laws. However, guidance and Codes can only reflect the law, so it is important that the provisions themselves are clear and unambiguous. The Commission would need sufficient time to prepare and consult on any Code, ahead of the laws coming into force.

Q34 35 36 Q34 35 36 summary Question 34: Do you think that third party campaigners should have to register with the Electoral Commission if they spend more than £10,000 across the whole of the UK, even if they spend less than £10,000 in Scotland? The £10,000 registration threshold should apply to devolved elections across the UK The £10,000 registration threshold should apply to Scottish devolved elections only I have another view on the registration threshold Question 35: Do you think that the spending limit should be reduced to £700 for overseas based third parties that are ineligible to register with the Electoral Commission? The spending limit should be reduced to £700 The spending limit should remain the same (£10,000) I have another view of the spending limit Question 36: Do you think that an order-making power for Scottish Ministers should be introduced which allows them to add, change, or removed categories of third-party campaigners? A recommendation by the Electoral Commission would be required before a category of third-party campaigners could be changed or removed. Question 37: Do you think that the Electoral Commission should be able to provide a code of practice on third party expenditure in Scottish devolved elections? Non-party campaigners are a vital part of a healthy democracy and play an important role in providing information for voters and a diversity of voices. It is important that these groups can easily participate in the UK's elections. Controls in election law help voters to see and understand how these groups receive and spend money when they are intending to influence an election outcome. Over recent years, there has been an increase in the number of non-party campaigners. Spending by these groups has risen too. At the 2021 Scottish Parliament election seven registered non-party campaigners reported spending totalling £260,220 on campaigning during the regulated period. At the 2019 UK Parliament election, there were 61 registered non-party campaigners, and those who were required to report their spending recorded a total spend of more than £6 million. Registering with the Electoral Commission Currently non-party campaigners who spend, or plan to spend, more than £10,000 campaigning at a Scottish Parliament election must notify the Electoral Commission. s that spend more than £10,000 at a Scottish Parliament election must report their spending and donations after the poll. Imposing a new requirement for non-party campaigners to register with the Electoral Commission if they spend more than £10,000 campaigning across the constituent parts of the UK would not affect the reporting threshold in Scotland. Consequently, the impact of this proposal would be increased complexity to laws which many campaigners have said are already hard to understand and comply with, but with no increase in the transparency of non-party campaigner spending and donations. We urge caution about changes that bring a new regulatory burden for campaigners with no clear benefit for voters. Overseas campaigners Our recent public attitudes research showed some concerns about the risks of foreign interference. When we asked people to prioritise their concerns from a list of issues, two fifths (40%) said “foreign interference on UK elections results” was a problem. Reductions to the limits on unregistered campaigning would make it clear that foreign interference in UK elections is not permitted. During the regulated period before an election, only specific categories of individuals and organisations would be allowed to spend more than £700 on activities that are intended to influence the election outcome. This would be a significant reduction from the current limits for unregistered campaigning, and would introduce a new principle that campaigners are subject to eligibility criteria even when they are not required to be registered. However, should these laws be broken, we would not be able to take enforcement action against organisations or individuals based outside the UK. The police are also limited in the action they can take against people or organisations based overseas. Order making power for Ministers We agree that Scottish Ministers should have an order making power to add, change or remove permitted categories of non-party campaigners for devolved Scottish elections. This would enable future flexibility to respond to the emergence of new categories of campaigners to ensure that legitimate campaigners are not prevented from engaging in democratic debate. As any changes would be in response to a recommendation from the Electoral Commission, it would build in a safeguard to prevent the politicisation of the process.

Code of Practice on third party expenditure

We agree that the Commission should be able to provide a Code of Practice for non-party campaigner expenditure at Scottish devolved elections. This Code would support campaigners by providing a clearer statutory base for the non-party campaigner rules and offer them assurances that if they have followed our Code, they will have complied with the law. We have recently consulted on a draft Code of Practice for non-party campaigners at UK Parliament and Northern Ireland Assembly elections . Subject to approval from the UK Parliament, we expect to publish this Code in the summer of 2023. We would follow a similar consultation process in developing any Code for Scottish Parliament elections. However, it will be vital for any legislation which affects non-party expenditure at Scottish Parliament elections to be in place in sufficient time for us to develop and consult on a code ahead of its use at the next Scottish Parliament election.

Q38 summary Question 38: Do you think the maximum fine the Electoral Commission should be able to impose for breaches of electoral law in Scottish elections should:

- A - Rise to £500,000, so it is in line with the maximum fine for referendums
- B - Be set at another amount (please specify the amount below)
- C - Remain unchanged at £10,000

The current maximum fine that the Electoral Commission can impose for each breach of the election spending laws for political parties or registered non-party campaigners at elections is set in law at £20,000 (£10,000 in Scotland). We recommend that our maximum fine is increased so that sanctions can be more proportionate to the amounts of money major parties and non-party campaigners raise and spend at those elections. Our maximum fine should be set at a high enough level for it to be a suitable deterrent that encourages compliance by all campaigners. We welcomed the provisions in the Referendums (Scotland) Act 2020 which increased our maximum fine to £500,000. It is important that the maximum fine for elections keeps pace with that for referendums to reflect the regulatory similarities between the two types of electoral events and to create consistency for campaigners and parties campaigning at both. We encourage the Scottish Government to consider £500,000 as a starting point for increasing our maximum fine. We would continue to regulate in a fair and proportionate way and only apply a sanction where we consider it appropriate to meet our enforcement aim and objectives, and when it is proportionate and in the public interest to do so. Digital imprints Q39 summary Question 39: Do you think that the Scottish Government should revoke its own regulations for digital imprints and rely on the provisions of the Elections Act 2022? Question 40: Do you have any further comments on digital imprints? Digital campaigning accounts for an increasingly large proportion of spending reported by campaigners after elections. Requiring campaigners to include imprints on digital campaign material delivers greater transparency for voters, and helps improve public confidence in digital campaigning at elections and referendums.

The Scottish Government introduced new digital imprint requirements ahead of the 2021 Scottish Parliament election which apply to all devolved Scottish elections. The UK Government's Elections Act introduced digital imprints requirements for all UK elections and campaign activity which are expected to come into force in late 2023. The UK Government regime is broader than the Scottish law in two ways. The UK Government's digital imprints regime will apply throughout the year, whereas the Scottish rules apply to the period before Scottish Parliament elections and council elections. The UK Government's regime introduces a wider definition of material requiring an imprint because they require campaigners to include imprints on digital 'political' campaign material that promotes a party or candidate. The Scottish law covers only 'election material' that promotes success at Scottish Parliament or Scottish council elections. In these two ways, the Elections Act provisions to extend imprint rules could offer more transparency than the current Scottish approach.

However, the Scottish law is wider and provides greater transparency in one specific aspect, in that a digital imprint is required on all kinds of election material, including both paid and unpaid material from registered and unregistered campaigners, with some limited exceptions for personal opinion. Under the Elections Act, only paid-for political material by unregistered campaigners requires an imprint. It will be important to avoid the risk of separate legislative regimes applying to the same offence, which risks confusion for campaigners, regulators, and prosecutors. For example, both imprint regimes could apply to a piece of digital political material which promotes a candidate or party generally and at a Scottish Parliament election. If the campaigner did not include an imprint, the Commission and the Crown Office Procurator Fiscal Service would potentially have to consider which offence should be investigated, and whether a campaigner in that scenario could have committed two offences under two separate regimes. Administration and Governance Reviews of electoral boundaries Question 41: Do you think the process for approving boundary changes should be changed, and which of the options set out above would you prefer? No change Option 1 Option 2 Option 3 Other option Question 42: Do you have any further comments on this topic? The independence of the boundary review process is important to ensure public confidence in the boundaries used for Scottish Parliament and council elections. The timetable for parliamentary consideration of any boundary recommendations will need to ensure that boundaries are settled in sufficient time for administrators, candidates and parties to plan for any scheduled Scottish Parliament or council election. Governance – The Electoral Commission in Scotland Q43 44 summary Question 43: Should the Scottish Parliament take a greater role in oversight of the Electoral Commission's devolved activities? For example, the Electoral Commission's devolved activities, including their spending plans, being scrutinised by a Scottish Parliamentary Committee. Question 44: Do you have any additional comments on the oversight of the Electoral Commission's activities in relation to Scottish Parliament and Local Government elections? The Commission welcomed the changes in the Scottish Electoral (Reform) Act 2020 which required us to account directly to the Scottish Parliament for our activities in relation to Scottish devolved elections and receive our funding directly from the Parliament. It is important that the Scottish Parliament can have confidence in our work and plans, and we would welcome additional scrutiny by a relevant committee in the Parliament. In Wales, the Senedd established a committee to scrutinise the Electoral Commission's financial estimates and five-year plans as they relate to devolved Welsh elections and referendums. The Committee also reports to the Senedd on its oversight of the Commission and its scrutiny of its financial estimates. The Scottish Parliament allocated the approval of the Commission's funding to the Scottish Parliament Corporate Body (SPCB). However, in practice the Standards, Procedures and Public Appointments Committee (SPPAC) currently undertakes policy scrutiny of our activities, as its remit extends to matters relating to devolved elections, referendums and the responsibilities of the Elections Minister. The SPCB undertakes a wide range of activities, and we understand has limited resource, including time, to scrutinise our activities. It is usual for most legislatures to allocate the approval of estimates and policy scrutiny to two different committees. This model has the advantage of bringing impartiality and objectivity to the consideration of budget estimates, which may be less so in the case of policy scrutiny. In the case of the Scottish Parliament, estimate consideration by the SPCB ensures that all parties in the legislature are involved in consideration of our funding, as all are represented on the SPCB. Currently, the SPPAC does not have representation from all parties in the Scottish Parliament. We believe the body which approves our funding should be cross-party across the legislature. An option to facilitate further scrutiny of the Commission's estimate could be to require, in an albeit already tight timeframe, a subject committee of the Parliament, which would likely be the SPPAC, to undertake at the request of the SPCB a consideration of our estimate submission and provide the SPCB with an opinion on our estimate prior to the SPCB taking a decision. In addition, if the Parliament wishes to formally allocate wider policy scrutiny of the Commission's work to a subject committee, we would support that development.

Developing the role of the Electoral Management Board Q45 46 summary Question 45: Do you have any views on the role and structure of the EMB? Question 46: Should a Deputy Convener post be established, with power to exercise the functions of the Convener of the EMB if they are unable to act? The Electoral Management Board for Scotland (EMB) was first established in 2009 and its role has been set in statute for Scottish council elections since 2011 and for Scottish Parliament elections since 2020. Over that period, the EMB has continued to make a positive contribution to the effective delivery of elections and referendums in Scotland through the provision of advice, support and challenge to Returning Officers (ROs) and Electoral Registration Officers (EROs). At devolved Scottish elections the Convener of the EMB has used their power to direct ROs in the discharge of their responsibilities to ensure a consistent standard of service for voters. This has been undertaken in the interests of the voter and helps maintain the high levels of satisfaction amongst voters we consistently find in our post-poll surveys. Given the concerns about the resilience of electoral services highlighted earlier in this response, we continue to support further steps to ensure that the legal status and funding of the EMB are developed in such a way that it could undertake the management roles it was initially envisaged it would undertake, such as providing oversight of the procurement and delivery of any e-counting solution for council elections. This could also include exploring the scope for the EMB to provide further consistency in electoral administration and improved service to voters by considering any efficiencies and cost savings in procuring services and goods on behalf of ROs, such as through the centralisation of print contracts for ballot papers and other election stationery. The EMB is currently reliant on the goodwill of councils to support many of its activities. Developing its legal status would enable it to employ staff and contract services directly, enabling it to respond quickly to any unscheduled polls. Irrespective of legislative change, the EMB should develop its role in providing mentoring and support to ROs and EROs across Scotland to ensure that knowledge and confidence in delivering electoral processes is not affected by the turnover of senior council officers. Any expanded role for the EMB would require additional support for the Convener. We therefore support the proposal to appoint a depute Convener. Given the split in responsibilities in Scotland for the delivery of elections and electoral registration services, we recommend that two deputies be appointed, to include an RO and an ERO.

1. Over 2500 candidates stood for election across Scotland in 2022. The survey received 190 responses from candidates across 29 out of 32 local authorities, with 160 respondents answering the question on abuse. Candidates were asked: “On a scale of 1-5, with 1 being no problem at all and 5 being a serious problem, how much of a problem, if any, did you have with threats, abuse or intimidation in this election?” Respondents who rated their experience as a 2 or above were counted as having experienced threats, abuse, or intimidation. Respondents who rated their experience as a 4 or above were counted as having experienced a serious problem ■ Back to content at footnote 1 Page history First published: 15 March 2023 Last updated: 16 March 2023

Board minutes: 23 September 2020 | Electoral Commission Search
Board minutes: 23 September 2020 You are in the Electoral Commission Board section Home How we make decisions Electoral Commission Board On this page Who was at the meeting Apologies Declarations of interest Minutes of items of electronic business (EC 74/20) An update – the Committee on Standards in Public Life (CSPL) review on aspects of electoral regulation (EC 75/20) Review of Commission Board Effectiveness (EC 77/20) Performance report – Quarter 1 2020/21 (EC 78/20) Chief Executive's update (EC 79/20) Update from the Chair of RemCo (verbal update) Business items taken via electronic means since the previous Board meeting Individual Staffing Issue (eEC 72/20) First published: 14 October 2021 Last updated: 14 October 2021

Meeting summary Date: Wednesday 23 September 2020 Time: 9:30am to 1:15pm Location: By video conference Date of next scheduled meeting: Wednesday 21 October 2020 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting John Holmes, Chair Sue Bruce Anna Carragher Sarah Chambers Elan Closs Stephens Stephen Gilbert Alasdair Morgan Rob Vincent Joan Walley In attendance: Bob Posner, Chief Executive (Items 1 to 10) Craig Westwood, Director, Communications, Policy and Research (Items 1 to 10) Louise Edwards, Director, Regulation (Items 1 to 10) Ailsa Irvine, Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance (Items 1 to 10) Kieran Rix, Director, Finance and Corporate Services Amanda Kelly, General Counsel (Items 1 to 10) David Bailey, Head of Strategic Planning and Performance Phil Thompson, Head of Research (Items 4 and 5) Sean Usher, Senior Advisor, Governance (Items 1 to 10) Carol Sweetenham, Head of Projects (Item 5) Tracey Blackman, Head of Finance & (Item 5) Dan Adamson, Head of Monitoring and Enforcement (Item 4) Susan Crown, Head of Campaigns and Corporate Identity (Items 4 and 5) Rhidian Thomas, Head of Electoral Commission, Wales (Items 5 and 8) Andy O'Neill, Head of Electoral Commission, Scotland (Item 5) Niki Nixon, Head of External Communications (Items 4 and 5) Orla Hennessy, Media Relations and Public Information Manager (Items 4 and 5) Laura Mcleod, Public Affairs Manager (Items 4 and 5)

Apologies There were no apologies. Declarations of interest There were no new declarations of interest. Minutes of items of electronic business (EC 74/20)

Resolved: That the Commission Board minutes of items of electronic business from 15 June 2020 be approved. An update – the Committee on Standards in Public Life (CSPL) review on aspects of electoral regulation (EC 75/20) The Chief Executive and Director of Regulation presented the paper and provided the Board with an overview of the key updates arising from the work of the CSPL. Resolved: Consultation on a prosecutions policy be deferred The Forward Planner be amended to reflect changes in the work programme 2021/2022 Budget and Plan submissions to the Scottish Parliament and Senedd Cymru (EC 76/20) The Board noted that financial timetables in the Scottish Parliament and Senedd Cymru required our budget to be submitted to the relevant scrutiny committees by the end of September preceding the financial year, much earlier than the Westminster process. It was noted that the Board would not be tied to this budget until next year. It was hoped that there would be no major changes in the meantime, but there was the impact of Covid-19 to consider. The proposed budget was in line with what had been contained in the published Corporate Plan (CP1). The Board noted that it had received previous papers on the implications and practicalities of devolved accountability and had set a direction of travel. This paper sought agreement on how those arrangements should apply in the first full year and how they might be taken forward thereafter. The Board also welcomed that the discussions with the devolved administrations had taken place in a very constructive spirit. Resolved: That the overall budget and the individual Estimates based on that budget be approved, with delegation of final approval of budgets to the Chief Executive and

Accounting Officer, in consultation with the Chairs of the Board and Audit Committee, pending advice from HM Treasury and agreement with officials in devolved legislatures and governments on the funding formula That the approach to the information to be submitted with the Estimates be approved, subject to final agreement of the text by the respective two Commissioners with lead responsibilities for the Commission in Scotland and Wales and the Chief Executive That the draft Funders' Memorandum of Understanding be agreed, with delegation of approval of the final document to the Chief Executive in consultation with the Chair and the respective two Commissioners with lead responsibilities for the Commission in Scotland and Wales Review of Commission Board Effectiveness (EC 77/20) The Chair introduced the Review, and its main recommendations. While the Chair did not necessarily agree with everything in the Review, its principal findings were useful and in line with issues already raised by the Board, some of which were already being addressed. Commissioners discussed the Review. The consensus was it had good points to take away but was not as challenging as would have been desirable in some areas and was therefore of limited value. It was noted that the Review contained recommendations for the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee (RemCo) and Audit Committee. These would be discussed at the next meetings of these Committees. Action: The Executive Team in consultation with two Commissioners to prioritise which recommendations to take forward in an action plan to be approved by the Board. Resolved: That the report be noted That an action plan be brought to the Board for approval Performance report – Quarter 1 2020/21 (EC 78/20) The Board was informed that the report had been compiled using a new system, Pentana, for the first time. Commissioners were generally supportive of the new format. The Board discussed the various risks highlighted in the report and noted that risks to the reputation of the Commission needed to figure more prominently. It was also noted that the effect of the new No Purchase Order, No Pay policy was an internal metric rather than an overall performance metric. The Board discussed staff turnover and queried how Covid-19 had impacted on it and the ability to recruit high quality staff. Resolved: That the report be noted. Chief Executive's update (EC 79/20) The Board noted the update on operations and matters arising. The Board discussed the preparation for the 2021 polls and the impact of Covid- 19 on all aspects of the democratic process, including on the provision of postal votes and the potential increase in demand. The Board noted the work being done by the Commission to manage the challenges of the 2021 polls. This included plans to publish guidance relating to the impact of the pandemic. The Board noted that the recent All Staff Briefing had been well received, and provided an opportunity to reflect on achievements and forward work programmes. The Board discussed the important work of the Commission's partners in the third sector. A wide range of charities and democracy focused groups assisted the work of the Commission, and the Board requested to be updated on this work as it developed. The Board discussed the Annex to the update, on the policy approach to voter registration campaigns. Commissioners noted support for the shift in focus towards known under-registered demographics. Resolved: That the update on operations, matters arising, and the Policy Approach, be noted. Update from the Chair of RemCo (verbal update) The Chair of RemCo provided an update on the work of RemCo including its last meeting in July. The most significant item related to the Staff Survey and the findings of that survey. The survey results had been positive overall but there were still negative points related to issues including staff progression through the Commission, and diversity. The Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Strategy would be on the agenda of RemCo in October, as well as pay and the impact of Covid-19 on the work of the Commission. Resolved: That the update from the Chair of RemCo be noted. Business items taken via electronic means since the previous Board meeting There were no new comments or amendments. Individual Staffing Issue (eEC 72/20) All staff left the meeting except for the Director of Finance and Corporate Services as acting Accounting Officer, and the Head of Strategic Planning and Performance acting as Board Secretary. Resolved: The recommendations of the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee be approved, subject to the Commission Chair and the Chair of the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee, in consultation with the Director of Finance and Corporate Services as acting Accounting Officer, agreeing conditions to reflect Board's comments on the topic.

Board minutes: 21 September 2022 | Electoral Commission Search

Board minutes: 21 September 2022 You are in the Electoral Commission Board section Home How we make decisions Electoral Commission Board On this page Who was at the meeting Apologies and welcome Declarations of interest Minutes Commission Board action tracker Forward Plan of Board business 2022/23 Chief Executive's update (quarterly) Performance report quarter one 2022/23 Strategy and Policy Statement – responding to the statutory consultation Business planning for 2023/24 Dates of proposed Commission Board and Committee meetings in 2023/24 Update on Equality, Diversity and Inclusion (EDI) activities Update on Bullying and Harassment Annual review of complaints First published: 9 December 2022 Last updated: 15 December 2022 Meeting summary Date: Wednesday 21 September 2022 Time: 9:30am to 1:15 pm Location: In person and by video conference Date of next scheduled meeting: Tuesday 18 October 2022 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting John Pullinger, Chair Rob Vincent Sue Bruce Alex Attwood Sarah Chambers Stephen Gilbert Alasdair Morgan Joan Walley Katy Radford Elan Closs Stephens In attendance: Shaun McNally, Chief Executive Kieran Rix, Director, Finance and Corporate Services Craig Westwood, Director, Communications, Policy and Research Ailsa Irvine, Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance Louise Edwards, Director, Regulation Zena Khan, Senior Adviser, Governance Tasnim Jahan, Legal Officer [meeting support] Niki Nixon, Head of External Communications [items 1 and 8] Orla Hennessy, Media Relations and Public Information Manager [items 1 and 8] Ryan McCullough, Public Affairs Manager [items 1 and 8] Isabelle Taylor, Communications Officer [items 1 and 8] Pete Mills, Senior Communications Officer [item 1] Alex White, Senior Communications Officer [item 1] Andreea Ghita, Senior Communications Officer [item 1] Mark Nyack, Senior Communications Officer [item 1] Hennie Ward Communications Officer [item 1] Tom Hawthorn, Head of Policy [item 8] Tracey Blackman, Head of Finance and [item 9] Apologies and welcome The Chair welcomed all to the meeting, in particular Sal Naseem, Independent Adviser to the Commission Board on Equalities, Diversity and Inclusion (EDI), as he participates at his first Commission Board meeting. Chair also welcomed Roseanna Cunningham, who joins as an observer while we await her signed Royal Warrant from His Majesty. The Board acknowledged that this would be Commissioner Alasdair Morgan's last Board meeting as he retires from the Electoral Commission Board serving two terms. Apologies were received from Binnie Goh, General Counsel. The Board welcomed the external communications team, which joined the meeting to provide an introduction and overview to their work. The Board thanked the team for their time and updates and welcomed further updates on future activities.

Declarations of interest The Board noted a declaration of interest from Commissioner Sarah Chambers, she had been reappointed for a second term at the Pensions Regulator.

Minutes (EC 136/22) Resolved: That the minutes of the Board meeting on 20 July 2022 be agreed. Commission Board action tracker (EC 137/22) The Board requested further information on scheduling of the digital campaigns item. It was noted that a guest speaker had now been lined up, with logistics still being planned. Further updates would be provided at the next Board meeting. Resolved: That the Board noted the progress against actions requested by the Board. Forward Plan of Board business 2022/23 (EC 138/22) The Board discussed the Commission's policy priorities and the need to have a scheduled discussion on the Forward Plan of Board business 2022/23, along with a discussion on plans for a Board meeting held in the Speakers constituency for February 2023. Resolved: That the Board discussed and reviewed the Forward Plan of Board business for 2022/23, with pending topical items for scheduling. Chief Executive's update (quarterly) (EC 139/22) The Chief Executive introduced the report providing updates on operations and matters arising. The Board noted that since this report was written, the Commission's Equality, Diversity and Inclusion (EDI) strategy was approved by the Equalities Commission in Northern Ireland. The Chief Executive commended the Head of Projects for her resilience in order to achieve the results. The Board was advised that the Commission will be hosting its all-staff conference on the 1 February 2023 in London and will see all Commission staff come together for the first time since the pandemic. It will be an opportunity to hold an award ceremony to identify individuals and teams who have contributed to the organisation. It was noted that several Commissioners had volunteered to support the day. The Board was advised that the post poll reports were published today. The Director, Communications, Policy and Research and the Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance were commended along with their teams for their work on producing the report. The Board noted further updates on the staff pay award, the Commissions IT infrastructure and progress on procuring a new Board paper management system. Other updates were discussed on the campaign, ongoing work with the Elections Act and continued work with Political Finance Online. Resolved: That the Board noted the contents of the report. Performance report quarter one 2022/23 (EC 140/22) The Board was presented with the Finance and Performance report quarter one, 2022/23. Resolved: That the Board noted the contents of the report to track the delivery of our work programme and that the budget was being managed effectively. Strategy and Policy Statement – responding to the statutory consultation (EC 141/22) The Director, Communications, Policy and Research introduced the report, providing the Board with information relating to the Elections Act 2022, giving the UK Government powers to put in place a Strategy and Policy Statement (SPS) as a new part of the Commission's accountability processes. The Board welcomed the paper and the work that had gone into preparing it. It discussed some amendments to the wording of the consultation response, and concerns on how the SPS would affect the daily business of the Commission once it has been finalised. There would be an opportunity to discuss next steps on how the SPS impacts the Board at February's meeting. Resolved: That the Board supports the approach and agree the proposed consultation response. Resolved: That the Board agree to delegate to the Commission Chair and the Chief Executive the final approval of the consultation response, incorporating such changes as are proposed and agreed as part of the Board's discussion. Business planning for 2023/24 (EC 142/22) The Director, Finance and Corporate Services introduced the report which builds on the report that was presented in July on business planning. The Board were asked then to agree the strategic approach to budgets for 2023/24. Resolved: That the Board agreed the Main Estimates for the UK, Scotland and Wales for 2023/24 and budgets for 2023/24 to 2027/28. Dates of proposed Commission Board and Committee meetings in 2023/24 (EC 143/22) The Board received proposed meeting dates for the Board, Audit and Risk Committee and Remuneration and Human Resources Committee meetings for 2023/24. The Board requested some editing to various meeting dates proposed, and agreed to continue holding Committee meetings the day before a Board meeting in order to keep Commissioner travel and accommodation costs down. Action: A revised calendar of proposed Board and Committee meeting dates for 2023/24 be resubmitted to a future Board meeting for agreement. Action owner: Senior Adviser, Governance Update on Equality, Diversity and Inclusion (EDI) activities (Oral) The Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance provided an oral update on equality, diversity and inclusion activities. As was reported at item 6 of the agenda, it was noted that after consultation which concluded earlier in the year, the Equality Commission of Northern Ireland approved our Equality, Diversity and Inclusion (EDI) strategy, which is UK-wide, and the Single Equality Scheme for Northern Ireland. The Board noted that we are now preparing for publication and are working on the action plan to deliver against the strategy – the people strategy will be an important mechanism for this work in practice, with EDI forming one of the pillars of that strategy, and a detailed implementation programme to deliver against this is in development. It was noted that the Electoral Commission Northern Ireland also approved our revised approach to the Equality Impact Assessments (EqIA) and associated screening tools and templates. We have already started to use these and are now looking at how we can embed their use into our decision making and supporting this with further training, examples and communication. The Board noted that our EDI group continue to develop our inclusion calendar, with the next series of events planned to celebrate Black History Month in October. As with International Women's Day and Pride, we're planning to run some briefing sessions with external speakers as well as share interesting articles and resources and encourage discussion through our intranet and across teams. It was noted that the Independent Adviser to the Board on EDI would be working with staff colleagues on external EDI initiatives.

Resolved:
That the Board noted the oral update. Update on Bullying and Harassment (EC 144/22)
The Board received an update on the Commissions anti bullying and harassment work noting some relevant staff survey results from 2021. The Board noted the Commissions objectives and approach, overview of activities and measuring impact. It was noted that work done on the dignity and respect policy would be circulated for information.

Resolved: That the Board noted the update. Annual review of complaints (EC 145/22)
The Director, Finance and Corporate Services introduced the report for the period 1 July 2021 to 30 June 2022. The Board noted that the report addresses the changed approach to complaints that we have been taking over the last year to emphasise lessons learned. Further to this, additional resources have been agreed to improve our handling of complaints further and we are considering further changes to improve customer service including the handling of complaints. Resolved: That the Board noted the complaints received over the past twelve months.

Electoral observer scheme and code of practice consultation response | Electoral Commission Search Electoral observer scheme and code of practice consultation response You are in the Our consultations section Home Our consultations On this page Introduction Clarifying and modernising the application process Clarifying expectations about the role of observers Improving guidance and support on the practicalities of being an observer Establishing a voluntary feedback process for observers Updating the Code of Practice for electoral observers First published: 19 December 2018 Last updated: 19 December 2018 Summary On 9 August 2018 we launched a consultation on reviewing the UK's electoral observer scheme and a revised Code of Practice for electoral observers. We consulted many stakeholders on our proposed changes to the scheme and the Code of Practice. This is our response to the feedback we received during the consultation. Introduction We run an accreditation scheme for electoral observers across the UK and produce a Code of Practice setting out how observers should apply and what they must do. The Code of Practice also provides guidance to returning officers on working with observers. During the summer of 2018, we ran a consultation to review our electoral observer scheme and Code of Practice. The consultation closed on 31 October 2018. Many stakeholders responded, including: UK and Scottish governments Association of s (AEA) Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights (ODHIR) the police electoral administrators people who are or have been accredited electoral observers We are grateful to everyone who responded to our consultation and for the feedback they gave us. Overall, the responses were positive and welcomed the changes we have proposed making to the scheme and the Code of Practice. We also received a number of suggestions for other changes we could make, some of which are reflected in the revised scheme and Code of Practice. In other cases we haven't been able to take suggestions forward. For example, it was proposed that observers should have access to greater parts of the electoral process, including access to electoral registers and staff training, but we cannot provide for this without changes to the legal framework. We are now taking forward a number of actions to update the scheme. These include: launching a new online application process for individuals and organisations seeking accreditation as electoral observers from January 2019 redesigning the electoral observer ID badge which will be issued to all observers from January 2019 developing a programme of work to improve the guidance we make available to electoral observers, and those running elections introducing a voluntary feedback mechanism for electoral observers from the next scheduled elections in May 2019 updating our approach to how we handle applications for accreditation of electoral observers Clarifying and modernising the application process What we proposed Moving to an online application process for individuals and organisations seeking accreditation as an electoral observer, but with paper applications still available for those who are unable to access the process online. Consulted on the criteria and process we would use for assessing applications for accreditation and how our decisions could be challenged if we rejected or revoked accreditation. Clarifying and modernising the application process: More detail Summary of the consultation responses There was widespread support for our proposal to introduce an online application process. However, there were strong views that we should keep the paper application to ensure that the process is accessible to all, recognising that there may be some people who are unable to access online services. Respondents made clear that access to our staff for potential applicants should continue so that we can provide support and advice on completing the application process. We received various comments on how we proposed assessing and handling applications. One common theme was how long accreditation for individuals would be valid for. In particular, a number of respondents asked whether it could last for longer than it does now, with accreditation for individuals no longer expiring at the end of each calendar year. What we are doing to clarify and modernise the application process From January 2019, individuals and organisations will be able to apply for accreditation online. We will also continue to offer a paper form to ensure that the application process is fully accessible. Staff across our offices will continue to provide advice and guidance to anyone who needs help with the application process. We have increased the period of accreditation for individual electoral observers from up to one year to up to three years. This will make the period of accreditation consistent for both individuals and organisations. Accreditation will therefore run from the date of issue to the 31 December of the third calendar year. However observers can choose to limit their period of accreditation to a shorter period, or end it at any time. In our revised Code of Practice we make it clear that all applicants will have their application processed by us and that we will do checks to ensure they meet the requirements set-out in it, including being politically impartial. Our privacy notice also highlights what we will do in terms of checks. However, we will publish our decision making process for accrediting electoral observers on our website, which will enhance transparency. Clarifying expectations about the role of observers What we proposed Simplifying our Code of Practice. Providing a clearer explanation about the electoral proceedings observers are entitled to attend. Clarifying within the Code of Practice what the role of an electoral observer is. Simplifying and improving the guidance for returning officers and their staff to help facilitate electoral observation.

Clarifying expectations about the role of observers: More detail Summary of the consultation responses Our proposal to provide further information and guidance for electoral observers, and for those who deliver elections, was widely welcomed. Those who have already observed at elections told us that having more information on the electoral process would help make observations more meaningful. Some acknowledged that a lot of the guidance materials we already produce are helpful, but that they are not easy to find. We received some suggestions about the type of guidance we could provide, such as handbooks, online tuition videos and training sessions. Some said it would be helpful if more guidance was provided to polling station staff who may not fully understand the role and purpose of electoral observation. Electoral administrators welcomed more guidance for electoral observers. They said that it would help to ensure that electoral observers had a clearer understanding of the electoral process. In particular, they welcomed our proposal to clarify the behaviours expected of electoral observers. They also supported more guidance on facilitating electoral observation. What we are doing to clarify expectations about the role of observers We are reviewing our guidance and considering how we can make it more accessible to electoral observers and to those running electoral events. In the short term, we will make initial improvements ahead of the scheduled local elections in England and Northern Ireland in May 2019. As part of our digital strategy, we are redeveloping our corporate website. Through this work we will ensure that electoral observers and administrators can easily access all of the information they need online. We will make updated guidance and resources available from the summer of 2019. We will email all electoral observers when they become accredited to help them to easily find the guidance they need. This will include a link to the Code of Practice for electoral observation, as well as signposting to information on the electoral process and details of how they can contact returning officers. Improving guidance and support on the practicalities of being an observer What we proposed Strongly encouraging observers to tell electoral administrators in advance where they plan to visit this ensures that observers can get the most out of their visits.

Changing the design of the observer badges to draw a clearer distinction between Commission representatives and accredited observers. Supporting electoral observers by providing more information on personal safety. Improving advice and guidance to ensure that observers are aware of the standards expected of them and the sanctions for breaching those standard. Clarifying the powers electoral officials have when dealing with misconduct and ensure they can raise concerns directly with us.

Improving guidance and support on the practicalities of being an observer: More detail Summary of the consultation responses Changing the design of the observer badge Our proposal to change the design of the observers badge was welcomed. Many agreed that this would help to draw a clearer distinction between Commission representatives and accredited observers and avoid confusion for those running and working at electoral events. Providing advice and guidance on personal safety Our proposal to provide advice and guidance on personal safety was welcomed, with some respondents suggesting that this should be included in the Code of Practice.

Providing advance notification of observation visits Opinions were divided on the proposal that observers should give advance notice to those running elections in the area they wish to observe. While some observers did acknowledge that it would be a courtesy to do so, they thought it could undermine the purpose of independent electoral observation. There was a strong feeling from those who observed elections that making unannounced visits meant more effective observation and was in keeping with international standards. Unannounced observations would ensure that a true reflection of the voting process could be observed rather than one specifically prepared for independent observers. Many of those who run elections supported the proposal of advanced notice as it would assist in their planning and co-ordination of elections, particularly in relation to count venues. Supporting more meaningful observation could provide information in advance to help observers, such as polling station locations, postal vote opening times and count manuals. Clarifying the standards of behaviour expected of electoral observers A number of respondents welcomed having more information on the standards and behaviours expected of electoral observers, and some thought that this information should be circulated more widely amongst those running elections. Both observers and those running elections told us that such information would help create a better understanding of what is expected from electoral observation. A small number of those respondents who run elections expressed concerns about how they should handle issues relating to misconduct by electoral observers. For example, it was noted that they would be unable to prevent access to any accredited individuals who may have tried to get accredited as an electoral observer with the objective of disrupting proceedings or showing partisan support for those contesting elections. One suggestion was that we should consult with the electoral community when processing applications to ensure the suitability of individuals to be accredited. What we are doing to improve guidance and support on the practicalities of being an observer Changing the design of the observer badge We are updating our electoral observer badges so that there is a clearer distinction between accredited electoral observers and Commission representatives. The new badges will also include additional security features to help improve the overall security and integrity of the scheme. The new badges will be issued to all observers from January 2019. Providing advice and guidance on personal safety We are reviewing the information we can provide to electoral observers to help with their own personal safety when observing electoral proceedings. We will provide safety advice when we launch updated guidance for observers, which will be timed to coincide with the launch of our new website in June 2019. Providing advance notification of observation visits We recognise that our proposal to encourage observers to give advance notification was met with strong views. In our experience, observers do benefit from notifying those running elections in the area they intend to observe. However, we recognise that unannounced and unscheduled visits are important to maintain confidence and integrity in the proceedings that are observed. Our Code of Practice makes clear that there is no requirement for electoral observers to notify electoral officials of their intention to observe proceedings. However it also advises that providing advance notification to electoral officials will mean they can provide accredited observers with relevant local information, such as the list of polling stations, which will help to maximise the value of their observation.

Clarifying the standards of behaviour expected of electoral observers The evidence we have seen over the last decade indicates that the overwhelming majority of accredited observers adhere to the Code of Practice, and there have been few reported cases of misconduct. However, we understand the concerns raised by those running elections, as any instances of misconduct have the potential to have a significant impact on the conduct of electoral proceedings. We will look further at the guidance we offer to those running elections to ensure it helps them handle any instances of misconduct. For example, we will publish our process for handling and revoking accreditation. We have already clarified in the Code of Practice the standards expected of electoral observers. We are developing further guidance for electoral observers which will also be clearer on the behaviours expected of them and what the consequences will be for failing to adhere to the Code of Practice and/or acting in misconduct. We encourage anyone who has evidence of breaches of the Code of Practice or misconduct by electoral observers to report it to us by emailing observers@electoralcommission.org.uk so that we can review their accreditation and take action if necessary. Establishing a voluntary feedback process for observers What we proposed Giving electoral observers the option to feed back. Sharing any feedback we receive with those responsible for administering the polls. Establishing a voluntary feedback process for observers: More detail Summary of the consultation responses The feedback we received on this proposal was positive, with many respondents explicitly welcoming the introduction of an option to feed back. They thought it will contribute to more effective and meaningful electoral observation. However, some respondents stressed that this should always be voluntary and that we shouldn't be prescriptive about how observers should provide feedback. What we are doing about establishing a voluntary feedback process for observers We will pilot a feedback option at the scheduled local government elections in England and Northern Ireland in May 2019. Feedback from observers will be an important part of the wider information we collect at electoral events, and will complement the electoral data and information we already collect from returning officers. We will make online tools available for observers to give feedback. However, we will not make it compulsory to do so and will accept reports in any format. We will also share specific and localised observer reports with those responsible for the administration of electoral events to help with their evaluation and future planning. Updating the Code of Practice for electoral observers What we proposed Prior to the consultation, we: amended the Code of Practice for electoral observers to ensure that it is easily accessible for anyone who is interested in observing and for electoral officials simplified the layout and language of the Code of Practice to make it easier to understand strengthened information within the Code of Practice to ensure that observers are aware of their obligation to remain impartial at all times. We presented the simplified layout as part of the wider consultation in summer 2018. Updating the Code of Practice for electoral observers: More detail Summary of the consultation responses Overall, the changes we proposed making to the Code of Practice were welcomed. We were told that the Code was clear, concise and easy to understand, and would be a practical tool to help with effective electoral observation. We received a number of suggestions about additional supporting materials that could be used to promote and support the Code of Practice, such as fact sheets and a list of 'do's and don'ts' of electoral observation that would work alongside the Code. A number of respondents raised concerns about the requirement for electoral observers to be politically impartial. Some felt observers could apply for accreditation and knowingly disregard this requirement, while others thought it could be a barrier to legitimate observers, particularly international observers who may be politically active outside of the UK. Some suggested that political impartiality should only apply during an election period, rather than for the full length of the accreditation. What we have updated in the Code of Practice for electoral observers We have reviewed the Code of Practice to reflect the feedback we received. The revised Code has now been laid before the UK and Scottish Parliaments. All observers will be required to comply with this Code from January 2019. We are developing supporting materials which will promote and support the Code of Practice. These will include fact sheets explaining electoral processes and safety advice for observers. They will be available when our new website launches in June 2019. We believe political impartiality is an important part of independent and non-biased electoral observation. We expect observers to fully meet this requirement. Being affiliated to a UK registered political party, or a non-party campaign group, does not automatically disqualify a person from being accredited as an electoral observer. However, members, officers or employees of a UK registered political party who would be, or are likely to be, politically active during their accreditation period must not apply for accreditation. If we find evidence that an applicant has previously campaigned, or has been politically active, we will contact the applicant to make sure they are aware of and can meet the requirement for political impartiality during their period of accreditation. We believe this is essential to maintain integrity and confidence in the independence of the electoral observer scheme. If we find evidence that an accredited observer has actively campaigned or shown partisan support at electoral proceedings, we will revoke their accreditation. An observer can also request for their accreditation to be ended if they choose to become politically active. To further enhance the integrity of our observer scheme, we have reviewed how we reject and revoke accreditation. In our revised Code of Practice we make clear that all applicants will have their application processed by us and that we will do checks to ensure they meet the requirements set out in it, including being politically impartial. Our privacy notice also highlights what we will do in terms of checks. However, we will publish our decision making process for accrediting electoral observers on our website, which will enhance transparency.

Appendix A: List of respondents Accredited observer (8) Association of s (AEA) Bromsgrove District Council and Redditch Borough Council Cabinet Office (Elections Division) Carmarthenshire County Council Democracy Volunteers Electoral Management Board Scotland (EMB) Kings College London Knowsley Metropolitan Borough Council Lancaster City Council Manchester City Council, Salford City Council and Wigan Metropolitan Borough Council Newcastle University Northern Ireland Office (Elections Policy Division) Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights (OSCE)

Pembrokeshire County Council/AEA Wales Scottish Government (Elections and Constitution Division) Shaws Society of Local Authority Chief Executives (SOLACE) Single Police Point of Contact (SPOC) (3) UK Parliament (Minister for the Constitution) University of Edinburgh Business School

Commissioners On this page Business expenses: travel and accommodation Salary and fees First published: 30 May 2019 Last updated: 12 December 2022 Description of what we publish We publish information about our commissioners' fees, travel and subsistence costs as part of our commitment to being open about what we do. Fees are the daily rates we pay our commissioners. The House of Commons has set the current daily rate at £390 per day, and £195 per half day, which is equivalent to Band 4 of judicial salaries. We also pay for travel, accommodation, meals and certain other expenses that our commissioners incur while carrying out our work. The limits for these expenses are set out in our policy. We publish an annual total at the end of our financial year. Our financial year starts 1 April, and ends 31 March the following year.

2019/20 travel and accommodation Name Total (£) Sir John Holmes (Chair) 384
Dame Susan Bruce 581 Anna Carragher 1,779 Sarah Chambers 25 Professor Elan Closs Stephens DBE 0 Lord Horam of Grimsargh 0 David Howarth 0 Alasdair Morgan 2,531 Bridget Prentice 0 Rob Vincent CBE 684 Joan Walley 1,424 Alasdair Ross 1,540 Lord (Stephen) Gilbert 0 2019/20 salary and fees Name Total (£) Sir John Holmes (Chair) 80,523 Dame Susan Bruce 12,975 Anna Carragher 12,319 Sarah Chambers 9,399 Professor Elan Closs Stephens DBE 17,337 Lord Horam of Grimsargh 32 David Howarth 20 Alasdair Morgan 10,016 Bridget Prentice 40 Alasdair Ross 9,267 Joan Walley 8,880 Rob Vincent CBE 9,906 Lord (Stephen) Gilbert 7,923 2018/19 travel and accommodation Name Total (£) Sir John Holmes (Chair) 2,859 Dame Susan Bruce 1,339 Anna Carragher 351 Sarah Chambers 4,477 Professor Elan Closs Stephens CBE 0 Tony Hobman 0 Lord Horam of Grimsargh 555 David Howarth 1,192 Alasdair Morgan 5,009 Bridget Prentice 382 Rob Vincent CBE 0 2018/19 salary and fees Name Total (£) Sir John Holmes (Chair) 79,350 Dame Susan Bruce 10,582 Anna Carragher 6,556 Sarah Chambers 6,842 Professor Elan Closs Stephens CBE 13,179 Lord Horam of Grimsargh 3,104 David Howarth 3,678 Alasdair Morgan 9,352 Bridget Prentice 5,764 Alastair Ross 1,624 Joan Walley 979 Rob Vincent CBE 6,821 2017/18 fees, travel and subsistence 2017/18 salary and fees Name Total (£) Sir John Holmes (Chair) 69,874 Dame Susan Bruce 12,828 Anna Carragher 7,164 Sarah Chambers 0 Professor Elan Closs Stephens CBE 14,352 Lord Horam of Grimsargh 5,095 David Howarth 4,717 Alasdair Morgan 8,869 Bridget Prentice 6,416 Alastair Ross 0 Joan Walley 0 Rob Vincent CBE 8,306 2017/18 travel and accommodation Name Total (£) Sir John Holmes (Chair) 1,586 Dame Susan Bruce 5,428 Anna Carragher 1,348 Sarah Chambers 0 Professor Elan Closs Stephens CBE 4,156 Tony Hobman 374 Lord Horam of Grimsargh 0 David Howarth 0 Alasdair Morgan 2,681 Bridget Prentice 544 Rob Vincent CBE 555

Related content Interests, gifts and hospitality Look at the record of our Commissioners' interests, gifts and hospitality Our Commissioners Selecting our Commissioners Find out about the selection process for our Commissioners Electoral Commission Board Find out about our Electoral Commission board, and read the minutes of past meetings

Board minutes: 26 February 2020 | Electoral Commission Search
Board minutes: 26 February 2020 You are in the Electoral Commission Board section Home How we make decisions Electoral Commission Board On this page Apologies and introductions Declarations of interest Minutes of the Commission Board meeting of 22 January 2020, note from the informal session on 22 January, and the minutes from the meeting of the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee meeting on 5 February 2020 Section 10 assessment Performance report quarter 3 2019/20 Corporate planning 2021/26 Chief Executive's update Forward plan of Board business Action tracker Chair and Chief Executive's meetings and meetings of note in Scotland, Wales, and Northern Ireland First published: 18 June 2020 Last updated: 21 June 2021 Meeting overview Date: Wednesday 26 February 2020 Time: 9:30am to 12:35pm Location: Boothroyd Room, 3 Bunhill Row, London Date of next scheduled meeting: Wednesday 18 March Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting John Holmes, Chair Alasdair Morgan (save for item 4) Anna Carragher Elan Closs Stephens Joan Walley (save for item 4) Rob Vincent Sarah Chambers Stephen Gilbert (save for item 4) Sue Bruce Bob Posner, Chief Executive Craig Westwood, Director, Communications, Policy and Research Kieran Rix, Director, Finance and Corporate Services Louise Edwards, Director, Regulation Ailsa Irvine, Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance Amanda Kelly, Interim General Counsel David Bailey, Head of Strategic Planning and Performance David Meek, Senior Adviser, Governance Petra Cress, Head of Planning, Performance and Governance Adrian Fryer, Senior Lawyer (for item 4) Phil Thompson, Head of Research (for item 4) Niki Nixon, Head of External Communications (for item 4) Hamish Love, Senior Adviser, Performance and Insight (for items 5 and 6) Apologies and introductions No apologies. The chair noted that Alastair Ross had, at his request, been released by her Majesty from his Royal Warrant, to take up an advisory position to the Northern Ireland government. The chair thanked him for his service as Commissioner. Declarations of interest No new declarations of interest. Minutes of the Commission Board meeting of 22 January 2020 (EC 10/20), note from the informal session on 22 January (EC 11/10), and the minutes from the meeting of the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee meeting on 5 February 2020 (EC 12/20) Action: The Board requested that the notes of the informal session be amended to reflect the correct date of the informal session. Resolved: That the minutes of the Commission Board meeting on 22 January 2020 be agreed. The records of the informal session on 22 January, subject to amendment above, and the minutes of the meeting of the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee meeting on 5 February 2020 were noted. Section 10 assessment (EC 13/20 and 13A/20) The General Counsel spoke to the advice contained in 13A/20. The Chief Executive and General Counsel advised the committee of the potential consequences of Commissioner perceived conflicts of interest if any decision was scrutinised, including by the courts. Three Commissioners, Joan Walley, Alasdair Morgan, and Stephen Gilbert, were not present for the rest of the item. The Board agreed to consider the item at this meeting, including the request from the UK Government for a delay to enable them to consider fully the constitutional and legal implications of the Scottish Government's request and the basis on which it is made. Resolved: That, consistent with current information and legal advice, the Commission make necessary preparations in order to enable it to respond in a timely fashion, should the Board decide to approve the request under s.10 to provide advice and assistance to the Scottish Government in connection with a possible referendum question. To consider the request more fully at the 18 March Board meeting or otherwise as appropriate. To ask the UK Government to provide the details of any matters they consider pertinent to the decision once they have considered the implications of the request by close of business on Wednesday 4

March. That the Commission will make all relevant correspondence on the matter open and available to the Scottish Government, and will similarly make available to UK Government any representations made by the Scottish Government. Not specific to this matter, but more broadly on the role of nominated Commissioners, the Chief Executive be asked to consider how best to raise the issue of perceived conflict of interest as it affects nominated Commissioners with Government. Performance report quarter 3 2019/20 (EC 14/20 and 15/20) The Board considered the report, and discussed the distinction between operational work and project work. The Director of Finance and Corporate Services noted that operational work remained on-track, while certain project work had been put on hold so staff could focus resources on the unscheduled UK Parliamentary General Election. The Director of Regulation assured the Board that a dedicated team was working to ensure that delayed work in that directorate was processed as quickly as possible. The Board noted the increased number of Freedom of Information Act requests (FOIs) and Subject Access Requests (SARs) received in Quarter Three, and the decreased response rate to these requests. The Board heard that, with SARs, the challenge was not in finding information we held on these individuals, but in assessing the information to ensure compliance with the request. The Director of Finance and Corporate Services noted that we had trained more staff in how to respond to such requests. The Board considered the activity supporting a feasibility study on options for modernising electoral registration. The Director of Electoral Guidance and Administration agreed to add additional commentary to outline the next steps in this process, now that the first stage was complete. The Board discussed recent fines for parties that had failed to properly declare public funds they had received. The Board suggested that larger parties be included as part of the regular checks of declared spending. The Board received an update on how Brexit on 31 January had affected the Commission. The Board also sought an update on progress of proposed legislative changes. Action: The Director of Electoral Guidance and Administration to add additional commentary to outline the next steps in modernising electoral registration. Resolved: That the paper be noted. Corporate planning 2021/26 (EC 16/20 and 17/20) The Chief Executive outlined the background information that had been prepared for the discussion. The Head of Strategic Planning and Performance provided an overview of the process that the senior leadership group had gone through in building the corporate plan 2021/26. The Board considered the relationship between benefits and drivers. The Board also discussed alternate approaches to the development of this corporate plan, including whether the Commission could engage more deeply with stakeholders, particularly regulators facing similar circumstances, such as OfCom. Part of the development of the plan would include consideration of areas where the work of the Commission overlapped with work undertaken by other stakeholders. The Board noted that information provided in the analysis equipped it well to deal with expected events, but not the “unknown-unknowns”. The Director of Regulation noted the challenging timetable had prevented us from taking a more expansive approach to the development of this plan, but that we would still seek stakeholder input. The Board offered its support in contributing to the development of the plan, such as through consulting with small groups of Commissioners in particular areas. The Board suggested that the state of the electoral administration system was one area that needed to be considered in the development of the plan. The Board sought assurances that changing geographic, social and economic diversity was considered in the development of this plan. The Board noted the increasing concentration of social and economic activity in London and the South-East, and considered how this could affect public engagement and trust. The Board considered we should include feasibility planning work towards delivering net-zero emissions elections. The Head of Strategic Planning and Performance confirmed that we would use impact assessment analyses against each benefit. Action: Director of Finance and Corporate Services to consider how best to ensure Commissioner contribution to the development of the Corporate Plan. Resolved: That the paper be noted. Chief Executive's update (EC 18/20) The Chief Executive updated the Board on a recent recommendation from the Independent Inquiry into Child Sexual Abuse; "all political parties registered with the Commission in England and Wales must ensure that they have a comprehensive safeguarding policy." It called for the Commission to monitor and oversee compliance with this recommendation. The Board heard that the initial view in response to this recommendation was that it was outside our remit and outside our skills and experience. The Board also noted the large number of political parties, many of which were quite small parties, for whom this obligation would need to be formulated in a proportionate way. The Board heard that staff would be in contact with the inquiry informally regarding this matter, before staff prepared a written response. Resolved: That the paper be noted. Forward plan of Board business (EC 19/20) The Board considered whether there should be more regular, substantive updates on the wider nation based context of the work undertaken in the devolved offices. This would be considered as part of the Board effectiveness review. Action: Add s10 assessment to March Board meeting. Resolved: That the paper be noted. Action tracker (EC 20/20) Resolved: That the paper be noted. Chair and Chief Executive's meetings and meetings of note in Scotland, Wales, and Northern Ireland (EC 21/20) The Chief Executive noted that this paper might be expanded to include details of significant meetings with external stakeholder held by Directors. Resolved: That the paper be noted.

Results and turnout at the 2014 European Parliamentary elections | Electoral Commission Search Results and turnout at the 2014 European Parliamentary elections You are in the European Parliamentary elections section Home European Parliamentary elections First published: 11 July 2019 Last updated: 6 August 2019 Download You can download the full dataset as an XLSX . You can also download our full report , written by Colin Rallings and Michael Thrasher (Elections Centre, Plymouth University, Drake Circus, Plymouth, PL4 8AA). Summary Thirty different parties fielded a total of 119 lists across Great Britain. There were ten individual party candidates in Northern Ireland. UKIP topped the poll in Great Britain and won the largest number of seats. A total of seven parties won at least one seat. There was no change in party representation in Northern Ireland. The 2014 European Parliament (EP) elections gave nearly 46.5 million registered UK electors the opportunity to vote. Some 16.55 million votes were counted in the ballot box, making the overall turnout 35.6%. This was nearly a full percentage point increase on the 2009 contests. Turnout was higher than in 2009 in every country in the UK. In England and Wales the increase was modest; in Scotland and in Northern Ireland it was more considerable. The proportion of ballots that are rejected at the official count continues to be small. At the 2014 EP contests it was about one in every two hundred votes cast. There is though evidence of the rejection rate being somewhat higher where voters are faced with an additional election operating under a different electoral system (e.g. in areas with combined local elections). Over 7.23 million postal votes were issued - 15.6% of the total UK electorate. In 12 local authority counting areas, more than 25% of the electorate had a postal vote; in another 14 fewer than 10% did so. More than two thirds (69.1%) of those with a postal ballot returned it. In contrast, turnout among those required to vote 'in person' was 30.1%. The proportion of postal votes rejected or otherwise not included in the count was 4.4%, ranging from a high of 7.3% in Northern Ireland to a low of 2.9% in Scotland. Postal vote rejection following a mismatch of signature and/or date of birth was much more common than rejection for incomplete information. In up to a third of cases of postal vote rejection voters returned their postal voting envelopes but failed to include either the ballot paper itself or the verification statement or both. Around 0.6% of electors with a postal vote were granted a waiver to use their date of birth as their sole identifier. Some 54,500 electors (0.12% of the total electorate) appointed proxies to act on their behalf. Areas which had local as well as European elections appear to have attracted a greater proportion of their electorate to vote. In particular, turnout was up in local authorities where there were local contests this time but not in 2009. Related content Past elections and referendums Read our reports and view data about past elections and referendums Inquiry report: the voting registration process for EU citizens resident in the UK for the 2019 European Parliamentary elections held in the UK Read our inquiry report about the voting registration process for the 2019 European Parliamentary election Report: May 2019 European Parliamentary elections and local elections Read our report about the 2019 European Parliamentary elections and local elections Results and turnout at the EU referendum View the results and turnout at the EU referendum

Consultation response: Draft performance standards for Electoral Registration Officers | Electoral Commission Search Consultation response: Draft performance standards for Electoral Registration Officers You are in the Our consultations section Home Our consultations On this page Background Summary of consultation responses What happens next Draft performance standards First published: 2 June 2020 Last updated: 10 June 2020 Summary of the consultation outcomes We commenced a 10 week consultation on a draft framework in January 2020 with the intention that we establish a new set of standards which can be used by Electoral Registration Officers (EROs) and us throughout the year to understand and improve their performance, ensuring ultimately that registers are as accurate and complete as possible, enabling everyone who is eligible and wants to, to be able to vote. Overall, the feedback we have received has been positive and respondents welcomed the proposed approach. On the whole, respondents agreed that the standards – with some minor amendments – along with the proposed tools and templates to be provided by the Commission, will support EROs with understanding and improving their own performance. However, as a consequence of the coronavirus pandemic, we recognise that not everyone who would have wanted to respond to the consultation was able to do so. We have therefore decided to defer finalising the standards for a year, to enable further feedback to be provided. Although we are not formally launching the standards this year, we nevertheless still believe it is important to make them and the accompanying tools and templates available as they form a key part of our guidance and support package which aims to assist EROs with planning for and delivering well-run electoral registration services across Great Britain. We will use the draft standards to inform our engagement with EROs over the next year and will report on their effectiveness before finalising them and laying them in the UK, Scottish and Welsh Parliaments by next summer. Background Consultation background We have the power in law to: set performance standards for EROs issue directions to EROs to provide reports on their performance against the standards prepare and publish assessments of their performance against the standards We first introduced performance standards for EROs in July 2008 with the key objective of delivering a greater consistency of practice across Great Britain. We then introduced a revised framework in 2013 to support the transition to individual electoral registration (IER) and then again in 2016, following the introduction of IER. The reforms to the annual canvass being introduced this year provide us with an appropriate and timely opportunity to develop a new performance standards framework. However, we expect that electoral registration in and across Great Britain will continue to evolve and so we are keen to ensure that the new framework is sufficiently flexible to be able to adapt to further changes. Developing the new standards Over the past year, we have been working collaboratively with representatives from across the electoral community – including the Association of s (AEA), Scottish Assessors Association (SAA) and Solace – to help shape the draft standards. After agreeing a set of key principles to underpin the new framework, we established a working group of electoral administrators from across Great Britain and held a workshop with them to scope out what a set of standards might look like. From this, we developed a draft standard around the accuracy and completeness of the electoral registers, which we tested with this group and the AEA, SAA and Solace. Their feedback informed the content of the draft set of standards that we consulted on. Consultation The consultation was sent to a range of stakeholders, including: Ministers and officials in the UK and devolved governments political parties EROs electoral administrators a number of agencies, professional bodies and representative organisations. We received 34 responses to our

consultation from a range of organisations and individuals including: Chloe Smith MP, UK Minister for the Constitution and Devolution Michael Russell MSP, Cabinet Secretary for Government Business and Constitutional Relations Welsh Government various EROs and local authorities the Association of s (AEA) the Scottish Assessors Association (SAA) View the full list of respondents In addition, we also obtained feedback through discussions with stakeholders from across the electoral community during the consultation period. This included attending various meetings – including AEA branch meetings and SAA meetings – to talk about the draft standards and to seek feedback. The consultation asked for views on a number of questions on the proposed performance standards, including: whether the draft standards will support EROs to understand, improve and report on their performance whether our proposed approach to how we engage with EROs and their teams will enable us to provide effective support and challenge We are grateful for the feedback we received, whether by way of written responses to the consultation or through discussions at AEA and SAA meetings. However, as a result of the coronavirus pandemic, we know that not everyone who wanted to respond to the consultation was able to do so. Given the importance of ensuring we can take into account views from as wide a range of interested stakeholders as possible, we have therefore decided to defer finalising the standards for a year, to enable further feedback to be provided. Although we are not formally launching the standards this year, we nevertheless still believe it is important to make them and the accompanying tools and templates available as they form a key part of our guidance and support package which aims to assist EROs with planning for and delivering well-run electoral registration services across Great Britain. We will continue to welcome further feedback on the questions we posed in the consultation during the next nine months, which will also enable us to learn directly from the experience of using the standards to understand, improve and report on performance during the 2020 canvass. We will use the draft standards to inform our engagement with EROs over this period, and will report on their effectiveness before finalising them and laying them in the UK, Scottish and Welsh Parliaments by next summer. Further information on next steps can be found in the ‘What happens next?’ section below.

Summary of consultation responses

Overall, the feedback we have received has been positive and respondents welcomed the proposed approach. On the whole, respondents agreed that the standards – with some minor amendments – along with the proposed tools and templates to be provided by the Commission, will support EROs with understanding and improving their own performance. Respondents also broadly welcomed our proposed approach to engaging with EROs and their teams over the course of the year. View the latest draft of the performance standards for EROs , which have been amended to reflect feedback received during the consultation. It is these standards which will be used in 2020/21 and on which further feedback will be sought to inform the final standards to be laid in Parliaments by summer 2021.

About the draft standards

The new standards focus on the outcomes that should be delivered, rather than the processes that are followed, with the objective of helping EROs and their teams to understand the impact of their electoral registration activities. This should help EROs to make informed decisions on what activities are undertaken, how these activities are carried out and how their limited resources can be deployed efficiently and effectively. Whilst there was general agreement from respondents that the standards focus on the right activities, a number of respondents commented that although the consultation set out our approach to using the standards over the course of the year, there was no specific mention of registration actions impacting on the delivery of Returning Officer functions at an election, which is important in ensuring that all those who want to vote are able to do so. We have therefore now included specific reference to this as part of the standards, through the addition of the activity ‘Timely and accurate supply of electoral registers to the Returning Officer to support the conduct of elections’. The consultation responses also illustrated some confusion relating to the outcome titled ‘Stakeholders and electors have confidence in the integrity of the electoral registers’, with the use of the word integrity being interpreted as referring to electoral integrity rather than being read in line with the wider definition as was intended. We have sought to clarify this by amending the outcome to focus on the ‘secure management of the electoral registers’ rather than talking about their integrity. On the detail of this standard, we have also now added further references on cyber security processes and maintaining audit trails of how and when data has been transferred in response to feedback, making it more explicit how important these elements are in securely managing the electoral registers. Concerns were also raised by a number of respondents about being able to access, provide and analyse all the data listed in the standards. We believe that access to this range of information, which builds on the data already included in the existing performance standards, will be essential to enable EROs to understand, improve and report on their performance, so have worked with Cabinet Office on a better metrics project to help ensure that this data will be available within software systems and can be easily accessed by EROs when they need it. The additional tools and templates we are providing with the standards, in particular a tool which focuses on how to access, analyse and assess data, should help EROs to make full use of the information that is available to them. There were also some specific suggestions of additional information that could be included to help EROs to understand the impact of their activities – for example, data on the number of ITRs not responded to after the reminder and personal visit stages – and a number of these have now been added in to the standards. Several respondents highlighted the practical difficulties of identifying the number of additions as a result of different targeting approaches. While it will be important for EROs to use the available data on levels of additions and deletions to help them understand the impact of their activities, we have removed the specific reference to the ‘Number of additions as a result of different targeting approaches’ from the standards, recognising that EROs are not able to see from the information routinely available from the IER Digital Service what has driven an application to be made. Using the standards: Electoral Registration Officers EROs will use the data and qualitative information set out in the standards, and any other additional data or information that the ERO feels is relevant, to help them understand the impact of their activities, so they can identify what works, what doesn’t, and where improvements can be made. To help them do this, we committed to developing additional tools and templates to sit alongside the standards, including a resource on using data, key performance indicator setting guidance and a reporting template. Respondents welcomed the proposal for additional tools and templates to support EROs in using the standards. In addition to the tools highlighted in the consultation, respondents asked for further guidance on how to use the standards and in particular how they can measure their impact and evaluate their activities. To respond to this, we will now also develop a ‘How to’ guide on using the standards which aims to help EROs and their teams understand what each element of the standards is trying to achieve and will provide examples of what the different items of data and information we list should show them, and how these can be used to help them understand the impact of their electoral registration activities. Our consultation also set out that whilst we recognise the benefits of EROs using targets for their registration activity locally, we remain of the view that it would not be appropriate to set performance targets at a national level, given the activities and impacts will vary significantly by local area reflecting the particular demographics and circumstances EROs are each working within. We are, however, keen to support EROs with establishing a baseline of their own performance and setting targets which take into account their specific circumstances, and will be providing guidance and resources to assist with this. In particular, several respondents highlighted that they would like to be able to use data to compare their performance with other EROs. By transparently reporting on and publishing data, we hope to be able to support this activity, and will consider further how we can help to facilitate useful comparison as part of our ongoing support and challenge work.

Using the standards: Electoral Commission

The consultation set out our proposed approach to using the standards to inform how we engage with EROs and their teams over the course of the year – not just during the annual canvass period – with the objective of working with all EROs and their teams at least once every two years, continuing to use risk assessments to help prioritise the order, frequency and intensity of our engagement. Respondents broadly welcomed our proposed approach to engaging with EROs and their teams. One respondent, the AEA, highlighted that there will be a need for us to work closely with key stakeholders to understand where support and challenge is needed, ensuring that we capture those who need more frequent support. The risk-based approach is designed with this in mind, to help identify what level of support is required, and we continue to welcome working with others to help ensure that we identify where there are particular challenges so we can target our support and challenge as appropriate. Respondents also commented that when gathering information from EROs and their teams, we must be mindful of electoral cycles and other demands on the ERO, and allow sufficient time for them to submit the information required. As highlighted in the consultation, it is not the Commission's intention that EROs would routinely collate and provide us with all the information listed within the standards; instead, we will work with EROs and their teams to analyse the data and information to help us understand their performance and identify any issues or concerns. We will, however, still want to collect data from all EROs, to help us understand the state of the electoral registers across Great Britain, but we will consider the timing and number of these requests in order to keep them as straightforward for EROs as possible. We also set out that we intend to summarise the data and information gathered through our engagement with EROs and their teams to inform regular progress reports, rather than produce an annual assessment and summary of the performance of EROs. Through our reporting, we want to provide reassurance to the public and key stakeholders (such as political parties and elected members) that EROs are doing everything they can to ensure that everyone who is eligible and wants to vote is able to do so, and to highlight any instances where this is not the case. Respondents were keen that reporting should be used to report on the positive work and successes, and not to name EROs that have issues. While we remain focussed on supporting EROs to understand and improve their performance, we nevertheless have a responsibility to be transparent about where issues arise and will continue to use the standards to challenge EROs when needed, including making clear in our reporting where we find that the standards are not being achieved. We will, however, ensure that our reporting will also be used to celebrate success and share examples of good practice. More generally, we are committed to working with the AEA, SAA and Solace to look at how we can work together to most effectively identify and share good practice in electoral registration, which will be of particular importance as lessons start to emerge from the first year of operation of the reformed canvass processes, and this work is an area that respondents were keen to see us expand into. What happens next While we are not seeking to finalise and lay the standards in Parliaments this year, we nevertheless want to make them available as they stand now, reflecting the fact that, with our guidance and resources, they are a key part of our guidance and support package which aims to assist EROs with planning for and delivering well-run electoral registration services across Great Britain. We will also be publishing additional tools and resources by the end of June. These products, which include a 'How to' guide on using the standards, key performance indicator (KPI) setting guidance and reporting templates, aim to help support EROs and their teams with using the standards to set targets and help them baseline their performance. This will give EROs a strong starting point for using the standards in future years to understand their data and any trends or variances, and to help them identify what works and what doesn't. We will use the standards in this period to help establish a picture of individual EROs' performance during the first reformed canvass as well as to understand more generally how the new processes are operating in practice. Taking a risk based approach, we will engage with a range of EROs throughout the canvass period and into early 2021, using the standards to inform our discussions. To prepare, we will let EROs know ahead of the discussion the types of information that we will want to discuss with them, which will vary depending on the point in the cycle we are engaging at, to help them understand the areas we will want explore, including the data that would be useful to look at. And whilst we will continue to report on electoral registration matters, in recognition of the fact the standards have not have not yet been laid in Parliaments, as well as recognising the wider impact of the coronavirus pandemic on the delivery of electoral registration services, we will not make any formal assessments of performance in the first year. Instead, we will use our reporting over this period to highlight the outcomes of our engagement with EROs, focussing on the activities being carried out and any trends, issues and challenges identified, as well as to draw out successes and examples of good practice. We will also continue to report more widely on the canvass as we have done in previous years, which will include an assessment of how the reformed canvass is operating in practice, which we aim to publish by the end of May 2021. We also intend to use this period to seek feedback on the effectiveness of the standards for understanding, improving and reporting on performance, ensuring that the standards work from the ERO perspective as well as from our perspective before they are finalised. We will gather feedback in the course of our discussions with EROs and will also seek to provide an opportunity more generally for wider input on how the standards are working. Download the draft performance standards New performance standards for Electoral Registration Officers View the accessible version of the standards Accessible version of the draft performance standards Outcome: electoral registers are as accurate and complete as possible, ensuring that everyone who is eligible and wants to vote is able to do so What inputs are needed? ERO understanding and delivery of role and responsibilities Management and oversight of delivery of the electoral registration service, including the statutory functions of the ERO, and stakeholder engagement. Planning Maintaining a plan for registration throughout the year, ensuring it is kept under review and evaluation is undertaken, with lessons learnt fed back in. Resource Identification and allocation of budget and staffing for electoral registration activities Training Identification and delivery of training to meet the needs of both permanent and temporary staff What activities are being undertaken? Identification of those not registered, including hard to reach groups:

Using available data and information sources, identify those not registered, including hard to reach groups Develop and maintain a public engagement strategy, ensuring planned activities are tailored to meet the needs of different groups of electors What information is needed to understand the impact of these activities? Analysis of the scope and usefulness of data and information Ward level analysis of the registration area Identification of priority areas to target registration activity Evaluation of communications channels and approaches, including cost/benefit analysis of previous activity, supporting development of engagement strategy and activities Undertaking year-round registration activity: Maintain the property database Contact potential eligible electors, including carrying out work to target hard to reach groups Ensure those no longer entitled to be registered are identified and removed Manage special category electors What information is needed to understand the impact of these activities? Number of properties with UPRN/as a percentage of properties Analysis of any issues reported with the allocation of properties to polling districts to reflect relevant electoral boundaries The accuracy and usability of data sources used Analysis of response rates by channel, to understand impact of different approaches Number of ITRs sent (by channel) Number of ITRs followed up Number of ITRs not responded to after the reminder and personal visit stages Number of electors whose identity has not been verified and have yet to provide documentary evidence Number of registration applications received Number of additions to the register Number of reviews of registration and number of deletions as a result Number of deletions not as a result of a review, by type Number of renewals sent Number of special category elector applications processed Number of special category electors renewed Administering the canvass: Using available data and information, identify the most appropriate method to canvass properties in your area Make arrangements to deliver the planned canvass activities Undertake the planned canvass activities What information is needed to understand the impact of these activities? The accuracy and usability of local data sources used Results of data matching (national and local) Number of households intended for each route Analysis of available communications channels (e-communications, telephone, mail), to inform contact with individual properties Number of households canvassed, by route and channel Number of communications sent, by route and channel Number of responses by route and channel Assessment of success of canvass communication channels used Number of canvassers recruited and trained Evaluation of canvasser performance What difference is being made? The demographics of the registration area and the needs of groups of electors within it are understood, enabling services to be targeted and designed to meet the needs of residents Barriers to registration are minimised, enabling all eligible individuals to register Potential new electors are identified and are given every opportunity to register to vote Changes in the registration status of individuals are captured and applied to the register in a timely manner Elections are effectively supported by the register How can we determine the success of our work? Performance against the KPIs/objectives set out in your registration plans Evaluation of public engagement activities undertaken, including of changes made to the register as a result of the activity Changes in levels of registration within and across the registration area, both generally and within identified under-registered groups An assessment of levels of additions and deletions, during the canvass and throughout the year A year-on-year analysis of additions and deletions Assessment of the numbers of electors who tried to vote on polling day but were unable to do so as a result of not being registered to vote Outcome: Absent voting is accessible, ensuring that everyone who is eligible and wants an absent vote is included on the relevant absent vote list What inputs are needed? ERO understanding and delivery of role and responsibilities Management and oversight of delivery of the absent voting function, including the statutory responsibilities of the ERO, and stakeholder engagement.

Planning Maintaining a plan throughout the year, including arrangements for managing the absent voting process. Resources Identification and allocation of budget and staffing for absent voting activities. Training Identification and delivery of training to meet the needs of both permanent and temporary staff. What activities are being undertaken? Supporting electors to engage with the absent voting process:

Develop and implement a communications plan to ensure that electors are aware of the absent vote options available to them Ensure that all electors can access the absent vote process What information is needed to understand the impact of these activities?

Evaluation of information made available to electors on the absent voting process to help them understand the options available to them Number of absent vote applications from different elector groups (overseas, service), by type (postal or proxy) Number and type of complaints received about ability to access the absent vote process

Administering absent vote processes: Process new applications Process requested changes to absent voting preferences Maintain absent vote records and lists Develop and implement processes to identify and address potential integrity issues What information is needed to understand the impact of these activities? Number of absent vote applications received by type (postal or proxy) Number of absent vote applications rejected Number of absent vote confirmations sent Number of changes to voting arrangements processed Number of absent vote refresh notices sent, followed up and responses processed Number of postal vote applications for postal votes to be redirected to one address Number of postal applications from one address Number of proxy applications from one address Number of emergency proxy applications by type Number of applications referred to the police for investigation What difference is being made? Electors are able to make an informed decision on what voting method is best for them Barriers to absent voting are minimised, enabling all eligible individuals to apply Changes to voting arrangements are captured and applied in a timely manner The integrity of absent voting records and lists is maintained How can we determine the success of our work? Performance against the KPIs/objectives set out in your plans Analysis of complaints and feedback received about ability to access the absent voting process Assessment of the numbers and types of errors in the absent voter lists Outcome: Stakeholders and electors have confidence in the secure management of the electoral registers What inputs are needed? ERO understanding and delivery of role and responsibilities Management and oversight of delivery of the electoral registers, including the statutory functions of the ERO, and stakeholder engagement.

Planning Maintaining a plan throughout the year, including details of the publication and supply of the register. Resources Identification and allocation of budget and staffing for electoral registration activities. Training Identification and delivery of training to meet the needs of both permanent and temporary staff.

What activities are being undertaken? Publication and supply of the electoral register: Maintain record of those who are entitled to receive the electoral register Securely supply the electoral register to recipients Timely and accurate supply of electoral registers to the Returning Officer to support the conduct of elections What information is needed to understand the impact of these activities? Evaluation of arrangements for publication of the revised register and monthly updates to the register Evaluation of arrangements for supplying the register to those entitled to receive it Number of requests received, number of requests approved and when supplied Audit trails showing how and when data has been transferred Evaluation of methods for transferring data Processes to ensure cyber security Timing of provision of the registers Information provided to recipients on appropriate use of the register What difference is being made? Everyone who is entitled to be supplied with the register receives data on time and in an appropriate format Electors have confidence in how their data is compiled, accessed and used Personal data is processed lawfully and transparently How can we determine the success of our work? Performance against the KPIs/objectives set out in your plans Analysis of complaints received from register recipients in relation to the provision of registers Analysis of complaints from electors about how their data is processed Stakeholders providing feedback Stakeholders providing feedback We received 34 responses to the consultation: UK and devolved governments (4) Chloe Smith MP, UK Minister for the Constitution and Devolution Michael Russell MSP, Cabinet Secretary for Government Business and Constitutional Relations Welsh Government officials (Local Government Democracy Division) Cabinet Office officials Representative bodies (4) Association of s (AEA) North East and Yorkshire Branch of the AEA Scottish Assessors Association The Runnymede Trust EROs and local authorities (26) Aberdeen City Council Ashford Borough Council Bristol Council Bromsgrove District Council/Redditch Borough Council Ceredigion County Council Cheshire West and Chester Council Chorley Council Cornwall Council Eastbourne Borough Council/Lewes District Council East Herts Council East Staffordshire Borough Council Gravesham Borough Council Halton Borough Council Herefordshire Council London Borough of Camden London Borough of Waltham Forest Luton Council Moray Council North Herts District Council Pembrokeshire County Council St Albans City and District Council Swansea Council Torbay Council Wealden District Council Wellingborough Council (one response from the Electoral Services Manager and one from the Electoral Services Officer) We also attended the following meetings to obtain feedback through discussions with stakeholders from across the electoral community: AEA branch meetings: Eastern, East Midlands, London, North West, Scotland and Northern Ireland, Southern, South East, South West and West Midlands Scottish Assessors Association Electoral Registration Committee Wales Electoral Coordination Board Wales Electoral Practitioners Working Group Related content Consultation: Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Strategy Statutory consultation on guidance for Returning Officers: Assistance with voting for disabled people Draft guidance for Returning Officers: Assistance with voting for disabled voters (statutory consultation) Cabinet Office consultation: The Wales Act 2017 (Consequential and Saving Provisions) Regulations 2018 Read our response to the Cabinet Office consultation from February 2019

Appendix 8 Electoral Commission decision-making - Managing legal and reputational risks | Electoral Commission Search Appendix 8 Electoral Commission decision-making - Managing legal and reputational risks You are in the Code of Conduct for Electoral Commissioners section Home Commissioners Code of Conduct for Electoral Commissioners On this page Introduction Approach to managing legal and reputational risk Annex to Appendix 8 Fairness in Commission decision-making First published: 18 June 2023 Last updated: 23 June 2023 Introduction The Electoral Commission was established to be an independent and authoritative public body, with Commissioners who bring senior leadership experience and political expertise. In order to maintain public confidence in the electoral system and democratic process, Commissioners must observe the highest standards of propriety and maintain the Commission's reputation for independence and impartiality. This includes controls on the previous and current political activities of Commissioners, including nominated Commissioners once appointed. High profile and politically sensitive matters occasionally come before the Board for decisions. Some such decisions will give rise to an increased likelihood of allegations of conflict and bias in the decision-making and bear serious legal and reputational impacts for the Commission. It is important that the Board's decision-making process is as robust as possible to ensure that confidence in such decisions can withstand external scrutiny. The annex to this note provides information on the common law duty of fairness in decision-making and the circumstances that increase the likelihood of claims of bias and / or conflict which are relevant to the Commission. Approach to managing legal and reputational risk In order to manage the risk of challenge based on allegations that a decision has been tainted by a conflict of interest or bias, the following approach is to be adopted: Early consideration must be given to whether the decision gives rise to significant risk of claims of conflict and bias and legal and / or reputational risk. If any Commissioner or staff member considers there is a likelihood of allegations of conflict of interest or bias, the matter must be raised with the Chair, Chief Executive, Board Secretary, and General Counsel (if not the same person) for advice and recommendations. Based on advice and recommendations, the Board will then be in a position to consider its risk appetite in relation to the specific matter in-hand. The level of legal and reputational risk the Board is willing to accept from potential allegations of conflict and bias will depend on the circumstances, nature, and particular risks associated with each decision. If, following consideration of any advice and recommendations, the Board is of the view that a decision before it gives rise to a significant risk of claims of conflict and bias and legal and / or reputational risk, then the Board must consider what mitigations could be put in place to address or reduce the risk. As an overriding principle, the Board's default position is that all Commissioners should be able to be involved in all decision-making. The Board will, therefore, always consider in the first instance whether the risks can be effectively mitigated to enable all, or as many as possible of, the Commissioners to be involved in all aspects of the decision-making. While the potential mitigations that may apply to a particular decision will vary depending on the circumstances of that decision, the mitigations the Board will need to consider include: Making declarations of interest and obtaining waivers from those affected by the decision. Managing discussions so that a Commissioner may contribute to the overall strategy or provide expertise, but is excluded from the decision-making part of the deliberation. Recusals by some Commissioners from participation in discussions and decision-making. Delegating the decision or aspects of the decision-making to the Executive. If the Board conclude that the risk of claims of conflict and bias and legal and / or reputational risk cannot be effectively managed, then the Board must recuse affected Commissioners from the deliberations and decision if that recusal would reduce such risk. Annex to Appendix 8 Fairness in Commission decision-making There is a common law duty on public bodies to make decisions in a manner which is 'fair'. This includes duties on decision makers to approach decisions with an open mind and not to be a judge in their own cause (whether pecuniary or not). The test for establishing a conflict of interest or bias is set out in Porter v Magill [2001] , whether a: "fair minded and informed observer", having considered the facts, would conclude that there was a "real possibility" of bias." Applied to the Commission, the test is not whether Commissioners think they are conflicted or biased, but whether an external "fair minded and informed" member of the public would draw that conclusion. If so, the legitimacy of the decision will be drawn into question. The fair-minded and informed observer test in Porter v Magill has also been adopted by the courts to determine whether there is a possibility of bias arising from 'predetermination' or having a 'closed mind'. For local government decision-making, s.25 Localism Act 2011 provides clarity by making it clear that prior indications of a view on a matter do not in themselves amount to 'predetermination' for certain local government decisions. It does not, however, remove the requirement for decision-makers to be open-minded. There is no such statutory protection in PPERA and so the Commission will need to demonstrate that decision-makers had been open-minded and that a fair-minded and informed observer would not consider that there was a real possibility of bias. If the Commission were to make a decision 'unfairly' there would be a serious risk of successful legal challenge. Fairness is more than a legal requirement, it also ensures wider trust in the decision-maker(s), the process, as well as the decision itself. Circumstances that increase the likelihood of claims of bias and / or conflict While decisions that could give rise to claims of conflict and bias come up relatively rarely, the implications of legal challenge and the reputational risk associated with such claims would have serious impact, not just for the Commission, but for the affected electoral event, individuals, political parties and campaigners, and the democratic process as a whole. There are no detailed statutory rules on the participation or exclusion of Commissioners from deliberations and / or decisions. Once appointed, and irrespective of any subject lead or political nomination, all Commissioners are jointly responsible for Commission decisions and bound by collective responsibility. Equally, there is no requirement for all Commissioners to be involved in all decisions, the quorum is a minimum of six (although non-nominated Commissioners must equal or outnumber nominated Commissioners). The Board has also delegated certain decisions and responsibilities to the Executive to perform (see the scheme of delegation in Part 4 of the Corporate Governance Framework). The Commission has the power to regulate its own procedures to manage the legal and reputational risks arising from its decisions. In doing so, it is important that both the Commission and individual Commissioners consider carefully whether there are any organisational or personal circumstances that increase the likelihood of complaints of conflict and bias and legal and / or reputational risk in respect of particular decisions. Whilst everything will depend on the facts, case law highlights the following: membership of professional, political or other organisations would not give grounds for an allegation of bias, without something more. Similarly, a court is unlikely to object to a person's participation in decision-making on the grounds of their religion, ethnic or national origin, gender, age, class, financial means or sexual orientation. In order to manage the legal and reputational risks,

Commissioners should be aware of the factors that have led to successful claims against individuals or organisations. These factors may not always lead to a successful claim as it will depend on the surrounding circumstances and degree. The following are non-exhaustive illustrative examples of factors, drawn from case law, which may increase the likelihood of claims of conflict and / or bias in Commission decision-making:

- A pecuniary or proprietary (and in certain circumstances, non-pecuniary) interest in the outcome.
- Promotion of the same cause as those affected by the decision, for example a long-standing association with one side of a debate, issue, or cause.
- Critical or supportive comments taking a position on an issue which may indicate predetermined conclusions.
- Involvement in decisions that could be seen as promoting a political policy or furthering a manifesto commitment of a political party which a Commissioner is a member.
- Personal acquaintance with, or antagonism against, a person or organisation involved.
- Financial transactions or relationships with organisations or individuals involved.

Where Commissioners are aware of such circumstances, they must seek advice from the Chair, Chief Executive, Board Secretary or General Counsel.

Objective: A modern and sustainable electoral system | Electoral Commission

Search Objective: A modern and sustainable electoral system

You are in the Annual Report and Accounts 2022/23 section Home Our plans and priorities Annual Report and Accounts 2022/23 On this page What we are working to achieve Work done to achieve this aim Performance indicators Ongoing and future work

First published: 4 July 2023 Last updated: 27 September 2023 What we are working to achieve We need to make sure our electoral system keeps pace with digital developments. We need to capitalise on the scope for greater compliance, transparency and the financial savings technology offers, while working to retain voter confidence in the electoral system. We also need to modernise the electoral system to ensure it is environmentally sustainable. We are working towards a modern and sustainable electoral system by: harnessing data and technology to meet the needs of voters, campaigners and electoral administrators understanding, calling for action and acting on the changing risks to the election system from the misuse of data and technology continuing to build strong relationships and streamlining working practices with all bodies that are part of the electoral system supporting governments and the wider electoral community to adopt a strategy and implementation plan which meets environmental standards required of our electoral system. Work done to achieve this aim The Commission submitted written evidence to the Levelling Up, Housing and Communities Committee's inquiry on electoral registration, including how public data could be more effectively used to improve the accuracy and completeness of electoral registers. As well as providing expert advice and recommendations for improving the current system, we continue to explore the feasibility of modernising the voting and registration process. We will be carrying out accuracy and completeness research on the electoral registers to update our evidence-base on the state of the registers and how the current system is working in practice and could be improved. Performance indicators Indicator Target 2022-23 Meeting requirements of existing and emerging or new environmental legislation N/A – This will be developed when the UK Government's target is published N/A This indicator is intended to help the Commission measure and report its environmental impact, and to meet its requirements from existing and new environmental legislation. Targets will be developed and baselined during the first three years of the corporate plan, depending on published government targets. The Commission writing for the Institute for Welsh Affairs Without an immediate election on the horizon many involved in this work, including the Electoral Commission, are thinking about where the work to engage young people in our democratic process needs to go next. The Commission writing for the Institute for Welsh Affairs Ongoing and future work We are currently updating our accuracy and completeness research, which will help us to understand the health of the UK's electoral registers. The updated findings for both Great Britain and Northern Ireland will be published in autumn 2023. We will continue to engage with the UK Parliament's Levelling Up, Housing and Communities Select Committee's enquiry around possible changes to voter registration systems across the UK. The Commission's feasibility studies on better use of public data and automated or automatic registration will continue to underpin our approach in this area. The Commission will continue to invest time and resources in building relationships with other regulators and stakeholders to understand their views and identify opportunities for collaboration. Navigation Previous Next Objective: Fair and effective electoral law Enabling activity: Independence and integrity

What we do in referendums | Electoral Commission Search What we do in referendums You are in the section Home On this page Before the referendum During the referendum After the referendum First published: 31 May 2019
Last updated: 15 September 2019 Overview of what we do in referendums For a referendum to take place in the UK, the UK Parliament has to pass legislation about it. We start work on a referendum when the UK Parliament has passed this legislation, and we know what our role in the referendum is. Our role in referendums is different to our role in elections . Although we don't run elections, we do run national referendums held under the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000 (PPERA) , or have other responsibilities, depending on the legislation. Our Chair or someone our Chair appoints, is the Chief Counting Officer for PPERA referendums. The Chief Counting Officer is responsible for the conduct of the poll, can issue directions to Counting Officers, and also certifies and announces the results of the referendum. Before the referendum Before the referendum, we: look at the wording of the proposed referendum question to make sure it is easy for voters to understand and as part of our assessment we carry out research with the public produce guidance and resources for the Counting Officers responsible for administering the referendum and issuing directions as necessary (in the case of PPERA referendums) give guidance to people campaigning in the referendum, so they know what the rules are run campaigns so people know when the deadlines are for registering to vote, and applying for postal and proxy votes appoint a lead campaigner for each side of the referendum debate publish information about the donations political parties, campaigners and other groups receive, and how much money they are spending design the ballot paper During the referendum During the referendum, we: work with Counting Officers to make sure the referendum is run well look at how well the Counting Officers are doing, and whether they are working to our performance standards make sure people have all the information they need to vote, including how to find their polling station answer the questions people ask us on polling day visit polling stations on polling day, and observe how well run they are When the polls close on the referendum polling day, we certify and announce the results of the referendum (in the case of PPERA referendums). After the referendum After the referendum, we: publish reports on how well-run the referendum was, and recommend what would improve future referendums publish information about the donations political parties, campaigners and other groups receive, and how much money they spent publish electoral data including the size of the electorate, turnout, the number of rejected ballot papers and information on postal voting

Interests, gifts and hospitality | Electoral Commission Search

Interests, gifts and hospitality You are in the section Home On this page

Shaun McNally Ailsa Irvine Louise Edwards Craig Westwood Kieran Rix Binnie Goh, General Counsel First published: 30 May 2019 Last updated: 20 February 2023 Why we publish interests, gifts and hospitality We are independent, and impartially is important in everything we do. Our Executive Team tell us their interests, and record all of the gifts and hospitality they receive, including any they refuse. We then publish this information, to show we are independent and impartial. Shaun McNally, Chief Executive Interests Board Member: Association of Chief Executives Ailsa Irvine, Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance Interests None Louise Edwards, Director, Regulation Interests None Craig Westwood, Director, Communication, Policy and Research Interests Trustee, Poet in the City – a charity which works to create new audiences for poetry, since September 2016 (Pro bono) Kieran Rix, Director, Finance and Corporate Services Interests Independent Member, Audit & Risk Assurance Committee, Office for Environmental Protection Binnie Goh, General Counsel Interests Trustee of Vibrance, a Social Care charity Related content Travel and subsistence Our Executive Team Meet our Executive Team, and find out more about them Our Senior Leadership Team Meet our Senior Leadership Group, and find out what they're responsible for Chief Executive's external meetings Find out about our Chief Executive's external meetings

Consultation on revised enforcement policy | Electoral Commission Search
Consultation on revised enforcement policy You are in the Our consultations section Home Our consultations On this page What we're consulting on How to respond Changes to the enforcement policy View the revised enforcement policy Questionnaire First published: 16 January 2023 What we're consulting on As the regulator of political finance in the UK, we ensure that parties and campaigners follow the law.
If we believe that the law may have been broken, we can take action. This gives voters, parties, and campaigners confidence that the system is fair. The Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000 (PPERA) requires us to provide guidance on our investigation powers, and sanctioning of potential offences and contraventions of the act. We publish a statutory enforcement policy, which we refer to when running an investigation. We regularly review the policy and have just completed our latest review. We are running a public consultation on the changes. Your views will help us make this policy as clear and helpful as possible, so that our approach to enforcement is transparent, and can be easily understood. How to respond This consultation is open from Monday 16 January until Friday 31 March 2023. You can respond by filling in our online form emailing your views to epconsultation@electoralcommission.org.uk writing to us at: Enforcement Team The Electoral Commission 3 Bunhill Row London EC1Y 8YZ If you have any questions or require any help to be able to respond, please get in touch on 0333 103 1928. Changes to the enforcement policy We have reviewed our enforcement policy. The revised version doesn't represent significant changes to our operational work, but makes clear how we already work. We're asking for your views to help make the document as clear as possible. Some of the changes we have made include: Revised how we explain our approach to enforcement. This makes it clear how the enforcement policy sits within a wider context. Revised how we explain our approach and added direct references to impartiality. We have made it clear that we will only take enforcement action when it's necessary and proportionate. Included a new section on our forfeiture approach. This is a process of removing impermissible funds from the system and is usually voluntary. We feel it is helpful for campaigners if we explain our approach. Included recognition of the impact investigations can have on those involved, and that we will be sensitive to this. We have also included reference to our commitment to recognising and taking account of diversity. Removed an annex advising interviewees on the interview process. This is already provided to anyone invited for interview during an investigation. Other minor wording changes to improve clarity and provide as much certainty as possible for campaigners. For example, in what circumstances we consider opening an investigation, and our approach to disclosure of information. View the revised enforcement policy View the revised enforcement policy Questionnaire Related content Enforcement Find out about privacy and enforcement Party registration decisions View our decisions on political party names, descriptions and emblems View current applications View the political party names, descriptions and emblems which we are currently considering as part of our assessment process Donations and loans Find out about donations and loans to a political party, individual or other organisation

Northern Ireland Assembly Parties Panel minutes: 28 January 2020 | Electoral Commission Search Northern Ireland Assembly Parties Panel minutes: 28 January 2020 You are in the Party panels section Home How we make decisions Party panels First published: 6 November 2020 Last updated: 3 February 2021 Meeting overview Date: 28 January 2020 Time: 9:30am Location: Boardroom, Ormeau Business Park, Belfast Date of next scheduled meeting: 9 June 2020 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting Alliance Party: Sharon Lowry and Scott Redenbaugh DUP: Allan Ewart Green Party: Liz Byrne Sinn Féin: Gary Fleming SDLP: Catherine Matthews UUP: Nicholas Trimble The Electoral Commission: Anna Carragher, Commissioner Cahir Hughes, Head of Electoral Commission NI Mairaid McMahon, Manager Roisin McDaid, Senior Officer (Political Parties Liaison) Hannah Greenfield, Information and Support Officer Electoral Office for Northern Ireland Virginia McVea, Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland Royal Mail Claire Connolly and Scott Forsyth Welcome and introductions The Chair, Anna Carragher, welcomed everyone to the meeting and round table introductions were made. Anna introduced Mairaid and Hannah to the table as new members of staff at the Electoral Commission. Notes of previous meeting held on 1 October 2019 An amendment was tabled to item 6.1, to make it clear that the Codes of Practice on spending by candidates and spending by parties, if approved, would only apply at local government elections in Northern Ireland where the regulated period was combined with the regulated period for another election. Issues raised by the political parties No items had been raised by the parties in advance of the meeting.

December 2019 post-election review – 12 December UK Parliamentary General Election

The Chair invited feedback from the Panel on all aspects of the 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election. She noted that the discussions would inform the Electoral Commission's report into the election, and that any further feedback could be provided to the Commission in due course.

Registration

The Electoral Office for Northern Ireland (EONI) has investigated a number of allegations made on two radio shows on 20 December and 23 December. The Chief Electoral Officer (CEO) had prepared a report for the Secretary of State which addressed these and she outlined the content of the report to the Panel. She suggested that there were two systemic issues that emerged during the election: that members of the public did not know their Digital Registration Number (DRN); and that some students were not able to provide the evidence of residence required to process their application. The CEO highlighted the surge in applications to join the register in the run up to the election. A total of around 84,500 applications were made during the general election campaign. Over 40,000 of these were made in the last six days before the registration deadline. The EONI plans for installing extra phone lines was delayed by the election but this work should be completed in the near future. The CEO commended staff at the EONI who had worked very hard over the period running up to the election, particularly given the proximity of Christmas. The Chair asked if the Panel had any comments on registration. One party suggested that some proxy voters had been unable to utilise their proxy votes at polling stations. The CEO advised she would look into it further. Another party raised a concern around EONI's capacity to cope with the number of registrations made. The Chair noted this had been a UK wide issue. The CEO advised that all applications for registration made before the deadline had been processed in time. Another panel member was concerned that some members of the public didn't understand the postal vote application process. The CEO stated the EONI will be reviewing their letters.

Nominations

There was a request made for counting agents to be able to register by email due the centralisation of EONI in Belfast. The CEO advised that she was planning to address this by running more pop-ups in local council offices. Postal voting A Panel member asked for data about the number of postal votes applied for, issued and utilised and the CEO advised she would report back to the next meeting. Campaign issues and campaign material The Chair discussed the issue of unsavoury campaigning during the election throughout the UK. One party highlighted that third party campaigners don't have to register until they spend over £10,000. Roisin acknowledged this and stated that campaigning for or against a candidate has a lower threshold. Roisin also advised that the Electoral Commission carry out campaign monitoring and contact organisations during the campaigns.

Candidate mailing (Royal Mail) This was dealt with under item 6. Public awareness There was a suggestion that more effort should have been made to raise public awareness of DRNs. Cahir advised that the Electoral Commission would bear this in mind in future public awareness campaigns. Polling stations There were some issues raised regarding the electoral registers available in polling stations. The CEO indicated that she was aware of these and would seek to address them in future. The CEO noted that whilst she had received some complaints from members of the public regarding the polling stations used, there was limited flexibility and choice given the last-minute nature of the election and the fact it was held in the run up to Christmas. The count There was general agreement from the panel that the count was well run, and members commended the CEO for this. Commission guidance No issues were raised Update from the Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland The CEO discussed the data that would be available during the canvass. The canvass is due to start in July and the EONI expect most registrations will be made online. There may be some training opportunities available for Single Transferable Vote counting, and Panel members would be informed in due course. Update from Royal Mail A Panel member raised concerns with Royal Mail over inconsistencies in the rules about what constituency names were allowed on the election communications. This had meant that some election materials were sent very late. Scott noted these concerns and noted that work was ongoing to clarify this for the future. Royal Mail raised issues with the way that poll cards were delivered to them. Whilst they are generally received sequentially, for this election there was no order, which meant that poll cards were sent out in an ad hoc manner. This also created confusion in households where some electors received their poll cards in advance of others. A Panel member noted that some election communications had been delivered to the wrong addresses, and Royal Mail stated this was due to a change in processing which is being looked into. Electoral Commission Updates Roisin brought attention to the financial returns deadlines: Quarter 4 2019 donation and loan returns These must be submitted to the Commission by Thursday 30 January UKPGE Party Campaign Spending Return Parties that spent £250,000 or less on campaigning at the UK Parliamentary general election must submit their spending return to the Commission by 12 March 2020. The Electoral Commission submitted the draft codes of practice to the Minister for Cabinet Office in July 2019. Cabinet Office officials came back with a number of suggested modifications. The Electoral Commission are currently working their way through these. The amended drafts will be submitted to the Minister to lay before Parliament. If approved, the codes will apply to UK Parliamentary and Northern Ireland Assembly elections. The UK wide report on the European election was published in October. It identified two key issues that had a detrimental impact on voters: the difficulties experienced by some EU citizens living in the UK who wanted to vote in the European Parliamentary elections in the UK; and the difficulties experienced by overseas British voters who were unable to return postal votes in time to be counted. The report also showed that overall levels of voter confidence in the running of these elections were lower than at other recent polls. Research carried out for the Commission showed that public confidence that the European Parliamentary elections were well-run had fallen by more than ten percentage points since the elections in 2014. AOB The Electoral Commission provided an update on PFR online. Significant progress has been made over the last year with developing both the registration and the financial reporting side of the online system. It will make it quicker and easier for parties and campaigners to register with the Commission and to report financial information, enhancing their ability to comply with their legal obligations. After input from the party user group, the Electoral Commission plan to roll out the new system in January 2021 instead of January 2020 to provide additional time for development and user testing. Parties can submit their reports for the unscheduled elections in 2019 on the old system. Training and familiarisation will be provided for the new system in the summer/autumn of 2020.

Next meeting dates As the previously published date of Tuesday 24 March was no longer suitable, it was agreed that Hannah would contact Panel members to agree an alternative. Tuesday 9 June Tuesday 6 October

Search Campaign spending: Political parties and non-party campaigners You are in the section Home On this page Data in this section

Elections Referendums Chart: Spending by party and election Spending by party and election Spending breakdown First published: 11 July 2019 Last updated: 14 June 2023

Summary box Before elections and referendums, there is a regulated period for the campaign that puts a limit on spending. These limits apply to candidates, political parties and non-party campaigners. Spending limits vary for different elections. Data in this section Spending by party and election Spending breakdown Intro Every year, we publish specific guidance for elections happening that year. That guidance sets out: the particular spending limits that apply the period that the limits apply for the reporting deadlines for those elections Election campaign spending During election campaigns spending limits apply to political parties and non-party campaigners. They must record what they spend on certain activities to promote themselves, or criticise other parties, during the regulated period. Political parties have to: record what they spend during the election campaign report their spending to us in a spending return Non-party campaigners have to register with us if they plan to spend over a certain amount during the campaign. These amounts are:

£20,000 in England £10,000 in Scotland, Wales or Northern Ireland Lead campaign group

Registered campaigners in a referendum can apply to become the lead campaign group for one side of the debate. This is also known as being the designated organisation.

Lead campaign groups: have a higher spending limit than other registered campaigners get funding to send information to voters can be involved in referendum campaign broadcasts can use certain public rooms for free receive a grant from us Campaign spending at past elections and referendums You can view spending at past elections and referendums on Political Finance Online , so you can see what political parties, campaigners and other groups are doing. Chart: Spending by party and election This chart shows the combined total spending by political parties in elections. You can view the data based on type of election, and whether the election is held in Great Britain, Northern Ireland or both. Chart: Spending by party and election Spending breakdown This chart shows the total spending broken down into categories. You can view the data based on type of election, political party and whether the election is held in Great Britain, Northern Ireland or both. Spending breakdown Related content

Campaign spending: Candidates Find out about how candidates spend money on election campaigns View donations and loans Annual accounts Find out about political parties' annual accounts Political Finance Online Find out how political parties are spending their money, and the donations they're receiving on Political Finance Online

Response to the UK Government consultation on a draft Strategy and Policy Statement for the Electoral Commission | Electoral Commission Search

Response to the UK Government consultation on a draft Strategy and Policy Statement for the Electoral Commission You are in the Our responses to consultations section Home Our responses to consultations On this page Independence of the Electoral Commission Accountability of the Electoral Commission The Commission's approach to this consultation The Commission's response to the draft Strategy and Policy Statement Delivery of the Government's executive priorities Restatement of the Commission's existing functions and duties The Commission's role across the United Kingdom The principles of neutrality and impartiality Enforcement Guidance The responsibilities of other organisations First published: 16 September 2022 Last updated: 7 October 2022 Overview The Elections Act 2022 introduced a new power for the UK Government to put in place a strategy and policy statement for the Electoral Commission. The statement can contain UK Government guidance that the Commission is required to have regard to in the discharge of its functions. The UK Government has published a draft strategy and policy statement and is consulting on its content with three statutory consultees: The Electoral Commission, the Speaker's Committee on the Electoral Commission, and the Levelling Up, Housing and Communities Select Committee of the UK Parliament. The Commission has submitted the below consultation response outlining its views.

Independence of the Electoral Commission The Electoral Commission is the statutory body which oversees elections and regulates political finance in the UK. It works to promote public confidence in the electoral system and ensure its integrity. As the UK's political finance regulator and the body that oversees free and fair elections, the way the Commission works and its decisions must remain independent, and its independence must be clear for voters and campaigners to see. This underpins fairness and trust in the electoral system, as well as public and cross-party confidence in the Commission's work. It is fundamental to maintaining confidence and legitimacy in our electoral system that an electoral commission remains independent from governments and acts impartially and with integrity to fulfil its duties. The introduction of a mechanism such as a strategy and policy statement – by which a government can guide the work of an electoral commission – is inconsistent with that role. Parliamentarians from all political parties made clear statements during the parliamentary consideration of the Elections Bill that the independence of the Electoral Commission is vital to the functioning of a healthy democracy. Ministers too were clear during the passage of the Bill, and with the Commission since Royal Assent, that they value and want to uphold the independence of the Commission. The opening section of the draft statement describes the Commission as the "independent regulatory body". It goes on to state that the "statement does not seek to interfere with the governance of the Commission and the Commission remains operationally independent." Members of the Commission Board wrote to the Secretary of State in February 2022 to set out their concerns about the proposed powers included in the Elections Bill (now the Elections Act), and this remains the firm view of the Commission.

Accountability of the Electoral Commission The Commission values scrutiny of its work and welcomes and engages with the routes and processes that are already available to the UK Parliament and other legislatures to hold it to account. This includes frequent engagement with select committees and public bill committees through written and oral evidence sessions, in addition to regular scrutiny of financial and business planning by the cross-party Speaker's Committee on the Electoral Commission. Now that the Elections Act has become law, any strategy and policy statement drafted by the Government and designated under the Act will form part of that process of accountability to the UK Parliament, in particular through the Speaker's Committee. Once a strategy and policy statement has been approved by Parliament, the Commission will have a duty to have regard to it in taking forward its work, and will ensure that this duty is met. The Commission will continue to act in an independent and impartial way in order to help maintain public confidence in elections across the UK. In taking independent decisions about how to deliver its important roles and functions – including statutory obligations not mentioned in the statement – the Commission will continue to balance the needs, views and interests of all members of the electoral community. These include each of the UK's parliaments and governments, but also electoral administrators, the regulated community of parties, candidates and campaigners, and voters themselves. The Commission will report annually to the Speaker's Committee on how it has had regard to the statement. The Commission will remain accountable to the Scottish Parliament and the Senedd for its work in relation to Scottish and Welsh elections, including work that is directly funded by the Scottish Parliament and the Senedd. The Commission's approach to this consultation The Commission has UK-wide responsibilities, and important distinct responsibilities in each of the four parts of the UK. It is accountable to and funded separately by the UK Parliament, the Scottish Parliament and the Senedd. Its work is directed to meeting the needs of a broad range of stakeholders. Earlier this year the Commission set out its proposals for delivering these responsibilities in its five-year Corporate Plan for the period from April 2022 to March 2027, including a separate plan which covers the Commission's activities in Wales . These plans are the result of broad engagement with the electoral community, and they have been considered and approved by each of the three parliaments to which the Commission is accountable. The Commission's plans set out how it will deliver against five strategic objectives: Accessible registration and voting Transparent political campaigning and compliant political finance Resilient local electoral services Fair and effective electoral law A modern and sustainable electoral system The Commission's response below therefore focuses on where the guidance set out in the draft strategy and policy statement departs from these agreed, balanced and independent plans that have already been considered and approved by respective parliaments. It comments on the approach the Government has taken to using this new legislative power; highlights some areas where amendments are required; and notes practical issues relating to the workability of the draft statement. The Commission has not yet been required to have regard to a strategy and policy statement. Once a final statement has been approved by Parliament and designated, the Commission will give consideration to it, and to what bearing the statement should have on the Commission's existing and approved plans. This response focuses on what is specifically within the draft statement. However, the Commission would welcome the opportunity to discuss with the Government how best to bring about wider improvements to the democratic system. For example, paragraph 13 refers to combatting foreign interference in UK elections. The Commission has recommended changes to the law (echoed by recommendations by the Committee on Standards in Public Life) that would bring about significant improvements in this area, but this requires action from the Government to bring forward legislation to strengthen the regulatory framework. Similarly, paragraph 25 refers to clarity on the law. Since 2016 the law commissions have recommended changes to clarify the law. These have been widely welcomed and supported. The Commission would welcome the opportunity to work with the Government to develop workable proposals for modernising and simplifying legislation that would bring clarity where it is greatly needed. In the view of the Commission, these and other issues can better be progressed by working together rather than through a strategy and policy statement. The Commission's response to the draft Strategy and Policy Statement As this is the first draft strategy and policy statement to be considered for approval by Parliament, it is particularly important to ensure it is absolutely clear, so that the Commission is able to account for it when reporting back to Parliament on how it has had regard to it. There are a number of aspects to the approach taken by the Government which may raise issues if taken forward in the final statement. Specifying the Commission's priorities The statement in some places – most notably paragraphs 4 and 5 – appears to seek to substitute the independently agreed priorities for the Commission with a requirement to have regard to the Government's view of what those priorities should be and how they should be resourced. The first section of the draft statement seeks to set out "the Government's view of the Electoral Commission's priorities and functions that support the Government's priorities in relation to elections, referendums and other matters in respect of which the Commission has functions". This wording is different to the description of the scope of the statement in new section 4A of the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000 (PPERA). This provides that a statement may set out firstly the Government's strategic and policy priorities in relation to elections, referendums and other matters in respect of which the Commission has functions; and secondly the roles and responsibilities of the Commission to enable the Government to meet those priorities. It will be important to understand how this wording in the statement reconciles with the wording in the Act. This will be particularly important for proper parliamentary scrutiny of the statement. In addition, although the statement indicates that "this is not an exhaustive list of all the Commission's duties and responsibilities and does not suggest that the Commission should cease to carry out any of its other statutory duties", it makes clear that some of the responsibilities that Parliament has legislated to give to the Commission should be considered a lesser priority. It specifically says in paragraph 3 the Government's view that "these priority functions should be the focus of the Electoral Commission's work and allocation of resources". Commission's priorities summary The Government should make clear how its statements on priority setting are consistent with the Commission's independence and with the Act. In particular, it should be clear that the Commission should not be fettered in the exercise of those of its statutory duties that are not covered in the statement and that the Commission remains free to prioritise and resource those other functions in accordance with its independently agreed plans. Delivery of the Government's executive priorities Delivery of the Government's executive priorities Under the heading "Executive priorities in relation to elections as approved by Parliament" Section 2 of the draft statement sets out the UK Government's priorities in relation to elections, including reference to the Conservative Party's 2019 general election manifesto (paragraph 7). This includes guidance that the Commission should "support the Government's delivery of legitimate executive priorities in relation to elections during this Parliament, including changes brought by the Elections Act 2022 and as listed below" paragraph 8). The Commission will continue to deliver the statutory functions and responsibilities that Parliament has given it, including changes brought by the Elections Act 2022, and the Commission will respond to and reflect any changes to legislation that Parliament has approved. As the statutory regulator, the Commission will also continue to provide independent advice to the Government and Parliament about the implications of proposals for changes to policy or legislation, drawing on relevant experience and expertise. However, the effect of this section of the statement would be to legally require the Commission to have regard to supporting the delivery of policies that have not yet been approved by Parliament. It would not be appropriate for an independent regulator to be given such direct responsibility for delivering the policy priorities of the Government, including manifesto commitments or other policy proposals that may not yet have been considered or approved by Parliament.

Delivery of gov policies summary

The strategy and policy statement should be amended to make clear that the Electoral Commission will not be required to have regard to supporting the delivery of policies that have not yet been approved by Parliament.

Restatement of the Commission's existing functions and duties

Restatement of the Commission's existing functions and duties Anything included in the final strategy and policy statement approved by Parliament will require the Commission to have regard to it and be accountable not only to Parliament but also potentially through the courts. Care must be taken not to needlessly introduce uncertainty or confusion over the Commission's functions or duties, through restating them in different and expanded wording. This creates confusion for stakeholders and the public, and will also increase the potential for legal challenge on the nature of the Commission's functions and obligations under the statement; any differences in description may be exploited to undermine or challenge the Commission's decisions.

Furthermore, in some parts of the statement examples are given to illustrate a general point but the duty of the Commission extends across the full range of its activities. For example, paragraph 18 refers to responsiveness to the public and the public interest which is central to all parts of existing agreed plans, yet the only example given in the statement refers to support for Returning Officers. Similarly, paragraph 19 refers to value for money which is also a core element of the Commission's legal duties and existing plans, yet the only example given in the statement refers to relates to use of powers under section 10 PPERA. It is not clear why these individual examples have been highlighted given that the Commission aims to operate consistently across all its functions in these and other areas.

Summary:

Restatement of the Commission's existing functions and duties The strategy and policy statement should be amended to accurately reflect the wording of the Commission's responsibilities, as legislated for by Parliament, to avoid needlessly creating confusion for stakeholders and risk of legal challenge.

The Commission's role across the United Kingdom

The Commission's role across the United Kingdom The draft statement includes reference to the Commission's responsibilities across all parts of the United Kingdom. As currently drafted this would require the Commission to have regard to "the importance of acting for all parts of the UK equally" (paragraph 23). The Commission's published and approved corporate plans set out clearly how it will deliver its statutory functions and priorities in each part of the UK, and across the UK as a whole. This includes responsibilities carried out in the devolved nations with accountability to the UK Parliament, and also those activities for which the Commission is funded by and directly accountable to the devolved parliaments. It is unclear what acting "equally" for all parts of the UK would mean in practice, how this relates to the responsibilities in other parts of the UK and to other legislatures, how this could be assessed or what it is specifically intended to achieve. The Commission's work programme varies depending on the scheduled and unscheduled polls taking place, and also the needs of stakeholders and priorities of the respective governments. In addition, while work on particular polls and governmental policy priorities are funded by their respective parliaments, some cross-cutting aspects of the Commission's work are funded by the three parliaments, paid on the basis of a jointly agreed formula. This therefore creates a risk that UK

Government guidance through this statement has a bearing on work undertaken for the other legislatures to which the Commission is accountable. The draft statement does not currently recognise this complexity. Summary: The Commission's role across the United Kingdom The strategy and policy statement should be amended to ensure that the purpose and intent behind the requirements relating to "all parts of the UK" are clear for Parliament, devolved legislatures, and the Commission. The principles of neutrality and impartiality The principles of neutrality and impartiality The draft statement includes an explanation of the Government's view of the core principles that should be prioritised by the Commission in the exercise of its functions. This includes guidance that the Commission should "uphold and demonstrate the principle of political impartiality by ensuring that the Commission and its staff communicate and treat all operations, decisions, regulated entities and political matters neutrally and impartially" (paragraph 16). The Commission's current approved corporate plans set out clearly its view and understanding of the importance of acting impartially and with integrity, including taking decisions on the evidence and being transparent about the reasons for them. As an expert body, we base our policy positions and recommendations on independent and impartial analysis. It is unclear what additional expectation is required of the Commission to act 'neutrally' as well as 'impartially'. It is also unclear how 'neutrality' could be seen to be consistent with the Commission's functions, including for example its role in advising governments and parliaments on changes to improve the democratic process. The principles of neutrality and impartiality The strategy and policy statement should be amended to ensure wording on impartiality is consistent with the Commission's existing legal role. Enforcement Enforcement The draft statement includes several references to proportionate enforcement including: "the need to avoid disproportionate sanctions against genuine mistakes where reasonable steps have been taken to comply with the new digital imprint regime" (paragraph 14) "the need for the Commission to balance the impact of its enforcement policy on providing an effective deterrent for deliberate breaches of electoral law and not unduly discouraging participation in public life" (paragraph 20a) "The Commission should be sensitive and proportionate to the voluntary nature of much of political parties' infrastructure" (paragraph 20a) "best practice from other regulators (such as the 'Macrory principles'), including where appropriate the use of requests for improvements before resorting to fines and the need to conduct investigations in a timely manner" (paragraph 20b) The Commission is already required by law to prepare and publish guidance on the use of its powers to investigate and sanction potential offences and contraventions of PPERA. The Commission has consulted on and published this guidance in its Enforcement Policy . This clearly and publicly sets out the Commission's approach to enforcement activity, which already covers the factors of proportionality and deterrence, including that it will: Regulate in a way that is effective, proportionate and fair. Use advice and guidance proactively in order secure compliance and to give those it regulates a clear understanding of their regulatory requirements. Undertake supervisory work to ensure that regulated organisations and individuals meet their legal requirements. Take enforcement action, including using investigatory powers and sanctions, where it is necessary and proportionate to do so in order to meet its enforcement aims and objectives. Take the facts of each situation into account. Including such specific guidance as to how the Commission should ensure proportionate enforcement of the law, and what factors it should consider when investigating potential criminal offences, risks impacting the operation of the Commission's duty to take decisions on enforcement action in line with its enforcement policy. Further, it is already open to anyone to challenge an enforcement decision if they are not satisfied that the Commission has acted proportionately or consistently with this published statutory policy. The inclusion of specific factors in the statement could lead to an increased risk of legal challenge to operational decisions about investigations and enforcement. It could be seen to establish an alternative set of standards that may undermine the Commission's statutory enforcement policy. It could also create legal uncertainty over the application of regulatory requirements on the regulated community and affect voter confidence in the electoral system.

Enforcement summary

The strategy and policy statement should be amended to remove points of guidance on the operation of the Commission's enforcement responsibilities, which risk undermining its approved statutory enforcement policy.

Guidance Guidance

The draft statement includes several references to the development and publication of guidance and performance standards by the Commission to support campaigners, Returning Officers and Electoral Registration Officers to comply with the law:

"In particular, the Commission should support Returning Officers in ensuring the secrecy of the ballot inside polling stations, by making it clear in both advice and guidance that any breach of the secrecy laws or attempt to influence someone's vote while in the polling booth is an offence." (paragraph 5a)

"In particular, with regards to guidance on qualifying expenses in Part 1 of Schedule 8A of PPERA, the Commission should include clear and comprehensive guidance about the test of who should count as "the public at large or any section of the public"." (paragraph 13b)

"The Commission should also support compliance with the regime and recognise the importance of protecting free speech by individuals when producing the statutory guidance for the digital imprint regime."

(paragraph 14) "For example, the Commission must have regard to the importance of accurate and prompt election results through supporting Returning Officers' conduct of counts and setting adequate performance standards for Great Britain."

(paragraph 18) "the Commission should provide guidance that sets out the rules as simply as possible and offers practical advice, with illustrative examples, of how to comply with the rules, as legislated by Parliament"

(paragraph 24) Guidance issued by the Commission reflects the processes and requirements set out in law that have been approved by Parliament. It sets out where statutory requirements or offences are specified in legislation, and also makes clear where it is suggesting best practice that goes beyond any minimum requirements set out in law. These points of practice set out in the statement are already incorporated in the Commission's agreed corporate plans and current guidance. The Commission continuously reviews and updates its advice, guidance and performance standards, including consulting with campaigners or electoral administrators to ensure it understands and meets their needs. While the Commission may provide illustrative examples where it is possible and likely to be helpful for campaigners or electoral administrators, it may not be appropriate or possible in all instances, such as for unscheduled polls or in relation to new types of campaigning.

Summary: Guidance

The strategy and policy statement should be amended to remove points relating to the content or format of the Commission's guidance or performance standards.

The responsibilities of other organisations

The responsibilities of other organisations

The draft statement includes several references to other organisations with statutory responsibilities for delivering elections or enforcing the law, for example:

"The Commission should support this work and candidates facing intimidatory or abusive behaviour by updating guidance in the 'Joint Guidance on Intimidation for Candidates' jointly produced with the National Police Chiefs Council, Crown Prosecution Service and the College of Policing."

(paragraph 11) “Where decisions are taken by the prosecuting bodies not to take forward prosecutions, and where the Commission is aware of a decision not to prosecute and it is appropriate to do so, the Commission should ensure the record is clear that individuals or organisations do not remain under criminal investigation.”

(paragraph 21) The Commission would be required to show how it has had regard to the statement, but will not have powers to direct other organisations to ensure that they also follow these specific points of guidance. For example, the Commission cannot require the National Police Chiefs Council, Crown Prosecution Service and the College of Policing to update their guidance, and yet would be accountable through the strategy and policy statement for ensuring it is updated. In areas where it already works to support the police the Commission will continue to do so, but as it cannot seek to direct police priorities it is not clear what more the statement aims to require it to do. Similarly, there is no requirement for the police or prosecuting authorities to tell the Commission if they have decided not to bring a prosecution. Even if that were common practice, it would not be appropriate for the Commission to act as a spokesperson for another enforcement or prosecuting authority by communicating their decisions. Other organisations summary The strategy and policy statement should be amended to ensure that the Commission is not given inappropriate responsibility for the actions or decisions of other bodies. The Government should also ensure that any other bodies referenced in the strategy and policy statement are satisfied that their roles and powers are accurately represented.

Search Electoral registration reform and degrees of centralisation You are in the Modernising electoral registration: feasibility studies section Home A modern electoral register Modernising electoral registration: feasibility studies First published: 26 July 2019 Last updated: 8 June 2021 Content Importantly, the work we conducted found that most of the reforms are feasible from a technical perspective and could (with the possible exception of systems designed to enable better detection and management of duplicates) be implemented without radically altering the structure of the electoral registration system in the UK. In particular, technology already employed by the IER Digital Service could form the building blocks for reforms including better use of data by EROs, automated/automatic registration and the integration of electoral registration into other public service transactions. However, as part of the project, we also considered whether a centralised register, or system of joined-up electoral registers, would offer any additional benefits for electoral registration or electoral reform more broadly.

Although the Co-ordinated Online Record of Electors (CORE) was legislated for in 2006 by the Electoral Administration Act (intended to make it easier for political parties to verify the legitimacy of their donors), the provisions were never commenced and the project was abandoned in 2011. We concluded that a greater degree of centralisation could offer some benefits, particularly in terms of simplifying the infrastructure needed to support reform. In addition, the combination of unique identifiers and some form of joined-up registers allowing EROs to compare information about entries across all 372 registers could reduce the risk of some electors voting more than once at a relevant election. Reforms along these lines could also enable us to know how many people are actually registered twice (legally) and additionally provide the potential basis for any move towards different ways of voting in the future. However, these potential benefits need to be balanced against the impact of further centralisation on the structure of electoral registration in the UK, including the potential loss of local knowledge about under-registered groups; and the security risks around the management of personal data.

Related content

- Reforming electoral law Find out about electoral law and the changes we want to see
- A modern electoral register Find out about the changes we want to see to the electoral registration system in the UK
- Transparent digital campaigning Find out about digital campaigning and the changes we want to see
- of elections Find out about the accessibility of elections and the changes we want to see

Report: How the 2012 Police and Crime Commissioner elections were run | Electoral Commission Search Report: How the 2012 Police and Crime Commissioner elections were run You are in the Police and Crime Commissioner elections section Home Police and Crime Commissioner elections On this page About this report Background to the elections Legislation for the elections Participation at the elections Why people did not vote People's experience of voting Legislation for the elections Participation by voters Participation by candidates and campaigners Trust in the delivery of the elections No undue influence Recommendations Download our full report First published: 26 June 2019 Last updated: 15 August 2019 About this report This report provides our assessment of how well the first ever Police and Crime Commissioner (PCC) elections held on 15 November 2012 across England (excluding London) and Wales, were run, and how well the framework for the new PCC elections was established. It includes assessment of three UK Parliamentary by-elections in Manchester Central, Corby and Cardiff, a local mayoral election in Bristol, and a local referendum in Hartlepool to decide whether to keep the directly elected mayoral structure, which were also held on 15 November. Our analysis reflects the experience of voters, based on public opinion research and electoral data provided by Local Returning Officers (LROs), as well as feedback and views about the administration of the election from candidates and agents, those responsible for delivering the poll, and other participants. Background to the elections Following the May 2010 UK Parliamentary general election, the UK Government published its programme for government, which included a commitment to 'introduce measures to make the police more accountable through oversight by a directly elected individual, who will be subject to strict checks and balances by locally elected representatives' ¹. As the lead department for policing, the Home Office published a White Paper, Policing in the 21st Century: Reconnecting police and the people, for consultation in July 2010. The Police Reform and Social Responsibility (PRSR) Bill was introduced in the House of Commons on 30 November 2010. The PRSR Bill provided for the election of PCCs to replace police authorities in 41 police force areas in England and Wales from May 2012. The 41 police areas in England and Wales vary considerably in size and population from Greater Manchester with two million electors to Dyfed Powys with under 400,000. In September 2011, during its passage through Parliament, the UK Government tabled amendments to the Bill to change the date of the first PCC elections from 3 May 2012 to 15 November 2012. The Police Reform and Social Responsibility Act received Royal Assent on 15 September 2011. Legislation for the elections The detailed rules for the PCC elections on 15 November 2012 were contained in secondary legislation. Despite recognition by the UK Government of the importance of ensuring that detailed rules were clear at least six months before polling day, several key pieces of legislation were not laid until much later: The Order setting out the detailed rules for the conduct of the elections was laid in the UK Parliament on 15 May 2012 and came into force on 25 July, just over ten weeks before the start of the election period. The Order setting out the maximum amounts available to Returning Officers (ROs) for recovering costs for their services and running the election was made on 12 September 2012 and came into force the next day, just 3 and a half weeks before the start of the election period. The Order 2012 specifying a bilingual ballot paper to be used for the PCC elections in Wales was laid in the UK Parliament on 29 October 2012, and came into force on 31 October, just 14 days before polling day. Participation at the elections Just over 36 million people were registered to vote in the November 2012 PCC elections. A total of 5.49 million votes were cast in these elections, representing a turnout of just 15.1% – the lowest recorded level of participation at a peacetime nonlocal government election in the UK. Turnout at the three UK Parliamentary by-elections ranged between 18.3% in the Manchester Central constituency and 44.8% in the Corby constituency. Turnout at the first mayoral election in Bristol was 27.9%, and at the local governance referendum in Hartlepool turnout was 18%. More than 5.8 million postal votes were issued for the PCC elections - 16.1% of the eligible electorate. Approximately 2.8 million postal votes were returned for the PCC elections. Postal votes accounted for 48.9% of all votes counted, and the remaining 51% of votes were cast by voters or appointed proxies at polling stations. Just under 50% of electors issued with a postal ballot returned it. Only 9.2% of 'in person' electors used their vote. One hundred and ninety-one candidates were nominated and stood for election to the 41 PCC posts. In addition, 34 candidates stood in the three UK Parliamentary by-elections, and 15 candidates stood in the mayoral election in Bristol. Thirty eight of the 41 November 2012 PCC elections were held using the Supplementary Vote electoral system, and of those, five were concluded without having to proceed to a second round because the winning candidate received more than 50% of valid first preference votes cast. Three PCC elections were held using the first-past-the-post electoral system as they had only two candidates standing. Why people did not vote The most commonly cited reasons for not voting in the PCC elections related to a lack of awareness (37%), primarily a lack of information about the elections and not knowing who the candidates were or where to find information about them. This figure was over five times greater than the proportion of non-votes who gave a similar response following the May 2012 local elections (7%). Over a quarter (28%) of people said that they knew 'nothing at all' and 48% knew 'not very much' about what the PCC elections were about. Only 24% said that they knew 'a great deal' or 'a fair amount' about the PCC elections. There is some evidence to suggest that the lack of information about the elections and candidates had a more significant impact on participation among groups who are traditionally more likely to vote in elections. 'Circumstances' was the second most common reason given by respondents for not turning out to vote (31%), with non-voters in England more likely to cite this as a reason than those in Wales (32% compared to 20% in Wales). The proportion of non-voters who cited circumstantial reasons for not voting in November 2012 was significantly less than the proportion that cited this as a reason following the May 2012 polls (53%). People's experience of voting Voters continue to report high levels of satisfaction with the process of casting their vote. Both polling station and postal voters remain positive about their experience. Nearly all polling station voters were satisfied with their experience (94%) and 96% said it was a convenient way to vote. Similarly, 97% of postal voters were satisfied with voting in this way and a similar proportion (96%) also said that it was a convenient way of casting their vote. Ninety-four per cent of those who voted in the PCC election said that they found the ballot paper easy to complete, with 77% finding it very easy. Our research also indicates that voters understood how to complete their ballot papers for the mayoral election in Bristol and the local referendum in Hartlepool. 155,883 PCC ballot papers were rejected at the first stage of the count - 2.8% of all votes cast. Although higher than recent polls using the first-past-the-post electoral system, this figure is comparable with other elections held under the Supplementary Vote system (SV). The proportion of ballot papers rejected at the first preference stage of the count ranged from 1.7% in Humberside to 7.2% in North Yorkshire. Anecdotal evidence from candidates, LROs and observers suggests that a significant proportion of rejected ballot papers were deliberately spoiled by electors wanting to register their concerns about the elections, although it has not been possible to quantify the extent of this activity through available electoral data. The PCC elections were new elections, for a new role, which took place at an unfamiliar time of year and were held using SV, with which many voters were not familiar. It was therefore important that voters had sufficient information about the voting system, the issues, and the candidates that were standing, to allow them to make an informed decision and be able to participate with confidence. The Commission ran a public awareness campaign to make people aware of the elections and explain how to participate in them. This included sending an information booklet to all households in areas where elections were taking place containing information on the date of the elections, the subject matter and how to complete the SV ballot paper. While this information is important for voters, it is the parties and candidates themselves that give people a reason to vote; there is little evidence that public awareness campaigns alone – whether run by the Government, the Commission or the LRO – provide voters with the motivation to vote. In most other elections with large geographic constituencies, 3 1.28 candidates would be provided with a means of raising awareness among all voters that they are standing for election, to communicate their policies and to encourage people to vote. This has taken the form of a free mailshot (e.g. UK general election) or booklet with address from each candidate (e.g. mayoral elections). However, the UK Government took the decision not to provide candidates with this for the PCC elections and instead chose to build a central website containing information from candidates and a phone line that the public could use to order printed material. Legislation for the elections Although the Police Reform and Social Responsibility Act received Royal Assent in September 2011, more than a year before the elections, the detailed secondary legislation was not in place until much closer to polling day. There was no reason why the Government wasn't able to avoid such late confirmation of the detailed framework for the conduct of the PCC elections. The legislation was framed using existing legislation, requiring relatively straightforward amendments to reflect the specific requirements for the PCC elections. Better planning, and a more collaborative approach to legislative development across (and between) Government departments, and greater clarity about policy goals is needed to support more effective and timely delivery of legislation for future polls. We propose to return to these issues in more detail to inform the planning process after May 2014 and to make public our assessment of the state of readiness for combination, in time for the 2016 elections. Participation by voters The expected level of participation in the November 2012 PCC elections was one of the most salient issues for elected representatives and media commentators during the months leading up to polling day, and the historic low turnout of just 15.1% was a concern for everyone who cares about democracy. It is important to use the evidence and data available from these elections to understand why participation was so low, in order to be able to identify whether changes to policy and delivery approach could help improve participation at future elections. The Government should not take for granted that people will automatically feel able to participate in new elections. A perceived lack of information about the contests and the candidates for these elections was the main reason that people said they did not vote. In particular, only 22% of people said they had enough information on candidates to be able to make an informed decision. We do not believe that the information needs of voters at these elections were adequately considered when deciding whether or how to support the provision of candidate information directly to electors or households. Although improved delivery of information about candidates would not in itself be enough to improve turnout, it would address the unacceptably low levels of information/awareness and provide a better basis for encouraging participation in future elections. This conclusion suggests some significant implications for the management and delivery of all new elections proposed in future. Decisions about information for voters at new elections should be supported by much more thorough analysis by governments of what kind of information people need to participate and make an informed choice, and how they should be able to access that information. The UK Government will need to begin planning now to carry out an analysis of options for providing information in advance of the 2016 PCC elections. We have a rich set of data from these elections about electors' views and needs which is available to inform that analysis. Any proposals for new polls – including referendums – also need to be supported by a robust analysis of the information needs of voters. Electoral data and our research with voters indicates that those who generally vote found the supplementary vote electoral system and ballot paper for the PCC elections easy to use and to complete without making mistakes. While rates of rejected ballot papers for the first preference stage were within the range recorded at other UK elections using preferential voting systems⁴, they were higher than for elections using the first-past-the-post electoral system. The number and proportion of ballot papers which were not included in the count suggests that there is, however, still scope for further improvements to the design and wording used on ballot papers to reduce the risk of electors inadvertently spoiling their ballot paper. Participation by candidates and campaigners Many of the rules for the qualification and nomination of candidates at the PCC elections were significantly different from those in place for other elections in the UK. Some of these differences – notably the stricter disqualification rules for people with certain previous convictions – were not well-understood by candidates, leading to confusion and, in one well-publicised case, a candidate remaining on the ballot paper despite acknowledging his disqualification. The Commission has begun a comprehensive review of the procedures used for standing for election in the UK. As part of this review, we will take into account the views and experience of candidates at the first PCC elections in November 2012. Our review will consider any barriers which prevent people from putting themselves forward as candidates for election, and whether there are any unnecessary barriers which could be removed. The review will include qualifications, disqualifications and the requirements for becoming nominated as a candidate, as well as the benefits and support available to candidates once nominated. We expect to publish any recommendations for legislative change by the end of 2013. There is, however, one specific issue which must be addressed before the next PCC elections in May 2016. Important lessons need to be learned by the Commission, political parties, Returning Officers and the UK Government about how best to ensure prospective candidates fully understand the rules surrounding eligibility to stand as a candidate. While the primary responsibility for ensuring individual candidates understand whether they are qualified or disqualified will continue to remain with them and their election agents, it is clear that a small but significant number of people were unable to access accurate advice about whether the disqualification relating to convictions for imprisonable offences applied to their specific circumstances. Trust in the delivery of the elections For the PCC elections, the UK Government designated 41 Police Area Returning Officers (PAROs) by Parliamentary Order, whose role it would be to coordinate the administration of the election across each police area as well as serving as the LRO in their own authority. This statutory management structure was different from the UK-wide regional structures in place for European Parliament elections and the May 2011 Referendum on the voting system for UK parliamentary elections, and also from the regional structure used for National Assembly for Wales general elections. For most Returning Officers, especially in England, formal coordination and management at a sub-regional level was a new experience. Nevertheless, our assessment is that this structure generally worked well for these elections, and Returning Officers and the Commission have each learnt from the experience of the 2012 polls to improve management and coordination for the May 2016 elections. The UK Government also needs to ensure that it learns lessons about its role and approach. In two police areas, unanticipated changes in local authority management personnel meant that the PARO was no longer able to carry out the role. In both cases, the PARO acted from a different authority to the PARO electoral services team. While these changes certainly presented some risk to the successful delivery of the elections in those areas, we are not aware of any significant negative impact on the administration of the elections which is attributable, solely or in part, to the change in management structure. Overall, based on analysis of the performance of LROs and PAROs, our assessment is that the administrative aspects of these elections were well-run. Research with the public also indicates high levels of satisfaction with the administration of the elections. Given the high-profile concerns about the provision of information about the elections and the candidates discussed previously in this report, it is important to reiterate that LROs and PAROs were not themselves responsible for those aspects of the elections. Nevertheless, we have identified two specific aspects of the administration of the elections which need to be reviewed in more detail to identify improvements for future PCC elections. First, postal voters need to receive the right instructions for marking their ballot papers based on the voting system in use in their police area (first-past-the-post or supplementary vote). Second, LROs and PAROs should review and evaluate their plans for managing the verification and counting of votes to identify efficiency improvements in advance of the next PCC elections. Many counts took significantly longer than expected to conclude. Turnout for the May 2016 polls, however, may be higher than in November 2012, particularly if the PCC elections are combined with other scheduled polls, and the administration of the count will be more complex as a result of the combination. PAROs and LROs will need to ensure that their count processes are as accurate and efficient as possible, to reduce the risk of negative perceptions about the quality and competency of electoral administration overall. The Commission has started work on an analysis of the most efficient procedures for managing the count at major polls, with a view to identifying more accurately the resources required, and to understand how spend relates to the detailed activities undertaken in respect of verification and count processes and how effectively they have been delivered. We will carry out case studies at the scheduled 2013 and 2014 elections to collect and assess financial and other information to enable us to develop a robust count model to be issued in good time for use at the 2015 UK Parliamentary general election. No undue influence Despite proactive efforts by Returning Officers and the police to minimise the risk of electoral malpractice, there remains a worrying contrast between the low levels of recorded cases of alleged electoral malpractice, and the higher levels of concern about electoral fraud expressed by respondents in our post-election survey. It is, nonetheless, important to recognise that very few allegations have been recorded in relation to the November 2012 PCC elections. The Commission has begun a comprehensive review of potential vulnerabilities within the current voting system and processes, which will aim to achieve consensus about the best balance between ensuring the integrity and the accessibility of electoral processes in the UK. It will consider whether any changes to legislation or practice are needed to ensure confidence in the integrity of elections in the UK. We intend to publish this review in time for legislation to be brought forward during the life of this UK Parliament if necessary. We have also agreed a new code of conduct for campaigners with the parties represented on the UK Parliament Political Parties Panel. The code has been sent to all registered political parties in Great Britain, and Returning Officers will draw it to the attention of all candidates and parties contesting elections from May 2013 onwards. Any concerns that the code has been breached will be raised with the relevant party or campaigner if appropriate, and we will agree appropriate actions to remedy or prevent a reoccurrence of any breach. We will publish the outcome of any such breaches in our statutory reports for future elections.

Recommendation 1: Improving planning and management of legislation for future elections

For future elections where new or amended legislation is required, the relevant Government department responsible for those polls must learn from the experience of the 2012 PCC elections to put in place better medium-term planning for the delivery of all necessary legislation. Not later than two years in advance of polling day for any scheduled elections, the Minister responsible for the elections policy should set out a plan for how they intend to manage the policy development, drafting and legislative scrutiny processes required to meet the following key milestones and deadlines:

- Confirmation (whether by Royal Assent to primary legislation or laying secondary legislation for approval by Parliament) of the campaign funding and spending rules at least three months before the start of the regulated period. Where elections are held for the first time, or where the campaign funding and spending rules are materially different from those at previous elections, the rules should be confirmed at least six months before the start of the regulated period.
- Confirmation of all detailed rules for the conduct of and funding for the delivery of the polls (including any orders required to specify bilingual ballot papers and forms in Wales) not less than six months before polling day.
- Not later than 18 months before polling day we will review the Government's proposals and publish a report setting out our assessment of progress towards meeting those milestones and deadlines. It will be particularly important for the Home Office to set out clearly by May 2014 how it will work with the Cabinet Office and the Welsh Government to manage the development of any changes to the legislative framework for the May 2016 PCC elections, so that the challenges of combining the poll with the poll for the scheduled National Assembly for Wales general election and local government elections in England can be addressed.
- We will review the UK Government's plans by November 2014 and publish our assessment of progress towards meeting the key milestones and deadlines for the May 2016 PCC elections.

Recommendation 2: Improving access for electors to information about candidates at future PCC elections

The UK Government should amend paragraph 52 and Schedule 8 to the Police and Crime Commissioner Elections Order 2012 to ensure that electors are sent printed information about candidates standing for election as PCC in their force area. This should take the form of a booklet with addresses from each candidate sent by the relevant Police Authority Returning Officer to every household in the police authority area. The UK Government should ensure that these changes are made to the 2012 Order by November 2015, in line with the timescales set out in our Recommendation 1 above for improving planning and the management of legislation for the May 2016 PCC elections.

For any new elections which are proposed in future, the relevant government should make clear at the time of introducing legislation how they will ensure that electors have appropriate access to information about candidates. In doing so the relevant government should draw on data collected by the Electoral Commission and others from the November 2012 elections, and should consider: The extent to which electors have reliable and easy access to online or other non-physically published sources for information about candidates. The extent to which candidates themselves can feasibly communicate messages directly to electors, taking into account the geography of police force areas and the statutory limits on campaign spending. How best to inform electors about how they can access information about candidates, including simplifying the process as much as possible for electors.

Recommendation 3: Ensuring cost-effective and neutral public awareness information about future elections The Home Office and Electoral Commission both ran public awareness campaigns ahead of the election. Whilst both campaigns achieved awareness of their respective messages, it would have been more cost effective having one integrated campaign from an independent source that covered awareness of the elections, what the elections were about, the date, candidate information and the voting system. We have demonstrated our experience and capacity to deliver cost-effective and neutral public awareness activity at a wide range of UK elections and referendums. Parliaments should continue to give the Electoral Commission statutory responsibility for providing information for voters about elections and how to vote in them, and it would not be an appropriate or sensible use of public funds for governments to duplicate that activity. No government should commission public awareness activity for future elections or referendums, including the May 2016 PCC elections.

Recommendation 4: Ensuring that ballot papers for future elections are accessible and well-designed The UK Government should review options for the design and wording of ballot papers for future elections using the supplementary vote electoral system, in order to reduce the risk of ballot papers not being counted because they have been incorrectly completed. The Government's review should: Consider evidence from the range of elections held using the supplementary vote electoral system, including local authority mayoral and London mayoral elections and the November 2012 PCC elections. Consider both single column ballot paper designs (using numerals to record first and second preferences) as well as double column designs (using crosses). Consider the potential combinations of elections using the supplementary vote electoral system at the same time as those using the first-past-the-post system. Include research with voters and input from plain language and accessibility experts to ensure that the design and wording of ballot papers for future elections is simple and straightforward to use by as wide a range of people as possible. The UK Government should publish the results of its analysis and consult on any proposals for changes to the design and wording of ballot papers for elections using the supplementary vote electoral system not later than November 2014, 18 months before polling day for the scheduled May 2016 PCC elections. If the Government decides not to carry out this review, we will undertake our own design and research with voters on ballot paper designs for elections using the supplementary vote system. We would begin this work by October 2013 and would publish any recommended designs for consultation by November 2014. Any changes to the prescribed form for the ballot paper to be used at the May 2016 PCC elections should be clear (whether in primary legislation which has received Royal Assent or secondary legislation which has been laid before Parliament) no later than the beginning of November 2015, six months before polling day for the next PCC elections. The Government should ensure that forms produced in accordance with the legislation are correct and accurate as soon as possible, and ensure that they can be used for the next set of PCC elections in 2016 and any by-elections which might take place before then.

Recommendation 5: Ensuring that candidates have access to guidance and advice on the rules on standing for election as a PCC The Commission will work with Returning Officers, political parties and the UK Government to develop proposals to ensure that all candidates for future PCC elections continue to have access to guidance and advice about standing for election. In particular, we will review feedback and the results from our survey of candidates to identify opportunities for providing more specific advice about the circumstances in which people might be subject to a disqualification on the basis of a previous conviction. We will work with others to develop proposals to supplement the guidance and advice we provide on electoral law, ensuring that expertise on relevant aspects of criminal justice law can be made available to those who need it. The UK Government should consider whether further clarification of provisions for filling a vacancy in the office of Police and Crime Commissioner are required to cover circumstances where a candidate is discovered to be disqualified after the deadline for withdrawal of nominations but before the poll. The Government should ensure that any changes to the law are made so that the rules are clear by November 2015, six months before the next PCC elections. Recommendation 6: Ensuring effective management and coordination for future PCC elections The UK Government should review its approach to supporting the management and coordination for future PCC elections, drawing on lessons identified in this report and any other feedback from local Returning Officers and Police Area Returning Officers (PAROs). The UK Government should consult Returning Officers, professional associations, the Commission and the Welsh Government in order to develop a comprehensive plan for the management and coordination of the May 2016 Police and Crime Commissioner elections covering: The appointment of PAROs. Contingency arrangements for areas where nominated PAROs leave the authority for which they acted as Returning Officer. Support and briefing for PAROs. The UK Government should publish its plan for the management and coordination of the May 2016 Police and Crime Commissioner elections by May 2014, in line with the timescales set out in our Recommendation 1 above for improving planning and the management of legislation for the May 2016 PCC elections. Recommendation 7: Improving the administration of future PCC elections Returning Officers in England and Wales should ensure that they review and evaluate their approach to planning and the delivery of the 2012 PCC elections, to identify what worked well as well as areas where performance could be improved. The Commission will review procedures for managing the count at major polls, with a view to identifying more accurately the resources required and understanding how spend relates to the detailed activities undertaken. We have also previously identified a need to review how our guidance and performance standards framework should operate for polls where there are statutory office holders with a power to direct local Returning Officers. We will issue any revised guidance, performance standards and supporting materials for the 2016 PCC elections no later than December 2015. Download our full report 1. The Coalition: our programme for government; Cabinet Office page 13 http://www.cabinetoffice.gov.uk/sites/default/files/resources/coalition_programme_for_government.pdf ■ Back to content at footnote 1 2. The Police and Crime Commissioner Elections Order 2012; The Police and Crime Commissioner Elections (Local Returning Officers' and Police Area Returning Officers' Charges) Order 2012; The Police and Crime Commissioner Elections (Welsh Forms) Order 2012. ■ Back to content at footnote 2 3. Freepost mailing facilities or booklets are provided to candidates at elections to the UK Parliament, European Parliament, London Mayoral, and Northern Ireland Assembly and local councils in Northern Ireland. ■ Back to content at footnote 3 4. Including the Supplementary Vote and Single Transferrable Vote systems. ■ Back to content at footnote 4 Related content Report: How the 2016 Police and Crime Commissioner elections were run Read our report about how the 2016 Police and Crime Commissioner elections were run Results and turnout at the 2016 Police and Crime Commissioner elections View the results and turnout at the 2016 Police and Crime Commissioner elections Police and Crime Commissioners Past elections and referendums Read our reports and view data about past elections and referendums

2022 Electoral Fraud Data | Electoral Commission Search 2022
Electoral Fraud Data You are in the Electoral fraud data section Home Our research Electoral fraud data On this page 2022 elections Cases where the suspect accepted a police caution Outcomes of all reported cases Types of electoral fraud allegations First published: 24 February 2023 Last updated: 31 March 2023 Summary The UK has low levels of proven electoral fraud. There is no evidence of large-scale electoral fraud in 2022. Most cases (93%) resulted in the police taking no further action or were locally resolved through words of advice to those involved. 2022 elections In May 2022, elections took place in England, Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales Northern Ireland Assembly Local councils (England, Scotland and Wales) Local mayors (England) Combined Authority Mayors (England) There were also 6 UK parliamentary by-elections during 2022. A total of 193 cases of alleged electoral fraud were investigated by the police during 2022. Police issued one caution in relation to a case of alleged electoral fraud in 2022, and court proceedings have been initiated in relation to one other case. This table shows the number of cases of alleged fraud reported to us by the police for elections held in 2022. Election Number of cases Local election 179 Non-election specific (e.g. rolling registration) 8 Local by-election 2 Northern Ireland Assembly 1 Local mayoral 1 Local referendum 1 Other 1 Cases where the suspect accepted a police caution Durham local election The suspect in this case wanted to stand as a candidate in a local election. An allegation was made that she had forged a signature on a nomination form. The police spoke to the man whose signature was allegedly forged. He confirmed that he had not signed the form. The suspect admitted that she had forged his signature but believed that he would have supported her. She accepted a police caution for the offence. Outcomes of all reported cases Around two thirds of cases (61%) resulted in the police taking no further action. This means that the cases were not investigated further by the police because there was no evidence, there wasn't enough evidence, or an offence wasn't found. This table and chart show the number and outcome of the cases that were reported to the police in 2022. Outcome Number of cases Percentage of total No further action 119 61% Locally resolved 62 32% Under investigation 8 4% Other 2 1% Caution 1 1% Court proceedings initiated 1 1% Download our electoral fraud data Electoral Fraud Data 2022 Types of electoral fraud allegations Almost two third thirds of cases (64%) reported in 2022 were related to campaigning offences. Most of these were about: s not including details about the printer, promoter or publisher on election material - an 'imprint' Someone making false statements about the personal character or conduct of a candidate. This table and chart show the number of cases and types of offences that were investigated in 2022. Offence type Number of cases Percentage of total Campaigning 123 64% Voting 38 20% Nomination 18 9% Registration 13 6% Other 1 1% Personation A total of 13 cases of alleged personation fraud were recorded by police forces in 2022. The offence of personation involves someone pretending to be someone else so they can use that person's vote. This can happen at a polling station, with a postal vote, or a proxy vote (where a voter has appointed someone else to cast their vote for them). Just over half of those cases (7) involved allegations of personation in polling stations. All those cases resulted in the police taking no further action because there was no evidence or insufficient evidence. This table shows the number of personation allegations and their outcomes. Personation type Number of allegations Outcome type and number Polling station 7 No further action: 7 Postal 3 No further action: 2 Under investigation: 1 Proxy 3 No further action: 2 Locally resolved: 1 Election Petitions An election petition is a legal challenge to the result of an election. There was one petition following elections held in 2022. Aston Ward of Birmingham City Council The petition claimed that the two successful Liberal Democrat candidates at the May 2022 election in the ward had made false allegations that one of the Labour candidates had bribed voters with packets of dates. The petition asked the court to void the outcome of the election. However, the Liberal Democrat candidates submitted doorbell video footage as evidence. This showed the Labour candidate and his supporters giving voters packets of dates with Labour stickers on them. Given this evidence, the Labour candidate applied to the court to withdraw the petition which the court granted.

Related content 2021 electoral fraud data 2020 electoral fraud data 2019 electoral fraud data about electoral fraud in 2019 and view the data Electoral fraud data View electoral fraud data

You are in the Party panels section Home How we make decisions Party panels First published: 14 July 2020 Last updated: 14 July 2020 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting Conservative Party: Alan Mabbett OBE (AM), chair of meeting Labour Party: Andrew Whyte (AW) Scottish National Party: Scott Martin (SM) Plaid Cymru: Geraint Day (GD) Electoral Commission: Craig Westwood, Director of Communications, Policy & Research (CW) Louise Edwards, Director of Regulation (LE) Charlene Hannon, Head of Guidance (CH) Laura McLeod, Public Affairs Manager (LM) Minutes of the last meeting and actions arising (PPP 3/09/2019) The minutes were agreed. LE provided an update on the action regarding PPP engagement with police SPOCs. LE offered to put the parties in touch with the SPOCs, but asked for more detail on the issues the parties wanted to discuss. AM explained the SPOC conference had provided a unique opportunity for parties to interact with SPOCs face-to-face. SM agreed it was particularly useful learning experience and to understand how deal with specific issues and gave the example of treating. SM highlighted that it had been useful to receive the case update and suggested this could be sent through by email in future. LE agreed to talk to the SPO, Garry Cann and put the parties in touch. Post general election review AM asked about duplicate registrations and suggested that despite the high numbers of people registering in the run up the election, it would be likely the vast majority won't be new registrations, but from people already on the register, who had been reminded to register. CW explained the Commission's public awareness campaign had achieved 2.6 million applications to register vote, but that the data on duplications was not yet available. CW explained the Commission was in the process of gathering evidence to inform its statutory report on the election that will be published in spring. He explained this included research with overseas voters, EROs and ROS and for the first time, included a survey of SPOCs. He welcomed any feedback from the parties. AW asked about the inconsistency of local authorities accepting scanned copies of applications to register to vote, noting the issue was with the guidance. CH explained this was covered in the guidance, but could be addressed through the Commission's support and improvement work. CH agreed to explore how the message could be strengthened in the guidance. SM noted the issue with accessing registers, particularly given the election took place during the annual canvass. AM, AW and GD agreed that all parties had the same issue in getting the updated registers in a reasonable timeframe and highlighted the difficulties that this presented, particularly given resources in electoral service teams. SM noted the ongoing issue that EROs continue to reissue registers without any explanation, rather than by an update. CH stated all registers would have been published by 1 December 2019. AW asked if the Commission had identified any regulatory trends or offences at the election. LE explained that the 2019 election had the highest number of registrations of non-party campaigners register for an election. LE noted the social media ad libraries had been a useful tool during the campaign and would be used to compare spending. AM suggested it would be interesting to see how many candidates failed to submit any adverts. Update on PFR online LE outlined the project is well advanced on the registration side and will be launched at the start of the parties financial year, January 2020. She noted parties can focus and submit reports for the unscheduled elections in 2019 on the old system. GD raised the issue of guidance on the Commission's website and suggested it should be ranked in the order it is likely to be used. He noted the recent general election guidance had appeared on page two. AM agreed it should have a higher ranking automatically. CH explained the Commission was aware of this and working with developers to find a solution and make the algorithm smarter and user friendly. AM suggested that PPP members receive correspondence or an email when any new guidance is issued. LE offered to take this away to consider the possibility for future ERO Performance Standards Consultation CW highlighted the Commission's open consultation on new performance standards for Electoral Registration Officers. He explained the proposed standards are focussed on the outcomes that should be delivered, rather than the processes that are followed, with the objective of helping EROs and their teams to understand the impact of their electoral registration activities. CW welcomed any feedback from parties and noted the consultation would close on 31 March. Commission Update Report Regarding policy development grants, CW explained the Cabinet Office had drafted an amendment Order, which will give effect to the Commission's recommendations for changes to the scheme. He confirmed work is on-going with the Cabinet Office to ensure this is completed by the required deadline. LE updated on the Codes of Practice on election spending and explained a final draft would go to the Minister for the Constitution and Devolution by March. She asked for input on how to share updated Codes with the parties. AM suggested it would make sense to take time to reflect on the 2019 UK Parliamentary general election before submitting the Codes. AW agreed. LE explained the Commission is currently planning to review the conference stand rate this year, and will consult with parties. LE asked if by end of summer was going to be viable and offered to send a more granular timetable to PPP members. AM raised the issue of defining parliamentary lounges, that were not a fixed stand. AW gave the example of how a LGA stand would factor into sponsorship and suggested parties need additional guidance. LE offered to take this away and report back with a timetable. Forward looking Commission activity CW explained the Commission had agreed with the Speakers' Committee to submit an interim corporate plan. CW highlighted the next six months would be spent producing a new five-year corporate plan, noting the welcome opportunity to take a fresh view of the challenges and opportunities ahead for the democratic processes. He suggested the September PPP meeting would be an opportunity to get parties' input into the plan. SM, AM, AW, GD all agreed. AM raised the issue of fixed thresholds and explained that the original legislation envisaged a single electoral register. LE noted the Commission has to use single registers to check donations. CW explained the benefits of modernising the registers would have for a number of stakeholders. Any other business SM noted the commitment to have an Association of s representative at the next meeting, after May local elections. AM asked for an update on the work on the Commission's new Enforcement Policy. LE confirmed the Commission planned to consult later this year and re-offered the PPP members the opportunity to meet once the consultation opens. LE highlighted Majella La Praik would be on maternity leave from March, and recruitment for her cover will begin shortly. Commission actions Status To put PPP members in touch with Deputy Chief Constable Gary Cann, lead for election related crime at the National Police Chief's Council. Ongoing: Louise has spoken to Gary Cann and will put parties in touch To invite a representative from the Association of s to attend the PPP meeting in June Completed: Peter Stanyon will attend the June meeting Provide a timetable for the review of Party conference stands Ongoing: update to be provided at meeting Provide detail on how many of the applications to register to vote at the 2019 UKPGE were duplicates. Completed To use the September meeting to discuss the Commission's next five year corporate plan with parties Ongoing: to be added to agenda for September meeting

Response to the draft Senedd Cymru (Representation of the People) (Amendment) Order 2020 | Electoral Commission Search Response to the draft

Senedd Cymru (Representation of the People) (Amendment) Order 2020 You are in the Our responses to consultations section Home Our responses to consultations On this page Forms Payments to Returning Officers (Part 6) Codes of Practice (Part 7) Other matters not included in the draft Order First published: 8 September 2020 Last updated: 8 September 2020 Summary This response sets out our views on the draft Senedd Cymru (Representation of the People) (Amendment) Order 2020. We further welcome the separate discussions that are taking place with Welsh Government and others to respond to the current COVID-19 crisis, and to ensure that the May 2021 elections can be delivered effectively in the interests of voters, campaigners and administrators. We recognise that these discussions may give rise to further legislation and, in this case, early clarification in regards to your intentions would be helpful in order that we take this into account in our planning. We have also included comments on a provision that has not been included in this draft Order, but we feel is an important requirement for all elections: digital imprints. We would be happy to discuss the points set out in this response with Welsh Government officials, if it would be helpful to do so. Forms From our review of the draft Order, we identified a number of technical inconsistencies in the drafting in relation to the home address form between regional party list candidates and constituency candidates. We have provided more detail on these technical inconsistencies separately to officials. As soon as practicable after the legislation comes into force we will make any amendments necessary to nomination and consent to nomination forms. These amendments will reflect the change in law relating to candidates being able to withhold their home address and the change of wording on the consent to nomination to reflect the disqualification amendments. Payments to Returning Officers (Part 6) We fully support and recognise the important and vital role that Returning Officers and Regional Returning Officers in Wales play in the democratic process. They are critical to delivering well-run elections and referendums which produce results in which voters and campaigners can have confidence. As a matter of principle, we believe that ROs should be independent from both local and national governments when delivering their statutory electoral administration duties. The independence of the RO is necessary to ensure that elections are effectively administered and conducted in voters' best interests. It also avoids any perception of bias and helps to promote public confidence and trust in the process. There is also a risk that confidence in the impartiality of ROs could be damaged, if their only payment for carrying out election duties is through their contract of employment by the local authority which appointed them to their substantive role. These were the views we expressed in December 2019 as part of our written evidence to the Equality, Local Government and Communities Committee on the Local Government and Elections (Wales) Bill , and in our earlier response to the Welsh Government's consultation document – Electoral Reform in Local Government in Wales in October 2017. Any changes to the current management framework for the delivery of elections in Wales, including to the current arrangements for funding elections and payments to ROs for their services, must not weaken the independence and accountability of those responsible for delivering polls, or the perception of this by voters and campaigners. The proposal to replace the RO fee with an amount payable to all electoral teams involved running the Senedd elections in 2021, could bring this independence into question, if paid to the local authority, as proposed. We think it is important to be clear that ROs are not employed by councils when they deliver official election or referendum duties and that they are independent statutory office-holders, accountable to the courts for the delivery of their official duties. As is the case under the current system, a payment to ROs of some description helps to denote the different and independent status of the role. It is also important that an appropriate person with the right skill set should carry out the role of Returning Officer and Regional Returning Officer, and should be remunerated accordingly to ensure this. It is possible that removing a personal fee may discourage experienced and capable senior officers from willingly putting themselves forward to undertake the important role of Regional Returning Officer.

Codes of Practice (Part 7) We are content with this provision. We have, however, identified what we believe is a minor drafting error where there may possibly be a closing bracket missing from new 13(1)(b) ‘.....(supplementing the definition in article 63(3)).....’. Other matters not included in the draft Order Presentation of political parties’ identifiers on nomination and ballot papers

As part of the consultation on the draft Senedd Cymru (Representation of the People) (Amendment) Order 2020, it has been proposed that candidates standing at Senedd elections be allowed to use the prefix “Welsh” (when using the language name), or the suffix “Cymru” (when using the Welsh language name), if they are standing on behalf of a registered political party. It is our understanding that the aim is to ensure that voters can easily recognise “devolved branches of UK-wide political parties” in order to avoid confusion for voters. We feel that the proposal requires further clarification, and in particular to demonstrate how it will help to avoid voter confusion. As you know, the requirements for registering a party name are outlined in section 28(4) and paragraph 2 of Schedule 4 of PPERA, and the requirements for descriptions are outlined in section 28A(2) of PPERA. We would welcome clarification on how the Welsh Government’s proposal is likely to interact with these rules. For instance, as parties in Wales can be registered with a name in and a name in Welsh, or just a single name, the conduct order would need to specify under what circumstances “Welsh” or “Cymru” could be prefixed to a party’s name. This is especially the case where a party’s name is expressed in neither or Welsh (such as for a party named “Britannica”), or is expressed bilingually (“Llais Gwynedd - The Voice of Gwynedd”). A similar provision was made ahead of the Scottish Parliamentary elections in 2015, and Welsh Government may find it helpful to take into account how this change was made in developing its own provisions for the Senedd elections in 2021. For elections to the Scottish Parliament, where the word “Scottish” is not part of the registered party name, the party name on the nomination form can have the word “Scottish” included in front of it. If the registered party name starts with the word “the”, the word “Scottish” can be inserted after the word “the” on the nomination form. This is the case for both constituency candidates and for party regional lists. Welsh Government may want to consider specifying something similar when prefixing the word “Welsh” to a party name in conjunction with the word “the”. Imprints on non-printed campaign material

Digital campaigning is an increasingly important aspect of election campaigns in the UK but, as you’ll be aware, the imprint rules don’t currently apply to digital election campaign material. This affects voters’ ability to see who is behind the campaign material they see online, and it affects the ability of the Electoral Commission, police and prosecuting bodies to enforce the law. Therefore, extending the imprint rules to digital election campaign material should be a priority for all the Governments of the UK. We are disappointed that the draft Order does not make provision to extend the imprint rules to non-printed campaign material and that such requirements will not be in place for the Senedd elections in 2021. The Scottish Parliament passed the Referendums (Scotland) Act

(RSA) in January this year. This Act allows the Scottish Parliament to hold referendums on matters which have been devolved to Scotland. The RSA contains provisions for imprints on both printed and digital referendum material. Digital material that promotes a particular outcome in a Scottish referendum will need an imprint but individuals are exempt from the requirement to include imprints if they are expressing their personal opinions and publishing the material on their own behalf on a non-commercial basis. However, individuals with senior compliance or decision-making roles in registered referendum campaign organisations cannot benefit from this exemption. They will have to include imprints on digital material. The Scottish Government intends to introduce digital imprint rules for devolved Scottish elections, and in time for the 2021 May Scottish Parliament elections. We are discussing their proposals with them. On 12 August, the UK Government published a public consultation on its technical proposals for a digital imprints regime for the elections it has competence for. The consultation asks readers to answer a series of questions about the proposals. The deadline for responding is 11:45pm on 4 November. The Electoral Commission will be responding. We would encourage Welsh Government to take account of the provisions that have been put in place or are being considered by other UK legislatures and consider introducing similar provisions for elections in Wales in the future.

Response to the UK Government policy consultation: Protecting the Debate | Electoral Commission Search Response to the UK Government policy consultation: Protecting the Debate You are in the Our responses to consultations section Home Our responses to consultations On this page Applying electoral sanctions to existing criminal offences Intimidation of voters – undue influence Increasing transparency in digital election campaigning First published: 15 October 2018 Last updated: 29 August 2019 Overview This response sets our our advice on three proposed changes to electoral law to protect candidates and voters from intimidation. We are responding to this consultation as Parliament has given us a role to keep electoral law under review and to recommend changes where we think they are needed. Summary Applying electoral sanctions to existing criminal offences Candidates and campaigners have a key role in encouraging people to participate in elections and referendums. Activities for or against candidates and campaigners must not bring into question the integrity of the electoral process. We agree with the Government that allowing electoral sanctions to be applied as well as criminal sanctions could act as a strengthened deterrent against intimidating candidates or campaigners. Removing the right to vote would be a disproportionate sanction, but stopping someone from standing for election may not be a sufficient deterrent for people who do not want to become a candidate. The Government should consider whether increasing the maximum sentence for serious offences relating to elections, as recommended by the UK's Law Commissions, would also act as a strengthened deterrent against intimidation. Intimidation of voters – undue influence Voters should be protected from being intimidated to vote in a particular way or not to vote. We welcome the UK Government's review of the offence of undue influence and continue to support the modernisation and simplification of all aspects of this offence. Any changes to the current laws on undue influence must be clearly and simply defined with workable definitions. We continue to recommend that any changes should be made as part of a comprehensive reform of all electoral offences, as set out in the UK Law Commissions' 2016 recommendations. Many electoral offences are complex, out of date and not easily understood and reforming undue influence alone risks adding further complexity without addressing many of the problems with the legislation. We would be pleased to work with the UK government and with prosecutors and police, who can advise on how the law will work in practice. Increasing transparency in digital election campaigning We have recommended since 2003 that the imprint rules be extended to digital material. Extending the imprint rules to digital material is urgent. This gap in transparency is affecting voter confidence and our ability to enforce the rules. All non-printed election and referendum material should contain an imprint. Any new regulations should be drafted as general principles to make them platform neutral and to future-proof them for changes in technology. The UK Government should give the Electoral Commission wider powers to compel information outside of an investigation, including from digital platforms. The imprint rules for printed election material in the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000 (PPERA) should be commenced for Northern Ireland. The imprint rules in Northern Ireland should be the same as the rest of the UK. Applying electoral sanctions to existing criminal offences Question 1: Do you agree that the new electoral offence should apply to electoral sanctions to existing offences of intimidatory behaviour, such as those identified by the CSPL, listed in Annex A, and equivalent offences in Scotland and Northern Ireland? We agree that electoral sanctions should be applied to these existing offences. It is important that people are deterred from intimidating candidates so that people can stand for election and campaign without fearing abuse or intimidation. Voters must have confidence in the candidates standing in elections and those campaigning in a referendum. Seeing or hearing about intimidation should not stop them from voting, nor should it influence how someone votes. Applying electoral sanctions should deter some people from engaging in behaviour that intimidates candidates. Any changes to the legislation would need to be applied by the Welsh and Scottish Governments for the relevant elections in Wales and Scotland. The legislation in Northern Ireland would need to be changed by the UK Government through the Northern Ireland Office. We agree that the UK Government should examine existing legislation and make sure that the 'new' legislation reflects any future criminal legislation. Penalty for the new offence Question 2: We propose that the new electoral offence will attract the sanction of being barred from standing for elected office for five years. Do you agree? We agree that if an individual is found guilty of a specified offence they should be prohibited from standing or holding any elected office for a period of five years. Applying this sanction would make sure that there is consistency with other relevant sanctions for corrupt practices such as undue influence which is also about intimidation, although of voters. Without this sanction there would also not be consistency across different elections and referendums for someone being automatically disqualified from standing for election if they had been convicted of any of the offences listed in Annex A. Question 3: Do you think the new electoral offence should remove an offender's right to vote? We do not agree that an individual found guilty of intimidation should have their right to vote removed.

Corrupt practices under the Representation of the People Act 1983 (RPA), which have a sanction of removing a person's right to vote, are those which abuse someone's right to vote. Intimidating a candidate or campaigner does not do this. However, stopping someone from standing for election for five years may not be enough of a deterrent for people who have no intention of putting themselves up for election. We think that this area needs to be explored further to see if there is another, more suitable, sanction that could also or instead be used. Prison sentences could be a more effective deterrent. A person who has been found guilty of any offence and is detained in prison is not allowed to vote. The UK's Law Commissions have recommended increasing the maximum sentence in cases of serious electoral fraud to 10 years. The Government should consider whether to apply this maximum sentence to intimidation offences set out in Annex A that are committed during election and referendum periods. Which elections would be covered? Question 4: We think that offences committed against candidates and campaigners during all types of polls should attract the additional electoral sanctions. Do you agree? If not, please explain.

Intimidating candidates and campaigners is not acceptable at any poll. Offences committed against candidates and campaigners should attract the additional electoral sanctions for all types of poll. It is important to ensure consistency across all polls. Consistency will prevent confusion as to when, and at what elections, the sanctions apply. It will also send a clear message to campaigners and voters that intimidation is unacceptable behaviour and has serious consequences. Question 5: We propose that offences against campaigners during a referendum campaign should attract the additional electoral sanctions. Do you agree? If not, please explain. We agree that electoral sanctions should apply to offences against campaigners during a referendum campaign. Applying these electoral sanctions should deter some people from engaging in behaviour that intimidates campaigners. Who would be protected? Question 6: We propose that the existing definition of when someone becomes a 'candidate', with reference to any election campaign, would be clear and workable for the electoral offence. Do you agree? If not, please explain. We do not agree that the existing definition of when someone becomes a candidate will be workable for the new electoral sanction. This is explained in our response to questions 8 and 9. Question 7a: Do you think the new electoral offence should extend to campaigners? If so, please explain which campaigners you think should fall within the scope of the new electoral offence, given the above considerations. If not, please explain. Question 7b: If you think that campaigners should be included, do you have a suggestion as to how this could be done for use in the relevant legislation? We agree that protection of new electoral sanctions should be extended to campaigners. When defining a campaigner, and who should fall within the scope of the new sanctions, the UK Government may want to consider the approach taken in the Postal Voting Bill. This is Private Members Bill introduced under the 10 minute rule and due a second reading on 26 October. Instead of using the term 'campaigner' it defines 'a person who engages in activities for the purpose of promoting a particular outcome at a relevant election'. This was drafted with input from the Cabinet Office. We would be happy to work with the UK Government on any amendments to the legislation which would enable the new electoral sanction to be applied to campaigners. Applicable time period Question 8: Do you agree that protection should start from the period of notice of elections? If not, please explain. Question 9: Should there be a period before notice of election for a scheduled poll, for example during the long campaign period, during which this offence applies? If so, what would be a suitable time period of protection? If not, please explain. We do not agree that the provision should be tied to the notice of election. Protection should cover people who have publicly stated they are going to stand for election but their candidacy has not officially commenced for the purpose of electoral law. The earliest day someone can become a candidate for the purpose of electoral law (for example in relation to the regulation of their campaign spending) is either the last day for publication of the notice of election or, at a UKPGE, the day of dissolution of Parliament. Protection therefore could start at the point of becoming a candidate under electoral law. However a person might declare their candidacy publicly prior to this. For example the lead up to a UK parliamentary general election where there is a long campaign. During this period the spending rules apply and people are actively campaigning, but their candidacy has not officially commenced. This means that someone could be subject to intimidation during this time but before becoming a candidate under electoral law. They would not be protected by the electoral sanctions if it was to start from the period of notice of election. The Government should consider whether there needs to be a defined start date from which the new electoral sanctions could be applied. For example, it could be for the prosecution and sentencing judge to determine if a person was subject to intimidation because of the fact they were a candidate, based on the specific circumstances in each individual case. Question 10a: Do you agree that protection, under the new electoral offence, should end seven calendar days after the close of poll? Question 10b: If not, when do you think protection under the new electoral offence should end? If the protection of a new electoral sanction were to end seven days after the close of poll, there is a risk that elected representatives could be subject to intimidation. This could mean that they are prevented from carrying out their elected mandate. Ideally, there would be no end date to the application of the new electoral sanctions. The Government should ask further advice from the police, prosecutors and the judiciary should advise on how this could be achieved in practice. Question 11: Do you agree that protection, under the new electoral offence, should apply during the referendum period, as determined by the relevant referendum legislation? If not, please explain. The protection should start once the relevant legislation setting the date of the referendum has come into force. Once the date of the referendum has been set in legislation everyone knows when polling day is and that referendum is definitely going ahead. Therefore, regardless of whether the regulated period for referendum campaign spending has started, campaigners can start campaigning and may be at risk of being intimidated. Ensuring the offence applies only in appropriate cases Question 12: Do you agree that a new electoral offence should only be applicable in cases where a candidate or campaigner is intimidated because they are a candidate or campaigner? We agree that the new electoral sanction should only apply when a candidate or campaigner is intimidated because they are candidate or campaigner. We think that the police, prosecutors and the judiciary should advise on how this could be achieved in practice as they will be the enforcers of the new electoral sanctions. Intimidation of voters – undue influence Simplifying the law on undue influence Question 13: Do you agree that the law of undue influence requires greater clarity in its application? If not, please explain. We agree the law of undue influence requires greater clarity and we support a revised and more clearly defined offence. Simplifying undue influence would deliver one of the UK's Law Commissions' proposals, recommendation 11-4, for comprehensive electoral law reform. The Government should also bring forward proposals for implementing the other recommendations published in February 2016. There must be trust and confidence in the integrity of the electoral process. Modern and clear electoral law offences are a central part of ensuring this. People who must comply with the law, and those who enforce the law, need to understand what behaviour is prohibited and the associated punishments. We said, in our 2015 response to the Law Commissions' consultation on electoral law reform that the offence of undue influence is perhaps one of the most complex of all electoral law offences and we would support simplification. We also supported the simplification and modernisation of the offences of treating and bribery. These are also complex offences closely linked to undue influence. We remain concerned that the changes proposed by the UK Government would not go far enough to simplify the current range of electoral offences. We continue to recommend that any changes to undue influence should take place as part of a comprehensive reform of electoral offences, alongside a simple, modernised process of challenging an election. Reforming undue influence alone risks adding further complexity without addressing many of the problems with the legislation. Question 14: If it is decided to simplify the existing offence of undue influence, we do not propose to materially change the element of the offence relating to physical acts of violence or threat of violence. Do you agree? If not, please explain. We agree that physical acts of violence or threat of violence should stay in the offence of undue influence. However it should be simplified and clearly defined. We think that the suggested definitions of physical acts of violence or threat of violence set out in the consultation document are a useful basis for simplification. Question 15: Any act, whether lawful or unlawful, which is intended to cause harm to the individual and is carried out with the intention to make a person vote, vote in a particular way, or deter them from voting and should be captured within this offence. Do you agree? If not, please explain. We agree these should be covered by the offence. The UK Government should also revisit and simplify the definition of harm. The Oxford Dictionary contains three definitions of "harm": physical injury, especially that which is deliberately inflicted; material damage and; actual or potential ill effects or danger. It is important that it is clear which of these definitions apply to the offence of undue influence. Our understanding is that harm is meant to be broader than just physical injury. Therefore, any definition of harm put forward by the UK Government should include all three of the definitions listed above. The consultation question does not refer to the offences of loss, damage or temporal and spiritual injury. These are captured under the existing offence of undue influence. It should be clear whether these will be included under the definitions of harm or duress, or removed from the offence entirely. We would be concerned if they were removed entirely. Question 16: We propose to retain reference to ‘direct and indirect’ acts which cause the elector harm. Do you agree? If not, please explain. We believe that this reference should be retained. What constitutes ‘direct and indirect’ acts must be clearly defined. We believe an ‘indirect’ act is difficult to define and must be considered as part of clarifying the offence of undue influence. We think that the suggested definitions of direct and indirect acts which cause an elector harm set out in the consultation document are a useful basis for simplification. Question 17: We propose that the redefined offence retains reference to offences committed by or on behalf of a perpetrator in relation to acts that cause the elector harm. Do you agree? If not, please explain. We agree that reference should be retained to “offences committed by or on behalf of a perpetrator”. Question 18: We propose that the scope of section 115(2)(a) continues to include those acts which are carried out before and after the election. Do you agree? If not, please explain. We agree that this offence should cover acts carried out before and after the election. There should be no uncertainty as to what is an offence. In our 2015 response to the UK’s Law Commissions’ consultation on electoral law reform, we asked that additional consideration be given to the issue of when electoral offences can be committed. We still hold this view. The law currently takes a variety of different approaches to when electoral offences can be committed. Some offences may be committed ‘before, during or after an election’, some can only be committed ‘before or during an election’ and others can only be committed ‘at an election’. There may be justifiable reasons for different approaches being taken for each offence, or it may be that a more consistent approach should be taken. Either way, we would like to see greater clarity in the law on the timing of when offences are committed to ensure greater consistency. People who must comply with the law, and those who enforce the law, need to understand what behaviour is prohibited and the associated punishments. Question 19: Do you agree that the offence should continue to cover actions of duress? If not please explain. We agree that the offence should continue to cover duress with a clear definition. We said in our 2015 response to the UK’s Law Commissions’ consultation that duress should be retained. Consideration should be given to its definition to avoid complicated drafting and to separate it from ‘duress’ as used in criminal and contract law. The law should stop anyone from forcing a person to vote for a particular candidate or to not vote at all. However, it is important that when defining a simplified undue influence offence, it does not conflict with the right to freedom of expression. Many people will legitimately want to persuade others to vote for certain candidates, and any restrictions on this freedom will need careful consideration. We are conscious that there are some electors who may be more vulnerable to pressure or undue influence because of their personal position within a family, social group or wider community, who might benefit from greater protection. We would expect any modernised definition of undue influence or duress to be capable of identifying and being applied to this type of influence. Question 20: Any redefined offence would still look to cover actions of trickery. Do you agree? If not, please explain. We agree that the actions of trickery should remain and should be clearly defined. The UK government could use the simplified definition of the actions of trickery set out in the consultation document rather than the existing definition: ‘any fraudulent device or contrivance'. We think that the suggested definitions of the actions of trickery set out in the consultation document are a useful basis for simplification.

Intimidation at polling stations Question 21: Do you agree that the scope of the offence should remain the same, subject to including a specific reference to intimidation at polling stations? If not, please explain. Question 22a: Do you agree that the offence should specifically capture intimidatory behaviour carried out inside or outside of the polling station? If not, please explain. Question 22b: If so, do you agree that the definition should include behaviour which falls below the current requirement of physical force, violence or restraint? We do not agree with adding a specific reference to intimidation at polling stations to the offence of undue influence. Simplifying and modernising the offence of undue influence, and providing clear definitions, should ensure intimidation at polling station is covered without needing to make a specific reference to it. However, if the UK Government decides to include specific reference to intimidation at polling stations there must be a clear, workable definition of what activity should and should not be prohibited. We agree that electoral law should include offences that deter and punish intimidation and coercion of voters, which can be used by police forces and prosecutors in addition to general public order offences. However, we also agree with the 2016 UK's Law Commissions' concerns about lowering the bar of undue influence to include any behaviour which could be reasonably considered as intimidation at a polling station. The Law Commissions highlighted that perceptions of what is "intimidation" will vary, and therefore must be clearly defined. This will ensure that rights to free speech and assembly are not infringed. It would also be important to ensure that people understand what is "outside a polling station". Consideration of additional electoral law offences We want the UK Government to consider creating the following postal voting offences: In our response to the recommendations from Sir Eric Pickles' 2016 review of electoral integrity we supported extending the offences contained in Section 66 of the RPA to postal voting. The secrecy of the ballot protections that apply to in person voting, would then apply to postal ballots. There should be greater consistency and equivalency between offences which may be committed in a polling station or at a count, and elsewhere, including in a voter's home. We recommend that the UK's Governments should change the law so that candidates, parties and campaigners are not allowed to handle or take completed absent vote applications or postal ballot packs from voters, but ensure sufficient safeguards are in place to protect legitimate assistance. Increasing transparency in digital election campaigning The PPERA and the RPA contain powers for the Secretary of State to make regulations requiring imprints on non-printed election and referendum material. This applies to digital material, and it can also include audio material. Our view is that any new regulations should cover all non-printed material. Question 23: Do you as a voter believe that the current system as applied to printed election material promotes transparency and gives confidence in our systems? The imprint rules for printed election material ensure voters can check the source of election material, and allow the police, prosecutors and us to enforce the spending rules. Extending the imprint rules to digital material is urgent. This gap in transparency is affecting voter confidence and impacting our ability to enforce the rules. The imprint rules have two purposes. They ensure that voters can find out who is behind the election material they receive. And they allow the police, the CPS, the Procurator Fiscal, the PSNI and us to track campaigners' spending so that we can enforce the spending rules. Without the imprint rules, campaigners could run campaigns without ever having to identify themselves as the source. This is currently the case with digital material.

At the beginning of 2018, we contracted the research company GfK to carry out research with the public. Our aim was to find out what the public knew and understood about political finance regulation in the UK and digital campaigning at elections and referendums. The findings confirmed the need for digital imprints. It showed that participants were more likely to pay attention to digital material, were concerned about its source and thought the imprint rules should be extended to digital material.

Question 24: Should the imprint rules in PPERA be commenced for Northern Ireland? The imprint rules in PPERA should be commenced for Northern Ireland. Voters in Northern Ireland should know who is behind campaign material. The imprint rules in section 143 PPERA originally applied across the whole of the United Kingdom in February 2001. Following representations from the Labour, Conservative and Liberal Democrat parties, the Election Publications Act 2001 suspended the provisions from April 2001. This was because a large amount of election material for the 2001 UK Parliamentary general election had already been printed without an imprint, so could not be used. In 2006, SI 2006 No. 3416 reinstated section 143 PPERA provisions in Great Britain only. We do not know why the Order did not extend the provisions to Northern Ireland. Where party and non-party campaigner election material in Northern Ireland lacks an imprint, we have no powers to investigate and sanction a campaigner under PPERA. This means there is no deterrent in Northern Ireland, as there is in the rest of the UK, for failing to include one. The UK government must commence the imprint rules for Northern Ireland.

Question 25: Should the imprint rules for Northern Ireland elections be the same as for the rest of the United Kingdom? The imprint rules for all campaigners in Northern Ireland should be the same as for the rest of the United Kingdom. Making the imprint requirements in the Electoral Law Act 1962 the same as those in section 110 RPA would provide further clarity. This would help simplify electoral law as the UK's Law Commissions have proposed. Currently in Northern Ireland an earlier version of Section 110 RPA is in force for imprints on candidate material for UK Parliamentary and Northern Ireland Assembly elections. This is because the Election Publications Act 2001 suspended the application of the new version of section 110 RPA (introduced under section 136 and Schedule 18 PPERA). Under SI 2006/3416, the new version of section 110 RPA was brought into force only in Great Britain (not Northern Ireland).

Principle and purpose Question 26: What are your views on whether imprints should be required on all digital electoral material or only where spending on such material has been over a certain threshold? All digital election and referendum material should include an imprint. Any new regulations should ensure that individuals expressing personal opinions are not covered. All digital election and referendum material should include an imprint. The current rules for printed election material do not specify a minimum spending threshold before a campaigner must add an imprint. We do not think that any new rules for digital material should be different from the rules for printed material.

Specifying a spending threshold creates other problems. A campaigner may spend very little, or nothing (apart from staff time), on creating a campaign message that reaches a lot of voters because that they can achieve wide organic reach. We do not think it is right that because they have spent nothing on creating and distributing the message, they should not have to identify themselves as its source. Further, we would not know what, if anything, a campaigner has spent on digital election material. Campaigners are not required to report their spending during an election or referendum campaign. This means we would not know whether a campaigner had passed the threshold, and therefore whether they had committed an offence by not including an imprint. This would undermine the purpose of extending the requirement to digital material, and make it difficult for the police and us to enforce the new rules. It is important that any new imprint rules do not affect voters' right to engage in political debate online during election and referendum campaigns. Any new rules should not cover individuals expressing personal opinions. When should imprints be required? Question 27: Should any new rules on digital material only apply to what we would already consider to be "electoral material" or should broader categories be considered? The UK Government should use the regulation-making powers in the PPERA and the RPA to make imprints on non-printed election material a legal requirement.

Regulating broader categories of political advertising requires more thought and more scrutiny. Extending the imprint rules to non-printed material is urgent. Therefore, we think that the UK Government should use the existing regulation-making powers in the PPERA and the RPA. But those powers only allow the Secretary of State to draft regulations that apply to "election material" as defined in the PPERA, and to material that is intended to promote or procure the election of a candidate in the RPA. Regulating wider forms of political advertising would require amending primary legislation, which would take much longer than introducing regulations. Regulating broader categories of political advertising requires more thought and more scrutiny. This would be a much different form of regulation than the current rules. The UK's governments and legislatures would need to consider which principles should underpin any new rules for regulating wider political speech. They would need to ensure that the rules do not curtail free speech, and to consider the practicalities of enforcing any new rules. We think that more would need to be done to explore this idea.

Question 28: Do you agree that the requirement for imprints on election material can arise all year round, not just during election periods? We agree with the Government's interpretation of the PPERA imprint requirements. Sections 143 and 143A do not specify a particular time period when the imprint rules apply. The requirement to include an imprint arises where the material can be reasonably regarded as intended to promote or procure electoral success for particular parties or categories of candidates, and the material relates to an election. These two tests may be met before the regulated period for that election has started. We think that the RPA imprint requirements apply during the specific timeframe when people are formally treated as candidates. Under section 110 RPA, imprints are required on any material which can be reasonably regarded as intended to promote or procure the election of a candidate at an election. Section 118A defines the earliest date on which a person can become a candidate for a UK Parliament or local election. There are no candidates before that date. Therefore, it is the earliest date on which an imprint is required.

This means, for example, that there are no imprint requirements for material promoting a candidate in the long campaign period at a UK Parliamentary general election. We think the Government should consider this further, because there is an inconsistency in the law if the pre-candidacy spending rules apply whilst imprint requirements do not apply. What forms of digital communications should be covered?

Question 29: Should we prioritise regulating certain forms of digital communications over others? If so, please give reasons. Certain forms of digital communication should not be prioritised over others. Digital campaigning is constantly evolving. If certain digital communications are prioritised, they may become outdated in the next few years. This would make any new rules outdated and unworkable. Political campaigns use a variety of digital channels to communicate their campaign messages to voters. They currently use email, websites, website advertising, search advertising and social media posts. Digital campaign messages can consist of text, photo, graphics, video, audio, slideshows, and various combinations of these formats. We have observed in our monitoring of election and referendum campaigns the evolution of social media advertising from posts consisting of text only to embedded video. This shows why it is important that any new imprint rules for digital and other non-printed material should cover all kinds of digital communications. This will also help to future-proof the new regulations for changes in technology and media. How should the imprint be incorporated? Question 30: What sort of mechanisms for including an imprint should be acceptable? Are there any technical difficulties that would need to be overcome to include text which is not accessible without a further step? Question 31: Would you find an imprint in an overarching space such as a 'bio' sufficiently visible? We support the principle that a campaigner's full details should be part of the campaign message itself. We do not think that an imprint in an overarching space is sufficiently visible. Until now we have said in our guidance that it is acceptable to include a full imprint on a 'bio' or 'profile' page if it cannot be part of the message itself. We took this approach during the Scottish Independence Referendum because it was a pragmatic solution to the (then) 140-character limit . It has worked until now. But advertisers can remove the imprint from 'bio' or 'profile' information at any time. This is not a solid basis for transparency. And it is a platform-specific solution, which may not work for newer forms of social media. We think that the law should move away from platform-specific solutions. Digital media and digital campaigning are constantly evolving, and this includes technical facilities to put an imprint on election ads. Therefore, any new imprint requirement should be 'platform-neutral'. In other words, it should apply to any kind of digital campaign message on any platform, and it should be part of the message itself. On platforms with word or character limits, like Twitter for example, a video or photo embedded in or attached to the message would allow a full imprint to be displayed. This could also be achieved with the dropdown boxes some platforms use to give users information about the advertising they see. Question 32: How can these mechanisms be future-proofed in expectation of developments in media and technology? Any new regulations should be drafted as general principles to make them 'platform-neutral'. The regulations should say that the technical design of digital imprints must allow machines to read, record and store them. The Government should consider carefully how to specify in regulations the circumstances in which non-printed material is, or is not, considered to be published. In the longer term, the UK government should consider amending the regulation-making powers in the PPERA and the RPA so that the rules can be kept up-to-date with technological developments. This could include giving us the regulation-making powers or a power to make a Code of Practice for imprints. We think that any new regulations should apply to all digital material on different platforms and media. This could be achieved by drafting general principles for including an imprint rather than specific rules for different media. This approach would help to make the new regulations 'platform-neutral' and future-proof them. The explanatory notes and memorandum for the regulations could contain examples of how they apply to different forms of digital advertising. We can use our guidance to explain at elections and referendums how the rules apply to the digital channels that campaigners are using at that time. Regulations made under the powers in section 143 PPERA and in section 110 RPA may specify the circumstances in which non-printed material is, or is not, considered to be published. This will be an important part of future-proofing the regulations, and we think the Government should consider carefully how to specify those circumstances. We will work with the Government on how to specify them. Any new requirement should say that the technical design of digital imprints must allow machines to read, record and store them. A number of organisations have recommended creating a central database of all election and referendum advertising. The technical design of digital imprints should allow them all to be stored in one place, should this be necessary at some point in the future. At this stage, we think that the right approach is to use the regulation-making powers in the PPERA and the RPA to make imprints on digital material a legal requirement. But advances in technology mean that both we and the UK government will need to keep the rules under regular review. It is likely that the UK government will need to amend them at some point despite its best efforts to future-proof them. For this reason, the UK government should consider whether to introduce primary legislation, when the opportunity arises, to amend the regulation-making powers in the PPERA and the RPA. The current powers were drafted at a time when print advertising was the main form of election advertising. They require the Secretary of State to model regulations for non-printed material after the rules for printed material. This may not give the Secretary of State enough discretion in the future to introduce regulations that are up-to-date with developments in technology. In the longer term, the UK government should also consider either transferring the regulation-making powers to the Electoral Commission, or giving us a power to make a Code of Practice for imprints. We would be responsible for ensuring compliance with the new digital imprint requirements. And we have a duty to keep the law under review. We would therefore be best placed to know if and when the regulation-making powers needed to be used to update the regulations. Alternatively, a power to make a Code of Practice would allow us to provide additional statutory guidance for campaigners on how and when to include an imprint on digital material. And this should be able to be amended more easily than the requirements in legislation. Who should be responsible for including the imprint? Question 33: Should those who subsequently share digital electoral material also be required to include an imprint and, if so, whose details should be on it - theirs or the original publisher? Individuals who subsequently share material on a personal basis should not have to include an imprint. But where campaigners distribute a new election or referendum message that involves sharing material from another, unrelated organisation because they think it will enhance their electoral chances, they should have to include their own imprint on the new message. Individuals who want to share material from campaigners they know and trust. We think this is an important aspect of democratic engagement. Individuals would be deterred from sharing election material online if they knew they had to put their own imprint on it. As long as the material they share has the campaigner's imprint on it, this is enough. Enforcement and redress Question 34: Do you think the responsible bodies have sufficient enforcement powers? Our current powers would be adequate for enforcing any new digital imprint regulations in the course of an investigation, but not where we haven't opened an investigation. The UK government should give us wider powers to compel information, including from digital platforms. The UK government should increase the maximum fine we can impose for breaches of the imprint rules. The UK government should give us the power to investigate and sanction breaches of the candidate rules in the RPA. We have powers to investigate and sanction campaigners for breaching the imprint rules in section 143 PPERA. This includes being able to fine a campaigner up to £20,000 for failing to include an imprint. Only the police and prosecutors are able to investigate, prosecute and sanction breaches of the imprint rules in section 110 RPA. We consider the powers we have to enforce the imprint rules for printed materials to be adequate. We can compel any person or organisation to give us information during an investigation. In most cases where there is a clear case of a failure to include an imprint, we would open an investigation. We would expect to be able to do the same with digital platforms under our existing powers. However, outside of an investigation we can only compel bodies regulated under PPERA to give us information about income and expenditure. Our powers to require information do not extend to third parties such as newspapers or digital platforms. This means that currently we would not be able to obtain information about the source of an advert which had no imprint. The ability to find out the identity of campaigners outside an investigation is also relevant for enforcing the spending rules. We think that we should have the power to compel digital platforms, and others, to give us information we need to perform our statutory functions, such as advertisers' contact details or amounts spent on distributing election material. This would allow us to effectively monitor campaign activity and take action to prevent non-compliance where possible at an early stage. We have previously said that our maximum fine of £20,000 for each offence is too low. When considering how much to fine a campaigner for failing to include an imprint on campaign material, one of the factors we take into account is how many people may have seen it. Digital campaign messages can potentially reach many more people than a newspaper advert. And as they can be delivered directly to a handheld device, voters have less control over whether they see them. Our maximum fine should reflect these factors. It should therefore be increased. We have previously recommended that we should be given powers to investigate and sanction breaches of the candidate rules in the RPA. We have seen some high-profile alleged breaches of the candidate rules, mostly at national elections, where referral for criminal prosecution was not considered to be in the public interest. But it may have been appropriate to investigate further and issue a civil sanction if we had had the power to do so. This is why we repeat this recommendation here.

Related content

- Consultation: Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Strategy
- Statutory consultation on guidance for Returning Officers: Assistance with voting for disabled people
- Draft guidance for Returning Officers: Assistance with voting for disabled voters \(statutory consultation\)
- Our response to the Assembly Commission's consultation 'Creating a Parliament for Wales'
- Read our response to Assembly Commission's consultation from April 2018

Response to consultation on Code of Practice for Non-party s | Electoral Commission Search Response to consultation on Code of Practice for Non-party s You are in the Our consultations section Home Our consultations On this page Background How we developed the Code for consultation Main changes to the Code after consultation Themes raised through consultation Annex A First published: 19 April 2023 Last updated: 26 April 2023 Summary Some individuals and organisations that are not political parties campaign on issues or causes around elections without standing candidates themselves. They play a significant role in providing voters with information and a diversity of voices. The Commission calls these individuals and organisations non-party campaigners. In electoral law they are called third parties.

The Elections Act 2022 includes new requirements for registration and spending by non-party campaigners. The Act also introduces a duty on the Electoral Commission to produce a Code of Practice on the laws relating to non-party campaigner spending.

Between 24 November 2022 and 20 January 2023, we conducted a consultation on the draft Code of Practice. The consultation received 17 responses from academics, trade unions, and a range of charities, and other non-party campaigners. We set out below a summary of the key themes and issues that emerged in the consultation, and how we have considered them all in updating the Code and in our wider work to support campaigners

We are grateful to everyone who provided us with feedback. We have used this to inform the further development of the Code, and to make it as clear and helpful as possible. We recognise how important it is that the people who will use the Code support it.

View the Code

Background

The Elections Act 2022 requires the Commission to produce a Code of Practice on the laws relating to non-party campaigner spending. This is a legal guidance document that must include what qualifies as expenses, reporting controlled expenditure, and joint campaigning. The Code will apply to elections to the UK Parliament and the Northern Ireland Assembly. The Commission must have regard to this Code when exercising its functions under Part 6 of the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000 (PPERA). It is a statutory defence for a non-party campaigner to show that they complied with this Code in determining whether their campaign activity was regulated. The law sets out statutory requirements on the Commission for conducting its consultation on the draft Code. This involves consultation with Speaker's Committee on the Electoral Commission, the Levelling Up, Housing and Communities Committee and 'such other persons that the Commission consider appropriate'.

How we developed the Code for consultation

Before we commenced with the development of a draft Code, we held a series of roundtables with parties and campaigners to discuss the new laws affecting their activities. We used this pre-consultation phrase to draw on their expertise, as well as our experience of regulating elections to produce a draft Code that would be subject to a public consultation. As well as inviting written and verbal feedback, during the formal consultation period we held a number of roundtables with individuals and campaigners. This included events in Wales and Scotland, to ensure we heard perspectives from the regulated community across the UK.

Main changes to the Code after consultation

Overall, feedback was positive, and stakeholders felt the Code was 'drafted clearly and concisely, given the complexity of the underlying statutory regime', but there were areas where it could be made easier to use. In some places additional clarity was sought; in others requests were made for further information to make it clearer for non-party campaigners to understand the law and how to apply it in practice. In response to this feedback, we have made changes to the draft Code. We go through the detail of these below, but in summary the main changes include:

Updating the structure to make it easier for campaigners to read and simpler to navigate – using more signposting to help them understand related sections of the law. Making it clearer that the purpose test is defined in PPERA, and adding in more detail on the four factors that should be considered when determining whether campaign activity is regulated. Clarifying how activity can be regulated retrospectively. Redrafting the section in the Code that sets out the meaning of the public and how campaigners can determine whether their activity is available to the public, or to a section of the public. Including more information to help campaigners understand the rules on joint campaigning and in what situations they apply. Within this report, we have highlighted where we agree with recommendations to improve the Code's purpose intelligibility. We have also set out why, in some circumstances, we have retained the draft Code's original wording. In some cases, we were unable to make the amendments suggested because they conflicted with the law in PPERA or with the scope of the Code-making power. In other cases, pieces of feedback were incompatible with each other. Many of the respondents asked for more examples and case studies to be included in the Code. While we have attempted to include a wide and comprehensive range of examples, our guidance can go into greater detail than it is possible for a Code of Practice that provides a statutory defence. We therefore intend to include detailed case studies and more examples in the guidance that will accompany the published Code. These will provide further support and clarity to non-party campaigners. Themes raised through consultation Purpose test Background The non-party campaigning laws only apply to regulated campaign activity. Not all campaigning activities that non-party campaigners carry out are regulated. Spending on campaign activities by non-party campaigners is only regulated if it can reasonably be regarded as intended to promote or procure the electoral success of: one or more political parties political parties or candidates who support or do not support particular policies or another particular category of candidates by influencing voters at an upcoming election to vote in a particular way. This is a statutory test set out in PPERA and is commonly known as the 'purpose test'. When we first drafted the Code we included detailed examples to illustrate how campaigners should apply the test. Feedback revolved around two key areas. The scope of the purpose test Some respondents raised concerns about the inclusion of the phrase 'influencing voters...to vote in a particular way' within the description of the purpose test. They felt that the draft Code appeared to widen the definition of the purpose test beyond that which exists in PPERA. In addition, unions and charities also raised concerns that the example which stated that a campaign aiming 'to change political parties' or candidates' views on a policy or issue' broadened the scope of the purpose test and would result in '[al]most all advocacy campaigns' undertaken by non-party campaigners being regulated. This, in turn, could deter such campaigners from participating in the democratic process. We have therefore updated the wording to clarify and provide assurances to campaigners that the Code does not widen the scope of the test beyond PPERA. In addition, a number of stakeholders explained that they found the four factors outlined in the Commission's existing guidance a practical and easy way to understand how to apply the test to their activities. Although these factors are not defined in legislation, they are consistently used by the Commission in determining whether an activity meets the purpose test. We have restructured this section around those four factors and used accompanying examples to illustrate how campaigners can apply the test. These changes will allow non-party campaigners to more easily and confidently determine whether an activity can be 'reasonably regarded' as meeting the purpose test and would therefore be regulated. Understanding how the purpose test applies for a retrospective regulated period When we drafted the Code, we included information to explain how non-party campaigners should consider any campaign activity that takes place before an election is announced. We know from our ongoing engagement with campaigners that this is something a number find increasingly difficult to apply in practice. There was widespread support for this ‘very helpful’ part of the Code. In particular, respondents welcomed the clarity that campaign activity that took place during a retrospective regulated period would only meet the purpose test if ‘it could reasonably be regarded as intending to influence voters to vote in a particular way at a relevant election’. Some respondents asked for the Code to further clarify how campaign activity would be regulated in retrospective regulated periods where the retrospective period also covered local or council elections. This is called a ‘combined regulated period’. We have therefore made clear that issue-based campaigning – as opposed to campaigning with the aim of influencing a voter to vote in a particular way – is unlikely to meet the purpose test in circumstances where there is no upcoming election, even if the activity subsequently falls in a retrospective regulated period. We have also provided examples of campaign activity that would be regulated as a result of a retrospective regulated period. Public activities and material not publicly available Background Election material that meets the purpose test and takes place during a regulated period will only be regarded as regulated campaign activity if the material is made available to the public, or a section of the public. The ‘public’ has no statutory definition in PPERA. Stakeholders are therefore required to consider it to ‘have its usual meaning’. We know that stakeholders find it hard to determine whether their activity is available to the public, or a section of the public, as opposed to a closed group, such as members, which can include large numbers of people. The rise of digital campaigning and the use of social media at elections in recent years has added additional complexity for campaigners when making their assessment. Supporting campaigners to understand what is regulated When drafting the Code, we aimed to provide additional clarity to support campaigners to understand what is regulated, and make it applicable to the modern realities of campaigning. This included how to assess material only made available to closed groups, such as members, or those who had agreed to receive such material. Whilst feedback on the draft wording was mixed, respondents largely found that our description of what would be considered ‘material not publicly available’ was ‘not sufficiently clear’. A number expressed concern that the language gave them less certainty over when material would be considered publicly available, and therefore regulated. We have therefore made a number of changes to make it easier for campaigners to understand and apply to their activities. We clarified that canvassing and market research seeking views from members of the public public rallies and events and the production of material (digital or print) which is made available to the public at large or any section of the public, will only be regulated campaign activity where they meet the purpose test and take place during a regulated period, but the meaning of the public is an important part of determining whether these three types of activities are regulated. We have added a series of examples of common campaign activities and an explanation of when these would be considered available to the public (and therefore regulated campaign activity) or restricted solely to members or supporters. More generally, several respondents explained how difficult it was for smaller non-party campaigners or specific groups to restrict material to members or supporters in practice, particularly in online and digital spaces. They cited the increased administrative costs involved in controlling access to material and suggested the wording should focus on who the non-party campaigner intended to see the material. However, we do not think that this approach, focusing on the intention of the non-party campaigner, is compatible with the law as set out in PPERA. Rather PPERA is concerned with the factual reality of whether the campaign material is ‘made available’ by the non-party campaigner to the public, or a ‘section of the public’. Some respondents raised concerns about situations where material shared by campaigners with members and supporters could inadvertently become available to those outside of these groups, for example if copies of members’ magazines or screen-grabbed images of digital content shared to closed groups were shared more widely without the campaigner’s permission. We will seek to address these concerns in more detailed case studies and examples in our guidance that will sit alongside the Code. Notification and reporting thresholds

Background The Elections Act introduces new requirements for spending and reporting by non-party campaigners. Non-party campaigners intending to spend more than £10,000 on regulated campaign activity in the period before a UK Parliamentary general election (UKPGE) or a Northern Ireland Assembly election must notify the Commission. This is known as the ‘notification threshold’. A non-party campaigner that is permitted to spend more than £700 on regulated campaign activity may spend up to £10,000 across the UK without notifying the Commission. Registered non-party campaigners who spend more than £20,000 in England, or more than £10,000 in Scotland, Wales, or Northern Ireland, must record and report their spending and donations. These are known as the ‘reporting thresholds’. They are defined in PPERA as the ‘lower tier expenditure limits’. Given their vital role in providing voters with information and a diversity of voices, it is important that non-party campaigners understand the law and are not deterred from campaigning. In our drafting of the Code, we wanted to take the opportunity to provide campaigners with clarity over the new requirements. Understanding the notification and reporting thresholds The majority of respondents gave feedback that the draft Code effectively explained what is meant by notification and reporting thresholds, with one submission welcoming this ‘appropriate and helpful guidance’. We have therefore made minimal amendments to this section of the Code. A few respondents asked for greater clarity on when non-party campaigners who meet the reporting threshold would be required to submit quarterly donation reports to the Commission. Under the Fixed-term Parliaments Act 2011, registered non-party campaigners were required to submit quarterly donations returns to the Commission, beginning 12 months before a scheduled election date. Following that Act’s repeal, the date of the next UK parliamentary general election is no longer scheduled in law. We have amended the wording to provide more clarify that we are referring to the final year before a UK parliamentary general election, specifically ‘when a UK parliamentary term enters its fifth year’. One submission noted the risk of non-party campaigners unwittingly exceeding the notification and reporting thresholds as a result of the rules on joint campaigning, without incurring spending directly themselves. We have highlighted this risk in the revised Code, and have also signposted non-party campaigners to the section on joint campaigning to help campaigners understand the link between the joint campaigning rules and the notification and reporting thresholds. What type of spending is controlled expenditure

Background Controlled expenditure is any spending incurred in respect of regulated campaign activity. We know that non-party campaigners can find it difficult to understand how to assess, calculate and account for their spending, and what qualifying expenses fall within, and outside the regulatory regime. When we drafted the Code, we included detailed information on how to consider campaign activity before an election is announced, the reusing of items from a previous election, items provided free of charge or at a discount and on overheads that we know campaigners are most likely to use. The types of campaign spending and activity that must be reported The majority of respondents told us that they found this section of the Code clear, and that it '[provided] clarity about what is controlled expenditure'. Some respondents explained that the phrase 'long running campaign' in the draft was unclear, and did not help them to understand whether existing campaigns would be regulated. We have therefore replaced 'long running campaign' with 'ongoing campaign', to make it clear that it is not the length of time that a campaign has been running that would determine whether or not it was regulated. Campaigns that begin before an election is announced, and remain unchanged following an election being announced, are unlikely to be regulated so long as their activity does not meet the purpose test. Some respondents suggested that our explanation of when an ongoing campaign's activity might become subject to regulation and incur controlled expenditure was not sufficiently clear. We have therefore revised this section to provide assurances that, during a regulated period, an ongoing campaign would need to alter its activity in such a way so as to meet the purpose test in order for its activity to become regulated. Assessing, calculating and accounting for spending and expenses Several responses asked for additional case studies and tools to help campaigners, calculate and account for their spending. This included a request for a spending calculator tool within the Code as well as detailed examples that illustrate spending in various different scenarios, including small-scale costs, such as the staff time cost of sending a single email or social media post. We appreciate the value to campaigners of having detailed examples and case studies to refer to. However, it is not possible to address every possible scenario within a statutory Code. We will therefore seek to address this in the additional guidance and case studies that will sit alongside the Code to help non-party campaigners assess what expenses need to be reported. Several respondents asked us to provide more clarity on what costs would be considered 'overheads' and for the Code to be more explicit about how they should report such expenses. We have amended the wording to give assurances that spending on overheads that remains the same before and during the regulated period is not likely to be regulated. Targeted expenditure Background Regulated campaign spending by all registered non-party campaigners during the regulated period for a UKPGE that is aimed at promoting the electoral success of one particular registered political party or any of its candidates is called targeted spending. We know that non-party campaigners find the laws on targeted expenditure complex to navigate in practice. In our drafting, we wanted to provide as much clarity to support them to understand the targeted spending limits and in what situations authorisation from a political party would be required. Understanding targeted spending While some respondents felt that the 'targeted spending' concept had been clearly defined, responses from charities and trade unions raised concerns that the draft Code appeared to expand the range of activities that might incur targeted spending. In particular, they were concerned by wording that related to '[a] campaign on a particular issue that is so closely and publicly linked to one particular political party that it is synonymous with that party is likely to be considered targeted spending.' They argued that this broader definition of targeted spending risked a 'chilling effect' on campaigners. Some respondents were concerned that campaigners whose policy positions were adopted by a political party would inadvertently find their campaigns regulated as a result and be discouraged from continuing to campaign. There were concerns that this could effectively give political parties 'the right to veto issues-based campaigning by non-party campaigners'. We recognise that the original drafting unintentionally risked both confusing and deterring potential non-party campaigners – particularly those carrying out issues-based campaigns. We have therefore changed the wording to: 'campaign activity on a particular issue that is so synonymous with one particular political party that it can be reasonably regarded as intended to influence voters to vote for only that political party or its candidates, will be considered targeted spending.'

This provides clarity and reassurance of the law. The targeted spending limits for non-party campaigners and when authorisation is required In general, respondents felt that this section of the draft Code was clear. One respondent noted that the draft Code did not mention Section 94D PPERA, which covers how to calculate the lower limit for targeted expenditure. They said this law was confusing for campaigners. The draft Code refers to specific targeted expenditure limits in s94D PPERA but as with other variable expenditure limits set out in PPERA, it would not be suitable to include within a statutory Code as the limit for targeted expenditure is subject to change at each election. We therefore intend to provide further clarity in our accompanying guidance, which we can keep updated with the relevant limits for each election.

Joint campaigning At recent elections we have seen low levels of campaigners engaging in joint campaigning. We know from our conversations with stakeholders that they find the law in this area to be complex, with the effect of limiting joint campaigning activities. We therefore wanted in the Code to provide as much certainty as possible over the current laws. We aimed to make this section of the Code as accessible to campaigners as possible to give campaigners greater confidence about whether their cooperation with fellow campaigners will fall under joint campaigning rules. In particular, we made clear that, while a common plan is a necessary precondition, any such plan must also include an intention to incur controlled expenditure in order to be considered joint campaigning. How to consider whether activity is joint campaigning Consultation responses to this question were broadly positive, as respondents felt that the draft Code went 'a long way to reassuring non-party campaigners which activities do and do not constitute joint campaigning'. The clarity provided about the campaign activities of umbrella organisations was also particularly welcomed. The existing examples were well received and noted as helpful but further examples were requested, specifically about voluntary organisations working together on non-regulated activity during a regulated period and about what does not constitute joint campaigning. We have included clarification on when a non-party campaigner donates to another non-party campaigner. However, we will seek to incorporate further examples into the supplementary guidance that is published alongside the Code. Several respondents took the opportunity to express their views of the legislation itself: that the laws around joint campaigning ultimately deter greater participation by non-party campaigners. One respondent argued that this deterrence 'curtails legitimate and useful co-operation and engagement between actors in civil society'. While not strictly about the content of the Code, this provided a context highlighting the need for the Code to be as clear as possible for non-party campaigners. Factors that should be taken into account when considering activities In general, respondents felt that the draft Code helped them understand what factors to take into account when considering whether an activity is joint campaigning. However, the charity sector raised concerns that the draft Code did not set out definitively what might constitute proof of a plan or arrangement between non-party campaigners where there was the intention to incur spending. Respondents raised significant fears that, without a standard way of demonstrating joint campaigning, non-party campaigners could be subject to future enforcement action. Regarding the definition of ‘intent’, one submission drew attention to the risks of non-party campaigners within a joint campaign having different intentions regarding their incurring of controlled expenditure. We understand that it is important for non-party campaigners engaged in a joint campaign to be clear about what spending falls under joint campaigning. We have made clear in the revised Code that any spending which goes beyond or is incurred outside of an agreed plan between parties involved in a joint campaign, is not part of the joint campaign that needs to be reported. Further detail on this topic will be provided in the supplementary guidance that accompanies this Code.

Lead and minor campaigners

We have also included an additional section focused specifically on the roles of lead and minor campaigners in joint campaigning arrangements. This should support non-party campaigners to understand how such an arrangement would impact spending rules and notification requirements. This also may help campaigners to understand how undertaking joint campaigning could reduce regulatory and administrative burdens on smaller campaigners. Given the innumerable formal and informal ways in which collaboration between non-party campaigners could be organised and take place, it is not feasible to include a prescriptive list of evidence within the Code that might illustrate the existence of a plan or arrangement with the intent to incur controlled expenditure. We will explore the possibility of providing templates within our guidance to support campaigners to evidence plans and document arrangements.

Conclusion

The duty on the Commission to prepare a Code of Practice for non-party campaigners is an important part of the Commission’s work to ensure that campaigners understand and are confident in applying the law to their activities. Non-party campaigners play a vital role in our democracy, and we are committed to providing them with as much clarity as possible to ensure they are not discouraged from active campaigning. The rules around regulated non-party campaigner activity are complex. Many respondents welcomed how various sections of the draft Code provided ‘clarity’ and ‘appropriate and helpful guidance’. We have used their expertise and insight to make the Code as clear and as helpful as possible.

Next steps

The final Code has been presented to the Secretary of State for Levelling Up, Housing and Communities for their consideration. The minister may make modifications to the Code. A statement of reasoning is required to detail any changes that have been made. The Code is then subject to the negative procedure in Parliament, which means that once it is laid, it will be approved unless either House rejects it within 40 days of it being laid. Following approval, the Code of Practice for Non-party s will come into force.

Annex A Consultation responses

We received 17 responses to our consultation, including responses submitted via our online questionnaire and those received via email. This included:

- 7 responses from trade unions
- 3 from third sector organisations, or bodies representing third sector organisations
- 2 from academics
- 1 from a political party
- 1 from a public relations firm
- 1 from an interest group
- 2 anonymous responses

Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Strategy | Electoral Commission Search
Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Strategy You are in the Our plans and priorities section Home Our plans and priorities Currently reading: of 9 - Show page contents On this page What we do, the electorate we serve and who we are Our vision for a diverse Commission serving a diverse democracy Promoting equality, diversity and inclusion in the democratic process Embedding equality, diversity and inclusion in our processes and decisions Ensuring equality, recognition of diversity and inclusion for all those who work at the Commission Communicating our commitment to equality, diversity and inclusion Making it happen Action Plan Annexes Foreword Democracy and diversity are indissolubly linked. There should be no barriers on grounds of any characteristic protected by equalities legislation, so that our electoral processes are open and accessible for all those entitled to vote, for those who choose to stand for election and for those who campaign on their behalf. We are therefore pleased to present this strategy, which is central to the work of the Commission in protecting and promoting the electoral processes. We have built the strategy around three key objectives: ensuring that everyone who is eligible is able to participate in the electoral processes - whether as a voter, campaigner or standing for office - by identifying barriers, making recommendations and working with others to remove them ensuring that we embed equality, diversity and inclusion in the delivery of all of our work, treating all our stakeholders and partners fairly and with respect, and being transparent in the decisions we make ensuring equality, diversity and inclusion for everyone at the Commission and that all our staff are treated fairly and with respect Like any organisation, we have a range of statutory obligations to ensure we promote equality, diversity and inclusion in line with our responsibilities under the Equalities Act 2010 and other relevant legislation such as the Human Rights Act 1998. We have set out in the strategy what these are and how we comply with them in our activities. But equality, diversity and inclusion are not just matters of compliance. We know we have to do more to meet this challenge and demonstrate our commitment to moving beyond compliance. This strategy sets out our aspirations to go further and challenge ourselves to reflect fully the diversity of the electorate in our work to support democracy. This strategy covers the whole of the UK. We are accountable to the UK Parliament, the Scottish Parliament and the Senedd, and are sharing this strategy with them. Different legislation applies in Northern Ireland, and this Strategy includes the Single Equalities Scheme required under the Northern Ireland Act 1998. The Action Plan sets out what we will do when. We will monitor progress through our management and reporting system, and hold ourselves to account through the scrutiny of our Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Group and our Race at Work Charter Task Force. Overarching responsibility lies with the Chief Executive and the Executive Team, and they will report regularly to the Commission Board on progress. Everyone is entitled to participate in democracy. That is why equality, diversity and inclusion matter. What we do, the electorate we serve and who we are What the Commission does The Commission was set up in 2000 and reports to the UK, Welsh, and Scottish parliaments. : our aim is to ensure that people trust, value and take part in elections. We are responsible for: Maintaining the registers of political parties and campaigners Promoting compliance with the campaign and political finance laws, and enforcing those laws where appropriate Publishing financial returns from parties and campaigners, including larger donations and campaign spending Setting the standards for electoral registration and running elections, and reporting on how well this is done Informing the public about the democratic process, including making sure they understand it is important to register to vote, and know how to vote Running any referendums held in accordance with PPERA Advising Governments and Parliaments on improvements to the electoral system Our strategic objectives are Accessible registration and voting Free and fair elections depend on all people who are eligible and want to vote being able to do so. We will work to ensure: Increased levels of voter registration, especially amongst groups that currently have difficulty engaging in the process The removal of barriers, especially those that affect people who currently have difficulty trying to cast their vote Transparent political campaigning and compliant political finance Parties and other campaigners should be able to campaign without facing undue actual or perceived barriers, while we continue to ensure political finance is transparent.

This will support voters to hear a range of campaign voices to help them take decisions when voting. We will work to ensure: Increased levels of confidence shown by candidates, parties and other campaigners in their ability to understand, apply and comply with the law on campaigning and political finance High levels of compliance with registration, reporting and other political finance laws Resilient local electoral services Local electoral services need to be able to respond to increasingly challenging economic, social and environmental pressures; we will support local authorities and electoral administrators to deliver effective, sustainable and resilient electoral services, ensuring that voters receive the service they should be able to expect. We will work to ensure: Sustained and consistent high performance in the delivery of well-run elections Increased levels of confidence shown by electoral administrators in the resilience of the electoral system Fair and effective electoral law It is essential for the electoral system that the laws which underpin it are fair, effective and well understood. Electoral law must also keep pace with other developments in our society, harnessing technology and working on a continual process of modernisation. We will work to: Support governments and parliaments to reform electoral law to make it less complex Reduce the risks and inefficiencies associated with electoral law which impact our electoral system A modern and sustainable electoral system In order to ensure our electoral system is resilient to the challenges that lie beyond the period of this plan, it is essential that we work towards increased value for money, transparency, trust and compliance.

It is crucial that the roles and responsibilities of bodies which are part of the electoral system are clarified. And, it is important that we understand and reduce the environmental impact of the electoral system. We will work to ensure: Data and technology are harnessed to meet the needs of voters, campaigners and electoral administrators The changing risks to the election system from the misuse of data and technology are understood and acted upon Strong relationships and streamlined working practices with all bodies that are part of the electoral system are developed Governments and the wider electoral community are supported to adopt a strategy and implementation plan which reduces the environmental impact of our electoral system Serving a diverse electorate Serving a diverse electorate We are here to ensure that everyone eligible to vote knows how to exercise their vote and have their say, and that those who want to participate in politics as campaigners or seek election can get the information they need from us to be able to understand the rules. So recognising and responding to the needs of a diverse population and electorate is at the heart of our work and is what we are committed to do. Diversity covers a range of characteristics such as age, race and ethnicity, sex sexuality, disability, marital status, pregnancy and beliefs as well as issues around socio-economic disadvantage and access to opportunities. We illustrate below some of the key characteristics. Age The age structure of the population is set out below. As well as supporting those eligible to vote, an important part of the Commission's work is with young people to prepare them for being able to exercise their vote. Age structure of the population according to ONS: Mid year population estimates 2019 Name 16-17 18-24 25-34 35-44 45-54 55-64 65+ United Kingdom 2.1% 8.5% 13.5% 12.6% 13.6% 12.2% 18.5% Great Britain 2.1% 8.5% 13.5% 12.6% 13.6% 12.2% 18.6% England 2.1% 8.4% 13.5% 12.7% 13.5% 12.0% 18.4% Wales 2.1% 8.7% 12.7% 11.2% 13.3% 13.0% 21.0% Scotland 2.0% 8.5% 13.8% 12.3% 14.0% 13.5% 19.1% Northern Ireland 2.4% 8.5% 12.3% 12.7% 13.6% 12.2% 16.6% We know from a range of research that young people are less likely to vote. We also know that 18-24 year olds are less likely to be correctly registered to vote (76% of 18-24 year olds compared to 86% of the population as a whole), and less likely to be satisfied with the voting process (66% compared to 80% of the population as a whole). Ethnicity The UK is an increasingly ethnically diverse society. The table shows headline statistics across the UK. Data for England and Wales drawn from 2011 census; for Scotland from Audit Scotland Annual Diversity Report 2018-19; for Northern Ireland from 2011 census. Totals may not sum due to rounding. White Minority Ethnic Black Asian Mixed and other England and Wales 86% 14% 3.3% 7.5% 3.2% Wales 95.6% 4.4% 0.6% 2.3% 1.5% Scotland 96.1% 3.9% 0.7% 2.9% 0.4% Northern Ireland 98.2% 1.8% 0.2% 1.1% 0.5% Black and minority ethnic voters are considerably more likely than white voters to have issues with satisfaction and confidence around voting. Overall 31% of the population identified barriers to participation by minority groups as a source of concern. Around a quarter of the black and Asian population are not registered to vote compared to 16% of the white population. Disability An estimated 19% of UK working age adults and 22% of all adults in the electorate (14.1 million people) have a disability as defined by the Equality Act 2010 or the Disability Discrimination Act 1995). Family Resources Survey 2019-20. Total does not sum to 100 as more than one disability may be selected. Type of Impairment % Mobility 49 Stamina/breathing/fatigue 36 Dexterity 25 Mental health 29 Memory 16 Hearing 13 Vision 12 Learning 14 Social/behavioural 9 Other 17 Our report on the 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election found that 85% of disabled people felt well informed about the election, 92% were satisfied with the voting process and 96% found it easy to get to polling stations. But there remains room for improvement. In the 2020 Winter Tracker survey 30% of respondents were concerned about barriers to participation for disabled people. These cover a wide range of issues such as physical access, availability of information in different formats and the ease of the voting process. It is important to remember that these may affect carers as well as the people they care for. Sex, gender and sexual orientation As of 2019: An estimated 2.7% of the UK population aged 16+ identified as lesbian, gay or bisexual (LGB) in 2019. In England, 2.7% of those aged 16+ identified as LGB. In Scotland, 2.7% of those aged 16+ identified as LGB. In Wales, 2.9% of those aged 16+ identified as LGB. In Northern Ireland, 1.3% of those aged 16+ identified as LGB. Across the UK, 0.7% of people aged 16+ selected 'Other' to describe their sexuality. Across the UK, 3.0% of people aged 16+ selected 'Do not know' or refused to answer. ONS Annual Population Survey, 2021. The ONS has not previously produced estimates of the number of transgender people living in the UK, but a voluntary question on gender identity for the 2021 census for England and Wales was asked of respondents aged 16+. Diversity of those standing for election The diversity of candidates for office does not reflect the diversity of the general population. At the 2017 Parliamentary and General Election for example 1 : 29% of candidates were women compared to 51% of the population 56% were over 50 compared to 48% of the population 8% were from an ethnic minority compared to 13% of the population 10% considered themselves to have a disability compared with 18% of the population 11% were lesbian, gay, bisexual and/or transgender Political and religious diversity in Northern Ireland Section 75 (2) of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 prescribes additional duties in Northern Ireland to promote good community relationships between those of different political and religious backgrounds. 48.4% of the population are Protestant and 45.1% Catholic; 0.9% have another faith and 5.6% have none 2 . 35% consider themselves to be Unionists and 19% Nationalists; 42% consider themselves to be neither and 4% to be other or not sure 3 . Our workforce in April 2022 The Commission has 173 employees. The majority have contractual workbases in London; we also have offices in Belfast, Cardiff and Edinburgh, and a number of permanent home-workers based across England. We illustrate below some of the key characteristics. As at this date our current split is 70 male and 103 female employees. Based on current self-declared data we currently have 21 black and minority ethnic employees. Our senior managers including our Executive Team are evenly split in terms of gender. Two out of 23 are of black and minority ethnic background, which is unrepresentative of the black and minority ethnic population as a whole. Our Board is appointed by the Speaker's Committee and comprises ten Commissioners including the Chair. The Board is equally representative in terms of gender. However there are currently no Commissioners from a black or minority ethnic background. The Commission has a full time EDI senior lead who is responsible for leading the Commission's work on equality, diversity and inclusion. Equality, diversity and inclusion sit at the centre of our People Strategy, embodying our commitment. This is a thread which runs right through the six segments of the Strategy including culture, resource planning, developing our people, getting the best from our people, valuing people and building a new flexible working culture. A number of groups in the Commission provide a forum for discussion, constructive challenge and the ability to hold the organisation to account: The Race at Work Task Force, chaired by the Chief Executive and supported by the Race at Work Champion The Equality, Diversity and Inclusion group The Staff Engagement Group, which includes representatives from every team in the Commission The Dignity, Respect and Empowerment Group, which brings together dignity advisers and works with the senior Anti-Bullying and Harassment champion The Mental Health First Aiders group, which brings together mental health first aiders and ensures that the organisation supports those with mental health issues The Wellbeing group, which focuses on promoting staff wellbeing Our vision for a diverse Commission serving a diverse democracy Our commitment to diversity: beyond compliance Fairness and equal treatment are fundamental to the democratic system which it is our job to protect, and which must reflect the diversity of the society it represents, not just in terms of protected characteristics but in terms of wider socio-economic inclusion. Equality, diversity and inclusion go to the heart of democracy, and hence are central to what we do. This is reflected in how we want to serve our stakeholders, how we want to work with our partners, and how we treat our staff. That means understanding and reflecting the needs of people across all the nations and regions of the UK. And that in turn means a workforce of people with a wide range of backgrounds, perspectives and experiences who feel that those different approaches are valued and treated with respect. We have already taken a number of actions to help us meet this challenge. But we know that there is further to go. Our objectives for promoting equality, diversity and inclusion The Commission's equality, diversity and inclusion objectives are therefore to: ensure that everyone who is eligible is able to participate in the democratic process - whether as a voter, a campaigner or by standing for office – by identifying barriers, making recommendations and working with others to remove them ensure that we embed equality, diversity and inclusion in all our work, treat all our stakeholders and partners fairly and with respect, and are transparent in the decisions we make ensure equality, diversity and inclusion for everyone at the Commission and ensure that all our staff are treated fairly and with respect How we will deliver against these objectives We will deliver these three objectives by focusing on three sets of activities. Objective 1 This will be delivered through a range of activities seeking to promote equality, diversity and inclusion in the democratic process. Objective 2 This will be delivered by ensuring that equality, diversity and inclusion are embedded in our processes and decisions. Objective 3 This will be delivered through a range of policies designed to ensure equality, recognition of diversity and inclusion for all those who work and apply to work at the Commission. Promoting equality, diversity and inclusion in the democratic process Objective 1 Ensure that everyone who is eligible is able to participate in the democratic process - whether as a voter, a campaigner or by standing for office - by identifying barriers, making recommendations and working with others to remove them In this chapter we set out the initiatives we will take to work with stakeholders In this chapter we set out the initiatives we will take to work with stakeholders and partners to ensure equality, diversity and inclusion in the democratic process. Our aim Our aim is to maximise equality, diversity and inclusion and promote public confidence in the democratic process. We want everyone entitled to a vote to register and to be able to exercise it, campaigners to have the right information and feel able to campaign, and those who wish to stand for office to feel confident to do so. We know that some groups are more likely to engage in the process than others. At the 2019 General Election men were more likely to vote than women (63% compared to 59%); younger people were less likely to vote than older people (47% of 18-24 year olds compared to 74% of over-65s); and white people were more likely to vote than black and Asian minority ethnic people (63% compared to 52%) 4 . Our approach is based on three priorities: Gathering evidence: understanding the issues through research and consultation : ensuring we understand the issues faced by voters, campaigners and those standing for office and ensuring we meet best practice in accessibility Communications: ensuring that all voters are aware of their right to vote and know how to exercise it, and targeting demographics we know are least likely to be registered to vote; ensuring that we communicate across all parts of the regulated community What we have already achieved Some examples Gathering evidence through research and consultation We regularly survey representative samples of the UK electorate, often using boosted samples to allow for greater understanding of the views of specific groups and communities. For example: Our research on the accuracy and completeness of electoral registers gives us important information about groups who may be under-represented and need encouragement and support to register Our post-election reports look specifically at issues around accessibility such as the availability of information in a variety of formats about the elections and the candidates standing in them, and the accessibility of polling stations We carried out a post-election accessibility survey after both the 2017 and 2019 UKPGEs to give us a better understanding of the barriers faced in registering and voting, and added an additional sample of self-identified disabled voters to our post-election Public Opinion survey in 2019; we always include a sample of blind and partially sighted people in user testing; Our 2017 survey informed the recommendations in our 2017 Elections for Everyone report which fed into a UK Government consultation on the accessibility of voting. We published a set of feasibility studies in 2019 exploring how reforms could be made to the registration system to make it easier to register We regularly gather evidence from a range of charities to inform our work and ensure that we are reflecting a wide range of protected characteristics: for example we worked with charities to help us refresh the design of our website We are members of the Cabinet Office's of Elections Working Group, which brings together government and the third sector to deliver the actions identified in the UK Government's response to their 2017 Call for Evidence on Access to Elections We ensure our guidance and the information we provide about the regulatory system is easy to use and available in a range of formats to increase its accessibility We consult a range of charities on our guidance for polling station staff, which covers a range of areas designed to ensure voters are provided with the support they need in the polling station, such as signage, level access and the availability of tactile voting devices. We have completely redesigned our website to comply with Web Content Guidelines (WCAG) 2.1; all our publications, with minor exceptions detailed in our accessibility policy, meet this standard. We worked with accessibility partners – Zoonou and the RNIB – to ensure this new site launched in July 2019 meets the needs of those with a range of accessibility needs. We have a plan to replace all PDFs with HTML content, to make it easier to find, easier to navigate and accessible for screen readers and other assistive technologies We work hard to ensure that our communications are written in plain /Welsh, and increasingly test content with users to maximise understanding. We have for example in partnership with Mencap published a series of easy read guides for voters All web content that relates to Wales or the UK as a whole is also available in Welsh, and users can 'toggle' between and Welsh. All HTML content can be easily translated into other languages using online translation tools Communications We undertake significant activity to ensure that all voters are aware of their right to vote and how to exercise it. Recent campaigns include the Got 5? campaign encouraging registration, and the Welcome to Your Vote campaign Our regular research into the accuracy and completeness of the electoral registers shows that a number of groups are particularly likely to be under-registered: young people, those with learning disabilities, those in short term rentals and/or who frequently move home, black and minority ethnic communities and Irish travellers. We have built these insights into the way we target communications and into working with organisations who support these groups We are developing a Learning Strategy in partnership with a range of organisations to build political literacy in groups who can often feel distanced from the political process We have been building strategic partnerships with groups and individuals who represent people who are traditionally less likely to be registered to vote. To date we have met with 90 different organisations right across the UK. We have for example: Set up a blog to raise awareness of anonymous registration via Victim Support Scotland Created resources for voters with no fixed address Produced resources for 14-18 year olds on voting and campaigning in NI Taking it further What we propose to do next These activities represent a substantial investment of time and resource for the Commission. We will continue to work with our partners to reach communities of those least likely to be registered. We will: Continue to improve our research data to enhance our evidence base, drawing on existing academic research and on the insights we gain through working with stakeholder groups, and sharing outcomes with respondents where it is feasible to do so Continue to ensure that campaigns to raise public awareness about the electoral system are inclusive and take account of different groups Continue to ensure that our guidance to the regulated community is accessible and meets the needs of different groups Take further steps to ensure our website is as accessible as possible. We will continue to update and improve our offer, and ensure that our work is directed by analytics and informed by user testing with diverse groups Build on the success of the partnership work we have already done in ensuring we continue to identify the needs of diverse groups and respond to them Embedding equality, diversity and inclusion in our processes and decisions Objective 2 Ensure that we embed equality, diversity and inclusion in all our work, treat all our stakeholders and partners fairly and with respect, and are transparent in the decisions we make Our aim As a public regulator we have a duty to treat all customers and partners fairly and impartially. This is not just about compliance with our statutory duties under the Public Sector Equality duty. It means ensuring that all our processes treat stakeholders equally whether they are people we regulate, partners we work with on the administration of elections or businesses we buy services from. That means putting equality, diversity and inclusion at the heart of our processes and ensuring that we follow those processes to a high standard. What we have already achieved We have started work on checking our processes to ensure that they fully reflect equality, diversity and inclusion, building on our existing regulatory Quality Management Scheme We carried out a review of our procurement policies to ensure that we were applying them fairly and equally Our performance standards for Returning Officers set out their responsibilities to ensure that all voters are able to vote easily We have commissioned an independent review of our compliance with the Welsh Language standards to help us identify areas for improvement As a regulator we secure compliance with the laws on registration and on political finance proportionately, consistently and impartially. We do so firstly and primarily through the provision of support, so that parties, campaigners and those standing for office can understand the obligations they are under and have the information they need. We want to see an electoral system where candidates, campaigners and parties are confident to participate within the law and supported to do so no matter who they are We have published our Enforcement Policy explaining how we enforce the law and take enforcement decisions. We also have detailed operational protocols that ensure enforcement work is carried out robustly, consistently and fairly, and that we take due account of any relevant equality, diversity or mental well-being issues Taking it further What we propose to do next We will ensure that the guidance, support and challenge we provide for Electoral Registration Officers encourages registration from typically under-registered groups We will ensure that our guidance, support and challenge to Returning Officers promote the provision of equality of access and experience for all at the polls as set out in the Government's Disability Strategy We will consult on and introduce new processes for carrying out and reviewing Equality Impact Assessments We will ensure that the Commission's procurement strategy includes clear EDI outcomes for contractors, and that effective monitoring of these contractors is done to ensure they comply We will ensure through our Quality Assurance initiative that equality, diversity and inclusion are embedded as appropriate in all our processes We will continue to keep our internal regulatory procedures under review to meet best practice and ensure consistency, fairness and quality underpin all our regulatory activities We will ensure that equality, diversity and inclusion are included as appropriate in our policies, including our Enforcement Policy, as they are reviewed in line with our normal cycle We will implement a Welsh Language Action Plan to enhance our service to Welsh speakers Ensuring equality, recognition of diversity and inclusion for all those who work at the Commission Objective 3 Ensure equality, recognition of diversity and inclusion for everyone at the Commission and ensure that all our staff are treated fairly and with respect Our aim Working through our People Strategy, our aims include being an employer of choice and an example of good practice, reflecting the society we serve. Ensuring equality, diversity and inclusion is the responsibility of all leaders, all managers, and all those in the organisation. We will achieve this for our employees with a focus on the following areas: Ensuring equality in compliance with our legal responsibilities Increasing the diversity of our workforce through recruitment and career progression Working with our EDI Lead to look at how we further promote inclusion Our learning and development offering Employee performance, for example, to ensure fair treatment Improving our collection of data What we have done so far We have taken steps in a wide range of areas to ensure equality, diversity and inclusion across the Commission. We use anonymous recruitment to eliminate any potential bias in shortlisting. Unconscious bias training is available and promoted to all in the Commission. We have worked with a specialist consultant to raise awareness of equality, diversity and inclusion, and put in place a range of groups and initiatives: An EDI group which has provided focus on EDI issues since 2019 Our Race at Work task force, chaired by the Chief Executive Actively celebrating diversity through events such as Black History Month Informal briefing sessions with our interim EDI lead Commissioning an external report on perceived bullying and harassment, and appointing an Anti Bullying and Harassment Champion Our network of Mental Health First Aiders Our offering to be an employer of choice including flexible working in a range of forms A Dignity at Work policy backed up by voluntary Dignity and Respect Advisers Our wellbeing offering to the workforce, including an employee assistance programme We have made equality, diversity and inclusion a focus of our learning and development at the Commission through: Using training need analysis techniques to help us target employee learning and development Inclusion of EDI in our corporate induction session Offering unconscious bias training to all In-depth training provided on EQIAs Inclusion of EDI as a key part of our management and leadership development programme Welsh language training and awareness supported by our Welsh Language advisor We have taken the following steps on data: We are having a renewed push to collect data on all Protected Characteristics from our employees so as to minimise missing data fields whilst respecting potential concerns about providing this information We monitor our recruitment and selection data to ensure that we recruit fairly and that employees have fair opportunities to develop their careers Via the data we collect on who receives learning and development, we ensure that all employees have access to opportunities to develop their skills and abilities We monitor turnover and data from completed exit questionnaires We ensure that our performance management systems are fair to all We engage with our EDI group so that they can act as critical friends in challenging what the data are telling us The need for equality, diversity and inclusion has been a central theme The need for equality, diversity and inclusion has been a central theme of our work to modernise our London office. Our redesign complies with guidance from the Centre for Accessible Environments, legislative requirements and BS 8300. Remodelled kitchens and a reduction in fixed desks provide greater space and accessibility for wheelchair users. We have used colour demarcation and even lighting to help those with visual impairments. For those with hearing difficulties, an induction loop is available. And we have created a multi-faith room for quiet reflection. Taking it further What we propose to do next Our People Strategy is central to meeting our commitment to equality, diversity and inclusion. We set out here some of the key areas we will focus on to deliver this commitment. Equality, Diversity and inclusion at Board level We recognise that the level of diversity around our Commissioner Board table is not as rich as it should be. Appointments to our Board are governed by a Parliamentary statutory process which limits our ability to rectify this directly ourselves or quickly. Accordingly we will adopt a twin track strategy: To continue to encourage recognition that diversity must be at the heart of all recruitment processes for the appointment of new Board members Appointing one or more expert independent advisors to the Board to facilitate hearing a more diverse range of voices in Board deliberations Increasing workforce diversity We will continue to encourage a diversity of applicants through using anonymous recruiting, considering the design of our posts and encouraging applications from a diverse range of people, and continue to monitor process and outcomes Over time we will move to a new recruitment system which will give us additional capacity to pull and use data and will improve accessibility We will explore and educate ourselves further on ways of supporting a diverse workforce through approaches such as Access to Work and maintaining our commitment to making reasonable adjustments Promoting inclusion We will aim to create an environment where our workforce can be themselves, proud of their identity and diversity; supported by an updated Dignity at Work policy, and to monitor this through our all staff surveys We will all work to deliver on our commitment to 'Zero Tolerance' of bullying and harassment Our workforce have told us how much they value the flexibility the Commission provides. We will build on the learnings from relevant impacts of the Covid-19 pandemic 2020/21 – including hybrid ways of working, dependence on electronic communication and virtual leadership – to help us build further on our flexible and inclusive workplace culture We will continue the work we have begun with our Race at Work Taskforce to give effect to our Race at Work Charter and have appointed an independent adviser to support this work We will continue to seek views from across our workforce and promote inclusion through our EDI group and other means, recognising that staff may not feel comfortable expressing views through the staff survey and/or in exit interviews We will continue to promote and celebrate equality, diversity and inclusion through a calendar of events for our workforce Learning and development We will ensure that training on equality, diversity and inclusion is included in development plans as a matter of course at all levels of the organisation, drawing on externally available expertise We will roll out a module focusing on equality, diversity and inclusion as part of our management and leadership development training for all managers We will raise awareness of the skills of our Welsh Language Advisor and Welsh language translator to support and enhance Welsh language training and awareness of the Welsh language Our induction will ensure that all new employees receive relevant information on the Commission's commitment to equality, diversity and inclusion. Similarly we will provide appropriate 'welcome' content for any agency temps that we use We will look at how best to support the career progression of staff in groups who are under-represented drawing on the experience of our Race at Work Charter Task Force and working with these groups to examine approaches such as mentoring and secondments Performance We will provide 'EDI objective' examples for use in the individual performance management of employees performance We will ensure any workforce EDI related issues are handled sensitively but appropriately, calling on Commission policies as appropriate Employee engagement We will continue to discuss the results of our regular all staff survey and seek feedback both through teams and through the Commission's staff groups such as the Equality, Diversity and Inclusion group and the Staff Engagement Group and through our work with PCS as our recognised trade union Improving collection of data We will work to encourage employees to feel comfortable to self-declare their diversity in our HR system to improve our baseline whilst ensuring that we mitigate concerns about the sharing of sensitive personal data. High level data reports will continue to be shared with our EDI group and with our Executive Team. We plan to tender for a new system which will enhance our ability to gather and track data. We will continue to track the diversity of those who apply for Commission jobs and the reasons stated by employees leaving the Commission. This data at high level will continue to be shared with our Executive Team and with our Remuneration and HR Committee. Communicating our commitment to equality, diversity and inclusion. Communicating with our customers Working with stakeholders is essential to delivering the aims set out in this strategy. We have therefore consulted with a wide range of partners. Communicating with our people We have consulted staff widely in the production of this strategy. It has been shared and discussed with staff through a range of Commission groups: Our Staff Engagement Group Our Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Group Our Race at Work Taskforce Our Dignity and Respect group Our Mental Health First Aiders We have also consulted Commission PCS representatives. Equality, diversity and inclusion have formed a key part of our management and development leadership programme, ensuring that managers role model the values the Commission supports and embed them in their teams. The Strategy has also been discussed with our Remuneration and Human Resources Committee and our Board. Ensuring that everybody in the Commission knows about the Strategy and the standards it sets is crucial to its success. So an internal communications plan is one of the first priorities identified in the Action Plan. How to give us feedback and how to tell us if you are not content We welcome feedback on this Strategy. Please send your feedback to our EDI Lead Cindy Williams at edi@electoralcommission.org.uk, or by post to: Cindy Williams The Electoral Commission 3 Bunhill Row London EC1Y 8YZ If you are not content with our approach and want to make a complaint, the procedure for doing so is set out on our website. Making it happen In this chapter we set out how we will assess, monitor and report on progress against the EDI strategy. Our Action Plan Our Action Plan is attached at Annex A . It sets out equality related activities taking place across the Commission. These actions will be reflected in our Corporate Plan for 2022-27, in our business and operational plans and in the objectives of all staff as appropriate. Progress will be tracked as part of the Commission's performance tracking through monthly and quarterly reporting. We are committed to increasing and improving the collection of data. The plan will be updated regularly as part of our wider planning. Reporting on and sharing progress internally Objectives for the organisation will be tracked through our internal performance monitoring system, with monthly reports to ET and quarterly reports to the Board. There will be a specific objective on equality, diversity and inclusion: The Commission's Remuneration and HR Committee will track progress on behalf of the Board and offer constructive challenge The Commission's own internal staff groups will act as critical friends, holding the leadership of the Commission accountable for progress Reporting and sharing on progress externally The Commission is accountable to the Speaker's Committee of the UK Parliament, to the Scottish Parliament and to the Senedd. The key mechanism for demonstrating this accountability is through our existing mechanisms. We will set out in our annual Business Plan what actions we propose to take, and will report on progress in our Annual Report. In Wales we will provide an annual report on our compliance with the 168 statutory Welsh Language Standards and what more we can do to enhance the bilingual services provided both internally and externally. Specific requirements apply in Northern Ireland. The Single Equality Scheme setting out how we will meet these requirements forms part of this Strategy. We will provide an annual review of our performance against this strategy and our Disability Action Plan. We will also provide a five yearly summary of our refresh of the strategy. Action Plan

Action Plan This action plan sets out what we will do to deliver against the objectives identified in this Strategy. It reflects the priorities and objectives identified in the Corporate Plan for 2022-27. These will be reviewed annually as part of our Business Planning cycle. We will report on progress as part of our Annual Report.

Objective 1 Equality, diversity and inclusion in the democratic process

Action When we will do it Measure of success Who is responsible Continue to improve our research data to enhance our evidence base, ensuring we carry out screening and if appropriate an EQIA for research proposals Ongoing Evidence base gives us clear data to support our aims for equality, diversity and inclusion Head of Research Continue to ensure that campaigns to raise public awareness about the electoral system are inclusive and take account of different groups Ongoing; to form part of each campaign Our messages feature in targeted media; good response from targeted groups Head of Campaigns Continue to ensure that our guidance is available in a variety of formats Ongoing Our stakeholders are supported in compliance with the PSED Head of Regulatory Support and Head of Guidance Take further steps to ensure our website and our publications are as accessible as possible Ongoing: our website already meets best practice AA standards Best practice maintained and enhanced through regular testing and feedback Head of Digital Communications Build on the success of the partnership work we have already done in ensuring we continue to identify the needs of diverse groups and respond to them to ensure that democracy is accessible to all Continue initiatives to identify groups less likely to vote and work to find ways to respond to their needs and remove barriers to voting Good levels of awareness from specific groups; guidance clear on accessibility Head of Campaigns working with the Commission's offices in Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland; Head of Guidance

Objective 2 Embedding equality, diversity and inclusion in our processes and decision making

Action When we will do it Measure of success Who is responsible Ensure that the guidance, support and challenge we provide for Electoral Registration Officers supports them to encourage registration from typically under-registered groups in their areas (based on their demographics) Ongoing: we have laid the new Standards before Parliament We provide the right guidance and support to EROs and quality assure that we have done so Head of Guidance, Head of Support and Improvement, Heads of Electoral Commission in Wales and Scotland Ensure that our guidance, support and challenge to Returning Officers promote the provision of equality of access and experience for all at the polls Ongoing: we constantly update and improve our guidance We provide the right guidance and support to ROs Head of Guidance; Head of Support and Improvement, Heads of Electoral Commission in Wales and Scotland Introduce new processes for carrying out, reviewing and publishing Equality Impact Assessments New EQIA process rolled out on trial basis by the end of 2021 Enhanced ability to assess the impact of proposed changes on equalities Head of Planning and Performance; all staff responsible for areas where screening and if necessary a full EQIA may be required Ensure that the Commission's procurement strategy includes clear EDI outcomes for contractors, and that effective monitoring of these contractors is done to ensure they comply Ongoing Contractors have equalities policies in place Head of Finance and Ensure through our Quality Assurance initiative that equality is embedded as appropriate in all our processes Ongoing All processes pay due regard to equalities Head of Projects and all managers Continue to keep our internal regulatory procedures under review for best practice and to ensure that consistency, fairness and quality underpin all our regulatory activities Ongoing Decisions seen to be made transparently and fairly in a way which treats all stakeholders equally Head of Registration and Reporting; Head of

Monitoring and Enforcement Ensure that equality is included as appropriate in our policies including our Enforcement Policy as they are reviewed in line with our normal cycle Ongoing All policies pay due regard to equalities All Heads responsible for organisational policies Implement a Welsh Language Action Plan to enhance our service to Welsh speakers, building on the appointment of a permanent senior adviser on Welsh language and a permanent translator All parts of the organisation are aware of and meet the Welsh language standards Head of Electoral Commission in Wales; all Heads Objective 3 Ensure equality, recognition of diversity and inclusion for everyone at the Commission Action When we will do it Measure of success Who is responsible Meet the commitments and actions stated in our people strategy Ongoing Progress demonstrated in line with commitment Head of Human Resources and all managers We will continue using anonymous recruiting for employed roles (our e-recruitment system does not share name or other demographic info with recruiting) Ongoing The diversity of whom we recruit Head of Human Resources and all recruiting managers We will consider the design of our roles including through the lens of being open to all Ongoing The diversity of whom we recruit Recruiting managers (with support from Human Resources team) We will tender for an e-recruitment system that meets our data needs By 2022 Diversity data reports on job applicants for employed roles Human Resources Team We will aim to create an environment where all staff can be themselves at work Ongoing Positive findings in all staff surveys and feedback from staff groups; consider ways of encouraging feedback from those not comfortable with these mechanisms Work led by Anti Bullying champion Updated Dignity at Work policy for 2021/2. By 2022 Updated policy reflecting Commission needs and priorities Human Resources team, DARE, EDI Group, Anti Bullying champion, PCS We will work to deliver on our commitment to 'Zero Tolerance' of bullying and harassment. Ongoing with annual review Levels of bullying and harassment experienced and witnessed fall Anti-Bullying Champion working with Dignity and Respect Group; all managers and colleagues We will build on the learnings from relevant impacts of the Covid-19 pandemic 2020/21 – including hybrid ways of working, dependence on electronic communication; virtual leadership – to help us shape a new and inclusive workplace culture Ongoing as the pandemic recedes Continued balance of high staff engagement with delivery of business All managers and staff We will work through our Race at Work Champion and our Race at Work Taskforce to give effect to our Race at Work Charter. Ongoing Actions agreed with Task Force and carried through according to plan. We have set ourselves a target to bring the diversity of our workforce in line with the diversity of the UK. Race at Work Champion working with the Task Force We will work with and support a new permanent EDI Lead for the Commission From Summer 2021 EDI lead delivers against agreed outcomes Head of Strategic Planning and Performance We will continue to seek views and promote EDI through our EDI group Ongoing EDI considered in Commission decisions and processes All Heads Through continuing to provide induction to employees and workers, we will let them know of the EDI agenda and priorities Ongoing All new employees, temporary or permanent, understand the Commission's expectations on EDI Human Resources team, SLG and recruiting managers We will continue to discuss the results of all staff surveys and seek feedback both through teams and through the Commission's groupings such as the Equality, Diversity and Inclusion group, the Staff Engagement Group and with PCS After each full all staff survey Staff feel confident to speak up and share views to enhance the all staff survey process Head of Human Resources working with relevant groups We will encourage employees to self-declare their diversity in our HR system to improve our organisational EDI data Spring 2021 We have set a target of 85% for 2022-23, to be reviewed for the next year Head of Human Resources We will continue to track the diversity of applicants and of leavers Ongoing Levels of diversity rise. We have set ourselves a target to bring the diversity of the workforce in line with the diversity of the UK. Human Resources team and managers Communicating our commitment to diversity Action When we will do it Measure of success Who is responsible We will draw up and implement a strategy for internal communications to make sure all staff are aware of our commitment to equality, diversity and inclusion In line with publication of Strategy All staff aware of Strategy and their responsibilities under it EDI lead working with Head of Internal Communications Annexes Annexes Annex A: our legal responsibilities Introduction This chapter sets out the legal requirements which apply to the Commission. There are particular requirements in Northern Ireland, and we have set out where these apply only there. Electoral legislation is a devolved matter and differing provisions apply in Wales and in Scotland, for example extension of the franchise. GB statutory requirements The core EDI framework for public sector organisations is set out in the Equality Act 2010 and the specific Public Sector Duties (also known as the equality duty). The Scottish Parliament and the Senedd have set out some of their own specific commitments. Under the Equality Act 2006, the Equality and Human Rights Commission (EHRC) has a statutory remit to protect, enforce and promote equality across nine protected characteristics that are set out in the Equality Act 2010: Age Disability Gender reassignment Marriage and civil partnership Pregnancy and maternity Race Religion or belief (including the right not to believe) Sex Sexual Orientation This remit includes regulating the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED). The PSED is a positive duty on public authorities and others carrying out public functions. It requires that public authorities give proper consideration to equality in their day-to-day work in shaping policy, delivering services and in their employment practices. The PSED operates in two linked parts – the General Equality Duty and the Specific Duties. The General Equality Duty is set out in s.149 of the Equality Act 2010 and requires public authorities, in the exercise of their functions, to have due regard to the need to: eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other prohibited conduct advance equality of opportunity between people who share a relevant protected characteristic and those who do not, and foster good relations between people who share a relevant protected characteristic and those who do not These are sometimes referred to as the three aims or arms of the general equality duty. It is not sufficient to passively comply by trying not to discriminate. Organisations must actively seek to 'eliminate' unlawful discrimination, 'advance' equality and 'foster' good relations. Similarly, the Act explains that having due regard for advancing equality involves: Removing or minimising disadvantages suffered by people due to their protected characteristics Taking steps to meet the needs of people from protected groups where these are different from the needs of other people Encouraging people from protected groups to participate in public life or in other activities where their participation is disproportionately low The Act states that meeting different needs involves taking steps to take account of disabled people's disabilities. It describes fostering good relations as tackling prejudice and promoting understanding between people from different groups. It states that compliance with the duty may involve treating some people more favourably than others. The Human Rights Act 1998 and the European Convention on Human Rights Under the Human Rights Act it is unlawful for us to act in a way that is incompatible with the rights set out in the European Convention on Human Rights. Article 14 protects against discrimination in enjoying these rights on the basis of any ground including sex, race, colour, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, association with a national minority, property, birth or other status. Article 3 protocol 1 of the European Convention on Human Rights guarantees the right to free elections. Additional requirements in Wales

The same statutory framework applies in Wales with one exception: legislation defining the equal status of the Welsh language. The Commission is not listed as a public body for the purpose of the socio-economic duty in section 1 of the Equalities Act. Welsh Ministers do have the power to amend by regulations those to whom the socio-economic duty applies, however. The Welsh Language Measure (Wales) 2011 requires us to treat the Welsh and languages equally when providing services to the public in Wales. The Commission is listed in Schedule 6 of the Welsh Language Standards (No. 2) Regulations 2016. By Regulation 2 of the 2016 Regulations the standards set out therein apply to the Commission ("the Standards"). There are 168 standards. These require the Commission to treat the Welsh and languages equally when providing services to the public in Wales (the service delivery standards).

There are further standards requiring the Welsh language to be given particular consideration (the policy making standards). There are standards which apply to the day to day work of the Commission (the operational standards). There are a number of supplementary standards which apply, too. Finally, there are the record keeping standards which require a record to be kept of both internal and external Welsh language related matters.

The position in Scotland Public authorities must publish equality information by 30 April 2021 under the Scottish specific duties (including a new set of equality outcomes, pay gap information and equal pay statements). They must also publish reports on their progress on achieving their equality outcomes and on mainstreaming equality by this date: a mainstreaming report annualised employee information a report on progress made to achieve the authorities equality outcomes, and a refreshed set of equality outcomes Authorities with 20 (250 plus in the rest of the UK) or more employees also have to publish:

- a statement on equal pay (including information on occupational segregation), and gender pay gap information

The BSL (Scotland) Act 2015 requires public bodies in Scotland to publish plans every six years, showing how they will promote and support BSL. Our equality duties in Northern Ireland

As a public authority the Commission has obligations in accordance with Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, which requires all government bodies to protect and promote the right to equality, ensuring that equality of opportunity and good relations are principal considerations in the construction of policies, policy implementation and the provision of services. Section 75 (1) stipulates;

- (1) A public authority shall in carrying out its functions relating to Northern Ireland have due regard to the need to promote equality of opportunity— (a) between persons of different religious belief, political opinion, racial group, age, marital status or sexual orientation; (b) between men and women generally; (c) between persons with a disability and persons without; And (d) between persons with dependants and persons without.

In addition Irish Travellers are an identified group under the Race Relations Northern Ireland Order 1997, and political opinion is a unique protected characteristic in Northern Ireland. In discharge of their Section 75(1) duties the Commission must give 'due regard' to the nine identified equality areas when carrying out their functions. Section 75 (2) of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 states that (2)

- (2) Without prejudice to its obligations under subsection (1), a public authority shall in carrying out its functions relating to Northern Ireland have regard to the desirability of promoting good relations between persons of different religious belief, political opinion or racial group. The Commission should promote equality of opportunity and good relations through the development of policies and through positive action steps taken to reduce the potential impacts of a policy on a particular group. In order to comply with Section 75 the Commission must monitor sensitive personal data in line with monitoring guidance produced by the ECNI. To demonstrate compliance with Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 the Commission are required under Schedule 9 of the aforementioned Act to provide an Equality Scheme to the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland (ECNI). The Equality Scheme is subject to approval by the ECNI. The Equality Scheme is the Commission's suggestions on how they will comply with Section 75 and sets out the actions (including time scales) the Commission shall undertake to take to ensure the promotion of equality of opportunity and good relations. Schedule 9 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 sets out the requirements of an Equality Scheme and I attach the ECNI's draft Equality Scheme Model for your reference. The ECNI have stated that a public authorities Equality Scheme should: assess its compliance with the Section 75 statutory duties assess and consult on the likely impact of policies on the promotion of equality of opportunity monitor any adverse impact of policies on the promotion of equality of opportunity; publish results of such assessments detail training provided to staff ensure and assess public access to information and services provided by the public authority The Equality Scheme should also set out the complaints procedures in respect of the scheme and procedures to assist individual complainants. To competently monitor the likely impact of policies on the promotion of equality of opportunity a two-step equality assessment approach should be adopted by the Commission as below: Screening, through which the Commission undertakes a review of the Policy at the beginning to identity if the policy may have any major equality impact issues, and An Equality Impact Assessment (EQIA), which may be considered prudent if the policy affects a large group of people and is central to the principle of equality of opportunity. The Commission should consider how they could reduce this possible impact, which may include the possibility of an alternative policy. The Commission as part of the EQIA should allow for a twelve week consultation period with individuals who may be effected by the policy. Results of the EQIA should be published. Following the initial Equality Scheme the Commission must undertake a five yearly review and provide a summary to the ECNI. Disability Action Plans As with the obligations set out under Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, the Commission are required under Section 49A of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 as amended by Article 5 of the Disability Discrimination (NI) Order 2006 to promote positive attitude towards disabled individuals and encourage participation in public life. This must be detailed in a Disability Action Plan submitted to the ECNI by the Commission. The Commission should allow a two month consultation period for the purposes of preparing their Disability Action Plan. Failure by the Commission to submit a Disability Action Plan will result in a referral to the Northern Ireland Assembly by the ECNI. Annual Reviews The Commission must submit an annual review of their Section 75 obligations and Equality Scheme and their S49A obligations and Disability Action Plan to the ECNI on the 31st August each year. Monitoring the composition of our workforce under the Fair Employment and Treatment (NI) Order 1998 Under the Fair Employment and Treatment (Northern Ireland) Order 1998 (FETO NI) specified public bodies are required to monitor the composition of their workforce in terms of community background and sex. Whilst this does not apply to the Commission because of the number of staff based in NI, we are committed to ensuring no discrimination on the grounds of religious belief and/or political opinion. Even though we are not required to report, we actively monitor the composition of our NI workforce. Discrimination in the Provision of Goods, Facilities and Services and in the disposal and management of premises. In Northern Ireland, protection is afforded from discrimination in accessing goods, facilities, services and in the disposal and management of premises under the heads of the following legislation: Sex Discrimination (NI) Order 1976 (as amended) – SDO Disability Discrimination Act 1995 (as amended) – DDA Special Educational Needs and Disability (NI) Order 2005 (as amended) - SENDO Race Relations (NI) Order 1997 (as amended) - RRO. Irish Travellers are explicitly covered in the Order which recognises them as a specific racial group Fair Employment and Treatment (NI) Order 1998 (as amended) – FETO Equality Act (Sexual Orientation) Regulations (NI) 2006 (as amended) – Sexual Orientation Regulations The Commission ensures that it follows good practice in the service it provides to its stakeholders and to communities. Annex B: the structure of the Electoral Commission Learn about our Executive Team and Senior Leadership team . Annex C: list of consultees England Age UK AKT Alzheimer's Trust Board of Deputies of British Jews British Board of Scholars and Imams British Council of Churches British Youth Council Business in the Community Business Disability Forum Centre for Ageing Better Chartered Institute of Personnel and Development Disability Rights UK Employers Network for Equality and Social Inclusion Equality and Human Rights Commission Friends, Families, Travellers Gender Information, Research and Education Society Homeless Link Institute for Learning Disabilities Leonard Cheshire LGBT Foundation Mencap MIND Mumsnet National Council of Voluntary Organisations Operation Black Vote Opportunity Now Patchwork Foundation Race Equality Foundation RNIB RNID Runnymede Trust Scope Stonewall Travellers' Movement United Response Womens' Aid Young Womens' Trust Wales Chwarae Teg Cymorth Cymru Disability Wales Diverse Cymru Equality and Human Rights Commission (Wales) Learning Disability Wales Muslim Council of Wales Race Council Cymru Race Equality First RNIB Cymru RNID Cymru Stonewall Cymru Welsh Government Equality Branch Welsh Language Commissioner Welsh Womens' Aid Scotland Age Scotland Article 12 BEMIS CEMVO Deaf Scotland Engender Equality Network Homeless Network Scotland Inclusion Scotland LGBT Youth Scotland RNIB Scotland Scottish Government Equalities Unit Scottish Human Rights Commission Stonewall Scotland Transgender Alliance Young Scotland Youth Parliament Northern Ireland Organisations Action on Hearing Loss ADAPT Northern Ireland Advice NI Age NI Age Sector Platform An Munia Tober Association of Talking Newspapers Autism NI Aware Belfast Butterfly Club Belfast Islamic Centre Belfast Jewish Community Bishop of Down and Connor/Catholic Church British Deaf Association NI Bryson Charitable Group Bryson Intercultural Carers NI Cedar Foundation Children in Northern Ireland (CiNI) Children's Law Centre Chinese Welfare Association Church of Ireland Coalition on Sexual Orientation Commissioner for Older People NI Committee on the Administration of Justice Community Development and Health Network (NI) Community Relations Council Council for the Homeless (NI) Diabetes UK NI Disability Action Disability Sport NI Down's Syndrome Association East Belfast Community Development Agency Employers for Disability NI Equality Commission for Northern Ireland First Division Association Human Rights Consortium Indian Community Centre Inspire Marie Curie Mencap Methodist Church Mindwise Motor Neurone Disease Association National Autistic Society Northern Ireland NI Association for Mental Health NI Commissioner for Children & Young People NI Committee, Irish Congress of Trade Unions NI Council for Voluntary Action NI Womens Aid Federation NI Women's European Platform Northern Ireland Association for Mental Health Northern Ireland Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders (NIACRO) Northern Ireland Chest Heart and Stroke Association Northern Ireland Council for Racial equality Northern Ireland Council for Voluntary Action (NICVA) Northern Ireland Dyslexia Centre Northern Ireland ME Association Northern Ireland Union of

Supported Employment NOW Group Office of the Commissioner for Children & Young People Parenting NI Praxis Care Presbyterian Church Rainbow Project Relate NI RNIB RNIB NI Sense NI Start 360 The National Deaf Children's Society Training for Women Network Womens Support Network Local Government Antrim and Newtownabbey Borough Council Ards and North Down Borough Council Armagh City, Banbridge and Craigavon Borough Council Belfast City Council Causeway Coast and Glens Borough Council Derry City and Strabane District Council Fermanagh and Omagh District Council Lisburn and Castlereagh City Council Mid and East Antrim Borough Council Mid Ulster District Council Newry, Mourne and Down District Council NI Stakeholder Northern Ireland Office EONI NI Departments The Executive Office Department for Economy Department for Infrastructure Department of Agriculture, Environment & Rural Affairs Department for Communities Department of Education Department of Finance Department of Health Department of Justice NI Parties Alliance - Alliance Party of Northern Ireland Animal Welfare Party Aontú Conservative and Unionist Party Cross-Community Labour Alternative Democratic Unionist Party - D.U.P. Drug Law Reform Party Fianna Fáil - The Republican Party Green Party Humanity People Before Profit Alliance Progressive Unionist Party of Northern Ireland SDLP (Social Democratic & Labour Party) Sinn Féin Socialist Party (Northern Ireland) The Workers Party Traditional Unionist Voice – TUV Ulster Unionist Party Annex D: glossary and definitions AA Web Content Guidelines 1.0 These guidelines set out how to make our website accessible to people with disabilities Adverse Impact Where a group of people protected by equality law has been affected differently by a policy and the effect is less favourable, it is known as adverse impact CEO Chief Electoral Officer Commission The Electoral Commission Consultation Our equality consultation involves asking our stakeholders (i.e., service users, staff, the general public) for their views on how best to design policies that promote equality Due regard To properly consider the need to promote equality, taking into account our purpose and the need to spend public money effectively EAA Equality impact assessment An Equality Impact Assessment (EQIA) is a tool to ensure we don't exclude anybody from accessing our services or those that we play a part in delivering. It's also a chance to explore ways to promote equality ERO Electoral Registration Officer Great Britain England, Scotland and Wales HR Human resources IER Individual electoral registration Policy The term policy covers the definition and process of how an organisation carries out its functions, for example in reaching decisions Protected Groups Refers to the characteristics of people legally protected from discrimination PPE Act Political Parties and Elections Act 2009 PPERA Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000 RCO Referendum Counting Officer RO Returning Officer Schedule 9 Schedule 9 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 sets out detailed provisions for the enforcement of the Section 75 statutory duties, including an outline of what should be included in an equality scheme Screening The procedure for identifying which policies will be subject to equality impact assessment, and how these equality impact assessments will be prioritised Definition of the characteristics of people protected from discrimination in the UK Age: Under Chapter 1 of the Equalities Act 2010 this refers to persons defined by age group, whether a particular age or a range of ages. Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act guidance proposes that for most purposes, the main categories are: those under 18; people aged between 18 and 65; and people over 65. However, the definition of age groups will relate to the policy under consideration. Disability: Under Chapter 1 of the Equalities Act 2010 a person has a disability if s/he has a physical or mental impairment which has a substantial and long-term adverse effect on that person's ability to carry out normal day-to-day activities. Gender reassignment: Under Chapter 1 of the Equalities Act this refers to people who are proposing to undergo, are undergoing or have undergone a process or part of a process for the purpose of reassigning their sex by changing physiological or other attributes of sex. A reference to a transsexual person is a person who has the protected characteristic of gender reassignment. Marriage and Civil Partnership: Under the Equality Act 2010 civil partners must be treated the same as married couples on a wide range of legal matters. ‘Status’ can refer to whether a person is single, divorced or separated, married or in a civil partnership. Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act guidance refers to married people; unmarried people; divorced or separate people; and widowed people. Pregnancy and maternity: Pregnancy is the condition of being pregnant. Maternity refers to the period after the birth, and is linked to maternity leave in the employment context. In the non-work context, protection against maternity discrimination is for 26 weeks after birth, and includes treating a woman unfavourably because she is breastfeeding. Race: Race is defined in the Equality Act 2010 as including colour, nationality and ethnic or national origins. Religion: Religion has the meaning usually given to it but belief includes religious and philosophical beliefs including lack of belief (e.g. Atheism). Sex is defined in the Equality Act 2010 as referring to men and women. Sexual Orientation is defined in the Equality Act 2010 as referring to whether a person's sexual attraction is towards their own sex, the opposite sex or to both sexes. People with dependants: Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 guidance defines this group as: people with a primary responsibility for: a child; a person with a disability; a dependent elderly person. Political opinion: Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 guidance defines political opinion as: Unionists generally; Nationalists generally; members/supporters of any political party; other. Language: In compliance with the Welsh Language Act 1993 and the Welsh Language Measure 2011, this consideration refers to a group of people defined by the language they speak. In Wales we have a duty to provide services in Welsh and as set out in the Welsh Language Standards. 1. Diversity of candidates and elected officials, EHRC 2019. ■ Back to content at footnote 1 2. NISRA 2011 Census ■ Back to content at footnote 2 3. 2020 NI Life and Times survey, Political Attitudes module ■ Back to content at footnote 3 4. How Britain voted in the 2019 General Election: Ipsos Mori, December 2020. ■ Back to content at footnote 4 Page history First published: 22 September 2022 Last updated: 14 November 2022 Related content Report: Voting in 2017 Read our report about voting at the general election in 2017 Testing the EU referendum question Find out about our testing of the EU referendum question Report: How the 2017 UK general election was run Read our report about how the 2017 general election was run Results and turnout at the 2017 UK general election View the results and turnout at the 2017 general election

Interests, gifts and hospitality | Electoral Commission Search

Interests, gifts and hospitality You are in the Commissioners section Home

Commissioners On this page John Pullinger CBE Rob Vincent CBE Dame Sue Bruce Alex Attwood Sarah Chambers Lord Stephen Gilbert of Panteg Roseanna Cunningham Dr Katy Radford Professor Dame Elan Closs Stephens CBE Chris Ruane Sal Naseem Independent Adviser to the Board on Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Paul Redfern Independent Adviser to the Audit and Risk Committee First published: 30 May 2019 Last updated: 24 March 2023 What we publish and why We are independent, and impartially is important in everything we do. Our Commissioners tell us their interests, and record all of the gifts and hospitality they receive, including any they refuse. We then publish this information, to show we are independent and impartial. John Pullinger CBE Interests Trustee: Nuffield Foundation (Principal activity is funding research and innovation in education, justice, and welfare). Chair: Nuffield Foundation Finance Committee. Chair: Nuffield Foundation Steering Group on Inequalities in the 21st Century. Chair: Nuffield Foundation Steering Group on Children's Information Project. Member: Nuffield Foundation Investment Committee. Member: Nuffield Foundation Audit and Risk Committee. Director: Great Culverden Park Limited (principal activity is management of an area of woodland). Director: John Pullinger Limited (principal activity is professional advice). Advisor: World Bank Group (principal activity is reducing poverty and building shared prosperity in developing countries). Advisor: Office for National Statistics (Principal activity is UK National Statistical Institute) ended October 2022. Member of External Honours Panel: Royal Statistical Society (principal activity is as a Professional Body). Board member: Global Partnership for Sustainable Development Data (Principal activity is acting as a network supporting the achievement of Sustainable Development Goals), ended June 2022. President: International Association for Official Statistics (principal activity is improving official statistics) ended July 2021. Chair of Oversight Group on Location Data Ethics: Geospatial Commission (principal activity is setting and promoting the UK geospatial strategy) ended June 2022. Member of External Honours Panel: Royal Statistical Society (principal activity is as a Professional body). Governor: National Institute for Economic and Social Research. Visiting Professor: Imperial College, London. Advisor for Parliament of Ukraine: Westminster Foundation for Democracy (Principal activity is strengthening parliamentary democracy around the world). From July 2022 ended September 2022. Chair: High Level Steering Group: Better Lives 2030 Conference Zambia, April 2023 Rob Vincent CBE Interests Chair: Kirklees Cultural Education Trust (Pro bono) Non-Executive Director on both the Whittington Health Trust and the University College London Hospital Trust ended 2021. Non-Executive Director on both Whittington Health Trust and the University College London Hospital Trust ended 2021. Director, New Ing Consulting (mentoring and technical assessment work with Local Government Chief Executives), remunerated. Previous Chief Executive of Kirklees MBC (2004-2010) and Doncaster MBC (2010-2011) Implementation Director for the West Yorkshire Combined Authority (Sept 2013-March 2014), remunerated. Chair of Rotherham Improvement Board (Sept 2014-March 2015), remunerated. Advisor to Tower Hamlets Council on governance and decision making issues (May-Oct 2015), remunerated. NED on the UCL Hospital Trust Board since 2021. Dame Sue Bruce Interests SSE plc – Non-Executive Director (Remunerated) 2017. Electoral Commission RemCo Chair 2018- NomCo member. University of Strathclyde – Convenor of Court, pro bono. RSNO – Chair, pro bono, 2017. National Trust for Scotland: Independent Chair of Nominations Committee, pro bono, retired 2022. Erskine Stewart's Melville Schools – Advisor, pro bono, retired 2021. Royal Company of

Merchants of the City of Edinburgh – Member, pro bono. The Prince's Foundation: Trustee, appointed to Chair in September 2021, unenumerated. Bruce Consultancy Service Ltd Declared in 2017 and declared winding up in 2021. Deputy Lieutenant - The City of Edinburgh. Retired from the National Trust for Scotland as Independent Chair of the Nominations Committee. Appointed by Scottish Ministers as Independent Chair of the Review of Inspection, Regulation and Scrutiny of Social care in Scotland. Elected Treasurer of the Royal Company of Merchants of the City of Edinburgh. Alex Attwood Interests Member Social Democratic and Labour Party (SDLP) Member Advisory Board Safefood (all-Ireland body/food safety promotion including research, scientific co-operation, safety assessment and diet related disease) Member Panel European Mediators (Conciliation Resources/MediatEUR) Membership of an Advisory Group to the Northern Ireland Justice Minister on Tracking Paramilitarism. Practitioner and governance consultant (conflict management and resolution), 2017-present. Consultant to SDLP, January 2020-January 2021. Declaration of financial interest – undertaking research on general policing issues and undertaking research on issues which come before the Northern Ireland Policing Board (NIPB) and its committees in connection with the role of a member of the NIPB. Member of the Electoral Commission for Ireland ("An Coimisiún Toghchain") Sarah Chambers Interests Member of Consumer Engagement Group of UK Power Networks, remunerated, ended 31 January 2022 Vice Chair of Greenhouse Sports, a charity, pro bono. Panel Member Competition & Markets Authority until 30 June 2018, remunerated. Panel Member Judicial Appointments Commission (Remunerated) Chair of Legal Services Consumer Panel 2021, remunerated. Chair Renewable Energy Consumer Code Applications Panel, remunerated. Member of the Determinations Panel of the Pensions Regulator, remunerated. Member of Civil Aviation Authority Consumer Panel until 31 October 2018, remunerated. Reappointed pensions regulator second term 2022. Member of the Consumer Advisory Group of the Association of British Insurers, unremunerated Consumer Expert Panel member for the Office of Rail and Road Lord Stephen Gilbert of Panteg Interests Member, House of Lords, remunerated. Member of the Conservative Party Chair, Digital and Communications Select Committee ceased as of 20 January 2022. Principal, Stephen Gilbert Consulting 30 April 2021, remunerated. Member, Executive Committee, BGIPU. Chair, Audit Committee, BGIPU. Joint pre-legislative Scrutiny Committee on the Draft Online Safety Bill ceased on 11 December 2022. Select Committee on the Fraud Act and Digital Fraud, January 2022 to October 2022 ceased. Member of the following All Party Parliamentary Groups: General Aviation, LGBT + Rights, Hospitality and Events in Wales, Singapore, Taiwan, ITV, Channel 4, BBC. Member of the Industry and Regulators Select Committee of the House of Lords. Roseanna Cunningham Interests Membership of the Scottish National Party. Sibling is a sitting Councillor for Scottish National Party. Dr Katy Radford Interests Commissioner Equality Commission for Northern Ireland, ended June 2022, remunerated. Chair Northern Ireland Committee British Council (Not remunerated) ended July 2022 Employed by Commission for Victims and Survivors Northern Ireland. Member of the Executive Council of the Belfast Jewish Community, unremunerated. Social Partner on the Ards and North Down Borough Council Peace IV Partnership ended. Police Service Northern Ireland External Reference Group member British Council: Member of the Board of Trustees Professor Dame Elan Closs Stephens CBE Interests Non-Executive Board member of BFI Big Screen Ltd. Non-Executive Director and Member for Wales of the BBC Unitary Board (July 2017-July 2020) (Reappointed until July 2023) This appointment includes being Chair of the Wales Nations Committee. Chair of the BBC Commercial Holdings. Member of Northern Ireland Nations Committee. Chair of the Welsh Government's Public Leaders Forum Chair of Nominations Committee for High

Sheriff in Counties of Carmarthen, Ceredigion and Pembroke Unremunerated. Deputy Lieutenant for the three counties of Pembrokeshire, Carmarthenshire, Ceredigion. Trustee Strata Florida Trust, charitable organisation to enhance interest in the Cistercian abbey of Strata Florida. Pro-Chancellor Aberystwyth University, Member of the University Court, and Professor Emerita. Fellow of the Learned Society of Wales. Chris Ruane Interests Chair of the Frazzled Café Mental Health Charity. Vice Chair of Denbighshire Voluntary Services Council. Trustee of Oxford Mindfulness Foundation. Chair of Mindfulness Initiatives International Network. Board Member of Mindfulness Wales. Hon President All Party Parliamentary Group on Mindfulness. Member of the Labour Party. Spouse works part time for a Member of Parliament. Sal Naseem Independent Adviser to the Board on Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Interests Regional Director for London and National Lead on Discrimination Independent Office for Police Conduct. Advisory Board Member: Tell MAMA, voluntary. National Chair of Ethnic Minorities into Leadership Conference: FDA, voluntary. Member of Spectrum Speakers. Paul Redfern Independent Adviser to the Audit and Risk Committee Interests Together Housing – Risk & Audit Committee Member Member of the Advisory panel for the Independent Review of Inspection, Scrutiny and Regulation into social care for the Scottish Government. Related content Fees, travel and subsistence Look at the record of our Commissioners' fees, travel and subsistence Our Commissioners Selecting our Commissioners Find out about the selection process for our Commissioners Electoral Commission Board Find out about our Electoral Commission board, and read the minutes of past meetings

Performance analysis 2021/22: Goal two | Electoral Commission Search

Performance analysis 2021/22: Goal two You are in the Annual Report and Accounts 2021/22 section Home Our plans and priorities Annual Report and Accounts 2021/22 On this page Key achievements Performance measures Our activities during the year First published: 1 August 2022 Last updated: 1 August 2022 Goal two To ensure an increasingly trusted and transparent system of regulation in political finance, overseeing compliance, promoting understanding amongst those regulated and proactively pursuing breaches. This goal captures our regulatory role. We focus on two areas that are at the heart of a healthy democracy: ensuring transparency of political finances, and effective regulation. These areas are essential to ensuring voters have confidence in our elections. Our focus, as ever, has therefore been on our stakeholders, in every aspect of our regulatory work. Key achievements To ensure transparency, we: published financial reports from parties and campaigners worked with parties to deliver financial reports, and adapted our pattern of routine publications as a consequence of challenges parties faced with delivering reports as a result of the pandemic registered political parties and other campaigners and published details in online registers continued work on our new Political Finance Online system, including with the successful move to in-house development To support good regulation we: completed our largest ever survey of campaigners to understand their needs from our tools to support compliance with the law. continued to evolve our regulatory approach to deliver a greater package of support for parties and campaigners revised many of the guidance documents on the political finance laws on our website to move them to a new web format, progressing towards our aim of moving all guidance to this format over the coming years found flexible and new ways to continue our focus on supporting parties and campaigners during the pandemic built up our regulatory intelligence work to drive proactive interactions with individual campaigners took action and imposed sanctions when the political finance law was broken updated and enhanced our enforcement processes, drawing on best practice and learning from past cases. This will reinforce effective, timely and impartial investigations. Performance measures Measures Performance 100% of statements of accounts published within 60 working days of statutory deadline 100% of donation and loan reports received by statutory deadline published within 30 working days 100% Achieved 100% of donation and loan reports received by statutory deadline published within 30 working days 100% Achieved 25% of regulated and quarterly party donation and loan returns checked for permissibility 38.34% Achieved Number of effective regulatory guidance products/resources that we deliver to help the regulated community comply with the rules 118 90% of responses to requests for financial reporting regulatory advice issued within targets based on their complexity (Routine advice: 5 working days, medium complexity advice: 10 working days, formal advisory opinions and other advice on novel and complex matters: 20 working days) 92.79% Achieved 90% of applicants are notified of the outcome of their registration application within targets based on their complexity (simple applications: 35 working days, complex applications: 45 working days, non-party campaigners: 5 working days) 93.91% Achieved 90% of investigations are conducted within targets based on their complexity (simple cases: 90 calendar days, complex cases: 180 calendar days, highly complex cases: individual targets set on a case by case basis) 69.05% 1 Not achieved 90% of final notices issued within 21 calendar days of the deadline for representations passing, or 21 days of the date representations received if accepted after the deadline, whichever is later 88.89% 2 Not achieved Our activities during the year Ensuring transparency We maintained the registers of political parties, assessing applications from new entrants to ensure only parties meeting the legal tests are on the register. We also processed changes to the details of existing ones as quickly as possible. Both activities enabled those parties to stand candidates in elections, and ensured the online registers of parties were up to date. We continued to publish political finance data as quickly as possible after it was delivered to us from parties and campaigners. Publishing this data means that voters have the information they need to understand how those seeking their vote are funded and how they spend their money. In the largest standalone publication of the year, in August we published 721 statements of accounts from parties and accounting units. While the pandemic continued to impact on parties and campaigners, we were largely able to publish donations and loans data, and statements of accounts as usual. We also published data on candidate pending in the 2021 Scottish Parliamentary and Senedd elections. Supporting good regulation We engaged with parties and campaigners to explore new and innovative ways to support compliance with the political finance regime. We sent more than 1,000 communications to parties, campaigners, regulated donors, members associations and unincorporated associations asking them to complete a survey to help us understand their needs. We received 347 responses, giving us detailed insight that is changing the way we support compliance. We continued development of the improved and updated version of Political Finance Online, which will make it easier for parties and campaigners to deliver the information to us that they are required to. We revised many of the guidance pages on our website, with more to follow, from documents to web text, working towards guidance that is more interactive and connected. As a result, we improved the search function so our guidance can be found more easily. We also published a specific suite of guidance for the May 2022 elections ahead of schedule. Our work to support parties and campaigners comply with electoral law, a lower number of regulated elections, and our continued supportive approach to non-compliance arising from COVID-related issues were all factors in a reduction in enforcement casework during the year. But because voters and campaigners need to know that we will take action where the rules are not followed, we have used our enforcement and sanctioning powers to identify and respond to non-compliance and deter future non-compliance where appropriate. We imposed financial penalties totalling £42,370 throughout 2021/22 and accepted the voluntary forfeiture of impermissible funds totalling £15,700 removing these from the political finance system. We adopted a proactive approach to gathering intelligence and making interventions during the campaign the Scottish Parliamentary and Senedd elections to prevent or reduce non-compliance. We also closely monitored compliance, as well as the ways in which parties and campaigners complied with, the new digital imprints regime that was in force for the Scottish Parliamentary election. This will help to inform future guidance and regulatory approaches.

Navigation Previous Next
Performance analysis 2021/22: Goal one Performance analysis 2021/22: Goal three 1. We seek to conclude investigations as quickly as possible, but our first priority is always to conduct a fair and thorough investigation. There was no consistent issue leading to missed deadlines, in some complex cases there were multiple issues and offences to consider, in others lengthy communications with subjects, and COVID impacted generally on subject's resources, and at times on our resources. ■ Back to content at footnote 1 2. One final notice was issued outside of the target timeframes. The final notice was due to be issued at a time where there were competing deadlines with a high priority complex investigation that took priority. ■ Back to content at footnote 2

4. Supporting and securing campaigner compliance with the law | Electoral Commission Search

4. Supporting and securing campaigner compliance with the law You are in the Corporate plan 2022/23 to 2026/27 section Home Our plans and priorities Corporate plan 2022/23 to 2026/27 On this page Ensuring campaigners can access support to understand the law in the way and at the time that works best for them Focus on Wales Ensuring political finance laws are enforced fairly, working with law enforcement and other regulators Publishing complete and accurate political finance data Focus on Northern Ireland Providing insights to campaigners and parliaments on how campaigning methods directly affect voter confidence in elections First published: 25 April 2022 Last updated: 25 April 2022 Summary s being able to get their messages to voters is a fundamental part of the democratic process. s, including parties, must be able to communicate with voters to explain their views and policies, so that voters are informed when they vote. And it's important that voters hear from a wide and diverse variety of campaigners. So campaigners must be able to campaign without facing undue actual or perceived barriers, while we continue to ensure political finance is transparent. We will improve the transparency of political campaigning, and help parties and campaigners to comply with the law, by: ensuring campaigners can access support to understand the law in the way and at the time that works best for them ensuring political finance laws are enforced fairly, working with law enforcement and other regulators publishing complete and accurate political finance data providing insights to campaigners and parliaments on how campaigning methods directly affect voter confidence in elections Ensuring campaigners can access support to understand the law in the way and at the time that works best for them Electoral law is complicated, but understanding and applying it should not be a barrier to those who want to campaign. We will work to ensure that campaigners can get on with campaigning, and examine barriers – both real and perceived – which prevent people who want to campaign from doing so. We will use these insights to ensure our guidance and other support tools work well for all campaigners no matter their financial size or experience. We will also complete and consolidate the strategic shift in the way we approach regulation outlined in our last Interim Corporate Plan, putting greater emphasis on tools to promote compliance. We will launch our new Political Finance Online database, continue to develop our proactive support for campaigners, transition to an intelligence-led approach to monitoring, and embed an effective regulatory insights and horizon-scanning process. We will also work with our partners to provide cybersecurity advice to parties and campaigners. Focus on Wales Focus on Wales: Supporting compliance with the law We will work closely with the Welsh Government to update the statutory Codes of Practice on election spending prior to the 2026 Senedd election, if necessary. We will ensure they reflect any changes to the law that are made. We will also support the Welsh Government with considering other future changes to the law, such as the potential introduction of digital imprints. We will also continue to work with Senedd officials as they draft the new reporting rules and processes to enable the rules to be adopted and dual reporting brought to an end. The Standards and Business Committees in the Fifth Senedd agreed that dual reporting will be brought to an end in Wales and that elected members will only be required to report to the Senedd. Ensuring political finance laws are enforced fairly, working with law enforcement and other regulators Parties, other campaigners and voters want confidence that political finance laws are enforced proportionately, consistently, and impartially. We will continue to conduct investigations, and be transparent about the outcomes of all our work. We will ensure the way we respond to electoral fraud is as effective as it can be, and will provide support and advice to regulators and law enforcement. Publishing complete and accurate political finance data Compliance with the political finance reporting laws is already high. We will work to make compliance even higher, by introducing compliance tools that work for a range of campaigners, and through proportionate and impartial enforcement of the law. In Section 3, we noted our plans to make political finance data more accessible for voters. Our new Political Finance Online database will also be an important tool for campaigners, making reporting easier and faster. We will work to ensure consistent timely publication of financial data from parties, candidates and campaigners. Focus on Northern Ireland Focus on Northern Ireland: Publishing information on donations and loans Since July 2017, we have been able to publish information on donations and loans reported to us by parties in Northern Ireland. We know there is strong public support for transparent, unbiased information about how parties in Northern Ireland are funded, but we also know there is limited awareness of and knowledge about how the system of funding and regulation currently works. This means that negative perceptions can be based largely on assumptions and can damage confidence in the electoral system. We will work to ensure wider public understanding in Northern Ireland of the transparency of political finances.

Providing insights to campaigners and parliaments on how campaigning methods directly affect voter confidence in elections In Section 3, we noted our plans to help voters understand the rules on campaigning, with the aim of increasing confidence in elections. Another way we aim to increase voter confidence is by providing evidence-based insights to campaigners and parliaments to ensure they better understand the impact that different campaigning methods have on the way voters perceive elections and their results. We will also provide support and advice on new and developing campaigning methods. Navigation 3. Putting voters first Section 3 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan 5. Supporting local electoral services delivery and resilience Section 5 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan

Register of Equality Impact Assessment screenings | Electoral Commission Search Register of Equality Impact Assessment screenings You are in the Our plans and priorities section Home Our plans and priorities On this page Register of Equality Impact Assessment screenings Request a copy of a screening First published: 8 September 2023 Last updated: 8 September 2023 Summary We carry out Equality Impact Assessment screenings to assess the impact of new or revised policies or projects to decide whether a full Equality Impact Assessment is required. This process helps ensure that decisions are taken in a way which promotes equality of opportunity. We will update the register with any new assessment screenings every quarter (in April, July, September and January). Register of Equality Impact Assessment screenings Title of screening Policy Date Assistance with voting for disabled people at the polling station: Guidance for ROs Guidance for ROs as required under the Elections Act 2022 Originally signed off December 2022; updated to reflect monitoring August 2023 Introduction of in polling stations for UK Government elections Requirement for photographic ID to be shown in polling stations as required under the Elections Act 2022 December 2022 Performance management review Refreshing and updating our performance management scheme March 2023 Apprenticeships Policy on offering apprenticeships internally and externally June 2023 Mobile phone rollout Implementation of mobile phone rollout to all staff who want one August 2023 Request a copy of a screening Request a copy of an equality impact assessment Name Email address Email address Confirm email Title of the screening or screenings you would like a copy of Would you like to receive the screening by email or by post? By email By post Postal address Would you like to receive the screening in or Welsh? Welsh Leave this field blank

2023 report: Electoral registers in the UK | Electoral Commission Search
2023 report: Electoral registers in the UK You are in the Accuracy and completeness of electoral registers section Home Our research Accuracy and completeness of electoral registers Currently reading: of 6 - Show page contents On this page Headline findings Trends in the quality of the registers Completeness Accuracy Looking ahead: addressing the challenges of accuracy and completeness Case studies show how registration could be modernised Summary We run accuracy and completeness studies to measure the quality of the electoral registers, and assess how this changes in response to legislative developments and administrative and population changes. The results of this study on the December 2022 registers finds that levels of completeness are broadly stable across the UK with the notable exceptions of Northern Ireland which has seen a significant increase in registration levels since 2018 and, to a lesser extent, Wales where we also see a positive change. The accuracy of the registers is also stable, again with the exception of Northern Ireland where there has been an improvement. The changes in Northern Ireland bring levels of accuracy and completeness broadly into line with England, Scotland and Wales; both are at the highest levels we have recorded through these research studies. These improvements are the direct result of the recent 2021 canvass in Northern Ireland, something we also saw following the previous canvass in 2013. However, in our earlier studies we have seen declines between canvasses when the continuous registration system is operating. In Great Britain, both accuracy and completeness are largely stable. The annual canvass process was reformed in 2019 by the UK, Scottish and Welsh governments with the aim of reducing the burden on Electoral Registration Officers (EROs) while maintaining levels of accuracy and completeness. There is no evidence of any significant negative impact on either measure as a result of canvass reform but there has also been no significant improvement. summary Across the UK, potentially as many as 8 million people are not correctly registered at their current address (the research estimated a range of around 7-8 million people not correctly registered on the local government registers in December 2022). This matters because, while people can register ahead of each set of elections, it increases the chances that people will think they are registered when they are not and therefore be unable to vote come election day. Also, the more updates that are required to the registers in the short period before a poll, the more pressure is placed on the delivery of the service for voters. The Commission plays an important part in addressing under-registration through our continuing public awareness campaigning work, which we update regularly to ensure we are in-line with the latest insights about both voter attitudes and the demographic patterns of under-registered groups. However, there is little evidence to suggest that levels of accuracy and completeness are likely to significantly improve without major changes to the current electoral registration system. change Change is realistic and achievable We have highlighted since 2019 how the UK's governments could support EROs to improve the accuracy and completeness of electoral registers – and improve efficiency to alleviate resource burdens, by introducing modern registration approaches to supplement the current annual canvass and year-round online registration. These would involve utilising data from the many millions of transactions that voters already have with major public sector organisations. Depending on the quality and coverage of the data sets, and the specific data fields that are available, changes could support different levels and forms of modernisation, ranging from automatic registration to forms of integrated or assisted registration where voters would need to provide some information directly themselves.

We have set out a range of options for how specific data sources could be used to improve the accuracy and completeness of electoral registers, and in particular how registration rates of attainers and other young people, private renters and other recent home-movers could be improved. Further exploratory work would be needed to confirm the detailed feasibility and delivery implications of these options. The electoral community needs a clear plan to ensure that electoral registration processes are modernised so that people are registered and able to exercise their right to vote. As part of this plan we recommend that the UK's governments should pass legislation to create clear legal gateways for government departments and public sector bodies to share data on potentially eligible individuals with EROs. They should also require relevant departments and other public bodies to work with EROs to facilitate electoral registration using their data. We also recommend that the UK Government should develop the existing Individual Electoral Registration digital service so that it can support secure and efficient data sharing between data source organisations and EROs, to enable modern registration processes to be delivered.

Headline findings The results of our most recent study across the UK show the following results for the local government registers.

Location	2022 Change from 2018	Completeness Great Britain	Accuracy England
Scotland	81%	+3	-1
Wales	87%	+6	+2
Northern Ireland	83%	+10	0
England	88%	-1	+6 definition

Defining accuracy and completeness Our approach to assessing the quality of the electoral registers is based on two measures: accuracy and completeness. By accuracy we mean that ‘there are no false entries on the electoral registers’. The accuracy of the electoral registers is therefore a measure of the percentage of entries on the registers which relate to verified and eligible voters who are resident at that address. Inaccurate register entries may relate to entries which have become redundant (for example, due to home movement), which are ineligible and have been included unintentionally, or which are fraudulent. By completeness we mean that ‘every person who is entitled to have an entry in an electoral register is registered’. The completeness of the electoral registers therefore refers to the percentage of eligible people who are registered at their current address. The proportion of eligible people who are not included on the register at their current address constitutes the rate of non-registration continue The table above shows the percentage point change in completeness and accuracy compared to our last study in 2018. However, as these are survey results and subject to margins of error, not all of these changes are likely to be statistically significant. Overall across Great Britain, the completeness of the local government registers has increased slightly, while accuracy has stayed the same. The increase in completeness in Wales is likely to be a real improvement since 2018 while the apparent decline in Scotland is within the margin of error and should be treated as no change. In Northern Ireland, there has been a notable improvement in both the accuracy and completeness of the registers. Figures for the parliamentary registers are not shown but closely mirror the findings for the local government registers. Underneath these headline figures, the completeness and accuracy of the registers is expected to vary considerably across local authority areas due to the demographics of the local population as well as registration practices. Detailed results by part of the UK are available in factsheets: England Scotland Wales Northern Ireland The completeness of the registers varies for different socio-demographic groups. These patterns are largely consistent with the findings of our previous studies. Across the UK, age and duration at address were the variables most strongly associated with differences in completeness. Older people and those who have lived at their address longer are more likely to be correctly registered. Variations in accuracy are more difficult to analyse because characteristics can only be collected for current residents. However, as in previous studies, we see that households where the existing residents have lived there for less time are more likely to have inaccurate register entries linked to them. You can also explore the data by headline demographics using our interactive tool.

Quantifying Completeness and Accuracy Quantifying Completeness and Accuracy Using the percentage figures produced from this research, it is possible to estimate the number of people in the population who are not correctly registered, or who have inaccuracies in their register entries. Location Not correctly registered Inaccurate register entries United Kingdom 7,000,000 - 8,000,000 5,300,000 - 6,200,000 Great Britain 6,700,000 - 7,800,000 5,100,000 - 6,000,000 England 5,600,000 - 6,600,000

4,300,000 - 5,200,000 Scotland 650,000 - 1,000,000 390,000 - 640,000 Wales 275,000 -

400,000 200,000 - 300,000 Northern Ireland 230,000 - 280,000 170,000 - 210,000 These can only be estimates for the following reasons: Both the completeness and accuracy estimates are subject to confidence intervals (for example, +/- 1.1% for completeness in Great Britain and 1.9% in Northern Ireland; +/- 1% for accuracy in Great Britain and 1.5% for Northern Ireland). These margins will also apply to any quantification of the estimates. The overall population figures on which these are based, sourced from the Office for National Statistics, are mid-year estimates derived from the 2021 census. While these provide a reasonably accurate estimate of the UK population, they do not include nationality figures. As eligibility to vote differs by election and is determined by age and nationality, this means that it is not possible to definitively determine the size of the population which is eligible to vote. Trends in the quality of the registers The Commission has measured the completeness and accuracy of the registers in England and Wales since 2001, and before that studies were carried out by other organisations following each census. In Great Britain, the completeness of the registers was at its highest (around 95%) in the 1950s and 1960s and started declining in the 1980s. It decreased up to 2011 (82%) but has stabilised since, with successive studies findings levels between 83-86%. In Northern Ireland, the completeness is now at its highest level since the Commission began measuring it in 2012. Accuracy has not been consistently measured over as long a period as completeness. In Great Britain levels have remained relatively stable over the last decade. In Northern Ireland the picture is more volatile, reflecting similar changes in completeness. Completeness summary The completeness of the registers varies for different socio-demographic groups. These patterns are largely consistent with the findings of our previous studies. Where reliable data is available for each part of the UK it is shown. In some cases the size of samples means it is not possible to show a demographic breakdown for each of England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. In that case the most detailed breakdown available is included. Location

2011 2012 2014 2015 2018 2022 Change from 2022 Great Britain 82% - 85% 84% 83% 86% +3

England - - - 84% 83% 86% +3 Scotland - - - 85% 83% 81% -2 Wales - - - 84% 81% 87% +6

Northern Ireland - 71% - 79% 73% 83% +10 Additional analysis was carried out, for Great Britain as a whole and separately for Northern Ireland, to identify the demographic characteristics which are associated with higher or lower levels of completeness and accuracy (once other factors are controlled for), as well as the strength and statistical significance of these relationships. In Great Britain, age and duration at address were the variables most strongly associated with differences in completeness. Tenure, ethnic group, social grade and the number of adults in the household were also significant factors, and there were also significant differences between urban and rural areas and between the regions of England which remain even after controlling for demographic factors. In Northern Ireland, age and duration at address were also the main drivers of completeness. Although levels of completeness have similar socio-demographic patterns compared to Great Britain, when other factors are controlled for, no other demographics, beyond age and length of residence, were found to have a significant relationship with completeness. Population mobility

Previous research into the registers, which are property-based databases, has found a connection between home movement and completeness: greater mobility is associated with lower levels of completeness, while the longer an individual has been resident at their property, the more likely they are to appear on the electoral registers.

This pattern continues in this latest research, with completeness lowest among those who have lived at their address for less than a year and increasing by length of residence. Since 2018 in Northern Ireland, completeness has increased most significantly for those who have lived at their address for less than five years.

This is likely to be a direct result of the 2021 canvass. Length of residence

Completeness of the local government register by length of residence Location Great Britain England Scotland Wales Northern Ireland Year 2018 2022 2018 2022 2018 2022

Length of residence	Great Britain	England	Scotland	Wales	Northern Ireland	Year 2018	2022	2018	2022	2018	2022
Up to 1 year	36%	39%	36%	40%	32%	33%	45%	53%	11%	20%	More than 1, up to 2 years
71%	72%	70%	73%	65%	63%	29%	44%	More than 2, up to 5 years	84%	82%	83%
82%	84%	81%	83%	61%	76%	More than 5, up to 10 years	90%	91%	90%	92%	91%
86%	78%	82%	83%	61%	76%	More than 10, up to 16 years	88%	92%	88%	92%	95%
Over 16 years	92%	95%	92%	95%	94%	92%	91%	95%	90%	90%	92%

Demographic characteristics

Completeness also varies by demographic factors. Age Levels of completeness continue to increase with age. As in 2018, completeness is highest for those aged 65+. It also remains lowest for attainers aged 16-17. In Great Britain completeness for this group has dropped further from 45% in 2015, to 25% in 2018, to 16% in 2022. In Northern Ireland the level for attainer registration has increased, albeit from virtually zero in 2018 and to a lower level than in Great Britain. Otherwise the pattern of completeness by age group has not changed dramatically since 2018. Location Great

Britain England Scotland Wales Northern Ireland Year 2018 2022 2018 2022 2018 2022

Age Group	Great Britain	England	Scotland	Wales	Northern Ireland	Year 2018	2022	2018	2022	2018	2022
16 - 17	25%	16%	- - - - -	0%	12%	18 - 19	66%	60%	72%	70%	68%
18 - 24	68%	66%	79%	31%	45%	20 - 24	68%	67%	61%	76%	25 - 34
25 - 34	74%	72%	84%	31%	45%	35 - 44	74%	74%	50%	69%	35 - 44
35 - 44	83%	84%	78%	76%	78%	45 - 54	83%	82%	70%	83%	45 - 54
55 - 64	87%	85%	90%	94%	90%	55 - 64	90%	90%	91%	91%	91%
65+	94%	90%	94%	95%	93%	93%	91%	85%	90%	65+	94%
Bases (unweighted):	Great Britain 2018 8,152	Great Britain 2022 9,434	Northern	Ireland 2018 1,445	Northern Ireland 2022 1,946	Gender	In 2018, for Great Britain and	Northern Ireland there was little or no difference in the likelihood that men and	women would be correctly registered. In 2022, however, women were marginally more	likely to be correctly registered than men. The differences in Scotland and Wales are	not statistically significant. Location Great Britain England Scotland Wales Northern Ireland Year 2018 2022 2018 2022 2018 2022 2018 2022 Male 83% 85% 82% 85%

Gender	Great Britain	England	Scotland	Wales	Northern Ireland	Year 2018	2022	2018	2022	2018	2022
Male	83%	85%	82%	85%	82%	85%	82%	80%	86%	72%	81%
Female	83%	87%	83%	87%	82%	81%	82%	87%	87%	73%	84%

Base (unweighted): Great Britain 2022 9,490, Northern Ireland 2022 1,947, Great Britain

2018 8,215, Northern Ireland 2018 1,447 Nationality Findings corroborate previous research which show that registration rates are lower among eligible non-UK nationals than among UK or Irish nationals. UK and Irish citizens continue to be the most likely to have complete electoral register entries. However, in Great Britain, EU citizens have seen an increase in their registration levels and are slightly more likely to be registered than Commonwealth citizens. Small base sizes do not allow for separate analyses of EU and Commonwealth citizens in Scotland, Wales or Northern Ireland. Location Great Britain England Scotland Wales Northern Ireland Year 2018

2022 2018 2022 2018 2022 2018 2022 2018 2022 UK/Irish 86% 87% 85% 88% 85% 84% 82% 88%
74% 84% Non-UK/Irish 55% 68% 55% 68% 58% 44% 58% 70% 45% 41% European Union 54% 70%
54% 71% - - - 42% - Commonwealth 62% 66% 62% 67% - - - 80% - Bases (unweighted):
Great Britain 2018 8,186, Great Britain 2022 10,045, Northern Ireland 2018 1,437, Northern Ireland 2022 2,018 Ethnicity As in previous studies, completeness in Great Britain is highest among those from a white ethnic background. Small base sizes mean we cannot analyse variation in levels of completeness for different ethnic groups in Northern Ireland. Since 2018, completeness rates have increased for every group except those from Black ethnic backgrounds where it has fallen from 75% to 72%.
Location Great Britain Year 2018 2022 White 84% 87% Asian 76% 80% Black 75% 72% Mixed 69% 72% Other 62% 71% Base (unweighted): 2022 9,404, 2018 8,157 Disability As in previous years, completeness is higher among those with a disability than among those without. Of those with a disability, completeness was highest among those with a physical condition and lowest among those with a mental disability. Location Great Britain Northern Ireland Year 2018 2022 2018 2022 Mental disability 83% 84% 71% 79%
Physical disability 92% 92% 83% 88% Other type of disability 93% 89% - 84% No disability 82% 85% 72% 82% Bases (unweighted): Great Britain 2018 8,091, Great Britain 2022 9,447, Northern Ireland 2018 1,444, Northern Ireland 2022 1,935 Socio-economic conditions Beyond demographics, there are also differences in completeness across key social and economic factors. Socio-economic group Levels of completeness are affected by socio-economic status. With the exception of Scotland, completeness is highest among those in AB households, followed by those in C1 and C2 households.
Completeness is lowest among those in DE households. The unusually high level of completeness in Scotland for C2 households is an outlier and may be a distortion caused by a relatively small base size. Location Great Britain England Scotland Wales Northern Ireland Year 2018 2022 2018 2022 2018 2022 2018 2022 2018 2022 AB 86% 89%
86% 89% 88% 86% 87% 87% 80% 88% C1 85% 86% 84% 87% 85% 76% 82% 86% 72% 82% C2 80% 8
80% 85% 80% 88% 82% 89% 76% 83% DE 80% 81% 79% 81% 78% 78% 76% 85% 63% 78% Base
(unweighted): Great Britain 2022 9,472, Great Britain 2018 8,782, Northern Ireland 2022 1,942, Northern Ireland 2018 1,718 Tenure In previous years, tenure has been strongly associated with levels of completeness and this relationship continues in 2022. Outright homeowners are more likely to be registered than people in other types of tenure. Private renters again had the lowest level of completeness. Location Great Britain England Scotland Wales Northern Ireland Year 2018 2022 2018 2022 2018 2022 2018 2022 2018 2022 Owner Occupier 91% 95% 91% 95% 95% 91% 91% 94% 88% 91% Buying on mortgage/shared ownership 86% 88% 86% 88% 87% 84% 78% 84% 72% 82% Private renter 58%
65% 59% 66% 49% 45% 60% 73% 38% 46% Local authority renter 83% 79% 83% 79% 87% 84%
86% 73% 64% 78% Housing Association renter 82% 79% 84% 80% 73% 72% 76% 82% Bases
(unweighted): Great Britain 2018 8,790, Great Britain 2022 9,259, Northern Ireland 2018 1,718, Northern Ireland 2022 1,930 Number of adults in the household Levels of completeness are lower for larger households. In Great Britain overall levels of completeness for one or two person households are notably higher than three to five person households. The pattern is flatter in Northern Ireland with limited differences although the base size for households with six or more residents is very small. Location Great Britain England Scotland Wales Northern Ireland Year 2018 2022 2018 2022 2018 2022 2018 2022 One 86% 88% 86% 86% 79% 79% 82% 90% 72% 80%
Two 84% 88% 84% 89% 84% 83% 83% 87% 73% 83% Three to five 81% 82% 81% 82% 85% 80% 77%
85% 72% 83% Six or more 78% 79% 79% 80% 96% 81% Base (unweighted): Great Britain 2022
9,495, Great Britain 2018 8,791, Northern Ireland 2022 1,948, Northern Ireland 2018

1,718 Geography Key differences by geographic categories are shown below. regions There continues to be some variation in levels of completeness among the regions in England. However, the confidence intervals on the results mean that most differences are not statistically significant. The East Midlands does record significantly higher completeness levels compared to London. Location Great Britain Year 2018 2022 Eastern 79% 86% East Midlands 83% 91% London 81% 82% North East 83% 88% North West 85% 84% South East 84% 88% South West 84% 86% West Midlands 86% 87% Yorkshire and Humber 87% 86% Urban/rural In both Great Britain as a whole and in Northern Ireland, completeness remains slightly higher in rural areas as compared with urban areas.

There is little or no difference between the categories in Scotland and Wales.

Location Great Britain England Scotland Wales Northern Ireland Year 2018 2022 2018 2022 2018 2022 2018 2022 Urban 83% 85% 83% 86% 84% 88% 81% 87% 70% 81% Rural 85% 89% 84% 90% 91% 88% 81% 86% 76% 85% Bases (unweighted): Great Britain

9,474, Northern Ireland 1,943 Local authority type In England, among different types of local authority area, the most notable change in completeness has been among London boroughs with an increase from 76% in 2018 to 82% in 2022. Location Great Britain Great Britain Year 2018 2022 District 84% 89% London Borough 76% 82%

Metropolitan Borough 86% 85% Unitary authority 83% 84% Scottish unitary 83% 81% Welsh unitary 81% 87% Northern Ireland 73% 83% Bases (unweighted): Great Britain, 9,495,

Northern Ireland 1,943 Attitudinal and behavioural characteristics Registering to vote requires action by voters and people's attitudes to both registering and voting therefore also have a bearing on levels of completeness. Attitudes towards registration Completeness is lowest among people who believe that 'it is not really worth registering' and is highest among those who think it is 'everyone's duty to register to vote'. Location Great Britain Northern Ireland Year 2018 2022 2018 2022

It is not really worth registering 72% 74% 54% 69% It is only worth registering to get a better credit reference 68% 80% 52% 82% People should only register to vote if they care who wins an election 79% 83% 68% 72% It is everyone's duty to register to vote 85% 91% 77% 87% Base (unweighted): Great Britain 2022, 4,692, 2018 4,679; Northern Ireland 2022 935, 2018 945 Attitudes towards voting Location Great Britain Northern Ireland Year 2018 2022 2018 2022 It is not really worth voting 78% 77% 62%

74% People should only vote if they care who wins an election 79% 84% 64% 77% It is everyone's duty to vote 84% 91% 77% 86% Base (unweighted): Great Britain 2022 4,664, 2018 4,679; Northern Ireland 2022 919, 2018 945 Political affiliation (Northern Ireland) Additional questions were asked in Northern Ireland to explore how completeness here might vary according to citizens' political affiliation.

Completeness is higher among than those who identify as Nationalist or Unionist than it is among those who do not hold any of the listed political identities (Unionist, Loyalist, Republican, Nationalist). Location Northern Ireland Year 2018 2022

Nationalist 76% 89% Unionist 80% 92% Neither 65% 76% Base (unweighted): 2022 899,

2018 945 Accuracy summary Accuracy has remained stable since 2018 in England, Scotland and Wales but has seen a notable increase in Northern Ireland, bringing it into line with the figures for Great Britain. Households were the current residents have lived at the address for less time, and those renting from a private landlord, continue to be more likely to have inaccurate register entries linked to them. Year

2011 2012 2014 2015 2018 2022 Change from 2022 Great Britain 82% - 85% 84% 83% 86% +3

England - - - 84% 83% 86% +3 Scotland - - - 85% 83% 81% -2 Wales - - - 84% 81% 87% +6

Northern Ireland - 71% - 79% 73% 83% +10 Types of inaccurate entries In analysing the accuracy of the electoral registers, a number of different types of error can be identified. These errors are then categorised as either a 'major' or 'minor' error: A minor error would not prevent someone from casting their vote (e.g. a misspelt name). A major error is any of the following: A. Entries which refer to individuals who no longer live at the given address B. Entries which may prevent an individual casting their vote at a polling station (e.g. an incorrect name) C. Errors that would enable an ineligible person to vote (e.g. an incorrect date of birth for someone under the age of 18) A breakdown of the types of errors used to calculate the accuracy of the registers can be found in the table below.

	Location	Great Britain	England	Scotland
Wales	2018	2022	2018	2022	2018	2022	2018	2022	Major errors total	11.2%	11.7%	8.7%	11.7%	10.9%	12.1%	8.8%	10.8%	20.1%	14.1%
(A) - No corresponding name taken at address									Major errors (A)	10.4%	9.8%	7.7%	9.8%	10.0%	9.7%	8.2%	9.3%	18.7%	13.0%	Major errors (B)	0.7%	1.1%	0.6%	1.2%	0.5%	0.8%	0.2%	0.6%	0.7%	0.7%
First name and/or surname wrong on register									First name and/or surname wrong on register	0.4%	0.7%	0.3%	0.7%	0.2%	0.5%	0.2%	0.3%	0.5%	0.5%	First name and/or surname missing on register	0.0%	0.0%	0.0%	0.0%	0.0%	0.0%	0.0%	0.0%	0.0%	0.0%
0.0%	0.0%	0.0%	0.0%	0.0%	0.0%	0.0%	0.0%	0.0%	UK/Irish/ Commonwealth marker present	0.3%	0.5%	0.3%	0.5%	0.3%	0.4%	0.0%	0.3%	0.4%	0.0%	0.3%	0.2%	0.2%	0.2%	0.2%	0.2%	0.2%	0.2%	0.2%	0.2%	0.2%
Major errors (C)									Major errors (C)	0.5%	0.7%	0.4%	0.7%	0.4%	1.6%	0.4%	0.9%	0.6%	0.2%	Name on register corresponds to ineligible name on survey	0.2%	0.3%	0.1%	0.3%	0.1%	0.0%	0.2%	0.0%	0.5%	0.2%	Attainers - DOB missing or wrong	0.1%	0.2%	0.1%	0.1%	0.2%	1.6%	0.0%	0.8%	0.0%	0.0%	EU/Qualifying foreign citizens marker missing	0.2%	0.2%	0.2%	0.2%	0.2%	0.2%	0.2%	0.2%	0.2%	0.2%	Accurate with minor errors	9.1%	8.8%	7.9%	8.9%	9.6%	14.3%	7.9%	9.0%	5.6%	7.6%	Bases (unweighted): Great Britain	2018	9,155,	Great Britain	2022	9,478,	Northern Ireland	2018	1,783,	Northern Ireland	2022
1,975 Demographic characteristics									Examining demographic variation of inaccuracies on the electoral registers is challenging. This is because we cannot record demographic details for an individual who is registered but no longer lives at the address. The analysis below takes into account household data where a resident was interviewed. However, this data still only presents a limited picture and so must be treated with caution. Tenure Accuracy by tenure follows a similar pattern to completeness. In Great Britain owner-occupier households are the most likely to have accurate register entries (96%). In Northern Ireland, 89% of those who own their home outright have accurate register entries, as do 90% of those who have a mortgage or shared ownership.	Location	Great Britain	England	Scotland	Wales	Northern Ireland	Year	2018	2022	2018	2022	2018	2022	2018	2022	Owner Occupier	95%	96%	96%	96%	90%	94%	94%	95%	86%	89%	Buying on mortgage/shared ownership	95%	91%	95%	91%	94%	89%	93%	92%	86%	90%	Private renter	81%	77%	81%	78%	79%	58%	82%	78%	61%	75%	Local authority renter	92%	88%	92%	87%	91%	94%	91%	88%	82%	83%	Housing Association renter	91%	90%	91%	90%	86%	91%	91%	85%	Bases (unweighted): 2022 Great Britain	8,816,	Northern Ireland	1,881
Socio-economic group									Social grade is also calculated at the household level, based on the occupation of the chief income earner. Whereas in 2018, there was a slight negative correlation between social grade and accuracy, in 2022 accuracy was almost entirely flat across the social grades in both Great Britain and Northern Ireland.	Location	Great Britain	England	Scotland	Wales	Northern Ireland	Year	2018	2022	2018	2022	2018	2022	2018	2022	AB	94%	97%	95%	91%	89%	91%	93%	92%	86%	99%	C1	93%	98%	93%	91%	93%	87%	96%	93%	85%	98%	C2	93%	98%	94%	93%	90%	90%	95%	93%	82%	98%	D1	98%	89%	89%	88%	92%	86%	88%	78%	98%	Bases (unweighted): 2022 Great Britain	8,449,	Northern Ireland	1,708	Length of residence	Accuracy in both Great Britain and Northern Ireland follows the same pattern as completeness when looking at how long households have occupied their accommodation, with higher levels of inaccuracy at households with a more recent change in residency.	Location	Great Britain	England	Scotland	Wales	Northern Ireland	Year	2018	2022	2018	2022	2018	2022	2018	2022	Up to 1 year	56%	54%	57%	54%	71%	67%	73%	69%	22%	38%	More than 1, up to 2 years	2022

93% 84% 93% 84% 58% 85% More than 2, up to 5 years 94% 91% 94% 91% 97% 88% 92% 93% 84% 87% More than 5, up to 10 years 96% 94% 96% 94% 98% 91% 93% 91% 90% 91% More than 10, up to 16 years 95% 94% 95% 94% 92% 94% 96% 92% 90% 93% Over 16 years 95% 95% 96% 95% 91% 93% 95% 96% 87% 89% Bases (unweighted): 2022 Great Britain 8,342, Northern Ireland 1,685 Looking ahead: addressing the challenges of accuracy and completeness

The evidence from this research shows that although there have been improvements in some areas since our previous analysis of the 2018 electoral registers, as many as 8 million people across the UK are still not correctly registered to vote. This means they may not be able to vote when elections take place, and they are not counted at all when constituency boundaries are set. It also means that at the most critical time ahead of major elections, Electoral Registration Officers are required to use their limited resources and capacity to respond to applications that are needed so that registers can catch up with population movement and eligible voters are able to participate. This evidence continues to highlight the need to develop new approaches to electoral registration that will bring sustained long-term improvements. This will require governments to bring forward legislation. We set out below the case for change, and explain our own proposals for how EROs can benefit from access to information from other public service organisations.

recs The current system of electoral registration is not working well for voters or Electoral Registration Officers

We and many others – including Parliamentary committees , professional associations and academics – have repeatedly highlighted evidence that illustrates the impact of the current failing systems of electoral registration in the UK: Evidence from our programme of electoral registration research over more than a decade continues to show that up to 8 million people across the UK are either missing from the registers or incorrectly registered, meaning they are unable to have their say.

We have consistently found that some specific groups of people are significantly less likely to be correctly registered, particularly young people, people who live in private rented accommodation, and those who have recently changed address. The number of people it is estimated are not correctly registered is more than the combined adult population of Scotland and Wales, and would be equivalent to more than 100 UK Parliament constituencies. Although changes to the annual canvass in Great Britain have helped to reduce the resource and capacity taken up through unnecessarily chasing households with no change, there is evidence from the most recent annual canvass in 2022 to suggest that it is a significantly less effective mechanism for identifying 16- and 17-year-olds who are newly eligible to register, compared with older people. There is no evidence from our most recent research on the 2022 registers that canvass reform has led to any significant improvement in the accuracy or completeness of the registers for Great Britain. Our analysis of the most recent canvass in Northern Ireland in 2021 highlighted that, in its current format, the canvass is not an efficient tool for helping to maintain an accurate and complete electoral register, both for the Chief Electoral Officer and for voters. Although the improvements in the accuracy and completeness of the 2022 registers highlighted in this research are the result of the 2021 canvass, we have previously seen subsequent declines between canvasses when the continuous registration system is operating. The registration system continues to struggle to capture population movement in the period between each canvass, and the canvass process itself requires the Electoral Office to contact and receive a response from all eligible electors, even if they were registered before the canvass and their details had not changed. Our recent research on attitudes to registration has highlighted that people continue to face both practical and knowledge barriers to registering to vote under the current system. These include misunderstanding about the registration process and incorrect assumptions about whether people are already registered, and low levels of urgency or priority to register to vote. Some people don't realise that they need to actively apply to register to vote, don't know how to apply, and don't view registration as a priority when they change address. An accessible online registration process means it is easy for people to apply to register, update or confirm their registration throughout the year, and to do so close to the deadline for an election. But, as we highlighted in our report on the 2019 UK Parliamentary general election , this means that large volumes of electoral registration activity are focused in the weeks leading up to major electoral events, which significantly increases risks to well-run elections. Levels of accuracy and completeness are unlikely to improve without significant changes to the registration system Evidence from our programme of electoral registration research over more than a decade shows that a large number of people remain incorrectly registered. There is little evidence to suggest that levels of accuracy and completeness are likely to significantly improve without major changes to the current electoral registration system. The introduction of online registration since 2014 (and since 2018 in Northern Ireland) has improved access and made it easier for people to register to vote ahead of specific electoral events, but there is no evidence that it has had a lasting significant positive impact on overall levels of accuracy or completeness. The most recent data from the 2022 registers shows no significant improvement in Great Britain in the proportion of people who are correctly registered, even if the decline in rates of accuracy and completeness identified in previous studies appears to have at least paused. We have highlighted since 2019 feasibility studies which showed how the UK's governments could support EROs to improve accuracy and completeness of electoral registers – and improve efficiency to alleviate resource burdens – by giving them access to high-quality data from other public service organisations. This would allow EROs to take advantage of the many millions of transactions that voters already have with major public sector organisations, and could sit alongside and enhance existing annual canvass and year-round online registration activities. The Welsh Government has already highlighted its intention to work with local authorities to design and pilot automatic voter registration for devolved elections, and we will continue to work with EROs and the Welsh Government to support further development of this important area of work. The electoral community needs a clear plan to modernise electoral registration processes Changes to the way elections and electoral registers are run should be considered in consultation with the whole electoral community. The experiences of voters, electoral administrators, and political parties and campaigners are important considerations in building a registration system that works well for everyone, and to ensure all eligible voters can have their say at elections. Developing specific detailed proposals to move towards more automatic or automated systems of electoral registration would need to involve a broad range of partners: Data source organisations (for example, the DVLA/DVA, HMRC or HMPO) would bring their detailed understanding of the data and transactions that they currently manage, and would need reassurance that data sharing is operationally straightforward, secure and legally compliant. Technical partners, including electoral management software suppliers and the IER digital service which is managed by officials at the Department for Levelling Up, Housing and Communities (DLUHC) supported by the Government Digital Service, would need to work together with the data source organisations to ensure the secure and efficient management of data and transfer to individual EROs. EROs themselves would need to consider any changes to their teams and processes, so that they are able to integrate automatic or automated registration alongside the existing annual canvass and year-round online registration. Governments would need to legislate to create the necessary legal gateways for data sharing by data source organisations, and to specify the powers and duties of EROs to determine registration applications created using automatic or automated processes. The Information Commissioner's Office would need to provide advice and guidance on how to manage information risks relating to data sharing. Making electoral registration more joined-up with other public services and citizen transactions raises particularly important questions relating to data protection and cyber security. In its February 2023 written evidence to the Levelling Up, Housing and Communities (LUHC) Committee inquiry on electoral registration, the Department for Levelling Up, Housing and Communities highlighted measures already put in place to improve the robustness and security of the IER digital service alongside further recommendations for improvements – for example, in relation to cyber incident reporting in the local government sector . Similar or equivalent protections would also be needed for any systems established to manage the provision and use of data for automatic or automated electoral registration processes. Recommendations: Delivering modern registration processes

Recommendations:

Delivering modern registration processes The electoral community needs a clear plan to ensure that electoral registration processes are modernised so that people are registered and able to exercise their right to vote. As part of this plan the UK, Scottish and Welsh governments should pass legislation that creates clear legal gateways for government departments and public sector bodies to share data on potentially eligible individuals with Electoral Registration Officers. This is needed to enable EROs to register them to vote directly, or to send them targeted invitations to register. All three governments should require relevant departments and other public bodies to work with EROs to facilitate electoral registration using their data. A consistent approach between governments would ensure that changes are developed and delivered in a way which makes it as straightforward as possible for EROs and data source organisations, and ensures that voters are accurately included in the registers for all types of elections they are eligible to vote in. The UK Government should develop the existing Individual Electoral Registration (IER) digital service so that it can support secure and efficient data sharing between data source organisations and EROs and their electoral management software systems, to enable modern registration processes to be delivered. Case studies show how registration could be modernised We have spoken to several UK Government departments, public bodies, universities and tenancy deposit schemes about the data they hold. We discussed whether and how data could be used to improve the accuracy and completeness of electoral registers. We particularly focused on how new approaches could improve registration rates for those groups of people who our research has consistently shown are less likely to be registered correctly: attainers and other young people; people who live in private rented accommodation; and recent home-movers. Depending on the quality and coverage of the data sets, and the specific data fields that are available, we have identified changes that could support different levels and forms of modernisation, ranging from automatic registration to forms of integrated or assisted registration where voters would still need to provide some information directly themselves. The information that is currently required to register to vote includes the individual's name, address, date of birth, nationality and National Insurance number. An application must also state whether the voter wants to be included in the open register which is available to anyone who wants to buy a copy. Nationality information is required given the different franchises for different types of election, and in some cases – for example for Commonwealth citizens – applicants must also confirm that they have leave to enter or remain in the UK or that they don't require that leave. The National Insurance number is currently used as a way of verifying an individual's identity using Department for Work and Pensions records. We have outlined below a range of options for new registration processes, which have been informed by our discussions with the above-mentioned departments and organisations. These case studies were not proposed by or formally agreed with the organisations involved. One of the case studies – integrating electoral registration into the university student enrolment process – describes the current model operated by Cardiff University and Cardiff City Council to boost student registration levels. A further case study – the use of tenancy deposit scheme data to improve registration among private renters through signposting – is based on our discussions with representatives of the schemes, who have indicated their willingness to explore ways of taking this idea forward together with us. The other case studies, namely HM Passport Office, the Driver & Vehicle Licensing Agency/Driver & Vehicle Agency and HM Revenue & Customs, are more speculative and reflect our views as to what might work in practice. Further exploratory work would be needed to confirm the feasibility and delivery implications of these options. Automatic registration Automatic registration means that a data source organisation would provide EROs with the names and addresses of people who meet the eligibility criteria for registration. Because of the specific information required to register to vote, it is likely that very few data sources would be able to support fully automatic registration. The case study below highlights how the information required to be provided by British citizens as part of the passport application process could meet these requirements. The ERO would contact these people at their home address to inform them that they will be added to the register, giving them the opportunity to request to be registered as an anonymous elector if their safety would be at risk from being registered as an ordinary elector. There would also be an opportunity for anyone else living at the address to provide evidence that the person is not in fact eligible to be registered there. Subject to any further evidence that the person was not eligible to register, the ERO would add them directly to the register. The data source organisation could limit the information it provided to EROs to include only new or recently updated records. This would give EROs reassurance that the data was current and should reduce the risk of duplicating registration activity with people who have already applied to register. A centralised data processing service, similar to the current IER digital service, could be used to simplify the process of transferring data between data source organisations and EROs. This could also be used to screen potential new electors against current electoral registers, to minimise duplicate registrations. Automatic registration of voters is common around the world Automatic registration of voters is common around the world The Joseph Rowntree Reform Trust published a report in 2020 called Is it time for Automatic Voter Registration in the UK?. According to the report, 40 countries considered to be liberal democracies have automatic registration. More recent international comparative research has shown that automatic registration not only increases the completeness of electoral registers, but also has a positive impact on accuracy. According to the International Institute for Democracy and Electoral Assistance (IDEA), in Argentina, Austria, Chile, Denmark, Estonia, Germany, Japan, Italy, Spain, and South Korea (among others), the national electoral register is extracted from the population/civil registry. The Australian Electoral Commission operates the Federal Direct Enrolment and Update program. It uses trusted data from other government agencies to add some individuals to the electoral roll or to update their electoral registration. It writes to individuals to inform them of the addition or update. In five American states, according to the National Conference of State Legislatures, when an individual applies for a driving licence and/or engages with another state agency, the data from the transaction is used to register them to vote. The voter receives a notification informing them that they will be registered unless they respond to it and decline the registration. In Canada the National Register of Electors is updated using data from provincial and territorial drivers' licence, statistics and electoral agencies. Elections Nova Scotia updates the voters' list data from a variety of sources including the Registry of Motor Vehicles, the Nova Scotia Civic Address File and Elections Canada. case study Automatic registration case study: using HM Passport Office data to improve registration among young people and recent home-movers HM Passport Office (HMPO) is an agency of the Home Office which issues passports to British citizens. HMPO carries out identity checks to verify an applicant's identity, including with the Driver & Vehicle Licensing Agency. Passport data is already shared with around 80 government departments and public sector bodies to carry out around 25 million identity checks each year. HMPO forecasts that it will receive around 7.4 million passport applications in the next year. These applications will cover the full range of age groups, including applications from young people aged 16 and over applying for adult passports, and people who have recently moved home. When someone applies for a passport, they must provide their name, date of birth, evidence of British citizenship, and home address for delivery of the passport. Although HMPO does not collect National Insurance numbers from applicants, it does undertake rigorous checks to verify applicants' identities, which could provide a sufficient level of assurance for an electoral registration application (equivalent to the assurance currently provided by checking National Insurance numbers). Once HMPO has verified the identity of an applicant, this data could be transferred to EROs to automatically register them to vote. To do this, the ERO would write to the individual, informing them that they are going to be placed on the register, giving them the opportunity to correct any mistakes and to request to be registered anonymously if their safety would be at risk from being registered as an ordinary elector. There would also be an opportunity for anyone else living at the address to provide evidence that the person is not eligible to be registered there. Sharing HMPO data for electoral registration would require identifying an appropriate legal gateway. Legislative changes are likely to be required to create a gateway. Integrated registration An integrated registration model means that registering to vote would be integrated within another public service transaction. At the end of those transactions, people would be asked whether they also want to register to vote. If the individual confirms that they do, relevant data would be transferred to an electoral registration application. The individual would be provided with information about eligibility to vote and asked to confirm their eligibility in the same way they are currently required to when applying using the online electoral registration service. They would also provide any missing data, such as National Insurance number and nationality. Once complete, this data would be transferred to the relevant ERO via the IER digital service. The ERO would process the application, add them to the register and write to confirm their addition. As the individual would have recently updated their details as part of that public service transaction and provided the remaining data required for registration, EROs could be sure that their data, in particular their address, was up to date. A number of countries and territories integrate electoral registration into other public service transactions A number of countries and territories integrate electoral registration into other public service transactions In Canada citizens can agree to share their data with Elections Canada on their federal income tax return. New citizens can agree to share their data with Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Canada on their citizenship applications. According to the National Conference of State Legislatures , in 17 American states and Washington DC, people are asked if they want to register when applying for a driving licence from the state's Department of Motor Vehicles and/or when interacting with another government agency. If they agree, their details are added to the state voter registration database. Integrated registration case study: using university student enrolment to improve registration among young people Integrated registration case study: using university student enrolment to improve registration among young people Cardiff University has integrated an electoral registration module into its online process for enrolling students. Enrolment tasks open in September and students have until the third week of October to complete them, including the electoral registration task. The university holds name, address, date of birth and nationality data about students. It has developed a coding system for rooms in its halls of residence to assist the Electoral Services Team at Cardiff City Council to match the addresses with the council's systems. Students are asked if they want to register to vote. If they do, the university asks them to provide the additional data needed to complete the registration application. This includes their National Insurance number and whether they want to be on the open/full register. Once the university has the data needed for registration applications, it sends it to the Electoral Services Team at Cardiff City Council, which registers the students. Over 8,000 students' details are sent to Cardiff City Council annually and around 90% of these students are registered each year. Once the information is sent to the Council, Cardiff University deletes from its student record system any data relating to this process that it does not use internally. case study Integrated registration case study: using the driving licence application or renewal process to improve registration among recent movers and young people The Driver & Vehicle Licensing Agency (DVLA) is the executive agency responsible for issuing driving licences in Great Britain. The Driver & Vehicle Agency (DVA) is the Northern Ireland Executive agency responsible for issuing driving licences in Northern Ireland. Individuals interact with the agencies when they apply for a provisional driving licence, renew or reapply for their photocard driving licence at the end of the 10-year validity period, and when they move address. Both agencies hold name, address and date of birth data but not nationality data or National Insurance numbers. DVLA receives around 1 million applications for provisional driving licences and around 4 million address change notifications each year. DVA processed just over 29,000 applications for provisional driving licences and around 26,000 name and address change notifications from April 2022 to March 2023. An electoral registration prompt asking drivers if they want to register to vote could be integrated into these transactions. The data that DVLA or DVA already hold could be used to prepopulate an electoral registration application, with the driver filling in any missing data. The completed applications would then be sent to the relevant Electoral Registration Officer via the IER digital service, who would determine the application and register them. DVLA is currently developing an online account for new licences. A prompt could be integrated into users' accounts asking if they want to register to vote. Assisted registration Assisted registration means that a data source organisation would provide EROs with the names and addresses of people who may be eligible to vote, taking into account relevant information about the qualification criteria. The ERO would then write to those individuals inviting them to register. The invitation would ask them to provide any missing information needed to complete their registration (such as their nationality or their national insurance number), and give them the opportunity to request to be registered as an anonymous elector. As with automatic registration, transferring only recent transactional data to the specific EROs would ensure that the data is current. A centralised data processing service, similar to the current IER digital service, could be used to simplify the process of transferring data and to reduce the potential for large numbers of records being shared with EROs. It is common around the world for public bodies to share data to assist with voter registration. It is common around the world for public bodies to share data to assist with voter registration. Elections New Brunswick (ENB) in Canada receives information on a regular basis about name and address changes from drivers' licence information. ENB carries out automated and manual checks to attempt to match that data with information on the Register of Electors. If a match is not found, ENB sends the individual a certification form and return envelope. The individual must complete the certification to confirm they meet the eligibility requirements to register and return it to ENB. They are then added to the register.

Assisted registration case study: Assisted registration case study: using National Insurance data to improve registration of attainers. HM Revenue and Customs (HMRC) holds data about children whose parents or carers have claimed child benefit and/or tax-free childcare/thirty free hours of childcare. This includes the child's name and date of birth. When a child reaches the age of 15 years and 9 months, HMRC issues a National Insurance number (NINO) to them which is sent in the post to their parent or carer's address. It issues around 700,000 each year. HMRC does not keep a record of children's nationalities, and NINOs are issued regardless of nationality. HMRC does not have a record for every child in the UK as not every parent or carer makes a claim for child benefit or tax-free childcare/thirty free hours. HMRC is also dependent on claimants to keep their address details up-to-date. Nonetheless, the name, address and date of birth of those young people issued with NINOs could be shared with EROs, who could then send an Invitation to Register to those young people, prepopulated with this data. They would be invited to provide their nationality information, sign the declaration and post the completed application to the ERO. A further option would be to develop an online process for providing the missing information, with the individual scanning a QR code included in the Invitation to Register letter. This could provide immediate online access to a pre-populated application on the register to vote digital service, which could then be completed by the individual and processed electronically through the existing IER infrastructure. Sharing a child's name, date of birth and NINO for electoral registration purposes would require the identification of an appropriate legal gateway and need to adhere to data protection legislation. It would require consideration and agreement by HMRC and the Department for Work and Pensions. It may also require legislative change to create a legal gateway for data sharing for this specific purpose.

Signposting registration: Signposting registration means that an individual would be provided with information about registering to vote during a transaction with, or in a communication from, an organisation or public body. This could include a prompt at the end of a transaction or in a communication directing the individual to the UK Government's Register to Vote website. The individual would then complete the usual steps in that process to apply to register and their data would be sent to the Electoral Registration Officer for their area via the IER Digital Service. This process of signposting could work in a number of scenarios – for example, at the end of a transaction when applying for a driving licence or a new passport, or when an individual is updating their details or in communication with a government department or agency. Such an approach does not require legal change. It should therefore be explored now, even if the other innovations discussed above follow in the future.

Signposting registration case study

Signposting registration case study: using tenancy deposit scheme data to improve registration among private renters

Landlords in the private rented sector are required to protect tenants' deposits with a government approved tenancy deposit scheme. There are three authorised tenancy deposit schemes which operate in England and Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland, protecting around 4.5 million deposits and representing around 6 million tenants. Around half of all deposits are protected through custodial schemes which hold the deposit for the duration of the tenancy. The balance of protected deposits are held and managed by the landlord or letting agent via insured-backed schemes and where schemes have far less interaction with the tenant. The schemes communicate with tenants via email at the start of the tenancy to confirm that their deposit is protected, and then at various points throughout the tenancy, but mainly when the tenant is seeking to gain return of their deposit from the scheme (custodial scheme), or the scheme has unprotected the deposit (insured scheme). Prompts with information about registering and a link to the Register to Vote website could be embedded into these communications, and on scheme websites or mobile apps. All schemes have indicated that they are open to exploring ways in which they could work with the Commission to improve registration rates among private renters.

End notes

1. The franchise for local elections in Scotland and Wales includes those aged 16 and 17 and, in those nations, residents aged 14 or 15 at the time of fieldwork (who turn 16 during the lifetime of the registers) are counted as attainers on the local government registers. However, legally, registration data on 14 and 15 year olds cannot be shared by Electoral Registration Officers so this group was excluded from the research and any measure of completeness and accuracy. All findings should be read with this in mind.

Page history First published: 18 September 2023 Last updated: 2 October 2023

Results and turnout at the 2011 National Assembly for Wales election | Electoral Commission Search Results and turnout at the 2011 National Assembly for Wales election You are in the Senedd elections section Home Senedd elections First published: 9 August 2019 Last updated: 9 August 2019 Download You can download the full dataset as an XLS results as an XLS You can also download our full report , written by Scott Orford. Summary The elections were fought on the basis of the same constituency and region boundaries as the previous NAW elections in 2007. The number of constituency candidates fell to 176 compared to 197 in 2007. Thirteen parties or groups were represented in the regional lists together with 1 individual. Labour won 28 out of the 40 constituency seats with a 42.3% share of the vote. The Conservatives were second with 6 seats (25.0% share of the vote) followed by Plaid Cymru (5 seats and 19.3% share of the vote) and the Liberal Democrats (1 seat and 10.6% share of the vote). When the list seats were added, Labour had 30 out of 60 seats. The Conservatives had 14, Plaid Cymru had 11 and the Liberal Democrats had 5. No other party or Independent candidate won a seat. Almost 2.29 million electors were eligible to vote at these elections: an increase of over 40,000 compared with 2007. Over 5,500 electors (0.2% of the total) registered in the weeks leading up to the election under the so-called '11 day rule'. More than 950,000 votes were counted in both the constituency and regional level polls, making the overall turnout 41.8% -slightly down on the 2007 figure. The proportion of ballot papers rejected at the count was very small – 0.82% of constituency ballots and 0.75% of list ballots. Across Wales, 389,150 postal ballots were issued, representing 17.0% of the electorate. This is the largest proportion to date. More than seven in 10 of postal ballots issued were returned. Of these, 4.7% (constituency) and 4.8% (regional list) were rejected because of failures relating to personal identifiers or non-inclusion of either a ballot or statement in the envelope. Related content Report: How the 2011 National Assembly for Wales elections were run Read our report about how the 2011 National Assembly for Wales elections were run Results and turnout at the 2016 National Assembly for Wales election View the results and turnout at the 2016 National Assembly for Wales election Report: How the 2016 National Assembly for Wales elections were run Read our report about how the 2016 National Assembly for Wales elections were run Report on the May 2021 elections in England Read our report on the May 2021 elections in England

Make an allegation | Electoral Commission Search Make an allegation You are in the section Home On this page Before contacting us Allegations we handle Allegations we don't handle Other considerations How to make an allegation First published: 17 June 2019 Last updated: 13 June 2021 What to do before contacting us We recommend taking a look at what we do and don't regulate before contacting us. This will save you time and make sure your allegation is dealt with by the right organisation. Allegations we handle We handle allegations about the political finances of: Political parties Non-party campaigners Individual party members and those who hold elected office, like MPs Referendum campaigners Members associations Unincorporated associations, which is any group of more than two people Allegations we don't handle Report these allegations to the police: The behaviour or political finances of an individual candidate Non-party campaigners who campaign for or against a specific candidate The intimidation or harassment of candidates, campaigners or holders of elective office, whether in writing or in person Speak to your local authority if you have concerns about: how an election was run in your area, such as electoral registration, postal voting or a polling station someone's behaviour in a polling station how a political party has used a local council's facilities any marketing or communications, such as social media posts, shared by them during the 'pre-election' period which you think may be of a political nature Find your local authority Most political campaign material is not regulated in the UK. However, you can speak to Ofcom if you are concerned that: a TV advert might be of a political nature, as political TV broadcasts are banned in the UK Speak to a political party if you are concerned about: how they got your name, address or email address to send you campaign material an internal party dispute any unpaid invoices to suppliers Speak to the Information Commissioners Office (ICO) if you are concerned about: the use of your personal data Other considerations about your allegation Please also be aware that: we don't usually consider anonymous allegations, unless you are a whistle-blower. If you are, please contact us your allegation must be supported by credible evidence How to make an allegation You can make an allegation by filling out the contact us form or by writing to us at this address: Party and Election Finance The Electoral Commission 3 Bunhill Row London EC1Y 8YZ Related content about our enforcement work Electoral law is out of date. Find out where we want to see improvements Political parties, campaigners and other groups have to report their finances to us. Find out about campaign spending, donations and loans and annual accounts.

Statutory consultation on guidance for Returning Officers: Assistance with voting for disabled people | Electoral Commission Search Statutory

consultation on guidance for Returning Officers: Assistance with voting for disabled people You are in the Our consultations section Home Our consultations Draft guidance for Returning Officers: Assistance with voting for disabled voters (statutory consultation) On this page How to respond How we developed the guidance What the guidance covers Themes raised through consultation Background First published: 5 December 2022 Last updated: 17 January 2023 Consultation has now closed The consultation has now closed. Once we have considered the responses to this statutory consultation, we will publish the guidance to assist ROs in preparing and delivering the May 2023 elections as soon as we can. Summary Summary There should be no barriers to voting for disabled people. Everyone should have the right to vote on their own and in secret. The Elections Act 2022 includes provisions requiring Returning Officers (ROs) to provide such equipment as is reasonable to enable, or make it easier for, disabled people to vote independently and secretly. Now that the legislation that enacts these provisions is in place, the Electoral Commission is conducting a statutory consultation on our guidance for ROs on the new provisions for assistance with voting for disabled people. We ran an initial six-week public consultation on the draft guidance, which received 67 responses from members of the public, electoral administrators, and a wide range of charity, civil society and third sector organisations. We have now updated the guidance building on the feedback we received as part of the initial consultation. We want to hear your views on our updated guidance to support ROs in making accessibility arrangements that can have a real and positive impact for disabled voters for the May 2023 elections and beyond.

Once we have considered the responses to this statutory consultation, we will publish the guidance to assist ROs in preparing and delivering the May 2023 elections as soon as we can. Alongside this guidance for ROs, we will also be providing additional support as part of our wider guidance and resources for electoral administrators and for voters to help make voting accessible for all. This consultation is also available in easy read and BSL formats . How to respond This consultation is open from 5 December 2022 until 16 January 2023. You can respond by: filling in our online form emailing your views to EAConsultation@electoralcommission.org.uk or writing to us at: Electoral Administration Guidance Team The Electoral Commission 3 Bunhill Row London EC1Y 8YZ If you have any questions or require any help to be able to respond, please get in touch on 0333 103 1928. How we developed the guidance To help inform the initial guidance, we engaged with a range of civil society, charity and third-sector organisations across the whole of the UK. These represented people with physical and learning disabilities, mental health conditions, and invisible disabilities. We also discussed the changes with a range of representatives from the electoral administration sector. The pre-consultation work allowed us to understand and identify the barriers faced by disabled people at the polling station; possible solutions to make voting more accessible; and how the changes made by the Elections Act could be used to improve the accessibility of elections. We then ran an initial six-week public consultation from 5 September until 17 October 2022 asking for feedback on the draft guidance. Overall, we received 67 responses to our initial public consultation from members of the public, Electoral Registration Officers (EROs), ROs, and a range of civil society and third sector organisations. We also engaged with electoral administrators from across the UK at a national seminar. We have considered the feedback received in these initial stages to inform the further development of the guidance. What the guidance covers Our guidance covers:

Understanding and identifying the barriers that make it difficult or impossible for disabled people to vote The legal framework of rights and protections for disabled people within which the guidance sits Providing accessible information about what to expect in a polling station, how to vote in a polling station and what support is available The equipment that should be made available as a minimum at the polling station, and what other equipment or support might also be helpful Providing specific accessibility training for polling station staff, and what that training should cover Working with civil society, third sector and charity organisations to raise awareness of and communicate the support and equipment that is available to disabled voters The guidance also identifies the polling station equipment that could have a significant impact in enabling or making it easier for disabled people to vote independently and in secret. ROs should provide this equipment as a minimum. It also identifies additional equipment and support that ROs should consider making available. This guidance will support ROs to perform their statutory duties under the Elections Act.

Opens in new window View our guidance You can also Opens in new window read a guide to our guidance in easy read . ROs will be required to have regard to the guidance when deciding what polling station equipment to provide locally but they are not required to follow our recommendations. The law does not give us the power to prescribe a list of items or equipment that ROs must make available in each polling station. It is for each RO to decide the appropriate arrangements and equipment that might enable disabled voters in their area to cast their vote independently and secretly. The equipment identified in our guidance aims to assist ROs in meeting this duty. Factors that are unique to a local area – including the size and scale of polling stations or specific requirements of the local electorate – may shape the approach ROs decide to take. ROs should regularly review and assess the needs of people in their local areas and on this basis determine what may be reasonable to provide in individual polling stations. We will continue to monitor how useful this guidance has been in helping ROs and EROs to support disabled voters. We will be able to update the guidance for future elections, including if new information or equipment becomes available. Themes raised through consultation Below we set out a summary of the main themes and issues raised in the consultation responses we received, and how we have considered them in updating the guidance and in our wider work to support making elections accessible to all. Barriers to voting We have made the following changes to our guidance as a result of comments received on barriers to voting: We expanded the guidance to include awareness of neurodivergence and hidden disabilities We expanded on areas to be covered in training for polling station staff to reference: that disabled voters may have an assistance animal with them that they can bring into the polling station awareness that voters with sight loss may use apps on their mobile phones or carry other assistive equipment, such as video magnifiers, to help them read documents in the polling booth or in conjunction with a tactile voting device awareness that the use of text to speech apps is acceptable in polling stations Support and resources for ROs to help make voting accessible A number of responses asked for additional resources to be provided to ROs to support them in delivering accessible elections. Some also raised points on how to help ROs in making decisions about what additional equipment and support it would be reasonable to provide. Related to this, we received requests for more guidance on ROs' statutory duties under the Elections Act and the wider framework of equalities legislation. We made the following changes to our guidance as a result: We referenced and linked to our existing polling district review guidance, which supports ROs to consider a range of factors, including accessibility needs, when reviewing polling districts, places and stations, more clearly. We provided additional information on how the guidance could be used and adapted to local circumstances. We clarified how the requirements in the Elections Act interact with the wider legal framework of rights and protections for disabled people to ensure that reasonable adjustments are made to remove any substantial disadvantage that disabled voters might otherwise experience. We clarified and expanded guidance for ROs on equipment to be provided in polling stations, such as suggested wording for badges for polling station staff and practical advice for the use of temporary alerters or doorbells. We added Makaton as an alternative format in which information could be provided about what to expect when voting at the polling station. In addition to the changes to the guidance itself, we will also produce a range of additional supporting resources for ROs including: Updated template training materials for polling station staff; A checklist for equipment to be provided in polling stations. We also received feedback asking for clarity on how the new requirement to provide equipment in polling stations will be funded. Officials from the Department for Levelling Up, Housing and Communities have confirmed that funding to support the delivery of accessible elections will be provided to ROs. The UK Government will announce further details and guidance on how the funding will be made available, including for national polls, in due course. Equipment to be provided in polling stations Some points were raised with regards to the suggested minimum requirements for equipment at the polling station and around the additional types of equipment that could support voters to participate. Some respondents raised points that related to specific or local needs, such as the lack of dropped kerbs near polling stations and the provision of cycle parking for non-standard cycles. The guidance is intended to cover all polling stations across the UK and it would not be suitable for it to include such specific individual and local factors. These should be considered by local ROs so that they can be addressed locally, and we have clarified this in the updated guidance. Several respondents called on us to mandate, rather than suggest, provisions and equipment in the guidance, updating our terminology accordingly. Based on the legislation, we cannot prescribe a list of items or equipment that ROs must make available in each polling station. This is something for the RO to decide based on ongoing review of local needs. We received some suggestions that audio devices should be included on our list of equipment that all ROs should provide as a minimum. We have recommended that ROs consider providing audio devices at polling stations where they identify or are made aware that an audio device would be required to support a voter in a specific polling station. We have not yet seen evidence to suggest that audio devices would be needed by voters in every polling station, or that it would be feasible for ROs to procure the number of devices needed to be able to provide one in every polling station. We have recommended that ROs should ensure that magnifiers and appropriate lighting are provided in all polling stations as a minimum to support blind and partially sighted voters, as well as the tactile voting device. Some respondents asked us to provide a list of criteria that ROs should use when considering reasonable adjustments and requests for additional equipment or support. Under the Equality Act 2010, ROs have an anticipatory duty to make reasonable adjustments. This means they have to anticipate, think about and try to predict what adjustments could be needed by voters with different types of disability, support and access requirements. Such adjustments will necessarily reflect local circumstances and approaches, which means that a standardised list would not be appropriate. We will review and update our guidance year-on-year, including in relation to the equipment that should be provided as a minimum and any additional equipment and support. We will ask for feedback from voters and electoral administrators on the equipment provided to support disabled voters as part of our reporting on elections and to support the identification and sharing of good practice. Supporting ROs with public awareness and partnerships work Overall, respondents thought that the draft guidance provided sufficient information for ROs to engage with voters and raise awareness. However, a number of points were raised on how we could further support ROs and electors through public awareness, partnership working with charity and civil society groups, and voter information. Many also called for additional resources or links to partners to support them with accessibility locally. To further support the delivery of accessible elections we will work to provide the following resources and support ahead of the May 2023 elections: Social media assets and web copy to assist ROs to engage and raise awareness with voters A resource for ROs to use to communicate with local disability groups and to provide information to voters in their local authority, which we will develop in consultation with relevant national representative bodies Signpost to good practice guidance on how to make communications accessible Work with local authorities to point electors to the range of resources and information we host on our website Work with relevant national representative bodies to provide training resources for ROs Supporting the design of prescribed polling station notices in an accessible format Work in partnership with disability organisations nationally to communicate directly with their members We will also explore with partners the possibility of providing a list of organisations that ROs may contact for advice, including on the provision and sourcing of equipment. We will build on our offering year-on-year and will consider providing additional resources highlighted through consultation responses, such as videos to support voters to understand the voting process, for future elections. Reviewing our use of language We received feedback on our use of language in the draft guidance. Some recommended that we use 'disabled persons', rather than 'persons with disabilities', as people are disabled by their environment not by their condition, and their disability should not define them. Respondents also recommended that we use the definition of disability used in the Equality Act 2010 as a way of ensuring consistency with ROs' obligations under this and other legislation. We have taken advice on our use of language and we have updated this throughout the guidance to align with the Social Model of Disability. We have also updated the definition of disability used to be in line with that set out in the Equality Act 2010. Evaluation and sharing of good practice Several responses suggested that we should provide additional information and resources to assist ROs with evaluating the poll and learning lessons for future polls. Some also called on us to gather good practice in relation to accessibility of elections and produce good practice guidance to accompany our guidance for ROs. To help with ROs' evaluation activities, we will provide a template survey for use with polling station voters that require additional assistance when voting. The survey can be used to gather their feedback on their experience of voting and the support that was made available. The Elections Act requires the Commission to report on the implementation of the new accessibility provisions. In order to meet that requirement, we will be asking ROs for data and information on the provision of equipment and support in polling stations. We will provide full information on what data and information we expect to collect alongside the publication of the final version of the guidance. We will also use our engagement and reporting to highlight examples of good practice that emerge, which we can then share with other local authorities to help inform their local arrangements. We will also share these directly with those who we have identified as needing support and that may benefit from the experience of other teams who have faced similar challenges. We will explore further how we can use existing networks to share experiences and examples more widely. Our new performance standards for ROs, which are due to be finalised and published by the end of the year, will also be used to support engagement with ROs around the accessibility of elections, and to monitor and report on the support and equipment provided. Comments received which were out of scope Some responses raised issues outside the scope of the consultation and the draft guidance, some of which would require legislative change in order to be actioned. These include issues such as: Barriers to voting due to religion Barriers due to not speaking Making postal voting more accessible The availability of phone or online voting Providing the annual canvass form, the invitation to register letter, or poll cards in alternative formats Upskilling voters' political literacy in the run-up to and during an election While we have not addressed these in our consultation response, we will continue to consider how we can take these into account in our wider guidance, research and public awareness work. Background Who we are . We provide comprehensive guidance for ROs, which covers information about what they should be doing to help support disabled voters to participate. It includes specific resources to help and support disabled voters at polling stations. For example, we produce a polling station accessibility checklist to highlight practical accessibility considerations, and a handbook for polling station staff with information on how to ensure voting at the polling station is accessible. We have also worked with RNIB and Mencap to create videos for use during polling station staff training, to help staff better understand the challenges disabled voters may face when going to a polling station. You can find out more about our role and responsibilities on our website . Elections Act 2022 The Elections Act 2022 includes amendments to the Representation of the People Act 1983 which introduce a new requirement for ROs to provide such equipment as is reasonable for the purposes of enabling, or making it easier for, relevant persons to vote independently and in secret. Relevant persons are defined in the legislation as those who find it difficult or impossible to vote due to blindness, partial sight or another disability. Independently refers to voting without assistance from another person, not without any form of assistive device. These provisions will apply to: UK parliamentary general elections Police and Crime Commissioner elections in England and Wales Northern Ireland Assembly and local elections Local elections in England ROs are personally responsible for the conduct of elections. In Northern Ireland, the Chief Electoral Officer (CEO) is the RO, so references to 'ROs' throughout this document and the guidance should be read to include the CEO. Our initial consultation We ran an initial consultation on our draft guidance from 5 September until 17 October 2022. We received 67 responses from members of the public, electoral administrators and a range of organisations. View our initial consultation Overview of consultation responses by question Question Yes (total and %) No Don't know Total responses Question 1: Are there any other barriers that voters may experience when voting at the polling station that the draft guidance does not cover? 27 (45%) 23 (38%) 10 (17%) 60 Question 2: Do you think the suggested minimum requirements for equipment to be provided at the polling station are sufficient and reasonable? 33 (56%) 18 (31%) 8 (14%) 59 Question 3: The guidance highlights other types of equipment that could support voters to participate and provides support to help Returning Officers make decisions about what additional equipment and support to provide. Are there any changes you would want made to this guidance? 27 (47%) 25 (44%) 5 (9%) 57 Question 4: Does the draft guidance give enough information to support Returning Officers with providing training to support making voting accessible for all? 32 (55%) 23 (40%) 3 (5%) 58 Question 5: Does the draft guidance give enough information for Returning Officers on how they can engage with voters and publicise information about elections and the support available to them? 31 (54%) 20 (35%) 6 (11%) 57 Question 6: Does the draft guidance effectively support Returning Officers to evaluate, learn lessons and build on their approach to supporting the needs of disabled voters for future polls? 34 (62%) 16 (29%) 5 (9%) 55 Related content Draft guidance for Returning Officers: Assistance with voting for disabled voters (statutory consultation) Consultation on draft guidance for Returning Officers: Assistance with voting for persons with disabilities Tell us your views on the draft guidance for Returning Officers about assisting disabled people to vote Draft guidance for Returning Officers: Assistance with voting for persons with disabilities Read our draft guidance for Returning Officers

Donations accepted | Electoral Commission Search Donations accepted You are in the View donations and loans section Home Donations and loans View donations and loans On this page Data in this section Accepting a donation Chart: Donations accepted by political parties by quarter Table: Donations accepted by political parties by type of donor First published: 16 July 2019 Last updated: 16 May 2023 Summary box Registered political parties have to report donations they've accepted on a quarterly basis. We publish these donations on Political Finance Online
. The rules for publishing this information are different in Northern Ireland.
Legislation doesn't allow us to publish any information about donations and loans from before 1 July 2017. Data in this section Donations accepted by political parties by quarter Donations accepted by political parties by type of donor Accepting a donation When political parties, individuals or other organisations accept a donation, they have to: record information about the donation, such as the amount and who it was from check the source of the donation, and decide if it comes from a permissible source decide whether to keep or return the donation, depending on its source report it to us, if it's over the reportable amount or if they returned it Chart: Donations accepted by political parties by quarter This chart shows donations accepted by political parties from 2001 onwards. You can view data from Great Britain or Northern Ireland or combine the information. It also shows late donations by party. Chart: Donations accepted by political parties by quarter Table: Donations accepted by political parties by type of donor Related content Register to vote All you need to register to vote is 5 minutes and your National Insurance number. Our Commissioners Donations and loans Find out about donations and loans to a political party, individual or other organisation Our Executive Team Meet our Executive Team, and find out more about them

You are in the section Home On this page Salaries over £60,000 Salary bands below £60,000 First published: 30 May 2019 Last updated: 30 June 2021 What we publish We publish the names and roles of people who earn more than £60,000 a year. We update this information every four months. The below salaries are as of 1 April 2023.

Salaries over £60,000 Name Role Annual salary (£) Location
Shaun McNally Chief Executive Officer 166,400 London
Craig Westwood Director of Communications, Policy and Research 108,683 London
Ailsa Irvine Director of Electoral Administration and Guidance 108,273 London
Louise Edwards Director of Regulation 108,273 London
Binnie Goh General Counsel 90,000 to 94,999 London
Andrew Simpson Head of Digital Data, Technology and Facilities 75,000 to 79,999 London
Denise Morgan Head of Human Resources 70,000 to 74,499 London
Bola Raji Interim Head of Planning and Performance 70,000 to 74,499 London
John Pullinger Chair 70,000 to 74,499 London
Tom Hawthorn Head of Policy 70,000 to 74,499 London
Sheilja Shah Senior Regulatory Lawyer 70,000 to 74,499 London
Charlene Hannon Head of Guidance 70,000 to 74,999 London
Niki Nixon Head of External Communications 70,000 to 74,999 London
Tim Crowley Head of Digital Communications and Voter Engagement 70,000 to 74,999 London
Su Crown Head of Campaigns and Corporate Communications 70,000 to 74,999 London
Katy Knock Head of Legislation, Strategy and Coordination 65,000 to 69,999 London
Laura Douglas Head of Regulatory Support 65,000 to 69,999 London
David Bailey Head of Strategic Planning and Performance 65,000 to 69,999 London
Gilly Bloom Senior Lawyer 65,000 to 69,999 London
Mel Davidson Head of Support and Improvement 65,000 to 69,999 London
Phil Thompson Head of Research 65,000 to 69,999 London
Tracey Blackman Head of Finance and 65,000 to 69,999 London
Andy O'Neill Head of Electoral Commission, Scotland 65,000 to 69,999 Edinburgh
Carol Sweetenham Head of Projects 65,000 to 69,999 London
Dan Adamson Head of Monitoring and Enforcement 65,000 to 69,999 London
Majella La Praik Head of Registration and Reporting 65,000 to 69,999 London
Adrian Fryer Senior Lawyer 65,000 to 69,999 London
Rhydian Thomas Head of Electoral Commission, Wales 65,000 to 69,999 Cardiff
Cahir Hughes Head of Electoral Commission, Northern Ireland 65,000 to 69,999 Belfast Annual salary includes taxable benefits and allowances. The table above includes those currently on maternity, parental or adoption leave. Actual salaries for the Chair and Executive team are published in our annual resource accounts, therefore actuals are shown above for these staff. We do not use Senior Civil Service grades. All figures are full-time equivalent. Salary bands below £60,000 Job level Number of staff Salary banding (£)
Manager or Senior Adviser 87
41,000 to 59,999 Senior Adviser or Senior Officer 30
36,000 to 40,999 Adviser or Officer 46
28,000 to 35,999 Related content Our Executive Team Meet our Executive Team, and find out more about them Our Senior Leadership Team Meet our Senior Leadership Group, and find out what they're responsible for Remuneration and HR Committee Find out about our Remuneration and HR Committee Interim corporate plan 2020/21 - 2024/25 Our interim corporate plan was published following the 2019 UK Parliament general election. It has now been replaced by our 2022/23 to 2026/27 plan.

Board notes: 18 July 2018 | Electoral Commission Search

Board notes: 18 July 2018 You are in the Electoral Commission Board section Home

How we make decisions Electoral Commission Board On this page Apologies

Headlines/issues since last board meeting Summer arrangements First published: 18 July 2019 Last updated: 23 July 2019 Overview Date: 18 July 2018 Time: 10am to 11:15am Location: Boothroyd Room, 3 Bunhill Row, London Date of next scheduled meeting: 19 September 2018 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting John Holmes (JEH), Chair Sue Bruce (SB) Anna Carragher (AC) Sarah Chambers (SC) Elan Closs Stephens (ECS) John Horam (JRH) David Howarth (DH) Alasdair Morgan (AM) Bridget Prentice (BP) Rob Vincent (RV) Claire Bassett (CB) Kieran Rix (KR) Ailsa Irvine (AI) Robert Posner (RP) Craig Westwood (CW) Nancy Bruseker (NB) Apologies None.

Headlines/issues since last board meeting Commissioners and the Executive Team discussed the release of the Vote Leave investigation report. The group agreed that the Commission would be more proactive in clarifying inaccurate press reports, and publicising recommendations made by the Commission on improving electoral processes.

RP updated the Board on ongoing investigations and any potential legal challenges. A discussion followed on the importance of encouraging all parties to improve governance for electoral spending reporting. CW noted the upcoming publication of the interim report by the Department of Culture, Media and Sport (DCMS) select committee of their investigation into 'fake news' and disinformation. CW also advised

Commissioners about the planned publication of our statutory evaluation on the voter ID pilots on 19 July. AI provided an update on canvass reform work, and contingency planning for unplanned electoral events. She noted that Northern Ireland online electoral registration, introduced in June, was working well; 81% of new registrations were through the online system and applications had gone up by 50% on the previous month. KR reported that the Annual Report and Accounts were due to be laid in Parliament on 19 July as planned. He advised that, subject to background checks, a new Head of HR would be in place shortly. An appointment had also been made to the independent advisor to the Audit Committee post, and their first Committee meeting should be in October 2018. JEH reported that the recruitment of the new Commissioners was proceeding, and was hopeful that Royal Assent could be received by October. Summer arrangements Commissioners were asked to provide contact information over summer holidays.

Letter: To Google about digital campaigning at the EU referendum | Electoral Commission Search Letter: To Google about digital campaigning at the EU referendum You are in the Key correspondence section Home Key correspondence On this page Letter summary Read our letter in full First published: 16 November 2017 Last updated: 20 December 2019 Summary of the letter Date: 16 November 2017 To: Mr Dave Skelton, UK Public Policy, Google From: Louise Edwards, Head of Regulation Format: Sent by email Full letter Dear Mr Skelton Political campaign finance transparency I write further to our email exchange proposing a meeting with Google to discuss the important issues arising from digital political campaigning. The Electoral Commission is responsible for regulating and enforcing the rules - set out in the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000 (PPERA) - that govern political campaign finance in the UK. These rules cover the funding of and spending on campaign activity, and include provisions and offences about acting as an agent for donations, and arrangements to evade the rules on donations. You will be aware of concerns that individuals or organisations from outside the UK, and notably from or on behalf of Russia, may have been campaigning via social media platforms in the June 2016 referendum on the UK's membership of the EU. Further, concerns have been raised that the individuals and funds behind such campaigning, if it occurred, were hidden from those viewing the campaign material. EU referendum campaign activity Campaign activity in the context of the EU Referendum included activities that were intended to, or were otherwise in connection with, promoting or bringing about a particular outcome in the referendum. This included campaign broadcasts, advertising of any kind, unsolicited material sent to voters and market research or other methods of finding out how people intended to vote. Further clarification on what constituted campaign activity was given in our guidance on referendum spending . The referendum was preceded by a regulated period, which ran from 15 April to 23 June 2016. During this period the rules stated campaign activities carried out by referendum campaigners – any individual or entity engaged in campaign activity, whether registered with the Commission or not – could only be financed from permissible donations. This excluded individuals not on the UK or Gibraltar electoral roll and companies not carrying out a business in the UK or Gibraltar. Request for information The Commission's legal duties include taking all reasonable steps to secure compliance with the campaign finance rules (see section 145 of PPERA). In furtherance of this duty, please provide us with the following information: Any evidence you hold of campaign activity conducted via Google during the regulated period for the June 2016 EU Referendum (15 April to 23 June 2016) that was funded from Russia. Please provide any such evidence to us by 8 December 2017. In anticipation of this, thank you for your prompt assistance on this important matter. June 2017 UK parliamentary general election Our work in respect of the June general election is ongoing. We may, as part of our assurance work in respect of the election spending returns, wish to contact you at a later date regarding campaign activity on your platform during the general election campaign. Please contact me if you have any questions regarding this request. Related content Letter: Coronavirus and its impact on the May polls Read our letter to Chloe Smith MP (Minister for the Constitution and Devolution) from March 2020 Letter: BBC NI Spotlight programme "Brexit, Dark Money and the DUP" Read our letter to Mr Jim Fitzpatrick from February 2018 Letter: Complaint regarding EU Referendum campaigners Read our letter to the Rt Hon Priti Patel MP from August 2018 Letter: To the Chair of the Police and Crime Committee at the Greater London Assembly Read our letter to Steve O'Connell AM (Chairman, Police and Crime Committee) from February 2018

Scottish Parliament Political Parties Panel minutes: 19 May 2021 | Electoral Commission Search Scottish Parliament Political Parties

Panel minutes: 19 May 2021 You are in the Party panels section Home How we make decisions Party panels On this page Welcome Minutes of the last meeting Feedback on the Scottish Parliament election RO/EMB - roles, recommendations, guidance Electoral administration, nominations, candidate briefings Postal voting Polling day issues Verification and count Integrity issues Royal Mail Campaigning issues and campaign material Campaign expenditure Commission guidance Public awareness Scottish Government update Scotland Office/Cabinet Office update Boundaries Scotland update Boundary Commission for Scotland update Royal Mail update EMB update Electoral Commission update Dates of future meetings First published: 1 October 2021 Last updated: 11 October 2021 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting Scott Martin, Scottish National Party (Chair) Matt Edmonds, Scottish Conservative and Unionist Party Paul Moat, Scottish Liberal Democrats Fiona O'Donnell, Scottish Labour Party Isabel Drummond-Murray, Boundaries Scotland Maria McCann, Scottish Government Iain Hockenhull, Scottish Government Malcolm Burr, Electoral Management Board for Scotland Chris Highcock, Electoral Management Board for Scotland Kate Crawford, Renfrewshire Valuation Joint Board Hannah Standring, Office of the Secretary State for Scotland Rachel Winham, Royal Mail The Electoral Commission: Dame Susan Bruce, Electoral Commissioner, Scotland Alasdair Morgan, Electoral Commissioner Andy O'Neill, Head of Electoral Commission, Scotland Sarah Mackie, Manager, Electoral Commission, Scotland Martin McKeown, Senior Adviser, Elections & s, Scotland Catherine Heggie, Partnerships & Information Officer, Scotland Lindsey Hamilton, Business Support Officer (Minutes) Apologies Scottish Government, Scott Forsyth, Royal Mail, Pete Wildman, Scottish Assessors Association (Chair of Electoral Registration Committee) Welcome Scott Martin (SM) welcomed those present. Minutes of the last meeting and matters arising The minutes of the previous meeting held on 4 March 2021 were approved. Feedback on the Scottish Parliament election Malcolm Burr (MB) said that all directions from the EMB had been useful and well-received but they would pursue the issues Returning Officers had with contractors in advance of the next electoral event. Chris Highcock (CH) added there had been a consistency of approach across the country and, despite fears the count process might not be as open, there was still high degree of scrutiny and agents had been happy. Sue Bruce (SB) echoed MB and CH's sentiments that the election was well-run, both in terms of planning and administration, and gave credit to colleagues across the board who worked collaboratively to ensure it worked well. Andy O'Neill (AON) said the Commission's statutory duty to report on elections meant it was important to get parties and other stakeholders' views and the report would be published sometime in September when Parliament was back in session. RO/EMB - roles, recommendations, guidance SM said this was the first Scottish Parliament election where the EMB had formal powers of direction and it seemed they had been used appropriately. Pre-poll and electoral registration Kate Crawford (KC) said that the early scenario planning had proved to be very successful. Scottish Government funding and getting the Household Notification Letter (HNL) out in February had helped to move the spike for postal vote applications earlier, as did the TV ad which EROs ran across Scotland. Uptake from foreign nationals and prisoners had been good though still some confusion about eligibility. Fiona O'Donnell (FOD) asked if the 6 April early cut-off date in Scotland had been needed. KC said it had made the process manageable and the number of applications received after the deadline had been at the lower end of what they expected. On the subject of accessibility, FOD asked if there was evidence it had been more effective than in previous elections. KC ran through the approach they had taken with those in care homes. FOD said one area in Glasgow had a disappointing level of postal votes. KC said most of the permanent postal vote applications had been fresh registrations. Electoral administration, nominations, candidate briefings CH said electronic copies of nominations submitted ahead of time had worked well for the main parties but independent candidates and smaller parties were less familiar with the process. SM questioned whether wet signatures were necessary, likewise the authorisation of each and every candidate and suggested providing just one list; there had been a lack of consistency with different versions of deposits and return forms; one council had helpfully posted pictures of what the polling station and count would look like. FOD said COVID restrictions had placed a strain on Royal Mail first class so they had opted for next day delivery guaranteed. She asked whether anyone ever checked full candidate name, and felt the name on the register should be enough. Some candidates had forgotten they had middle names and had to re-submit and had also experienced a lack of consistency in payment of deposits. Matt Edmonds (ME) had found nominations straightforward and had carried out checks beforehand.

Descriptions for the Scottish Parliament had been handled a little differently and were a little bit of a headache with some councils. Paul Moat (PM) said pre-checking was a good idea but felt the process required modernisation and simplification. ROs had different interpretations of the rules which he would drop in an email afterwards. The candidate acceptance form had the witness narrative 'in my presence' so if witness signature date was after date of candidate it was queried, but there was no requirement for this. EC website forms were designed for printing and handwritten completion but not electronic so took time at the party end to get these things working. Virtual candidate briefings had meant being able to attend a few more than usual and perhaps a hybrid of physical and virtual in the future would be ideal.

Postal voting Issues with suppliers in Dumfries and Galloway had been reported. FOD said issues in Renfrewshire had resulted in some postal ballots being hand delivered and sought reassurance lessons would be learned. If a postal ballot had not been received, could an email reminder be sent that they could produce it on the day? Airdrie and Shotts turnout for postal votes had been lower in the by-election as a significant number thought it was a re-issue for SP election and put in the bin. A by-election a week after a major election was too soon and caused a lot of confusion for voters. KC said the RRO Renfrewshire issue was being fully investigated. The reminder idea would be for ROs but said voters received a poll card if they changed from 'in person' to postal telling them to expect their ballot by a certain date and included a number to phone. SM noted that Scottish Borders and Dumfries and Galloway Councils had also experienced printing issues. Polling day issues Parties reported that they had been keen to get postal vote files this time round but some EROs delayed issuing final PV files until they got cancellations in. Parties were keen to get them as soon as possible, even if not complete. KC said the first file run was done fairly quickly but in this election many had changed to postal so some EROs tried to provide data as accurate as possible and perhaps this caused delays. It would be discussed at the ERO wash-up meeting. Consistency of issue/timing across Scotland was desirable but tied to suppliers. Agreed dates for AV file issue would be useful for parties. Action point: EROs to agree dates and notify parties. SM said if AV files were issued monthly, parties would have no reason to write to potential voters who had changed their postal vote six months earlier. An emergency proxy should be issued if the postal ballot hadn't reached the elector; if they were unable to return in time or to students living hundreds of miles from their home address, but had to be based on ERO being able to cancel the postal vote. A legislative change in closely defined circumstance would mean someone could get an emergency proxy. Ian Hockenhull (IH) said the Scottish Government was currently compiling a list of changes to the law so this could be considered. Parties reported that the issuing of COVID emergency proxies had been a little inconsistent. The 2014 Referendum on independence for Scotland's wider interpretation would have meant it was not required. Polling day issues – CH said they had circulated a note of turnout three times at each Edinburgh polling place to support polling agents but it had taken a lot of work from staff. There was to be a review amongst the ROs to go through issues so would be highlighted. There had been queuing in some polling stations with some joining after 10pm. Voting had taken a bit longer and weather had been poor, so people arrived in the last 2.5 hours. Verification and count CH said Candidates and agents were generally happy and able to sample boxes in the areas they wanted to. PM said expectation was low, so managed to see more than they thought they would; there was wide acceptance restrictions had to be in place but should go back to full scrutiny. ME agreed and said scrutiny was more than just sampling but understood it was done to the best of ability and, bar a few minor things, was well delivered. SM had a lot of comments about list candidates not allowed automatic entry but appreciated it was a one off and as long as there was a consistency in approach. He said not enough ROs re-distribute unused places which should be standard practice. Integrity issues MMcK said the Electoral Commission had participated in Police Scotland phone calls throughout polling day. Some allegations of personation would be investigated. Rachel de Palma Randle (RdPR) – reminded the panel of an Electoral Commission initiative which asked postmen to report any sightings of large numbers of postal votes to one address or someone putting a large number in a post box. SM had hoped for a consistent format of election results but was disappointed the Twitter hashtag had not been used by all Returning Officers. There was discussion about reporting the regional declarations by constituency and the Electoral Management Board becoming something of a result service. Action: MB welcomed the debate and said he would take the suggestion back to the next EMB meeting. Royal Mail Rachel Winham (RW) said the 'sweep' had gone very well and returned a large number of votes. RW advised parties they could contact the Royal Mail for daily reports on leaflet issue. She was aware that a lot of parties' postal voting plans got amended so when their printer brought something in later than marked, it wouldn't ring alarm bells. If dealing with printer, she said the best thing would be to drop a line to party, centrally. RW understood the importance of the first wave of candidate mail going out at the same time as the first postal vote and in general had been a much smoother process than in the past. PM said direct feedback to parties during the campaign was really useful as a lot of faith was placed in the printers. Campaigning issues and campaign material FOD noted that there had been an inconsistent application of Scottish Government's guidance in relation to what was acceptable campaigning in the run up to the polls. Communication could have been better. PM noted the new rules on digital imprints that were in place for the election. Parties and campaigners had sought to follow the rules in different ways. It was important to review the application and adherence to the rules. MMcK noted that the Commission would consider this as part of its post poll reporting. Action point: EC to discuss with parties out with this meeting. Campaign expenditure Paul Moat (PM) reported a lot of people getting in touch to download different forms. MMcK noted an inconsistency around recording notional spending in the long and short campaign forms which had been addressed. Commission guidance MMcK requested suggestions for improvements to the Commission's guidance. MB welcomed similar feedback for the EMB. SM said there had been inconsistency over commonly used names which was correct in the previous version but the nature of election rules in UK England/Wales was complicated and sometimes cropped up in the Scottish version. Parties used to be given draft guidance but that had been perceived as an advantage. New guidance for LG elections would be in new format. SM said he would like to receive notification when any guidance was changed. Public awareness There were no comments. Scottish Government update MMcC said the Immediate focus was on Local Government elections; working on the conduct order and a proposal to bring forward changes mirroring those in the Scottish Parliament Conduct Order. The Scotland Office update had mentioned legislation the UK Government was taking through; Scottish and Welsh ministers had written indicating their concern that the Prime Minister had complete discretion to call an election which would require a Scottish or Welsh election to be moved. A dialogue on what might be done was under way. MMcC will share what the LG reports would look like and extended an invitation to the parties to attend a local government count demonstration. Action: MMcC send Draft Local Government Conduct Order, set of sample reports and invitation to parties. Scotland Office/Cabinet Office update Hannah Standring (HS) said the recently called Dissolution and Calling of Parliament Bill currently had no date for its second reading but there were some concerns regarding timings and potential clashes between UK and devolved parliaments. It was early days for the Electoral Integrity Bill but she hoped to have a more substantive proposal at a future meeting. Cabinet Office officials would shortly share information with members of this group; an update on proposals for notional expenditure and an overview of new proposals intended to update the political finance framework, within the next few weeks. Action: Cabinet Office to share proposals for notional expenditure and overview of new proposals for political finance framework. Boundaries Scotland update IDM noted the new name for Local Government Boundary Commission for Scotland and that the 6 islands review were nearing completion. In response to a question IDM confirmed that she expected the next review of Scottish Parliament constituencies to begin in late 2022/early 2023 in order to meet the legislative deadline of May 2025. Boundary Commission for Scotland update IDM said she would set up an online meeting with parties around 28/29 June. This would go over the approach to the review, the new legislation, timing and so on. The Boundary Commission for England would be commencing their consultation on 8 June but the other 3 commissions, including BCS, would follow in the autumn. Action: IDM to set up meeting with parties around 28/29 June. Royal Mail update All covered previously. EMB update Nothing else to add. Electoral Commission update Sue Bruce (SB) said John Pullinger, the new Chair would be in post shortly and that the feedback from this meeting had been helpful and would inform our post event reporting. Dates of future meetings 2021 15 September 10 November 2022 20 January *8 March 6 May. Pre-meeting 10:30 and meeting proper at 11:00 am except for *8 March which will be 2:30 pre-meeting and 3:00pm meeting Related content Party registration decisions View our decisions on political party names, descriptions and emblems View current applications View the political party names, descriptions and emblems which we are currently considering as part of our assessment process Donations and loans Find out about donations and loans to a political party, individual or other organisation Registers of unincorporated associations Download and view the registers of unincorporated associations

Travel and subsistence | Electoral Commission Search Travel and subsistence You are in the section Home On this page 2019 travel and subsistence 2018 travel and subsistence First published: 30 May 2019 Last updated: 8 October 2019 Why we publish travel and subsistence information We publish information about travel and subsistence costs from our executive team and the heads of our offices in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. This is part of our commitment to being open about what we do. We pay for travel, accommodation, meals and certain other expenses that they incur while carrying out our work. The limits for these expenses are set out in our policy. You can also find out more about our salaries .
2019 travel and subsistence Bob Poser, Chief Executive Date Occasion Item Cost (£) 28
March Meeting with Brandon Lewis MP, Chair of the Conservative Party Public transport 2.40 26 March Media training Breakfast 4.59 20 March Centre for Data Ethics and Innovation Reception, 11 Downing Street Public transport 4.80 18 March Speaker's Committee Meeting, House of Commons Public transport 2.40 14 March Electoral Law Forum seminar Public transport 2.40 6 March Meetings in Westminster Public transport 4.80 20 February Meeting with Northern Ireland Office officials, Westminster Public transport 4.80 8 February National Seminar for Electoral Fraud Reduction and Prevention, Birmingham Public transport 2.40 Return rail London to Birmingham 51.85 7
February Association of Chief Executives (ACE) Roundtable Public transport 2.40 6
February Meeting with Bridget Phillipson MP Public transport 4.80 Louise Edwards, Director of Regulation Date Occasion Item Cost (£) 18 March Oxford Media Convention
2019 - Worcester College, Oxford Return rail London to Oxford 66.60 1 February
Panellist at the CPDP (Computers, Privacy and Data Protection) Conference, Brussels
No expenses incurred 0.00 Ailsa Irvine, Director of Electoral Administration and Guidance Date Occasion Item Cost (£) 13 March Visit to our Scotland office Flight
London to Edinburgh 165.57 Dinner 10.38 Overnight hotel, Edinburgh 97.50 15 March Airport bus 4.50 Flight Edinburgh to London 38.23 Taxi airport to home 21.50 3
February Association of s (AEA) Conference, Brighton Public transport 2.80 3 to 6
February Return rail London to Brighton 37.35 3 February Train station to hotel 7.00 3 February Dinner (self and two colleagues) 69.99 5 February Dinner (self and two colleagues) 45.10 6 February Taxi hotel to station 6.00 6 February Public transport 2.80 29 to 31 January Visit to our Northern Ireland office and department training day Return flight Stansted to Belfast 46.32 29 January Taxi airport to hotel 34.00 29 January Refreshments 5.65 29 to 30 January Overnight hotel in Belfast (two nights)
132.00 31 January Taxi airport to home 21.50 9 January Visit to our Scotland office Taxi home to airport 20.00 9 January Flight London to Edinburgh 23.24 9 January Taxi airport to overnight accommodation 21.00 13 January Tram Edinburgh to airport 6.00 13
January Flight Edinburgh to London 34.35 Craig Westwood, Director of Communications Policy, and Research No expenses. Kieran Rix Director of Finance and Corporate Services Date Occasion Item Cost (£) 26 to 27 March Meeting with Finance Committee at Senedd, Cardiff Bay Return rail from London to Cardiff 168.30 Taxi from station to hotel 8.00 Overnight hotel, Cardiff 95.92 Dinner 12.00 27 March Breakfast 12.00 2018 travel and subsistence 2018 travel and subsistence Claire Bassett, Chief Executive Date Occasion Item Cost (£) 17 to 18 December Visit to our Northern Ireland office Flight from Edinburgh to Belfast 47.32 Taxi from airport to hotel 39.00 Dinner 15.00 Overnight hotel, Belfast 101.00 Overnight subsistence 5.00 Taxi from office to airport 13.52 Flight from Belfast to London 89.65 Mileage from airport to home 20.25 17 December Visit to our Scotland office Mileage from home to airport 20.25 Heathrow parking 109.40 Flight from London to Edinburgh 49.99 Return tram from airport to city centre 8.50 4 December Formal board dinner Dinner (share) 42.75 3 December Visit to our Wales office Return mileage from home to office 81.00 Bridge toll 5.60 29

November Constitution Unit seminar 'Regulating Digital Campaigning' Public transport 2.40 27 to 29 November International IDEA roundtable on Inter-agency collaboration on cyber security in elections Return flight from London to Amsterdam. Flight cancelled but unable 37.90 20 November Induction meeting with new Commissioners Lunch (share) 22.38 14 November Whitehall Industry Group (WIG) Breakfast briefing Breakfast 4.35 Public transport 5.30 13 November Speaking at ICO/Demos event 'The future of political Public transport 4.40 Overnight hotel 139.50 13 November Meeting with Chloe Smith MP, Minister for the Constitution Public transport 2.40 6 November Digital, Culture, Media and Sport Select Committee evidence session Public transport 2.40 1 November Catch up with Rowena Ironside, Non-Executive Director for the Cabinet Office Elections and Registrations Division Public transport 2.00 1 November Ministerial Roundtable, Westminster Public transport 4.80 11 October Visit to our Wales office and Wales Electoral Coordination Board Mileage from home to Cardiff office 42.75 Toll bridge 5.60 Parking 5.50 Lunch 6.50 Mileage from Cardiff Bay to home 44.55 18 September Formal board dinner Dinner (share) 33.75 14 August Meeting with Peter Lee, Director of the Cabinet Office's Constitution Group Public transport 2.40 26 to 27 July Cambridge Conference on Electoral Democracy in the Commonwealth Return rail from London to Cambridge 37.50 Taxi from station to conference centre 8.00 Overnight subsistence 5.00 Taxi from conference centre to station 10.00 16 July Media interviews for the Vote Leave investigation report Overnight hotel, London 178.80 Overnight subsistence 5.00 Taxi from Westminster to office 20.80 9 July Meetings in Westminster Public transport 2.40 Refreshments for two 17.71 Bob Posner, Director of Political Finance and Regulation, and Legal Counsel Date Occasion Item Cost (£) 18 September Formal board dinner Share of dinner 33.75 Ailsa Irvine, Director of Electoral Administration and Guidance Date Occasion Item Cost (£) 18 December Visit to our Wales office Return rail from London to Cardiff 82.80 Taxi from station to office 9.20 Overnight hotel, Cardiff 7.00 19 December Taxi from hotel to office 7.00 4 December Formal board dinner Dinner (share) 42.75 28 November Visit to our Scotland office Taxi from home to airport 20.00 Flight from London to Edinburgh 37.23 Taxi from airport to overnight accommodation 20.00 1 December Flight from Edinburgh to London 36.22 20 November Induction meeting with new commissioners Lunch (share of) 22.38 19 November Meetings in Westminster Lunch 5.15 5 to 6 November Visit to our Northern Ireland office Return flight from London to Belfast 48.34 Taxi from airport to office 37.00 Dinner 16.98 Overnight hotel, Belfast 48.50 6 November Taxi from airport to home 21.50 19 September Visit to our Scotland office Public transport 3.30 Dinner 23.90 Flight from London to Edinburgh 75.99 Taxi from airport to overnight accommodation 23.00 18 September Formal board dinner Dinner (share) 33.75 14 August Meeting with Nick Eveleigh, Chief Executive, Chelmsford Bus from Stansted to Chelmsford 10.00 Rail from Chelmsford to London 15.90 6 August Visit to our Wales office Public transport 2.40 Return rail from London to Cardiff 78.00 Taxi from station to Cardiff Bay 6.00 Lunch 6.75 Overnight hotel, Cardiff 72.75 Dinner 17.94 7 August Rail from Cardiff Queen Street to Cardiff Bay 2.10 Lunch (self and colleague) 14.50 Taxi from Cardiff Bay to station 4.90 Public transport 2.40 23 to 24 July Visit to our Northern Ireland office Return flight from London to Belfast 63.50 Taxi from airport to office 34.80 Dinner 6.79 Overnight hotel, Belfast 55.50 15 to 17 July Visit to our Scotland office Return flight from London to Edinburgh 135.36 Taxi from airport to overnight accommodation 21.15 17 July Public transport to airport 4.50 Taxi to home 18.00 Craig Westwood, Director of Communications Policy, and Research Date Occasion Item Cost (£) 4 December Formal board dinner Dinner (share) 42.75 21

November Meetings in Westminster Public transport 4.80 20 November Induction meeting with new commissioners Lunch (share of) 22.38 Kieran Rix Director of Finance and Corporate Services Date Occasion Item Cost (£) 4 December Formal board dinner Dinner (share) 42.75 20 November Induction meeting with new commissioners Lunch (share of) 22.38 8 August Meeting with Welsh Assembly Commission at Ty Hywel Return rail from London to Cardiff 104.50 16 July Meeting with Scottish Parliament and Devolved Office Staff, Edinburgh Return flight from London to Edinburgh 166.71 Related content Interests, gifts and hospitality Look at the record of our Executive Team's interests, gifts and hospitality Our Executive Team Meet our Executive Team, and find out more about them Our Senior Leadership Team Meet our Senior Leadership Group, and find out what they're responsible for Chief Executive's external meetings Find out about our Chief Executive's external meetings

Overview Ahead of the Second Reading of the Bill on Tuesday 6 July, this briefing highlights the importance of the current minimum election timetable of 25-working days, which the Bill seeks to retain. This allows the electoral community to plan for the effective delivery and administration of general elections, and to support and encourage voter participation. Key considerations Our latest research shows public confidence in the running of elections is at its highest level since data collection began ten years ago, with four out of five respondents saying they are confident that elections in the UK are well run. The Commission does not take a view on the constitutional questions about how UK Parliament terms are specified and how elections can be called. Its focus is that, whatever processes are in place, all those participating must have sufficient time to plan and deliver their responsibilities. The polls must be able to be delivered in a way which inspires confidence and gives voters choice on the ballot paper. In order to meet this need, all those participating must have sufficient time to plan and deliver their role. It is important that sufficient time is allowed for: the delivery of essential electoral administration services, such as the printing of ballot papers, identification of count and polling venues, and processing of postal ballot packs candidates (including independent candidates) to take decisions on whether to stand, and for parties and campaigners to put their arguments to the electorate voter registration campaigns to be carried out, and for voters to register and to consider their voting options Based on our experience of the three UK Parliamentary general elections since 2015, the current minimum election timetable of 25 working days, which the Dissolution and Calling of Parliament Bill seeks to retain, supports the proper preparation and delivery of these activities. We set out further detail on this in our evidence to the Joint Committee on the Fixed-term Parliaments Act. If you require any further information, please contact Alex White in our public affairs team at awhite@electoralcommission.org.uk

Background

The introduction of the requirements for imprints on digital material is important for transparency in campaigning, and it is essential that campaigners understand the new duties placed on them. The statutory guidance is a central part of the Commission's work to help ensure that campaigners are confident in applying the law to their activities. The digital imprints regime is complex. Many respondents to the consultation that we ran (31 October - 20 December 2022) welcomed how various sections of the guidance provided clarity and helpful examples on how the law will work in practice. How we developed the guidance The guidance has been produced following consultation with political parties, academics, and a range of other groups, including trade unions and organisations representing charities, and reflects our experiences of regulating elections. Prior to consultation we met with key stakeholders from across the UK to ensure we could draw on their experiences of campaigning. The feedback and evidence we received from them as well as other stakeholders has been important to improve the clarity and effectiveness of the guidance. We recognise how important it is that the people who will use the guidance support it. We were committed to ensuring the guidance was as useful and practical as possible, and included examples, a range of images and helpful flowcharts to support campaigners to understand in what situations the rules apply. Overall, feedback was positive and stakeholders felt that the draft guidance was 'generally straightforward and well-written.' There were areas where additional clarity or examples were sought to make it even clearer for parties and campaigners. Within our consultation report we have highlighted where we agree with recommendations to improve the guidance's intelligibility. We have also set out why, in some circumstances, we had to retain the wording from our original draft, often to remain consistent with the law. Next steps If approved by Parliament, we will begin our planned programme of support to help familiarise campaigners with the new digital imprints requirements. This will include practical support for you as campaigners and candidates, including on how the requirement for digital imprints will apply to your campaign material. Additional information . A key part of our role is to provide advice to government and parliament on legislation relating to elections. If you would like any further information, please contact Alex White in our public affairs team:

awhite@electoralcommission.org.uk

Scottish Parliament Political Parties Panel Minutes: 22 January 2020 | Electoral Commission Search Scottish Parliament Political Parties

Panel Minutes: 22 January 2020 You are in the Party panels section Home How we make decisions Party panels On this page Minutes of previous meeting Feedback on the UK Parliamentary General Election Scottish Government update Scotland Office update Scotland Boundary Commission update EMB update All Scotland polling scheme Electoral Commission update Date of next meeting Action items First published: 19 June 2020 Last updated: 6 July 2020 Meeting overview: Date: 22 January 2020 Time: 2pm Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting Scottish Green Party: John Hardy (Chair) Scottish Liberal Democrats: Paul Moat Scottish Conservative and Unionist Party: Matt Edmonds Scottish National Party: Scott Martin Scottish Labour Party: Michael Sharpe Scottish Boundary Commission: Isabel Drummond-Murray Scottish Government: James Newman Electoral Management Board for Scotland: Chris Highcock Scottish Assessors Association: Pete Wildman, Chair of the Electoral Registration Committee Scotland Office: Craig Chalcraft The Electoral Commission: Dame Susan Bruce, Electoral Commissioner, Scotland Andy O'Neill, Head of the Electoral Commission, Scotland Martin McKeown, Senior Adviser, Elections & Mette Christensen, Senior Policy Advisor Lindsey Hamilton, Business Support Officer (Minutes) Apologies for absence: Kate Crawford, Scottish Assessors Association Alasdair Morgan, Electoral Commissioner Maria McCann, Scottish Government Introduction: The Chairperson John Hardy (JH) welcomed those present to the meeting and introductions were made. Andy O'Neill (AON) intimated apologies from those unable to attend. Minutes of previous meeting The minutes from the previous meeting held on 7 June 2019 were approved. There were no action points outstanding. Feedback on the UK Parliamentary General Election The PPP discussed the conduct of the UK Parliamentary election held in December 2019. The aim was to identify areas where improvements might be made. The following areas were highlighted: Chris Highcock (CH) confirmed the recommendations the EMB made to Returning Officers with a view to achieving consistency in delivery and certainty for voters around e.g. dates for the publication of the notice of poll, issue of poll cards and postal votes; Scott Martin (SM) noted that the Early Parliamentary General Election Act 2019 had been amended to avoid any specific issues related to the St Andrew's Day Bank holiday in Scotland; (SM) commented that if the UK Parliamentary election had been held a week earlier, no delay to the publication of the electoral register would have been required. Pete Wildman (PW) replied that software very much drove what could be produced ahead of elections and this was a body of work to look at. Action 4.1 (SM) confirmed he would provide (PW) with information on this. CH noted that candidate meetings hosted by ROs had fewer attendees but felt this was due to experienced election agents. PW noted not as many calls had been received following the distribution of postal vote rejection notices after the election. CH advised that he had fed back from Police Scotland that their offer to hold security briefings for candidates had low uptake and this might have been because the offer was not made early enough. Permission from candidates had to be sought through ROs and it was suggested a form could be included in the nomination pack. The parties agreed this was a good idea. Action 4.2 AON advised that the Commission would look at including such a form in Nomination Packs for future elections if there was a demand for it; Matt Edmonds (ME) reported issues with delivery of election communication but said they would raise directly with Royal Mail. This was probably due to the level of mail already being handled at that time of year; SM advised that the Electoral Commission candidate spending form did not clarify a donation is over £50 (i.e. £50.01) and said some councils had been issuing old-style returns. SM agreed to email

the Electoral Commission on issues with the form. It was agreed that any actions for improvement be fed back and considered by relevant bodies. Scottish Government update James Newman (JN) provided updates on:- the passage of the Scottish Elections (Franchise and Representation) Bill including amendments accepted at Stage 2; the passage of the Scottish Elections (Reform) Bill which will have its Stage 1 debate on 6 February 2020; the imminent Royal Assent of the Referendums (Scotland) Act 2020; The laying of the Regulations in relation to canvass reform in Scotland, including regulations to facilitate data testing by EROs; Progress of the procurement exercise in relation to the e-counting solution for the 2022 Scottish Council elections. Scott Martin (SM) indicated that it looked as if the election return provisions of the Scottish Elections (Reform) Bill had been drafted on the basis that the election expenses section in the Local Electoral Administration and Registration Services Act 2006 had been commenced, when it hadn't. SM asked JN what the intentions were in relation to that. Noted. Action 5.1 (SM) confirmed he would email (JN) with further details on this. Scotland Office update Craig Chalcraft (CC) reported on the UK Government's legislative programme which includes various elements related to electoral law, including plans to repeal the Fixed Term Parliaments Act was being progressed and introduce an ID requirement for elections under the remit of the UK Parliament. Noted. Scottish Boundary Commission update Isabel Drummond-Murray (ID-M) updated on the boundary provisions in the Scottish Elections (Reform) Bill. These included number of councillors per ward which she and (SM) discussed. She commented that the proposal for 5 year electoral terms has implications for review scheduling. Local Government Boundary Commission for Scotland were currently conducting a review of the Scottish Parliament constituency boundary between Glasgow Provan and Coatbridge and Chryston constituencies and the Scottish Parliament region boundary between Glasgow and Central Scotland regions at Cardowan by Stepps. (ID-M) reported it would go to the minister in the next couple of months. The proposed changes will allow the SP constituency and regional boundaries to be aligned with the council area boundary in time for the next Scottish Parliament elections in May 2021. Noted. EMB Update (PW) said the increase in the electorate was welcome but brought challenges and lessons learned included taking steps to ensure software could handle the increase. He reported the 5 year postal vote signature refresh had commenced on 20 January. Under the new canvass rules there would be only one communication to households where there were no changes and work was ongoing to allow foreign nationals to be able to register. CH reported the focus had been on the results rather than process. Referendum Bill – draft guidance for electoral administration was to begin shortly. Polling place and polling district reviews in the last 18 months. There were a few by-elections upcoming including Clackmannanshire and Dumfries and Galloway. The tender for e-counting had taken effort and mental space, particularly local government. Ensure in good position – potential change 2021 SP elections – complexity and constituency and regional element. Starting to work on comments. Matt Edmonds (ME) asked if the ready reckoner spreadsheet could be updated as the existing one was running out. Action 8.1 (CH) confirmed he would supply a new one. All Scotland polling scheme SM spoke to his papers which related to the potential development of an all Scotland Polling Scheme. (CH) and (PW) said they would discuss a bit more with relevant agencies to consider how to put in place and said there would be a bit of work involved in setting up, hosting and maintaining it. The other political parties felt it would be useful as discrepancies between Scottish Parliament, UK Parliament and local government boundaries exist. Action 9.1 (SM) would provide drafts of what it could look like. Electoral Commission update Andy

O'Neill (AON) said the Electoral Commission had been planning for 2021 Scottish Parliament elections. He referenced links to 4 reports which had been circulated prior to the meeting, in particular that of ballot paper ordering at Scottish council elections. He said concerns had been received from disability organisations and there was a desire for consistency of approach. Scottish Government had been looking at the merits of piloting ballot paper ordering and the Electoral Commission was ready to be asked to do something if required. Martin McKeown (MMcK) provided an update on progress made by the Commission to develop Codes of Practice on spending for candidates and political parties. Codes for elections under the remit of UK Parliament were submitted to the Cabinet Office and the Commission was considering feedback received. A consultation exercise on Codes for devolved Welsh elections was due to close shortly. Draft Codes for devolved Scottish elections will be drafted and a consultation commenced in due course. The intention is to have Codes in place for the 2021 Scottish Parliamentary elections and the Electoral Commission will work with Scottish Government to achieve this aim. SM suggested it might be possible to combine the candidate and party Codes. Mette Christensen (MC) advised that the Electoral Commission is looking at ways to improve the way that spending is reported at elections and referendums. This is following the recommendations for changes to the reporting rules that the Commission made in their Digital Campaigning report. The parties agreed that Commission staff could speak to them later this year in order to get their input on the recommendations. MMcK further provided an update on progress to redevelop the Commission's online portal to improve the user experience. The intention is to roll out the new system by January 2021. Training will be provided to users after summer 2020. MMcK provided an update on the publication of revised performance standards for electoral registration officers in Great Britain. The consultation closes on 31 March 2020. PPP members had been issued with a copy of the consultation documentation. Dates for meetings in 2020/21 Action 11 AON advised a list of dates would be circulated. Action items Action Items Owner(s) Deadline 4.1 Scott Martin ASAP 4.2 Andy O'Neill ASAP 5.1 Scott Martin ASAP 8.1 Chris Highcock ASAP 9.1 Scott Martin ASAP 11 Andy O'Neill ASAP

Board minutes: 21 April 2021 | Electoral Commission Search

Board minutes: 21 April 2021 You are in the Electoral Commission Board section

Home How we make decisions Electoral Commission Board On this page Who was at the meeting Apologies and introductions Declarations of interest Minutes of the previous Board Meeting Update on elections Corporate Plan 2022/23 – 2026/27: plan structure Corporate Plan 2022/23 – 2026/27: financial strategy Key messages for the Annual Report Chief Executive's update Commission Board action tracker Forward plan of Board business Meet the new Chair designate First published: 14 October 2021 Last updated: 14 October 2021 Meeting summary Date: Wednesday 21 April 2021 Time: 9.30am to 1pm Location: By video conference Date of next scheduled meeting: Wednesday 19 May 2021 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting Board Members: Rob Vincent - Meeting Chair Alex Attwood Sarah Chambers Elan Closs Stephens Stephen Gilbert Alasdair Morgan Joan Walley John Pullinger, as a participating observer pending receipt of Royal Warrant In attendance: Bob Posner, Chief Executive Craig Westwood, Director, Communications, Policy and Research Louise Edwards, Director, Regulation Ailsa Irvine, Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance Kieran Rix, Director, Finance and Corporate Services Binnie Goh, General Counsel Chantelle Shokar, Legal Officer (all items) Hannah Kavanagh, Legal Officer (all items) David Bailey, Head of Performance and Planning (item 5) Bola Raji, Interim Performance and Planning Manager (item 5) Tracey Blackman, Head of Finance and (item 7) Carol Sweetenham, Head of Projects (item 7) Zena Khan, Senior Advisor, Governance Apologies and introductions Apologies were received from Sue Bruce, Commissioner. The Meeting Chair welcomed all to the meeting in particular John Pullinger, Chair designate who was attending as a participating observer whilst we await receipt of his Royal Warrant. The Board were advised that due to there being two vacant Commissioner posts and apologies received from Commissioner Sue Bruce it deemed the meeting in quorate. 'Quorum Board meetings are quorate if there are at least six Commissioners present and able to take part in the discussion, of whom four shall be Commissioners appointed other than under Section 3A of the Act.' The Board noted that board business scheduled for this meeting required Commissioners giving direction of travel to the Executive Team rather than decision making, which meant that no business items were deferred due to quoracy. Declarations of interest There were no new declarations of interest. Minutes of the previous Board Meeting (EC 29/21) Resolved: That the minutes of the Commission Board meeting on 31 March 2021 be approved. Update on elections (Oral) The Board received an oral update from the Chief Executive, Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance, Director, Communications, Policy and Research and Director, Regulation. The Board noted that the electoral registration deadline had passed at midnight on Monday along with the postal voting deadline in England and Wales yesterday, with the deadline in Scotland having already passed on 6 April. The Board noted that over 1 million electors had applied to receive postal votes in Scotland which was an increase from 18% of the electorate at the last comparable elections in 2016 to almost a quarter of the electorate now. There appears to be a broadly similar picture emerging across England and Wales, with increases being variable in scale but all manageable. It was noted that one area that we continue to monitor is elections staffing, with the main concerns being around the potential for temporary staff to drop out close to polling day due to illness or self-isolation or general concerns about the safety of working at the polls on the day. Local authorities are working hard to ensure they are able to provide enough staff and have contingency to be able to respond should this happen. Another area receiving a lot of focus specifically to these polls was the management of the verification and counting of votes, in particular how access can be managed safely and how candidates and agents will be able to oversee proceedings, including how to manage their expectations as to the fact that counts will look different and will take longer. The Board noted that our main focus from the electoral administration perspective now is on responding to queries from local authorities, and in the last week alone we dealt with over 200 enquiries from electoral administrators; there are no particular patterns or concerns emerging from these at this stage, but we will monitor what comes in and our teams across England, Scotland and Wales will remain focussed on supporting local authorities over these final weeks of the election timetables. The Board noted an update on the voter registration campaign, with 1.05 million applications to register being recorded across Great Britain during the campaign period. This exceeded the Commission's targets in all areas, and its stretch targets for Wales, England and Great Britain as a whole. It was further noted in the lead up to polling day we aim to support voters both directly and through media and other third parties, in order to provide an understanding on how to vote with confidence, particularly in light of Covid-19 related safety measures. This includes ongoing work with the media and through the Commission's public information services. The Board discussed ongoing engagement with Royal Mail, including understanding their progress on contingency planning. The Board noted that our Chief Executive and Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance met with the recently appointed Chief Executive of Royal Mail. We were ensured that priority would be given to the delivery of campaign materials, our information booklets, poll cards, postal vote applications and postal ballot packs. The Board requested to be kept abreast of any issues that may arise during the remainder of the election period. Resolved: That the oral updates be noted.

Corporate Plan 2022/23 – 2026/27: plan structure (EC 30/21) The Board received the report providing an opportunity to review the proposed structure for the Corporate Plan 2022/23 – 2026/27 as it will be submitted to the UK, Scottish and Welsh parliaments. The Board discussed the tone and language and pitching it at the right level with emphasis on delivering the Commission's objectives and ensuring appropriate emphasis on work in all parts of the UK. The importance of avoiding management speak was noted, to make it a clearer statement of the context of our role. Commissioners Sarah Chambers, Stephen Gilbert and Joan Walley volunteered to liaise with report authors to provide support and input where necessary before bringing back to the June board meeting for approval. Resolved: That the Board endorsed the structure for the Corporate Plan 2022/23– 2026/27.

Corporate Plan 2022/23 – 2026/27: financial strategy (EC 31/21) The Board received a report providing an opportunity to determine the overall financial strategy for the Commission over the corporate plan period. The Board discussed looking at options and opportunities in terms of the core budget as well as reflecting financial accountability for devolved work in Scotland and Wales. It was noted that further iterations would come back to the Board. Resolved: That the Board endorsed the proposed approach, but would want to consider further before adopting the strategy.

Key messages for the Annual Report (EC 32/21) The Board received a report on our Annual Report and Accounts including a review of our performance from 2020/21. The Board discussed the key messages for the Annual Report drawing attention to a range of topics to be noted. Resolved: That the feedback from the Board will be incorporated into the drafting of the Report and shown in full as part of the draft Annual Report at the May Board meeting.

Chief Executive's update The Board received an oral update from the Chief Executive, Director, Communications, Policy and Research and Director, Regulation. It was noted that the usual full written Chief Executive's update report was not appropriate at this time due to staff elections work priorities and a significant proportion of work being on the elections as reflected in the update agenda item to the Board. The Board noted the following updates: Recruitment of New Commissioner for Northern Ireland Interviews of shortlisted candidates have been held with John Pullinger, Chair designate as part of the panel. Next steps would be for the Speaker's Committee to consider panel recommendation(s) followed by the Leader of main parties' consultation, then back to the Speaker's Committee then the House, followed by the issue of the Royal Warrant, so there's still a few more months before finalisation. Committee on Standards in Public Life (CSPL) The latest information from CSPL is that they are looking to publish their report on aspects of the Political Finance regulatory framework, in July. PACAC Their review into the work of the Commission is at the stage of doing some oral evidence sessions. They have had one with UK academics that was positive. At the session on 27 April, they will get international academic inputs They will then plan to have a session with us, but no date has been scheduled as yet. The Commission We continue to operate effectively as a remote working organisation (elections work demonstrates that), recognising that there are impacts, including on staff well-being. We have limited re-opening of our offices with social distancing in place and for priority business need only. This is based on a booking system that has limited numbers with no visitors. Our HR policies have been aligned to work more flexibly in the office and remote working including surveying staff. We will trial this for a year to learn, adapt and settle in. Electoral Integrity Bill Preparations are underway for the Electoral Integrity Bill expected from the UK Government, with the establishment of a Commission project board to coordinate activity. The work is currently focused on ensuring our preparations for the Bill's passage, and the need to support parliamentarians by providing accurate and timely briefing on the Bill's provisions; and on mapping out the necessary work to implement the provisions should they be passed into law. Political Finance Online The project has moved on from red to amber for the first time since difficulties with the developer. The budget has now been secured via the Estimate with two in-house developers also in place.

Registration modules have been tested internally and preparations for reporting modules virtually now completed. We have kept users updated throughout and now, with them planning how training and implementation will look. Training is planned for August and will be ongoing as and when needed. Regulatory support strategy We are on track for consultation on the regulatory support strategy after the May polls. This will involve survey work and targeted discussions. The targets will include those beyond the main parties; parties with elected representatives at local and regional levels and regulated donees. We have already identified and finalised two new guidance products as a result of early engagement on regulatory support. One is on focussed guidance for accounting unit treasurers, many of who are volunteers and we want to support, and the other on how parties can do valuations of their services or commercial transactions. Resolved: That the Board noted the updates on operations and matters arising. Commission Board action tracker (EC 33/21) The Board received the Commission Board action tracker noting further updates. Resolved: That the Commission Board action tracker be noted. Forward plan of Board business (EC 34/21) Commissioners discussed items of business for future meetings. These would be reflected in the Forward plan of Board business at the May meeting. Resolved: That the Forward plan of Board business be noted. Meet the new Chair designate (Oral) The Chair designate introduced himself to the Board. He was looking forward to working with the Board and staff of the Electoral Commission at such an important time for the electoral system. He hoped that his appointment process would be concluded in time for him to take up post as planned on 1 May. The Board thanked Rob Vincent for his time and care as Meeting Chair and, as a body looking forward to the next phase.

Donations and loans to regulated organisations and individuals | Electoral Commission Search Donations and loans to regulated organisations and individuals You are in the View donations and loans section Home Donations and loans View donations and loans On this page Data in this section Regulated donees Donations to regulated donees First published: 25 July 2019 Last updated: 16 May 2023 Summary box Some people and organisations engaged in politics are called regulated donees. These are: holders of some elective offices members of political parties groups of party members (also known as members associations) Data in this section Donations to regulated donees Regulated donees Regulated donees are subject to controls on the donations and loans that they can accept in connection with their political activities in their capacity as a regulated donee. Regulated donees must report to us on donations and loans they accept. Reports must be made within 30 days of accepting the donation or entering into the loan. We publish these reports every month. Donations to regulated donees This table shows the donations and loans reported by regulated individuals and organisations by month. Donations to regulated donees Related content Registers of unincorporated associations Download and view the registers of unincorporated associations Donations accepted View data about donations accepted by parties and campaigners Public funds View data about public funds received by parties Register to vote All you need to register to vote is 5 minutes and your National Insurance number.

Performance analysis 2020/21: Goal two | Electoral Commission Search

Performance analysis 2020/21: Goal two You are in the Annual Report and Accounts 2020/21 section Home Our plans and priorities Annual Report and Accounts 2020/21 First published: 15 September 2021 Last updated: 21 October 2021 Goal 2 To ensure an increasingly trusted and transparent system of regulation in political finance, overseeing compliance, promoting understanding amongst those regulated and proactively pursuing breaches. This goal captures our regulatory role. We focus on two areas which are at the heart of a healthy democracy: ensuring transparency, and good regulation. Key achievements To ensure transparency, we: published financial reports from parties and campaigners worked with parties to deliver financial reports, and adapted our pattern of routine publications as a consequence of challenges parties faced with delivering reports as a result of the pandemic registered political parties and other campaigners and published details in online registers produced new guidance to help campaigners understand and comply with new legal requirements for transparency of digital campaign material introduced by the Scottish Parliament To support good regulation we: found flexible and new ways to continue our focus on supporting parties and campaigners during the pandemic built up our regulatory intelligence work to drive proactive interactions with individual campaigners took action and imposed sanctions when the political finance law were broken continued to evolve our regulatory approach to deliver a greater package of support for parties and campaigners Performance measures Measures We publish routine financial returns from parties and campaigners, including statements of accounts, within 30 working days of receiving them (target 100%) 37.99% Not achieved 4 We check a minimum of 25% of all financial returns for accuracy and compliance each year 38.95% Achieved We publish 100% of guidance products on time with no substantive errors 100% Achieved We provide accurate advice within five to 20 days of receipt of the request, depending on the complexity of the advice (Target 90%) 94.44% Achieved We notify applicants of the outcome of their registration applications within 30 days of a complete application 75% of the time (Target – 75%) 58.21% Not achieved 5 We conduct timely and proportionate investigations of which 90% are completed within 180 days 94.44% Achieved We issue 90% of final notices setting out our sanctions within 21 days of the deadline for representations. 94.29% Achieved We make timely regulatory recommendations that reflect the principles guiding our approach to effective regulatory framework 100% Achieved Our activities during the year Ensuring transparency Throughout the year, we focussed on delivering the responsibilities we are accountable for to the UK's parliaments. We maintained the registers of political parties, ensuring only parties meeting the legal tests are on the register, and we continued reviewing descriptions to help voters identify the party for which candidates are standing. We worked with parties and campaigners as soon as the likely impact of the pandemic became clear to recognise the challenges of delivering financial reports during the pandemic, and adapted our pattern of routine publications appropriately. We published donations and loans data, statements of accounts, and spending data for the 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election as quickly as possible given understandable delays in delivery, and in some cases without any delay at all. We continued developing a new online portal for party registration and finance, which we will launch in 2021 and will improve how parties and campaigners register and deliver financial returns We also developed a new online tool that enabled people to view candidate spending data following the 2019 UKPGE in an interactive and accessible way. Publishing the data in this format provides greater transparency about the money received and spent by candidates at elections. Good regulation We further developed our approach to regulatory intelligence to be more proactive and quickly identify and intervene where this could prevent or minimise non-compliance. This reduced the number of cases requiring enforcement action, and helped to prevent campaigners from breaking the rules. We will continue to focus on this. We are also developing a more systematic approach to gathering evidence of areas where targeted guidance and support can most benefit parties and campaigners. We set up a new regulatory support team dedicated to developing and implementing new and innovative ways to provide proactive support for parties and campaigners to help them comply with the law. Our outreach work included training sessions, seminars or other engagement with the Greater London Authority, the Local Government Association, the National Council for Voluntary Organisations, and others. We also conducted a survey of campaigners on how they expected the pandemic to impact on their activities at the May 2021 polls to help us understand their challenges and concerns better.

Increased stakeholder engagement and outreach work meant we were able to provide clarity to parties, candidates and campaigners on our work and preparations for the May 2021 polls. We produced new guidance for the digital imprint regime introduced by the Scottish Parliament, and produced our usual bespoke guidance for parties candidates and agents and campaigners in good time for the May 2021 polls despite the unusually high number of different elections taking place and the need to take account of the pandemic restrictions. The pandemic led to other new guidance, such as Frequently Asked Questions on the voiding of candidacy rules for the postponed 2020 elections, and guidance on sponsorship and valuing digital conference stands for party conferences. Finally, we continued to update our guidance where appropriate, including changes arising from the UK's departure from the European Union. We continued to use our investigation and sanctioning powers to identify and respond to non-compliance and deter future non-compliance where appropriate. We imposed financial penalties totalling £34k throughout 2020/21 and accepted the voluntary forfeiture of impermissible funds totalling £9k, removing these from the political finance system. We did not however take enforcement action where reports were delivered late due to the impact of the pandemic. report navigation links Previous Next Performance analysis: Goal one Performance analysis: Goal three 4. As a consequence of the Covid pandemic many parties were unable to complete and deliver their statements of account by the legal deadlines, which meant that we were unable to publish them within 30 days of that deadline. ■ Back to content at footnote 4 5. As a result of the postponement of the 2020 polls, an unprecedented number of applications to register political parties or amend registered details were received in the months running up to the 2021 polls. In addition a small number of applications raised complex issues that required additional time to resolve. ■ Back to content at footnote 5

Scottish Parliament Political Parties Panel Meeting Minutes 10 November 2021 |
Electoral Commission Search Scottish Parliament Political Parties Panel Meeting Minutes 10 November 2021 You are in the Party panels section Home How we make decisions Party panels First published: 12 January 2022
Last updated: 26 January 2022 Attendees Attendees James Kelly, Scottish Labour Party (Chair) Matt Edmonds, Scottish Conservative and Unionist Party Scott Martin, Scottish National Party Paul Moat, Scottish Liberal Democrats Isabel Drummond-Murray, Boundaries Scotland Iain Hockenhull, Scottish Government James Newman, Scottish Government Chris Highcock, Electoral Management Board for Scotland Pete Wildman, Scottish Assessors Association (Chair of Electoral Registration Committee and EMB member) Hannah Standring, Office of the Secretary of State for Scotland Nathan Lappin, Office of the Secretary State for Scotland Rachel Winham, Royal Mail Scott Forsyth, Royal Mail The Electoral Commission: Dame Susan Bruce, Electoral Commissioner Alasdair Morgan, Electoral Commissioner Andy O'Neill, Head of Electoral Commission, Scotland Sarah Mackie, Manager, Electoral Commission, Scotland Martin McKeown, Senior Adviser, Elections & s, Scotland Catherine Heggie, Partnerships &
Information Officer, Scotland Lindsey Hamilton, Business Support Officer (Minutes)
Apologies John Hardy, Scottish Green Party; Malcolm Burr, Electoral Management Board for Scotland and Maria McCann, Scottish Government. Apologies Minutes of the last meeting and matters arising The minutes of the last meeting held on 15 September 2021 were approved. Matters arising: Martin McKeown (MMcK) confirmed candidate consent forms for 2022 could be completed electronically. Chris Highcock (CH) said they were now liaising with Fujitsu, who are to deliver the counting project next year, to develop a mechanism to allow consolidation of results which will be hosted through or on the Electoral Management Board website. Andy O'Neill (AON) confirmed Alex Attwood's details had been shared and he had met with the Scottish Green Party and Alba Party. With regard to how the panel meetings are held in future, AON would seek views of attendees. ACTION: Andy O'Neill Preparations for Scottish Council elections 2022 Legislation Iain Hockenhull (IH) advised that all the pending legislation for the May polls had now been considered by the Scottish Parliament and would be commenced as per the SSIs. Guidance MMcK advised that the majority of core guidance had been published. Some resources on the RO side would be updated over the coming weeks. On the candidates and agents side it was intended that Part 3 on spending rules would be published before Christmas and parties would be informed when they were published. He asked for the panel's assistance in disseminating the guidance to candidates and agents and offered to provide briefings on the guidance to parties in due course. He confirmed that ROs and EROs would come together for a joint EC/EMB event on 27 January 2022. Scott Martin (SM) requested that election timetables aimed at candidates and agents include the dates for receiving and paying invoices. MMcK agreed to look at this. ACTION: Martin McKeown EMB Update Chris Highcock (CH) indicated that the EMB Convener had issued a number of directions to Returning Officers and Electoral Registration Officers relating to the May 2022 Council elections seeking to achieve consistency in voter facing matters as well as appropriate resilience and robustness in the system. He noted that the direction relating to consistency in count timings (Friday 6 May) was in line with 2012 and 2017. A consistent script used by Returning officers declaring the results gave clarity to what information was provided to candidates and agents to ensure the law was met. Although it was not known what the public health context would be in May 2022, it was currently planned that the COVID-19 mitigations used at the May 2021 polls would remain in place. Scott Martin (SM) referred to the statutory obligation to supply verification sheets at the counts. (CH) noted these were not direct outputs from the e-count system but agreed to consider how these are made available in a consistent manner. ACTION: Chris Highcock Matt Edmonds (ME) asked about the impact of the Easter Monday holiday on delivery of mail. Scott Forsyth (SF) advised that this had been factored in to their planning. E- Counting Project James Newman (JN) advised that the project had reached the end of the testing phase with high volume levels of testing during the rest of this month. Following this, there would be detailed engagement with councils regarding training and plans around count venues. He extended an invitation to members of the panel to view the system in the New Year and asked that anyone interested get in touch if they wished to attend. The Returning Officers of all four of the up-coming by-elections would use the 2022 counting system so there was an opportunity to see the new system in live operation. (JN) agreed to add members to the e-counting bulletins as previously agreed. ACTION: James Newman Registration and Absent Voting Pete Wildman (PW) noted that most, but not all EROs planned to issue a Household Notification Letter (HNL) in late January/early February. This had proved effective in the run up to the Scottish parliament election. While this was not a statutory requirement, all those EROs who had funding available intended to repeat the exercise. Public Awareness and Partnership Activity Catherine Heggie (CHe) briefed the Panel on the 'Welcome to your vote' awareness week planned for 24-30 January designed to encourage schools to hold political literacy sessions. The Commission would provide new education resources, including full lesson plans and 15 minute activities which could be used in classes, during registration or at assemblies. The initiative is supported by ADES, Education Scotland and other education partners and a communication would be sent to schools next week. The aim of the awareness week was to encourage registration among young people and support their understanding of how to vote using Single Transferrable Vote (STV). The Commission would be running online events for teachers to support them with using the resources. (CHe) said the Commission would provide an update on wider public awareness plans at the next meeting of the SP PPP. Matt Edmonds (ME) asked that the education resources be shared with parties when available. (CHe) agreed to share them with members.

ACTION: Catherine Heggie UK Elections Bill Hannah Standring (HS) advised that the Scottish Government had written to the UK Government requesting that all matters related to devolved elections in Scotland be removed from the Bill. The respective policy teams were working closely to ensure any unnecessary divergence was managed. (IH) said the Legislative Consent Memorandum (LCM) was with the Minister and would be considered by the Standards Committee on 18 November. The Scottish Government was likely to consider legislation where necessary would be taken forward in a Scottish Government Bill in 2023 following consultation. Updates (not related to Scottish Council elections 2022 at item 4 Scotland Office/Cabinet Office (HS) advised the second reading of the Dissolution of Parliament Bill was scheduled for 24 November 2021. Boundaries Scotland Isabel Drummond-Murray (ID-M) advised that of the six SIs going through Parliament, four had been approved and two withdrawn. (ID-M) encouraged all to return their responses to the 2023 consultation on UK Parliamentary constituencies which began earlier this year. Royal Mail (SF) confirmed their planning was on track. The Election Team would begin contact with local authorities in January regarding election plans. During the election period they would hold weekly calls with Chris Highcock and Pete Wildman. Electoral Management Board for Scotland Pete Wildman (PW) reminded all of the joint RO/ERO seminar scheduled for January 2022 where any issues could be addressed. He noted that with the exception of those holding by-elections, the new electoral registers would be published on 1

December. The Electoral Commission (MMcK) advised that the deadline for registration of party names, emblems and registered descriptions in advance of the May polls was 21 January 2022, to give time to process changes for when they will be needed. He asked members to share the deadline with party colleagues. The stakeholder survey (flagged in the October Regulatory Bulletin) aimed at collecting feedback on perceptions of the Electoral Commission's role, the way they communicate with stakeholders and how they could provide better support. He encouraged parties to respond. PF Online - work had been ongoing for a couple of years to redesign the portal and it was expected to be available to party administrators in due course. At the end of October, the under £250,000 party spending returns from the 2021 Scottish Parliament election were published. The over £250,000 will be published in due course as well as information on candidate spending. MMcK will inform the panel in due course. ACTION: Martin McKeown Dates of Future Meetings 2022 20 January; *8 March; 16 May Party Pre-meeting 10:30 and meeting proper at 11:00 am except for *8 March which will be 2:30 pre-meeting and 3:00 pm meeting AOCB MMcK added that the Electoral Commission would invite the lead SPOC from Police Scotland to a future meeting in the run up to elections to focus on candidate safety and other matters.

Background to this study You are in the Accuracy and completeness of electoral registers section Home Our research Accuracy and completeness of electoral registers First published: 3 September 2019 Last updated: 26 September 2019 Background to this study - detail Historical context Figure 2.1 below shows the estimates of accuracy and completeness that have been produced between 1966 and 2018. National estimates of completeness have been produced irregularly but have been produced with a degree of uniformity that allows for making valid comparisons over time. However, comparable accuracy estimates have been produced less frequently. Although different methods have been used to calculate accuracy, the estimates produced in 1981 and subsequently from 2011 to 2018 demonstrate that the accuracy of the electoral registers has remained relatively consistent over time. 1 2 3 There have been greater fluctuations in levels of completeness. The highest levels recorded were in 1950 and 1966 (96% by the end of the canvass in both 1950 and 1966) but had declined slightly by 1981 (94%) and again in 1991 (91-93%) and 2001 (91-92%). 4 This gradual decline from 1966- 2000 was influenced by an increase in population mobility and the decline in the 1980s and early 1990s has been linked to the Community Charge (commonly referred to as the 'poll tax') where an estimated 350,000 people removed themselves from the electoral registers during this time in an attempt to avoid paying the new tax . 5 Levels of completeness declined more dramatically after 2001, falling to 85% in 2011. This decline has been associated with population change, population mobility due to changing housing circumstances, a decrease in public engagement with electoral democracy and changing registration practices combined with declining form response rate in the early 2000s. In the analysis of the 2018 results we consider these factors to place our findings into context of the evolving challenges associated with maintaining accurate and complete registers. The registers in 2018 In December 2018, there were 45,775,758 entries on the parliamentary electoral registers and 47,785,498 entries on the local government registers in the UK. The December 2018 registers represented a decline in the number of register entries from December 2017 where the number of entries on the electoral registers in the UK was at its highest following the 2016 EU referendum and June 2017 UK general election. Overall, there was a 0.8% decrease in the number of entries on the parliamentary registers and a decrease of 0.3% on the local government registers between December 2017 and December 2018. This follows two years where the registers have increased in size - albeit only a small increase between December 2016 and 2017 when the parliamentary registers increased by 0.8% and the local government registers by 1.2%. 1 This study looks at the quality of these December 2018 registers for Great Britain. A separate assessment is published for Northern Ireland. It is important to note that while the registers may contain more entries than our last assessment in December 2015 that this does not necessarily lead to them being more complete. This is because no judgement on the accuracy of the entries is made in administrative statistics so all entries are counted equal regardless of their veracity. This assessment allows us to make a judgement on the quality of the registers and, therefore, determine how complete the registers are. Additions to and deletions from the registers, 2015 to 2018 The electoral registers are a property-based database and, in order to maintain accurate and complete registers, EROs have to add and delete records for home-movers as well as to remove entries for those who have died and add entries for newly eligible electors and those not previously registered. The figure below presents additions and deletions as a percentage of December local government register entries from 2015 to 2018. This figure shows that there was greater activity in 2015 following the transition to IER and this suggests that the December 2015 registers, the registers on which our last assessment of accuracy and completeness was based, were of a high quality (as our 2015 assessment proved). Notably, in each of 2016 and 2017, activity around additions was greater in the rolling registration period than during the autumn canvass whereas deletions were still primarily recorded in the autumn canvass period. However, in 2018 more additions were recorded during the autumn canvass than during the rolling registration period. This difference between these years is likely to be the absence of a major national poll in 2018. In each of 2016 and 2017 there were high profile electoral events in the shape of the referendum of the UK's membership of the EU and a UK Parliamentary general election. There was a high volume of registration activity in the lead up to these events. In 2018 there were local government elections in 150 local authority areas in England and no elections in Scotland or Wales. This data demonstrates the value of the autumn canvass, particularly in years where there is less election activity, in maintaining good quality electoral registers. An alternative way to present this information, which emphasises the effect of elections on when additions and deletions occur throughout the year, is to look at the proportion of additions and deletions during the canvass and rolling registration.

This chart shows this for 2017 and 2018. It further demonstrates the above point that in a high profile election year we tend to see additions weighted towards the rolling registration period (61% of additions in 2017), whereas in years with less elections the canvass continues to act as the primary vehicle for additions to and deletions from the register (68% for both). The electoral registers and franchise The electoral registers are a record of the names and addresses of people eligible to vote in elections and referendums. The registers are the foundation of the voting process: they provide the list of those who are eligible to vote, and those not included on the registers cannot take part in elections and referendums. The registers are also used for other public purposes such as conducting boundary reviews, selecting people to undertake jury service in England and Wales and assisting law enforcement, as well as for credit ratings, and an edited version of the registers, containing only details of those who have not opted out of appearing on it, is available to anyone who wants to buy a copy. There is no single electoral register in Great Britain but one for each local authority area in England, Scotland and Wales. Each local authority's Electoral Registration Officer (ERO) is responsible for compiling and maintaining the local list of electors. Not every resident in the United Kingdom can register to vote and eligibility to register is directly related to the eligibility to vote which differs depending on the type of election. This means that EROs are required to keep: a parliamentary register: this is the list of electors used for UK Parliamentary elections a local government register: used for elections to the Scottish Parliament and National Assembly for Wales as well as local government elections, mayoral elections and Police and Crime Commissioner elections EU citizens have been eligible to vote in local, devolved and European Parliamentary elections since 1999. Therefore, EU citizens are entitled to be on the local government register. In order to vote in European Parliamentary elections in the UK, EU citizens must also complete an extra registration form (commonly referred to as a 'UC1') to declare that they intend to vote in the UK rather than in their country of origin.

The table below sets out entitlement to vote by citizenship. Those not listed on this table are not eligible to be on either of the two registers. 1 Franchise for citizenship and elections Citizenship Parliamentary Register Local Government register British Yes Yes Irish Yes Yes Commonwealth Yes Yes European Union No Yes Notes: Commonwealth Citizens resident in the UK who either have leave to remain or do not require such leave British citizens living abroad who have appeared on a UK electoral register in the last 15 years (or were resident in the UK and too young to be registered at the time of residence) are also entitled to be on the electoral register as an overseas elector and can vote at European Parliamentary and UK Parliamentary elections. They are registered in the same parliamentary constituency as before they went abroad or, if they were too young to register, in the constituency where their parent or guardian was registered. In England and Wales, the age at which citizens become entitled to vote is currently 18, but the electoral registers also include records of 'attainers' - 16 and 17 year olds who will turn 18 within the twelve month period starting on the 1 December after they make their application. In Scotland, the voting age for Scottish Parliamentary and local council elections is 16. This means that all 16 and 17 year olds in Scotland are entitled to be on the local government register and that attainers are 14 and 15 year olds who will turn 16 during the twelve month period starting on the 1 December after they make their application. However, entitlement for the parliamentary register in Scotland has not been affected by the change to the franchise so 16/17 year olds are attainers on the parliamentary register. Proposed franchise changes in Wales will mean that those aged 16 and 17 in Wales will have an equivalent entitlement as in Scotland. The system for compiling the register The electoral register is a property based database, with register entries linked to a property. This means that the quality of its information is affected by ongoing population change and EROs must add and delete records for home-movers, remove entries for electors who have died and add entries for newly eligible electors. In Great Britain a new register is prepared annually and reviewed most months. A key element of preparing the annual register is through house-to-house canvassing. The majority of canvass activity takes place between July and November. Each ERO is required by law to conduct an annual canvass of all properties in their area to confirm their electoral register entries and to identify electors who have moved or were not previously registered. During the annual canvass, EROs are required to send a Household Enquiry Form (HEF) to all households (and follow-up with non-responders). This form requires the respondent to reply to the ERO with the names of any individuals no longer resident and of those who are now resident and eligible. Since the introduction of IER it is no longer possible for a person to be added to the register as a result of their name being added to a returned HEF. Where returned HEFs include new (non-registered) individuals, a second communication – an Invitation to Register (ITR) – is sent out with a registration application for such individuals to complete. It is this application that asks for the person's National Insurance Number (NiNo) and date of birth which allows them to become registered. Individuals can apply to register online. An ERO also cannot delete an entry based solely on a name being crossed off on a returned HEF (as they could under household registration) – so they will need either a second source of information or to carry out a review of the individual's entitlement to remain registered. The proposed canvass process The 2020 annual canvass commencing from July 2020 is expected to be the first under a reformed canvass model. The new canvass model aims to allow EROs in Great Britain to better focus their resources in the areas of greatest need, and better meet the objective of the canvass than under the current system. The idea is that the canvass process will be streamlined for those properties which are likely to have not changed household composition, allowing the ERO to target their resources to where responses and updates to the electoral register are required. There is also an exemptions process for certain types of properties less suited to traditional canvassing methods – for example, care homes,

Houses in Multiple Occupation and student halls of residence – which allows the ERO to seek information on residents in a different way. We see these reforms as an important first step in modernising electoral registration. Read our full response to the UK Government's proposals for reform of the annual canvass process Our research programme Since 2004, the Electoral Commission has been the principal body in the UK undertaking research into the electoral registers with the long-term aim to: provide an overview of the accuracy and completeness of the registers in Great Britain and Northern Ireland inform the Commission's guidance and support for Electoral Registration Officers (EROs) provide up-to-date information on those groups which are more likely to be under-registered and thereby inform our approach to public awareness activity around elections and voter registration provide ongoing tracking of how electoral registers change in response to legislative developments and administrative or population changes and use this tracking to inform our role in scrutinising proposals and policies to revise the registration system This study of the 1 December 2018 registers establishes a baseline as we seek to measure the impact of upcoming changes to the annual canvass. In order to measure the impact of reforms to the annual canvass we anticipate conducting two studies on the accuracy and completeness of the registers: 'Before measure': Presented in this report measuring the 2018 registers ahead of reform to the annual canvass. 'After measure': in order to assess the impact on the reforms to the annual canvass which we expect to be introduced in 2020. We will also be collecting a variety of other data and working alongside EROs to understand the impact of the reformed canvass processes and how they are working in practice Appendices Accuracy and Completeness- 2018 appendices 1. Todd and Butcher, Electoral registration in 1981 (1981). This study set out estimates for the accuracy of the registers for April 1981 and used these estimates to calculate what the accuracy of the registers may have been at the time of the qualifying date for the canvass (October 1980). The study found that between 10.4% and 13.5% of the names on the April 1981 registers belong to people who by that time were not living at the address listed in the registers. The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys (OPCS) also estimated the proportion of names on the registers that were inaccurate in October 1981 was between 6.1% and 9.4%. ■ Back to content at footnote 1 2. The 1991 OPCS study also considered redundant entries on the registers in Great Britain at the time of the 1991 census. This found that between 6.0% and 7.9% of the names listed at addresses which were occupied at the time of the census did not correspond with people living there at the time, However unlike the 1981 study, an estimate for the percentage of names on the registers that were listed at addresses which were unoccupied at the time of the census was not added to this percentage. Consequently, the figures do not represent a complete picture of the possible scale of inaccuracies on the registers. ■ Back to content at footnote 2 3. The method used to calculate the accuracy of the 2014 registers was different from the one used by the Office for National Statistics in 2011. ■ Back to content at footnote 3 4. P.G Gray and A. Gee, Electoral registration for parliamentary elections: an enquiry made for the Home Office (HMSO: London 1967) ■ Back to content at footnote 4 5. McLean, I. and Smith, J. The UK poll tax and the electoral register: unintended consequences? (1991), Warwick University, Economic Research Papers, N. 398. McLean and Smith subsequently upgraded this estimate to 600,000 individuals. The Electoral Commission, The completeness and accuracy of electoral registers in Great Britain (March 2010). ■ Back to content at footnote 5 1. <https://www.ons.gov.uk/peoplepopulationandcommunity/elections/electoralregistration/bulletins/electoralstatisticsforuk/2018> ■ Back to content at footnote 1 1. There are some specific exceptions to these rules. For example, convicted prisoners lose their right to vote while they are imprisoned regardless of citizenship. ■ Back to content at footnote 1

Northern Ireland political transparency research | Electoral Commission Search Northern Ireland political transparency research You are in the Our research section Home Our research On this page Key findings Research methodology Download the full report First published: 25 February 2021 Last updated: 25 February 2021 Summary We ran research on public attitudes towards the transparency of political party and campaigner finance in Northern Ireland. This included views on the publication of information about donations and loans made between 2014 and 2017. The research, carried out by Ipsos Mori, is based on responses from a series of online focus groups conducted across Northern Ireland. Respondents were asked questions about their awareness of, and attitudes towards, the financing of political parties, as well as the arrangements for reporting and publishing such information, and how confident they were in the transparency of that regime. Key findings Support for transparent, unbiased information There is strong public support for transparent, unbiased information about how political parties are funded in Northern Ireland. However, there is limited awareness of and knowledge about how the system of funding and regulation currently works. This means that perceptions can be based largely on assumptions and instinct. Existing perceptions of party politics may contribute negatively to attitudes towards political party funding and donations. Public perceptions about the transparency of the system of funding and regulation can improve when people become aware of the controls and regulations in place around political finance. We play an important role in ensuring transparency and confidence in that system and will consider what more can be done to improve confidence and trust. Support for the publication of donations made between 2014 and 2017 The majority of research participants felt that information on donations made between 2014 and 2017 should be published, to help to improve transparency in the political finance system and to improve political accountability. We continue to call on the UK Government to change the law to allow us to publish this information. Concerns around the current political finance system in Northern Ireland For some participants, getting more information about party finance rules improved their perceptions of the transparency of the system. However, the majority of participants do not consider the current system in Northern Ireland to be transparent even once they know more about it. They gave various reasons for this, including the following. Giving an amount under £500 to a party or campaigner is not classed as a donation. This created a perception among the public that this is a 'loophole', adding to the perception that the current regime is malleable. The current thresholds at which donations need to be reported to the Commission for publication are seen as too high. Donations made between 2014 and 2017 cannot be published for Northern Ireland. These negative perceptions damage confidence in the regulatory system. While some of the attitudes are linked to wider issues around trust in politics, we will be considering what more can be done to improve public confidence. Research methodology Research methodology A qualitative approach was used for this research based on a focus group methodology. Given the low awareness on the subject in question, the focus groups were designed with a deliberative approach, involving 'drip-feeding' participants with information throughout the course of the session in order to aid in the development of informed opinions. Fifteen online focus groups were conducted, using both online discussion boards and video groups, engaging a total of 118 participants. A spread of participants from across Northern Ireland was included to ensure the data generated was broadly reflective of the Northern Ireland population. Fieldwork was carried out in August and September 2020. Download the full report Northern Ireland political transparency research - full report Related content 2019 electoral fraud data about electoral fraud in 2019 and view the data Public attitudes Read our reports about public attitudes towards voting Analysis of electoral registration data about electoral registration data Modernising elections research This qualitative research looks at public attitudes to voting and the information available around elections.

5. Supporting local electoral services delivery and resilience in Wales | Electoral Commission Search

5. Supporting local electoral services delivery and resilience in Wales You are in the Corporate Plan for Wales 2022/23 to 2026/27 section Home Our plans and priorities Corporate Plan for Wales 2022/23 to 2026/27 On this page Setting challenging performance standards for local electoral services Providing accessible guidance and support for electoral administrators Supporting increased resilience of local electoral services Ensuring the electoral system works effectively First published: 25 April 2022 Last updated: 25 April 2022 Summary Local electoral services face significant economic, social and environmental challenges which risk impacting on their ability to deliver well-run elections and referendums. We will help local authorities and electoral administrators in Wales and the wider UK to respond to these pressures. We will work to support the consistent delivery of high-quality services for voters, and the development of resilient local electoral services by: setting challenging performance standards for local electoral services providing accessible guidance and support for electoral administrators supporting increased resilience of local electoral services ensuring the electoral system works effectively Setting challenging performance standards for local electoral services We will continue to support Returning Officers to deliver the elections scheduled to take place during the period of this Corporate Plan, and remain prepared to respond to unscheduled polls if required to do so. We will also support Electoral Registration Officers to deliver electoral registration services, including the annual canvass in Wales, for each year of this Corporate Plan. We will set and ensure compliance with challenging performance standards. We will provide guidance and advice to help electoral administrators meet the standards and challenge them when we identify areas for improvement. We will review the performance standards framework for Returning Officers to further enhance its role in identifying and driving performance improvements, and providing accountability for the elections they deliver. Providing accessible guidance and support for electoral administrators We published accessible digital guidance for Electoral Registration Officers in May 2021 to support the delivery of the first reformed annual canvass in Wales and the other nations of Great Britain. We are working to ensure all guidance for Returning Officers, candidates and agents is published in this accessible format on our website, and we will continue to refresh this guidance on an election-by-election basis. We seek the views of electoral administrators after set of elections, and over three-quarters of administrators that responded to our survey after the May 2021 elections told us they'd found our guidance very or fairly useful. We will continue to seek feedback from and consult with electoral administrators to ensure our guidance meets their needs. We will continue to provide in person and telephone support, to help electoral administrators in their work. Supporting increased resilience of local electoral services Our research and the feedback we gather from electoral administrators after each set of elections tells us about the pressures on the electoral system that are currently being experienced at the local level. In response we will develop and deliver a programme of activity to support resilient electoral services. We will work collaboratively with electoral administrators to understand the challenges they face and identify solutions to address them. We will implement agreed measures to build resilience, working in partnership with local authorities and the wider electoral community to ensure maximum impact. We will also explore how data on the costs of electoral services can be collected and used to identify and drive efficiencies in the delivery of electoral processes. Ensuring the electoral system works effectively Electoral administrators need confidence that the electoral system works effectively. We will continue to conduct research to report on how elections have been run, including to secure a detailed understanding of electoral administrators' experiences. This will enable us to raise concerns and make evidence-based recommendations where appropriate, ensuring electoral administrators have confidence in the electoral system as a whole. We will continue to work closely with and support the work of the Wales Electoral Coordination Board which is in a key position to lead on the delivery of electoral events and activity in Wales. We continue to recommend that this group should become a statutory board similar to the Electoral Management Board in Scotland. This, we believe, will assist not only with the effective planning of electoral events in Wales but in ensuring a greater resilience to the electoral system. Navigation 4. Supporting and securing campaigner compliance with the law in Wales Section 4 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan for Wales 6. Making sure electoral law is fair and effective in Wales Section 6 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan and equality: feedback from local and national organisations | Electoral Commission Search and equality: feedback from local and national organisations You are in the May 2019 voter identification pilot schemes section Home Our research Voter identification pilots May 2019 voter identification pilot schemes First published: 12 July 2019 Last updated: 15 October 2019 Intro Our evaluation considered whether the identification requirements might have disproportionately affected particular groups of people with protected characteristics. We asked 165 national and local organisations to provide us with evidence of how the pilots affected the specific groups they represent. A total of 29 organisations responded, with 16 providing the more detailed feedback available below. Organisations Age UK North Craven "The majority of the geographical area that we cover did not have elections. Where there were elections we have had no negative feedback at all about the process. We always advise getting a postal vote." Age UK Nottingham & Nottinghamshire "We became involved with the Broxtowe pilot when we were asked to support publicity around the project. We were happy to help, and took the following actions: We identified those clients in the relevant post code areas (for whom we had GDPR permission to contact) and sent them a letter outlining the pilot and how they should comply with it We created entries in our internal and external e-newsletters and shared that in each of the editions in the 2 months prior to the vote on 2 nd May (combined circulation of around 700) We put information about the pilot on our website and out via our social media platforms. Broxtowe Borough Council covered the postage costs and a couple of hours of time to prepare the mail out. Our social media presence has followers across the age range which we hope will have encouraged all residents to comply. We have not been made aware of any issues at the polling booth, although there may have been some. If we do get any feedback to suggest that voters couldn't cast their vote, we will let you know. "Age UKs are always concerned when activities like this take place because it can have the effect of disenfranchising voters because they don't have, or can't get the relevant ID. The pilot was asking people who may have voted for many years to do something very different. Whilst many older people now use the internet safely and with enjoyment, many others don't, so the range of information would have been harder for them to find out and compliance with the new requirements may have involved multiple trips to obtain the necessary ID. Decisions about the merits of the pilot should be weighed against the risk of voter fraud which, by all accounts, appears to be very small. Factors such as transport issues should also be taken into account. Nottinghamshire has numerous good bus services but there have been cuts. Pensioners may well have access to free transport because of their bus passes but, if there is no bus, then they have gained nothing. When work cannot be done online, or there is no access to online, then these types of considerations should be factored into further roll-outs. "Whilst we did what we could to support the pilot in this area, there wasn't a lot of time for prospective voters to engage with the concept and ensure they had the necessary documentation if it wasn't already in their possession. We could, perhaps, have done more if we had had more time. I hope this minimal feedback is of some use and I will let you know of any other anecdotal evidence if we receive any." Broxtowe Youth Homeless "I have been promoting the pilot ID voting scheme here at our drop-in using your leaflets and through general chats. The feedback I have received is that not many young people are wanting to vote, but do feel the ID approach is a good idea for those that have ID. Although, there are many young people that access our service that don't have any form of ID for many different reasons. These young people struggle to even have a bank account that allows for benefits to be paid. "There was also a general consensus from our young people that feel a bit confused about voting full stop and not knowing which party to vote for. Myself and colleagues have tried our best to explain as much as can without being too 'pushy'. However, I do feel if a young people makes the effort to vote and they are turned away for forgetting this, would deter them from going back to vote or discourage others from doing so." Consultant Psychiatrists at Central and North West London NHS Foundation Trust (members of the UK Government's Access to Elections working group) "As far as we know no surveys were carried out, of those living with mental illness, to specifically gauge their views regarding voter ID and/or the impact of the voter ID requirement on intention to vote/impact on casting their vote on voting day. Around the time of the pilots we suggested that local Rethink Mental Illness & MIND groups might wish to undertake surveys in the ID pilot areas but we don't think this was progressed. We aren't able to offer any specific evidence for the voter ID pilots however we have previously explained: People living with mental illness are much less likely to register, and once registered to cast their vote, than the general population. Barriers to voting may be usefully divided into informational, attitudinal, psychological and physical. "A requirement for ID will be an additional barrier to voting (see below in which will act as a barrier) and will detrimentally impact on both our patient/service user groups intention to vote and on whether they successfully cast their vote in person or not. Potential negative impact on voting of ID requirement maybe related to: Informational barrier: Unaware need ID to vote. Attitudinal barriers: Resentment that require ID to vote/think too onerous a task etc Psychological barriers:

overwhelmed/disorganized/unmotivated/anxious/paranoid etc Physical barrier: - no actual ID/obstacles to access ID If the government intend to roll out a voter ID requirement nationally then it is important to consider how best to minimise the negative impact on voting for those living with mental illness by considering how to overcome the barriers listed. "We also acknowledge that it is useful to hold ID and that some of our patients/service users find it difficult to get ID therefore if the initiative were coupled with easier access to ID for patients/service users then that might prove attractive for some." East Grinstead Macular Support Group "I did mention it at our meeting after I received your initial email. The response at that time was that they all had voting cards and understood. They were going to wait until voting day to see if there were any issues." Friends, Families, Travellers "We are a national charity working with Gypsies and Travellers. Gypsies and Travellers are already very disenfranchised, with low levels of voter participation. We know this as we have run targeted campaigns to increase voter registration amongst Gypsies and Travellers, including those of No Fixed Abode. It would be more useful to look at measures which would increase their, and other socially excluded groups', participation in voting. Voter fraud is actually extremely rare, there was only one conviction in the 2017 General Election. "We have not had contact with any Gypsies or Travellers in the ten voter I.D areas on this issue so cannot comment on whether or not the requirement to produce I.D influenced their ability to vote. However we do know that the requirement to produce I.D stops Gypsies and Travellers from accessing other services. For example, we run a national casework helpline and we get lots of calls from Travellers who are unable to open a bank account because they cannot comply with the I.D requirements for this (even though the government have recently lowered the I.D requirements banks can ask for). And in a mystery shopping exercise we carried out this year of 50 GP's surgeries, we found our mystery Gypsy/Traveller shopper was unable to register at 24 of the surgeries because of a lack of identification or an address, despite this being illegal . "We consider that requirements to produce I.D when voting will adversely impact two protected ethnic minorities, Romany Gypsies and Irish Travellers who are already probably the most socially excluded ethnic minorities in the UK today. There is also a cost implication to having photographic I.D such as a passport or driving licence, which many of our clients don't have. Many of our clients are also of No Fixed Abode, i.e. statutorily homeless, as local authorities do not provide enough Gypsy/Traveller sites for Travellers to live on. Being homeless and not having an address provides another barrier to people obtaining the requisite I.D such as utility bills etc, for voting. "We are concerned that the voter I.D trials could have been undermined Travellers' and others' right to vote and would prefer to see this money spent on increasing their participation in the democratic process." Gendered Intelligence Purpose "The Government is trialling new checks on voter identification across several test constituencies in an attempt to curb what is claimed to be widespread electoral fraud. Most recently, at least 800 people were turned away from the ballot box during the May 2019 local elections. Gendered Intelligence has grave concerns about the implications of such restrictions on voters, of the potential long-term unfurling of even tighter restrictions in general and of disenfranchisement of certain trans and gender diverse people in particular. Who we are "Gendered Intelligence is a trans-led charity, the mission of which is to increase understandings of gender diversity across all sectors. Our vision is of a world where people are no longer constrained by narrow perceptions and expectations of gender, and where diverse gender expressions are visible and valued. We work closely with the trans community and those who impact on trans lives. We particularly specialise in supporting young trans people aged 8-25. Background "In an attempt to address voter impersonation, the Government announced plans to introduce the mandatory use of voter ID at several test sites. Several organisations have expressed concerns at the far-reaching implications for such trials, especially were they to be rolled out more widely. Issues "With just 8 cases of voter impersonation in 2018, the background to these trials seems like a solution looking for a problem. This disproportionate response to a relative non-issue will undermine efforts to reduce the democratic deficit and ultimately push tens of thousands away from the ballot box if rolled out nationwide. The recent trials (at the 2019 local elections) allowed for different rules at different sites: two pieces of non-photo ID, polling card or photo ID only were asked for at different polling places. As part of the trial, people with no access otherwise to ID should be able to apply to their local authority for a 'certificate of identity', but with lack of time and resource, several councils had to cancel their participation altogether. This does not bode well when for the realistic ability of local authorities up and down the country to enact these changes wholesale and without issue. Discrete and changing bureaucratic demands and whims alone should be a reason to look at these trials with a critical eye, let alone the very real issues of voter disengagement these trials are already causing. Whilst the current trials have allowed for non-photo ID at several sites, it is worth considering the very real possibility that these policies could eventually dictate for the sole allowance of photo ID if rolled out nationwide. As a trans-led organisation, Gendered Intelligence recognises the unique issues facing trans and gender diverse people when it comes to obtaining and presenting photo ID. Trans and gender diverse people showing up to vote, even with photographic ID, are liable to be turned away by officials if it is deemed their presentation and pieces of identity are incongruent. As way of example: A trans person whose physicality has changed may be unable to update their photo ID, to make it more congruent with their current appearance, through lack of money to do so. Trans people are less likely than their non-trans peers to be in employment (with workplace harassment and anti-trans recruitment widespread) and thus less likely to be able to afford photo ID where it is not provided free of charge by the local authority. A trans person may have to police their appearance in their local area, including the polling station, for their own safety (to avoid transphobic attacks). This may see a (trans) woman having to frame her gender expression in a 'male-coded' way to avoid public scrutiny or attack on the day of voting. However, the photo ID may feature this person with a different gender expression incongruent with how the official sees them, and they may be turned away. Remedies "Understanding that people's gender expressions and presentations may change underlies Gendered Intelligence's approach on this specific proposed aspect of voting. Widescale education and knowledge around trans identities would help reduce confusion or refusal of participation at the polling station. However, with wider society very much in flux with regards its understanding and appreciation of varied gender expressions, mandating the entire electorate to use photo ID at this juncture would prejudice many trans and gender non-conforming people, inevitably leading to discrimination and a closing-off of the democratic process. It is unrealistic at this point for every staff member or volunteer at polling stations nationwide to be sufficiently clued-in to the specific issues affecting trans people and their occasional yet ongoing need for incongruent photo ID. We must then reject any push for photo ID to be mandatory for voting for all people." LGBT Foundation General Concerns "Introducing voter ID risks disenfranchising a large number of people, furthermore voter fraud is not a significant problem in the UK. 7.5% of people in the UK do not have a photo ID, therefore introducing voter ID risks disenfranchising 3.5 million people. In the 2017 election just 28 allegations of in-person voter fraud were made, out of 44.6 million votes cast (0.000063%). Concerns for LGBT Communities "Decades of international studies show that restrictive identification requirements are particularly disadvantageous to certain voter groups who are less likely to possess approved ID for a variety of socio-economic and accessibility reasons. " reforms could therefore disproportionately affect young people, older people, disabled people, LGBT (lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender) people, BAME (black, Asian and minority ethnic) communities and the homeless. This is partly due to the financial costs of obtaining an ID: A new driving licence costs £34 if the application is submitted online and £43 if the application is submitted by post. A new passport costs £75.50 if the application is made online and £85 if the application is submitted by post. "Groups within LGBT communities may be more likely to earn less. One study based on data from the 2012-2014 Integrated Household Survey found that gay and bisexual men are less likely to be working full time compared to heterosexual men and that gay men in relationships earn less than heterosexual men in relationships. "LGBT people also face discrimination in employment, 18% of LGBT people who were looking for work said they were discriminated against because of their sexual orientation and/or gender identity while trying to get a job in the last year. This discrimination may be having an impact on employment and earnings although evidence is limited (trans communities also face a range of barriers to employment, these are outlined in section 4). "Not having a fixed address is an additional barrier to obtaining an ID. This will disproportionately affect LGBT people as 24% of homeless young people aged (16 to 25) are LGBT. This is hugely disproportionate as 4.2% of people aged 16-24 identify as LGBT and an estimated 0.3% to 0.8% of people in the UK identify as trans (although there is overlap between the two groups, with some trans people also identifying as LGB). Specific Concerns for Trans and Non-binary Communities "A trans or non-binary person's photo or gender marker on their ID may not reflect their gender expression or identity. This could lead to challenges from polling staff, which would likely be distressing and uncomfortable and may force someone to out themselves as trans against their will. "An additional unintended consequence may be that some trans or non-binary people are turned away from voting stations. Trans and non-binary people may be discouraged from going to vote for fear of such a reaction. "Trans people already face barriers to registering to vote, a trans person's National Insurance number may be protected and classified by HMRC as 'sensitive information'. This prevents the voter from registering online, instead they have to present themselves with a number of identification documents to their local council in order to register, a time burden that the vast majority of people don't have to deal with. Barriers to Obtaining a New ID for Trans Communities "In order to be able to vote without fear of being turned away, or in order to feel comfortable showing their ID, trans people may need to obtain new ID documents that are in line with their gender identity. This can be time consuming and costly: It costs £17 to change the photo on a driving licence. A new passport with a change of gender costs £75 and requires a letter from a GP or medical professional, which costs £25. Obtaining a GRC is the only way a trans person can change their gender linked to their National Insurance number. The total cost of obtaining a Gender Recognition Certificate (GRC) is £752, this includes a £140 application fee. Furthermore obtaining a GRC is a time consuming and invasive process. "These costs are a particular barrier for many trans people given that they face significant employment discrimination and are less likely to be employed: Just 63% of trans people had a paid job at any point last year, this falls to 56.2% of ethnic minority trans people. The 2017 Labour Force Survey indicated an employment rate of 75% for the general UK population aged 16-64 years old. 60% of trans people earnt less than £20,000 last year. 1 in 3 UK employers say they would be 'less likely' to employ a trans person. 1 in 3 trans people have been the target of negative comments or conduct from work colleagues in the last year due to the fact they are LGBT. LGBT Foundation's Evidence "LGBT Foundation does not have any evidence on service user's experiences of voter ID. Most of our service users are based in the North West and all the boroughs in the May 2018 trail were in the South of England and just two borough trialled in the 2019 election were in the North West which has limited our ability to collect experiences. Recommendations "Ideally we would recommend that voter ID does not come into force as it risks disenfranchising people and will discourage some people from voting, including a likely disproportionate number of people in minority groups. Voter fraud is not a significant problem in the UK so introducing voter ID is unnecessary. "However in order to address challenges faced by bringing in voter ID for LGBT communities a number of step should be taken: Training must be carried out to ensure staff understand that someone's gender marker on their ID may be different gender to how they are presenting and to not challenge this. Specific outreach to trans and non-binary individuals must be carried out, reassuring them that having an ID that does not match up to their gender identity will not mean that they are turned way or challenged. If the government chooses to introduce voter IDs they have a duty to support people to obtain IDs. This may include financial support or support with the bureaucratic process. One potential way of overcoming some of these barriers is by issuing free and easy to obtain voter ID cards. When Northern Ireland introduced voter ID they also introduced a free Electoral Voter Card. Critically, these cards should be free to access and contain a minimal administrative burden to obtain, as a difficult process to obtain them could lead to further barriers to voting. Furthermore these cards must allow people to register their gender identity they choose as well as give the option to register a non-binary gender identity." Mencap Mencap shared a copy of 12 responses they had received from service users at Braintree Mencap. 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 Q1. Have you voted in an election before? Yes Q2. What type of ID did you show when voting? Bus Pass Passport Passport/Bus Pass Passport Bus Pass Bus Pass Bus Pass Driving Licence Photocard Blue Badge Parking Permit Bus Pass Passport Bus Pass Q3. How did you find out that you needed to show ID when voting? Other (Told by friend) Social Media Other (Post) Family or Friend/ Book on voting Supporter/ Carer Q4. Did you need to get a new form of ID in order to vote? No No No No No No No No Yes No No Q5. Did you have a good experience when voting? Good Bad (Not very helpful and willing to help me) Good Bad (Didn't like going into booth, felt crowded) Good Good Good Good Good Good Good Good Q6. What can be done to make voting more accessible? Ok Electronically/ Online Advertise more N/A Q7. Is there anything else you want to tell us? N/A Polling stations can't help as not allowed but how ca I vote if on my own? We need more people to vote in the whole town of Braintree N/A A man form the Council came to tell us about it. It was very helpful. The Democracy Manager from Braintree District Council came to our self-advocacy group and told us all about it. The Council sent someone to talk to us about this and he listened to what we said and then the Council produced an easy-read booklet to explain it. Someone from the Council asked us how to make it easy for people with a learning disability to understand this new way of voting. Then the Council gave us copies of a lovely booklet about it to share with our friends. The Council made an easy read leaflet to explain what we had to do. It had some good pictures to help us. We liked the little booklet the Council gave us to help us to understand. All the people at the places where we went to vote were very helpful. I liked the booklet they gave us which told us what we had to take. We had a very good meeting before the election. A man from the Council came to ask us how the Council could make it easy for us to understand. Mid Sussex Older People's Council "I actually have a postal vote so for me nothing really changed. But having spoken to friends and others no-one from what I can actually gather had any negative thoughts about having to provide identity, in fact they thought it a good thing to have, and if it helps to make the voting system much fairer. And also helps reduce coercion of voters by some less ethical parties that is a good thing. "These days people are used to being asked provide their identity and from what I can gather from friends was not an issue for them. So very positive and a good thing to have to do." Royal Naval Association Sleaford "I was contacted by the Electoral Commission concerning their survey into the effects of the voter ID trial taking place in North Kesteven. I am the Hon Secretary of the Sleaford Branch of the Royal Naval Association, RNA, a small group of people who have served in various branches of our naval forces such as Royal Navy, Royal Marines and Women's Royal Naval Service, WRENS. "The RNA, by its nature consists of older individuals, the youngest in our branch would be in their late forties and the oldest a 94 year old WW2 veteran, with the majority being in the late sixties to mid-eighties age range. I scanned the literature produced by the local authority and posted it on our closed Facebook group, there are however some members that still do not have access to computers or the Internet. "Before the local elections I mentioned your survey at our March 29 meeting and again at our meeting on April 26th. At the March meeting one member in particular, an 85 year old, was not aware of the ID requirements and was, until persuaded otherwise, adamant that the polling card sent to each voter would be sufficient. Once the process was explained most members said that the ID requirement would not cause them any problems. One member, a 78 year old who, because of illness and infirmity, does not have a driving licence and also does not have a passport expressed concern and, I suspect was not going to bother to vote. "You ask about ways to make the voter ID process easier, in the discussions after my explanations I would say that the general consensus was that an ID card would solve everyone's concerns, bearing in mind that this group of people are quite used to carrying ID cards having carried one during their military service.

"In closing the group of people I represent do not have any problems with producing ID however in my opinion, and this is probably outside your remit, the big problem is voter apathy brought about by Brexit. I go to various ex-service groups in Sleaford, the local camaraderie club, a veteran's breakfast club and the RNA. I cannot think of anyone I meet who voted remain, Brexit is discussed endlessly at meetings and on various Facebook groups where more and more people are saying things like nobody listens, nobody cares, I am not going to vote any more. I think that voter apathy will be a bigger problem than the odd, minuscule amount of voter fraud." Sleaford Parkinson's Support Group "As far as I can tell, the voter ID local elections went as any other. There were plenty of reminders about taking ID so no-one was unaware of the need. As with myself, people simply presented their ID, answered the usual questions and voted. No hassle. No complaints." St Mungo's "Thank you for your email and the opportunity to submit evidence on the voter ID pilots. We do not actually run any services in this year's pilot areas and so will not be able to gather evidence from our service users. " We have shared our general views previously, including in this joint letter. " Stonewall "Stonewall is a national charity that campaigns for lesbian, gay, bi and trans (LGBT) equality, Britain and abroad. We warmly welcome this opportunity to respond to the Electoral Commission's call for evidence to support their evaluation of the Pilot Schemes. "Along with many others, Stonewall raised cases when the Government announced their plans to pilot a new vote ID scheme for the local government elections on the 3 May 2018. Not only are cases of electoral fraud very rare, we were concerned that a requirement to provide a form of approved ID would create a further barrier to minority groups who may want to vote. "For many minority groups, including LGBT, black, Asian and minority ethnic, disabled and homeless people, the complicated and costly process to obtain ID, such as a passport or driving licence, means many simply do not have these. "Furthermore, trans and non-binary people may have been particularly vulnerable to these ID requirements as the photo on their ID may not reflect their gender expression or identity. Stonewall was deeply concerned that this may lead to confusion or challenges from staff at the pilot polling stations. "Stonewall now urges the Government to reconsider rolling these pilots out as standard and instead, work closely with minority communities to understand what can be done to reduce the barriers they face when voting." United Response "Anecdotal feedback from people we support, families and carers suggests that compulsory use of ID for voting would create a further barrier for people with learning disabilities. "The attached response to the Government's call for evidence, demonstrates the level of difficulty already experienced by people we support to exercise their democratic rights; the necessity of producing photo ID to vote makes this even harder. "Feedback we had last year on a similar voter ID scheme in the London local elections, was that leaflets in the post to tell people about ID requirements, were inaccessible (not written in Easy read format) and easily missed for people with learning disabilities. Posters advertising voter ID from the local authority were few and far between and were difficult to read. And as you know, people we support can sometimes be less likely to have access to or own a passport or driving license or other photo ID. "As an organisation, we worked extremely hard on successive election campaigns with our Every Vote Counts campaign, to make elections more accessible for people we support. We managed to improve numbers of people with learning disabilities voting, and raised greater public awareness – with messages of support from then PM David Cameron as well as leaders of the other major political parties. "Every Vote Counts and our outline of how to make elections more accessible for people with learning disabilities, has been copied by others globally (see attached report which United Response collaborated on with Victorian Electoral Commission, Australia). "We genuinely feel that progress made in the past few years to improve accessibility would be seriously undermined by introduction of voter ID. It does seem unfair that instances of some people breaking the law and committing electoral fraud should impact on the ability of another group of people to vote. We'd be keen to hear about the result of the recent pilots and any substantive impact on voting in the UK." Voice4Change "Voice4Change England have been aware of the intention for quite a while to run new pilots to trial additional voter ID checks and the government desire that the pilots aim to provide it with further insights into how best to ensure the security of the voting process and reduce the risk of voter fraud. Hence, in May 2019 ten local authority areas: Braintree, Broxtowe, Craven, Derby, Mid Sussex, North Kesteven, North West Leicester, Pendle, Watford and Woking were scrutinised. "We understand once again, none of the areas looked at in these local elections has any great history of fraudulent activity – and again noted the absence of any major incidence of voting fraud taking place generally across the UK in elections in recent years. "Having spoken with some of our members in Derby and West Leicester, two of the areas where the current pilot takes place and where we have a significant reach, we would like to make the following observations: Difficult to assess any negative impact on voter's turnout, or whether it had been effective in rooting out fraud due to the relatively small size of the voter's sample. Making any analysis inconclusive. Asking for voter's IDs could be seen as a policy certainly has echoes of the strategy aimed at making society an uncomfortable place for illegal migrants. We maintain through very limited feedback from the two areas mentioned, that the introduction of the pilots was viewed generally as unnecessary. Our members expressed strong concerns that this type of policy will not only have minimal impact on the minuscule level of voting fraud but, will create potentially new and unnecessary barriers to participation in the electoral process if people become uncertain of requirements when they turn up at polling stations, further impacting negatively on registrations. "The Commission "evaluation method identified several areas where further work is required, where evidence was found to disprove concerns or where evidence was inconclusive. This relates particularly to the potential impact on some BME groups of people who may find it harder than others to show certain types of identification. E.g. Windrush scandal. "So, to sum up. Although we have not seen all the relevant information - from the May pilots. We believe the conclusions will again prove to be inconclusive in detecting voter fraud as a significant problem. It remains to be seen if it has been of significance in any of the pilot areas under scrutiny in May 2019. "Voice4Change England maintains its commitment to working with the government and the EC to improve the participation of BME communities in elections and voter registration drives." Related content Register to vote All you need to register to vote is 5 minutes and your National Insurance number. Donations and loans Find out about donations and loans to a political party, individual or other organisation Party registration decisions View our decisions on political party names, descriptions and emblems Report: How the 2017 UK general election was run Read our report about how the 2017 general election was run

Scottish Parliament Political Parties Panel meeting minutes: 8 March 2022 | Electoral Commission Search Scottish Parliament Political Parties

Panel meeting minutes: 8 March 2022 You are in the Party panels section Home How we make decisions Party panels On this page Welcome and introductions Minutes of the last meeting and matters arising Preparations for Scottish Council elections 2022 Electoral Commission Guidance EMB update E-Counting project Public awareness and partnership activity UK Elections Bill Updates (not related to Scottish Council elections 2022) Dates of future meetings First published: 26 May 2022 Last updated: 26 May 2022 Welcome and introductions John Hardy welcomed those present and apologies were noted. Minutes of the last meeting and matters arising The minutes of the last meeting held on 20 January 2022 were approved. Scott Martin (SM) noted that as stated in Paragraph 3.5 he would like to discuss matters further with Superintendent Faulds and Andy O'Neill agreed to arrange this. SM also noted that as there was another panel member with the same initials, he suggested identifying his comments as (SXM). Preparations for Scottish Council elections 2022 Legislation - (AON) said all legislation for the election was now in place. Electoral Commission Guidance Electoral Commission Guidance - (AON) Confirmed that all guidance was now on the website and the Commission's advice service now active to parties. He reiterated the standing offer to brief any groups and said the Commission would be attending party conferences this month to host a series of such events. EMB update Chris Highcock (CH) said Returning Officers and Electoral Registration Officers had been busy getting everything in place for delivery of the election. He said the event on 27 January had been a useful exercise and was content all Returning Officers were in a good place to deliver the election. They had engaged with public Health Scotland for guidance on how best to ensure a safe public event on 5 and 6 May and would use the same baseline measures as last year, though the general direction of travel probably indicated it could be more relaxed. He confirmed all Returning Officers were offering pre-submission validation of nomination papers by email and a range of directions had been issued. (SXM) said they planned to appoint one Depute Nominating Officer per authority. E-Counting project (CH) noted that Returning Officers were working with the Scottish Government to ensure that the e-counting system was secure. (CH) and James Kelly (JK) clarified the spreadsheet composite would be published as a complete finished document on the EMB website listing results of all 355 wards in Scotland and hope this would be by late afternoon on Friday 6 May. It would be possible to drill down into the result of each of the wards. As each result was declared, those reports from the system would be downloaded to a memory stick (one per contest) and published on the relevant council website as soon as available. (CH) agreed they would encourage use of the hashtag as (SXM) said this made the results easier to follow. Public awareness and partnership activity Catherine Heggie (CHe) said the Electoral Commission's voter registration campaign, which targets those who need a reminder to ensure they are registered, would launch on 11 March and run across a range of platforms. The Commission's paid digital campaign to target 16 and 17 year olds would also launch on 11 March and run until the registration deadline. The Commission would then run a paid campaign from 19 April until polling day , which would explain voting under STV. An information booklet would be delivered to all households from 28 March, and the information included was available in BSL and other formats on the Commission's website. (CHe) offered to provide a summary of all the voter information resources available from the Commission. Work continued with partners to reach recently-enfranchised voters, and the Commission would be running 'Welcome to Your Vote' Day on 10 March to raise awareness amongst qualifying foreign citizens, with support from EROs, councils and third sector organisations. (XSM) asked about candidacy rights of foreign nationals in the UK Government's Elections Bill. He understood it was based on reciprocation between EU member states and asked if further consideration in relation to foreign nationals standing for election (who are EU nationals) but from a State that is not reciprocating. Was this because of treaties negotiated by the UK Government? UK Elections Bill Hannah Standring (HS) had provided a written update which had been circulated. Updates (not related to Scottish Council elections 2022) Scottish Government Nothing further to add. Scotland Office/Cabinet Office A written update had been circulated. Boundaries Scotland Isabel Drummond-Murray (ID-M) said they were mid-way through the secondary consultation of Westminster Parliamentary constituencies but, disappointingly, five hearings around Scotland had been poorly attended. Boundary Commission for Scotland (ID-M) said they were now looking at presentations for the Scottish Parliament review with the first consultation in around 12 months. There would be a further update at the next meeting. Royal Mail Scott Forsyth (SF) said that he now had full responsibility for Scotland and this would be his priority. He had received 19 out of 31 voting plans. He asked (CH) when the weekly calls should commence and said he should come to him if anything was required. (SXM) asked for contact details of Scott Forsyth to be shared. Electoral Management Board for Scotland - Electoral Registration Pete Wildman (PW) said all was on track with the election being the first focus, followed by the next canvass between July and November and engagement ongoing with the Department for Levelling Up to introduce voter ID in December this year. This was the first time the new style canvass had been done and it was hard to say what the trends were but through learning and exchange of ideas they would see what worked and what had not. (SXM) asked about the UK Elections Bill and where that was with online postal vote application. (PW) indicated June 2023 was the date for that going live and as it was a reserved power, it was just for Westminster absent votes unless the Scottish Government chose to legislate for that. The Electoral Commission Nothing more to add. Dates of future meetings 2022 16 May at 11am Pre-meeting 10:30 and meeting proper at 11am

On this page Changes Our role First published: 5 July 2021 Last updated: 2 February 2023 Summary From May 2024, some EU citizens will not be able to vote and stand as a candidate in certain elections in England and Northern Ireland. EU citizens will continue to be able to vote while they remain on the register, but will not be able to re-register once they are taken off after May 2024. Changes The Act removes the rights of some EU citizens to vote and stand in elections in England and Northern Ireland. The changes apply to: local elections in England and Northern Ireland elections to the Northern Ireland Assembly elections for Police and Crime

Commissioner in England and Wales These changes will not apply to local and devolved elections in Scotland and Wales. EU citizens where the UK Government has negotiated agreements with EU Members States to allow its citizens living in the UK to vote, in return for the same right for UK citizens living in that country, will still be able to vote and stand in elections. So far these agreements have been made with: Spain Portugal Luxembourg Poland Other EU citizens who were living in the UK before the end of the EU Withdrawal Agreement Implementation Period (up until 1 January 2021) will also still be able to vote and stand in elections. The changes will not affect citizens of the Republic of Ireland or citizens of Commonwealth nations. Our role We will support Electoral Registration Officers and their teams to update the electoral registers and provide guidance on who is and is not eligible to register to vote. We will communicate with EU citizens in different ways to make sure they understand whether they can vote at elections. We will also update the paper registration application forms and canvass communications to reflect these changes, and ensure they are clear and straightforward for voters to use. We will communicate with candidates, through communication channels with parties and campaign groups, to make sure they understand how this change affects their eligibility to stand for election.

Related content Elections Act about the UK Government's Elections Act and what it means for voting and campaigning About the Elections Act about the Elections Bill, including the measures it contains and which elections it applies to. Preventing undue influence Read about the proposals to simplify and clarify the offence of undue influence (when someone uses, or threatens to use, force or violence to make someone vote a certain way). Changes to overseas voting about proposals to remove the 15 year limit on voting rights for British citizens living overseas.

From: Louise Edwards, Head of Regulation Format: Sent by email Full letter Dear Ms Patel, Complaint regarding EU Referendum campaigners We have now completed our assessment of the allegations you made in your letters dated 27 May 2018 and 3 June 2018. We aim to respond to complainants within 21 days of receiving their complaint.

I apologise that on this occasion it has taken longer. To complete the assessment we needed information from your office and from DDB UK Ltd (otherwise known as Adam and Eve). This additional stage extended the assessment. On this note, thank you for the additional information you supplied in a letter dated 25 June 2018, which we received by email on 17 July 2018. As our Enforcement Policy explains, we may open an investigation where we have reasonable grounds to suspect an offence within our remit has been committed. This threshold is applied to every case we assess, and has been applied in this case. I set out below the conclusions of our assessment. Joint spending rules The 'working together' or 'joint spending' rules for the EU Referendum were set out in the European Union Referendum Act 2015. They were known as the 'common plan' rules in that Act. Under these rules, campaign groups can work together to achieve a particular outcome, but their spending – when combined – must not exceed their individual spending limit. Where a lead campaigner is working together with other campaign groups, all the spending will count towards the lead campaigner's total. Under the rules, set out by parliament, the following does not count as joint working, as they are permitted and do not dictate how money is spent: Donations from an individual or group to multiple campaigners. A single supplier working for multiple campaigners. s registering late in the campaign. When looking at joint spending we are not necessarily looking for a written plan, although we advise campaigners to have something in writing if they are working together. But we are looking for evidence of: joint or coordinated spending; control or influence over spending by another campaigner; or discussions or consultation about campaign activity that affects spending decisions. You may be interested to read a recent blog we posted on this subject: When does working together break the rules? Thank you for sharing details of the two instances where you believe joint working took place but the spending was not declared: 5 seconds to mark an X/Don't fuck my future/Project Ruby videos Various campaigners that registered late in the campaign 5 Seconds to

Mark an X/Don't Fuck My Future/Project Ruby We have looked at the links you provided to items of spending reported by DDB and apparently connected to these videos. These show that DDB incurred and reported spending on the videos. The issue is whether that spending should have been reported in accordance with the common plan rules. We looked at the media reports you shared with us from 2016 which indicate that these videos were the work of other campaigners. The evidential weight we can reasonably put on these accounts is limited, as they do not offer reasons for their claims and are contradictory. We then looked at the following, to see whether it – individually or together – was evidence of joint working: The fact that donors to Britain Stronger In Europe (BSIE) also donated to Wake Up and Vote (WUAV) and BSIE. The law allows donors to give to as many campaigns as they want, and donations are not the same as spending. So we looked at whether there was evidence that donations from the same donor were being used by different campaigners for a common purpose. We didn't find any evidence to suggest this. The fact that DDB provided services to more than one campaigner. The joint spending rules aren't engaged if, for example, campaign A commissions its own services from a supplier and campaign B commissions separate services from the same supplier. For joint spending to happen campaigns A and B must commission services that are part of a common plan. There was one instance where we suspect this may have happened. I explain this below. The fact that BSIE hosted a campaign video from another campaigner on its website. Deciding to host a campaign video or share a link to another campaigner's work could be part of a common plan, if there was some evidence that this common plan existed. But it isn't evidence of a common plan in and of itself. DDB advises us that the videos were its initiative, funded by its donations. These included donations from WUAV and We Are Europe (both reported in its return although we note the WUAV donation is reported as from Ms Emma Duncan). However, WUAV reported spending £24,000 on services from DDB. The invoice references the '5 seconds' campaign. This indicates that spending on the same campaign activity was incurred by DDB and WUAV. It raises a reasonable suspicion that DDB and WUAV incurred joint spending that has not been declared as such. We have opened an investigation to establish what happened and whether or not any offences were committed. As I am sure you will understand, it would not be appropriate for me to discuss the investigation with you while it is ongoing. However, as with all our investigations, we will publish the outcome in due course. As you are the complainant in this matter, we will also tell you what we conclude. BSIE and other campaigners We reviewed the EU referendum campaigner registration dates you provided, and the donor and staffing connections between them. We note your belief, based on these dates and connections, that these five campaigners were set up by BSIE and acted under a common plan with it. The dates and connections are not in and of themselves evidence of joint spending. There wasn't a cut-off date for registering as a campaigner in the EU Referendum. Individuals and organisations registered throughout the campaign, with some on both sides of the debate choosing to register late on as their campaign activity was concentrated in the final few days before the poll. Again, campaigners could use the same suppliers, and the same volunteers, and donors were allowed to give to more than one campaigner. While we are not necessarily looking for a documented plan in order to show joint working, there must be something we can point to that explains why we think it happened. We looked at whether we could locate sources of evidence that BSIE set up these campaigners, or whether even in the absence of such evidence we could infer a reasonable suspicion of undeclared common plan expenses. After a thorough assessment, our conclusion is that we can find nothing beyond conjecture to support the argument that there must be undeclared joint spending between these various campaigners. There is nothing we can point to that reasonably indicates some kind of common campaign activity. As such, this does not meet the threshold for an investigation to be opened. Should evidence of any breaches of the rules for the EU Referendum come to light, we would of course look again. The Commission's independence and impartiality Finally, I must express my disappointment at your continued suggestion that the Commission's impartiality has been compromised in respect of how we regulate EU referendum campaigners. Our statutory duty, our published Enforcement Policy and our internal enforcement processes all provide clear and meaningful assurance that we regulate based on evidence. We also publish the outcome of all investigations so that voters can see the conclusions we make. Our investigations cover parties from across the political spectrum, and campaigners from both sides of the EU referendum. You will, I am sure, have seen our detailed report on the investigation into Vote Leave, Mr Grimes and Veterans for Britain. The report explains why we opened the investigation, and summarises the significant evidence on which our conclusions were based. I appreciate your support for the Commission's role and independence and believe the best way for us to maintain our independence is to continue our evidence-led approach. It would be wrong for us to take decisions on the basis that we must balance action in respect of 'leave' campaigners with action in respect of 'remain' campaigners. That would undermine our neutrality, rather than ensure it. I repeat my offer, made in my letter of 15 January, to meet if you would find that helpful. Though we cannot discuss live investigations we remain happy to provide a thorough explanation of our enforcement approach and processes. To arrange a meeting please contact our Public Affairs Manager Laura McLeod. Thank you for your letters. We will contact you again once our investigation into DDB and WUAV is concluded.

Related content

- Letter: Coronavirus and its impact on the May polls
- Read our letter to Chloe Smith MP \(Minister for the Constitution and Devolution\) from March 2020
- Letter: Spending by Britain Stronger in Europe at the 2016 EU referendum
- Read our letter to the Rt Hon Priti Patel MP from January 2018
- Letter: To Google about digital campaigning at the EU referendum
- Read our letter to Google from November 2017
- Letter: To Twitter about digital campaigning at the EU referendum
- Read our letter to Twitter from November 2017

Board minutes: 13 March 2019 | Electoral Commission Search

Board minutes: 13 March 2019 You are in the Electoral Commission Board section

Home How we make decisions Electoral Commission Board On this page Apologies and introductions Declarations of interest Minutes of the Commission Board meeting of 13 February 2019 (EC 14/19) Speaker's Committee update Key messages for the Annual Report 2018/19 (EC 15/19) Annual risk review (EC 16/19) Recommendations from innovation and development project 4: Improving youth democratic engagement (EC 17/19) Update on progress on new website Chief Executive's update (EC 18/19) Forward plan of Board business 2018-2020 (EC 19/19) Action tracker (EC 20/19) Chair and Chief Executive's meeting and meetings in devolved legislatures (EC 21/19) First published: 26 July 2019 Last updated: 26 July 2019 Meeting overview Date: 13 March 2019 Time: 9:30am to 12:20pm Location: Boothroyd Room, 3 Bunhill Row, London Date of next scheduled meeting: 24 April Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting John Holmes, Chair Alasdair Morgan Alastair Ross Anna Carragher Elan Closs Stephens Joan Walley Rob Vincent Sarah Chambers Stephen Gilbert Sue Bruce Bob Posner ,Chief Executive Ailsa Irvine, Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance Louise Edwards, Director, Regulation Craig Westwood, Director, Communications and Research Kieran Rix, Director, Finance and Corporate Services David Bailey, Head of Strategic Planning and Performance David Meek, Senior Adviser, Governance Tim Crowley, Head of Campaigns and Corporate Communications Natasha Hutchinson, Digital Communications Manager Apologies and introductions No apologies. Declarations of interest No new declarations of interest. Minutes of the Commission Board meeting of 13 February 2019 (EC 14/19) Resolved: That the minutes of the Commission Board meeting on 13 February 2019 be agreed. Speaker's Committee update Bob Posner confirmed that the hearing with the Speaker's Committee had been postponed to 18 March. We understand that Treasury had no specific observations to make, and were broadly supportive of the proposed budget, though concerned that further increases should not be proposed for future years. Key messages for the Annual Report 2018/19 (EC 15/19) Bob Posner introduced the paper suggesting key themes in the annual report. There was a need to find the right balance between marking our achievements and appearing self-congratulatory. The Board encouraged a greater emphasis on the work we have done with the devolved nations, particularly Wales and Scotland. There could be a stand-alone section on this. The Board also suggested that the report should continue to emphasise the need for legislative reform. The Board requested that the Annual Report highlight specific examples of areas of progress, perhaps by Directorate, and suggested including reference to the contingency planning work that we have done to ensure preparedness for a range of potential polls, and to the work we had done on digital campaigning. There should also be references to the work of the Audit Committee and the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee. Areas where we had missed our targets should be mentioned as necessary. Resolved: That the paper be noted, subject to the comments made. Annual risk review (EC 16/19) Bob Posner introduced the paper, and noted that we needed to be comfortable with the balance between risk appetite and risk capacity. The Audit Committee looked in depth at the risk matrix but the Board needed to take an overview as well. The Board noted that the most serious risk we faced was damage to our reputation, and asked for this to be more specifically reflected in the risks matrix. The awareness of reputational risk cut across a number of risks identified in the paper. There was also a need to look again at the definitions of red, amber and green to make sure we were getting them right, and to take account of how the risk context could change quickly. The Board heard how information was gathered from local authorities around the country on whether they had the resources and the capacity to deliver elections. This information was reflected in the risk ratings. Action: That risk and assurance be the topic for a future Commissioner Day. Consider how to revise risk one to better acknowledge reputational risk as important to the organisation. Resolved: That the paper be noted. Recommendations from innovation and development project 4: Improving youth democratic engagement (EC 17/19) Craig Westwood introduced the paper, and explained the two recommendations – one for a specific new project on helping educate the young on electoral issues, and the other for enhancing information provision within business as usual procedures. On the project, we had explored with an open mind how we would work with educators to deliver our work with them in this area. The aim was to move cautiously. We would initially focus work in Scotland and Wales, owing to the (actual and proposed) lower age franchise and forthcoming elections to the devolved legislatures. This would give us important insights that could be used in extending this work across the rest of the United Kingdom in the longer term. Where possible existing material would be used, for example from the ‘Democracy Cookbook’. The second recommendation was about putting in better links, using mainly the website, to important data about, for example, the location of polling stations. The Board noted the political sensitivities about some of these issues, and concerns from some schools about engaging with politics in the classroom. Commissioners also noted that we needed to be aware of the mechanics of doing this well, and to take care to ensure that whatever we proposed fitted well into the world that teachers were operating in. Concerns were also expressed about how to reach those not in formal education. The Board discussed the legislated role of the Commission and the extent to which there were restrictions on what we could do in educational terms. Various potential partners in this work were discussed, including the BBC, the Department for Education, and Young Scot. There was agreement that our approach should be developed iteratively in order to ensure it was fit for purpose. It was also noted that, in the context of the reduction of the franchise to 16 in Scotland, a lot of such educational work was already happening. There was also discussion about the respective roles of the Commission and of political parties in inspiring young people to vote. The Board noted that our role was not to tell people to vote, but to offer information and advice on how to register and vote, and how to better understand the electoral system. It was agreed that we should focus on providing resources to support teaching only in that context, and seek to adapt our approach as we gained more experience. Resolved: That the paper be approved, subject to the comments made.

Update on progress on new website Tim Crowley and Natasha Hutchinson provided an update on the project to develop the new website, and demonstrated the more flexible functionality of the new site, including much improved search facilities. The Board welcomed the work under way. Resolved: That the presentation be noted.

Chief Executive’s update (EC 18/19) The Board received an update on the contingency plans for unscheduled electoral events. It was a very busy period but good progress was being made on many fronts. Following a legal challenge from an individual, the UK government was expecting a court judgement very soon on whether ID pilots could go ahead at the May local elections. The Board heard about the proactive work we were doing to register new political parties and to improve the party register overall. There had been encouraging engagements in this area. We were also increasing our outreach to members’ associations, such as companies or unincorporated bodies that were made up wholly or mainly of members of a political party. The Board received an update on current litigation. The Board was updated on the inquiry by the House of Commons Public Administration and Constitutional Affairs Committee (PACAC) into Electoral Law. We would be making a written submission and sharing what we had submitted with other interested parties, to help influence their approaches. Commissioners noted that the PACAC inquiry was an important opportunity for us to lay out what changes in election law we would like to see. The Board was updated on some of the recent work that Human Resources have done, and the proposed changes to our approach to hiring staff on fixed-term contracts. There was also an update on the National Audit Office's (NAOs) interim audit of the annual accounts, which had gone well. Anna Carragher provided an update relating to Northern Ireland. Sue Bruce left the meeting at this point. Action: The approach to and scope of the proposed submission to PACAC on the electoral law reform inquiry be shared with the Board. Resolved: That the paper be noted. Forward plan of Board business 2018-2020 (EC 19/19) Action: Explore adding an Audit Committee meeting in April. Explore opportunity to liaise with the Australian, New Zealand, and Canadian electoral commissions at the July Commissioner Day. Add scoping of modernising voting project to the "items to be allocated" section of the work plan. Resolved: That the paper be noted. Action tracker (EC 20/19) Resolved: That the paper be noted. Chair and Chief Executive's meeting and meetings in devolved legislatures (EC 21/19) Resolved: That the paper be noted.

| Electoral Commission Search

In this section How political parties are registered View current applications Comment on an application

Party registration decisions Overview of registering political parties We are responsible for registering political parties in the UK. Political parties must register names, descriptions and emblems with us for use on ballot papers. The rules are in place to make ballot papers clear and easy to use. View current applications

We publish names, descriptions and emblems which we are currently considering as part of our assessment process. Comment on an application You can comment on a particular name, description or emblem as part of our assessment process. Party registration decisions When we complete our assessment process, we publish our decisions. You can view our decisions on names, descriptions and emblems since 2019. Overview of sign up for updates Sign up for updates if you want us to keep you up to date when we receive new party names, descriptions or emblems for assessment. Download political party emblems You can download a zip file of political party emblems . You can see decisions taken since 2019 on this webpage . You can see a party's registered emblems by searching for their entry on the register . Related content Party registration decisions View our decisions on political party names, descriptions and emblems View current applications View the political party names, descriptions and emblems which we are currently considering as part of our assessment process Donations and loans

Find out about donations and loans to a political party, individual or other organisation Registers of unincorporated associations Download and view the registers of unincorporated associations

2022 Northern Ireland Assembly candidate spending | Electoral Commission Search 2022 Northern Ireland Assembly candidate spending You are in the Campaign spending: Candidates section Home Campaign spending: Candidates First published: 27 October 2022 Last updated: 27 October 2022 About the election and data At the May 2022 Northern Ireland Assembly election, there were 239 constituency candidates who had to submit a spending return, listing details of what they spent during the election campaign. The dataset includes the headline figures for the spending incurred and donations received by candidates at the 2022 Northern Ireland Assembly election. We publish these figures to enhance transparency and to provide voters with information on donations to candidates' election campaigns and their spending and to ensure that this information can be seen together in one place. The full individual candidate returns are available for public scrutiny from the Electoral Office of Northern Ireland (EONI) for a period of two years after an election. The returns include the total the candidate spent, as well as a breakdown of how much they spent on things like advertising, transport and public meetings. They also include any donations the candidate received above £50 during the regulated period. The data taken from the spending returns reflects what candidates and their agents submitted to the EONI. We publish this information exactly as it appears on the candidate's return so that there is an accurate record of what was reported. Spending limits vary between constituencies and differ between single or joint candidates in the same constituency. The EONI has sent us the returns submitted to them for inclusion in this dataset. Where information is missing, this may be because the EONI didn't send them on to us, or because the candidate didn't submit their return to the EONI, or because the return did not include all the information it was to. Information about candidate spending data for previous devolved elections is available online in the National Archive. 2022 Northern Ireland Assembly candidate spending Download the data 2022 Northern Ireland Assembly candidate spending Related content Campaign spending: Candidates Find out about how candidates spend money on election campaigns Political parties, campaigners and other groups have to report their finances to us. Find out about campaign spending, donations and loans and annual accounts. Report on the May 2022 Northern Ireland Assembly election Read our report on the May 2022 Northern Ireland Assembly election Political Finance Online Find out how political parties are spending their money, and the donations they're receiving on Political Finance Online

Response to consultation on draft statutory guidance: digital imprints | Electoral Commission Search Response to consultation on draft statutory guidance: digital imprints You are in the Our consultations section Home Our consultations Statutory guidance on digital imprints - final draft On this page Summary How we developed the draft guidance for consultation Main changes to the guidance after consultation Themes raised through the consultation Conclusion Next steps Annex A – Breakdown of statutory consultation responses First published: 18 May 2023 Last updated: 30 May 2023 Summary Summary ‘Imprints’ are added to certain political or election-related material to show who is responsible for the material.

This helps to deliver transparency for voters about who is spending money to influence them. The Elections Act 2022 includes provisions requiring imprints on digital campaign material. The Act introduces a new duty on the Commission to prepare statutory guidance explaining the digital imprints regime and how the Commission and the police will exercise their enforcement functions under it. Once the statutory guidance comes into force, the Commission and the police must have regard to the guidance as they enforce the regime. For campaigners, showing that they have complied with the guidance will be a statutory defence to any offence under the new laws.

Between 31 October 2022 and 20 December 2022, we conducted a consultation on a draft of the guidance. The consultation received 22 responses from political parties, academics, and a range of other groups, including trade unions and organisations representing charities. We set out below a summary of the key themes and issues that emerged in the consultation, and how we have considered them all in updating the guidance and in our wider work to support campaigners. We are grateful to everyone who provided us with feedback. We have used this to inform the further development of the guidance, and to make it as clear and helpful as possible. We recognise how important it is that the people who will use the guidance support it. View the final draft of the guidance How we developed the draft guidance for consultation Before we commenced with the development of the guidance, we talked to a range of political parties and non-party campaigners from across the UK to inform the draft. We asked them about: their understanding of the imprint provisions how they use digital material in their political campaigning what digital platforms they use to reach voters how they see digital campaigning evolving in the future We used this pre-consultation phrase to draw on their expertise, as well as our experience of regulating elections, to produce a draft that would be subject to a public consultation. Main changes to the guidance after consultation Overall, feedback was positive and stakeholders felt that the draft guidance was “generally straightforward and well-written” and “navigates a complex and at times ambiguous statutory regime in an accessible way”. There were areas where additional clarity or examples were sought to make it clearer for parties and campaigners to understand the law and how to apply it in practice. In response to the feedback, we have made changes to the draft guidance. We go through the details of these below, but in summary the main changes include: Including more examples and a range of images throughout the guidance to support campaigners understand the rules and in what situations they apply. Making it clearer what factors are relevant to determining whether it is ‘reasonably practicable’ to include an imprint as a part of the material. Adding in a flowchart to explain the sharing exemption and including a new section that sets out where the liability lies when material is shared. Updating some of the terminology to make it easier for campaigners to understand and navigate. Redrafting the section on who the promoter is, making it clearer that when material is published by an organisation, the organisation itself will typically be the promoter, so no individual's name needs to appear. Including more information on the factors that the Commission will consider when determining whether enforcement action is proportionate. Within this report we have highlighted where we agree with recommendations to improve the guidance's intelligibility. We have also set out why, in some circumstances, we have retained the original wording. In some cases, we were unable to make the amendments suggested because they conflicted with the law in the Elections Act 2022 or were views on how the law itself could be clearer. In other cases, pieces of feedback were incompatible with each other. Themes raised through the consultation Material that requires an imprint Background Digital material is any material in electronic form that consists of or includes text, moving images, still images, speech or music. However, it does not include telephone calls or SMS messages. There are two different sets of criteria which determine if digital material requires an imprint. If someone has paid to publish the material as an advert, then an imprint is required if the material is 'political material'. If no one has paid for the material to be published as an advert, then this is 'organic material'. Organic material requires an imprint if the material is any of: election material referendum material recall petition material However, an imprint is only required on organic material if the material is published by or on behalf of a 'relevant entity', which is any one of the following: a registered party a registered non-party campaigner a candidate or future candidate an elected office-holder a registered referendum campaigner a registered recall petition campaigner Distinction between 'paid adverts' and 'organic' material 80% of respondents felt that the guidance was helpful in explaining what is meant by 'paid to be published as an advert'. However, some respondents did ask for further clarification on the distinction between the two types of material. We have therefore added some additional examples to explain that material only counts as a paid advert if the platform hosting the advert has been paid for the publication of that advert. We included information to clarify and make clear that: content from a social media influencer or paid ambassador who is publishing material on their own normal social media channels, would be classified as organic material rather than a paid advert, even if they are being paid by campaigner pay-per-click and pay-per-impression adverts would be paid adverts paying a platform to promote a particular post (through a mechanism such as a Facebook boost) would turn it into a paid advert, but paying for a general service (such as a Twitter blue tick) would not turn all the material posted from that account into a paid advert These changes and specific examples will support campaigners to better understand in practice how different types of material are classified and how to apply it to the modern realities of campaigning. Supporting campaigners to understand what is election material and political material 60% of respondents explained that the guidance effectively detailed what political material is, and 73% said that the information on how to apply the tests in general was clear. 73% said that more examples would be helpful. Several respondents noted the complexity of the tests that campaigners need to apply, highlighting that " publishers will likely have to make difficult judgements about whether their material requires an imprint...the burden of interpreting whether content meets this threshold will largely be borne by publishers ". This is true and something we know campaigners are concerned about, as the duty to include an imprint falls on the promoter of the material, and anyone else on whose behalf the material is published. We acknowledge that the law is complex and want to do what we can to ensure the guidance as clear and helpful as possible. We have made amendments to the draft wording that will help campaigners in two ways: we have been clear in recommending that campaigners should include an imprint on all digital material as best practice we have explained in more detail the criteria that determine whether material would be election material or political material A number of respondents asked for the guidance to include more recommendations and suggestions of good practice to help them comply with the law. We have therefore added more throughout, and have been clear that it is good practice for campaigners to include an imprint on all of their material. We have also explained that if they adopt a best practice policy of including an imprint on all of their material, this would bypass the need to engage with the detail of the legal tests. Several respondents found the categories used in the definitions of political material and election material confusing, and explained that it was hard to apply the definitions in practice. To help campaigners understand the distinction better, we have included an example image for each type of scenario in which something can be either political material or election material. This also addressed more general feedback we had from respondents who explained how more examples and graphics in the guidance would provide them with greater clarity and assurances. document. We also added exemptions to the flowchart summarising what material needs an imprint to make sure it is as comprehensive as possible. A number of respondents told us that they found the phrase 'election-related material' very confusing. We have therefore replaced 'election-related material' with 'election material' to ensure the terminology is as user friendly and clear as possible. We also updated the terminology from 'political entities' to 'relevant entities', to address concerns raised by some respondents, that some types of campaigners, including registered non-party campaigners, might not identify as 'political' in its ordinary sense and therefore think that the laws may not apply to them. Navigating the guidance A couple of respondents suggested that the guidance might be easier to navigate if it was structured by type of reader (candidate, political party, non-party campaigner, and elected office-holder) rather than by topic. We agree that structuring the guidance by reader type can make it easier for campaigners to read and simpler to navigate, and this is normally the approach we adopt for drafting our own non-statutory guidance. However, the requirement on the Commission to produce this guidance is specified in law and must relate to the whole of Part 6 (and Schedules 11 and 12) of the Elections Act 2022, covering the new digital imprints regime and that alone. We therefore have produced a single guidance product that can be used by all campaigners, and where possible we have used signposting to help them understand as clearly as possible related sections of the law. In order to make the guidance as user friendly as possible for different users, and we have added new sections specifically for candidates/future candidates and for political parties, and have moved and updated the section on non-party campaigners. This allowed us to give specific and targeted guidance to those reader types which may not be relevant to others and reflects how they operate in practice. Non-party campaigners Background Non-party campaigners are individuals or organisations who campaign at elections but do not stand candidates themselves. Non-party campaigners play a vital role in our democracy, and we are committed to providing them with as much clarity as possible to ensure they are not discouraged from active campaigning. Many non-party campaigners are issues-based campaigners. This means that unlike parties or candidates, who will typically include imprints on most or all of their material, non-party campaigners will typically publish material which may or may not require an imprint on a case-by-case basis. A third of the responses to the consultation were from non-party campaigners, or groups representing them. Understanding what requires an imprint There were requests from respondents for more detail on the requirements that determine whether material needs an imprint, especially as they relate to non-party campaigners and what sort of material does not require an imprint. Respondents told us that they were concerned about being able to make this assessment in practice, and that the different types of material they use could be hard to distinguish between. We have therefore added specific detailed examples that relate to non-party campaigners. This includes non-party campaign material that does not require an imprint, an issues-based campaign that does not relate to elections, and a campaign against government legislation. When we drafted the guidance, we included detail to explain if a registered charity followed charity law and guidance from the relevant charity regulator, any material they pay to publish as an advert is unlikely to require an imprint because its sole or primary purpose is unlikely to be one in the definition of 'political material'. We received very different responses from two different groups representing charities. The first welcomed our drafting noting it was "very helpful" to understand when an imprint would be required. However, other respondents were "concerned that this case could lead to complacency and inadvertent breaches". This is because for spending, the spending threshold (of £10,000 during a regulated period) provides a kind of buffer, whereas for imprints a single advert could potentially lead to a charity committing an offence. We do understand the concerns of some individuals but have retained our original wording to help provide as much reassurance to charities, who told us they want to manage the risks of them accidentally breaching the law in the best way they could. We therefore have highlighted that charities and other campaigners could for best practice include an imprint on all material that they publish around election times, even in cases where no imprint is required by the legislation. This would support transparency and we've added suggestions of how campaigners could do this in practice. More generally, a number of respondents wanted us to be clearer in the guidance that a charity (or other campaigner) putting an imprint on their material would not always mean that their material had needed an imprint by law, and that any spending on the material would meet the related 'purpose test' for regulated non-party campaigner spending. We agree that this is important to explain so have added in some additional wording to highlight that if campaigners include an imprint on all their material as good practice, then one cannot infer that an imprint was required (or that spending is regulated) from the actual inclusion of the imprint. Information that must be included

Background The imprint must contain the name and address details of: the promoter of the material anyone else on whose behalf the material has been published. The majority of respondents, (90%) felt that the guidance effectively supported them to know what information to include, and less than half saying that more examples should be included. The types of information that must be included Some respondents were very concerned about the requirement to include an address, particularly a home address, for security reasons. Some suggested that an email address should be acceptable, or that the address requirement be dropped entirely. However, the requirement to include an address is set out in the legislation so the guidance must reflect the law as passed. There was also a lack of understanding about whose details are required as the promoter. We have therefore updated this section and added examples, making it clear that if an organisation causes some material to be published, then the organisation is the promoter, so it is the organisation's details which must appear in the imprint. In this case, an individual's details may not be required.

Location of the imprint Background The imprint must be included as a part of the material, unless it is not reasonably practicable to do so. If it is not reasonably practicable, then the imprint must be included somewhere directly accessible from the material. Helping campaigners to understand what is reasonably practicable and directly accessible This was the section that respondents felt least confident with, as only 38% felt that the guidance supported them to understand when it is ‘reasonably practicable’ to include an imprint as a part of the material. This was the section that respondents were least confident with, as only 38% felt that the guidance supported them to understand when it is ‘reasonably practicable’ to include an imprint as a part of the material. To address this, we have added more detail about what is and what is not relevant to making an assessment of reasonable practicability. In particular, we have made clear it is based on the technological capacity of the platform being used, and not on other considerations, such as design preferences, effectiveness, or how much time or effort it would entail. 81% of respondents wanted more examples on direct accessibility and reasonable practicability. Respondents were able to provide a number helpful and illustrative examples of how different platforms and how their functionality might pose a problem somewhere for including an imprint directly accessible from the material. We have therefore made it clearer that the examples in the guidance of profile and pinned tweet are just examples of places that an imprint could appear, highlighting that a campaigner can add a link in to the imprint themselves – it does not have to be using the platform’s existing functionality. We have explained that there are many ways to make an imprint be directly accessible from a piece of material, and it is up to each campaigner to use the best option for them. We also added in new examples, including of a TikTok video and a Google search advertisement. Concerns about technological limitations and the pace of technological change There was a general concern raised by consultees about the pace of change of social media and how the guidance would cope with that – especially if the direction of travel for social media platforms is towards more deliberately restricted functionality. We are aware of the potential for fast change in this area but the guidance aims to give principles which can be applied to any platform with any functionality, including functionality not yet invented. All the examples given to illustrate these principles are necessarily limited to existing functionality as of March 2023. We have also made clear in the guidance that if there was a platform with such extremely reduced functionality that including an imprint on its posts would be impossible, then campaigners would not legally be able to post material that required an imprint on that platform. This is a straightforward consequence of the legislation. However, we do not consider that such a platform is in mainstream use. Republishing material Background When material is shared on social media, sometimes it does not need a new imprint, if it still includes the original imprint. This applies when someone shares material that has already been published with a correct imprint and the sharer does not alter the material. 71% of respondents felt that this section of the guidance was clear. However, a number of campaigners highlighted that the laws are particularly complex in relation to republishing: “explaining this clearly is a real challenge, and the examples are useful” “This is the most complex area of the legislation, but the tables provide clarity and are welcomed” We have therefore made minimal edits to this section, but added a new flowchart to summarise how the sharing exemption works, as well as adding an extra example. Liability The most common query respondents had was over where the liability lies when shared material is published without a compliant imprint – is it with the publishers of the original material, or with the publishers of the shared material? We had included detail on this in the draft guidance, but in response to consultation feedback we have added some text into the Sharing section as well, making clear that the liability is on the republishers and not on the individuals who published the original material. Enforcement Background The guidance sets out our approach to enforcement of the regime, the police's approach: the Commission and the police must have regard to the guidance when carrying out their duties under the Act. For campaigners, showing that they have complied with the guidance will be a statutory defence to any offence under the new laws. Overall, this section got good feedback from respondents – 73% felt that the criteria the Commission and the police will have regard to in considering enforcement action are appropriate. The National Police Chief's Council explained that “ the enforcement section (regarding proportionality) is strongly supported ”. Process and proportionality Some respondents requested additional information that is already within a in the Commission's separate Enforcement Policy, which is another form of statutory guidance laid before Parliament independently of this statutory guidance, and which sets out our enforcement approach to the rest of the political finance regime. This included information about procedure when the Commission receives a complaint, when and how a campaigner would be contacted following a complaint or an investigation being opened, what the threshold for opening an investigation is, and more detail on what we mean by ‘proportionality’. We are conscious of not replicating content from the Commission's Enforcement Policy within this separate statutory guidance, but we have added in some details to address the common questions we saw from campaigners. In particular, we have made clear that we will only open an investigation where it is proportionate to do so, considering for example the level of experience of the campaigner, their record of compliance, and whether they quickly rectified the matter. Conclusion The introduction of the requirements for imprints on digital material is important for transparency in campaigning, and it is essential that campaigners understand the new duties placed on them. The statutory guidance is a central part of the Commission's work to help ensure that campaigners are confident in applying the law to their activities. The digital imprints regime is complex. Many respondents welcomed how various sections of the draft guidance provided “ clarity ” and “ helpful examples ”. We are grateful to all our respondents and have used their expertise and knowledge of how campaigning works in practice to make the guidance as clear and as helpful as possible. Next steps We have presented the final draft guidance to the Secretary of State for Levelling Up, Housing and Communities. The Minister may then modify the guidance, before laying it for parliamentary approval. A statement of reasoning is required to detail any changes that have been made. The guidance is then subject to the negative procedure in Parliament, which means that once it is laid, it will be approved unless either House rejects it within 40 days of it being laid. Following approval, the guidance will come into force. We expect this to be in November 2023. Annex A – Breakdown of statutory consultation responses Questions All responses have been considered when updating the guidance and in our wider work to support making elections accessible to all campaigners. References to percentages in the text above are percentages of respondents who answered the question. Question 1: Is the guidance helpful in explaining what is meant by 'paid to be published as an advert'? Yes/No/Don't know Yes No Don't know Didn't answer % of those who answered the question 80% 20% 0% N/A Numbers 12 3 0 7 Question 2: Does the guidance effectively explain what 'political material' is? Yes/No/Don't know Yes No Don't know Didn't answer % of those who answered the question 60% 40% 0% N/A Numbers 9 6 0 7 Question 3: Is the information included on how the digital imprints tests apply for non-party campaigners clear? Yes/No/Don't know Yes No Don't know Didn't answer % of those who answered the question 71% 29% 0% N/A Numbers 10 4 0 8 Question 4: Are there any other examples we can include that would support your understanding?

Yes/No/Don't know Yes No Don't know Didn't answer % of those who answered the question 73% 27% 0% N/A Numbers 11 4 0 7 Question 5: Does the guidance support you to know what information to include in an imprint? Yes/No/Don't know Yes No Don't know Didn't answer % of those who answered the question 93% 7% 0% N/A Numbers 14 1 0 7

Question 6: Are there any other examples we can include that would support your understanding? Yes/No/Don't know Yes No Don't know Didn't answer % of those who answered the question 43% 57% 0% N/A Numbers 6 8 0 8 Question 7: Does the guidance explain clearly where the imprint must appear? Yes/No/Don't know Yes No Don't know Didn't answer % of those who answered the question 87% 13% 0% N/A Numbers 13 2 0 7 Question 8: Is it clear what is considered 'a part of the material'? Yes/No/Don't know Yes No Don't know Didn't answer % of those who answered the question 87% 13% 0% N/A Numbers 13 2 0 7 Question 9: Does the guidance support you to understand when it is 'reasonably practicable' to include the imprint as a part of the material?

Yes/No/Don't know Yes No Don't know Didn't answer % of those who answered the question 38% 62% 0% N/A Numbers 6 10 0 6 Question 10: Does the guidance give enough information on what is considered 'directly accessible' from the material?

Yes/No/Don't know Yes No Don't know Didn't answer % of those who answered the question 50% 44% 6% N/A Numbers 8 7 1 6 Question 11: Are there any other examples we can include that would support your understanding? Yes/No/Don't know Yes No Don't know Didn't answer % of those who answered the question 81% 19% 0% N/A Numbers 13 3 0 6 Question 12: Is the guidance clear at explaining what types of republishing will require a new imprint? Yes/No/Don't know Yes No Don't know Didn't answer % of those who answered the question 71% 21% 7% N/A Numbers 10 3 1 8 Question 13: Are there any other types of examples we can include that would support your understanding?

Yes/No/Don't know Yes No Don't know Didn't answer % of those who answered the question 43% 43% 14% N/A Numbers 6 6 2 8 Question 14: Are the criteria the Commission and the police will have regard to in considering enforcement action appropriate?

Yes/No/Don't know Yes No Don't know Didn't answer % of those who answered the question 73% 13% 13% N/A Numbers 11 2 2 7 Question 15: Is the information on obtaining information and take down notice powers helpful? Yes/No/Don't know Yes No Don't know Didn't answer % of those who answered the question 67% 20% 13% N/A Numbers 10 3 2 7 Question 16: Are there any other digital platforms or types of digital material that are not included in examples that you think should be? Yes/No/Don't know Yes No Don't know Didn't answer % of those who answered the question 69% 13% 19% N/A Numbers 11 2 3 6 Question 17: Is there anything else you would like to tell us to help us draft this guidance? Yes/No/Don't know Yes No Don't know Didn't answer % of those who answered the question 69% 31% 0% N/A Numbers 9 4 0 9 Respondents We had 22 written responses. Of those who told us, these were from:

Type of respondent Number
5 Academic 4 Non-party campaigner 5 (2 of which were charities/third sector) Trade association 4 (2 of which were representing non-party campaigners/charities/third sector) Police 1 Social media company 1

Donations and loans reported by campaigners at the EU referendum | Electoral Commission Search Donations and loans reported by campaigners at the EU referendum You are in the EU referendum section Home EU referendum On this page Table: Pre-poll donations Table: Summary of pre-poll loans and credit facilities Pre-poll summary documents First published: 26 July 2019 Last updated: 29 July 2019 Overview Under the Political Parties, Elections and Referendum Act 2000 as amended by the European Union Referendum Act 2015, donations received and loans entered into by registered campaigners, and those who later become registered, must be reported on a regular basis before and after the date of the poll. Registered campaigners must complete and submit four pre-poll reports. These cover all donations received and loans entered into over £7,500 during each reporting period. Pre-poll donation and loan reports Pre-poll reports cover the regulated period from 1 February 2016 to 22 June 2016. The first pre-poll report covers the period from 1 February 2016 to 21 April 2016. The second pre-poll report covers the period from 22 April 2016 to 12 May 2016. The third pre-poll report covers the period from 13 May 2016 to 9 June 2016. The fourth and final pre-poll report covers the period from 10 June 2016 to 22 June 2016. Table: Pre-poll donations Table: Summary of pre-poll loans and credit facilities Total of loans and credit facilities of over £7,500 entered into by registered permitted participants in the reporting period 13 May 2016 to 9 June 2016. Outcome: Remain Outcome Total Referendum Facts Ltd Remain Loan £10,000 Total £10,000 Outcome: Leave Outcome Total £0 Total £0 Full details of creditors can be viewed on our database . Pre-poll summary documents View full details of donations and transactions reported in the final pre-poll reports (PDF) View full details of donations and transactions reported in the third pre-poll reports (PDF) View full details of donations and transactions reported in the second pre-poll reports (PDF) View full details of donations and transactions reported in the first pre-poll reports (PDF)

Board minutes: 13 February 2019 | Electoral Commission Search

Board minutes: 13 February 2019 You are in the Electoral Commission Board section Home How we make decisions Electoral Commission Board On this page Who was at the meeting Apologies and introductions Declarations of interest Minutes of the Commission Board meeting of 5 December 2018 Business Plan and Main Estimate 2019/20 Governance update Remuneration and Human Resources Committee Chief Executive's update Forward plan of board business 2018-2020 Action tracker Chair and Chief Executive's meeting and meetings in devolved legislatures First published: 7 June 2019 Last updated: 12 August 2019 Meeting overview Date: Wednesday 13 February 2019 Time: 9:30am to 1pm Location: Boothroyd Room, 3 Bunhill Row, London Date of next scheduled meeting: Wednesday 13 March Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting John Holmes, Chair Alasdair Morgan Alastair Ross Anna Carragher Joan Walley Rob Vincent Sarah Chambers Stephen Gilbert Sue Bruce Bob Posner, Chief Executive Ailsa Irvine, Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance Louise Edwards, Director, Political Finance and Regulation Craig Westwood, Director, Communications and Research Kieran Rix, Director, Finance and Corporate Services Louise Footner, Head of Legal David Bailey, Head of Strategic Planning and Performance Petra Crees, Planning, Performance and Governance Manager David Meek, Senior Adviser, Governance Apologies and introductions Apologies from Elan Closs Stephens were noted. The chair welcomed the new Commissioners following receipt of their Royal Warrants. The board welcomed BP as interim Chief Executive following his appointment. Declarations of interest Alastair Ross is a senior consultant, Weber Shandwick Northern Ireland (remunerated), is a board member, Probation Board Northern Ireland (remunerated), and was previously consultant, Leonard Cheshire, Northern Ireland (remunerated). Joan Walley is non-executive director, Combined NHS Trust (remunerated), honorary chairman, Aldersgate Group (pro bono), honorary chairman, Burslem Regeneration Trust (pro bono), Council of Fellows member, Keele University (pro bono), and a member of the City Learning Trust (pro bono). Stephen Gilbert is Member, House of Lords (remunerated), chair of the Communications Select Committee, and principal, Stephen Gilbert Consulting (remunerated). Sarah Chambers is Trustee of Greenhouse Sports (pro bono). Minutes of the Commission Board meeting of 5 December 2018 (EC 1/19, 2/19, 3/19, 4/19) The minutes of the Commission Board meeting on 5 December 2018 were agreed after correcting an error in 6.5. The record of the Commission informal session of 5 December 2018 was noted. The draft minutes of the Audit Committee meeting on 4 December 2018 were noted. The draft minutes of the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee meeting on 5 December 2018 were noted. Business Plan and Main Estimate 2019/20 (EC 5/19, 6/19) Bob Posner introduced the paper, and explained that the Commission was required to submit a Business Plan to the Speaker's Committee in support of its annual application for funding (the Main Estimate). The proposed growth represented an increase compared to the expected spend for the 2019/20 plan year, and compared to 2018/19, but the total proposed spend was within the range of the five-year plan, as some of the spending had been brought forward from future years. The board asked for more details of the impacts to support the investment sought, including what would happen if our proposed increases were not accepted, and of efficiency savings. A commissioner suggested re-evaluating the long-term areas of spending, such as policy development grants, to determine if best value had been received from such spending. Each director outlined the expected impact of increased funding in their area, and addressed how these impacts were measured. The board heard that investments in political finance and regulation would streamline some processes and reduce the burden on that team, as well as on the parties and campaigners who used the system. The move to fully digital guidance would improve its usability, which should result in a reduction in queries. In general we had moved away from a reactive regulatory approach, towards a proactive approach, and were working more closely with political parties. The board heard about developments in our investigative approach, and our responses to government priorities. In relation to canvass reform, the proposed changes should deliver significant savings to local government and the investment would allow us to deliver our implementation functions effectively. The board considered the legislative agenda of the devolved legislatures, to which extra resource would enable us to respond appropriately. The board also heard that the new website would merge with the Your Vote Matters website, bringing benefits through overall savings in the costs of supporting two separate websites. The largest element of the budget increase in Finance and Corporate Services (FCS) was due to a large increase in contributions across the civil service pension scheme. Investment in FCS also involved bringing forward planned investment in corporate systems to drive improvements in governance and performance management to support greater impact across the Commission. The board believed that addressing the challenges of the digital agenda was key to what we were proposing, and should be emphasised in our presentation of the planned changes. The board noted that this would address voters' expectations and that there were benefits that would accrue to the voter from this work.

Action: The board endorsed the Business Plan and the request for more funds, subject to the draft Business Plan and covering letter being updated to include the information raised above before they were sent to the Speaker's Committee. Board members should be sent an information note reflecting the discussed efficiencies, value for money, and impacts.

Resolved: That the proposed Business Plan and Main Estimate, with the change noted above, be submitted to the Speaker's Committee.

Governance update (EC 7/19) David Bailey introduced the item, explained that this was part of the annual review of the Corporate Governance Framework and included some technical updates. The board would discuss more substantive updates at future meetings, such as the board effectiveness review in April.

Action: The board requested that the second-to-last sentence in G11, about the role of the Independent Adviser to the Audit Committee, be deleted.

Resolved: That the proposed changes to the Corporate Governance Framework, with the change noted above, be adopted.

Appointment of a Commissioner to a vacancy on the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee The Chair explained that the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee needed a new commissioner after the end of Bridget Prentice's term. The chair nominated Joan Walley.

Resolved: That Joan Walley be appointed as a member of the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee for a term of three years.

Chief Executive's update (EC 8/19) The board received an update on the contingency plans for unscheduled electoral events. The board received an update on the registration of new political parties, and the investigation work that arose from the 2017 UK General Parliamentary Elections. The board was updated on progress in preparing for the scheduled May polls, including updated guidance to reflect legislative changes, and the planned ID trials.

The board heard about the more proactive approach that the communications team had led on in response to recent inaccurate criticisms. The board also heard about the progress with the updated website project, including the steps being taken to ensure that web content is accessible. The board was told about progress made by the equality and diversity group, including the mentoring schemes and management training that has been offered.

The board received an update on litigation. The board acknowledged with thanks the great work that Louise Footner had done for the Commission over her 13 years of service, as this was her last meeting. Anna Carragher updated the board on the UK Government's potential further delay to holding Northern Ireland Assembly elections, despite recent lack of progress on re-establishing the devolved government. The board discussed their general position that due polls should not be delayed and endorsed that this should be communicated to the Government in relation to the Assembly elections and (as needed) be openly said by the Commission. The chair restated our position on the approach to retrospective transparency for donations in Northern Ireland. Sarah Chambers left the meeting at this point. Action: Craig Westwood to provide Commissioners with some referendum related background reading for their information. Resolved: That the paper be noted Performance and finance report quarter three 2018/19 (EC 9/19) Bob Posner introduced the paper, and summarised Commission performance in quarter three (October – December 2018) against our key performance measures and key milestones. Petra Crees highlighted the key achievements, such as preparation of guidance, the new observers' code of practice, and devolved accountability work. Responses were provided to Board queries on detailed points. Resolved: That the paper be noted. Forward plan of board business 2018-2020 (EC 11/19) Resolved: That the paper be noted. Action tracker (EC 12/19) Resolved: That the paper be noted. Chair and Chief Executive's meeting and meetings in devolved legislatures (EC 13/19) Action, That the introductory meeting between Alastair Ross and Anna Carragher and Ann Watt on 1 February be removed from the list, as it had not yet taken place. Resolved: That the paper, with amendment, be noted. Related content Register to vote All you need to register to vote is 5 minutes and your National Insurance number. Our Commissioners Donations and loans Find out about donations and loans to a political party, individual or other organisation Our Executive Team Meet our Executive Team, and find out more about them

Report on the May 2021 elections in England | Electoral Commission Search Report on the May 2021 elections in England You are in the Police and Crime Commissioner elections section Home Police and Crime Commissioner elections Currently reading: of 3 - Show page contents On this page Voting at the elections Campaigning at the elections Delivering the elections Introduction This report looks at how the May 2021 elections in England were run, how voters and campaigners found taking part, and what lessons can be learned for the future. On 6 May Police and Crime Commissioners (PCCs) took place in England. Most local authorities had local government elections and some areas had Combined Authority Mayor and local mayoral elections. In London, people could vote for the Mayor of London and London Assembly members. Many of these polls had been postponed from 2020. This was one of the most complex sets of polls held in recent times, with the additional challenges presented by the coronavirus (Covid-19) pandemic. Even with these challenging circumstances people had high levels of satisfaction with the process of registering to vote and voting, and were confident that they were well run. Turnout across the different elections in May 2021 was similar to comparable elections in previous years, suggesting that concerns about Covid-19 did not stop voters from taking part. Changes that were put in place by electoral administrators and the Government helped to support and reassure voters. People were confident that they could vote safely at the elections, and the overwhelming majority were able to vote using their preferred method. They adapted their activities in response to public health restrictions and were able to communicate with voters face-to-face, online and through printed material.

Transparency about who is responsible for producing campaign material online remains important for voters, and new digital imprint requirements will help voters understand who is paying to target them online at elections in the future. The experience of these polls has again highlighted concerns about the resilience and capacity of electoral administration structures in the UK, which are coupled with the challenges of delivering elections within an outdated and increasingly complex electoral law framework. We will work in partnership with the electoral community, the Government and local authorities to develop and deliver proposals to support resilient electoral services for the future.

Voting at the elections

The experience of voters at the May 2021 elections

Most people were confident that the elections were well-run, even though they took place in unprecedented and challenging circumstances. People were highly satisfied with the process of registering to vote and casting their vote.

Changes that were put in place helped to support and reassure voters. People were confident that they could vote safely at the elections, and the overwhelming majority were able to vote using their preferred method. New rules allowed people who were required to isolate to appoint a proxy to vote on their behalf as late as 5pm on polling day. This positive change helped to provide a safeguard for anyone whose circumstances changed close to the polls, and should continue to be available if people are required to self-isolate as part of the public health response to Covid-19. There was a notable increase in the proportion of ballot papers that were rejected at the Mayor of London election because people had voted for too many candidates. Good ballot paper design is essential to help voters understand how to cast their votes without making errors. Possible alternative design options for ballot papers should be tested ahead of future Mayor of London elections.

Voting at the elections

summary

This was one of the most complex sets of polls held in recent years, with the additional challenges presented by the Covid-19 pandemic. In March 2020, due to rising concern about the Covid-19 pandemic, the UK Government postponed the local elections that had been scheduled for May 2020, until May 2021. This meant that on 6 May 2021 there were: Police and Crime Commissioner (PCC) elections across England (except for London, Greater Manchester and West Yorkshire) Local government elections in most areas of England Combined Authority Mayor elections in some areas Local mayoral elections in some areas Mayor of London and London Assembly elections in London Some voters had multiple elections using different voting systems. In Bristol and Liverpool, for example, there were four different scheduled elections using two different voting systems. In both areas, local elections used the first past the post voting system, and PCC, Local Authority Mayoral and Combined Authority Mayoral elections used the supplementary vote system. A number of authorities also needed to hold by-elections and local referendums on the same day, adding to the complex picture for voters in those areas. During the summer and early autumn of 2020, the Electoral Commission worked with and consulted electoral administrators, political parties and governments across Great Britain to identify a shared set of high-level objectives for delivering successful elections in the current public health environment . These objectives were used to assess and test different options for supporting voters, campaigner and electoral administrators, and to identify and manage significant risks to successful delivery of the elections. We have also used them to inform our research, analysis and reporting on these polls. Returning Officers put in place new procedures in polling stations based on guidance from public health bodies and the Electoral Commission to comply with public health regulations and guidelines and to ensure that voters could be confident that they could vote safely. Voters who didn't want to vote in person at the polling station could also choose to cast their vote by post or appoint a proxy. To make sure everyone knew about the different voting options available to them and to reassure people that voting in person would be a safe experience, we – along with local authorities – took a lead role in communicating these messages before the elections. This covered a range of topics including how to find your polling station, options for casting your vote and how to get help at the polling station. Our voter registration campaign ran from 9 March until the application deadline on 19 April. Our ads directed people to the gov.uk/registertovote service and were promoted across TV, video on demand, radio, digital audio, out-of-home billboards, social media and digital display. In England, there were 852,830 applications to register during our campaign between 9 March and 19 April. A total of 18.3 million people were registered to vote in the local elections and 14.5 million in the county council elections in England. There were 32.1 million people registered for the PCC elections and 6.2 million for the Mayor of London elections. Voters continue to have positive views about how the election was run People had high levels of satisfaction with the process of registering to vote and voting, even with the challenging circumstances of these polls taking place during the Covid-19 pandemic. Our research shows that: 87% of people across England 1 and 88% of people in London were satisfied with the process of registering to vote. This is consistent with levels of satisfaction reported by people after the most recent comparable elections held in 2016 94% of people across England and 92% in London were satisfied with the process of voting. This is an increase from 2016 when satisfaction ranged from 82% at PCC elections to 86% in London more experienced voters are more confident and satisfied with registering to vote and voting than first time voters Three-quarters of people said they were confident that the elections were well-run; however, at least one in 10 were not. Although this is similar to the 2016 PCC elections in England (73%), it is lower than the proportion of people in 2016 who were confident that the local elections (82%) and elections in London (85%) were well-run. When we asked people why they were not confident that the May 2021 elections were well run there were some differences between voters in England and London, with voters in London more likely to identify concerns about Covid-19 and dislike of the voting system used. Reasons given by voters in England who were not confident elections well-run Reasons given by voters in London who were not confident elections well-run Wasn't enough information about the candidates (29%) Do not think it was safe for people to vote at polling stations because of Covid-19 (27%) [Information] about the elections (19%) Wasn't enough information about the candidates (21%) Candidates didn't canvass/have contact with people (18%). Don't like the voting system (20%) Did not trust that the votes were counted accurately (17%), Wasn't enough information about the elections (20%) Did not think it was safe for people to vote at polling stations because of Covid-19 (16%) Did not think there was enough information about alternatives to voting at a polling station (16%) We also saw that views about whether electoral fraud is a problem, and about the safety of voting, were consistent with other recent elections. Just over a quarter of people across England (28%) see electoral fraud as a problem, rising to 34% in London. This compares to the 26% of people across the UK who saw it as a problem after the 2019 UK general election. Voters continue to have positive views about how the election was run: breakdown The pandemic does not appear to have stopped people from turning out to vote Although the level of turnout at these elections was low, this is consistent with previous elections. In 2021 there was a slight increase in turnout for the local and county council elections compared to the last comparable polls. This suggests that Covid-19 restrictions or concerns did not stop people turning out to vote. Turnout at the PCC elections was also higher than in 2016. However, this is likely to be at least partly due to the combination of different types of elections in 2021. The postponement of some elections from the previous year, meant that more areas in England held local elections alongside their PCC elections compared with 2016. Local election turnout tends to be higher than standalone PCC election turnout. In London, turnout was lower than at the previous Mayoral and Assembly elections in 2016. However, we have no evidence that Covid-19 was a significant factor in that. Turnout in May 2021 compared to most recent comparable election County Council 2017 35.0% 2021 36.6% Local 2017 33.8% 2021 35.6% PCC (England only) 2017 26.0% 2021 33.0% London Mayoral 2017 46.1% 2021 42.9% People were most likely to tell us that they didn't vote because of a lack of information or lacking trust in politicians, rather than because of Covid-19. This further illustrates that the pandemic does not appear to have played a role in whether someone voted or not. England London There was not enough information/media coverage (10%) That they don't trust politicians (11%) Lack of information (10%) Lack of information (10%) That they don't trust politicians (10%) That voting takes too long (10%) That voting takes too long (9%) Forgetting/missing the deadline (8%) Illness (9%) 2 Illness (7%) You should be able to vote over a few days (6%). You should be able to vote over a few days (7%). People were confident that they could vote using their preferred method Although public health restrictions were in place at the time of the elections, people had a choice of how they cast their vote. They could choose to vote in person, by post or by proxy (asking someone to do so on their behalf). Most people who voted were able to use their preferred method: 93% of people who voted across England and 91% of those who voted in London said they were able to use their preferred method of voting first time voters and younger people aged 18 to 34 were less likely to say they were able to use their preferred method 6% of voters across England and 8% in London said that they were not able to vote using their preferred method. Among this group, around a quarter said this was due to reasons related to Covid-19 (such as being worried about going to the polling stations and having to self-isolate), rising to around a third amongst those who generally prefer to vote in polling stations. Voters in polling stations were confident that they were safe places to vote. Across England and London, a number of different measures were in place to make sure that voting and working at polling stations was as safe as possible during the pandemic. To support and advise on what changes should be made to voting in polling stations, we worked with public health experts across the UK to provide guidance for electoral administrators. We also produced resources for local authorities designed to help: reassure the public that voting in person would be a safe experience, highlight the other ways to vote, for those vulnerable or concerned encourage voters to start thinking about their preferred voting option early. Voters in polling stations were confident that they were safe places to vote: breakdown

Polling stations were set up and managed to minimise public health risks	How safe voters at polling stations felt with the safety provisions in place.
London	Very safe 56%
Across England	64% Fairly safe 39%
33% Fairly unsafe 3%	2% Very unsafe 1%
0.5% Don't know 1%	0.23% 77% of polling station voters said that they had enough information about safety measures to cast their vote safely across England, first time voters were slightly less likely to feel safe than people who had experience of voting before.

Half of voters across England who said they felt unsafe said there was nothing more that could have been done to make a difference. Almost all (99%) polling station voters said that they noticed at least one of the various safety provisions that had been put in place. People were most likely to notice Hand sanitiser provided on exit and entry Cleaning of pencils (where single use pencils were not used) Staff wearing face coverings Cleaning of booths A one-way system with floor markings Polling station staff also felt that polling stations were safe places to work (96% of staff responding to our survey agreed), and that the safety of voters was adequately provided for by the changes introduced (95%). The new safety measures meant that voting took longer for some people. The combination of polls, where voters had more than one ballot paper to complete, may have also contributed to this: just under four in 10 people who regularly vote in polling stations thought that voting took longer than usual as a result of Covid-19 safety provisions. Half thought that despite the measures, voting took them about the same amount of time as usual. Some voters had to queue outside their polling station before they went to vote. Electoral administrators and polling station staff told us that in most instances people were prepared to queue, and understood that it was because of the additional public safety measures that had been put in place: There were short queues at polling stations all day, staff were more concerned about this than the electors were. "The one in, one out policy in such a small cabin, coupled with three ballot papers all with different criteria which were too complicated for a lot of voters and had to be explained, meant that there were long queues all day. People who didn't want to go to a polling station had options for voting remotely. People who don't want to vote in person at the polling station can apply to cast their vote by post or appoint a proxy. If their situation changes close to an election due to work or disability, people can appoint an emergency proxy up to 5pm on polling day to vote on their behalf. The law was changed ahead of these elections so that anyone who had to self-isolate close to polling day because they had tested positive for Covid-19, or had been in close contact to someone who had tested positive, could also appoint a proxy. Remote voting information Most people knew what other options they had if they didn't want to vote in a polling station Most people found it easy to find information about how they could cast their vote either in person at a polling station or remotely by post or proxy. Our research showed that: three-quarters of people said that they found it easy to get information about the different methods of voting that they could choose from similar proportions of people who normally vote in polling stations said they found it easy to get information about different methods of voting (76% for elections across England and 80% for London) around a third of first time postal voters told us they chose to vote by post as they didn't want to go to the polling station because of Covid-19 related safety concerns, or because it was convenient a further 30% of first time postal voters across England and 27% in London said they were prompted by information from their local authority informing them they could register for a postal vote. A fifth across England said they saw similar advertising from us, rising to a quarter in London electoral administrators from over three-quarters of local authorities said that they did some form of campaign encouraging residents to apply to vote by post Most people who didn't want to vote in a polling station found it easy to apply to vote by post or appoint a proxy There was a small increase in the proportion of voters choosing to vote by post at these elections, compared with the most recent comparable polls. Percentage of electorate that chose to vote by post County Council 2017 16% 2021 19% Local 2016 17% 2021 21% PCC (England only) 2016 16% 2021 18% London Mayoral 2016 15% 2021 19% Our public opinion research found that there were many new postal voters at these polls with: just under a third of people who voted by post across England said that it was the first time they had voted by post nearly half of people who voted by post in London said they were first time postal voters Most people who voted by post for the first time found it easy to understand how to apply: almost all of these first time postal voters (92%) said they found it easy to understand what to do to complete and return their postal vote application People applying for a proxy also said they found it easy to understand what to do: nearly three-quarters of people who voted by proxy said it was the first time they had done so almost three-quarters of proxy voters across England said they found it easy to understand how to appoint a proxy, although a quarter said they found it difficult to understand what they had to do to complete the application People who needed to isolate because of Covid-19 could appoint a proxy to vote on their behalf The changes to the provision for emergency proxies meant that anyone who had tested positive for Covid-19 or had to self-isolate could still vote in these elections. Across all the elections more than 2,800 voters were able to appoint a proxy to vote on their behalf using these new rules. There was no increase in the overall level of proxy voting despite the new proxy provisions: for the local elections 0.01% of the electorate appointed an emergency proxy to vote on their behalf (including 2,313 voters at the PCC elections, 1,069 county council election voters, and 1,611 voters at other the local elections) for the London Mayoral election 0.02% of the electorate (1,160) people appointed an emergency proxy this was comparable to the percentage of electors (0.02%, or 8,518 people) in England who appointed an emergency proxy at the 2019 UK general election Administrators recognised the benefits of the changes to emergency proxy rules for voters. This change was not announced until late February 2021, and only came into effect six weeks before polling day on 24 March 2021. Some administrators found it difficult to update their plans to reflect the change in time to promote this option to voters. The extension of the emergency proxy provisions in relation to Covid and the updated application form were issued at a late stage which was problematic for planning. Most people who voted by post were confident they knew how to vote without making a mistake Almost everyone who voted by post said they knew how to complete and return their postal vote. Our research showed that: more than nine out of ten people said it was easy to complete and return their postal vote, compared to 6% across England and 8% in London saying it was difficult first-time voters, people who had voted by post for the first time and those aged 18-34 were more likely to say it was difficult to understand what was needed to complete and return their postal vote compared to other voters the most common reasons for saying it was difficult across England were not being clear which envelope to return the completed ballot(s) in (39%); not being clear what information to provide (30%); and receiving more ballot papers than expected (29%) Despite more people voting by post for the first time we did not see an increase in the number rejected compared to previous elections. Data from electoral administrators shows: 2% of returned postal votes were rejected at the County Council and London mayoral elections 3% of returned postal votes were rejected for the local and PCC elections The most common reasons for postal vote rejection were where personal identifiers (signature/date of birth) didn't not match, which was similar to the last time each of these elections took place. Rejected postal votes by election County Council 2017 2% 2021 2% Local 2016 4% 2021 3% PCC (England only) 2016 4% 2021 3% London Mayoral 2016 4% 2021 2% % of postal votes rejected because of mismatched personal identifiers County Council 2017 52% 2021 48% Local 2016 50% 2021 46% PCC (England only) 2016 47% 2021 44% London Mayoral 2016 66% 2021 63%

Recommendation 1 Recommendation 1: Retain an emergency proxy option for isolating voters Legislation introduced for these elections to allow emergency proxy votes for anyone who tested positive for Covid-19 or had to self-isolate helped to provide a safeguard for anyone whose circumstances changed close to the polls and ensure that they were not prevented from participating. Although the provision was not widely relied upon in practice, it was nevertheless an important safeguard to make sure that no one lost their ability to vote. We recommend that the Government should ensure this option continues to be available if people are required to self-isolate as part of the public health response to Covid-19. Voters in some areas found it harder to complete their ballot papers Around nine in 10 voters said that it was easy to fill in their ballot paper, but some people said that they found it difficult. People who told us it was difficult said it was due to: unclear instructions the ballot paper being complex/confusing confusion caused by voting in multiple elections too many candidates A quarter of people who had difficulties filling in their ballot paper in areas holding both local government and PCC elections said it was confusing that the elections used different voting systems. A third of people voting in London said that they found the two voting systems confusing. The percentage of rejected ballot papers at those elections using the supplementary vote (SV) electoral system in May 2021 was higher than at those elections using first past the post: 0.8% for the local government elections compared to 2.7% for the PCC and 4.3% for Mayor of London. This is consistent with the experience at previous polls. Voters in some areas found it harder to complete their ballot papers: breakdown Rejection rates for Mayor of London ballot papers were higher The number of rejected ballot papers for the Mayor of London election was notably higher than it had been at previous elections or at other elections held using SV in May 2021: in total, 4.3% of first preference votes were rejected, compared with 1.9% in 2016 most of these were rejected because voters had voted for too many candidates (over 87,000 ballot papers, representing 76.4% of all rejected first preference votes) at the PCC elections which also use SV in England in May 2021 the first preference rejection rate was 2.9 % The most significant difference for the May 2021 Mayor of London election was that a new ballot paper design was used, compared with previous London elections and other elections using the SV system. There was a record number of 20 candidates for the Mayor of London election. The arrangements for electronic counting meant they were required to be a certain size and format to be able to be scanned correctly. This meant that the length of the paper could not be extended to include all the candidates, so for the first time it was split to present candidates across two columns rather than one continuous list.

Recommendation 2

Recommendation 2: Ensure new ballot paper designs are tested before they need to be used by voters Good ballot paper design is essential to help voters understand how to cast their votes without making errors. User testing with the public can help to identify potential usability problems and improve the design of ballot papers. We recommend that the Greater London Returning Officer should test possible alternative design options for ballot papers for future Mayor of London elections, including two-column designs. We stand ready to provide technical support to this work, drawing on our extensive experience of user testing ballot papers and other voter-facing materials.

Campaigning at the elections

The experience of campaigning at the May 2021 elections Changing public health regulations and restrictions during spring 2021 caused uncertainty for campaigners, who had to adapt their plans as official guidance changed before and during the campaign period. Campaigners were able to communicate with voters face-to-face, online and through printed material, even though restrictions remained in place during the campaign. However, people in areas with PCC elections found it less easy to get information about the role of the elected office or the candidates or parties standing for election. Transparency about who is responsible for producing campaign material online remains important for voters, and new digital imprint requirements will help voters understand who is paying to target them online at elections in future. Changes to reduce the number of subscribers required for candidates to be nominated for these elections were well-received by many candidates and electoral administrators. The Government should review whether the range of current subscriber requirements are still proportionate for different elected offices.

overview

There was a record 20 candidates for the Mayor of London election, and 249 candidates stood for election to the London Assembly. This was more than at the last elections in 2016, when there were 12 and 205 candidates respectively. A total of 145 candidates contested the PCC elections in England, less than in 2016 when there were 169 candidates. Campaigners communicated with voters about a complex range of elections held in May 2021, including polls that had been postponed from the previous year. They also adapted their activities in response to public health restrictions because of the pandemic. Some candidates and agents get support from local or regional groups of their political party. This year, these local political party associations supported campaigns across a bigger range of elections than usual. This added a further layer of complexity as associations helped manage a wider range of campaign messages, spending limits and rules than they would normally do in one campaign period. All of this meant it was not straightforward for campaigners to plan and deliver their activities at these elections. The changing public health context caused uncertainty for campaigners Some changes to legislation were made close to the start of the election period but most candidates considered they were well-informed about them The Government made several changes to the law to support those campaigning in the elections: In December 2020, legislation was changed to make inflation-based increases to local council candidate spending limits. The Government argued that the pandemic could mean more emphasis on postal and digital campaigning and that this added to the case for limits to be increased in March 2021, legislation was changed to reduce the number of signatures required to nominate candidates, in order to reduce the travel and contact involved in completing nomination forms Given the changing context of the pandemic, it was understandably more difficult for the Government to ensure changes to legislation were in place at least six months before campaigners or electoral administrators needed to comply with them. Most candidates who responded to our post-election survey said they felt well-informed about legislative changes before these elections. However, some changes were made very close to when they would affect campaigners, and this added to uncertainty and risk for candidates and electoral administrators. The changes to nominations were announced in mid-February and came into effect on 10 and 11 March, which was less than a month before the deadline for nominations. Some prospective candidates had already started using old nomination forms before the change to the rules, which meant their forms were out of date. After the changes took effect, some electoral administrators told us that they found it challenging to quickly update their plans and prepare nomination packs which reflected the new rules. The main issue on the nomination process was the lateness in the change of legislation, but the change was welcome and did speed up the processing." "The main challenge was the change to the number of people could nominate a candidate. This came incredibly late and meant that we couldn't produce the nomination papers as early as we normally would, it meant that we had to change our candidate and agent training fairly late in the day and the guidance came fairly late. The discussions on what legislative changes there should be came too late and hampered the running of the election. Official guidance on campaigning activities changed during the campaign period People across England were placed under new lockdown restrictions from early January 2021. This meant that campaigners had to adapt their plans for activities to reach voters. They had to comply with general public health restrictions, and the UK Government also published specific guidance on campaigning for elections in England at the end of February: The Government said its guidance meant that up to 8 March, door-to-door campaigning and leafleting by individual campaigners were not allowed under the lockdown regulations, and leafleting was only allowed to be carried out through existing commercial delivery services From 8 March, the Government changed the lockdown regulations to support door to door campaigning activity by people who were campaigning for a specific electoral outcome. This included anyone who had been asked by a candidate, party or campaign organiser to participate. Hustings and public meetings could only take place remotely From 29 March six people, or two households, were able to meet outside to plan or deliver campaign activities, but campaigners were told not to enter voters' homes In April, campaigning was also briefly suspended as a mark of respect following the death of HRH, Duke of Edinburgh. When we conducted in-depth interviews with candidates who stood in the PCC and London elections, the majority of participants said they did not feel well-informed about these changes. While many candidates noted that changes to the restrictions were reasonable and necessary, this added to the complexity and the frustration that they reported. I think it was very difficult to know what was a regulation and what was advice. I don't think they were at all clear. And it didn't help that we were getting, what I certainly perceived as, mixed messages from different parts of the government about what you could and couldn't do [...] In terms of delivering literature. Whether we could put leaflets out with volunteers or whether we had to use paid delivers or whether we couldn't do anything. That was an absolute mess trying to work out what we were meant to do and what we were not meant to do. Some candidates also expressed concerns about the role of the governing party in deciding what campaign activity should be allowed ahead of the elections, although others considered that the Government would need to have this role during a pandemic. Our guidance to candidates, parties, and non-party campaigners about the regulated period included advice on the spending and donation rules, as well as the reporting rules , following the postponement of the May 2020 elections due to the Covid-19 pandemic. Our guidance also reflected legislative changes made as a result of Covid-19. We also asked parties and candidates for their feedback to better understand their questions and concerns about how spending could be affected by the pandemic, and updated the support on our website in response to this. s were able to engage with voters while following public health regulations and guidance s used a range of digital, print and in-person campaigning to communicate with voters Despite the initial restrictions on in-person campaign activities in early 2021, voters continued to receive information about candidates and parties at the elections from a range of different sources, and in a variety of formats. The most common ways voters reported seeing information on parties and candidates are shown in the following table: England London on a leaflet or flyer, either from a candidate/political party (40%) or another source (23%). On a leaflet or flyer from a candidate/political party (33%) In newspapers (14%) The household booklet about the London Assembly and Mayor of London elections (25%) On their local council website (13%) Newspapers (24%), News websites (10%) Leaflets or flyers from another source (22%) Social media (10%) on a news website (19%) Word of mouth (10%) Younger age groups and first time voters were more likely than older age groups and repeat voters to have seen information about the elections on social media, and less likely to have seen information on a leaflet or flyer from a candidate/political party or another source. Candidates told us that digital campaigning was particularly important during early 2021, when in-person activities were less manageable and they were unsure how voters would react to door-knocking and face-to-face campaigning. PCC candidates were most likely to have said that they used digital campaigning, where the geographical size of police areas made it impractical to deliver leaflets to every voter. However, other candidates told us that relying on social media to campaign restricted opportunities to get their views across to voters. They felt that social media didn't have the same reach as leaflets and that the audience for posts was often limited to those who were already engaged with local politics or who were their supporters. Some candidates said they were not able to campaign effectively Candidates generally agreed that it was clear what campaigning was and was not allowed in line with public health restrictions, although some candidates did not think it was clear. We also saw differences between PCC and London candidates as to whether they felt able to get their views across to voters. Candidates standing in the London elections were more likely to agree that they could get their views across compared to PCC candidates, and the majority of those who responded to our survey said they were satisfied the booklet was an effective way to communicate with voters. In interviews, some PCC candidates said that: the PCC elections were not well publicised and they struggled to reach all voters in the police area, and this meant that some voters didn't know that the elections were happening there should be a London-style household candidate booklet delivered to all households, as well as the existing choosemypcc voter information website Our research with voters also found that people in areas with PCC elections were less likely than people in London to say that they found it easy to get information about the role of the elected office. Almost six in ten people (57%) said it was easy to get information on the role of a PCC, compared to almost eight in ten of people (77%) who said it was easy to get information on the role of Mayor of London. People in PCC areas were also the least likely to say they found it easy to get information on the candidates or parties standing. People in London were most likely to say this information was easy to find and that they had enough information to make an informed decision. How many people found it easy to get information and had enough information to make an informed decision Found it easy to find information on the role Found it easy to get information about parties / candidates Had enough information to make an informed decision PCC 57% 59% 49% London Mayor 77% 77% 62% London Assembly n/a 74% 62% Local govt. (excl. mayoral) n/a 72% 52% Local govt. (mayoral) n/a 73% 54% Transparency about who is responsible for producing campaign material online remains important for voters The Government has proposed legislation that would require most campaigners to include information to identify themselves as part of their online campaign material in future. This change has also been recommended in our policy reports and by parliamentary select committees. A new digital imprint requirement will help voters understand who is paying to target them online at elections and referendums in future. Our research after the election confirmed that people continue to value transparency about who is responsible for political campaign activity online at elections with: seven in 10 people across England and in London (70% and 72% respectively) agree that it is important for them to know who has produced the political information they see online. This was consistent with our findings after the 2019 UK Parliamentary General Election six in 10 people across England and in London (62% and 60% respectively) said they would trust digital campaigning material more if they knew who produced it Younger voters appear to be more confident that they can scrutinise the trustworthiness of political information they find online with: six in 10 18-34 year olds across England and London (57% and 59% respectively) agreed that information available online about politics is trustworthy, compared with just under half of 35-54 year-olds (43% and 49%) and around a third of people aged over 55 (37% and 34%) The differences in trust across England and London were also reflected in people's confidence in finding the sources of political information online with: similar proportions of 18-34 year olds (60% and 58% respectively) agreed that they can find out who has produced the political information they see online, compared with 35-54 year-olds (44% and 54%) and people aged over 55 (33% and 29%) Processes for submitting nominations prioritised access and safety Changes to nomination processes to minimise public health risks were welcomed and candidates agreed the process was well-run While completed nomination forms were still required to be submitted by hand, electoral administrators made changes to their processes to minimise risks to candidates, agents and their staff: candidate and agent briefings were often held using video conferencing tools informal checking of nomination forms was more frequently offered using email arrangements for safe hand delivery of nomination forms ensuring social distancing measures were in place These new measures were generally welcomed and feedback we received from candidates was that the nomination processes were well-run. Both candidates and electoral administrators noted in their feedback that many of these practical measures should be retained for future elections, regardless of the public health situation. We devised a system where candidates emailed their nomination form to us for an informal check. This worked really well as they were only allowed to deliver them when they were correct, we will definitely be using this system going forward. However, some candidates thought that further improvements could still be made to make the process more accessible, such as by accepting nomination papers electronically, or by allowing electronic signatures to be used on nomination forms. Candidates and administrators had mixed views about changes to subscriber requirements To minimise travel and contact involved in completing nomination forms, the Government legislated to significantly reduce the number of subscribers required by candidates to stand in the elections. For example, candidates standing to be Mayor of London needed to collect 66 signatures from registered voters instead of 330, while PCC candidates needed to collect the equivalent of two signatures per local authority in the police area instead of 100 in total. Overall, candidates and their agents said that the reduction in the number of subscribers needed made it easier for them to stand as a candidate. Some candidates in London said they would not have been able to stand in the elections without the reduction:

Yes if I had been required to get 100 signatures it would have been a significant challenge under Covid. We faced some challenges with securing nomination signatures in the context of COVID, and whilst it helped to have to get fewer signatures this year it didn't mitigate the difficulties entirely. The process for checking and delivering nomination papers with London Elects was very efficient and well run. Some candidates did however express caution about the precedent the changes may set and keeping the reduced requirement for future elections, because they said that subscribers demonstrate that candidates have a certain level of support before standing: I think it should go back to having more people to be honest, there's a reason why you have a hundred when you've got 1.4 million in your electorate.

Electoral administrators told us that the reduction in subscribers helped them process nominations more efficiently, and they also recognised the benefits for campaigners. However, some expressed reservations about the possibility of retaining the new number of subscribers for future elections: The reduction in the number of subscribers certainly helped me in dealing with nominations and also the candidates who were only required to get a reduced number depending on the election. The nominations process was fine, and the reduction in the number of signatories for principal council elections helped us as well as candidates. That said, I would not favour it permanently as the requirement for ten signatures does in my view strike a balance in the sense of demonstrating a (minimal) level of support for candidature.

Recommendations

Recommendation 3: Review subscriber requirements for nominating candidates

The requirement to collect signatures from subscribers ensures that candidates have some level of local support, and is intended to deter frivolous candidates. The number of subscribers required should be proportionate to the degree of risk relating to different types of elections and elected offices. We recommend that the Government should review whether the range of current subscriber requirements are proportionate for different elected offices, taking into account evidence from this year's polls and conclusions from our Standing for Election review in 2015.

Regulators strengthened collaboration during the election period. For the May 2021 elections, we worked with regulator partners to run an online public awareness campaign and encourage voters to find more information from a new section of our website. The campaign aimed to encourage people to think more carefully about political campaign adverts they see online, and it provided information about which regulators or other organisations they could contact if they had concerns. Evaluation of the campaign showed that over 7.6 million people saw our adverts on websites and social media platforms. The number of people who clicked through to find more information from the adverts was encouraging, and provides a good foundation for further awareness-raising activity at future elections.

A group of representatives from 3 met regularly throughout the election period to share issues. This initiative built on a regulators' forum that we have co-ordinated since 2016. Regular discussions during the campaign period allowed the regulators to develop a greater understanding of their roles in helping to support public confidence in elections. We will continue to work with other regulators during election periods to strengthen this type of collaboration for future polls. Delivering the elections The experience of electoral administration at the May 2021 elections These polls were well-run, despite the complex range of elections taking place and the significant challenges presented by the pandemic. Returning Officers and electoral administrators faced considerable challenges securing polling station venues, and finding and training staff to work on polling day. Also, although many electoral administrators were satisfied with the support provided by their suppliers, some experienced significant problems. The particular circumstances that led to the development and introduction of legislative changes in February and March 2021 were unprecedented and unavoidable, but the timing of these changes close to the start of the election period created additional challenges and risks for the delivery of the elections. The experience of these polls has again highlighted concerns about the resilience and capacity of electoral administration structures in the UK, which are coupled with the challenges of delivering elections within an outdated and increasingly complex electoral law framework. We will work in partnership with the electoral community, Government and local authorities to develop and deliver proposals to support resilient electoral services for future elections. Delivering the elections introduction Our evidence shows that the May 2021 polls were well-run. Voters and campaigners reported high levels of satisfaction and confidence, and there were only a small number of issues that had an impact on their experience in some areas. Our research shows: 94% of people across England and 92% in London were satisfied with the process of voting three-quarters of people said they were confident that the elections were well-run nine in 10 candidates were confident the elections were well run For Returning Officers and electoral administrators, however, these elections presented unique and difficult challenges, and their considerable effort and commitment enabled the polls to be delivered successfully. The capacity and resilience of electoral administration teams and suppliers are significant risks for future polls The challenging circumstances of these elections highlighted the limited capacity of some local electoral services teams Electoral administrators' ability to plan and deliver their work for these elections was impacted by Covid-19 restrictions in the months leading up to them: 95% said that the Covid-19 restrictions had made their job more difficult, with the same proportion saying that their workload increased because of the Covid-19 restrictions during the elections 63% said that they were concerned for their own health because of Covid-19 Some electoral administrators told us that they weren't able to rely on support from other parts of their local authorities in the way they would normally, and that they had seen a significant impact on the capacity and wellbeing of their teams: Project management was extremely difficult in these circumstances. The usual assistance from others in my council was limited due to them not being in the office or being under similar pressure in their area of the business. Our organisation just did not have the capacity to work in the way we usually do, and more work was left to a stretched elections team." "This election almost failed. Without the extended overtime hours worked by core staff it would have failed. The local authority did not have resources available during a pandemic. Every task took longer and we had to fight all the way to make it happen. Administrators also highlighted the difficulty they had finding suitable venues to use as polling stations. Covid-19 restrictions meant it was harder to contact people to make bookings, and in some venues there were issues with the facilities as they had been shut down for long periods in advance due to lockdowns. Confirming polling station bookings was very difficult as venues had been closed for a year. Many venues were unsure if opening for an election was legal under lockdown restrictions. Many venues were reluctant to allow us to use social distancing floor and wall signs." "We had to change 40 polling station venues due to Covid, and supply things like water to others – where the premises had been shut and only reopened for our purposes and water supplies were not back on." "We did have issue with polling stations as a result of COVID. We had a number of buildings closed, or staff running sites being furloughed, so unable to make contact to arrange. This resulted overall in 29 new stations being used this year. Complex combinations of polls increased the risk to the successful delivery of the polls in some areas. The elections that were postponed from May 2020 meant that there were complex combinations of polls taking place in some parts of England. In many areas of England PCC elections were held at the same time as elections to County, Borough or District Councils, and parish council elections were also held in some areas. Four different types of elections were held on the same day in Liverpool, Bristol, Cambridge and Hartlepool, including mayoral elections and a Parliamentary by-election. Electoral administrators told us that the scale and extent of combination increased the risks to the successful delivery of the elections: The complexity of the combination of the polls led to errors on ballot papers which would just not occur under usual election conditions. Although these were rectified and did not lead to any greater issues the combination of polls did mean that there was a greater risk of error." "The combination of city and county elections caused the biggest challenge, particularly in relation to postal vote openings and the verification process. We had to design new procedures and systems, which took significant time and while they worked, the human element in implementing them did cause some problems. We were able to resolve them, but it was very labour intensive. In some cases, in delivering the particular combination of polls in May 2021, errors arose which meant that voters didn't receive the service they should be able to expect. For example, one local authority 4 issued postal vote packs without the political party emblems that should have been shown alongside the candidate names on the ballot paper for the local election, an error which has led to them being assessed as not fully meeting the Commission's performance standards. While recognising the pressures faced by Returning Officers and their teams, errors like these directly impact on voters' experience and can affect people's confidence in well-run elections. Finding staff to work on polling day was a key challenge for Returning Officers and electoral administrators. Finding staff to work in polling stations was a challenge for most administrators, although support was provided by the Cabinet Office and other organisations to help address this issue. Many local authorities employed extra staff as 'Covid-19 marshals', to help support social distancing in any queues and to make sure people knew about the restrictions inside polling stations. This meant more staff were needed than usual and our research suggests that a quarter of polling station staff at the May polls had not worked in a polling station before. Additionally: 83% of administrators responding to our survey said that they had difficulties recruiting polling station staff over a quarter of gaps were filled by members of the civil service (29%), while other areas relied on staff from the council, students, the national citizen service and private companies. Staffing was the biggest issue – it was a nightmare. Many of our usual staff simply declined right from the start. This meant finding new staff and having to appoint a couple of POs who had never worked in a polling station before." "Staffing polling stations is always difficult and the older age profile of many of our staff meant that many were not prepared to work this year. Over a third of the staff we eventually used had not done polling duty previously, which was an uncomfortably high level. Reliance on key suppliers is a critical risk to the delivery of well-run elections. Electoral administrators continue to be dependent on a small marketplace of expert suppliers of electoral management software and specialist election print services. Administrators also faced new challenges identifying reliable suppliers for personal protective equipment. Although many electoral administrators were satisfied with the support provided by their suppliers, others told us that they experienced significant problems: Suppliers had changed their own production techniques because of Covid and there were some issues arising as a result of this. It was also clear that there was overall pressure on the system as a result of the number of complex combination polls across the country." "It was apparent that our print supplier, who had previously had an exemplary record in terms of customer service and accuracy, was under strain and we encountered some quite serious problems which was no doubt caused by the coincidence of the complexity of the polls and the pandemic. We are aware that there were some instances of delays to supplier delivery of materials, with local authorities not receiving the ballot papers they expected and needed on time, and some not being delivered until very close to polling day. As well as introducing additional risk by reducing the time available to deal with any issues with delivered material before the opening of polls, these delays meant that administrators needed to invest significant time and energy in managing these issues at a crucial time in the election timetable, inevitably taking their focus away from other parts of the process. The impact on electors was minimal in that polling stations ultimately had the ballot papers they needed in time on this occasion, but the timing of the despatch of postal vote packs to voters was affected in some areas.

recommendation 4

Recommendation 4: Build resilience and capacity for electoral administration

We have repeatedly highlighted concerns about the resilience and capacity of electoral administration structures in the UK, which are coupled with the challenges of delivering elections within an outdated and increasingly complex electoral law framework. We will work in partnership with the electoral community, the Government and local authorities to develop and deliver proposals to support resilient electoral services for the future. Through the Electoral Advisory and Coordination Board, which includes senior Returning Officers, electoral administration professional bodies and government officials, we will establish a programme of activity to gather evidence about the challenges facing electoral administration teams and identify solutions to address them.

Late confirmation of legislation and interventions made it harder for Returning Officers to plan in some areas. On 8 February 2021 the Minister for the Constitution confirmed the Government's formal position that these elections would go ahead in May. The Cabinet Office delivery plan for the elections was published in early February and included £31 million funding to support Returning Officers to secure venues and staffing and run Covid-19 secure elections. It also highlighted the Government's plans to legislate to extend the availability of proxy voting for people who were required to self-isolate and to simplify nomination requirements for candidates at the May polls. In addition to our usual core suite of guidance and resources to support administrators with the delivery of elections, we worked with public health bodies, the UK Government and the electoral community to develop and publish supplementary guidance to support the delivery of Covid-19 safe elections. The guidance was issued on a rolling basis from September 2020 and was informed by both the requirements of administrators and the latest expert advice from public health bodies. It was kept under review throughout the election period, and was updated to reflect the legislative changes to the nominations and proxy voting process as a result of Covid-19. Many electoral administrators said that they found that uncertainty about the elections made it difficult for them to plan effectively. Just under nine in 10 administrators (88%) who responded to our survey after the elections said that they felt the initial uncertainty about whether the elections would go ahead made it difficult for them to plan. Waiting for legislation to be laid/enacted and then for corresponding guidance/documentation delayed plans and procedures being put in place to deal with those changes. This caused additional stress and uncertainty and added to an already heavy workload. The particular circumstances that led to the development and introduction of changes to electoral law ahead of the May 2021 polls were unprecedented and unavoidable. However, the timing of these changes created additional challenges and risks for the delivery of the elections. It affected when Electoral Commission guidance and resources to support the delivery of the polls, such as amended nomination forms, could be provided, and when electoral administrators could implement them. Issues with the use of schools as polling stations. Communications about the use of schools as polling stations in England caused significant problems for some electoral administrators. Administrators also highlighted significant problems caused by a letter from the Department of Education to Returning Officers and Head Teachers across England on 11 February 2021, asking for schools not to be used as polling stations at the May polls where possible. As a result, some schools went on to change their agreements or withdraw their consent to the use of schools as polling stations. This was just at the point that election teams were finalising polling station locations and printing poll cards, leaving some Returning Officers under pressure to find available and suitable venues at short notice. Administrators told us that this took their focus away from other parts of the process, impacting on their preparations for the polls more generally and further challenging capacity and resilience. The timing and content of the Minister's letter in relation to the use of schools as polling stations was very unhelpful as our polling stations were already booked and we were already working on producing poll cards. We did manage to move away from two schools but this created a lot of extra work for the team who were already under pressure. It would be helpful for such matters to be decided and communicated earlier in future."

"The DFE letter to schools in February was extremely unhelpful and we need clarity and consistency from Government about the use of schools as every year it gets more difficult. It is also frustrating that the process for designating venues in accordance with legislation requiring statutory polling district reviews can be undermined and overruled by government interventions such as these. Election teams updated count processes to support social distancing while maintaining transparency. In providing their feedback on the elections, electoral administrators told us about the challenges they faced in setting up and managing counts: 46% of administrators responding to our survey said they had difficulties recruiting count staff for the May 2021 elections. 42% either strongly agreed or agreed that the Covid-19 restrictions made it difficult for candidates and agents to observe at the count. We had to move count venues due to our current venue being used as a Vaccination Centre – that came with challenges to ensure the new venue met all the requirements. We had to operate two count venues to enable social distancing which made the count organisation massively more complicated and added to our workloads. Having to use less count staff in order to facilitate social distancing made the count process take much longer than normal. Given the need to comply with regulations and guidelines about social distancing that were in place in May 2021, Returning Officers and electoral administrators needed to adapt their plans and processes to maintain transparency at count venues. Changes included introducing Perspex screens in front of count tables, agreeing with agents to limit the number of people attending the count, or providing video feeds of the count and adjudication processes for agents and observers to view away from the count tables. The adjudication of doubtful ballot papers was challenging due to the COVID restrictions. It was difficult to observe social distancing between the Returning Officer and agents whilst still allowing agents to see the ballot papers. Most candidates said they were confident that the elections were well run and content with the efficiency of the count and verification processes. However, some candidates were less satisfied with their ability to observe and scrutinise the count. We became aware of issues at three counts where errors were made which has led us to conclude that the Returning Officers 5 did not fully meet our performance standards: An error was discovered during the count for a directly-elected mayoral election. When counting second preference votes it was discovered that the votes of two candidates with the same surname and first initial had been reported the wrong way round at the end of the first count. This meant one candidate was recorded as having fewer votes than they had actually received and vice versa. The issue was identified prior to the result declaration, and it did not impact the final result. The second error was that the votes for two candidates in one ward were mixed up. This meant one candidate was recorded as receiving more votes than they had actually received and another less. The issue had no impact on the overall result. The third error also involved the mix up of results for two candidates, however in this case the error resulted in the incorrect candidate being declared as the winner. There has been a successful election petition in this case. While recognising the pressures faced by Returning Officers and their teams and the challenging circumstance of the combination of elections and changes to count arrangements due to Covid-19, it is important that voters, candidates and political parties can have confidence in the accuracy of election counting processes and results. Supporting Evidence Supporting Evidence England Public Opinion 2021 Full Tables Local and County Election administrative data May 2021 Police and Crime Commissioners electoral administrative data May 2021 London Mayoral Election Public Opinion Tables May 2021 London Mayoral Electoral Administrative data 1. In this report data presented for England excludes London but covers all other areas in England with PCC, local or mayoral elections ■ Back to content at footnote 1 2. Although 'illness' was given as a reason by 9% of non-voters we cannot be sure what proportion of this related to Covid-19. Illness or medical reasons is also often given as a reason for not voting (6% of non-voters after the 2019 UK general election gave this reason). ■ Back to content at footnote 2 3. The regulator sub-group was attended by the Advertising Standards Authority, Electoral Commission, Equality and Human Rights Commission, Information Commissioner's Office, Ofcom, UK Statistics Authority and Office for Statistics Regulation. ■ Back to content at footnote 3 4. Gosport Council ■ Back to content at footnote 4 5. Durham County Council, South Gloucestershire Council and Oxfordshire County Council ■ Back to content at footnote 5 Related content Report on the May 2021 elections in Wales Read our report about how the 2021 elections in Wales were run Report on the May 2022 local elections in England Read our report on the May 2022 local elections in England Report on the May 2022 elections in Wales Read our report on the May 2022 elections in Wales. Report on the May 2022 Scottish council elections Read our report on the May 2022 Scottish council elections.

2021/22 section Home Our plans and priorities Annual Report and Accounts 2021/22 On this page Summary Performance analysis Looking ahead Governance First published: 1 August 2022 Last updated: 1 August 2022 Summary Summary The Electoral Commission became formally accountable to the Scottish Parliament for our activities to support the delivery of devolved elections in Scotland. In this section we set out our key activities and achievements in this last year and look ahead to some of the challenges for 2021/22. The key focus for the Commission in Scotland in the last year has been on supporting the delivery of both the May 2021 Scottish Parliament election and the May 2022 council elections. Performance analysis We continued to work closely with the Electoral Management Board for Scotland to provide advice, support and challenge to Returning Officers, Electoral Registration Officers and their teams delivering elections across Scotland. In January 2022, we delivered a briefing session for 184 electoral administrators in Scotland focused on supporting them to deliver a well-run poll in their area. This was followed by a seminar with Police Scotland to support those officers acting as single points of contact (or SPOCs) for electoral officials at Scottish polls. Our performance standards help us to understand how Returning Officers and Electoral Registration Officers are performing in relation to delivering well run polls and electoral registration services, and enable us to target our support effectively. In the past year, we have met with all 32 Returning Officers and 15 Electoral Registration Officers in Scotland. The Scottish Parliament election in 2021 was the first election in the UK requiring imprints on digital campaign material and we worked closely with candidates, parties and campaigners ahead of the election to support them to comply with the new rules. Our experiences in supporting compliance with these rules helped to inform our advice to governments on the introduction of imprint rules at other elections. In February, the Scottish Parliament passed legislation to set our advice function for candidates and agents at Scottish council elections in statute. Although we had undertaken this function on a non-statutory basis since 2001, this is an important step and provides certainty for candidates and agents. In September 2021 we published our report on the administration of the Scottish Parliament election. This included delivering our new duty to report on the steps that Returning Officers took to support disabled electors to participate. We drew on research with voters, electoral administrators and polling station staff to inform our assessment. We have used our findings to develop new materials for supporting disabled people to know what they should be able expect at the polling station and also to develop a session focussed on accessibility at our pre-council elections briefing for Returning Officers and Electoral Registration Officers, which included input from disabled people. We have continued to provide expert advice to the Scottish Government and the Scottish Parliament throughout the last year. This has included giving evidence to the Scottish Parliament's Standards, Procedures and Public Appointments Committee on our assessment of how well-run the 2021 Scottish Parliament election was, and also on the implications for Scotland arising from the UK Government's Elections Bill. We also advised the Scottish Government on the UK Elections Bill and were consulted on seven pieces of secondary legislation for the 2022 council elections and a further bill to extend candidacy rights to foreign nationals. Throughout the last year we have continued to expand our partnership and learning work, particular in relation to supporting newly enfranchised voters to engage in the council elections. We have published a new range of democratic education resources to enhance our support for the teaching of political literacy in Scottish classrooms and in January, we ran a week of 'Welcome to Your Vote' activity targeted at 16 and 17 year olds in partnership with education and youth work organisations across Scotland. We have also expanded our work to reach 'New Scots' with information about registering and voting in Scottish elections including the production of new resources for community organisations. We also worked with the Scottish Prison Service to distribute a guide and promotional materials for staff working with eligible prisoners. Looking ahead The next scheduled devolved election in Scotland will be the Scottish Parliament election in 2026. In the interim, we will work with the electoral community and wider Scottish society to ensure that we continue to strengthen capacity and expertise in delivering elections which can retain high levels of public confidence, accessibility and engagement. In the next year we will build on the work we have done so far to support young people to engage in Scottish democracy by widening the range of education resources we produce and by expanding or programme of work to support teacher confidence in political literacy activity in schools. This will include ensuring that our education materials continue to be informed by the voices of young people and by running workshops with teachers. We will also be developing our work with community groups to provide tailored resources to support their work with groups experiencing barriers to democratic engagement. We will continue to support parties and campaigners to comply with the law, while ensuring that political finance is transparent. Working in partnership with the Electoral Management Board, we will support and challenge Returning Officers and Electoral Registration Officers to meet the challenges of delivering well-run electoral services and to build resilience and capacity. This includes adapting to the increasingly diverse approach to the delivery of devolved and reserved elections and the changing needs of voters. The Scottish Government has indicated that it will be taking forward further electoral reform in Scotland in the coming year and we will continue to provide expert advice to the Government and Parliament to ensure that any reforms can be delivered effectively. Commitment to EDI The Electoral Commission serves a diverse democracy and is committed to equality, diversity and inclusion. Our programme of partnership work in Scotland has continued to develop resources to support democratic inclusion for those who experience particular barriers to voting. This has included providing election material in a variety of languages, including British Sign Language, and in a number of formats including Easy read, large print, audio and braille. We have also worked with partner organisations in Scotland to develop appropriate materials for Gypsy/Travellers, care experienced young people, domestic abuse survivors and people experiencing homelessness. Using resources During 2021/22, we utilised £2.59m of resources from the £2.62m available. This was predominately for staffing £1.48m (56%) and Campaigns £1.05m (40%); the remaining amounts represent the Scottish Parliament contribution to common activities and corporate overheads. The underspend is due to savings in design and print of guidance materials, savings on the Scotland core team and depreciation.

Governance While the Electoral Commission has regularly reported to both the Scottish and Welsh Parliaments in relation to our role at devolved elections, formal accountability (through legislation) has previously only been to the UK Parliament, specifically to the Speaker's Committee of the House of Commons. From 1 April 2021 the Commission became formally accountable to, and received funding from, the Scottish Parliament for our functions in relation to devolved Scottish elections and referendums. The Commission reports to the Scottish Parliament Corporate Body (SPCB) for accountability purposes. We continue to report to other committees for our work in different policy areas. In September 2021, we submitted our second estimate to the SPCB for the funding of our work in the year 2022/23. The process for developing the estimate followed the 'Statement of Funding Principles' which we agreed in early 2021 with both the Scottish and UK Parliaments along with the Senedd. We also consulted the SPCB on our draft Corporate Plan for 2022/23 to 2026/27. Navigation Previous Next Wales (devolved) annual report Focus on Northern Ireland

Background | Electoral Commission Search Background You are in the May 2018 voter identification pilot schemes section Home Our research Voter identification pilots May 2018 voter identification pilot schemes First published: 24 July 2019 Last updated: 24 July 2019 The May 2018 pilot schemes Voters at polling stations in Great Britain do not need to show any identification before they are allowed to vote. In 2014 we recommended that voters in Great Britain should be required to show a form of identification before they vote at polling stations in future. Voters in Northern Ireland have been required to show photographic identification at polling stations since elections in 2003. We have found little evidence to suggest that the scheme applied in Northern Ireland presents difficulties for people in terms of accessibility. In 2016, the UK Government said that it would ask local councils to run pilot schemes in May 2018 to test different ways of identifying voters at polling stations . It said that pilot schemes would help to see what the impact would be for voters and electoral administrators, and would help them to decide how to design a scheme that could be used for UK Parliament elections and local elections in England. Five local councils were selected to run voter identification pilot schemes at their elections on Thursday 3 May 2018: Bromley Gosport Swindon Watford Woking Each pilot scheme had specific rules for how they should work which were agreed between the UK Government and the local Returning Officer. Voters in some areas had to show identification with their photo on; in other areas, voters could show identification without their photo. The Returning Officer for each area ran the processes for the schemes. The Cabinet Office, which is part of the UK Government, oversaw all of the pilot schemes in May 2018. The law says that we have to independently evaluate each of the schemes within three months of the elections . This report This report sets out what we found when we looked at the results of the May 2018 pilot schemes. It also looks beyond these pilot schemes at the implications for the future, and what we think the UK Government should do next.
To do this, we have looked at the impact of the pilot schemes on voters and on the administration of the elections. We have also looked at the impact of the pilot schemes on public confidence and on the security of the elections. We collected information from different sources to help us reach these findings, including: A survey asking people what they thought of the schemes A survey of people who worked in polling stations Data about what identification people showed when they voted, and the number of people who were turned away because they didn't have the right identification Inviting feedback from organisations that represent different groups of voters As well as this overall report, we have also written individual evaluations of each of the specific pilot schemes. These reports have looked at specific questions that the law says we have to consider which are: the turnout of voters was higher than it would have been if the scheme had not applied voters found the procedures provided for their assistance by the scheme easy to use the procedures provided for by the scheme led to any increase in personation or other electoral offences or in any other malpractice in connection with elections those procedures led to any increase in expenditure, or to any savings, by the authority We have also considered the UK Government's own objectives for the voter identification pilot schemes: That proposed 'ID at polling stations' policy measures are proportional to the policy objective of reducing the opportunity for electoral fraud That the proposed 'ID at polling stations' policy measures enhance public confidence in the security of the electoral system What we're not able to say in this report What we're not able to say in this report We can evaluate these schemes against the statutory criteria and the Government's objectives using the data and information we have gathered. However, we are not able to draw definitive conclusions from these pilots on how a voter identification requirement would operate in the future across Great Britain, or at polls with higher levels of turnout. This is partly because the available evidence is drawn from only five local authority areas which are not representative of many other areas of Great Britain. There would be different challenges in areas with different demographics. These pilots also took place at local elections where turnout is significantly lower than other polls, such as UK Parliamentary general elections. Many people who do not normally vote at local elections will vote at a general election. These people also tend to have different demographic backgrounds to those who normally vote at local elections. Further pilot schemes at local elections are unlikely to provide more evidence about the impact of an identification requirement on voters and electoral administration at higher turnout elections. Returning Officers cannot run pilot schemes at UK Parliament elections, so the UK Government may need to look for other sources of evidence about the impact at elections where turnout is likely to be higher. This could include qualitative research with irregular voters and the less politically engaged to test likely reactions to an identification requirement. Related content Register to vote All you need to register to vote is 5 minutes and your National Insurance number. Our Commissioners Donations and loans Find out about donations and loans to a political party, individual or other organisation Report: How the 2017 UK general election was run Read our report about how the 2017 general election was run

Parliamentary briefings | Electoral Commission Search

You are in the section Home Proposals in the Queen's Speech Briefing: The Transparency of Donations and Loans etc. (Northern Ireland Political Parties) Order 2018 Briefing: Overseas Electors Bill Briefing: Our evaluation of voter ID pilots First published: 7 June 2019 Last updated: 16 June 2023 Overview of the briefings we provide We prepare briefings for Members of the UK Parliament, Scottish Parliament, and the Senedd, to provide background information on our work, or changes that have an impact on what we're trying to achieve. about our briefings and read them in full Topic Date Audience Digital imprints statutory guidance July 2023 UK Parliament Draft Strategy and Policy Statement for the Commission June 2023 UK Parliament Local government and local democracy June 2023 UK Parliament Dissolution and Calling of Parliament Bill July 2021 UK Parliament Proposals in the Queen's speech October 2019 UK Parliament Our evaluation of voter ID pilots May 2019 UK Parliament Overseas Electors Bill February 2018 UK Parliament The Transparency of Donations and Loans etc. (Northern Ireland Political Parties) Order 2018 February 2018 UK Parliament

Our plans and priorities | Electoral Commission Search Our plans and priorities You are in the section Home In this section Annual Report and Accounts 2022/23 Register of Equality Impact Assessment screenings Single Equalities Scheme for Northern Ireland Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Strategy
Annual Report and Accounts 2021/22 Corporate Plan for Wales 2022/23 to 2026/27
Corporate plan 2022/23 to 2026/27 Annual Report and Accounts 2020/21 Annual Report and Accounts 2019/20 Welsh Language Standards Interim corporate plan 2020/21 - 2024/25 Overview of what we publish and when We set out what our goals and priorities are, and how we're going to achieve them, in our corporate plan and business plans.
Our corporate plan lasts for five years, and our business plan lasts for one year.
The plans follow the same timing as our financial year. This means they start in April, and end in March. Equality and diversity is important to us and what we do. We set out what we do now, and what we want to achieve in the future. Related content How we make decisions Find out about our Board, committees and groups Our spending about our spending estimates, reports and accounts Our Commissioners

Appendix 2 of the Code of Conduct for Electoral Commissioners Guidance on Declaring Interests | Electoral Commission Search Appendix 2 of the Code of Conduct for Electoral Commissioners Guidance on Declaring Interests You are in the Code of Conduct for Electoral Commissioners section Home Commissioners Code of Conduct for Electoral Commissioners On this page Introduction Principles of declaring interests What this means for you Commissioners Completion of Annual Declaration of Interests Completing the form First published: 19 December 2022 Last updated: 17 June 2023 1 Introduction Introduction Commissioners are expected to observe exceptionally high standards of personal honesty and integrity in accordance with the Nolan Principles (appended to the Code of Conduct). (Staff are bound by a separate code of conduct). The registration of interests helps to ensure public confidence in the Commission, and to maintain accountability and transparency of decision-making by avoiding any real or perceived bias or influence. The Commission's Code of Conduct for Electoral Commissioners requires Commissioners to declare certain interests, and especially any financial, political or other business which may conflict with their responsibilities as Commissioners. The arrangements for declaring interests were last reviewed and updated in 2023.

.2 Principles of declaring interests

.1 Transparent - this is of prime importance for the Electoral Commission. Integrity and public confidence in the UK's democratic process, and transparency in party funding, are among the aims and objectives of the Electoral Commission, and fairness, impartiality and transparency our declared organisational values. It is therefore especially important for the Commission to observe the highest standards of probity in its own practices.

.2 Comprehensive : the policy covers the three main areas of interest:

- External interests
- Financial interests
- Political interests

Commissioners should never use their official position to gain financial, material, political or any other benefit for themselves, their family, or their friends, in a way which might reasonably be seen to compromise the Commission's position or an individual's personal judgement or integrity. This includes financial, political, and other interests.

.3 Proactive - we declare and publish all such interests proactively in the case of Commissioners, the Executive Team, and the Heads of Commission offices in Scotland, Wales, and Northern Ireland. We ensure all other staff are aware of the need to declare these interests, internally at least, and are ready to publish when asked.

.4 What this means for you

- a) Be aware of the policy and of your obligation : Commissioners must be aware of the requirement to declare interests, and to update these as and when they change;
- b) Openness : a useful test of the need for an interest to be declared is whether members of the public knowing the facts of the situation might reasonably think it should be. If in doubt, err on the side of openness.
- c) Seek advice : if still in doubt about any aspect of the policy, or in the event of queries in relation to a particular case, consult the Chair, Chief Executive or Secretary to the Commission Board at the earliest opportunity;
- d) Complete the form: Commissioners, the Executive Team, and the Heads of Commission offices in Scotland, Wales, and Northern Ireland should complete the Declaration of Interests Form at the earliest opportunity on their appointment and within 28 days of receiving it, and sign and return it to the Secretary to the Commission Board. Update your declaration within a month of any change in circumstances.
- e) Gifts and Hospitality : remember to declare any gifts or hospitality (received or offered) in any capacity for which you have recorded an interest (also appended to the Code of Conduct)
- f) Monitoring and publication : the Secretariat will maintain the Register of Interests which is reviewed on a quarterly basis by the Audit and Risk Committee and published on the Commission's website.

4

Commissioners Completion of Annual Declaration of Interests 4.1 The Commission publishes on its website the register of interests for Commissioners. 4.2 A declaration form is given to all the above on appointment to complete and return within 28 days. There is then a periodic reminder (approximately quarterly) to update the declaration, or you may update it as and when changes occur. Declarations of Interest before or during meetings 4.3 At the beginning of every Commission Board or Committee meeting there will be an agenda item inviting those present to declare any interest they may have in any item on the agenda. It is the responsibility of the individual concerned to consider the matter in advance bearing in mind the business on the agenda, and identify and declare such interests. If in doubt they can consult the Chair, Chief Executive, General Counsel, or Secretary to the Commission Board. Where an Electoral Commissioner has declared a significant and relevant interest in a particular matter, he or she should not take part in any discussion or decision on that matter. The Chair of the meeting may ask an Electoral Commissioner who has declared an interest to withdraw from the room during consideration of the matter. Related Party Transactions 4.4 Generally accepted accounting practice (and specifically Financial Reporting Standard 8) 1 requires Commissioners and the Independent Chair of the Audit Committee to report Related Party Transactions, whereby material transactions with related parties must be disclosed in financial statements. "Related parties" in FRS 8 includes close members of the family of an individual, who are defined for the purposes of the standard as those family members, or members of the same household, who may be expected to influence, or be influenced by, that person in their dealings with the reporting entity (ie the Electoral Commission). 4.5 Electoral Commissioners should so far as practicable be aware of and take steps to avoid conflicts of interest arising between their work in any outside appointments and their work with the Commission during tenure as an Electoral Commissioner. 5 Completing the form Section 1 – External interests 5.1 This section includes all interests, paid or unpaid, such as external appointments (any job, not your role at the Electoral Commission), any consultancy, trusteeships, directorships, advisory or voluntary roles. 5.2 Current or previous year – your first declaration will be made on appointment, and 'previous year' should be taken to include the 12 months prior to your first declaration. Thereafter you will be expected to notify the Commission of any alterations to your declaration of interests (additions, deletions, or changes) as they happen. You will also be sent annual reminders in about April of each year. In that case, previous year becomes the year prior to your last annual declaration, so that if you are sent a declaration in April 2022, the previous year will be April 2020-March 2021. Section 2 – Financial Interests (a) Your own financial interests - In this section of the form you are required to list any of the interests from section 1 for which you are currently or have previously been paid or otherwise benefited financially during the period in question. (b) Family or associate financial interests – here you are asked to declare any financial connection that you or your close family members have that may be connected to the work of the Commission, or where there is a likelihood that they may become connected to the work of the Commission. Section 3 – Local Authority membership or employment 5.3 This section asks you to declare whether during the last five years you have been a contractor, an employee or a member of a local authority. Section 4 – Political interests 5.4 Section 3 of the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000, (the Act), as amended by the Political Parties and Elections Act 2009, prohibits Electoral Commissioners from being or having been a member, an office holder or employee of a registered party, or a named donor in the register of donations or a candidate at a relevant election, during the previous five years. The four additional Commissioners nominated by political parties in accordance with the provisions of the Act may be members of a registered party, but the other restrictions apply. The term office-holder includes for these purposes, for example appointment as chair of a party selection committee, or a position as a Whip in the House of Lords. If you are approached to accept an appointment, and are not completely sure it would not fall into the category of office-holder, you should consult the Chair, the Chief Executive, General Counsel, or the Secretary to the Commission Board before accepting.

5.5 With the advent of the Transparency of Lobbying, Non-party Campaigning and Trade Union Administration Act 2014 (Transparency Act), it is necessary for Commissioners also to consider their support (donations and in kind) to charitable or other third party campaign organisations. This is a complicated area and important area as a breach of the donation limit would result in the Commissioner ceasing to hold office. A separate guidance note on the implications of this for Commissioners declaring interests is included at Appendix 1A (or extended Appendix 1).

5.6 All Commissioners should at all times conduct themselves in a way that does not give rise to any questions as to the political impartiality of the Commission.

5.7 Those Commissioners who are not nominated by a political party should, in order to avoid any perception of bias, record any close family members or associates who are closely involved with a political party.

Notes and Definitions:

Close family member

5.8 For these purposes a close family member is defined as a spouse, parent (and partner of parent), parents-in-law, grandparent (and partner of grandparent), uncle or aunt, brother or sister (including step- or half-brother or sister), child (including step-child, adoptive or foster child, sons- and daughters-in-law, or children's partners), and anyone with whom you share your home.

5.9 In practice family relationships vary greatly from one family to another (parents and children and siblings may be estranged from one another, whereas nephews, cousins, aunts may be very close and occupy positions of influence). The onus is on you only to report those family relationships which

- you are close enough to know about – you are not expected to track down all extant relatives to check whether they might be involved in anything that needs to be declared. If they are distant enough for you not to know, they are not close enough to warrant a declaration
- are important or influential enough (even though not immediate family) for any reason and involved in a business or consultancy or activity which should be declared. (See also close associate below).

If in doubt, consider whether a member of the public, knowing the facts, might reasonably think that the matter in question should be declared. If still in doubt, consult the Chair or Chief Executive.

Close associate

5.10 This is defined as someone who is not a family member but with whom you have frequent or significant contact, or shared interests - a connection of which you are aware, which if not disclosed might give rise to a perception of a conflict of interests. This might be someone with whom you play sport, regularly socialise, do business, or have a close association with through a group or club. If in doubt, consult the Chair or Chief Executive.

5.11 If you have external interests which you have declared, remember that you are also required to declare gifts and hospitality received or offered in those roles, not just those directly relating to your role at the Commission.

5.12 Your completed form must be sent to the Secretary to the Commission Board. Examples of interests If a close family member or close associate is:

- an Electoral Registration Officer (or Returning Officer or Chief Executive) for a local authority subject to Commission performance standards, or where there has been an election petition
- is employed by a branch of the civil service which is connected with elections work • involved in an electoral reform pressure group, or any group or organisation which is campaigning for a change in arrangements for political funding, electoral registration, or voting • part of a consultancy or company which may be involved in tendering for work with the Commission (research, IT, accountancy, facilities, media etc.) •involved through work or interests in contact with politicians, political parties, or lobbying organisations nationally, regionally or locally Interests – Frequently Asked Questions 1. Q: I want to canvass in a forthcoming election/in support of a campaign – can I without compromising my neutrality as a Commissioner, or the neutrality of the Commission? A: No. If you were to canvass either in support of a particular party, or a cause or campaign which might be identified with a particular party or parties, you might call into question the neutrality of the Electoral Commission as the Government's elections watchdog. 2.

Q: (for nominated Commissioners) I have been approached to stand as a candidate for my party – can I stand? A: No. While you are able to maintain membership of your political party following your appointment as a Commissioner, public political activity is likely to call into question the political neutrality of the Commission.

While it has been determined that the point of disqualification for anyone accepting a candidacy would be submission of their name to the Returning Officer, it is strongly recommended that any Commissioner wanting to take this step should consider the extent to which it would bring them into conflict with the perception of neutrality. 3. Q: I donate to a charity/I donate to a charity through a trust/I am a trustee of a charity – see FAQs on the Lobbying Act in Appendix 1A Reviewed and approved 22 March 2023 1. standards adopted by the International Accounting Standards Board which set standards, and provide interpretations and a framework for use in accounting and reporting. These standards were put in place from 2001 and are used in the public sector. ■ Back to content at footnote 1 Related content Register to vote All you need to register to vote is 5 minutes and your National Insurance number. Our Commissioners Donations and loans Find out about donations and loans to a political party, individual or other organisation Report: How the 2017 UK general election was run Read our report about how the 2017 general election was run

Apply to be an accredited organisation | Electoral Commission Search
Apply to be an accredited organisation You are in the Observing elections and referendums section Home Observing elections and referendums Application: Accredited organisation On this page Before you apply What you and your observers need to apply First published: 31 May 2019 Last updated: 11 August 2022 Before you apply Before you apply to be an electoral observer, you need to read: the Code of Practice for accredited electoral observer our privacy notice When you complete your application, you will need to confirm that you have read and understood all of these documents. What you and your observers need to apply To apply to accredit your organisation, you will need: information about your organisation your name and contact details, as the primary organisation contact the name and contact details of the secondary organisation contact to tell us how long you want your accreditation to last for, and where you want your badges to be delivered the names of the people who will be observing for your organisation, as well as a passport style photo and identification The photo needs to: just include the observer be a headshot, so that it includes their face and shoulders clearly show their face, with their eyes open be taken against a plain background The identification needs to show the observer's name and age. You can upload their: passport driving licence national identity card Northern Ireland electoral identity card 700KB is the maximum file size for all of the photos and ID. Anything above this cannot be processed. You can contact us if any of the observers do not have this form of identification. Apply Submit your application

Results and turnout at the May 2017 Combined Authority Mayor elections in England | Electoral Commission Search Results and turnout at the May 2017 Combined Authority Mayor elections in England You are in the Mayoral elections section Home Mayoral elections On this page Introduction Electorate Postal voting Proxies and waivers First published: 1 October 2017 Last updated: 28 October 2019 Download You can download our: full dataset as an XLS full dataset as a CSV (zip file) Introduction The Cities and Local Government Devolution Act 2016 gave UK Government Ministers powers to devolve powers and responsibilities to new combined authorities. Following devolution agreements with existing local authorities in six areas of England, the first Combined Authority Mayor (CAM) elections took place in 37 local authorities across the six combined authority areas on 4 May 2017: Cambridgeshire and Peterborough Greater Manchester Liverpool City Tees Valley West Midlands West of England This report provides analysis on participation in and the administration of the first CAM elections in England. For this, data was collected from Returning Officers and Electoral Registration Officers. This compromised the Form K 'Statement as to Postal Ballot Papers' and an additional data form, specified by the Commission, which included data relating to electoral registration, turnout, absent voting and rejected ballots. 1 Electorate 6.8 million Turnout Ballot box: 27.8% (1.9 million votes) Postal vote: 59.0% In-person: 22.6% Rejected ballots Ballots at the first count: 1.3% Ballots at the second count: 8.1% 2 Postal votes: 2.7% Proxies appointed 4,993 (0.1% of the electorate) 179 emergency proxies Electorate The CAM elections gave 6.8 million registered electors the opportunity to vote. 62,580 electors were added to the electoral register during the weeks leading up to the election. As a proportion of the electorate, this was highest in West of England, where additions represented 1.2% of the electorate, and lowest in Tees Valley where additions represented 0.7% of the electorate. A total of 72,160 applications to register were received in the weeks leading up to the election. More than a quarter (26.8%) of these were recorded as duplicates. At a local authority level, duplicates were reportedly as high as 36.4% in South Gloucestershire. 3 In addition, 125,485 people tried to register after the registration deadline. This is likely to be attributable to the announcement of the general election, which came after the deadline for registration for the CAM elections. Based on data from 29 local authorities, 347 individuals were recorded as trying to vote on election day itself despite not being registered. 4 Votes were cast at 4,611 polling stations as well as by post. Turnout The measure of turnout referred to in this report, 'ballot box turnout', includes all valid votes cast ('valid vote turnout') and votes rejected at the count. Total turnout refers to valid votes cast, votes rejected at the count, and those rejected at the postal ballot verification stage before the count. At 27.8%, ballot box turnout was higher than at the first elections for Police and Crime Commissioners (PCCs) in November 2012 (15.1%), and at a similar level as the second PCC elections in May 2016 (27.3%). 5 Turnout was significantly lower than turnout at the 2017 (35.1%) and Welsh (42.0%), and Scottish (46.9%) local elections, which were all held on the same day. Table 3.1: Turnout Combined authority Ballots at the count Turnout (%) Cambridgeshire & Peterborough (C&P) 204,302 33.6% Greater Manchester 573,543 28.9% Liverpool City 291,449 26.1% Tees Valley 103,767 21.3% West Midlands 523,201 26.7% West of England 199,519 29.7% Total 1.9m 27.8% Combined Authority Mayors were elected with the Supplementary Vote (SV) electoral system. This, also used at elections for the Mayor of London, directly-elected mayors for local authorities in England, and for Police and Crime Commissioners in England and Wales, gives voters the opportunity to vote for both their first and second preference candidates, (although they do not have to cast a second preference vote). Table 3.3 shows that first preference rejection rate at CAM elections was higher than at all 2017 elections that use the First Past the Post system (local elections in England and Wales and UK Parliamentary general election) but lower than at the Scottish councils elections which uses Single Transferrable Vote (STV) Table 3.2: 2017 elections – Rejected ballots Election Voting system Rejected ballots (%) UK Parliamentary general election FPTP 0.2% local government elections 0.3% Welsh local government elections 0.5% Northern Ireland Assembly election STV 1.1% Combined Authority Mayoral elections SV 1.3% Scottish council elections STV 2.0% Ballot paper rejection rate at the first round of the 2017 CAM elections was 1.3%, ranging from 1% in Liverpool to 1.9% in C&P. The proportion of rejected ballots at the second count was significantly higher at 8.1%. Rejection rate at the second count is calculated by dividing the number of rejected ballots – including those not marked at second preference - by the total number of valid first preference votes cast for the eliminated candidates. Table 3.3: Ballots rejected at the first and second counts Combined authority Ballots rejected at the first count % of ballots at the count Ballots rejected at the second count % of ballots rejected at the second count C&P 3,924 1.9% 7,419 9.6% Greater Manchester 6,808 1.2% - - Liverpool City 2,789 1.0% - - Tees Valley 1,667 1.6% 2,942 13.4% West Midlands 7,268 1.4% 7,515 8.4% West of England 2,572 1.3% 5,437 5.5% Total 25,028 1.3% 23,313 8.1% The winning candidate in Greater Manchester and Liverpool City received more than 50% of the valid first preference votes and were therefore declared elected without requiring second preference votes to be counted. The majority of all first preference rejections (57.5%) were due to voting for more than one first preference candidate. At the second count, the vast majority (99.8%) were rejected due to being either unmarked or their being uncertainty as to the second preference vote. 6 Table 3.4: Reasons for rejected ballots Reason for rejection First count Second count No official mark 0.1% 0.0% Voting for more than one preference 57.5% 0.2% Mark by which the voter could be identified 1.0% 31.7% Unmarked or uncertain 7 41.4% 99.8% Postal voting The total number of postal votes issued for these elections was one million, 14.9% of those with an election in their authority. This compares with 15.9% in the local elections across England. Of the one million postal votes issued, 600,707 covering envelopes were turned making postal vote turnout 59.0%. 8 This compares with an ‘in person’ turnout of 22.6%. Postal vote turnout was lower than at the England local elections where postal vote turnout was 68.7%. Postal vote rejection Postal voting packs (PV) require voters to provide their signature and date of birth (DOB). These identifiers are then matched against those provided at the time of application. If the signature or date of birth is missing or does not match, the postal vote is rejected and is not included at the count. Since 2014, Electoral Registration Officers (EROs) have been required to notify electors if their postal vote has been rejected and give the reason(s) for rejection. They can also request the elector to provide an up-to-date signature. Of the 600,707 covering envelopes returned, 2.7% were rejected. 9 Of the postal votes rejected, almost two-thirds (59.2%) were rejected due to mismatch of signature and/or date of birth. Table 4.1: Reasons for postal vote rejection C&P Greater Manchester Liverpool City Tees Valley West Midlands West of England Total Missing information Signature 5.0% 8.8% 13.5% 5.9% 6.1% 6.4% 8.2% Date of birth 5.6% 3.5% 5.1% 3.0% 6.0% 4.2% 4.4% Both 9.5% 9.6% 10.5% 22.0% 12.9% 10.0% 11.0% Mismatched information Signature 23.5% 27.4% 16.0% 18.2% 19.9% 21.8% 22.6% Date of birth 20.9% 33.0% 26.5% 24.6% 26.6% 17.2% 27.5% Both 4.5% 8.5% 7.9% 15.4% 9.8% 4.9% 8.3% Proxies and waivers The number of electors who appointed a proxy was 4,993 (0.07% of the electorate). This is similar to the level of proxies appointed for the May 2016 PCC elections (0.08%) but lower than the equivalent at the England local elections held on the same day (0.12%). The number of emergency proxies issued was 179. A concession granted under the terms of the EAA 2006 was that postal electors who either had a disability, or were illiterate, or were unable to furnish a consistent signature could apply for a waiver to use their date of birth as their sole identifier. 6,007 waivers were granted for this election, representing 0.6% of postal electors.

Appendices Appendix A All information contained within this report and the accompanying dataset is based on data received from Returning Officers and Electoral Registration Officers. There remain inconsistencies in the ways in which local authorities record and report information. We continue to notice differences in the coding of information by different electoral management software. For example, customers of one electoral management software supplier consistently report a higher proportion of 'mismatching' than others. Inconsistencies relating to the reasons for and total number of postal vote rejections on the Form K appear to result from the potential for differences in interpretation and treatment. For example, in the treatment of the numbers of covering envelopes and ballot papers returned, covering envelopes may be sent in without the A envelope or postal voting statement enclosed, while the missing document may or may not be sent in a separate covering envelope later, or multiple ballots may be returned in one envelope. When local authorities are contacted about such anomalies they are often unable to provide revised figures or clarify why the data were coded in that way. In practice, we use a calculation of field B6 minus field C18 as a surrogate for the total number of postal votes rejected regardless of whether or not it is the same as recorded in field C19. Appendix B Form K: STATEMENT AS TO POSTAL BALLOT PAPERS REPRESENTATION OF THE PEOPLE ACTS LOCAL GOVERNMENT ELECTION Ward: Date of Poll: A. Issue of postal ballot papers 1. Total number of postal ballot papers issued under regulation 71 2. Total number of postal ballot papers issued under regulation 77 (spoilt and returned for cancellation), regulation 78 (lost or not received) and regulation 78A (cancelled due to change of address) 3. Total number of postal ballot papers cancelled under regulation 86A (where the first ballot paper was cancelled and retrieved) 4. Total number of postal ballot papers issued (1 to 3) 5. Total number of ballot papers cancelled under regulation 78A B (1). Receipt of and replacement postal ballot papers 6. Number of covering envelopes received by the Returning Officer or at a polling station before the close of poll (excluding any undelivered or returned under regulation 77(1) (spoilt), regulation 78(1) (lost) and regulation 86A (cancelled ballot papers)) 7. Number of covering envelopes received by the returning officer after the close of poll, excluding any returned as undelivered 8. Number of postal ballot papers returned spoilt for cancellation in time for another ballot paper to be issued 9. Number of postal ballot papers identified as lost or not received in time for another ballot paper to be issued 10. Number of ballot papers cancelled and retrieved in time for another ballot paper to be issued 11. Number of postal ballot papers returned as spoilt too late for another ballot paper to be issued 12. Number of covering envelopes returned as undelivered (up to the 25th day after the date of poll) 13. Number of covering envelopes not received by the Returning Officer (by the 25th day after the date of poll) 14. Total numbers 6 to 13 (this should be the same as that in 4 above) B (2). Receipt of postal ballot papers – Personal Identifiers 15. Number of covering envelopes set aside for the verification of personal identifiers on postal voting statements 16. Number of postal voting statements subject to verification procedure rejected as not completed (excluding prior cancellations) 17. Number of postal voting statements rejected following verification procedures due to the personal identifiers on the postal voting statement not matching those in the personal identifiers record (excluding prior cancellations) C. Count of postal ballot papers 18. Number of ballot papers returned by postal voters which were included in the count of ballot papers 19. Number of cases in which a covering envelope or its contents were marked "Rejected" (cancellations under regulations 77, 78, 78A and 86A are not rejections and should be included in items 2, 3, 5, 8, 9 and 10 above) Date: Signed: Returning Officer Authority: Additional data form 1) How many proxies were appointed for these elections? 2) How many emergency proxies were appointed for these elections? 3) How many waivers were granted for these elections? 4) How many postal votes were rejected for: a) Want of a signature b) Want of a date of birth c) Want of both d) Mismatched signature e) Mismatched DoB f) Both mismatched g) Ballot paper unreturned h) Postal voting statement unreturned 5) What was the total number of polling stations used? 6) How many covering envelopes were returned on polling day before 10pm? 7) How many covering envelopes were returned on the day after polling day before 10pm? 8) Total number of new electors added to the register after the publication of the revised register (01.12.16) up to and including those added via the first interim notice of alteration (04.04.17) 9) Total number of new electors added to the register via the second and final notices of alteration (26.04.17). 10) Total number of applications to register received after the registration deadline.

11) Total number of applications received between the last date for applications to be included on the December 2016 revised register (22.11.16) and the last date for applications for the first interim notice of alteration (24.03.17) 12) Total number of duplicate applications received between the last date for applications to be included on the December 2016 revised register (22.11.16) and the registration deadline for the first interim notice of alteration (24.03.17) 13) Total number of applications received between the day after the last date for applications for the first interim notice of alteration (25.03.17) and last date for applications for the final notice of alteration (13.04.17) 14) Total number of duplicate applications received between the day after the last date for applications for the first notice of alteration (25.03.17) and last date for applications for the final notice of alteration (13.04.17) 15) How many people tried to vote on polling day and were found not to be registered? 1. Tameside were unable to supply the Form K Statement as to Postal Ballot Papers or additional data form. Figures relating to postal voting and fields on the additional data form exclude Tameside. ■ Back to content at footnote 1 2. Calculated as proportion of total possible second preference votes i.e. total number of valid first preference votes for eliminated candidates. ■ Back to content at footnote 2 3. Three local authorities – Rochdale, Tameside, and Bath and North East Somerset – were not able to provide data on duplicate applications ■ Back to content at footnote 3 4. Eight local authorities were not able to provide information on the number of individuals trying to vote on election day despite not being registered. ■ Back to content at footnote 4 5. PCC elections are based on the same election rules as CAM elections. At both elections, electors voted for a newly created elected position using the Single Transferable vote. ■ Back to content at footnote 5 6. Figures for 'unmarked' and 'void for uncertain' ballot papers were reported together by some Combined Authority Returning Officers (CAROs). ■ Back to content at footnote 6 7. Ibid. ■ Back to content at footnote 7 8. There is no statutory field that captures the number of postal voting statements received by the Returning Officer. In practice, we use field B6, 'Number of covering envelopes received by the Returning Officer or at a polling station before the close of poll'

as a surrogate but we know that, as mentioned, electors can return multiple postal ballots in one envelope or return envelopes without any ballots ■ Back to content at footnote 8 9. As figures reported for field C19 were inconsistent, we used a calculation of field B6 minus field C18 as a surrogate for the total number of postal votes rejected. This approach is consistent with previous years. ■ Back to content at footnote 9 Related content Report: Voting in 2017 Read our report about voting at the general election in 2017 Past elections and referendums Read our reports and view data about past elections and referendums Types of elections about the types of elections in the UK. Mayoral elections

Board notes: 24 October 2018 | Electoral Commission Search

Board notes: 24 October 2018 You are in the Electoral Commission Board section

Home How we make decisions Electoral Commission Board On this page Apologies and introductions The future of voting – what we know of elections Providing services that meet the needs of all users The future of voting First published: 18 July 2019

Last updated: 18 July 2019 Overview Date: 24 October 2018 Time: 9:30am to 2pm

Location: Boothroyd Room, 3 Bunhill Row, London Date of next scheduled meeting: 5 December Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting John Holmes (JEH), Chair Sue Bruce (SB) Anna Carragher (AC) Sarah Chambers (SC) Elan Closs Stephens (ECS) Alasdair Morgan (AM) Rob Vincent (RV) Claire Bassett (CB) Ailsa Irvine (AI) Bob Posner (BP) Craig Westwood (CW) Kieran Rix (KR) Nancy Bruseker (NB) Tom Hawthorn (TH) Phil Thompson (PT) Petra Crees (PC) Marie Chadwick (MC) – RNIB Peter Stanyon (PS) – AEA Paul Woodrow (PW) – London Ambulance Service Apologies and introductions None. The future of voting – what we know AI introduced the discussion, contextualising it with the 2016 strategic review. She noted that while a great deal of work had been, and continued to be, done on registration, it was now time to start looking in more detail at options for reforming the voting process and improving its accessibility.

2.2 PT provided a brief summary of the research done to date including that public opinion about the voting process was generally positive. 2.3 KK introduced research on the barriers disabled people and other vulnerable groups could face in relation to voting. This outlined the problems they faced prior to the election, when voting by post and on the day itself in the polling station. 2.4 PT spoke about voter perceptions about changing the voting process, noting that there was no strong demand for online or advance voting (including weekends). He did highlight that some 18-24 year olds who said they did not vote also said they were more likely to do so if they were able to do so online. Moreover, the prospect of advanced and weekend voting led to more 25-34 year olds reporting that they would be more likely to vote. of elections MC talked about the needs and issues around voting for partially sighted and blind people. She offered quantitative and qualitative data, which had fed into the Cabinet Office Call for Evidence on the accessibility of elections. The headline messages were that registration had improved in recent years, but there were still many issues which persisted. Visually impaired voters still found the voting experience frustrating. Tools that should help were inadequate or inadequately deployed, for example the tactile voting device (TVD) or the accessibility kit for postal voting. She noted that the blind and partially sighted people RNIB had surveyed were very interested in changes to the voting system that would make it easier for them to vote independently and secretly. These included adaptations to forms, polling cards and telephone or online voting. She also suggested that performance standards would be a good way for the Commission to intervene positively with specific accessibility measures. Meanwhile the numbers of voters with visual impairments were increasing as the general population continued to age. A discussion followed, with JEH noting that more data was needed to establish numbers of visually impaired people who were deterred from voting. It was noted that the TVD was an unhelpful tool but the current legislation was too restrictive to allow for much innovation. Commissioners also noted that the demographic shift and an aging population meant that the number of people with sight loss was increasing. PS presented his organisation's perspective on accessibility of elections, also noting that the changes in registration had made major improvements to their work. He did highlight that further improvements were possible, such as links between electoral services and data on voters who were registered disabled. Currently voters had to let

EROs and ROs know about their needs proactively, rather than EROs and ROs being able to plan based on data given to them. He commented that, while the situation had improved a great deal in many ways, and training was now good, there were still pockets of bad practice, and sometimes staff were too nervous to use their initiative. He also noted that the inability to challenge an election result unless someone had been wrongly elected made it difficult to address access issues that might have prevented someone from voting. Other challenges included the reduction in available accessible buildings – particularly schools – as polling stations. Legislation existed to require the use of rooms in schools but it was difficult to enforce. He summarised the issue as being about balancing accessibility, security and resources. JEH asked how enthusiastic electoral administrators were for innovation in the voting process. PS responded that there was support for some additional forms of absentee voting, to provide more options for both those with accessibility issues and other constituents, such as overseas and service voters. ECS suggested that issues related to accessibility failures could be captured in the performance standards assessments in the Commission's post-election reports. PS discussed areas which had had major process failures, such as Plymouth and Newcastle-under-Lyme, noting that performance had subsequently improved dramatically. He suggested that scrutiny of 'near misses' would be preferable to waiting until a major problem had arisen. SC noted that there were resourcing implications for reforming accessibility, and that more data was needed to underpin the justifications for it. JEH suggested that it might be possible to use other organisations' surveys, adding additional questions to collect data on accessibility. TH replied that KK and PT would have to consider this proposition, though there was an issue on how it might work given it required self-presenting on disability and could cause problems of categorisation. RP noted that the Cabinet Office Group might be able to take forward this work. A further discussion followed on propositions put forward by Commissioners, many of which CB noted had already been put forward in the Commission's Report, such as allowing someone to choose which polling stations to vote in, mobile polling stations, and linkages with social services. AI noted that a holistic approach was easier to achieve when the local council's Chief Executive was also the RO. ECS suggested that a piece of work on the long term trends on aging population and resourcing might be helpful. A discussion followed on thinking about accessibility more globally. CB noted that if the process were improved in relation to disability access, then it would also more likely be better for all. JEH noted the critical step of reforming registration first to open up options for voting reforms in the future. Providing services that meet the needs of all users PW provided an overview of the previous three years in the London Ambulance Service, describing its transformation from an organisation in crisis to one that was functioning well. The change was fundamental, as the service moved from one focused on response standards to one that looked more widely at clinical outcomes for the people it transported. They had made fundamental changes in the integration with other parts of the NHS and emergency services, building relationships within the organisation, and getting direct feedback from patients and staff at their board. He described a useful tool for transforming their service being the 'Whose shoes?' method for looking at stakeholder perspectives for important issues. JEH asked about the use of technology in the service, and PW explained that they were still largely paper-based, though they were now increasingly using iPads. They were also developing online accessibility, video consultation, and the use of wearables to monitor the health of vulnerable patients. In the last case, this would permit them to intervene before the point of a health crisis. AC asked about resourcing and the blocks to improvement. PW explained that they had had no additional investment. It had rather been a question of addressing challenges around board leadership, the culture of the organisation and the previous ‘command and control’ style leadership among senior staff. ECS raised the issue of board oversight, and how this was a common concern for all boards. PW outlined how they had added board sub-committees to deal with detail, and were encouraging a new culture of reporting issues, increasing scrutiny. RV commented that the Commission often felt constrained by the limits of electoral law and the need for legislation and commended PW and the ambulance service for their accomplishments despite similar constraints. PW summarised their position as one of working with partners and bringing forward evidence to build the case for reform. The future of voting AI introduced the discussion with a reminder that electoral registration reform was fundamental to unlocking other changes to elections, work in relation to which was ongoing. She also highlighted ongoing work around guidance, working with accessibility partners and the of Elections Working Group. KK summarised the historic pilot schemes in the UK, covering innovations on how, when and where to vote. The overarching conclusions had been that electronic voting should be considered within a wider modernisation framework, that postal voting should be an option but not used as the only way to vote, and that advance voting did not appear to appreciably add to overall turnout figures. She also noted that these pilots had been conducted from 2000 to 2007 and that technology had appreciably moved on. We should therefore be wary of drawing too many conclusions from them for current policyAC noted that as well as technological possibilities, political issues had also moved on. KK noted that, in the absence of more recent pilots in the UK context, other countries’ experiences with reforms to electoral practices could serve as examples. She gave as an example the gradual increase in take-up of advance voting in Canada. CB noted that there were implications for campaigning of advance voting, potentially changing the nature of the debate, which would require careful handling. ECS noted that this was already the case with postal voting. TH invited the board to focus on the opportunities for change, including those relating to the forthcoming legislation in Wales and Scotland. He suggested considering where attention should be focused for the next two years and then again for the subsequent four years. He asked the board to consider what aspects of electoral process reform should be explored further, and if there were particular aspects of reform the board wanted to progress more quickly than others. JEH asked the board to consider the long-term strategy, particularly as registration reform had to come first for many possible changes. He also noted that more research might be helpful in building the case for reforms. CB noted that preparation had to include being ready to take advantage of opportunities, and not just acting reactively. RV asked about the possibility of encouraging local authorities to be bold in their pilot proposals. AI explained that local authorities could propose anything but that their bid had to be approved by Cabinet Office. AC asked for further information about the Law Commissions’ review. RP explained that the report recommendation for primary legislation was not currently on the Government’s agenda. CB pointed out that there was some current political appetite for reform of campaign regulations and it might be possible to use current interest in that area to advance the wider cause. AC suggested that there could be closer working with the new Centre for Data Ethics and Innovation. CB concurred, citing their developments in how data collected across government was used. SC noted that an electronic option was necessary in the long term, while noting there were short-term problems with security and resourcing. She reiterated the earlier point on offline electronic solutions as a potential means of speeding up processes, starting for example with help for the visually impaired. She also noted that more data was necessary to identify groups who were being disadvantaged in election processes. Pilots could be conducted accordingly, for example on overseas voters, service voters, and even rural voters. RV highlighted that a properly online register would be very important in this longer-term context. AM suggested that amendments to current practices to improve voting conditions for those with disabilities could be made contingent on fixing the register, helping to build support for registration reforms. A discussion followed on electronic voting, with a distinction being drawn between electronic voting in polling stations and online voting. While the appetite for online voting was tempered by concerns about security, the direction of travel was recognised as being towards electronic and connected voting solutions in the longer term, for both accessibility and longer-term resource savings. CB added a note of caution about looking in detail for longer term solutions using current technology such as block chain, as technology development was still fast moving. RP noted that it was important to make sure the law that underpinned any new developments was robust. Advantage could perhaps be taken of the legislative changes planned in Scotland and Wales to start to move towards consolidation and simplification. Other countries had made big changes to their voting systems but not without fixing the legislation underpinning it. SB noted that Scotland has the appetite for the legislative change, and the ability to move quickly when the situation calls for it.

5.15 A discussion followed about the lack of appetite for legislative changes in Westminster, noting that for some issues such as voter ID the general public seemed further advanced in their thinking than legislators. Change could be a long time coming but then move very quickly once the need for change was properly established. JEH invited Commissioners to consider other measures that were not specifically tied to a digital solution. Other locations for voting were discussed, most notably the use of mobile polling stations. AI noted that the challenge for the Commission would be to define what problems we were trying to solve. What we were trying to achieve with any reforms needed to be clear as some options could add a burden on to ROs and we would not want to do so without being confident that the changes were actually improving the voting process for electors. ECS noted that working with other services, such as mobile libraries, could allow both innovation and cost savings. AI invited Commissioners to consider what success would look like. CB noted that the Commission needed to balance the cost-accessibility-security triangle too. RV suggested a voting and counting steering group to complement the voter registration steering group. CB cautioned against spreading Commission resources too thin. AC noted that an easy win in relation to accessibility specifically was to add to our performance standards. RP noted that international research could provide a good basis for the Commission's own work. TH noted that it was important to consider upcoming demographic changes, and stressed the importance of being able to visualise the 18 year olds of the future. SC noted that both ends of demographic change needed considering, young and old. JEH noted that he had been struck by the emphasis in the discussion on the desirability of moving towards change based on new technology, though everyone was also well aware of the security and cost constraints. He remarked that overall the system was not broken but that a lack of changes would over time threaten the confidence of voters. ECS enquired as to the possibilities of partnership working with universities. PT noted that King's College brought together tech experts with policy experts to work together on solutions. ECS called for pure social science research partnerships, to share resources and knowledge. A further discussion followed on working with universities, concluding with TH noting that it was important to understand what gave people confidence now, to avoid undermining it with newer developments. AI agreed to take away the ideas from the discussion and identify the principles against which any reforms could be tested. This would help to inform the scoping of a future innovation and development project on modernising the voting process, which would be taken forward from the second half of 2019/20.

Report: How the 2012 GLA elections were run | Electoral Commission Search Report: How the 2012 GLA elections were run You are in the Greater London Authority (GLA) elections section Home Greater London Authority (GLA) elections On this page About the report Facts and figures People's experience of voting Download our full report First published: 15 August 2019 Last updated: 15 August 2019 About the report This report focuses on the administration of the London Mayoral and London Assembly elections held on 3 May 2012. It reflects the experience of voters, based on public opinion research and electoral data provided by Returning Officers. It also reflects feedback and views about the administration of the election from candidates and agents, those responsible for delivering the poll and other participants. Facts and figures On 3 May 2012, elections were held for the Mayor of London and 25 London Assembly members. The poll was combined with local by-elections to elect councillors in wards in 10 London boroughs. The electorate at these elections was 5.8 million and the turnout, including votes rejected at the count, was 38.8%¹. This was a decrease of 6.5 percentage points from the 2008 elections, when turnout was 45.3%. 2.21 million valid votes were cast at the elections. 1.8% of ballot papers were rejected at the count, which was 0.1 percentage points higher than in 2008. 14.1% of the electorate was issued with postal ballot papers for these elections. This is 2.4 percentage points higher than in 2008. Turnout amongst postal voters was 68.8%. 4.6% of returned postal ballot papers were rejected and not included in the count, which was a decrease of 0.2 percentage points from those rejected in 2008. People's experience of voting A key priority for us is that voters are able to vote easily and know that their vote will be counted in the way they intended. Voters continue to have high levels of satisfaction with the voting process. Both polling station and postal voters remain positive about their experience. Voters also understood how to complete their ballot papers for the London elections. Nearly all (95%) said that they found it easy to fill in the ballot, with three quarters (76%) finding it very easy and just 3% reporting difficulties. Full details of our research findings are contained in this report. We want to ensure that people are aware of the need to register to vote in order to take part in the elections. We undertook an advertising campaign for the Greater London Assembly (GLA) elections to promote voter registration. The activity focussed on raising public awareness of the need to register in order to vote, how to register to vote and the deadline for doing so. Awareness of the elections was high in London, with nearly three-quarters (73%) of respondents in London saying they knew 'a great deal' or 'a fair amount' about the elections. Over-three quarters (76%) of people surveyed agreed that they had enough information to make an informed decision on how to vote in the London elections. Those who voted in London were more likely to say they had enough information about the elections to make an informed decision, than those who did not vote (86% compared with 63% respectively). Download our full report 2012 GLA election report 1. Turnout and rejected ballot paper figures are for mayoral first preference votes. ■ Back to content at footnote 1 Related content Results and turnout at the 2012 Greater London Authority elections View the results and turnout at the 2012 Greater London Authority elections Report: How the 2016 GLA elections were run Read our report about how the 2016 Greater London Authority elections were run Results and turnout at the 2016 Greater London Authority elections View the results and turnout at the 2016 Greater London Authority elections Testing the EU referendum question Find out about our testing of the EU referendum question

7. A modern and sustainable electoral system in Wales | Electoral Commission

Search 7. A modern and sustainable electoral system in Wales

You are in the Corporate Plan for Wales 2022/23 to 2026/27 section Home Our plans and priorities Corporate Plan for Wales 2022/23 to 2026/27 On this page Harnessing data and technology to meet the needs of voters, campaigners and electoral administrators Understanding, calling for action and acting on the changing risks to the election system from the misuse of data and technology Continuing to build strong relationships and streamlining working practices with all bodies that are part of the electoral system Supporting governments and the wider electoral community to adopt a strategy and implementation plan which meets environmental standards required of our electoral system First published: 25 April 2022 Last updated: 25 April 2022 Summary We need to make sure our electoral system keeps pace with digital developments. We need to capitalise on the scope for greater compliance, transparency and the financial savings technology offers, while working to retain voter confidence in the electoral system. We also need to modernise the electoral system to ensure it is environmentally sustainable. We will work towards a modern and sustainable electoral system by: harnessing data and technology to meet the needs of voters, campaigners and electoral administrators understanding, calling for action and acting on the changing risks to the election system from the misuse of data and technology continuing to build strong relationships and streamlining working practices with all bodies that are part of the electoral system supporting governments and the wider electoral community to adopt a strategy and implementation plan which meets environmental standards required of our electoral system Harnessing data and technology to meet the needs of voters, campaigners and electoral administrators Data and technology present opportunities for democracy. Working with others, we will ensure we utilise data and technology to achieve efficiencies in the electoral system, to increase compliance with electoral law, and to provide accessible information to voters. We will undertake research to provide an evidence base for how data and technology can be harnessed. We will develop and implement plans to utilise data and technology to meet the needs of voters, campaigners and electoral administrators. We will work with others to implement new practices in the use of data and technology across the electoral system. Understanding, calling for action and acting on the changing risks to the election system from the misuse of data and technology Data and technology also present significant risks for democracy. We will work with others to explore and implement new practices in the use of data and technology across the electoral system, to improve the accessibility, security and efficiency of elections in Wales and other parts of the UK. We will also undertake research to understand how data and technology threatens the integrity of elections, paying specific attention to voters' trust in the electoral system as a whole. Continuing to build strong relationships and streamlining working practices with all bodies that are part of the electoral system We work closely with other bodies that are part of the electoral system. We know that by working collaboratively we are better equipped to respond to the challenges the electoral system faces. We will continue to strengthen these relationships, including with a number of regulators and law enforcement bodies that play a role in enforcing electoral law. We will also continue to help voters understand who is responsible for specific areas of electoral law, and will work to ensure they know who to contact if they have concerns. We will continue to ensure we work with these other bodies in an efficient way, with the ultimate aim of increasing the impact we and they have in the delivery of an effective and trusted electoral system. Supporting governments and the wider electoral community to adopt a strategy and implementation plan which meets environmental standards required of our electoral system Over the life of this plan it will become increasingly important to understand and reduce the environmental impact of the electoral system, ensuring it meets the challenging environmental targets which are likely to be brought into law by the Senedd and the UK's other parliaments. Responding to these targets will also increasingly challenge the local delivery of well-run elections and referendums. We will develop a strategy and implementation plan which seeks to reduce the environmental impact of our electoral system, to include innovative evidence-based solutions. We will work with the Welsh Government, other UK governments and local authorities to identify actions to reduce environmental impact. And, we will keep under review potential solutions which may lead to increased sustainability. Navigation 6. Making sure electoral law is fair and effective in Wales Section 6 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan 8. Underpinning this work in Wales Section 8 of our 2022/23 to 2026/27 corporate plan for Wales

Interim corporate plan 2020/21 - 2024/25 | Electoral Commission Search

Interim corporate plan 2020/21 - 2024/25 You are in the Our plans and priorities section Home Our plans and priorities On this page Our vision and goals The changing context Our goals and priorities over the next five years First published: 31 May 2019 Last updated: 30 September 2022 Interim corporate plan 2020/21 - 2024/25 Corporate plan This five-year Corporate Plan , for the period 2022/23 to 2026/27, replaces and develops our interim plan put in place after the December 2019 UK general election. We also have a Corporate Plan for Wales , covering our activities in Wales for the period 2022/23 to 2026/27. We have published an interim corporate plan covering 2020 - 2025. This is required by legislation following the 2019 general election. The plan covers our early priorities and how we plan to fulfil our responsibilities, particularly in the first year. A full five year plan will be published later this year. Our vision and goals Our vision is to be a world-class public sector organisation — innovative, delivering great value and getting right what matters most to voters and legislators. We plan to achieve this vision through a five-year work programme with four goals. Goal 1 To enable the continued delivery of free and fair elections and referendums, focusing on the needs of electors and addressing the changing environment to ensure every vote remains secure and accessible Goal 2 To ensure an increasingly trusted and transparent system of regulation in political finance, overseeing compliance, promoting understanding amongst those regulated and proactively pursuing breaches Goal 3 To be an independent and respected centre of expertise, using knowledge and insight to further the transparency, fairness and efficiency of our democratic system, and help adapt it to the modern, digital age Goal 4 To provide value for money, making best use of our resources and expertise to deliver services that are attuned to what matters most to voters. This goal underpins and supports all of our work The changing context The period since the last corporate plan was published has seen significant change. The impact of the COVID-19 pandemic is only beginning to be felt, including the postponement of the polls scheduled for May 2020. A welcome step, but one which presents a big challenge to running the May 2021 polls. Elections continue to be well-run, despite the demands that unscheduled polls place on electoral administrators. Public satisfaction with the process of registering to vote, and voting, continues to be high. Our regulation of political finance has continued to prove its worth. But our system is showing strain. There is significant pressure on local authorities' resources and capacity. For the public, the system depends on trust, which can be lost quickly if doubt begins to set in. While our research with the public shows that the majority of people were confident the May 2019 elections were well run, and most voters were satisfied with the voting process, overall levels of voter confidence in the running of the May local and European Parliamentary Election were lower than at previous polls. Over the next five years, investing in reforms to support the delivery of well-run elections, the effectiveness and transparency of campaigning, and the bolstering of voter confidence, will be critical. Outdated electoral law is one of the biggest challenge we face. From an outdated registration system in need of modernisation, to large volumes of legislation that electoral administrators need to refer to when running multiple elections. Existing proposals from the UK's Law Commissions have provided a strong basis for further work, and we continue to call on the UK's governments to take these forward. The nature of political campaigning continues to change. Digital advertising spend is increasing. Regulation, and the law, needs to keep up with these advances. As campaigning changes, we need to ensure that we have the right powers and tools to effectively regulate political finance. We are working hard to encourage compliance with all those concerned. None of these issues are new, but they are increasing in risk and urgency. Our plan outlines how we want to play a part in addressing these challenges. We also plan to work with all UK governments to help them take forward their own reform plans. Our goals and priorities over the next five years Goal 1 This goal captures our central role in overseeing the delivery of elections and referendums across the UK's nations. We support electoral administrators, candidates and parties across the UK by providing guidance and tailored advice, as well as information for voters on registration and voting. There are 23 scheduled electoral events during the period of this corporate plan. In the lead up to those events, we will invest in supporting electoral administrators, candidates and parties across the UK. In addition, we will ensure we are fully prepared to respond to any unscheduled electoral events during the period of this plan. The UK Government announced on 12 March 2020 that the elections due to take place in May 2020 would be postponed until May 2021. While this welcome decision means we are not now facing the delivery of polls in an exceptionally challenging environment in May 2020, it does mean that the elections to be held in May 2021 will be more than previously expected. Events are now scheduled to take place across the whole of Great Britain, and with more significant combinations of polls. We are already working to help the electoral community understand the implications of the postponement and to put in place arrangements to support the effective delivery of these polls, and this will continue throughout 2020-21. Delivering well-run electoral events During the period covered by this corporate plan, we'll support the delivery of 23 scheduled elections. In the run up to these elections, we'll continue to support local authorities, candidates and agents. We're proposing that we invest in an enhanced guidance support service. This means we could offer more advice, tools and resources. We'll also be moving more guidance to a modern and accessible format. We'll also work with partners to improve accessibility of elections, so that everyone has equal access to election information and processes. Voter registration campaigns We'll run voter registration campaigns ahead of all major polls, raising awareness of the need to register amongst all eligible voters, but targeting under registered groups in particular. Supporting the UK's governments' annual canvass reforms in Great Britain We'll provide advice, guidance and resource materials for Electoral Registration Officers to support them with implementing these changes effectively. We will also work to support the 2021 canvass in Northern Ireland, including running a public awareness campaign to highlight what people need to do to ensure they are registered to vote. Increasing resilience in local electoral services We'll take forward work on a strategy to support increased resilience in the delivery of local electoral services. We'll work with key partners in the electoral community to explore initiatives, such as an induction and mentoring programme for new Returning Officers, and an electoral services toolkit. New performance standards for Electoral Registration Officers (EROs) We'll publish new performance standards to be used by us and EROs to understand and improve their performance, ensuring that registers are as accurate and complete as possible and that everyone who is eligible and wants to vote is able to do so. Franchise changes We will respond to and engage with the Scottish and Welsh governments' policy and legislative agendas for changes to the franchise to ensure they work for the public and EROs. We'll also invest in campaigns to raise public awareness of these changes. Electoral fraud work We'll continue to include close engagement with the police and with local authorities. We'll be supported by public-facing activity such as our 'Your Vote is Yours Alone' campaign. What impacts and benefits will this achieve? This work will enable us to deliver enhanced support for local authorities in the delivery of electoral services, and improve engagement with key partners in the electoral community, such as Solace and the Association of s (AEA). This will contribute to the provision of high quality services for voters and the delivery of well-run elections and registration systems. Our work will help to ensure that the results of elections will be increasingly trusted and accepted and the number of successful legal challenges will be as close to zero as possible. Goal 2 This goal captures our regulatory role, and is vital to ensuring the transparency which sits at the heart of any healthy democracy. Our work in this area is already wide-ranging, and increasingly proactive, securing compliance by supporting parties and campaigners, by real-time intervention and – when needed – by enforcement action.

Ensuring transparency We maintain published online political parties registers, giving confidence that only parties that meet the legal registration tests can appear on ballot papers. We also maintain a register of campaigners which spend substantial sums campaigning in elections. We deliver transparency of UK political finance by publishing details of donations and loans, annual accounts from registered parties, and campaign spending, which parties and others are required to report to us. We provide high quality advice and guidance to support parties, candidates and campaigners in complying with the rules. And we take action, where appropriate imposing sanctions, when the rules are broken, in accordance with the Commission's statutory Enforcement Policy. We believe it is far better to work to ensure compliance before an electoral event rather than have to take enforcement action afterwards. So we propose to invest in supporting compliance through a user-friendly online tool and a more responsive regulatory service. Continue to maintain the registers of political parties and campaigners This ensures voters have clarity about registered parties and campaigners on the ballot paper. It includes completing a review of registered descriptions to make sure only those meeting the legal tests are included, and looking at how the constitutions and financial schemes of parties are formulated. Publishing financial data from parties and campaigners We'll continue to promote transparency of political finance by publishing financial data from parties and campaigners, including that related to elections. Alongside this, we will deliver a new Political Finance Online system to support parties and campaigners to deliver their financial returns efficiently. Providing timely and high quality advice To promote high rates of compliance with the rules, and thus transparency for voters, we will continue to provide timely and high quality advice and guidance to parties and campaigners to support them in meeting their legal requirements. This will include publishing guidance for the major elections in 2021, reflecting the impacts of the complex combination of polls, as appropriate, and developing codes of practice to underpin the law on reporting election spending. Working with parties and campaigners, we will develop a new strategic framework to ensure effective and impactful proactive support. Enforcing political finance rules We will deliver effective enforcement of the political finance rules, ensuring voters, parties and campaigners have confidence that the rules are enforced proportionately and with impact, within our current powers. We will continue to publish the outcome of each investigation, including in full reports where that is warranted, so voters, parties and campaigners can see the way we act to enforce the rules. To deter people from committing offences, and to make sure we can respond proportionally if they do, we will continue to build the capacity to prosecute suspected offences. We will consult on the way we approach the use of prosecutions. Responding to the changing environment We will respond to the changing environment as more money is spent on digital campaigning by responding to and engaging with government policy and legislative agendas for political finance to ensure they increase transparency for the public and are workable for campaigners. We will strengthen our engagement with social media companies and other providers of digital advertising to ensure their services and policies support transparency for election and referendum campaign activity. Policy development grants We will administer the policy development grants scheme and ensure it operates effectively by making timely recommendations to the UK Government for any necessary changes. What impacts and benefits will we achieve? This work will provide a faster and more responsive engagement with stakeholders ,and guidance that is increasingly forward looking and gets ahead of potential regulatory issues. We should achieve a deeper and wider understanding of the campaign finance laws amongst parties and campaigners, leading to higher compliance rates. We will deliver an expanded range of tools that directly support parties and campaigners and are flexible enough to work for different structures and sizes, and that support targeted areas of the campaign finance rules, driven by strategic intelligence and horizon scanning. Together, this should result in improvement in the quality and reliability of the financial data parties and campaigners provide and we publish. The public will see and can have confidence that the spending and funding of political parties and candidates at UK elections is and transparent, and that we will take proportionate action if anyone breaks the rules on campaign funding. Goal 3 This goal captures our role in guiding the sector through the challenges it faces. We will provide the evidence, analysis and insight needed by us and others working in the field, to identify and address the most important issues facing the UK's democratic system. We will also monitor changes to the system of electoral registration and use post-election opinion surveys and our annual UK-wide survey to monitor the public's view on electoral issues and their experiences when taking part in elections. This data informs our decisions and policy recommendations, helps us to influence developments in legislation, policy and practice, and supports us in ensuring we are getting right what matters most to voters. We will continue to undertake research and report on the accuracy and completeness of the UK's electoral registers. We have a statutory duty to report on elections and referendums and keep electoral law under review. We will also continue to scrutinise new electoral legislation and provide expert briefings to governments and legislatures on legislative proposals. Voter confidence in our electoral system is crucial, and hinges on belief in the information offered. So we propose to invest in building voter awareness and education with a particular focus on digital campaigning. Providing expert advice and support to political parties, campaigners, governments and the public We will provide expert advice to these groups to inform policy change, educate and inform the public and promote partnership working across the electoral sector. This will include public relations and public affairs support for the Government's political finance policies and electoral law reform, a press office function to manage media and public enquiries and the provision of expert advice and evidence to inform policy consultations and reviews. Reporting on elections We will continue to report on the administration of elections to ensure we utilise learning to improve the delivery of future events. We will continue to promote and build support for changes to our democratic processes through dedicated campaigns and collaborative working with key partners and stakeholders. We will work with partners to consider options for improving the accessibility of elections and the modernisation of registration through the better use of existing public data records. Developing our evidence base We will develop our evidence base to enable greater understanding of the electoral environment, emerging issues, risks and opportunities that could affect our work in the medium to long term, and enable us to plan accordingly. We will gather data and information after elections, including on public attitudes as well as the experiences of electoral administrators and candidates, to deepen our understanding of the issues faced by our customers including the public and local authorities. Increasing our public awareness activity We will enhance our public awareness activity to help voters understand the rules and systems that operate around elections and referendums, and their abilities to raise concerns and get involved. This will include activity around elections, related to the digital campaigning techniques increasingly used to reach voters, and the production of longer-term education materials to be used in formal and informal settings. of our information Promoting transparency is one of our corporate values and we will look to improve the accessibility of our information to partners and the public by developing our new corporate website further. We'll also be updating and revising the research content available. This will include a project to use open data and digital tools to make them accessible to all. Electoral fraud research We will proceed with our research and data analysis of cases of electoral fraud to identify any changes that could help tackle the issue, and to support engagement with the UK's governments and their legislative agendas, such as the UK Government's proposal to introduce voter identity across Great Britain. A full corporate plan Through the development of our full corporate plan, and in consultation with our stakeholders, we will develop a new work programme to cover the next five year period. This will seek to make the greatest possible contribution to helping the sector to identify and plan for the most significant opportunities and challenges it faces. What impacts and benefits will we achieve? Our expert evidence and views are referenced in public debate about our democratic system and processes, and government proposals reflect our priorities and recommendations for change. Goal 4 As a body directly accountable to Parliament, we are subject to the same expectations of Parliament for regularity, propriety and value for money as other public bodies. Meeting or exceeding these standards is integral to the way we manage the day-to-day. Our financial accountability to Parliament is exercised through the Speaker's Committee on the Electoral Commission, a House of Commons committee, chaired by the Speaker and comprising ministers serving ex-officio and back-benchers appointed by the Speaker. Key to our success over the next five years and beyond is ensuring we have the right resources in place to support the delivery of this plan, including the initial need for resilience to ensure we are able to respond appropriately to the COVID-19 pandemic. This goal provides a focus to activities that support the organisation and ensure we have the appropriate skilled people and systems, that the delivery of services is efficient, effective and economical, and that we invest in modernising our infrastructure and systems to deliver consistent and improving value for money. This includes providing consistently high quality human resources, finance, planning, legal, support and information and communication technology (ICT) functions. People strategy We will implement our new 'people strategy' to promote a culture where staff teams are best able to perform their roles effectively. Digital working improvements We will continue to work on our 'ways of working' project to deliver digitally enabled business change to reflect the expectations of a modern employer, and ensure ICT can support those changes. Planned new investment in line-of-business systems over the coming years include a new regulatory case management system to support moving to undertake prosecutions, a replacement client case management system to track public and stakeholder contact, and post-poll reporting tools. Tracking corporate performance We have successfully implemented a new corporate planning and performance system that enables the organisation to have a single, integrated picture of strategic and operational business activity, project delivery, risk and performance. This now enables us to focus on developing improved capability and understanding of the delivery of our strategic goals and the impact we are delivering for our customers. Accountability in Scotland and Wales We will continue to work with the Scottish Parliament and National Assembly for Wales to implement our new accountability arrangements, including a new funding formula and business plans for Scotland and Wales. Legal services Our ability to meet the needs of voters, legislatures, political parties and all of our other stakeholders is indirectly reliant on us having a specialist legal service. We will review and refresh how we deliver legal services that effectively and efficiently meet the changing and increasing requirements on us, and reduce use of expensive outside expertise. This initiative will establish a more stable core base of lawyers in re-orientated working arrangements that are underpinned by strong quality management processes and case management systems. Quality management We will embed quality management processes across all our services and functions, building on the sound practice in place in our regulatory teams. This will drive the development of our systems and processes and embed quality and continuous improvement in our culture. What impacts and benefits will we achieve? Improving our planning and performance reporting will enable improved monitoring and management across all our goals, thereby driving improved impact on the things that matter most directly to electors. Our 'ways of working' project combines real technological improvements and changes in working practices and conditions. We expect this to lead to real improvements in productivity through improved across-team working and greater flexibility. Our 'people strategy' is designed to ensure we have the engaged and empowered staff to deliver our ambitious agenda. We aim to see this reflected in higher staff engagement scores and higher staff retention rates. The real impact of these changes, however, will be felt in the performance and impact measures in this and other goals as we translate these internal goals into improved delivery. Read the corporate plan in full Corporate Plan 2020-21 to 2024-25

Wales annual report | Electoral Commission Search Wales annual report You are in the Annual Report and Accounts 2022/23 section Home Our plans and priorities Annual Report and Accounts 2022/23 On this page Work done to achieve our aims Ongoing and future work Commitment to EDI Governance First published: 4 July 2023 Last updated: 27 September 2023 Summary This report provides an overview of our work on devolved matters in Wales and looks at our performance during the last year. We have included summary financial information within the performance report. This is consistent with the financial statements, where more detail is available. The Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000 (PPERA) established the Electoral Commission. We are independent of government and political parties and directly accountable to the UK, Scottish and Welsh parliaments.
Amendments made to the Government of Wales Act 2006, by the Wales Act 2017, transferred responsibility for devolved Welsh elections and referendums from the UK Parliament to the Senedd. The Senedd Elections Wales Act 2020 sets out the funding and accountability arrangements for the Electoral Commission's devolved activities in Wales. Work done to achieve our aims Our work in early 2022-23 focused on supporting the delivery of the local government elections across Wales. This included: Working with the Wales Electoral Coordination Board (WEBC) to provide advice and guidance to Returning Officers and their staff on preparing for and delivering the polls. Working with political parties and Returning Officers to provide targeted support and briefing sessions to candidates and agents contesting the elections. Running a mass-media public awareness campaign for voters, reminding them of the key deadlines for registration and absent vote applications. There were 38,438 applications made to register to vote in Wales during our voter registration campaign. Publishing our evaluation, in July, on the early voting pilots that took place in four Welsh local authority areas at the May 2022 elections. Publishing our statutory report on the elections in September, which reflected data and evidence gathered on voting, campaigning, and delivering the election. We found that the vast majority of voters were satisfied with the process of voting and almost all were able to use their preferred method of voting. Through the year we focussed activity on our advice and support service to our stakeholders, including electoral administrators, candidates and agents. This included: Consulting administrators in Wales on a new performance standards framework for Returning Officers, which has now been laid in the Senedd.
Using our performance standards frameworks to support and challenge Returning Officers at the local government elections and Electoral Registration Officers on their year-round activities to maintain accurate and complete electoral registers.
Identifying new opportunities to provide support to the regulated community to help them comply with the rules around campaign finance. We continued to provide expert advice to Welsh Government and the Senedd on policy development in relation to electoral matters: Appearing before the Llywydd's Committee to give evidence as part of its scrutiny of the 2023/24 financial estimate. Providing a comprehensive response to the Welsh Government's Electoral Reform and Administration White Paper, drawing on our policy work and wide-ranging research with voters, electoral administrators, and campaigners. We built on the success of our work to promote democratic education by providing learning resources for teachers and youth workers. This included: Working with local authorities, headteachers and our partner Democracy Box to develop and promote our new resources for democratic engagement for schools and other learning providers to support voter participation and confidence. Promoting our Welcome to Your Vote Week at the end of January, which achieved a good level of involvement from organisations across Wales. We held a launch event at the Senedd with the Minister for Education and Welsh Language, Jeremy Miles. Ongoing and future work We see a continuing need to support more newly enfranchised voters across Wales to become involved in democracy. We will therefore expand the reach of our education programme, developing resources relevant to the new Welsh curriculum and engaging further with partner organisations. Our aim is to educate young people about the democratic process and prepare educators to teach political literacy with confidence. Through training and briefing sessions, we will support parties and campaigners to comply with the law, while continuing to ensure political finance is transparent. We will support Returning Officers and electoral administrators to help them meet the challenges they face in delivering well-run electoral services. Our focus will be on helping them adapt to a diverse electoral landscape and the changing needs of voters in Wales. We will work closely with the Senedd and Welsh Government as they introduce new primary legislation to bring into effect plans for both Senedd and electoral reforms. Working with the Wales Electoral Coordination Board, we will convey the views of Returning Officers and s to Welsh Government and seek to ensure that they are taken into account in the development of this new legislation. We will work with Welsh police, campaigners and electoral administrators to explore and address concerns raised by candidates about intimidation and abuse at elections. Commitment to EDI The Electoral Commission serves a diverse democracy in Wales, and we are committed to equality, diversity and inclusion. Our programme of partnership work has developed resources to support democratic inclusion for those who experience barriers to voting. This has included providing material in a variety of languages, including British Sign Language, and in a number of formats including easy read, large print, audio and braille. We have also worked with partner organisations in Wales to develop appropriate materials for Gypsy/Travellers, care experienced young people, domestic abuse survivors and people experiencing homelessness. In the year ahead we will be working closely with representatives from the electoral community to explore how we can improve the accessibility of the electoral process for people who experience barriers to participating in elections. We are also committed to the principle that the Welsh and languages should be treated on a basis of equality in public business and provision of resources and services. This has led to further improvement in the service we provide to partners in the language of their choice, and to ensuring that the Welsh Language Standards, set in July 2016, are not only met, but that we are innovative and ambitious in the services that we provide. We also continue to work closely with the WECB's Welsh Language Advisory Group whose aim is to ensure that the Welsh language is treated equally in matters of electoral legislation and guidance and that necessary support is given to the wider electoral community. Resources During 2022/23 we utilised 98% of £1.54m of budget available. This was predominately staffing £1.1m (71%) with advertising and research £0.3m (19%); the remaining amounts represent the Senedd contribution to common activities and corporate overheads. Our segmental reporting on shows the breakdown between direct and indirect costs. Governance The Commission is formally accountable to, and receives funding from, the Senedd in respect of its functions in relation to devolved Welsh elections and referendums. We report to the Llywydd's Committee which was established for this purpose and works to the "Statement of Funding Principles" which was agreed with the Senedd in early 2021. In September 2022 we submitted our third set of estimates to the Senedd enabling the UK Treasury to transfer the agreed level of funding to the Welsh Consolidated Fund. This process has been agreed by all parties and ensures all parliaments can be confident in scrutinising our work plans and accounts. Navigation Previous Next Northern Ireland annual report Scotland annual report

Consultation on draft NPC Code of Practice | Electoral Commission Search
Consultation on draft NPC Code of Practice You are in the Our consultations section Home Our consultations NPC Code of Practice On this page Summary How to respond How we developed the draft Code Questionnaire Background First published: 24 November 2022 Last updated: 24 November 2022 Summary Summary Some individuals and organisations that are not political parties campaign on issues or causes around elections without standing candidates themselves. They play a significant role in providing voters with information and a diversity of voices. The Commission calls these individuals and organisations non-party campaigners. In electoral law they are called third parties. The Elections Act 2022 includes new requirements for registration and spending by non-party campaigners. The Act introduces a duty on the Electoral Commission to produce a Code of Practice on the laws relating to non-party campaigner spending, including what qualifies as expenses, reporting controlled expenditure and donations, and joint campaigning. The Code will apply to general elections to the UK Parliament (UKPGE) and Northern Ireland Assembly (NIA). The Code of Practice, once finalised will be presented to the Secretary of State for Levelling Up, Housing and Communities. The Minister may then modify the Code before laying it for parliamentary approval. Your views will help us make the Code we present to the Secretary of State as clear and helpful as possible. The Commission must have regard to this Code when exercising its functions under Part 6 of the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000 (PPERA). It is a defence for a non-party campaigner to show that they complied with this Code in determining whether their campaign activity was regulated. The consultation closed on 20 January 2023. Read our response to the consultation on Code of Practice for Non-party s . How to respond The consultation is open from 24 November 2022 until 20 January 2023. You can respond by: filling in our online form emailing your views to codeconsultation@electoralcommission.org.uk or writing to us at: Regulatory Support Team The Electoral Commission 3 Bunhill Row London EC1Y 8YZ Throughout the consultation period, we will continue to engage with the electoral and campaigning community. We are happy to meet with any groups or interested individuals on request. If you have any questions, please do get in touch on 0207 271 0546. How we developed the draft Code We talked to a range of non-party campaigners from across the UK to inform the draft Code. We asked them about: their understanding of the new provisions their experiences of campaigning under the Political Parties, Elections and Referendum Act 2000 (PPERA) legal framework how they see non-party campaigning evolving in the future View the draft Code of Practice Questionnaire NPC guidance Status message This consultation closed on 20 January 2023. Leave this field blank Background Existing non-party campaigner legislation There are well-established laws regulating the activities of non-party campaigners in the periods before elections. These include laws on who can spend money at elections, how much money they can spend, how they must comply with who they accept donations from and what information they need to report about their spending and receipt of donations. For more information on these laws, please see our existing guidance . Elections Act 2022 The UK Elections Act 2022 includes provisions that lowers the notification threshold for non-party campaigners at UK Parliamentary elections. It also limits spending by non-party campaigners who do not have a UK connection at these, and Northern Ireland Assembly, elections. Section 29 of the Elections Act 2022 contains a specific duty on the Commission to produce a statutory Code of Practice for non-party campaigners at UK Parliamentary general elections and NI Assembly elections. This Code of Practice, unlike most of the Commission's guidance, must be approved by the relevant Minister, and the UK Parliament.

Response to the UK Government policy consultation: Protecting the Debate | Electoral Commission Search Response to the UK Government policy consultation: Protecting the Debate You are in the Transparent digital campaigning section Home Transparent digital campaigning On this page Summary Applying electoral sanctions to existing criminal offences Intimidation of voters Increasing transparency in digital election campaigning First published: 15 August 2018 Last updated: 9 June 2021 Overview This response sets out our advice on three proposed changes to electoral law to protect candidates and voters from intimidation. We are responding to this consultation as Parliament has given us a role to keep electoral law under review and to recommend changes where we think they are needed.

Summary Applying electoral sanctions to existing criminal offences Candidates and campaigners have a key role in encouraging people to participate in elections and referendums. Activities for or against candidates and campaigners must not bring into question the integrity of the electoral process. We agree with the Government that allowing electoral sanctions to be applied as well as criminal sanctions could act as a strengthened deterrent against intimidating candidates or campaigners Removing the right to vote would be a disproportionate sanction, but stopping someone from standing for election may not be a sufficient deterrent for people who do not want to become a candidate The Government should consider whether increasing the maximum sentence for serious offences relating to elections, as recommended by the UK's Law Commissions, would also act as a strengthened deterrent against intimidation

Intimidation of voters – undue influence Voters should be protected from being intimidated to vote in a particular way or not to vote. We welcome the UK Government's review of the offence of undue influence and continue to support the modernisation and simplification of all aspects of this offence Any changes to the current laws on undue influence must be clearly and simply defined with workable definitions We continue to recommend that any changes should be made as part of a comprehensive reform of all electoral offences, as set out in the UK Law Commissions' 2016 recommendations. Many electoral offences are complex, out of date and not easily understood and reforming undue influence alone risks adding further complexity without addressing many of the problems with the legislation We would be pleased to work with the UK government and with prosecutors and police, who can advise on how the law will work in practice Increasing transparency in digital election campaigning We have recommended since 2003 that the imprint rules be extended to digital material. Extending the imprint rules to digital material is urgent. This gap in transparency is affecting voter confidence and our ability to enforce the rules All non-printed election and referendum material should contain an imprint Any new regulations should be drafted as general principles to make them platform neutral and to future-proof them for changes in technology The UK Government should give the Electoral Commission wider powers to compel information outside of an investigation, including from digital platforms The imprint rules for printed election material in the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000 (PPERA) should be commenced for Northern Ireland The imprint rules in Northern Ireland should be the same as the rest of the UK Applying electoral sanctions to existing criminal offences The consultation asks for views on introducing a new offence in electoral law. However, the consultation actually focuses on applying new electoral sanctions to existing criminal offences. Our response reflects this interpretation. We agree with the Government that allowing electoral sanctions to be applied as well as criminal sanctions could act as a strengthened deterrent against intimidating candidates or campaigners Removing the right to vote would be a disproportionate sanction, but stopping someone from standing for election may not be a sufficient deterrent for people who do not want to become a candidate. The Government should consider whether increasing the maximum sentence for serious offences relating to elections, as recommended by the UK's Law Commissions, would also act as a strengthened deterrent against intimidation.

Question 1: Do you agree that the new electoral offence should apply electoral sanctions to existing offences of intimidatory behaviour, such as those identified by the CSPL, listed in Annex A, and equivalent offences in Scotland and Northern Ireland? We agree that electoral sanctions should be applied to these existing offences. It is important that people are deterred from intimidating candidates so that people can stand for election and campaign without fearing abuse or intimidation. Voters must have confidence in the candidates standing in elections and those campaigning in a referendum. Seeing or hearing about intimidation should not stop them from voting, nor should it influence how someone votes. Applying electoral sanctions should deter some people from engaging in behaviour that intimidates candidates. Any changes to the legislation would need to be applied by the Welsh and Scottish Governments for the relevant elections in Wales and Scotland. The legislation in Northern Ireland would need to be changed by the UK Government through the Northern Ireland Office. We agree that the UK Government should examine existing legislation and make sure that the 'new' legislation reflects any future criminal legislation.

Penalty for the new offence

Question 2: We propose that the new electoral offence will attract the sanction of being barred from standing for elected office for 5 years. Do you agree? We agree that if an individual is found guilty of a specified offence they should be prohibited from standing or holding any elected office for a period of 5 years. Applying this sanction would make sure that there is consistency with other relevant sanctions for corrupt practices such as undue influence which is also about intimidation, although of voters. Without this sanction there would also not be consistency across different elections and referendums for someone being automatically disqualified from standing for election if they had been convicted of any of the offences listed in Annex A.

Question 3: Do you think the new electoral offence should remove an offender's right to vote? We do not agree that an individual found guilty of intimidation should have their right to vote removed. Corrupt practices under the Representation of the People Act 1983 (RPA), which have a sanction of removing a person's right to vote, are those which abuse someone's right to vote. Intimidating a candidate or campaigner does not do this. However, stopping someone from standing for election for five years may not be enough of a deterrent for people who have no intention of putting themselves up for election. We think that this area needs to be explored further to see if there is another, more suitable, sanction that could also or instead be used. Prison sentences could be a more effective deterrent. A person who has been found guilty of any offence and is detained in prison is not allowed to vote. The UK's Law Commissions have recommended increasing the maximum sentence in cases of serious electoral fraud to 10 years. The Government should consider whether to apply this maximum sentence to intimidation offences set out in Annex A that are committed during election and referendum periods. Which elections would be covered? Which elections would be covered?

Question 4: We think that offences committed against candidates and campaigners during all types of polls should attract the additional electoral sanctions. Do you agree? If not, please explain. Intimidating candidates and campaigners is not acceptable at any poll. Offences committed against candidates and campaigners should attract the additional electoral sanctions for all types of poll. It is important to ensure consistency across all polls. Consistency will prevent confusion as to when, and at what elections, the sanctions apply. It will also send a clear message to campaigners and voters that intimidation is unacceptable behaviour and has serious consequences. Question 5: We propose that offences against campaigners during a referendum campaign should attract the additional electoral sanctions. Do you agree? If not, please explain. We agree that electoral sanctions should apply to offences against campaigners during a referendum campaign Applying these electoral sanctions should deter some people from engaging in behaviour that intimidates campaigners Who would be protected? Who would be protected? Question 6: We propose that the existing definition of when someone becomes a 'candidate', with reference to any election campaign, would be clear and workable for the new electoral offence. Do you agree? If not, please explain. We do not agree that the existing definition of when someone becomes a candidate will be workable for the new electoral sanction. This is explained in our response to questions 8 and 9. Question 7a: Do you think the new electoral offence should extend to campaigners? If so, please explain which campaigners you think should fall within the scope of the new electoral offence, given the above considerations. If not, please explain. Question 7b: If you think that campaigners should be included, do you have a suggestion as to how this could be done for use in the relevant legislation? We agree that protection of new electoral sanctions should be extended to campaigners. When defining a campaigner, and who should fall within the scope of the new sanctions, the UK Government may want to consider the approach taken in the Postal Voting Bill. This is Private Members Bill introduced under the 10 minute rule and due a second reading on 26 October. Instead of using the term 'campaigner' it defines 'a person who engages in activities for the purpose of promoting a particular outcome at a relevant election'. This was drafted with input from the Cabinet Office. We would be happy to work with the UK Government on any amendments to the legislation which would enable the new electoral sanction to be applied to campaigners. Applicable time period Applicable time period Question 8: Do you agree that protection should start from the period of notice of elections? If not, please explain. Question 9: Should there be a period before notice of election for a scheduled poll, for example during the long campaign period, during which this offence applies? If so, what would be a suitable time period of protection? If not, please explain. We do not agree that the provision should be tied to the notice of election. Protection should cover people who have publicly stated they are going to stand for election but their candidacy has not officially commenced for the purpose of electoral law. The earliest day someone can become a candidate for the purpose of electoral law (for example in relation to the regulation of their campaign spending) is either the last day for publication of the notice of election or, at a UKPGE, the day of dissolution of Parliament. Protection therefore could start at the point of becoming a candidate under electoral law. However a person might declare their candidacy publicly prior to this. For example the lead up to a UK parliamentary general election where there is a long campaign. During this period the spending rules apply and people are actively campaigning, but their candidacy has not officially commenced. This means that someone could be subject to intimidation during this time but before becoming a candidate under electoral law. They would not be protected by the electoral sanctions if it was to start from the period of notice of election. The Government should consider whether there needs to be a defined start date from which the new electoral sanctions could be applied. For example, it could be for the prosecution and sentencing judge to determine if a person was subject to intimidation because of the fact they were a candidate, based on the specific circumstances in each individual case. Question10a: Do you agree that protection, under the new electoral offence, should end seven calendar days after the close of poll? Question 10b: If not, when do you think protection under the new electoral offence should end? If the protection of a new electoral sanction were to end seven days after the close of poll, there is a risk that elected representatives could be subject to intimidation. This could mean that they are prevented from carrying out their elected mandate. Ideally, there would be no end date to the application of the new electoral sanctions. The Government should ask further advice from the police, prosecutors and the judiciary should advise on how this could be achieved in practice. Question 11: Do you agree that protection, under the new electoral offence, should apply during the referendum period, as determined by the relevant referendum legislation? If not, please explain. The protection should start once the relevant legislation setting the date of the referendum has come into force. Once the date of the referendum has been set in legislation everyone knows when polling day is and that referendum is definitely going ahead. Therefore, regardless of whether the regulated period for referendum campaign spending has started, campaigners can start campaigning and may be at risk of being intimidated. Ensuring the offence applies only in appropriate cases Ensuring the offence applies only in appropriate cases Question 12: Do you agree that a new electoral offence should only be applicable in cases where a candidate or campaigner is intimidated because they are a candidate or campaigner? We agree that the new electoral sanction should only apply when a candidate or campaigner is intimidated because they are candidate or campaigner. We think that the police, prosecutors and the judiciary should advise on how this could be achieved in practice as they will be the enforcers of the new electoral sanctions.

Intimidation of voters - undue influence Voters should be protected from being intimidated to vote in a particular way or not to vote We welcome the UK Government's review of the offence of undue influence and continue to support the modernisation and simplification of all aspects of this offence Any changes to the current laws on undue influence must be clearly and simply defined with workable definitions We continue to recommend that any changes should be made as part of a comprehensive reform of all electoral offences, as set out in the UK Law Commissions' 2016 recommendations. Many electoral offences are complex, out of date and not easily understood and reforming undue influence alone risks adding further complexity without addressing many of the problems with the legislation We would be pleased to work with the UK government and with prosecutors and police, who can advise on how the law will work in practice Simplifying the law on undue influence Simplifying the law on undue influence Question 13: Do you agree that the law of undue influence requires greater clarity in its application? If not, please explain. We agree the law of undue influence requires greater clarity and we support a revised and more clearly defined offence Simplifying undue influence would deliver one of the UK's Law Commissions' proposals, recommendation 11-4, for comprehensive electoral law reform. The Government should also bring forward proposals for implementing the other recommendations published in February 2016 There must be trust and confidence in the integrity of the electoral process. Modern and clear electoral law offences are a central part of ensuring this. People who must comply with the law, and those who enforce the law, need to understand what behaviour is prohibited and the associated punishments. We said, in our 2015 response to the Law Commissions' consultation on electoral law reform that the offence of undue influence is perhaps one of the most complex of all electoral law offences and we would support simplification. We also supported the simplification and modernisation of the offences of treating and bribery. These are also complex offences closely linked to undue influence. We remain concerned that the changes proposed by the UK Government would not go far enough to simplify the current range of electoral offences. We continue to recommend that any changes to undue influence should take place as part of a comprehensive reform of electoral offences, alongside a simple, modernised process of challenging an election. Reforming undue influence alone risks adding further complexity without addressing many of the problems with the legislation.

Question 14: If it is decided to simplify the existing offence of undue influence, we do not propose to materially change the element of the offence relating to physical acts of violence or threat of violence. Do you agree? If not, please explain. We agree that physical acts of violence or threat of violence should stay in the offence of undue influence. However it should be simplified and clearly defined. We think that the suggested definitions of physical acts of violence or threat of violence set out in the consultation document are a useful basis for simplification.

Question 15: Any act, whether lawful or unlawful, which is intended to cause harm to the individual and is carried out with the intention to make a person vote, vote in a particular way, or deter them from voting and should be captured within this offence. Do you agree? If not, please explain. We agree these should be covered by the offence. The UK Government should also revisit and simplify the definition of harm. The Oxford Dictionary contains three definitions of "harm": physical injury, especially that which is deliberately inflicted; material damage and; actual or potential ill effects or danger. It is important that it is clear which of these definitions apply to the offence of undue influence. Our understanding is that harm is meant to be broader than just physical injury. Therefore, any definition of harm put forward by the UK Government should include all three definitions. The consultation question does not refer to the offences of loss, damage or temporal and spiritual injury. These are captured under the existing offence of undue influence. It should be clear whether these will be included under the definitions of harm or duress, or removed from the offence entirely. We would be concerned if they were removed entirely.

Question 16: We propose to retain reference to 'direct and indirect' acts which cause the elector harm. Do you agree? If not, please explain. We believe that this reference should be retained. What constitutes 'direct and indirect' acts must be clearly defined. We believe an 'indirect' act is difficult to define and must be considered as part of clarifying the offence of undue influence. We think that the suggested definitions of direct and indirect acts which cause an elector harm set out in the consultation document are a useful basis for simplification.

Question 17: We propose that the redefined offence retains reference to offences committed by or on behalf of a perpetrator in relation to acts that cause the elector harm. Do you agree? If not, please explain. We agree that reference should be retained to "offences committed by or on behalf of a perpetrator".

Question 18: We propose that the scope of section 115(2)(a) continues to include those acts which are carried out before and after the election. Do you agree? If not, please explain. We agree that this offence should cover acts carried out before and after the election. There should be no uncertainty as to what is an offence. In our 2015 response to the UK's Law Commissions' consultation on electoral law reform, we asked that additional consideration be given to the issue of when electoral offences can be committed. We still hold this view. The law currently takes a variety of different approaches to when electoral offences can be committed. Some offences may be committed 'before, during or after an election', some can only be committed 'before or during an election' and others can only be committed 'at an election'. There may be justifiable reasons for different approaches being taken for each offence, or it may be that a more consistent approach should be taken. Either way, we would like to see greater clarity in the law on the timing of when offences are committed to ensure greater consistency. People who must comply with the law, and those who enforce the law, need to understand what behaviour is prohibited and the associated punishments. Question 19: Do you agree that the offence should continue to cover actions of duress? If not please explain. We agree that the offence should continue to cover duress with a clear definition. We said in our 2015 response to the UK's Law Commissions' consultation that duress should be retained. Consideration should be given to its definition to avoid complicated drafting and to separate it from 'duress' as used in criminal and contract law. The law should stop anyone from forcing a person to vote for a particular candidate or to not vote at all. However, it is important that when defining a simplified undue influence offence, it does not conflict with the right to freedom of expression. Many people will legitimately want to persuade others to vote for certain candidates, and any restrictions on this freedom will need careful consideration. We are conscious that there are some electors who may be more vulnerable to pressure or undue influence because of their personal position within a family, social group or wider community, who might benefit from greater protection. We would expect any modernised definition of undue influence or duress to be capable of identifying and being applied to this type of influence. Question 20: Any redefined offence would still look to cover actions of trickery. Do you agree? If not, please explain. We agree that the actions of trickery should remain and should be clearly defined. The UK government could use the simplified definition of the actions of trickery set out in the consultation document rather than the existing definition: 'any fraudulent device or contrivance'. We think that the suggested definitions of the actions of trickery set out in the consultation document are a useful basis for simplification.

Intimidation at polling stations Intimidation at polling stations Question 21: Do you agree that the scope of the offence should remain the same, subject to including a specific reference to intimidation at polling stations? If not, please explain.

Question 22a: Do you agree that the offence should specifically capture intimidatory behaviour carried out inside or outside of the polling station? If not, please explain. Question 22b: If so, do you agree that the definition should include behaviour which falls below the current requirement of physical force, violence or restraint? We do not agree with adding a specific reference to intimidation at polling stations to the offence of undue influence. Simplifying and modernising the offence of undue influence, and providing clear definitions, should ensure intimidation at polling station is covered without needing to make a specific reference to it. However, if the UK Government decides to include specific reference to intimidation at polling stations there must be a clear, workable definition of what activity should and should not be prohibited. We agree that electoral law should include offences that deter and punish intimidation and coercion of voters, which can be used by police forces and prosecutors in addition to general public order offences. However, we also agree with the 2016 UK's Law Commissions' concerns about lowering the bar of undue influence to include any behaviour which could be reasonably considered as intimidation at a polling station. The Law Commissions highlighted that perceptions of what is "intimidation" will vary, and therefore must be clearly defined. This will ensure that rights to free speech and assembly are not infringed. It would also be important to ensure that people understand what is meant by "outside a polling station". Consideration of additional electoral law offences We want the UK Government to consider creating the following postal voting offences: In our response to the recommendations from Sir Eric Pickles' 2016 review of electoral integrity we supported extending the offences contained in Section 66 of the RPA to postal voting. The secrecy of the ballot protections that apply to in person voting, would then apply to postal ballots. There should be greater consistency and equivalency between offences which may be committed in a polling station or at a count, and elsewhere, including in a voter's home We recommend that the UK's Governments should change the law so that candidates, parties and campaigners are not allowed to handle or take completed absent vote applications or postal ballot packs from voters, but ensure sufficient safeguards are in place to protect legitimate assistance Increasing transparency in digital election campaigning Extending the imprint rules to digital material is urgent. This gap in transparency is affecting voter confidence and impacting our ability to enforce the rules All non-printed election and referendum material should contain an imprint. Any new regulations should be drafted as general principles to make them platform neutral and to future-proof them for changes in technology The UK Government should give the Electoral Commission wider powers to compel information outside of an investigation, including from digital platforms The imprint rules for printed election material in PPERA should be commenced for Northern Ireland The imprint rules in Northern Ireland should be the same as the rest of the UK The PPERA and the RPA contain powers for the Secretary of State to make regulations requiring imprints on non-printed election and referendum material. This applies to digital material, and it can also include audio material. Our view is that any new regulations should cover all non-printed material. Question 23: Do you as a voter believe that the current system as applied to printed election material promotes transparency and gives confidence in our systems? The imprint rules for printed election material ensure voters can check the source of election material, and allow the police, prosecutors and us to enforce the spending rules. Extending the imprint rules to digital material is urgent. This gap in transparency is affecting voter confidence and impacting our ability to enforce the rules. The imprint rules have two purposes. They ensure that voters can find out who is behind the election material they receive. And they allow the police, the CPS, the Procurator Fiscal, the PSNI and us to track campaigners' spending so that we can enforce the spending rules. Without the imprint rules, campaigners could run campaigns without ever having to identify themselves as the source. This is currently the case with digital material. At the beginning of 2018, we contracted the research company GfK to carry out research with the public. Our aim was to find out what the public knew and understood about political finance regulation in the UK and digital campaigning at elections and referendums. The findings confirmed the need for digital imprints. It showed that participants were more likely to pay attention to digital material, were concerned about its source and thought the imprint rules should be extended to digital material. Question 24: Should the imprint rules in PPERA be commenced for Northern Ireland? The imprint rules in PPERA should be commenced for Northern Ireland. Voters in Northern Ireland should know who is behind campaign material. The imprint rules in section 143 PPERA originally applied across the whole of the UK in February 2001. Following representations from the Labour, Conservative and Liberal Democrat parties, the Election Publications Act 2001 suspended the provisions from April 2001. This was because a large amount of election material for the 2001 UK Parliamentary general election had already been printed without an imprint, so could not be used. In 2006, SI 2006 No. 3416 reinstated section 143 PPERA provisions in Great Britain only. We do not know why the Order did not extend the provisions to Northern Ireland. Where party and non-party campaigner election material in Northern Ireland lacks an imprint, we have no powers to investigate and sanction a campaigner under PPERA. This means there is no deterrent in Northern Ireland, as there is in the rest of the UK, for failing to include one. The UK government must commence the imprint rules for Northern Ireland. Question 25: Should the imprint rules for Northern Ireland elections be the same as for the rest of the United Kingdom? The imprint rules for all campaigners in Northern Ireland should be the same as for the rest of the UK. Making the imprint requirements in the Electoral Law Act 1962 the same as those in section 110 RPA would provide further clarity. This would help simplify electoral law as the UK's Law Commissions have proposed. Currently in Northern Ireland an earlier version of Section 110 RPA is in force for imprints on candidate material for UK Parliamentary and Northern Ireland Assembly elections. This is because the Election Publications Act 2001 suspended the application of the new version of section 110 RPA (introduced under section 136 and Schedule 18 PPERA). Under SI 2006/3416, the new version of section 110 RPA was brought into force only in Great Britain (not Northern Ireland).

Principle and purpose Principle and purpose Question 26: What are your views on whether imprints should be required on all digital electoral material or only where spending on such material has been over a certain threshold? All digital election and referendum material should include an imprint. Any new regulations should ensure that individuals expressing personal opinions are not covered. The current rules for printed election material do not specify a minimum spending threshold before a campaigner must add an imprint. We do not think that any new rules for digital material should be different from the rules for printed material. Specifying a spending threshold creates other problems. A campaigner may spend very little, or nothing (apart from staff time), on creating a campaign message that reaches a lot of voters because that they can achieve wide organic reach. We do not think it is right that because they have spent nothing on creating and distributing the message, they should not have to identify themselves as its source. Further, we would not know what, if anything, a campaigner has spent on digital election material. s are not required to report their spending during an election or referendum campaign. This means we would not know whether a campaigner had passed the threshold, and therefore whether they had committed an offence by not including an imprint. This would undermine the purpose of extending the requirement to digital material, and make it difficult for the police and us to enforce the new rules. It is important that any new imprint rules do not affect voters' right to engage in political debate online during election and referendum campaigns. Any new rules should not cover individuals expressing personal opinions. When should imprints be required? Question 27: Should any new rules on digital material only apply to what we would already consider to be "electoral material" or should broader categories be considered? The UK Government should use the regulation-making powers in the PPERA and the RPA to make imprints on non-printed election material a legal requirement. Regulating broader categories of political advertising requires more thought and more scrutiny. Extending the imprint rules to non-printed material is urgent. Therefore, we think that the UK Government should use the existing regulation-making powers in the PPERA and the RPA. But those powers only allow the Secretary of State to draft regulations that apply to "election material" as defined in the PPERA, and material that is intended to promote or procure the election of a candidate in the RPA. Regulating wider forms of political advertising would require amending primary legislation, which would take much longer than introducing regulations. Regulating broader categories of political advertising requires more thought and more scrutiny. This would be a much different form of regulation than the current rules. The UK's governments and legislatures would need to consider which principles should underpin any new rules for regulating wider political speech. They would need to ensure that the rules do not curtail free speech, and to consider the practicalities of enforcing any new rules. We think that more would need to be done to explore this idea. Question 28: Do you agree that the requirement for imprints on election material can arise all year round, not just during election periods? We agree with the Government's interpretation of the PPERA imprint requirements. Sections 143 and 143A do not specify a particular time period when the imprint rules apply. The requirement to include an imprint arises where the material can be reasonably regarded as intended to promote or procure electoral success for particular parties or categories of candidates, and the material relates to an election. These two tests may be met before the regulated period for that election has started. We think that the RPA imprint requirements apply during the specific timeframe when people are formally treated as candidates. Under section 110 RPA, imprints are required on any material which can be reasonably regarded as intended to promote or procure the election of a candidate at an election. Section 118A defines the earliest date on which a person can become a candidate for a UK Parliament or local election. There are no candidates before that date. Therefore, it is the earliest date on which an imprint is required. This means, for example, that there are no imprint requirements for material promoting a candidate in the long campaign period at a UK Parliamentary general election. We think the Government should consider this further, because there is an inconsistency in the law if the pre-candidacy spending rules apply whilst imprint requirements do not apply. What form of digital communications should be covered? What forms of digital communications should be covered? Question 29: Should we prioritise regulating certain forms of digital communications over others? If so, please give reasons. Certain forms of digital communication should not be prioritised over others. Digital campaigning is constantly evolving. If certain digital communications are prioritised, they may become outdated in the next few years. This would make any new rules outdated and unworkable. Political campaigns use a variety of digital channels to communicate their campaign messages to voters. They currently use email, websites, website advertising, search advertising and social media posts. Digital campaign messages can consist of text, photo, graphics, video, audio, slideshows, and various combinations of these formats. We have observed in our monitoring of election and referendum campaigns the evolution of social media advertising from posts consisting of text only to embedded video. This shows why it is important that any new imprint rules for digital and other non-printed material should cover all kinds of digital communications. This will also help to future-proof the new regulations for changes in technology and media. How should the imprint be incorporated? Question 30: What sort of mechanisms for including an imprint should be acceptable? Are there any technical difficulties that would need to be overcome to include text which is not accessible without a further step? Question 31: Would you find an imprint in an overarching space such as a 'bio' sufficiently visible? We support the principle that a campaigner's full details should be part of the campaign message itself. We do not think that an imprint in an overarching space is sufficiently visible. Until now we have said in our guidance that it is acceptable to include a full imprint on a 'bio' or 'profile' page if it cannot be part of the message itself. We took this approach during the Scottish Independence Referendum because it was a pragmatic solution to the (then) 140-character limit. But advertisers can remove the imprint from 'bio' or 'profile' information at any time. This is not a solid basis for transparency. And it is a platform-specific solution, which may not work for newer forms of social media. We think that the law should move away from platform-specific solutions. Digital media and digital campaigning are constantly evolving, and this includes technical facilities to put an imprint on election ads. Therefore, any new imprint requirement should be 'platform-neutral'. In other words, it should apply to any kind of digital campaign message on any platform, and it should be part of the message itself. On platforms with word or character limits, like Twitter for example, a video or photo embedded in or attached to the message would allow a full imprint to be displayed. This could also be achieved with the dropdown boxes some platforms use to give users information about the advertising they see. Question 32: How can these mechanisms be future-proofed in expectation of developments in media and technology? Any new regulations should be drafted as general principles to make them 'platform-neutral'. The regulations should say that the technical design of digital imprints must allow machines to read, record and store them. The Government should consider carefully how to specify in regulations the circumstances in which non-printed material is, or is not, considered to be published. In the longer term, the UK government should consider amending the regulation-making powers in the PPERA and the RPA so that the rules can be kept up-to-date with technological developments. This could include giving us the regulation-making powers or a power to make a Code of Practice for imprints. We think that any new regulations should apply to all digital material on different platforms and media. This could be achieved by drafting general principles for including an imprint rather than specific rules for different media. This approach would help to make the new regulations 'platform-neutral' and future-proof them. The explanatory notes and memorandum for the regulations could contain examples of how they apply to different forms of digital advertising. We can use our guidance to explain at elections and referendums how the rules apply to the digital channels that campaigners are using at that time. Regulations made under the powers in section 143 PPERA and in section 110 RPA may specify the circumstances in which non-printed material is, or is not, considered to be published. This will be an important part of future-proofing the regulations, and we think the Government should consider carefully how to specify those circumstances. We will work with the Government on how to specify them. Any new requirement should say that the technical design of digital imprints must allow machines to read, record and store them. A number of organisations have recommended creating a central database of all election and referendum advertising. The technical design of digital imprints should allow them all to be stored in one place, should this be necessary at some point in the future. At this stage, we think that the right approach is to use the regulation-making powers in the PPERA and the RPA to make imprints on digital material a legal requirement. But advances in technology mean that both we and the UK government will need to keep the rules under regular review. It is likely that the UK government will need to amend them at some point despite its best efforts to future-proof them. For this reason, the UK government should consider whether to introduce primary legislation, when the opportunity arises, to amend the regulation-making powers in the PPERA and the RPA. The current powers were drafted at a time when print advertising was the main form of election advertising. They require the Secretary of State to model regulations for non-printed material after the rules for printed material. This may not give the Secretary of State enough discretion in the future to introduce regulations that are up-to-date with developments in technology. In the longer term, the UK government should also consider either transferring the regulation-making powers to the Electoral Commission, or giving us a power to make a Code of Practice for imprints. We would be responsible for ensuring compliance with the new digital imprint requirements. And we have a duty to keep the law under review. We would therefore be best placed to know if and when the regulation-making powers needed to be used to update the regulations. Alternatively, a power to make a Code of Practice would allow us to provide additional statutory guidance for campaigners on how and when to include an imprint on digital material. And this should be able to be amended more easily than the requirements in legislation. Who should be responsible for including the imprint? Who should be responsible for including the imprint? Question 33: Should those who subsequently share digital electoral material also be required to include an imprint and, if so, whose details should be on it - theirs or the original publisher? Individuals who subsequently share material on a personal basis should not have to include an imprint. But where campaigners distribute a new election or referendum message that involves sharing material from another, unrelated organisation because they think it will enhance their electoral chances, they should have to include their own imprint on the new message. Individuals who want to share material from campaigners they know and trust. We think this is an important aspect of democratic engagement. Individuals would be deterred from sharing election material online if they knew they had to put their own imprint on it. As long as the material they share has the campaigner's imprint on it, this is enough. Enforcement Enforcement and redress Question 34: Do you think the responsible bodies have sufficient enforcement powers? Our current powers would be adequate for enforcing any new digital imprint regulations in the course of an investigation, but not where we haven't opened an investigation. The UK government should give us wider powers to compel information, including from digital platforms. The UK government should increase the maximum fine we can impose for breaches of the imprint rules. The UK government should give us the power to investigate and sanction breaches of the candidate rules in the RPA. We have powers to investigate and sanction campaigners for breaching the imprint rules in section 143 PPERA. This includes being able to fine a campaigner up to £20,000 for failing to include an imprint. Only the police and prosecutors are able to investigate, prosecute and sanction breaches of the imprint rules in section 110 RPA. We consider the powers we have to enforce the imprint rules for printed materials to be adequate. We can compel any person or organisation to give us information during an investigation. In most cases where there is a clear case of a failure to include an imprint, we would open an investigation. We would expect to be able to do the same with digital platforms under our existing powers. However, outside of an investigation we can only compel bodies regulated under PPERA to give us information about income and expenditure. Our powers to require information do not extend to third parties such as newspapers or digital platforms. This means that currently we would not be able to obtain information about the source of an advert which had no imprint. The ability to find out the identity of campaigners outside an investigation is also relevant for enforcing the spending rules. We think that we should have the power to compel digital platforms, and others, to give us information we need to perform our statutory functions, such as advertisers' contact details or amounts spent on distributing election material. This would allow us to effectively monitor campaign activity and take action to prevent non-compliance where possible at an early stage. We have previously said that our maximum fine of £20,000 for each offence is too low. When considering how much to fine a campaigner for failing to include an imprint on campaign material, one of the factors we take into account is how many people may have seen it. Digital campaign messages can potentially reach many more people than a newspaper advert. And as they can be delivered directly to a handheld device, voters have less control over whether they see them. Our maximum fine should reflect these factors. It should therefore be increased. We have previously recommended that we should be given powers to investigate and sanction breaches of the candidate rules in the RPA. We have seen some high-profile alleged breaches of the candidate rules, mostly at national elections, where referral for criminal prosecution was not considered to be in the public interest. But it may have been appropriate to investigate further and issue a civil sanction if we had had the power to do so. This is why we repeat this recommendation here. Related content

Testing the EU referendum question Find out about our testing of the EU referendum question

Report: Voting in 2017 Read our report about voting at the general election in 2017

Report: How the 2017 UK general election was run Read our report about how the 2017 general election was run

Results and turnout at the 2017 UK general election

View the results and turnout at the 2017 general election

Briefing: The Transparency of Donations and Loans etc. (Northern Ireland Political Parties) Order 2018 | Electoral Commission Search Briefing:

The Transparency of Donations and Loans etc. (Northern Ireland Political Parties) Order 2018 You are in the section Home On this page Briefing summary Read our briefing in full Further information First published: 1 February 2018 Last updated: 16 July 2019 Summary of the briefing Date: February 2018 For: MPs Full briefing Overview This briefing provides the Electoral Commission's view on the Transparency of Donations and Loans etc. (Northern Ireland Political Parties) Order 2018. The Order is scheduled for debate in the House of Lords on Tuesday 27 February. The Commission supports this Order. Transparency is an essential component of increasing public confidence in the democratic process. Information on how political parties, candidates and other campaigners raise and spend money should be open to timely public scrutiny. Once in force, this Order will allow us to start publishing regular information about donations and loans to political parties and other regulated entities in Northern Ireland for the first time. What the Order will allow us to do Subject to coming into force, the Order will allow us to publish information about donations and loans reported by Northern Ireland political parties and other regulated entities from 1 July 2017 onwards as part of our regular publication cycle. If this Order is not made then the Commission will continue to be prohibited from publishing any information relating to political donations in Northern Ireland, which would be disappointing for voters and others who want transparency. We have published an update on our website and a factsheet to inform political parties and other regulated recipients of donations or loans about the proposed changes. We have also written to all MPs, MLAs and Northern Ireland parties to inform them about this guidance. Our view on transparency from January 2014 This Order represents the first opportunity for us to begin publishing information about donations and loans to political parties and other regulated entities in Northern Ireland. We will continue to recommend that a further Order should be brought forward in the near future to provide for full transparency back to 2014, as anticipated by the Northern Ireland (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 2014. The 2014 Act said that the names of donors and lenders from January 2014 may be made public at some point in the future. At that time we wrote to all of the political parties in Northern Ireland to advise them that they should make clear to their donors that any donations received from January 2014 may be made public. We strongly urge the UK Government to bring forward a further Order at a later date that would enable us to publish donation and loan information for the period dating back to 1 January 2014. This would however require detailed separate consideration about how to ensure information from the period before 31 December 2013 was kept confidential as required by the law. Further information For further information please contact Cahir Hughes on 028 9089 4028 or chughes@electoralcommission.org.uk. Related content Briefing: Our evaluation of voter ID pilots Read our briefing for MPs from May 2019 Briefing: Overseas Electors Bill Read our briefing for MPs from February 2018 Proposals in the Queen's Speech Read our briefing for MPs from October 2019

You are in the Party panels section Home How we make decisions Party panels First published: 14 July 2020 Last updated: 14 July 2020 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting Conservative Party: Alan Mabbett OBE (AM), chair of meeting Labour Party: Andrew Whyte (AW) Scottish National Party: Scott Martin (SM) Plaid Cymru: Geraint Day (GD) Electoral Commission: Craig Westwood, Director of Communications, Policy & Research (CW) Louise Edwards, Director of Regulation (LE) Charlene Hannon, Head of Guidance (CH) Laura McLeod, Public Affairs Manager (LM) Minutes of the last meeting and actions arising (PPP 3/09/2019) The minutes were agreed. LE provided an update on the action regarding PPP engagement with police SPOCs. LE offered to put the parties in touch with the SPOCs, but asked for more detail on the issues the parties wanted to discuss. AM explained the SPOC conference had provided a unique opportunity for parties to interact with SPOCs face-to-face. SM agreed it was particularly useful learning experience and to understand how deal with specific issues and gave the example of treating. SM highlighted that it had been useful to receive the case update and suggested this could be sent through by email in future. LE agreed to talk to the SPO, Garry Cann and put the parties in touch. Post general election review AM asked about duplicate registrations and suggested that despite the high numbers of people registering in the run up the election, it would be likely the vast majority won't be new registrations, but from people already on the register, who had been reminded to register. CW explained the Commission's public awareness campaign had achieved 2.6 million applications to register vote, but that the data on duplications was not yet available. CW explained the Commission was in the process of gathering evidence to inform its statutory report on the election that will be published in spring. He explained this included research with overseas voters, EROs and ROS and for the first time, included a survey of SPOCs. He welcomed any feedback from the parties. AW asked about the inconsistency of local authorities accepting scanned copies of applications to register to vote, noting the issue was with the guidance. CH explained this was covered in the guidance, but could be addressed through the Commission's support and improvement work. CH agreed to explore how the message could be strengthened in the guidance. SM noted the issue with accessing registers, particularly given the election took place during the annual canvass. AM, AW and GD agreed that all parties had the same issue in getting the updated registers in a reasonable timeframe and highlighted the difficulties that this presented, particularly given resources in electoral service teams. SM noted the ongoing issue that EROs continue to reissue registers without any explanation, rather than by an update. CH stated all registers would have been published by 1 December 2019. AW asked if the Commission had identified any regulatory trends or offences at the election. LE explained that the 2019 election had the highest number of registrations of non-party campaigners register for an election. LE noted the social media ad libraries had been a useful tool during the campaign and would be used to compare spending. AM suggested it would be interesting to see how many candidates failed to submit any adverts. Update on PFR online LE outlined the project is well advanced on the registration side and will be launched at the start of the parties financial year, January 2020. She noted parties can focus and submit reports for the unscheduled elections in 2019 on the old system. GD raised the issue of guidance on the Commission's website and suggested it should be ranked in the order it is likely to be used. He noted the recent general election guidance had appeared on page two. AM agreed it should have a higher ranking automatically. CH explained the Commission

was aware of this and working with developers to find a solution and make the algorithm smarter and user friendly. AM suggested that PPP members receive correspondence or an email when any new guidance is issued. LE offered to take this away to consider the possibility for future ERO Performance Standards Consultation CW highlighted the Commission's open consultation on new performance standards for Electoral Registration Officers. He explained the proposed standards are focussed on the outcomes that should be delivered, rather than the processes that are followed, with the objective of helping EROs and their teams to understand the impact of their electoral registration activities. CW welcomed any feedback from parties and noted the consultation would close on 31 March. Commission Update Report Regarding policy development grants, CW explained the Cabinet Office had drafted an amendment Order, which will give effect to the Commission's recommendations for changes to the scheme. He confirmed work is on-going with the Cabinet Office to ensure this is completed by the required deadline. LE updated on the Codes of Practice on election spending and explained a final draft would go to the Minister for the Constitution and Devolution by March. She asked for input on how to share updated Codes with the parties. AM suggested it would make sense to take time to reflect on the 2019 UK Parliamentary general election before submitting the Codes. AW agreed. LE explained the Commission is currently planning to review the conference stand rate this year, and will consult with parties. LE asked if by end of summer was going to be viable and offered to send a more granular timetable to PPP members. AM raised the issue of defining parliamentary lounges, that were not a fixed stand. AW gave the example of how a LGA stand would factor into sponsorship and suggested parties need additional guidance. LE offered to take this away and report back with a timetable. Forward looking Commission activity CW explained the Commission had agreed with the Speakers' Committee to submit an interim corporate plan. CW highlighted the next six months would be spent producing a new five-year corporate plan, noting the welcome opportunity to take a fresh view of the challenges and opportunities ahead for the democratic processes. He suggested the September PPP meeting would be an opportunity to get parties' input into the plan. SM, AM, AW, GD all agreed. AM raised the issue of fixed thresholds and explained that the original legislation envisaged a single electoral register. LE noted the Commission has to use single registers to check donations. CW explained the benefits of modernising the registers would have for a number of stakeholders. Any other business SM noted the commitment to have an Association of s representative at the next meeting, after May local elections. AM asked for an update on the work on the Commission's new Enforcement Policy. LE confirmed the Commission planned to consult later this year and re-offered the PPP members the opportunity to meet once the consultation opens. LE highlighted Majella La Praik would be on maternity leave from March, and recruitment for her cover will begin shortly. Commission actions Status To put PPP members in touch with Deputy Chief Constable Gary Cann, lead for election related crime at the National Police Chief's Council. Ongoing: Louise has spoken to Gary Cann and will put parties in touch To invite a representative from the Association of s to attend the PPP meeting in June Completed: Peter Stanyon will attend the June meeting Provide a timetable for the review of Party conference stands Ongoing: update to be provided at meeting Provide detail on how many of the applications to register to vote at the 2019 UKPGE were duplicates. Completed To use the September meeting to discuss the Commission's next five year corporate plan with parties Ongoing: to be added to agenda for September meeting

Appendix 1A Third party regulatory framework - Governance implications for Commissioners | Electoral Commission Search Appendix 1A

Third party regulatory framework - Governance implications for Commissioners You are in the Code of Conduct for Electoral Commissioners section Home Commissioners Code of Conduct for Electoral Commissioners On this page Risk of ceasing to hold Office as a Commissioner, and Declaring an interest and conflict First published: 17 June 2023 Last updated: 23 June 2023 Risk of ceasing to hold Office as a Commissioner, and Declaring an interest and conflict Risk of ceasing to hold Office as a Commissioner 1. Under the third party regulatory framework introduced by the Transparency of Lobbying, Non-party Campaigning and Trade Union Administration Act 2014 (Transparency Act): When a third party organisation that is obliged to register with the Commission provides its financial return to the Commission, that return must include a statement of 'relevant donations' to it. Registered campaigners will be required to report donations every three months in the circa seven and a half month regulated period before polling day at UK Parliamentary general elections , and also (as at present) after the poll. Relevant donations are donations to the third party in respect of controlled spending that is used for specified campaigning activities during the regulated period. Donations can include non-financial support given to an organisation, but does not include the time of volunteers Both the number and type of third party organisations required to register with the Commission is likely to increase, with the scope of controlled expenditure expanding; and therefore potentially the incidence of relevant donations.

2. Under the Political Party Elections and Referendums Act 2000 (PPERA) if a Commissioner were to be properly listed by a third party registered campaigner in its financial return to the Commission as a donor (of £7,500 or more), the Commissioner would be deemed to cease to hold office. 3. Accordingly in the context of the forthcoming UK Parliamentary general election (and the elections referred to in footnote 1), a gift or donation of £7,500 or over (including cumulatively by smaller payments) made to a registered third party organisation e.g. a charity - if the organisation reports it as relating to controlled spending – would trigger the Commissioner ceasing to hold office. This would apply even if the gift or donation were made without intent or knowledge that the receiving organisation may subsequently use it for campaigning purposes.

Frequently asked questions – risk of ceasing to hold office Q.1: I make donations (or they are made indirectly through another vehicle, such as a trust I have an interest in) from time to time to a third party organisation that I support e.g. a charity, a faith group, a trade union or a trade association. I do not stipulate how they may be used by the third party. These may cumulatively add up to £7,500 or more. Does this trigger the PPERA provision whereby I cease to be a Commissioner? A. Probably not. That is, if the donations you make are for the general purposes of the third party and there is no indication from you or the third party that they will use the donations for campaigning intended to influence voters. It would be unlikely that this could be properly concluded as you donating for such purposes. So, the risk of the PPERA trigger applying should be low. However, you do need to bear in mind that the PPERA trigger could apply in some circumstances e.g. if you made these donations in a context where their use for campaigning purposes (intended to influence voters) was a requirement or objectively possible or likely. Q.2: I am a trustee or on the board of a third party organisation and/or give them advice and expertise. The 'value' my time could amount to £7,500 or more. Does this trigger the PPERA provision whereby I cease to be a Commissioner? A. Probably not. The donations (whether in money or in kind), would only be regulated if they were directed towards campaigning purposes intended to influence voters. Further, volunteering activities are not caught by the third party regulatory requirements. So, provided you are not being paid for the activity (apart from re-imbursement of expenses), it would be unlikely that this could properly be concluded as you donating for campaigning purposes intended to influence voters. The risk of the PPERA trigger applying should be low. However, you do need to bear in mind that the PPERA trigger could apply in some circumstances e.g. if your advice, expertise and time was given or paid for in a context where their application was clearly for or objectively possible or likely to be used for campaigning purposes intended to influence voters.

Q.3: In considering whether a number of donations cumulatively add up to £7,500 or more over what time period do I calculate this?

A. It is only necessary to add up separate donations given over a period of time if it could reasonably be concluded that they are part of a number of donations all linked to a particular purpose and this will properly flow through to reference to you as a donor named in a regulated third party report to the Commission on regulated expenditure in a particular election.

Declaring an interest and conflict

4. As reflected by the Commissioner Code of Conduct, the work of the Commission must be carried out free from any suggestion of improper influence, whether financial, personal, or political. This is integral to maintaining public confidence in the Commission generally, and especially in its role as a regulator.

5. It would be impracticable and unnecessary to register all personal involvement of a less direct or more minor kind with third parties, given the very wide part that for example organisations such as charities play in daily life. If a Commissioner makes a gift or donation (including in time or expertise) to a third party, the Commissioner should consider whether to report that to the Commission as a 'declaration of an interest'. At all times the key question to ask when assessing whether to record an interest, is - does it have an impact on the work of the Electoral Commission or reasonable public perception of my role as an Electoral Commissioner?

6. Payment of say an annual membership fee or the giving in the normal course of events of small donations and not linked to a particular live campaigning issue of potential or actual political relevance, should not be such as to require declaration of this to the Commission. However more active involvement in a third party such as volunteering, provision of advice/assistance generally, fundraising activities and so on, would all be indicators of it being prudent to declare an interest to the Commission. Making significant personal donations would clearly lead to the need to declare an interest (e.g. above £1,000 in a year).

7. If a third party could reasonably be expected to campaign on issues in the lead up to PPERA regulated elections, this is very likely to give rise to the need to declare an interest to the Commission and possibly - depending on the facts - a conflict of interest.

8. In the event of a conflict of interest, the Commissioner must withdraw from participating in or influencing any related Commission business.

9. Commissioners should also consider the relevance of the above requirements if a close family member or associate is making donations to or closely involved with a campaigning third party.

10. The guiding principle for Commissioners is to err on the side of caution. That is, if it appears that you could need to declare to the Commission that you have made a donation to, or are involved in, the activities of a third party, it is best to do so. This will place yourself and the Commission beyond reproach.

Frequently asked questions – declaring an interest and conflict

Q.1: I have made a donation of over £1,000 to a third party organisation that I support e.g. a charity, a faith group, a trade union or a trade association. Do I need to inform the Commission that I have done this?

A. Yes, if the donation is over £1,000 (including cumulative effect of smaller donations in a 12 month period). Make the declaration regardless of the organisation to which you've made the donation. Q.2: What about the need to declare a donation of less than £1,000? A. If the donation is less than £1,000 you still need to consider whether to inform the Commission. You may well be inclined to err on the side of caution and declare the donation to the Commission. Consideration would include whether you are directly involved in the activities of the organisation; and whether the receiving organisation or individual is or is likely to be involved in live campaigning on issues of potential or actual political relevance, Q.3: What if I have made a donation in kind, rather than money e.g. giving advice or my time in voluntary activity? A. The same rules apply as in question 2, as if you had donated money. Q.4: I am a member or friend of a third party organisation e.g. the National Trust. Do I need to declare this? A. In the normal course of events, no, you do not have to declare this. However, if such an organisation were involved or subsequently became involved in live campaigning on issue(s) of potential or actual political relevance you should do so. Q.5: I'm involved with/have donated to an organisation that is campaigning, but I doubt at levels that would require it to register with the Commission as a third party – should I declare my involvement? A. Yes. The fact that they are campaigning may mean that they either should have or will need to register as a third party with the Commission.

Recall petitions by numbers: Brecon and Radnorshire | Electoral Commission Search Recall petitions by numbers: Brecon and Radnorshire You are in the The process to challenge a sitting MP: review of the 2019 recall petitions section Home Recall petitions The process to challenge a sitting MP: review of the 2019 recall petitions
On this page Running the petition Signing the petition Campaigning First published:
10 October 2019 Last updated: 10 October 2019 Running the petition Notification of petition Thursday 24 April Petition open Thursday 9 May-Thursday 20 June Number of signing places (maximum of 10) 6 Extended hours (outside 9am-5pm, Monday to Friday
Open from 8am on Tuesdays; closed 8pm on Wednesdays Count Took place at 9am on Friday 21 June Signing the petition For a recall petition to result in an MP being recalled over 10% of people eligible to sign must do so within the six-week signing period. We can see from petition data that the majority of those who signed did so within the first two weeks of the petition opening. How many people were eligible to sign 53,032
How many signatures needed to recall MP 5,303 Number who signed 10,005 - this was 19% of people eligible to sign Spoilt signing papers 41 We can also see from this data how people chose to sign the petition. How people chose to sign the petition Campaigning People or organisations wishing to campaign for or against the recall petition and intending to spend over £500 were required to notify the PO that they wished to be a registered campaigner. There were three registered campaigners in Brecon and Radnorshire who have submitted donation and spending returns. Spending and donation returns

Performance analysis 2019/20: Goal four | Electoral Commission Search

Performance analysis 2019/20: Goal four You are in the Annual Report and Accounts 2019/20 section Home Our plans and priorities Annual Report and Accounts 2019/20 On this page Key achievements Performance measures First published: 30 June 2020 Last updated: 17 September 2020 Goal four To provide value for money, making best use of our resources and expertise to deliver services that are attuned to what matters most to voters. This goal provides a focus to activities that support the organisation and ensure we have the appropriate skilled people and resources. The aim is to deliver services that are efficient, effective and economical. Key achievements To support our organisation, we:

- ran a programme of testing, upgrading and benchmarking against appropriate standards to protect our digital infrastructure against cyber threats
- developed our working practices to reflect the expectations on a modern employer and ensured our digital systems support these changes
- upgraded the information technology systems that support our regulatory and electoral administration functions
- continued working closely with the National Cyber Security Centre to improve how we monitor our networks and platforms
- launched a new website to meet users' needs more effectively and provide information in easy-to-use and more accessible ways
- implemented new online procurement, project management and governance systems to make our processes more efficient and transparent
- developed a new people strategy to support the best use of our resources
- enhanced our skills base through a comprehensive learning and development programme and investment in specialised technical resources
- worked with the Scottish and Welsh parliaments to develop an operational model that allows us to report and account to them
- provided guidance and tools to staff to help us improve our quality assurance processes

Performance measures

- Measure Performance Learn practical lessons from current home and remote working practices and design future accommodation accordingly
- Ongoing 1 Identify options, costs and benefits of e-procurement and implement a new system accordingly
- Not achieved 2 Stakeholder and staff satisfaction with IT tools
- Ongoing 3 Maintain high staff engagement scores in the annual staff survey and ensure indicators such as staff turnover are at appropriate levels
- Staff engagement score: 72% (2018-19: 65%.Civil Service average: 62%)
- Staff turnover: 13.19% (2018-19: 31.97%)
- Monitor significant variances on all budgets and, where appropriate, reduce these variances over the five years of our Corporate Plan
- Not achieved 4 Supporting the organisation In this last year, we have continued to transform the way we work through significant investments in our digital infrastructure, to improve its resilience and support flexible working practices. We have also continued working with the National Cyber Security Centre to improve how we monitor our networks and platforms, which helped with our focus on cyber security during the 2019 polls. Our new website provides a better service to our stakeholders. As our main communication channel, it was important for us to improve functionality and accessibility, to communicate our work in better ways. We have introduced other new digital tools to help us run our organisation. This includes an online procurement system, to make it easier for suppliers to participate in our tenders, and a planning system that enables us to report on our progress against our corporate goals and monitor risk more efficiently. Our new governance system gives us a more effective way to communicate with the Commission Board to give clear oversight of our performance. Our new people strategy includes actions to facilitate a culture where employees are able to perform their roles more effectively. We started this work by reviewing our performance management and development processes. We have moved away from evaluating and ranking employee performance at set times in the year and changed to a continuous approach, managed through objectives. This addresses feedback from our 2018 staff survey and better fits with our culture. We focussed on initiatives to address staff turnover. This included changing our recruitment practices to presume all roles would be permanent, unless there is a strong case to justify a fixed-term contract. We also supported staff to re-locate to our other offices, where this fitted their circumstances and our business needs. We continued supporting staff groups that we set up to address particular areas, such as the staff engagement group, to ensure our employees have input into corporate policies and programmes. We also have groups dedicated to supporting staff with bullying, harassment and mental health issues and we have maintained strong links with our trade union, the Public and Commercial Services Union. We invested more in learning and development and ensured staff were aware of training opportunities. We also appointed a provider to deliver a leadership and management development programme for all managers, which will run throughout 2020. The Scottish and Welsh parliaments have been considering legislation that would ensure we are accountable to them for our work on devolved elections. We have always reported voluntarily to both parliaments for our policy work on devolved issues, but the new legislation will mean our formal accountability arrangements match those we have with the UK Parliament. Report navigation links Previous Next Performance analysis: Goal three Looking ahead to 2020/21 and using our resources to support the delivery of our goals 1. We implemented changes to working hours after piloting a new approach. ■ Back to content at footnote 1 2. We completed our tender and signed a contract in February. Because of the Covid-19 pandemic, we delayed implementation until the first quarter of 2020-21. ■ Back to content at footnote 2 3. We started significant projects to upgrade infrastructure, devices and applications, which we will evaluate once they are complete ■ Back to content at footnote 3 4. Due to exceptional factors. We explain this further under, “Using our financial resources efficiently”. ■ Back to content at footnote 4 Related content Annual Report and Accounts 2019/20 Read our annual report and accounts for 2019/20, including key figures about the year at a glance. Performance analysis 2019/20: Goal one This is goal one of the performance analysis section of our annual report and accounts Performance analysis 2019/20: Goal two This is goal two of the performance analysis section of our annual report and accounts Performance analysis 2019/20: Goal three This is goal three of the performance analysis section of our annual report and accounts

Parliamentary Parties Panel minutes: 2 June 2015 | Electoral Commission Search
Parliamentary Parties Panel minutes: 2 June 2015 You are in the Party panels
section Home How we make decisions Party panels On this page Minutes, and actions of the meeting and matters arising (ECPPP 03/03/2015) May 2015 polls IER EU Referendum Policy Development Grants review May 2016 polls 'Hidden Cost of Elections' report International observers at May 2015 polls Date of the next meeting Actions First published: 2 June 2015 Last updated: 2 September 2019 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting Conservative Party: Andrew Stedman, Compliance Manager (AS) Daisy Woods (DW) Labour (Chair): Mike Creighton, Director of Audit and Risk (MC) Management Margaret Lynch, Compliance Manager (ML) Liberal Democrats: David Allworthy, Head of Compliance and Constitutional Support (DA) Darren Briddock (DB) Plaid Cymru: Emry Williams, Plaid Cymru (EW) Scottish National Party: Scott Martin, Scottish National Party (SM) Ulster Unionist Party: Colin McCusker, General Secretary (CM) Electoral Commission: Peter Wardle, Chief Executive (PW) Andrew Scallan, Director of Electoral Administration (AS2) Alex Robertson, Director of Communications (AR) Bob Posner, Director of Party and Election Finance & Legal Counsel (BP) Mazda Khatun, Communications Officer (MK) Minutes, and actions of the meeting and matters arising (ECPPP 03/03/2015) The minutes from 03/03/2015 were agreed with no clarifications sought or noted. There were no other matters arising from the minutes. ML queried whether there could be a conflict of interest in BP's appointment as joint Editor of Schofield's Election Law. PW confirmed that this had already been considered by the Commission. May 2015 polls PW reported that the May 2015 polls had generally been well-run, despite a few problems in areas where there were multiple elections on the same day. DA commented that the Commission's guidance while helpful, was best understood by more experienced party officials and thought that it would be beneficial to have a master index of all guidance to which everyone could refer. BP replied that the Commission recognises there is a need for something like this and that it will be discussing plans on a one-to-one basis with parties in the coming weeks. He also cautioned that it might be that not everything the Commission and parties would like to achieve could be done so for the May 2016 polls. MC felt that the principle about legislation for elections being clear six months before the date of the poll should also be applied to guidance. BP and PW confirmed that the Commission is conscious of this and has a high threshold for changing or issuing new guidance close to a poll. EW reported that in Wales, some candidates, confused by rules around commonly used names had decided to change their name by deed poll. AS2 replied that the Commission had not issued new guidance on this matter, but had reissued existing guidance when it became clear that there was some confusion surrounding the rules. AS2 noted however, that some Returning Officers had told candidates and agents that this was new guidance. ML concurred, saying that previous guidance to candidates, agents and political parties had not been clear enough on this matter. MC noted that he did not know of any instances when candidates' nomination forms had been rejected due to confusion on this point. Action: Commission to ensure that guidance for candidates, agents and Returning Officers about commonly used names is consistent. SM also requested that guidance on whether candidates could include the title 'Dr' on the ballot paper be clarified. Action: Commission to clarify whether the title 'Dr' can be included on the ballot paper. ML also raised concerns that Returning Officers and electoral services teams in some areas did not realise that the party name could be on the ballot paper and were also unwilling to accept bankers' drafts as they did not recognise them. Action: Commission to reinforce guidance on ballot papers and acceptable forms of payment. CM also stated that the process of uploading a new logo to the Commission's website had been very frustrating and drawn-out. Meeting the specifications for the logo was difficult, and it was unclear how the quality of the logo could be maximised. DA also remarked that logo resolution would decrease once uploaded to the website and that old logos were being stored in the cache, which could cause confusion. Action: Commission to look into improving logo uploads. AS2 added that sometimes printers had been eager to print ballot papers early, thus missing updates made to logos afterwards. The Commission will explore whether the time between the deadline for logo changes and the close of nominations should be revised in a report on the May 2015 polls. Action: Commission to look at processes around logo change in its report on May 2015 polls, to be published in July. AR reported on the Commission's public awareness campaign, which exceeded the Commission's target for reaching one million online applications to register to vote, by reaching two and half million applications. The Commission also had a target of one million additions to the register, and the result of the progress on this would be included in a report about public awareness at the May 2015 polls. IER MC requested that parties once again be given access to see the IER flags next to confirmed electors, to support efforts to encourage voter registration. PW responded that while the Commission was happy to have the support of parties on registration efforts, there was still no conclusion from the Cabinet Office as to whether having this information had had any effect on registration. He suggested that the PPP discuss this with Cabinet Office officials. AS2 informed the PPP that those unconfirmed on the new IER registers would be contacted by Electoral Registration Officers from summer 2015, using Household Enquiry Forms and also Invitations to Register. AS noted that it was very difficult for parties to keep up to date with the changes to the register and that they found it especially challenging to analyse over 360 registers in different formats. He added that where donors had dropped off the register because they were unconfirmed under IER, there should be discretion to accept their donations. MC was very concerned that students living in halls and attainers had been particularly adversely affected by IER, with large drop-off rates emerging. PW said that the December 2014 registers had confirmed what the Commission and others believed would happen to the number of students registered, but added that Electoral Registration Transformation Programme had funded EROs to issue Household Notification Letters. He also noted that work by the Commission, partners and EROs to register as many people as possible would continue beyond the end of the transition to IER. The Commission is looking at ways to further modernise registration EU Referendum MC suggested that the EU Referendum stay as a standing item on the PPP meeting agenda for the foreseeable future. Action: Keep EU Referendum on PPP meeting agendas. PW informed the PPP that before Committee Stage of the Bill, the Commission would put together a guide on some of the fundamental aspects of how referendums work, which would be shared with parties. Policy Development Grants review BP noted that all parties represented at the PPP had received letters from the Commission about the review of Policy Development Grants. The Commission's conclusion was that, having considered alternative schemes, none proved to be better than the current one. May 2016 polls MC asked whether the Commission would produce a voter information booklet for the Police and Crime Commissioner elections in 2016. AS2 responded that this was under review. AS2 reported that the Commission had suggested some changes to the ballot papers for the Mayoral elections in an effort to reduce the ballot paper rejection rate. ML also asked whether, with the franchise extension to 16 and 17 year olds in Scotland, there would be any child safeguarding issues that parties should be aware of. AS2 confirmed that this change would mean that 14 and 15 year olds were the new attainers in Scotland, there would be some child safeguarding measures such as these attainers not being included in the open register. However, political parties would still have access to their details. BP added that this change in franchise meant there was a concurrent reduction in the age of permissible donors, although this was not expected to be a significant issue. 'Hidden Cost of Elections' report BP reported that the Commission would be publishing a report on the 'hidden costs of elections' in the coming weeks. This would illustrate the economic benefit of electoral law reform, so supporting the legal and practical case being put forward by the Law Commissions' project. This would be circulated to PPP. International observers at May 2015 polls PW stated that some reports from international observers at the May 2015 polls had been published and were generally positive. Date of the next meeting The date of the next meeting is 1 September 2015 – Liberal Democrats to Chair Actions Actions from June 2015 PPP meeting Action Owner Commission to ensure that guidance for candidates, agents and Returning Officers about commonly used names is consistent. AS2 Commission to clarify whether the title 'Dr' can be included on the ballot paper. AS2 Commission to reinforce guidance on ballot papers and acceptable forms of payment. AS2 Commission to look into improving logo uploads. BP Commission to look at processes around logo change in its report on May 2015 polls, to be published in July. AS2 Keep EU Referendum on PPP meeting agendas. MK Related content Party registration decisions View our decisions on political party names, descriptions and emblems View current applications View the political party names, descriptions and emblems which we are currently considering as part of our assessment process Donations and loans Find out about donations and loans to a political party, individual or other organisation Registers of unincorporated associations Download and view the registers of unincorporated associations

2019 electoral fraud data | Electoral Commission Search 2019
electoral fraud data You are in the Electoral fraud data section Home Our research Electoral fraud data On this page Convictions and cautions Election petitions Types of electoral fraud allegations First published: 31 March 2020 Last updated: 31 March 2021 Electoral fraud in 2019 The UK has low levels of proven electoral fraud. There remains no evidence of large-scale electoral fraud in 2019. Overview 595 cases of alleged electoral fraud were investigated by the police. Of these, four led to a conviction and two individuals were given a police caution. This table shows the number of cases of alleged fraud the police reported to us, for each election held in 2019.

Election	Number of cases
Local elections	362
UK Parliamentary general election	164
European Parliamentary election	21
Non-election specific (for example, electoral registration)	21
Local by-election	12
UK Parliamentary by-election	7
Mayoral election	6
Combined authority mayoral election	1
Police and Crime Commissioner by-election	1

Cases where the suspect was convicted, or accepted a police caution A caution for false information on a nomination paper The Police Service of Northern Ireland received a report that a Democratic Unionist Party candidate had submitted a local government election nomination form that included an address that they had previously lived at and not their current one. Once contacted by the police, Lisburn & Castlereagh City Council confirmed that the nomination papers had been accepted for this candidate, and it was too late for the address to be removed from the notice of poll or from the ballot papers for the election. The candidate was not elected, but following a police investigation, they accepted a caution from police. A conviction for false information on a nomination paper South Wales Police received a report that a candidate for a local council by-election (Neath Port Talbot Council) submitted a nomination form that included forged signatures. This was not discovered until after the close of nominations, and so the candidate remained on the ballot paper. The candidate was not elected. Following a police investigation the suspect pleaded guilty on the first day of the trial and was: sentenced to 6 months in prison, suspended for 12 months given a 15 days rehabilitation requirement ordered to complete 180 hours of community service ordered to pay costs of £2,366 A conviction for false information on a nomination paper Norfolk Police received a report that an independent candidate submitted a local government election nomination form that included a signature from a supporter that he knew was false. The candidate was elected, but following a police investigation he stood down and was: fined £3,300 not allowed to stand for election for five years A conviction for using someone else's vote at a polling station West Yorkshire police received a report from polling station staff that a man had voted twice in the European Parliamentary election. A polling station staff member became suspicious and went to the police. The police then arrested and interviewed the voter. He admitted to voting twice, once using his own name and once using his son's name. He was: sentenced to 8 weeks in prison, suspended for 12 months given a fine of £50 not allowed to vote for five years A conviction for tampering with ballot papers The Metropolitan Police received a report of a disruption at a polling station within the Erith and Thamesmead constituency at the UK Parliamentary general election. Someone entered a polling station and after being told that they were not entitled to vote, took hold of the ballot box to stop anyone else from casting their vote. Owing to the individual's disruptive behaviour, police arrested the offender and took them away from the polling station. Following a police investigation the individual was charged with taking or interfering with a ballot box and pleaded guilty at court. He was sentenced to a 24 month rehabilitation activity programme and ordered to pay £620 in costs. A caution for using someone else's vote at a polling station West Mercia police received a report that someone had voted at a polling station in the European Parliamentary election, but they weren't on the electoral register. The suspect knew that he was not on the electoral register and could not vote. Instead, he gave his father's name to polling station staff and was given a ballot paper and cast his vote. A polling station staff member suspected the voter was not who he said he was. They raised their concerns with the police who interviewed him under caution. He fully accepted that he had voted using his father's name. He accepted a caution from the police.

Election petitions

An election petition is a legal challenge to the result and/or the delivery of an election. There were eight petitions following elections in 2019. Six of these were made after the 2 May elections. Only two of these were successful. One petition was made following the 6 June 2019 Peterborough parliamentary by-election. Another petition was made following the 12 December 2019 UK Parliamentary general election in the East Ham Parliamentary constituency. Both petitions were unsuccessful.

Outcome	Number of cases	Percentage of total
No further action	384	65%
Locally resolved	200	34%
Conviction	4	0%
Caution	2	0%
Other	2	0%
Acquitted	1	0%
Court proceedings initiated	1	0%
Court proceedings discontinued	1	0%

Two thirds of all cases resulted in the police taking no further action. This means that the cases were not investigated further by the police because there was no evidence (or there wasn't enough evidence), or no offence was found.

Types of electoral fraud allegations

More than half of all reported cases were about campaigning offences. Most of these were: campaigners not including details about the printer, promotor or publisher on election material - an 'imprint' someone making false statements about the personal character or conduct of a candidate

Category	Number of cases	Percentage of total
Campaigning	320	54%
Voting	142	24%
Nomination	71	12%
Registration	58	10%
Administration	4	1%

Accessible information Download this table to search for data from specific police forces, by category of offence or outcome.

2019 electoral fraud data from police forces Please contact us if you require the allegations data by police force in another format.

Types of electoral fraud reported since 2010

Description	Category	Percentage of total
Campaigning	54%
Voting	24%
Nomination	12%
Registration	10%
Administration	1%

2018

Category	Percentage of total
Campaigning	48%
Voting	21%
Nomination	15%
Registration	15%
Administration	0%

2017

Category	Percentage of total
Campaigning	49%
Voting	31%
Registration	11%
Nomination	7%
Administration	1%
Miscellaneous	1%

2016

Category	Percentage of total
Voting	43%
Campaigning	37%
Nomination	9%
Registration	8%
Administration	2%

2015

Category	Percentage of total
Campaigning	56%
Voting	26%
Nomination	10%
Registration	8%
Administration	1%

2014

Category	Percentage of total
Campaigning	38%
Voting	27%
Registration	15%
Nomination	14%
Miscellaneous	3%
Administration	3%

2013

Category	Percentage of total
Campaigning	54%
Registration	18%
Voting	13%
Nomination	8%
Miscellaneous	5%
Administration	1%

2012

Category	Percentage of total
Campaigning	41%
Voting	25%
Registration	23%
Nomination	6%
Miscellaneous	3%
Administration	1%

2011

Category	Percentage of total
Campaigning	52%
Registration	22%
Voting	14%
Nomination	7%
Miscellaneous	4%
Administration	2%

2010

Category	Percentage of total
Voting	32%
Campaigning	31%
Registration	28%
Nomination	6%
Miscellaneous	2%
Administration	1%

Related content

Public attitudes Read our reports about public attitudes towards voting

Analysis of electoral registration data about electoral registration data

Modernising elections research This qualitative research looks at public attitudes to voting and the information available around elections.

Feasibility studies: scope and approach This is part of our modernising electoral registration studies. Read about the scope and approach of the studies updated: 2 February 2023 Summary From late 2022, the rules about candidate and agent notional spending changed, as well as the rules about making payments. Changes

Notional spending occurs when services or goods are given to a candidate for free or at a discount. The legal test for when candidates need to record notional spending against their own spending limit has now changed. Someone will now only count as using the item on the candidate's behalf if the candidate or their agent 'authorises, directs or encourages' that use. This change also applies to notional expenditure on behalf of parties, non-party campaigners, referendum campaigners and recall petition campaigners. The rules for making payments for spending have also changed. Now, if the agent has given written authorisation to someone to incur spending on behalf of the candidate, then the person authorised to incur the spending is also able to make the payment for that spending.

Our role We have updated our generic guidance documents on spending to reflect the new rules, and have published a specific page of guidance on the changes . We will publish updated election-specific guidance for candidates, parties and non-party campaigners as and when elections are held, to help them understand and support compliance with the new legal requirements. Related content Elections Act about the UK Government's Elections Act and what it means for voting and campaigning About the Elections Act about the Elections Bill, including the measures it contains and which elections it applies to. Preventing candidate intimidation Read about the proposals for a new penalty for intimidating candidates, campaigners or elected representatives. Changes to legal requirements for parties and non-party campaigners about proposals to change the law affecting parties and non-party campaigners.

Results and turnout at the May 2017 England local elections | Electoral Commission Search Results and turnout at the May 2017 England local elections You are in the England local council elections section Home England local council elections On this page Introduction Electorate Turnout Rejected ballot papers Postal voting Rejected postal ballots Proxies and waivers First published: 5 July 2019 Last updated: 5 July 2019 Download You can download our: full dataset as an XLS full dataset as a CSV (zip file) Introduction This report provides analysis on participation in and the administration of the local government elections in England, held on 4 May 2017. For this, data were collected from Returning Officers and Electoral Registration Officers. This comprised the Form K 'Statement as to Postal Ballot Papers' and an additional data form, specified by the Commission, which included data relating to electoral registration, turnout, absent voting and rejected ballots. Local elections were scheduled in 27 counties and seven unitary and metropolitan authorities on 4 May 2017. There were also city mayoral elections in Doncaster and North Tyneside. In just four wards and divisions were candidates elected unopposed 1 . Electorate 18.6 million Turnout Ballot box: 35.1% (6.5 million votes) Postal vote: 68.7% In-person: 28.8% Rejected ballots Ballots at the count: 0.3% Postal votes: 2.3% Proxies appointed 22,029 (0.1% of the electorate) 641 emergency proxies Electorate The elections gave 18.6 million registered electors the opportunity to vote 2 ; 16.4 million in county councils, 2.0 million in unitary and metropolitan authorities, and 376,295 in city mayoral elections 3 . A total of 174,238 electors (0.9% of the electorate in contested wards) were added to the electoral register during the weeks leading up to the election. As a proportion of the electorate, this was highest in Shropshire where additions represented 2.0% of the electorate in contested wards, and lowest in Norfolk, where additions represented 0.5% of the electorate in contested wards. A total of 204,845 applications to register were received in the weeks leading up to the election. Almost a quarter (22.3%) of these was recorded as duplicates 4 . In addition, 332,004 individuals applied to register to vote after the registration deadline. This is likely to be attributable to the announcement of the UK parliamentary general election which came after the deadline for registration for the council elections. Based on data from 155 local authorities, 1,288 individuals were recorded as trying to vote on election day despite not being registered 5 . Votes were cast at 16,977 polling stations as well as by post. Turnout The measure of turnout referred to in this report, 'ballot box turnout', includes all valid votes cast ('valid vote turnout') and votes rejected at the count. Total turnout refers to valid votes cast, votes rejected at the count, and those rejected at the postal ballot verification stage before the count. Table 3.1 confirms that only a small fraction of the total votes cast are not valid Table 3.1: Turnout Electorate Valid vote turnout Ballot box turnout Total turnout Difference valid vote - total (pp) 2017 18.6m 35.0% 35.1% 35.3% 0.4 County 16.4m 34.8% 35.0% 35.2% 0.3 Unitary / Met 2.0m 36.4% 36.6% 36.9% 0.5 City mayoral 376,295 31.0% 31.4% 32.0% 0.9 2013 18.4m 30.8% 30.9% 31.2% 0.5 County 16.4m 30.7% 30.8% 31.1% 0.4 Unitary / Met 2.0m 31.6% 31.9% 32.3% 0.6 City mayoral 380,832 29.3% 29.6% 30.0% 0.7 Ballot box turnout was 35.1%, which is higher than turnout at the comparable stage in the electoral cycle in 2013, but still lower than turnout at the 2009 elections (39.3%), when European Parliament elections were held on the same day. Turnout increased across all counties, unitary and metropolitan authorities, and city mayoral elections. At a division/ward level, turnout ranged from 18.1 in Tidworth, Wiltshire to 60.1 in Hexham West, Northumberland. In five divisions/wards, turnout was less than 20%. Table 3.2: Ballot box turnout 2013 – 2017 Area 2013 2017 Change (pp)

Buckinghamshire 30.3% 34.8% 4.5 Cambridgeshire 31.0% 36.2% 5.2 Cumbria 32.0% 37.2%
5.2 Derbyshire 33.3% 35.3% 2.0 Devon 33.3% 37.9% 4.5 Dorset 34.1% 38.0% 3.8 East Sussex 33.4% 37.8% 4.4 Essex 27.8% 31.1% 3.4 Gloucestershire 31.9% 37.1% 5.2
Hampshire 30.8% 36.1% 5.3 Hertfordshire 29.0% 34.1% 5.0 Kent 29.4% 32.2% 2.8
Lancashire 31.3% 35.9% 4.6 Leicestershire 30.0% 32.7% 2.7 Lincolnshire 29.4% 32.1%
2.7 Norfolk 32.3% 34.6% 2.4 North Yorkshire 31.5% 35.3% 3.8 Northamptonshire 30.9%
33.4% 2.5 Nottinghamshire 33.3% 36.8% 3.6 Oxfordshire 29.4% 38.4% 9.0 Somerset 34.5%
38.6% 4.1 Staffordshire 28.0% 31.5% 3.6 Suffolk 31.7% 35.2% 3.5 Surrey 30.0% 35.8%
5.8 Warwickshire 31.3% 36.4% 5.1 West Sussex 30.1% 34.3% 4.2 Worcestershire 30.7%
34.8% 4.1 Total counties 30.8% 35.0% 4.2 Area 2013 2017 Change (pp) Cornwall 33.3%
39.9% 6.6 Durham 27.8% 31.3% 3.4 Isle of Wight 35.6% 38.7% 3.2 Northumberland 34.1%
40.7% 6.6 Shropshire 33.3% 36.4% 3.1 Wiltshire 34.3% 39.6% 5.3 Total unitaries/mets 31.9% 36.6% 4.7 Area 2013 2017 Change (pp) Doncaster 27.8% 29.4% 1.6 North Tyneside 32.1% 34.3% 2.2 Total city mayoral 29.6% 31.4% 1.8 Rejected ballot papers The proportion of ballots rejected at official counts was 0.3%. This compares with 0.5% at the 2013 local elections. The rejection rate at unitary and metropolitan elections was higher than at county elections (0.5% compared with 0.2%). Table 3.3: Proportion of ballots rejected at the count Counties Proportion Kent 0.17% Hampshire 0.19% Essex 0.19% Somerset 0.19% Derbyshire 0.19% Gloucestershire 0.20% West Sussex 0.20% Devon
0.22% Surrey 0.22% Warwickshire 0.22% Worcestershire 0.22% Hertfordshire 0.22%
Buckinghamshire 0.22% Cumbria 0.22% East Sussex 0.22% Northamptonshire 0.22%
Leicestershire 0.23% Dorset 0.24% Suffolk 0.24% Nottinghamshire 0.24% Oxfordshire
0.25% Lancashire 0.27% Norfolk 0.27% Staffordshire 0.27% North Yorkshire 0.28%
Lincolnshire 0.30% Cambridgeshire 0.51% Total 0.23% In six county divisions, the rate of rejected ballots was more than 1%. Three of these were in county Cambridgeshire, where Combined Authority Mayoral elections were held on the same day. In unitary and metropolitan authorities, 32 wards had a rejection rate higher than 1%. One authority in Cornwall rejected 3.8% of ballots at the count. The majority of rejected ballots (69.6%) were rejected due to being unmarked or wholly void for uncertainty. More than a quarter (26.5%) were rejected due to voting for more than one candidate. Table 3.4: Reasons for rejected ballots No official mark Voting more than once Mark by which the voter could be identified Unmarked Rejected in part 2017 County 1.3% 25.5% 1.6% 70.7% 0.8% Unitary / Met 2.1% 26.4% 2.2% 68.7% 0.5% City mayoral 0.0% 54.7% 1.8% 43.5% 0.0%
2013 County 1.3% 22.0% 2.7% 71.4% 2.5% Unitary / Met 2.1% 17.9% 0.9% 69.8% 0.1% City mayoral 1.5% 21.1% 2.4% 71.1% 2.0% Postal voting The total number of postal votes issued for these elections was 3.1 million, representing 16.6% of all electors with a contested election in their division/ward. This compares with 14.9% at the 2013 local elections. At a division/ward level, electors registered for a postal vote ranged from 2.8% in University Parks, Oxford, to 39.2% in Cramlington South East, Northumberland. Postal voting remains more common in unitary and metropolitan authorities. 19.5% of the electorate (384,079 electors) in unitary and metropolitan authorities were issued with a postal ballot paper compared with 16.2% in county districts (2.7 million electors). At the City Mayoral elections in Doncaster and North Tyneside, more than a quarter of electors (26.0% or 98,001 electors) had a postal vote. Table 4.1: Highest and lowest proportions of postal voters Fewer than 10% postal voters Fewer than 10% postal voters Percentage Barrow-in-Furness 7.4%
Oxford 9.4% Epping Forest 9.5% Higher than 25% postal voters Percentage Doncaster 27.0% Rushcliffe 28.4% Chorley 28.7% Stevenage 34.6% The proportion of postal voters returning their ballot papers always exceeds the turnout among 'in person' voters.
This year, 68.4% postal electors used their postal vote compared with 29.1% who turned up to vote in person 6 . Table 4.2: Postal vote vs in-person turnout Postal vote turnout In-person turnout 2017 68.7% 28.8% 2013 67.1% 25.0% 2009 68.7% 35.2% Postal votes accounted for 31.7% of all votes included at the count. This compares with 31.3% in 2013 and 22.7% in 2009. Rejected postal ballots Postal voting packs (PV) require voters to provide their signature and date of birth (DOB). These identifiers are then matched against those provided at the time of application. If the signature or date of birth is missing or does not match, the postal vote is rejected and is not included at the count. Since 2014, Electoral Registration Officers (EROs) have been required to notify electors if their postal vote has been rejected and give the reason(s) for rejection. They can also request the elector to provide an up-to-date signature. Table 4.3: Rejected postal ballots Rejected postal ballots as % of envelopes returned 2017 2.3% County 2.3% Unitary / Met 2.4% City mayoral 3.5% 2013 3.1% County 3.1% Unitary / Met 3.0% City mayoral 2.6% 2009 3.2% The total rate of rejection across elections was 2.3%, which represents a decrease from 3.1% in 2013 and 3.2% in 2009 7 . The overall fall in levels of rejected postal votes suggests that the new policy may be having a positive impact overall. More than half (51.6%) of rejected ballots were rejected due to mismatched information. In almost a quarter of cases (24.6% and 23.8% respectively), postal ballots were rejected due to missing information, or because voters returned their postal voting envelopes but failed to include either the ballot paper itself or the verification statement or both. Table 4.4: Reasons for postal vote statement rejection 2013 2017 Change (pp)

	2013	2017	Change (pp)
Missing information Signature	6.8%	7.3%	0.5
DoB	4.7%	5.4%	0.7
Both	9.5%	11.9%	2.4
Mismatched information Signature	24.2%	20.3%	-3.9
DoB	20.8%	23.6%	2.8
Both	9.5%	7.7%	-1.8
Missing forms Ballot paper	8.5%	11.0%	2.5
PV statement	16.0%	12.8%	-3.2

These figures are percentages of the total, small number of rejected ballots. For example, although 51.6% of rejected postal votes were rejected due to mismatched information, this represents 1.1% of covering envelopes received and 0.4% of all votes cast. The vast majority of postal voters did cast their vote correctly. Proxies and waivers A total of 22,029 electors appointed a proxy (0.1% of the electorate). This is consistent with levels in 2013 and 2009. The number of emergency proxies issued was 641. This is more than nine times higher than in 2013, when emergency proxies were granted only on disability grounds resulting in 67 being issued. The provision has since been extended to occupation or military service. A concession granted under the terms of the EAA 2006 was that postal electors who either had a disability, or were illiterate, or were unable to furnish a consistent signature could apply for a waiver to use their date of birth as their sole identifier. A total of 19,583 waivers were granted, representing 0.6% of postal electors. The proportion of postal electors granted such a waiver ranged from 0.3% in Doncaster to 1.3% in West Sussex. 1. Stillington (Hambleton), Thirsk (Hambleton), Much Wenlock (Shropshire), Bulford Allington & Fiheldean (Wiltshire) ■ Back to content at footnote 1 2. Excluding 20,441 in four uncontested wards/divisions. ■ Back to content at footnote 2 3. Doncaster held both county council and city mayor elections. Doncaster is captured under both unitary and metropolitan authorities, and city mayoral, but counted only once in the total figures. ■ Back to content at footnote 3 4. Three local authorities were unable to provide information on applications. Eight were unable to provide information on duplicate applications. ■ Back to content at footnote 4 5. 53 local authorities were not able to provide this information. ■ Back to content at footnote 5 6. There is no statutory field that captures the number of postal voting statements received by the Returning Officer. In practice, we use field B6, 'Number of covering envelopes received by the Returning Officer or at a polling station before the close of poll'

as a surrogate but we know that, as mentioned, electors can return multiple postal ballots in one envelope or return envelopes without any ballots. ■ Back to content at footnote 6 7. As figures reported for field C19 were inconsistent, we used a calculation of field B6 minus field C18 as a surrogate for the total number of postal votes rejected. This approach is consistent with previous years. ■ Back to content at footnote 7 Related content Past elections and referendums Read our reports and view data about past elections and referendums Local councils Find out about local councils and how to vote in local council elections. Types of elections about the types of elections in the UK. Results and turnout at the 2018 May England local elections View the results and turnout at the 2018 local elections in England

Board minutes: 20 May 2020 | Electoral Commission Search

Board minutes: 20 May 2020 You are in the Electoral Commission Board section

Home How we make decisions Electoral Commission Board On this page Who was at the meeting Apologies and introductions Declarations of interest Public Opinion: Findings from the Winter Tracker Using research to support our work Policy priorities of the Commission Business items by electronic means First published: 26 June 2020 Last updated: 21 June 2021 Meeting overview Date: Wednesday 20 May 2020 Time: 9:30am to 12:20pm Location: By video conference to Boothroyd Room, 3 Bunhill Row, London Date of next scheduled meeting: Wednesday 24 June Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting John Holmes, Chair Alasdair Morgan Anna Carragher Elan Closs Stephens Joan

Walley Sarah Chambers Stephen Gilbert Sue Bruce Bob Posner, Chief Executive Craig

Westwood, Director, Communications, Policy and Research Louise Edwards, Director, Regulation Ailsa Irvine, Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance Amanda

Kelly, Interim General Counsel Tom Hawthorn, Head of Policy Phil Thompson, Head of Research Niki Nixon, Head of External Communications David Bailey, Head of Strategic Planning and Performance Katharine Sparrow, Senior Executive Assistant Isabella

Coventry, Acting Board Secretary Madeleine Spink, Senior Advisor, Governance Sheelagh

Duffield, Advanced Boardroom Excellence (observing) Apologies and introductions

Apologies from Rob Vincent and Kieran Rix, Director of Finance and Corporate

Services, were noted. The Chair welcomed Sheelagh Duffield, from Advanced Boardroom

Excellence, to the meeting. Sheelagh was observing the meeting as part of the external Board effectiveness review. Declarations of interest There were no new declarations of interest. Public Opinion: Findings from the Winter Tracker (EC 39/20)

The Head of Research gave the Board an overview of the main findings from the Commission's annual public opinion survey. Overall, confidence in the key aspects of the administration of elections remained high, although an increase in concerns around the regulation of social media and intimidation of candidates was recorded. In the area of political finance, perceptions of the transparency of the spending and funding of parties remained low, and confidence that authorities would take appropriate action if a party was caught breaking the rules continued to fall. The survey found a high level of reported interest in politics. However, three quarters of people asked felt they did not have influence on politics, although these findings were significantly affected by age. The Board discussed the findings in detail. It

Board noted that further qualitative research might be valuable to fully understand the implications of some of the statistics, as they related to different demographic groups, particularly Black, Asian and minority ethnic (BAME) communities and different age groups. The Board agreed it would be useful to see further demographic break down of the findings, where these were available from the survey. The Board noted the consistency of much of the data over time, and discussed the need to ensure we got value for money from the survey. The Director of Communications, Policy and Research said the frequency of the survey could be considered, but that it was important we regularly tested what people were thinking to understand what voters wanted and found important. The Director noted that the findings were used by many teams across the Commission to inform their work, as well as by external stakeholders. It might also be possible to supplement a core group of annual questions with others, drilling down for more detail in areas of particular interest at the time, on a less frequent basis. Resolved: That the paper be noted. Using research to support our work (EC 40/20) The Director of Communications, Policy and Research introduced discussion, saying this was an opportunity for the Board to take a strategic look at the principles, purpose and approach of our research, which would help inform the approach we took in developing the new corporate plan. The Head of Research said the aim of the paper was to give an overview on how and why we carried out and used our research. The questions for the Board to consider were whether the principles were right, whether there were any gaps in our understanding of our external environment that could be addressed by our research strategy, and whether we should be more proactive in engaging in partnership working. The Board noted the value of our tracker and event related research work, but also expressed a desire for more research around particular electoral issues, which could help inform or influence policy decisions. In discussion, the importance of horizon scanning and the need to think about the changing nature of the environment we operate in were also flagged. More qualitative research into communities which participated less in the electoral system could be worthwhile, as well as a further look at accessibility issues.

The Board was supportive of the proposal to be more proactive in looking at partnership working in this area, especially with academics, and to cast our net widely. They were also interested in ensuring that the Commission looked proactively at what comparable countries were doing in the electoral field, to help inform our own decision-making. The Board noted that potential budgetary pressures in future years would make prioritisation, and value for money, even more important considerations.

Resolved: That the paper be agreed, noting the Board's comments above.

Policy priorities of the Commission (EC 41/20)

The Director of Communications, Policy and Research introduced the discussion by reminding the Board that the specific shortlist of policy priorities was relatively new for the Commission, but had proved to be a positive step, while obviously not covering all the Commission's priorities. The Director noted that the circumstances of the past two years meant that the scale of work planned originally to help put these priorities into action had not been possible, but progress in some areas had nevertheless been registered.

The Director said that, for the future, the aim was to set an ambitious five-year agenda, but to check in every 18 months to enable the Board to assess whether the priorities were still correct, and to reflect on any changes in the external environment. The Head of Policy gave a brief overview of our approach to setting the priorities, highlighting the need to balance ambition with being realistic about the circumstances in which we operated. The Head of External Communications went on to describe the plans to engage with our stakeholders on each of the priorities. The Board discussed the need to strike a balance between highlighting our priorities for change and the risk of undermining people's faith in the system by suggesting it was not sound. The Board noted that while we continued to push for electoral modernisation and a consolidation of electoral legislation, we still needed to manage our engagement with governments on their priorities and legislative proposals. One problem was how to manage incremental change, if that was what governments preferred, as that would make the system still more complex. The Board noted that it was important for us to be able to come forward with workable, credible solutions, rather than just highlighting problems that needed to be addressed. We also needed to be sensitive to the huge pressures on local and central governments during the coronavirus pandemic, as well as the difficulties it was creating for political parties. The Board noted there was a significant and challenging agenda around social media and digital campaigning extending beyond the Commission's remit. We would not have the solutions on our own in these areas, and it would be important to work with other regulators in the field, including leading that conversation as necessary. The Board was content to continue with the current priorities, but would welcome opportunities to continue to review these as we developed the new corporate plan, and also wanted to make sure that any opportunities for constructive change arising from the coronavirus lockdown were fully seized. Resolved: That the paper be agreed.

Business items by electronic means The Chief Executive updated the Board on how the organisation continued to respond to the coronavirus lockdown. The Director of Electoral Administration and Guidance gave the Board an overview of the work that was underway to plan for the significant range of polls now scheduled for 2021. The Director noted that not only were the different scenarios of combination being taken in to account, but also the implications of the public health environment, and that we were seeking to learn lessons from recent international experience to inform our approach where appropriate. The General Counsel updated the Board on an issue that had arisen around a party registration. The Director of Regulation noted that learning from this experience was being built into the decision making process. The Chair acknowledged the new process to deal with electronic business items had probably been too complicated. Commissioners' feedback would be taken on board and amendments made.

Impact on security You are in the May 2019 voter identification pilot schemes section Home Our research Voter identification pilots May 2019 voter identification pilot schemes First published: 12 July 2019 Last updated: 12 July 2019 Contents Overview Our findings Impact on voters: experience Impact on voters: confidence Impact on security Impact of administration of the polls Background to our evaluation Key findings There were no allegations of electoral fraud at polling stations in the pilot scheme at the May 2019 elections. Each of the 2019 pilot models had security strengths and weaknesses, but the photo ID only model has the greatest security strengths compared with the other models. The security of the mixed and poll card models could be further improved with some changes to the process and requirements. Allegations of electoral fraud at polling stations The local police forces covering the pilots informed us that there were no allegations of electoral fraud at polling stations for the May 2019 elections. In other areas where local elections took place in May 2019, police forces have informed us that there were a total of nine allegations of electoral fraud at polling stations. Eight of these were still under investigation at the time we published this evaluation, and one needed no further action following police investigation as there was no evidence an offence had been committed. It is not possible to assess whether the identification requirement prevented any actual attempts to commit impersonation fraud. There is no evidence to suggest that the absence of allegations in the pilots was because of the ID requirements. Security assessment We asked an experienced identity verification expert to review the three ID models that were piloted in 2019. This review looked at the strengths and weaknesses of the security of each model, using well-established common standards and guidance for identity verification. It took into account the processes for issuing ID documents and how polling station staff could check the documents that voters showed. Key findings from security evaluation of acceptable ID documents Photo ID only model Strengths Includes only documents considered high or medium strength, including locally issued photo ID Officially issued documents with security features that uniquely identify the individual Both high and medium strength documents can be reasonably checked by non-experts in polling station Documents can be checked by non-experts in a polling station for a reasonable photo likeness and obvious signs of tampering as well as the registered name Locally issued ID with a photo would provide strong evidence that it was issued to the person showing it Weaknesses Polling station staff would not be able to carry out specialist document checking Mixed photo and non-photo ID model Strengths Includes the same high or medium strength documents, as in photo ID only model Some documents may show voter's current registered address Officially issued non-photo documents are harder to forge than other paper documents Weaknesses Other non-photo documents (not officially issued) are considered low strength unless presented together with an officially issued document Polling station staff would not be able to carry out specialist document checking Difficult for polling station staff to differentiate between original and home-printed documents Bank cards or national insurance number cards cannot be validated or verified by polling station staff Poll card model Strengths Returning Officers control the issuing process, linked to individually verified identities through the electoral registration process Poll card shows the voter's current address Additional security features (e.g. scannable QR code or other printed features) could make it harder to forge Weaknesses Poll card is a non-photo document, which is normally considered low strength unless presented together with an officially issued document Final bit The review also indicated that the security of the mixed and poll card models could be further improved with some changes to the process and requirements. This could include, for example: requiring locally-issued ID or poll cards to include the holder's photo; requiring at least one officially-issued non-photo document to be presented in the mixed model; adding printed security features to make it harder to forge poll cards; and improving polling station processes to require all voters to state their full name and address without referring to their ID.

Report navigation links Previous Next

3. Impact on voters: confidence

5. Impact of administration of the polls

Related content

Register to vote

All you need to register to vote is 5 minutes and your National Insurance number.

Our Commissioners

Donations and loans

Find out about donations and loans to a political party, individual or other organisation

Report: How the 2017 UK general election was run

Read our report about how the 2017 general election was run

Northern Ireland Assembly Parties Panel minutes: 11 June 2019 | Electoral Commission Search Northern Ireland Assembly Parties Panel minutes: 11 June 2019 You are in the Party panels section Home How we make decisions Party panels First published: 16 October 2019 Last updated: 27 July 2021 Meeting overview Date: 11 June 2019 Time: 2pm Location: Training room, Oremoan Business Park, Belfast Date of next scheduled meeting: 1 October 2019 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting Alliance Party: Sharon Lowry DUP: George Dorrian Green Party: Kate Barry Sinn Féin: Gary Fleming SDLP: Catherine Matthews UUP: Barbara Knox The Electoral Commission: Anna Carragher, Commissioner Ann Watt, Head of Electoral Commission, Northern Ireland Cahir Hughes, Manager, Electoral Commission, Northern Ireland Roisin McDaid, Senior Officer (Political Parties Liaison) Caralyn Morton, Business Support Officer Electoral Office for Northern Ireland: Virginia McVea, Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland Royal Mail: Rachel Winham, Head of Elections and Political Parties Scott Forsyth, Special Events Planning Manager NI Claire Connolly, Elections Manager NI Welcome and introductions The Chair, Anna Carragher, welcomed everyone to the meeting and round table introductions were made. The meeting planned for 14 May 2019 had been postponed due to the announcement of a European Parliamentary election. Notes of previous meeting on 19 March 2019 The Panel agreed the notes of the previous meeting. There were no matters arising. Issues raised by the political parties No items had been raised by the parties in advance of the meeting. May 2019 post-election review – 2 May local government elections and 23 May European Parliamentary election The Chair invited feedback from the Panel on all aspects of the recent elections. Although the Commission has no formal statutory obligation for the Commission to report on local government elections, it would be writing to the Secretary of State to raise a number of legal issues including feedback from today's meeting, summarised below. The Commission would be reporting formally on the European Parliamentary election and planned to publish its report in the autumn. Registration At the local government election there had been a problem affecting some electors, who as late additions to the register, had not appeared on addendum lists at polling stations. One party noted their concern that when polling station staff had not been able to clarify the position with EONI Head Office, these electors were not able to vote. The CEO reported that due to a clerical error the addendum lists at polling stations had some omissions. The telephone helpline had been staffed to 7pm but unfortunately, phone lines had been very busy and staff had difficulty handling calls. The CEO accepted the criticism that some electors had consequently left polling stations without voting. She had subsequently reviewed registers and telephone system to see what improvements could be made. Separate telephone numbers for staff and public enquiries had been introduced ahead of the European election. Nominations There was concern that current legislation for local government elections required candidates to record their home address, resulting in the withdrawal of one candidate's nomination. The Chief Electoral Officer (CEO) noted a couple of points of confusion relating to spelling of names, "commonly used name" and logos. She had subsequently met with SOLACE and Council Chief Executives to improve clarity. Campaign Issues An issue of poor conduct at a polling station witnessed by one Panel member had been effectively handled by the Presiding Officer. She asked that parties should take responsibility for emphasising the code of conduct to all their members, to prevent such instances of intimidation. The CEO agreed, noting the majority of candidates/agents remained outside polling station gates, but there had been some issues where there were inner and outer gated entrances. Candidate mailing Rachel Winham reminded the Panel of recent changes to the candidate mailings process: namely, art checks prior to submission, booking-in system and submissions sorted by street order. This process had revised as necessary when all mailings going via one contact, Claire Connolly, had created a bottleneck. She reported that staff on the Royal Mail 24 hours helpline had noted how pleasant Northern Ireland candidates had been. Two parties reported issues with delayed mailings delivered late on election day or the day before. Rachel Winham asked the parties to email her details of the areas in which this happened, and any similar instances. A system change via a third party provider had resulted in polling cards for the European election having to be manually sorted by Royal Mail staff at a slower rate of 1,000 an hour. This had to be done in operatives' spare time, and had led to considerable delays. Royal Mail would not accommodate this 1400 Sort in future. Polling cards had been delivered late or had not arrived in East Belfast due to the above. The much shorter deadlines for the European election meant some parties dropped off literature after the recommended date, so some items were not delivered. There was a wider discussion on the reference to absent/proxy voting deadlines that had already passed on the European poll card, which had added to voter confusion. Rachel had asked Returning Officers via an insert in the AEA newsletter to inform her about problems relating to poll cards. The CEO had also been concerned about reports of inconsistent delivery in Mid Ulster and delays at Post Office locations. She asked for ongoing feedback from both party representatives and Royal Mail if future issues arose, to allow fuller investigation. Public awareness In a wide ranging discussion the Panel covered various points which had contributed to public confusion in relation to the European Parliamentary election. These included: Some media and party literature featuring visuals showed an "X" to vote. It was however recognised that polling station staff explained the STV numeric voting procedure to individual voters. People were unaware of the two distinct electoral timetables for the separate elections. The deadline for applying for a proxy or postal vote for the European election was the same date as the local government election day. Although the CEO had written a briefing paper for the media and covered this herself in interviews, the complexities of this message had not been widely covered. It was noted that due to different sets of legislation, the Northern Ireland absent voting deadline was earlier than that in England. Of the 34,000 requests for registered EU citizens to return a UCI form, approximately 4,000 had been returned. The CEO asked for the parties' support in re-emphasising the importance of retaining the Digital Registration Number (DRN) issued when registering online. This is a lifelong number, similar to a National Insurance Number. If online applicants registered a personal email address with their original application, a reminder of their DRN could be emailed to this initial address. Polling Stations Some confusion had arisen when a venue which had not been used for the local poll, had initially been advised for use at the European election and then withdrawn. The CEO explained the reasons for this and the issues the Electoral Office for Northern Ireland (EONI) were currently experiencing with the impact of fewer available caretakers to open/close buildings and insurance implications. EONI was working internally to check the accuracy of its data. There had also been some resistance from schools to the increased exceptional closure days. The Count It was noted that most count centres except Newtownabbey had followed the recommended layout. There had been some complaints that agents were not close enough to tally. The CEO planned to carry out future training with council staff to keep them updated. She asked party representatives whether they would have an interest in a half-day STV counting training session to help demystify the process. Given the positive level of interest, she would gauge a possible date subject to future election dates. The Panel congratulated EONI staff on how well the European election count had gone. The Chairman agreed and highlighted that candidate speeches had also reflected this. The difficulty of recruiting staff for the European election (3,500 for polling stations plus 800 for verification/count) so soon after the local election was discussed. The CEO asked for guidance from the Electoral Commission regarding how to improve transparency in recording any discrepancy in numbers between the verification and count. Ann Watt would review. The CEO reported that the effect of two elections not being held on a combined date, and the resultant two distinct timetables had had a much greater impact in Northern Ireland than elsewhere. She felt factors such as the high number of candidates (800) at local elections had not been sufficiently taken account of. The CEO considered that the exceptional circumstances when the European elections were called, had led to confusion amongst the electorate. The CEO emphasised that EONI had very good working relations with partners Royal Mail, Whistl and its printers. Unfortunately the lack of notice for the European election had brought unrealistic deadlines resulting in a service delivery that was outside "the norm". The lack of notice had been the key impacting factor. Royal Mail noted it usually operated a 5 month lead time for planned elections. They considered the recent 6 week timetable had been challenging.

The Panel recorded its thanks to Claire Connolly and Royal Mail for their assistance at all hours during the recent elections. Update from Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland The CEO informed the Panel that EONI were working on an issue regarding the way addresses had been grouped on registers supplied to parties. She also made the Panel aware that EONI would be making contingency plans for a possible autumn poll. As discussed at previous Panel meetings, the Derry/Londonderry and Omagh offices would relocate to Belfast at the end of June. Kiosks for online registration would be piloted at two Council venues where broadband coverage was limited. The CEO would be in contact with party representatives regarding the Northern Ireland canvass in 2020. The Chair noted that the Panel had a good appreciation of the difficult circumstances of the recent election and recorded thanks to all EONI staff. Electoral Commission updates Recent Commission publications Codes of Practice on election spending Updated drafts of two codes of practice on campaign spending: one on candidate spending and one on party spending, were tabled. These incorporated significant redrafting following wide-scale consultation. We are very grateful to those who provided feedback. The draft Codes had also been shared with parties at the recent Westminster PPP. If parties had urgent comments, they should let the Commission know as soon as possible. The Codes were due to be finalised in July and would be circulated to the parties. PACAC response The Chair informed the Panel of the Public Administration and Constitutional Affairs Committee's (PACAC) new inquiry to examine the case for comprehensive reform of electoral law. The Committee is looking at how urgently comprehensive electoral reform is required, and whether there is a need to go beyond the Law Commission's proposals outlined in their 2016 interim report. The Electoral Commission welcomed the inquiry and responded to the call for written evidence, highlighting the urgent need to simplify and modernise electoral law, together with the real costs and consequences for voters, campaigners and election officials. Political finance – statutory return deadlines Parties were reminded of the following deadlines: Quarter 2 - 2019 donation and loan returns to be submitted by 30 July 2019. Statement of accounts for the year ending 31 December 2018 for parties with income and expenditure over £250,000 must be audited and delivered to the Commission (with the auditor's certificate) by 7 July 2019. Candidate and Party campaign spending returns Candidate spending returns and declarations for the European Parliamentary election must be submitted to the Chief Electoral Officer by 16 July. Parties were reminded that both the candidate and agent declarations have to be witnessed by a Justice of the Peace or equivalent. Party spending returns for the Local Government and European Parliamentary elections must be delivered to the Electoral Commission by Friday 23 August 2019. Next meeting date – 1 October 2019 The next Panel meeting is scheduled for Tuesday 1 October 2019 at 9.30am. The Electoral Commission would advise Panel members of the venue. List of agreed actions Action Responsible Finalised Codes of Practice on election spending to be circulated Electoral Commission Submit returns by following deadlines: • Quarter 2 donation and loan returns by 30 July • Statement of Accounts income/exp over £250k • Candidate spending returns for European Parliamentary election to Chief Electoral Officer by 16 July. • Party spending returns for the Local Government and European Parliamentary elections to the Electoral Commission by 23 August. Party representatives

Results and turnout at the EU referendum | Electoral Commission Search
Results and turnout at the EU referendum You are in the EU referendum section
Home EU referendum EU referendum results by region: South West EU referendum results by region: Yorkshire and The Humber EU referendum results by region: West Midlands EU referendum results by region: Wales EU referendum results by region: South East EU referendum results by region: Scotland EU referendum results by region: North West EU referendum results by region: North East EU referendum results by region: London EU referendum results by region: East Midlands EU referendum results by region: East On this page National totals Results by region Result data First published: 16 July 2019 Last updated: 25 September 2019 Download You can download the: full set of EU referendum result data full dataset as an XLS full dataset as a CSV (zip file)
National totals Remain Leave 16,141,241 17,410,742 Total electorate: 46,500,001 Turnout: 72.2% Rejected ballots: 25,359 Results by region East Remain Leave 1,448,616 1,880,367 Electorate: 4,398,796 Turnout: 75.7% Valid votes: 3,328,983 Verified ballot papers: 3,331,459 Ballot papers counted : 3,331,312 Rejected ballots: 2,329 View the East results by counting area . East Midlands Remain Leave 1,033,036 1,475,479 Electorate: 3,384,299 Turnout: 74.2% Valid votes: 2,508,515 Verified ballot papers: 2,510,561 Ballot papers counted: 2,510,496 Rejected ballots: 1,981 View the East Midlands results by counting area . London Remain Leave 2,263,519 1,513,232 Electorate: 5,424,768 Turnout: 69.7% Valid votes: 3,776,751 Verified ballot papers: 3,781,234 Ballot papers counted : 3,781,204 Rejected ballots: 4,453 View the London results by counting area . North East Remain Leave 562,595 778,103 Electorate: 1,934,341 Turnout: 69.3% Valid votes: 1,340,698 Verified ballot papers: 1,341,387 Ballot papers counted: 1,341,387 Rejected ballots: 689 View the North East results by counting area . North West Remain Leave 1,699,020 1,966,925 Electorate: 5,241,568 Turnout: 70% Valid votes: 3,665,945 Verified ballot papers: 3,668,629 Ballot papers counted: 3,668,627 Rejected ballots: 2,682 View the North West results by counting area . Northern Ireland Remain Leave 440,707 349,442 Electorate: 1,260,955 Turnout: 62.7% Valid votes: 790,149 Verified ballot papers: 790,523 Ballot papers counted: 790,523 Rejected ballots: 374 Scotland Remain Leave 1,661,191 1,018,322 Electorate: 3,987,112 Turnout: 67.2% Valid votes: 2,679,513 Verified ballot papers: 2,681,179 Ballot papers counted: 2,681,179 Rejected ballots: 1,666 View the Scotland results by counting area . South East Remain Leave 2,391,718 2,567,965 Electorate: 6,465,404 Turnout: 76.8% Valid votes: 4,959,683 Verified ballot papers: 4,963,182 Ballot papers counted: 4,963,110 Rejected ballots: 3,427 View the South East results by counting area . South West Remain Leave 1,503,019 1,669,711 Electorate: 4,138,134 Turnout: 76.7% Valid votes: 3,172,730 Verified ballot papers: 3,175,003 Ballot papers counted: 3,174,909 Rejected ballots: 2,179 View the South West results by counting area . Wales Remain Leave 772,347 854,572 Electorate: 2,270,272 Turnout: 71.7% Valid votes: 1,626,919 Verified ballot papers: 1,628,075 Ballot papers counted: 1,628,054 Rejected ballots: 1,135 View the Wales results by counting area . West Midlands Remain Leave 1,207,175 1,755,687 Electorate: 4,116,572 Turnout: 72% Valid votes: 2,962,862 Verified ballot papers: 2,965,411 Ballot papers counted: 2,965,36 Rejected ballots: 2,507 View the West Midlands results by counting area . Yorkshire and the Humber Remain Leave 1,158,298 1,580,937 Electorate: 3,877,780 Turnout: 70.7% Valid votes: 2,739,235 Verified ballot papers: 2,741,394 Ballot papers counted : 2,741,172 Rejected ballots: 1,937 View the Yorkshire and the Humber results by counting area . Result data Related content Testing the EU referendum question Find out about our testing of the EU referendum question Report: 23 June 2016 referendum on the UK's membership of the European Union Read our report on the 2016 EU referendum Report:

The costs of delivering the June 2016 referendum on the UK's membership of the European Union Read our report about the costs of delivering the 2016 EU referendum Report: The regulation of campaigners at the referendum on the UK's membership of the European Union held on 23 June 2016 Read our report about the regulation of campaigners at the 2016 EU referendum

Survey of the electoral register in England | Electoral Commission Search
Survey of the electoral register in England You are in the section Home On this page What's next Your privacy Further information What we mean by accuracy and completeness First published: 8 February 2023 Last updated: 21 February 2023 Summary We are carrying out research into the accuracy and completeness of the electoral register across the country. You may have received a letter from Ipsos stating that your household has been selected to take part in a survey about the electoral register. We would like to interview one person in your household aged 16 or over. We want to speak to people from all walks of life, of all ages, with all sorts of interests, whether or not they care about electoral issues. What's next If you have been selected to participate in the study, an Ipsos interviewer will visit your home to conduct a short survey. This will take around 10 minutes to complete. They carry a photo ID, so you know who they are. Your privacy Taking part in the study is voluntary. Everything you tell us will be treated as confidential. The data collected will be used for research purposes only, in accordance with the General Data Protection Regulations and the Market Research Society Code of Conduct. The results and published reports are anonymised and will not be in a form which could reveal your identity. You will not receive any 'junk mail' as a result of taking part. Read the full Privacy Notice from Ipsos, which sets out your rights. Read our privacy notice Further information If you have received a letter and you would like to arrange a convenient time, or have any questions please email ECRegisters2023@ipsos.com or call 0800 124 4878. Please quote your full address and the reference number at the top of the letter. What we mean by accuracy and completeness Since 2004, we have been carrying out research on the electoral registers. This includes conducting a study into the accuracy and completeness of the electoral registers every few years. The long-term aims of this research are to: provide an overview of the accuracy and completeness of the registers in Great Britain and Northern Ireland provide up-to-date information on those groups which are more likely to be under-registered as this helps us refine our public awareness activity track the impact of legislative, administrative and population change on the quality of the registers. We use this to inform our scrutiny of proposals and policies relating to registration system reforms Accuracy An accurate register would be one on which there are no false entries. The accuracy of the electoral registers is the percentage of entries on the registers which relate to verified and eligible voters who are resident at the given address. Completeness A complete register would be one on which every person who is entitled to register is registered. The completeness of the electoral registers is the percentage of eligible people who are registered at their current address.

You are in the Party panels section Home How we make decisions Party panels On this page Minutes, and actions of the meeting and matters arising (ECPPP 23/02/2016) May 2016 polls EU Referendum Commission update report Proposed dates for meetings in 2017 Any other business Actions First published: 6 September 2016 Last updated: 2

September 2019 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting Conservative Party: Andrew Stedman (AStedman) Democratic Unionist Party: Christopher Montgomery (CM) Labour (Chair): Mike Creighton (MC) Liberal Democrats: David Allworthy (DA) Social Democratic and Labour Party: Claire Tighe (CT) Scottish National Party: Scott Martin (SM) Electoral Commission: Bob Posner, Director of Party and Election Finance & Legal Counsel (BP) Andrew Scallan CBE, Director of Electoral Administration (AS) Craig Westwood, Director of Communications (CW) Karim Aziz, Deputy Head of Media and Public Affairs (KA) Minutes, and actions of the meeting and matters arising (ECPPP 23/02/2016) The minutes from 23/02/2016 were agreed. It was noted that the meeting that had been scheduled for 5 July 2016 did not take place. MC asked about the Commission's Strategic Review. AS replied that the findings of the review will go to the Commission's Board in October and the findings will be part of the Corporate Plan to be published next year. May 2016 polls AS informed the group that reports on the May polls were being published this week and that the Commission had found the polls had been well run. BP added that a lot of the recommendations made by the Commission were a restatement of previous ones and that they tie in with Law Commission recommendations. AS informed the group that the Cabinet Office had yesterday (05/09/16) published its response to the Commission's recommendations following the polls in 2015. MC enquired what had been the biggest problem at the May polls. AS said that the biggest issue to impact on voters was what happened in Barnet where incomplete registers were printed for use in polling stations. AS remarked that the Commission received its first call from a voter in Barnet about the issue at 07.03 and that Barnet had been quick to respond and get new registers printed and distributed by 10.30. AStedman asked if the Commission had assessed what impact this issue had on turnout in Barnet. AS replied that it wasn't possible to assess the impact on turnout. We know that Barnet had been good at explaining the emergency proxy vote provision made available to voters that had been wrongly turned away and that people were able to return with their poll card to vote. What the Commission doesn't know is how many voters had been affected by the issue. MC said that the Commission had made some recommendations about the polls scheduled to take place in 2020 but wanted to know about the polls scheduled in 2017 and when guidance would be made available. AS confirmed that the PPP would receive information about candidates and agents guidance for the 2017 polls next week. EU Referendum AS informed the group that the report would be published next week. BP added that it would refer to Section 125 and make recommendations in that area. CW added that on the same day, the Commission would publish an evaluation of its public awareness campaign activities to drive registrations at both the May polls and the EU Referendum. AStedman asked if it would contain information on new registrations. CW confirmed that it would. CM asked if it would mention the extension to the registration deadline. AS said that the Commission had expected the extended registration deadline at the EU Referendum to include Northern Ireland but it was the UK Government's decision not to do that. SM asked about overseas voters. AS referred to the challenge within the existing timetable for getting postal votes out to overseas voters with sufficient time for them to be returned and that if franchise changes for overseas voters were introduced, the UK Government would need to consider the electoral timetable. DA noted the impact TV debates have on driving registration and whether it was possible for TV debates to be planned earlier. AS remarked that the nature of these debates tended to mean they take place close to the registration deadline. MC referred to the up-coming Boundary Review and registrations since the 1 December 2015. AS commented that the Commission has said that using 1 December registers for boundary reviews meant that registers that were most accurate and complete were not used. Commission update report SM asked if there will be a process for the new Chair of the Commission to meet the parties including the members of the PPP. BP confirmed that a meeting would be included in the induction programme. Proposed dates for meetings in 2017 The group confirmed that they were happy with the proposed dates for meetings in 2017. Any other business AStedman said a common data proposal had been supplied to the Commission's Tom Hawthorn. AS said that we would help in taking this forward and that the Cabinet Office had a key role to play. MC asked about the potential for a single electoral register for the UK. AS said that a piece of work should be undertaken by the UK Government that would enable people to test if they are registered to vote at their current address. SM commented that there was the risk of people 'fishing' for information about a person. AS said it was a question about what level of detail a person would be required to input in order to be able check their registration status. MC mentioned the issue of anonymous registration. DA commented on the story in Bristol about the difficulties of registering to vote anonymously and whether the Commission was aware of the issue. AS confirmed that the Commission was looking into the issue. MC mentioned the publication of Sir Eric Pickles report into electoral fraud. There was a general discussion about the report and its voter ID recommendation. AS said the Commission welcomed the report and was pleased it supported a lot of its previous recommendations, including the need for voter ID. There was discussion about whether this recommendation could be a 'back door for ID cards'. AS explained that Commission proposals had recommended a proportionate approach and had made recommendations for what could be done for those people without photo ID. The group also discussed how the system works in Northern Ireland where voters are required to show ID. MC referred to the Commission's guidance notes. Both MC and DA said it would be helpful if they were indexed and in one place. AS said that the Commission was in the process of implementing a change to its structure so that there would be one overall Guidance team. As part of this change, the new overall Head of Guidance would meet with the group to hear their experiences of using Commission guidance. This change was still only in its early stages. AStedman said a short term improvement would be to hyperlink to straight to forms which the group concurred would be a good idea. MC asked about ways to share best practice. MC said a roundtable discussion would be useful to discuss these guidance issues and also that it would be useful to have a joint Commission – Information Commissioner's Office meeting to discuss issues around the use of the electoral register. Action: Commission to organise. AS noted that he would be stepping down from his role at the end of the year. The group commented that it would be useful to have an organisational structure. Action: Commission to send organisational structure. SM mentioned it would be useful to have publication dates. Action: Commission to send through publication dates noting that dates are subject to change. The next PPP meeting will take place on Tuesday 6 December at 11am – Liberal Democrats to chair. Actions Actions from September 2016 PPP meeting Action Owner Status EC to organise roundtable meeting discussing its guidance and also joint session with ICO KA Confirmed 29 November EC to send organisational structure KA Sent 29 November EC to send forthcoming publication dates KA Sent 12 September Related content Party registration decisions View our decisions on political party names, descriptions and emblems View current applications View the political party names, descriptions and emblems which we are currently considering as part of our assessment process Donations and loans Find out about donations and loans to a political party, individual or other organisation Registers of unincorporated associations Download and view the registers of unincorporated associations parties, campaigners and other groups have to report their finances to us. They must report: what they've spent on their campaign after an election or referendum donations they've been given and loans they've entered into their annual accounts Candidates must also submit spending returns after major contests, such as UK Parliamentary general elections. We publish data from political parties, campaigners and other groups, as well as candidate spending returns after major contests. We publish all of the information we receive from political parties, campaigners and other groups on Political Finance Online . Explore the data Campaign spending: Candidates Find out about how candidates spend money on election campaigns Financial data of political parties, campaigners and other groups Find out about campaign spending for political parties and non-party campaigners, donations and loans, and annual accounts. Northern Ireland legislation The rules for publishing this information are different in Northern Ireland. At the moment, the legislation doesn't allow us to publish any information about donations and loans from before 1 July 2017. Our guidance You can read our guidance if you are a: candidate or agent political party campaigner regulated individual or organisation

You are in the Party panels section Home How we make decisions Party panels On this page ICO presentation Minutes of the last meeting and actions arising (ECPPP 04/09/2018) Codes of Practice on election spending by candidates and political parties – consultation and next steps Accessible information on parties, candidates and their policies for disabled voters Commission update report Any other business

Actions First published: 4 December 2018 Last updated: 2 September 2019 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting Liberal Democrats: Darren Briddock (DB), Chair of meeting Natalia Villazan (NV) Labour: Andrew Whyte (AW) Scottish National Party:

Scott Martin (SM) Conservative Party: Alan Mabbatt (AM) Daisy Woods (DW) Megan Tucker (MT) Plaid Cymru: Geraint Day (GD) Information Commissioner's Amanda Williams (AWi) Office (For item 1): Oliver O'Callaghan (OC) Electoral Commission: Craig Westwood, Director of Communications & Research (CW) Bob Posner, Director of Political Finance and Regulation & Legal Counsel (BP) Katy Knock, Policy Manager (KK) Kate Engles, Policy Manager (KE) Ellen Wilkie, Communications Officer (EW) ICO presentation AWi outlined the recent work of the ICO relevant to political parties, highlighting

recommendations from their report 'Democracy Disrupted?' including the development of a Code of Practice for the use of data in political campaigning. She invited the PPP to contribute to a call for views on this matter. AWi invited the PPP to attend a workshop on the Code of Practice taking place on 17 December. AW requested that the meeting could be rearranged for after Christmas due to staffing concerns. SM added that the PPP would like to all attend the same meeting. AWi committed to feeding back the PPP's requests and added that arranging a second meeting may be possible. AWi highlighted a recommendation on providing information processing information, for instance on how commonly held data such as the electoral register is used. DB suggested that the ICO could support political parties' calls for the electoral registers to have a common format. AWi asked DB to write to the ICO on this matter.

DB explained that voters often incorrectly believe that political parties are not entitled to use their data if they do not appear on the open register. AW suggested that this should be clarified at the point of collection of the data in the annual canvass. He added that changes in this area should be led by the ICO, government and EROs. AWi outlined plans for information audits of political parties in the New Year, referring to a letter the ICO had sent. NV asked how political parties can prepare for these audits. AWi responded that parties should demonstrate that they are on the path towards meeting the requirements of General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR).

DB raised concerns about how parties can demonstrate this if their plans are not in place yet. AWi said that this would be clarified as the audits are arranged. DB thanked the ICO for attending. Minutes of the last meeting and actions arising (ECPPP 04/09/2018) The minutes were agreed. Codes of Practice on election spending by candidates and political parties – consultation and next steps BP highlighted that the consultation on codes of practice on election spending by candidates and political parties formally closed on the day of the meeting and thanked the PPP for their contributions. He committed to returning to the PPP with the updated Codes in due course. AM noted his view that the draft Codes would require further amendment and added that campaigners on the ground would have important perspectives on the usefulness of the codes. NV mentioned that she would appreciate the inclusion of some examples of how the Codes would work. AM cautioned that examples included may become outdated as technology moves on, suggesting that they should be broad instead of specific. BP added that the Codes should have longevity as they will not be easily changed. BP reminded the panel that the Codes of Practice can only work to clarify the existing law, and cannot change the law. DB responded that the existing law is not fit for purpose, adding that when the Liberal Democrats met with the Commission he outlined real world scenarios where the Codes did not help. AM said that parties are facing an increase in overheads and would not want the Codes to add to the law or increase their regulatory burden. BP reassured him that the Cabinet Office are helping the Commission to ensure the Codes remain within the scope of the law and do not extend it. DB suggested that once the Commission has a further draft of the Codes a session could be held to stress test them. BP responded that the Commission would be open to that. Accessible information on parties, candidates and their policies for disabled voters KK gave an outline of the work the Commission is doing to help make elections more accessible to disabled people, referring to the Commission's findings in the report 'Elections for Everyone' and the subsequent work of the Cabinet Office of Elections Working Group. She highlighted the recommendations in the report which apply to political parties: to publish accessible manifestos in good time before the election and to hold hustings where voters can hear directly from the candidates. AW stated his support but highlighted that translating party manifestos into accessible versions has to be included in party spending returns. AW stated his support for an amendment to make the cost of translating election materials exempt from campaign spend and DB agreed. KE explained that the Commission has also made recommendations for changes to the law in this area. DB highlighted that parties have faced delays in translating their braille versions due to the limited capacity of the RNIB. GD stated that access to areas such as nursing homes can be difficult for parties to access during election times. DB and AW expressed similar experiences with gated retirement homes and care homes. AW added that clear guidance expressing what parties are allowed to do would be helpful. It was agreed that KK's contact details would be circulated with the PPP minutes to enable direct contact with party officers responsible for accessibility. Commission update report BP alerted the PPP that EW had sent them the Commission's response to the UK, Welsh and Scottish consultation on the annual canvass that morning. NV offered congratulations to BP on his appointment as Interim Chief Executive of the Commission. AM stated his concerns that the Commission was going beyond its remit in its review of party descriptions. BP responded that the review was only to remove or change party descriptions which mislead the voter and the Commission were conscious not to go too far. DB highlighted that party logos can identify a party on the ballot paper. AW questioned whether Labour's 'For the many not the few' slogan identified the party closely enough even though it does not refer to the party name. BP specified that it is important that voters know who they are voting for on the ballot paper and explained that the Commission is leading on this work in the absence of legislative reform, which had been requested of the government. GD stated that the Commission needs to be transparent about its decisions. BP responded that the party database is already online and searchable and that parties should specify if they have any issues going forward. Any other business BP referred to the South Thanet case currently in the courts. He added that if the PPP have concerns then a discussion could be scheduled. AW noted that it would be on the agenda for the PPP meeting with the Cabinet Office later that day. AM outlined political parties concerns about the case, specifically around how national campaign activity can impact on candidate spending limits. AW, SM and AM raised the contradictions in the law which make compliance challenging for agents. AM noted that agents are often in post on a volunteer basis. Actions Action Status KK contact details to be shared with the PPP Complete EW distributed with PPP minutes Related content Party registration decisions View our decisions on political party names, descriptions and emblems View current applications View the political party names, descriptions and emblems which we are currently considering as part of our assessment process Donations and loans Find out about donations and loans to a political party, individual or other organisation Registers of unincorporated associations Download and view the registers of unincorporated associations

Board minutes: 23 November 2022 | Electoral Commission Search

Board minutes: 23 November 2022 You are in the Electoral Commission Board section Home How we make decisions Electoral Commission Board On this page Declarations of interests Minutes Commission Board action tracker Chief Executive's update including, the performance report quarter two 2022/23 Forward Plan of Board business 2022/23 Supplementary Estimate for 2022/23 Returning Officer (RO) and Electoral Registration Officer (ERO) performance standards Draft Enforcement Policy review Revised Commission Board and Committee meeting dates for 2023/24 Update from the Audit and Risk Committee (ARC) Chair Update from the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee (RemCo) Chair Annual review of schedule of internal policies and codes Annual declarations of interests Risk appetite workshop First published: 28 January 2023 Last updated: 3 February 2023 Meeting summary Date: Wednesday 23 November 2022 Time: 9:30am to 1:00pm Location: Bunhill Row, London, and by Video conference Date of next scheduled meeting: Tuesday 17 January 2023 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting Present John Pullinger Chair Rob Vincent Sue Bruce Alex Attwood Sarah Chambers Stephen Gilbert Roseanna Cunningham [until item 14] Chris Ruane Katy Radford Elan Closs Stephens In attendance Shaun McNally, Chief Executive Kieran Rix, Director, Finance and Corporate Services Craig Westwood, Director, Communications, Policy and Research Ailsa Irvine, Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance Louise Edwards, Director, Regulation Binnie Goh, General Counsel Zena Khan, Senior Adviser, Governance Sal Naseem, Independent Adviser to the Commission Board on Equality, Diversity, and Inclusion (EDI) Matt Pledger, Senior Adviser, Governance, observing Helen Fleck, Senior Professionals and Systems Regulation Lawyer, [external], observing [items 1-14] Dan Adamson, Head of Monitoring and Performance [items 1 and 9] Josh Dunne, Senior Adviser, Registration [item 1] Freya Flavin, Senior Adviser, Guidance [item 1] Laura Tettmar-Saleh, Lawyer [item 1] Mel Davidson, Head of Support and Improvement [item 8] Lindsey Pack, Senior Adviser, Performance Standards [item 8] Phil Thompson, Head of Research [item 8] David Bailey, Head of Strategic Planning and Performance [item 15] Welcomes and apologies The Chair welcomed all to the meeting, in particular Chris Ruane, who attended his first Board meeting in his capacity as a full Board member. The Chair also welcomed Matt Pledger, Senior Adviser, Governance, who joined the Commission last week and would be observing the meeting. The Chair introduced Helen Fleck, Senior Professionals and Systems Regulation Lawyer at the General Pharmaceutical Council, who attended as an observer as part of promoting cross-regulator development and learning. The Board welcomed the team who joined the meeting to talk about the work on delivering the Elections Act campaigner provisions, noting that today sees the commencement of the first provisions of the Elections Act on the launch of the assets and liabilities report (ALR). This particular provision is one that the Commission had recommended. The Board thanked the team for their time and updates and welcomed further updates in the future. Declarations of interests The Board noted updated declarations of interests from various Commissioners as set out below: Sarah Chambers – Member of the Consumer Advisory Group of the Association of British Insurers Stephen Gilbert: Ceased as Chair of the Digital and Communication Select Committee as of 20 January 2022 Ceased as Member of the Select Committee on the Fraud Act and Digital as of October 2022 Rob Vincent - Member of two of Hospital Board Trusts Roseanna Cunningham – Member of the Scottish National Party (SNP) The Board noted that declarations would be included in the Commissioners' register of interests and published onto the Commission's external website in line with the Commissioners' Code of Conduct.

Minutes Resolved: That the minutes of the Board meeting on 18 October 2022 be agreed.

Commission Board action tracker Resolved: That the Board noted the progress against actions requested by the Board. Chief Executive's update including, the performance report quarter two 2022/23 The Chief Executive provided an oral update on operations and matters arising, advising on the various Parliamentary hearings held in recent weeks. It was noted that the Board meeting in March would be used as a strategic planning session for setting the forward agendas including agreeing priorities within the corporate plan. The Board noted that the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee (RemCo) met during the week and were presented with an update on the people strategy, noting key milestones for the organisation. RemCo advised that they would like to meet four times a year, in order to cover a range of business topics coming through for future years and as a way of tracking progress against the People Strategy It was noted that the Forward Plan of Board and Committee business for 2023/24 would be worked through for Board and Committee meetings from April 2023 onwards, considering our plans and utilising the agenda for upcoming meetings accordingly. Our teams are working on substantial projects right now and it would be important to be realistic. The Board noted an update on the scheduled Board meeting in February, around travel arrangements, logistics and looking at inviting local stakeholders such as representatives from local parties and community groups. Actions from the previous Board event in October would be circulated to Commissioners for information. The Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance provided an update covering contingency planning for a Northern Ireland Assembly election, secondary legislation on voter ID and new draft guidance on accessibility. The proposed timings for subsequent tranches of Elections Act changes, including those relating to overseas voters and online absent vote applications, were also highlighted, with the challenges these are likely to present for our implementation activities being noted. The Director, Communications, Policy and Research provided an update covering preparations for the new public awareness campaign on voter ID, ahead of its launch in January, and in relation to the UK Government's proposed strategy and policy statement, covering the ongoing consultation, process and preparations for the final agreed statement. The Director, Regulation provided an update outlining the latest position on the implementation of the campaigner provisions in the Elections Act, including the provisions for party registration and notional spending coming into force later this month, the consultation underway on the digital imprint regime, and a consultation due to open shortly on a code of practice for third party campaigners. There was also an update on innovations in regulatory support, and on digital projects. It was noted that an announcement had just come through during the meeting, on the Judgement from the Supreme Court case on whether a proposed Scottish Independence Referendum Bill related to reserved matters. A note on this judgement would be circulated to Commissioners following this meeting. The Board received and noted the quarterly finance and performance report quarter two 2022/23. Resolved: That the Board noted the oral updates on operations and matters arising. Resolved: That the Board noted the quarterly finance and performance report quarter two 2022/23. Forward Plan of Board business 2022/23 Resolved: That the Board noted the report. Supplementary Estimate for 2022/23 The Director, Finance and Corporate Services introduced the report advising the Board on whether to submit a Supplementary Estimate to the Speaker's Committee. It was noted that supplementary estimates had been submitted to the Scottish Parliament and Senedd Cymru, to adjust contributions for pay awards and campaigns expenditure. Resolved: That the Board agreed the Accounting Officer's recommendation not to submit a Supplementary Estimate for the UK Parliament. Resolved: That the Board agreed with the virement of funding from Event to Elections Act with the final amount to be determined at year-end by the Accounting Officer. Returning Officer (RO) and Electoral Registration Officer (ERO) performance standards The Director, Electoral Administration and Guidance introduced the report setting out new performance standards for Returning Officers (ROs) and updated standards for Electoral Registration Officers (EROs), which had been discussed previously with the Board in May and widely consulted on subsequent to that. It was noted that the consultation process had been positive and received widespread support for the proposed approach, with broad agreement that the new frameworks will provide a robust basis for the delivery of well-run elections covering the range of RO and ERO functions, support the effective and consistent implementation of legislative changes, and enable transparent reporting on the delivery of elections at a local level and across Great Britain. The different legislative position in Northern Ireland was also noted, with no equivalent power existing for setting, monitoring and reporting on standards. The Board discussed ensuring we take opportunities to highlight and celebrate best practice and to engage Parliamentarians and support them to use the available data to challenge locally and help drive improvements. The Board also discussed the importance of measuring outputs, including levels of registration. The Board welcomed the report, thanking the team for the update. Resolved: That the Board agreed the new RO and updated ERO performance standards as detailed within the report, to enable them to be laid before the UK, Scottish and Welsh Parliaments in December 2022. Draft Enforcement Policy review The Director, Regulation introduced the report, advising the Board on the Commission's enforcement policy, which is periodically reviewed. Resolved: That the Board agreed areas of the policy proposed to amend or expand, noting that a statutory public consultation would follow early in 2023, with formal approval from the Board on the new policy. Resolved: That the Board agreed to delegate agreement of the final policy subject to the above, to two or three Commissioners. Revised Commission Board and Committee meeting dates for 2023/24 Resolved: That the Board agreed the revised Commission Board and Committee meeting dates for 2023/24, incorporating an extra meeting of the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee into their annual meeting cycle. Update from the Audit and Risk Committee (ARC) Chair The Chair of the Audit and Risk Committee updated the Board on the work of the Committee at its meeting in September. The draft minutes of the meeting would be circulated to members of the Commission Board separately. Update from the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee (RemCo) Chair The Chair of the Remuneration and Human Resources Committee updated the Board on the work of the Committee at its meetings in July and November. The Board noted that progress had been made in relation to the people strategy and the Committee would now be meeting four times a year in order to fulfil its remit. Annual review of schedule of internal policies and codes Resolved: That the Board noted the annual review of schedule of internal policies and codes. Annual declarations of interests Resolved: That the Board noted the annual declarations of interests for Commissioners, Executive Team and the Independent Advisers to the Audit and Risk Committee and the Commission Board. Risk appetite workshop The Chair of the Audit and Risk Committee and the Independent Adviser to this Committee, chaired a session on risk appetite, looking at a revised version of the Commission's strategic risks. The Board discussed and provided a steer as to its risk appetite in relation to each of the areas outlined in the paper. Resolved: That the Board agreed for a risk register template to be developed, demonstrating the residual risk scores as agreed, and brought back to a future Board meeting.

Parliamentary Parties Panel minutes: 5 June 2018 | Electoral Commission Search
Parliamentary Parties Panel minutes: 5 June 2018 You are in the Party panels section Home How we make decisions Party panels On this page Minutes of the last meeting and actions arising pilots and evaluation May 2018 local elections public awareness campaigns and Tower Hamlets count CSPL review – intimidation of candidates Donation checking for bequests Commission update report Any other business Actions First published: 5 June 2018 Last updated: 2 September 2019 Who was at the meeting Who was at the meeting Scottish National Party: Scott Martin (SM), Chair of meeting Conservative Party: Alan Mabbutt (AM) Andrew Stedman (AS) Labour: Monique Shockness (MS) Liberal Democrats: David Allworthy (DA) Darren Briddock (DB) Natalia Villazan (NV) The Electoral Commission: Claire Bassett, Chief Executive (CB) Craig Westwood, Director of Communications & Research (CW) Bob Posner, Director of Political Finance and Regulation & Legal Counsel (BP) Carol Sweetenham, Guidance and Strategy Leader (CS) Niki Nixon, Head of External Communications (NN) Minutes of the last meeting and actions arising There were further questions on the Codes of Practice, as covered in the minutes from the previous meeting. DB asked for clarity on spending when a snap election is called. SM raised questions about spending limits. CB explained that any decision on spending limits would be for the UK Government to take. AM raised concerns in relation to a current legal action and the impact on Commission guidance. CB reminded the meeting that the case was subject to reporting restrictions and that it was therefore not appropriate to discuss it. BP offered to pick up the issue separately if necessary. SM asked if there was an update on the integrity roundtables. CB stated that the next roundtable will take place in November/December and that the panel's feedback on the changes to the last roundtables will be considered. SM pressed the Commission on the feasibility of sharing spending returns in PDF format, as had been done up until 2010. BP replied that the Commission has investigated this but would not be taking this forward. pilots and evaluation CW outlined that the Commission has a statutory duty to evaluate the pilots. A briefing paper on the evaluation criteria was shared with parliamentarians before the pilots took place and many were invited to attend a briefing meeting. As part of the evaluation, interviews will be carried out with polling station staff, candidates and organisations representing the interests of specific demographic groups (such as Stonewall and Age UK) about evidence of their experiences of the pilots. The Commission intends to publish the evaluation before summer recess. CW stressed that the Commission is keen to hear from parties about their experience of the pilots, particularly in terms of candidates in the relevant areas. DA noted that the Liberal Democrats are still opposed to the concept of voter ID and will remain so. GW asked if the Commission will be sharing the evaluation findings with the Welsh government to ensure there is coordination. CB confirmed that the report would be shared. DB requested that the voter ID evaluation be brought to the next meeting in September. May 2018 local elections public awareness campaigns and Tower Hamlets count CW talked through the outcome of the Commission's registration campaign for the local elections, which exceeded its registration applications target by 26%. Initial anecdotal evidence suggests many of these applications are new registrations, though the Commission awaits exact numbers. CW ran through the performance of the "Your vote is yours alone" campaign, used to raise awareness of electoral fraud during the local elections. The campaign, developed with the support of local authorities and in partnership with Crimestoppers, was widely used by local authorities; CW noted that Tower Hamlets had made particularly active use of the resources available to raise awareness. The media coverage of the campaign was of a positive sentiment.

Crimestoppers is doing its own evaluation of the campaign, focusing on calls received and engagement with digital advertising. AS raised the report he received from Cllr Peter Golds on irregularities during the local elections in Tower Hamlets. Cllr Golds reported that he was unaware that Electoral Commission representatives were present at the count to whom he could make representations. Cllr Golds' report also raised concerns about the location of polling stations. AS stated that the report quoted other stakeholders who shared some of Cllr Golds' concerns. CB noted that four Commission representatives were present at the Tower Hamlets count, herself included. While CB noted that the count was slow, she did not think this should be criticised in the circumstances. On the matter of polling station locations, CB noted that the Returning Officer (RO) for Tower Hamlets had gone above and beyond, at considerable expense, to accommodate a new location when concerns were raised about one of the polling stations. CB visited a number of polling stations in Tower Hamlets on the day and was pleased to see actively engaged polling station staff and police. A lot of thought went into policing on the day; annual leave was cancelled, police officers with specialist language skills were deployed; and there was at least one uniformed police officer in every polling station. CB confirmed that Cllr Golds' report would be considered by both the Commission and the RO. However she stated that some assertions had not been fully evidenced and that it was important not to undermine public confidence unnecessarily. AS noted that the 2018 elections were one of the better run elections in the borough. DA raised concerns about incorrect postal vote forms in Haringey. CB confirmed the Commission was aware and that the issue was rectified quickly. It was noted that printing errors on postal votes pose a recurring challenge. CB said this may be linked to the fact that there are fewer printing suppliers, coupled with a high number of electoral events in recent years. The Commission has raised this issue, as has the AEA. Reduced resources for local authorities also pose a challenge. Experienced electoral staff are leaving the profession and it is increasingly difficult to replace them. CB noted this is often discussed at the advisory board. It was confirmed that the Commission still uses a traffic light rating system for local authorities. In the run up to the May polls, any authority rated red was met face-to-face by a Commission representative, while those rated amber and green were supported by phone or in person. This level of engagement has led to a reduced number of authorities rated as red. DB raised the issue of Harborough Council, reporting that it is declining to publish the recent election results, citing Commission advice. CB said that this would be followed up.

CSPL review – intimidation of candidates BP stated that the Cabinet Office is looking at the offence of intimidation. The current legislation works in so far as some prosecutions are taking place, however a review of the offences is welcome. CSPL has said that political parties should develop codes of conduct that cover intimidation. It was agreed that the topic would stay on the agenda to be revisited and be raised with Cabinet Office later in the meeting.

Donation checking for bequests AS expressed disappointment that parties cannot easily check bequests against the register as EROs don't have a power to release old registers to them. BP said the Commission agrees with this concern. The Commission guidance directs parties to other sources such as the British Library. DB confirmed that the register held by the British Library cannot be copied or photographed which is problematic and that the register is not updated monthly. AS has written to Chloe Smith about this, he believes access to the register should be enabled by amending the regulations. BP indicated that the Commission would likely support access changes and asked AS to report back on the Minister's response.

Commission update report CS thanked panel members for attending the modern guidance user group and said there would be a follow up meeting in October. A new contractor has been appointed to redevelop the corporate website and an intro meeting will be arranged shortly. Prototypes of the new-style guidance will be developed over summer, rewriting of the guidance will begin in September and the first tranche of rewritten guidance should be available next spring after the May polls. SM requested that in addition to updating the format of the guidance, the content also be reviewed, for example guidance on imprints. DB requested that the relevant item of law be added to the guidance for ease of reference. CS confirmed that updates would largely affect format, rather than content, but that a content "spring clean" would take place as part of the rewriting. It was planned that legal references should be included. A contractor is now in place for the delivery of the new PFR system. CS would like to introduce the panel to the contractor in the next few weeks and share progress. BP added that a key success measure for this project is the satisfaction of the panel members as end users of the system. It was agreed that a dedicated meeting would be set up to review the progress of the PFR system and that this would be held the day immediately before or after the next PPP meeting for ease. BP reminded the panel that a review of party descriptions will be carried out.

Currently, new party applications are subject to tight rules around the party descriptor, which must sufficiently identify the party for the voter to know it is of that party. Otherwise it is not a description of the party name. The review of pre-existing registered party descriptions would be commencing soon. It was confirmed that this did not require a change to legislation as this falls with the Commission's role of maintaining the register. SM asked if guidance on statements of accounts would appear soon. DB stated that if the guidance on this changes, treasurers need to be notified by January. BP confirmed that the Commission is looking at this and it is a live project, however draft regulations are not imminent. Any other business NV asked if there is a timeframe to link the Commission's work to Brexit. CB confirmed this is something the Commission is already working on but that most decisions on this are for the Cabinet Office. Actions Action Owner Status evaluation to be brought to the next meeting in September. CW Complete Report back on access to the register for the purpose of checking bequests. AS AS to update on Minister's response Set up meeting to demo progress of PFR system, to immediately follow or precede the next PPP meeting. CS Complete CS will contact panel members to set up meeting. Report back on Harborough Council's decision not to publish recent election results. CB Complete Published on website Related content Our Commissioners Donations and loans Find out about donations and loans to a political party, individual or other organisation Our Executive Team Meet our Executive Team, and find out more about them Donations accepted View data about donations accepted by parties and campaigners

Better detection and management of duplicate registration applications | Electoral Commission Search Better detection and management of duplicate registration applications You are in the Modernising electoral registration: feasibility studies section Home A modern electoral register

Modernising electoral registration: feasibility studies First published: 26 July 2019 Last updated: 8 June 2021 Summary We identified two main ways in which duplicates could be identified and managed through the development of a “look up” tool. “Voter-focused” approaches would take the form of an online “look up” facility for electors to check whether they were already registered. They could be local authority devised solutions, or more centralised (national or UK-wide) lookup tools. “ERO-focused” approaches would involve either developing systems to allow EROs to identify and manage duplicates within their respective local EMS systems, or through a more centralised process enabling the identification and management of duplicates across multiple registers.

Summary The key to all solutions is the creation of a unique identifier for each elector. This would enable the identification of duplicates either within local registers, or across registers, depending on the particular solution implemented. Unique identifier as prerequisite for managing duplicate records The key to identifying duplicate records in one register, as well as across multiple registers, is a unique identifier. Although it would seem to be a simple solution, implementing a unique identifier per elector across the 372 registers would require several issues to be addressed first.

Solutions We identified two main ways in which duplicate registration applications might be better identified and managed within the electoral registration system:

- “Voter-focused” approaches These would take the form of an online “look up” facility for electors to check whether they were already registered.
- “ERO-focused” approaches These would involve either developing systems to allow EROs to identify and manage duplicates within their respective EMS systems, without altering the current system of decentralised, local authority-based registers (in Great Britain), or moving towards more centralised registers allowing EROs to identify and manage duplicates across multiple registers.

Voter-focused solutions Local lookup tool Under this scenario, each local authority would have its own lookup function that citizens could use to check if they were registered to vote within the local authority, obtaining access through their local authority online account.

National lookup tool Each nation (England, Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales) would have its own lookup tool accessible from a central location, e.g. the Register to Vote website. The lookup tool could be built into the electoral registration process. The system would not allow a citizen to continue with a registration application if it detected that the elector was already registered at the address provided. Alternatively, it could be a stand-alone tool that a citizen could use to check whether they were registered, based on information provided.

UK-wide lookup tool A single lookup tool would be developed for citizens to check if they were registered to vote. It would be accessible from a central location, e.g. the Register to Vote website and linked to all registers across the UK. This model could be integrated into the current electoral registration process and automatically detect instances where citizens were already registered.

ERO-focused solutions Decentralised registers with unique identifiers EMS systems would provide the tools to identify duplicates within a single, local register, facilitated by the allocation of unique identifiers.

Single view of all registers with unique identifiers Under this scenario EROs would continue to maintain separate registers, but be able to view (read-only) all entries on all 372 registers. This would enable the comparison of all registers to identify possible duplicates.

Four national registers with unique identifiers Northern Ireland already has a single national register and the Welsh Government is considering this as an option for Wales. National registers would also be created for England and Scotland, with national keepers of the registers assigned. Duplicates could be identified and managed across multiple registers within each nation. Single, UK wide register with unique identifiers This would require restructuring the electoral registration process so that there is one UK-wide register, rather than 372 separate registers. This would enable the identification of duplicates across all UK registers. It could also facilitate a UK-wide lookup function. A keeper of the register would need to be designated. Related content Reforming electoral law Find out about electoral law and the changes we want to see A modern electoral register Find out about the changes we want to see to the electoral registration system in the UK Transparent digital campaigning Find out about digital campaigning and the changes we want to see of elections Find out about the accessibility of elections and the changes we want to see

Committee on Standards in Public Life review of electoral regulation: Response to consultation | Electoral Commission Search Committee on Standards in Public Life review of electoral regulation: Response to consultation You are in the Our responses to consultations section Home Our responses to consultations On this page Overview Rationalising the current regulatory framework Improving regulation and enforcement of PPERA Improving regulation and enforcement of the RPA First published: 31 July 2020 Last updated: 3 August 2020 Overview of response This response sets out our views on the Committee on Standards in Public Life's review into electoral regulation. Overview The Electoral Commission is the independent statutory body which oversees elections and referendums and has regulated political finance in the UK since 2000. . We welcome this review, which provides an important opportunity to learn from the experiences of campaigners, the police, prosecutors and the Commission, and identify recommendations to improve regulation of the UK's political finance laws. The current regulatory framework broadly works well to support public confidence in the integrity of elections and referendums in the UK. There are generally high levels of compliance with the law, and the framework has been updated over time. There is still room for significant improvement, however. This response sets out our suggested priorities for reform in three main areas: Important recommendations to modernise electoral law have already been made in government-commissioned reports, by parliamentary select committees and by the Commission. Accordingly there are opportunities for governments to achieve a more transparent, fair and sustainable regime that is clearer and more consistent for different campaigners, to support the democratic system across the UK. The current dual jurisdiction for the party and campaigner regime offences between the Commission and the police has created some uncertainties for those we regulate, and for voters. This can be readily addressed by the police and the Commission, with the CPS, bringing more transparency and clarity on which body will lead on the different prosecutorial aspects of the offences regime. This would be a normal and common step for regulation and retain the most serious matters still being taken before the courts by the police and the CPS. The civil fines system administered by the Commission has supported compliance by parties and campaigners and has improved transparency of political finance. A similar regime across election finance laws for candidates and agents would be fairer to them and can equally be administered by the Commission. Rationalising the current regulatory framework This section responds to the Committee's questions 1, 4, 5 and 6 Question 1: What values do you think should underpin the regulation of donations and loans, and campaign expenditure by candidates, political parties and non-party campaigners in the UK, and why? Such values may include, though are not limited to, concepts such as transparency, fairness and accountability. Political finance regulation in the UK is underpinned by transparency. The law requires timely and accurate reporting of information about campaigner funding and spending, to give voters confidence that funding comes from permissible sources and spending does not exceed the limits agreed by Parliament. We publish this information and use it to identify whether we need to take enforcement action against those who may have broken the law. There is still scope to improve transparency about the money that is spent on campaigning by political parties, candidates and other campaigners, particularly in relation to digital campaign activity. The UK regime currently reflects two important principles less effectively: proportionality and enforceability. Political finance laws should be easy to understand and apply without imposing unnecessary bureaucracy on those involved. Enforcement tools should also be proportionate and unambiguous, with clear and effective sanctions for any breaches. Our response explains how and why this should be improved. The law and the approach to regulation should also promote sustainability and fairness for campaigners. It needs to be financially viable, so that parties can function effectively in government or in opposition, and so that voters can continue to receive relevant information and arguments from a broad range of perspectives. Future reforms should recognise the different types of campaigners and should not unduly restrict particular candidates, political parties or other campaigners from participating.

Question 4: Are there aspects of the Electoral Commission's role which detract from its function as a regulator of election finance?

The Commission has two main statutory roles: overseeing the delivery of elections and electoral registration (and directly delivering most UK referendums); and regulating political finance. This dual role enhances our institutional knowledge, and how we act as a regulator. We are able to regulate political finance more effectively because of our wider knowledge and experience of how elections are run. The UK's model is admired internationally and reflected in similar ways in certain countries, including Australia and Canada for example, as best fits their particular needs. We also have a responsibility to advise the UK's governments and legislatures on improvements to the system, and importantly our dual role enables us to do this effectively.

Question 5: Are there aspects of the rules which affect or detract from effective regulation of election finance? The rules for regulating candidate spending and donations in the Representation of the People Act 1983 (RPA) are little changed from the late nineteenth century. The additional regime established by the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000 (PPERA) regulates the funding and spending of political parties and others, and has broadly worked well to improve transparency of political finance in the UK. Rationalising these two separate legal frameworks, including considering the balance between different spending limits and controls, would achieve a regime that is clearer and more consistent for different campaigners. Based on our experience of monitoring compliance and enforcing the PPERA rules since 2000, we have identified a number of areas where the framework could be improved. This includes recommendations from a wide-ranging regulatory review that we published in 2013, and a focused review of digital campaign regulation in 2018. Other reviews have also identified significant areas for improvement, including Lord Hodgson's third party election campaigning review in 2016, the Law Commissions' recent review of electoral law and Parliamentary select committee reports on disinformation and 'fake news' and democracy and digital technologies. Our key recommendations are highlighted below in response to the Committee's questions.

Question 6: What are the Electoral Commission's strengths and weaknesses as a regulator of election finance? The fact that the UK has an independent Electoral Commission that is accountable to legislators in all three Parliaments of the UK is a significant strength. A genuinely independent regulator is an essential element to ensure confidence in the integrity of the political finance regime. We have been accountable to the Speaker's Committee of the UK Parliament since 2000, and we are now also becoming accountable to the Scottish Parliament and the Senedd Cymru/Welsh Parliament. The Northern Ireland Assembly does not have legislative responsibility for political finance regulation. Another strength is our decision to approach regulation by working to ensure compliance before an electoral event rather than having to take enforcement action afterwards. Our guidance on the law is welcomed by candidates and agents as clear and helpful, parties rely on it, and its value and authority has also been recognised by the courts. We are currently developing new ways of supporting regulated entities, which we explain below. We have established our role as a specialist expert regulator, and also developed strong relationships with other regulators that work across the wider area of democracy and public life. We also use our expertise to work constructively with Ministers and civil servants from all of the UK's governments to ensure their policy priorities are effective and workable. The Commission has 20 years' worth of knowledge and experience of election law and regulating the UK's political finance regime. We have ten years' experience of investigating and applying civil sanctions to offences under that regime. But the regime is still being tested, by digital and other new campaign techniques, by cases brought before the courts, and by the growing consequences of the historic development, outlined above and expanded below, of multiple regimes and dual regulatory responsibilities. Our regulated community generally has a culture of compliance, and works with us to find a way through these challenges. But with complex and out of date rules, not all those regulated welcome or accept the way the regime works or our application of it, and translate that view into criticism of us as the regulator. Improving regulation and enforcement of PPERA This section responds to the Committee's questions 2, 3, 7, 8 and 9 Question 2: Does the Electoral Commission have the powers it needs to fulfil its role as a regulator of election finance under PPERA? It would be helpful if responses would consider the Commission's role in a) monitoring and b) investigating those it regulates. There are several areas where improved powers would help the Commission to ensure compliance with political finance law. Our previous reviews of the regulatory framework identified a range of recommendations, and we highlight two priority areas below. We would welcome the ability to resolve regulatory matters swiftly and effectively outside a formal investigation where one is not warranted. If we were able to obtain information outside a formal investigation (from social media companies or other suppliers to campaigners, for example), we could assess allegations more quickly and determine whether an investigation is in fact necessary. We would also welcome explicit powers to share information with the police or other regulators such as the Information Commissioner, for example. We currently rely on general powers and data protection law which makes working with partner agencies complex and, at times, slow. These improvements would help the Commission to respond more quickly and proportionately when dealing with allegations. This would be better for anyone who could be subject to investigation, for anyone making an allegation, and for the wider public in terms of reaching swift conclusions and providing timely reassurances. Question 3: What could the Electoral Commission do differently to allow it to perform its role as a regulator of election finance more effectively? We believe that a successful regulator should be able to rely more heavily on encouraging compliance to prevent wrong-doing than on taking enforcement action after wrong-doing has occurred. We support those who wish to comply, but there should be effective deterrent sanctions for those who do not. Our current corporate plan, which was approved by the UK Parliament Speaker's Committee earlier this year, sets out two new actions to further develop our approach. First, we are investing in supporting compliance through a user-friendly online tool and a more responsive regulatory service. We will bring the high quality advice and guidance we already produce for parties, candidates and campaigners under a new strategy that offers new and impactful tools to support compliance with the law. Second, to deter people from deliberately committing offences, and to make sure we can respond proportionately if they do, we will build the capacity to prosecute lower order suspected offences, while more serious offences will still be a matter for the police. We say more on this below. Question 7: Are the Electoral Commission's civil sanctions powers to fine up to £20,000 adequate? The current maximum fine that has been available since 2009 as a civil penalty for offences under PPERA is not proportionate for the most serious instances. A maximum fine of £20,000 is unlikely to act as a deterrent for inadequate compliance by campaigners dealing with donations and spending which can involve tens of millions of pounds. The maximum fine should be raised to give greater flexibility to respond proportionately to the range of offences we regulate. We only impose the maximum fine in serious cases that would impact on public confidence, such as a breach of spending limit or omissions of tens or hundreds of thousands of pounds of spending from a campaigner's report. But a maximum £20,000 fine is not a proportionate deterrent for serious offences, and does not incentivise all campaigners to invest in robust compliance procedures. Recent research indicates that the public believe that fines for breaking political finance laws are too lenient, given the amount of money that could be spent on campaigning. More than half of the respondents (52%) in our regular tracking research carried out in early 2020 said that a £20,000 maximum fine was not high enough. Only 27% felt that it was about the right amount. The maximum fine should be set at a credible level for all elections and referendums across the UK, as has been recommended by several Parliamentary select committees. The Scottish Parliament recently raised the maximum fine to £500,000 for Scottish referendums, and we believe this would be a reasonable benchmark for the maximum fine in relation to the other parts of the UK's political finance regulations.

Question 8: Does the Commission's civil sanctions regime interact with the police criminal prosecution regime to form an effective and coherent system for deterring and punishing breaches of election finance laws? The civil sanctions regime works well, but it doesn't interact with the criminal prosecution regime. In practice the two regimes function separately. The civil sanctions regime is only in place for certain legal requirements and offences that apply to political parties, non-party campaigners and referendum campaigners. The police and criminal prosecution regime can be used for all election offences, and is the only enforcement option for offences involving deliberate dishonesty. This means it is a shared jurisdiction system between the Commission and the police, working with the existing prosecution authorities: the Crown Prosecution Service (CPS) in England and Wales; the Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Service in Scotland; and the Public Prosecution Service in Northern Ireland.

We can ask the police to consider evidence we hold, or any police force can decide to investigate of its own accord most often following complaint by anyone to them. We maintain good working relationships with the main police bodies, the National Police Chiefs' Council (NPCC), the Metropolitan Police Service and the prosecution authorities. We also work with the NPCC and the City of London Police to provide support and training to a network of police specialists in election crimes. In practice, however, the overall system is not coherent and does not provide an effective deterrent. For offences which involve intent or recklessness, the only option is police investigation and then criminal prosecution. This means there is still an 'enforcement gap' for cases which are intentional but which are not, from a police perspective, in the public interest to take forward. Police forces' pressured resources are understandably commonly prioritised to both more traditional police work and importantly serious victim-based crimes. The PPERA regime includes over 100 offences. To our knowledge, no prosecutions have been brought forward by the police or the CPS during the twenty years since 2000. Voters and campaigners should be able to know that non-compliance will be identified and dealt with proportionately and swiftly. The absence of any criminal prosecutions undermines the ability to deter or punish offences.

Question 9: In what circumstances would the regulatory regime be strengthened by the Commission bringing prosecutions before the courts for potential offences under election finance laws? The UK Parliament gave the Commission powers to investigate breaches of PPERA in 2009 via the Political Parties and Elections Act.

The civil sanctions regime was created in 2010 as an alternative to criminal prosecution. Ten years on, we are building a prosecution function to address a remaining gap between the civil sanctions regime and the current criminal investigation and prosecution regime of the police. We will consult on the factors we would consider when deciding whether to prosecute, and it will be a limited aspect of our future regulatory work. We will continue to use civil sanctions to deal with the vast majority of the offences that we find, and that were not reckless or deliberate. Putting prosecutions before the court would enable us to deal with lower complexity offences that involve recklessness or deliberate dishonesty and cannot be subject to the civil sanctions regime. For example, where a campaigner knowingly does not comply with an order for disclosure, or where repeated failures which have been dealt with using civil sanctions have not led to compliance. These cases would typically be brought before a magistrate's court rather than at crown court level. It is normal and common for specialist regulators to bring prosecutions. They bring expertise to the subject matter; and having the power to prosecute enables the regulator to demonstrate the consequences of non-compliance. It also relieves police and public prosecutors of the burden of bringing offences to court which do not necessarily have identifiable victims and which understandably may not be a priority for them. Where more significant or complex criminal offences are suspected, prosecutions will rightly continue to be a matter for the police and the prosecution authorities.

Improving regulation and enforcement of the RPA Question 10: Should the Electoral Commission's regulatory powers be expanded to include the enforcement of candidate finance laws? Expanding our role to include enforcement of candidate finance laws would bring more proportionate enforcement to this half of the political finance system, with benefits for campaigners, voters and public confidence. We have seen that the prospect of a swift civil fine has incentivised compliance by parties and campaigners and been a success in delivering transparency of political finance since 2010. The current rules for candidates and agents do not offer any flexibility or any alternative from police investigation and criminal prosecution. Criminal investigation is a significant step and is disproportionate for many breaches such as late delivery of a spending return or minor missing items. This can be described as an 'enforcement gap' for administrative or careless breaches, and introducing a civil sanctions regime for candidates would address that gap. Police investigation and criminal prosecution would still be the only route for dealing with serious breaches with intent to break the rules. Criminal prosecutions for serious breaches committed by candidates and agents would be out of scope for the Commission, with these powers reserved to the Director of Public Prosecutions. If the Commission had powers to investigate both halves of the party and candidate regime, we could provide more joined-up oversight over the co-existing regimes in the RPA and PPERA. We could look in more detail at whether campaigners correctly allocate spending according to the key test of whose electoral success is being promoted, and ensure that spending limits serve their purpose. The police could focus on the most serious breaches that involve intent to break the law, and we could ensure that there is a proportionate deterrent for all other breaches. The overall result would be a simpler system to explain to voters and campaigners. It would still be a shared jurisdiction system between the regulator and the police, but the factors that determine who has the power or responsibility to address allegations would be much clearer than at present.

Results and turnout at the May 2017 Wales local elections | Electoral Commission

Search

Results and turnout at the May 2017 Wales local elections

You are in the Wales local council elections section Home Wales local council elections On this page Introduction Electorate Turnout Rejected ballot papers Postal voting Rejected postal ballots Proxies and waivers First published: 5 July 2019 Last updated: 25 July 2022 Download You can download the: full dataset as a XLS full dataset as a CSV (zip file) Introduction This report provides analysis on the participation and administration of the local government elections in Wales, held on 4 May 2017. For this, data was collected from Returning Officers and Electoral Registration Officers in Wales. This comprised the Form K 'Statement as to Postal Ballot Papers' and an additional data form, which included data relating to electoral registration, turnout, absent voting and rejected ballots. Local elections were scheduled in 852 wards across all 22 local authority areas in Wales. Of the 1,254 seats available, 1,161 were contested and 92 candidates were returned unopposed. Elections were postponed in two wards and one seat in Powys had no candidates standing for election. 1 Electorate 2.3 million Turnout Ballot box: 42.0% (895,943 votes) Postal vote: 69.7% In-person: 36.3% Rejected ballots Ballots at the count: 0.5% Postal votes: 3.2% Proxies appointed 2,873 (0.1% of the electorate) 167 emergency proxies Electorate The elections gave over 2.1 million registered electors the opportunity to vote. 2 Since December 2016, this is an increase in electorate size of 1.0% across Wales, ranging from an increase of 4.2% in Flintshire to a decrease of 3.2% in Wrexham. More than 20,000 electors (0.94% of the electorate in contested wards) were added to the electoral register during the weeks leading up to the election. As a proportion of the electorate, this was highest in Gwynedd, where additions represented 2.6% of the electorate in contested wards, and lowest in Rhondda Cyon Taf, where additions represented 0.3% of the electorate in contested wards. A total of 25,587 applications to register were received in the weeks leading up to the election. 3 Almost a quarter of these (22.5%) were recorded as duplicates. At a local authority level, duplicates were reportedly as high as 43% in Denbighshire and 41.4% in Swansea. In addition, 31,003 individuals applied to register to vote after the registration deadline. This is likely to be attributable to the announcement of the general election, which came after the deadline for registration for the council elections. Based on data from 14 local authorities, 187 individuals were recorded as trying to vote on election day despite not being registered. 4 Votes were cast at 2,254 polling stations as well as by post. Turnout The measure of turnout referred to in this report, 'ballot box turnout', includes all valid votes cast ('valid vote turnout') and votes rejected at the count. 'Total turnout' refers to valid votes cast, votes rejected at the count, and those rejected at the postal ballot verification stage before the count. Table 3.1 confirms that only a small fraction of voters try to vote but fail to do so successfully. Table 3.1: Turnout

Electorate	Valid vote turnout	Ballot box turnout	Total turnout	Difference	valid vote – total (pp)
2017	2.28 m	41.8%	42.0%	42.4%	0.6
2012/13	5.2.31 m	38.7%	38.9%	39.4%	0.7
2008	2.11 m	43.7%	44.0%	44.5%	0.8

Ballot box turnout was 42.0%, which is higher than the 38.9% turnout at the 2012/2013 local government elections in Wales but still lower than the 2008 elections. Turnout ranged from 36.3% in Caerphilly and Newport to 53.0% in Ceredigion, and increased across all local authorities with the exception of Anglesey. At a ward level, turnout ranged from 17.2% in Treforest (Rhondda Cynon Taff) to 69.6% in Bethel (Gwynedd). Table 3.2: Turnout 2012/2013 – 2017 Local authority

2012/13	2017	Change (pp)
Blaenau Gwent	37.7%	40.0%
2.3 Bridgend	34.4%	39.9%
5.5 Caerphilly	36.0%	36.3%
0.3 Cardiff	38.0%	42.8%
4.8 Carmarthenshire	44.5%	46.8%

2.3 Ceredigion 46.8% 53.0% 6.2 Conwy 38.0% 41.5% 3.5 Denbighshire 39.1% 42.4% 3.3 Flintshire 36.9% 38.5% 1.6 Gwynedd 48.3% 52.1% 3.8 Isle of Anglesey 50.5% 45.9% -4.6 Merthyr Tydfil 37.3% 37.7% 0.4 Monmouthshire 38.1% 46.7% 8.6 Neath Port Talbot 39.4% 42.3% 2.9 Newport 33.9% 36.3% 2.4 Pembrokeshire 45.8% 47.5% 1.7 Powys 46.7% 47.2% 0.5 Rhondda Cynon Taf 36.1% 39.9% 3.9 Swansea 36.5% 38.1% 1.7 Torfaen 37.2% 37.5% 0.4 Vale of Glamorgan 39.3% 46.1% 6.8 Wrexham 34.2% 40.0% 5.9 Rejected ballot papers The proportion of ballot papers rejected at the count was 0.5%. This compares with 0.6% in the 2012/2013 local government elections. At a local authority level, this ranged from 0.2% in Newport to 0.8% in Neath Port Talbot. At a ward level, two wards rejected more than 3% of ballots at the count and 52 wards rejected none. The vast majority of ballots (70.6%) were rejected for reasons of being unmarked or wholly void for uncertainty. More than a quarter (26.5%) were rejected due to voting for more than one candidate. Postal voting The total number of postal votes issued for these elections was 387,909, representing 18.2% of all electors with a contested election in their ward. This compares with 17.4% at the 2012/2013 elections. At a ward level, this ranged from 6.3% in Cathays (Cardiff) and Treforest (Rhondda Cynon Taff) to 31.5% in Llandrindod East/Llandrindod West (Powys). The proportion of postal voters returning their ballot papers always exceeds the turnout among 'in person' voters. This year, 69.7% postal electors used their postal vote compared with 36.3% who turned up to vote in person. Table 4.1: Postal vote turnout vs in-person turnout

Year	In-person	Postal
2017	69.7%	36.3%
2012/13	68.3%	33.3%
2008	71.4%	40.0%

Postal votes accounted for 29.2% of all votes included at the count. This compares with 29.3% in 2012/13 and 22.2% in 2008. Rejected postal ballots Postal voting packs require voters to provide their signature and date of birth. These identifiers are then matched against those provided at the time of application. If the signature or date of birth does not match, the postal vote is rejected and is not included at the count. Since 2014, Electoral Registration Officers (EROs) have been required to notify electors if their postal vote has been rejected. They can also request the elector to provide an up-to-date signature. Table 4.2: Rejected postal Year Rejected ballots as % of envelopes returned 2017 3.2% 2012/13 4.4% 2008 4.8% A total of 8,695 postal votes were rejected by Returning Officers across Wales. This represents a rejection rate of 3.2%, down from 4.4% in 2012/13 and 4.8% in 2008. The fall in the levels of rejected postal votes suggests that the new policy may be having a positive impact. The most common reason for postal vote rejection, accounting for 43.3% of rejected postal ballots, is mismatched information. In almost a third of cases of rejection (31.8%), voters returned their postal voting envelopes but failed to include either the ballot paper itself or the verification statement or both. Table 4.3: Reasons for postal vote statement rejection 2017 2012/13 Change (pp)

Reason	2017 (%)	2012/13 (%)	Change (pp)
Missing information	9.4%	5.2%	-4.3
Signature	9.6%	4.3%	-5.3
Date of birth	5.9%	15.7%	-9.8
Both	15.7%	15.4%	-0.3
Mismatched information	14.5%	19.1%	-4.6
Date of birth	7.1%	22.5%	-15.4
Both	15.4%	6.4%	-8.5
Missing forms	8.5%	2.1%	-6.4
Ballot paper	14.4%	13.4%	-0.9
PV statement	26.8%	17.4%	-9.4
Proxies and waivers	2.1%	0.9%	-1.2

The number of electors in Wales who appointed a proxy was 2,873 (0.1% of the electorate). This is consistent with 2012/13 and 2008. The number of emergency proxies issued was 167. This is more than five times higher than in 2012/13 when 30 emergency proxies were issued. A concession granted under the terms of the EAA 2006 was that postal electors who either had a disability, or were illiterate, or were unable to furnish a consistent signature could apply for a waiver to use their date of birth as their sole identifier. A total of 2,717 voters were granted such a waiver for this election, representing 0.7% of postal electors.

Appendices Appendix A There remain inconsistencies in the ways in which local authorities record and report information. We continue to notice differences in the coding of information by different electoral management software. For example, customers of one electoral management software supplier consistently report a higher proportion of 'mismatching' than others. Inconsistencies relating to the reasons for and total number of postal vote rejections on the Form K appear to result from the potential for differences in interpretation and treatment. For example, in the treatment of the numbers of covering envelopes and ballot papers returned, covering envelopes may be sent in without the A envelope or postal voting statement enclosed, while the missing document may or may not be sent in a separate covering envelope later, or multiple ballots may be returned in one envelope. When local authorities are contacted about such anomalies they are often unable to provide revised figures or clarify why the data were coded in that way. In practice, we use a calculation of field B6 minus field C18 as a surrogate for the total number of postal votes rejected regardless of whether or not it is the same as recorded in field C19. The different breakdown of reasons for rejection collected on the additional data form does not always match this B6 minus C18 calculation. However, the discrepancies seem less severe and the categories have the advantage of being embedded in software and of having greater 'common sense' meaning. It would seem sensible to consider replacing fields B15-17 on Form K with three other aggregated categories: rejections for mismatching; rejections for missing identifier information; rejections for absent documentation. As it is, field B15 is largely redundant given that almost all authorities now verify 100% of postal vote returns. There is no field that captures the number of postal voting statements received by the Returning Officer or at a polling station before the close of poll. In practice, we use field B6, 'Number of covering envelopes received by the Returning Officer or at a polling station before the close of poll' as a surrogate but we know that, as mentioned, electors can return multiple postal ballots in one envelope or return envelopes without any ballots.

Appendix B Form K: STATEMENT AS TO POSTAL BALLOT PAPERS LOCAL GOVERNMENT ELECTIONS

Issue of postal ballot papers 1. Total number of postal ballot papers issued under regulation 71 2. Total number of postal ballot papers issued under regulation 77 (spoilt and returned for cancellation), regulation 78 (lost or not received) and regulation 78A (cancelled due to change of address) 3. Total number of postal ballot papers cancelled under regulation 86A (where the first ballot paper was cancelled and retrieved) 4. Total number of postal ballot papers issued (1 to 3) 5. Total number of ballot papers cancelled under regulation 78A B (1). Receipt of and replacement postal ballot papers 6. Number of covering envelopes received by the Returning Officer or at a polling station before the close of poll (excluding any undelivered or returned under regulation 77(1) (spoilt), regulation 78(1) (lost) and regulation 86A (cancelled ballot papers) 7. Number of covering envelopes received by the returning officer after the close of poll, excluding any returned as undelivered 8. Number of postal ballot papers returned spoilt for cancellation in time for another ballot paper to be issued 9. Number of postal ballot papers identified as lost or not received in time for another ballot paper to be issued 10. Number of ballot papers cancelled and retrieved in time for another ballot paper to be issued 11. Number of postal ballot papers returned as spoilt too late for another ballot paper to be issued 12. Number of covering envelopes returned as undelivered (up to the 25th day after the date of poll) 13. Number of covering envelopes not received by the Returning Officer (by the 25th day after the date of poll) 14. Total numbers 6 to 13 (this should be the same as that in 4 above) B (2). Receipt of postal ballot papers – Personal Identifiers 15. Number of covering envelopes set aside for the verification of personal identifiers on postal voting statements 16. Number of postal voting statements subject to verification procedure rejected as not completed (excluding prior cancellations) 17. Number of postal voting statements rejected following verification procedures due to the personal identifiers on the postal voting statement not matching those in the personal identifiers record (excluding prior cancellations) C. Count of postal ballot papers 18. Number of ballot papers returned by postal voters which were included in the count of ballot papers 19. Number of cases in which a covering envelope or its contents were marked "Rejected" (cancellations under regulations 77, 78, 78A and 86A are not rejections and should be included in items 2, 3, 5, 8, 9 and 10 above) Additional data form 1) How many proxies were appointed for these elections? 2) How many emergency proxies were appointed for these elections? 3) How many waivers were granted for these elections? 4) How many postal votes were rejected for: a) Want of a signature b) Want of a date of birth c) Want of both d) Mismatched signature e) Mismatched DoB f) Both mismatched g) Ballot paper unreturned h) Postal voting statement unreturned 5) What was the total number of polling stations used? 6) How many covering envelopes were returned on polling day before 10pm? 7) How many covering envelopes were returned on the day after polling day before 10pm? 8) Total number of new electors added to the register after the publication of the revised register up to and including those added via the first interim notice of alteration 9) Total number of new electors added to the register via the second and final notices of alteration 10) Total number of applications to register received after the registration deadline. 11) Total number of applications received between the last date for applications to be included on the December 2016 revised register and the last date for applications for the first interim notice of alteration 12) Total number of duplicate applications received between the last date for applications to be included on the December 2016 revised register and the registration deadline for the first interim notice of alteration 13) Total number of applications received between the day after the last date for applications for the first interim notice of alteration and last date for applications for the final notice of alteration 14) Total number of duplicate applications received between the day after the last date for applications for the first notice of alteration and last date for applications for the final notice of alteration 15) How many people tried to vote on polling day and were found not to be registered? 1. The elections in the two wards that were postponed, Merthyr and Ceredigion, were held on 8 June 2017. The election in Powys was held on 22 June 2017.

■ Back to content at footnote 1 2. Excludes 144,598 in uncontested wards. ■ Back to content at footnote 2 3. Based on data from 21 local authorities. Merthyr Tydfil was unable to provide this information. ■ Back to content at footnote 3 4. Eight local authorities were unable to provide this information. ■ Back to content at footnote 4 5. In May 2012 there were local elections in 21 of the 22 local authorities in Wales. Elections for the Isle of Anglesey were deferred until May 2013. For this report, figures from the 2012 elections in Wales have been combined with the 2013 local elections in Anglesey. ■ Back to content at footnote 5 Related content Report: How the 2017 Welsh local elections were run Read our report about how the 2017 Welsh local elections were run Report on the May 2022 elections in Wales Read our report on the May 2022 elections in Wales. Report on the May 2021 elections in Wales Read our report about how the 2021 elections in Wales were run Past elections and referendums Read our reports and view data about past elections and referendums

You are in the Annual Report and Accounts 2022/23 section Home Our plans and priorities Annual Report and Accounts 2022/23 First published: 4 July 2023 Last updated: 27 September 2023 Use of our powers and sanctions between 1 April 2022 and 31 March 2023 We encourage those we regulate to comply with the law by providing support and guidance. However, where proportionate to do so, we take action when they do not follow the law. PPERA provides us with investigation powers, including the ability to: require information (through an investigation notice) from anyone where we suspect there has been a breach of the law or (through a disclosure notice) where we do not suspect an offence but require information in order to fulfil our functions require suspects or witnesses to attend for interview take action if people do not co-operate with our requirements in certain circumstances, enter premises (through an inspection warrant from a Justice of the Peace) We also have a range of sanctions, including: Fines ranging from £200 to £20,000 Compliance and restoration notices, by which we can require people to take particular actions to achieve compliance or rectify non-compliance Stop notices, by which we can require people to take a particular action or stop an intended action These sanctions apply to most, but not all, PPERA offences. There are some offences – generally those involving an element of deliberate dishonesty – for which we cannot issue fines, but we can notify the police or relevant public prosecutor. We are also able to consider ‘enforcement undertakings’ from those we regulate, where for example a party may report an offence voluntarily and propose actions it will take to put things right, avoiding the need for the party and us to go through potentially time-consuming investigations. Use of investigatory powers Use of investigatory powers We are required to report on our use of investigatory powers, specifically cases in which: we issued a disclosure or investigation notice premises were entered using an inspection warrant issued by a Justice of the Peace we applied to a court for an order for disclosure We are not required to include information where, in our opinion, to do so would or might be unlawful, or might adversely affect any current investigation or proceedings. We did not issue any disclosure or investigation notices during 2022/23. We did not use our powers to apply for an inspection warrant to enter premises or apply for any court orders for disclosure. Concluded investigations We concluded 34 investigations during 2022/23, compared with 42 in the previous year. We continued to regulate and take enforcement action where it was reasonable and in the public interest to do so. Our work to support parties and campaigners comply with electoral law, and an absence of significant regulated elections were all factors in this reduced number of cases. Use of civil sanctions We are required to report on our use of civil sanctions, specifically cases in which: a fixed monetary penalty or discretionary requirement was imposed or a stop notice served (other than cases in which the penalty, requirement or notice was overturned on appeal) liability for a fixed monetary penalty was paid before a notice imposing it was issued an enforcement undertaking was accepted 25 investigations led to considerations of sanctions, and we imposed 20 penalties, across seven cases. In total, £16,130 of sanctions were imposed. That figure includes one case involving two fixed penalties which were paid early so we did not have to issue notices to impose payments. This does not take account of 17 cases where we found an offence but decided not to impose a sanction. We take a proportionate approach and do not automatically impose a sanction where an offence has taken place. Details of all penalties imposed during 2022/23 are available on our website. No enforcement undertakings were offered to us during 2022/23. We did not serve any stop notices up to and including 31 March 2023. No appeals were made against decisions to impose civil sanctions. Navigation Previous Next Using our resources to support the delivery of our goals Northern Ireland annual report

Consultation: Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Strategy | Electoral Commission

Search

Consultation: Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Strategy

You are in the Our consultations section Home Our consultations On this page About the strategy How to respond to this consultation What the strategy covers Action plan Submit your feedback First published: 5 November 2021 Last updated: 5 November 2021 About the strategy We are in the process of drafting a new Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Strategy, and changing our approach to producing Equality Impact

Assessments. We have to meet a range of obligations to ensure we promote equality, diversity and inclusion, and our strategy explains what these are and how we comply with them. But equality, diversity and inclusion are not just matters of compliance, so our strategy also sets out our aspirations to go further than our obligations. We have built our strategy around the objectives of: ensuring that everyone who is eligible is able to participate in the electoral processes, whether as a voter, campaigner or candidate, by identifying barriers, making recommendations and working with others to remove them ensuring that we embed equality, diversity and inclusion in the delivery of all of our work, treating all our stakeholders and partners fairly and with respect, and being transparent in the decisions we make ensuring equality, diversity and inclusion for everyone here and that all our staff are treated fairly and with respect Our strategy covers the whole of the UK. We are accountable to the UK Parliament, the Scottish Parliament and the Senedd, and will be sharing this strategy with them. Different legislation applies in Northern Ireland, and this strategy includes how we will fulfil our duties as required under Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998. We are also changing our approach to producing Equality Impact Assessments. We have new guidance, a screening form, and an updated EIA template. These assessments are important, as they help us to assess the impact of proposed changes on different groups and ensure that we are promoting equality, diversity and inclusion. What we're consulting on We're consulting on our draft Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Strategy, and our new Equality Impact Assessment documents. We want to make sure that our strategy demonstrates our commitment to equality, diversity and inclusion, and that it clearly shows the actions we are going to take to meet our obligations and aspirations. Download the documents Equality, Diversion and Inclusion Strategy Download the Equality Impact Assessment documentation: Equality, Inclusion and Diversity EIA Guidance Equality, Diversity and Inclusion EIA Screening Equality, Diversity and Inclusion EIA template How to respond to this consultation How to respond to this consultation This consultation closed on 14 February 2022. We will consider the responses we received and publish our response soon. What the strategy covers Chapter 1: What we do, the electorate we serve and who we are In 'Chapter 1: What we do, the electorate we serve and who we are', we explain the role of the Commission in promoting and supporting democracy. We give an overview of the diversity of the society we serve: the electorate and of those campaigning and seeking office. And we talk about the diversity of our own workforce. Chapter 2: Our vision for a diverse Commission serving a diverse democracy In 'Chapter 2: Our vision for a diverse Commission serving a diverse democracy', we explain the importance of diversity to the democratic agenda. We know there is more to do. So we have set ourselves three objectives: to ensure that everyone who is eligible is able to participate in the democratic process - whether as a voter, a campaigner or by standing for office – by identifying barriers, making recommendations and working with others to remove them to ensure that we embed equality, diversity and inclusion in all our work, treat all our stakeholders and partners fairly and with respect, and are transparent in the decisions we make to ensure equality, diversity and inclusion for everyone at the Commission and ensure that all our staff are treated fairly and with respect Chapter 3: Promoting equality, diversity and inclusion in the democratic process ‘Chapter 3: Promoting equality, diversity and inclusion in the democratic process’ sets out how we will deliver the first of these objectives, through: gathering evidence: understanding the issues through research and consultation accessibility: ensuring we understand the issues faced by voters, campaigners and those standing for office and ensuring we meet best practice in accessibility communications: ensuring that all voters are aware of their right to vote and know how to exercise it, and targeting demographics we know are least likely to be registered to vote; ensuring that we communicate across all parts of the regulated community Chapter 4: Embedding equality, diversity and inclusion in our processes and decisions ‘Chapter 4: Embedding equality, diversity and inclusion in our processes and decision making’ sets out how we will deliver the second of these objectives through ensuring that all our processes treat stakeholders equally whether they are people we regulate, partners we work with on the administration of elections or businesses we buy services from. That means putting equality, diversity and inclusion at the heart of our processes and ensuring that we follow those processes to a high standard. Chapter 5: Ensuring equality, recognition of diversity and inclusion for all those who work at the Commission ‘Chapter 5: Ensuring equality, recognition of diversity and inclusion for all those who work at the Commission’ sets out how we will deliver the third of these objectives through: ensuring equality and compliance with our legal responsibilities increasing the diversity of our workforce through recruitment and career progression working with our EDI Lead to look at how we further promote inclusion our learning and development offering employee performance improving our collection of data Chapter 6: Communicating our commitment to equality, diversity and inclusion ‘Chapter 6: Communicating our commitment to equality, diversity and inclusion’ explains how we will communicate our commitment and our plans to improve equality, diversity and inclusion. Chapter 7: Making it happen In ‘Chapter 7: Making it happen’, we explain how we will deliver and report progress on the actions set out in the Action Plan. Action plan This action plan sets out what we will do to deliver against the objectives identified in this Strategy. It reflects the priorities and objectives identified in the Corporate Plan for 2022-27. These will be reviewed annually as part of our Business Planning cycle. We will report on progress as part of our Annual Report. Action plan Objective 1: Equality, diversity and inclusion in the democratic process Action When we will do it Measure of success Who is responsible Continue to improve our research data to enhance our evidence base, ensuring we carry out screening and if appropriate an EIA for research proposals Ongoing Evidence base gives us clear data to support our aims for equality, diversity and inclusion Head of Research Continue to ensure that campaigns to raise public awareness about the electoral system are inclusive and take account of different groups Ongoing; to form part of each campaign Our messages feature in targeted media; good response from targeted groups Head of Campaigns Continue to ensure that our guidance is available in a variety of formats Ongoing Our stakeholders are supported with compliance Head of Regulatory Support Take further steps to ensure our website and our publications are as accessible as possible Ongoing: our website already meets best practice AA standards Best practice maintained and enhanced through regular testing and feedback Head of Digital Communications Build on the success of the partnership work we have already done in ensuring we continue to identify the needs of diverse groups and respond to them Continue initiatives to identify groups less likely to vote and work to find ways to respond to their needs Good levels of awareness from specific groups Head of Campaigns working with the Commission's offices in Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland Objective 2: Embedding equality, diversity and inclusion in our processes and decision making Action When we will do it Measure of success Who is responsible Ensure that the guidance, support and challenge we provide for Electoral Registration Officers supports them to encourage registration from typically under-registered groups in their areas (based on their demographics Ongoing: we have laid the new Standards before Parliament We provide the right guidance and support to EROs and quality assure that we have done so Head of Guidance, Head of Support and Improvement, Heads of Electoral Commission in Wales and Scotland Ensure that our guidance, support and challenge to Returning Officers promote the provision of equality of access and experience for all at the polls Ongoing: we constantly update and improve our guidance We provide the right guidance and support to ROs Head of Guidance; Head of Support and Improvement, Heads of Electoral Commission in Wales and Scotland Introduce new processes for carrying out and reviewing Equality Impact Assessments New EIA process rolled out by the end of 2021 Enhanced ability to assess the impact of proposed changes on equalities Head of Planning and Performance; all staff responsible for areas where screening and if necessary a full EIA may be required Ensure that the Commission's procurement strategy includes clear EDI outcomes for contractors, and that effective monitoring of these contractors is done to ensure they comply Ongoing Contractors have equalities policies in place Financial Controller Ensure through our Quality Assurance initiative that equality is embedded as appropriate in all our processes Ongoing All processes pay due regard to equalities Head of Projects and all managers Continue to keep our internal regulatory procedures under review for best practice and to ensure that consistency, fairness and quality underpin all our regulatory activities Ongoing Decisions seen to be made transparently and fairly in a way which treats all stakeholders equally Head of Registration and Reporting; Head of Monitoring and Enforcement Ensure that equality is included as appropriate in our policies including our Enforcement Policy as they are reviewed in line with our normal cycle Ongoing All policies pay due regard to equalities All Heads responsible for organisational policies Implement a Welsh Language Action Plan to enhance our service to Welsh speakers, building on the appointment of a permanent senior adviser on Welsh language and a permanent translator All parts of the organisation are aware of and meet the Welsh language standards Head of Electoral Commission in Wales; all Heads Objective 3: Ensure equality, recognition of diversity and inclusion for everyone at the Commission Action When we will do it Measure of success Who is responsible Meet the commitments and actions stated in our people strategy Ongoing Progress demonstrated (update report to each RemCo) Head of HR and others We will continue using anonymous recruiting for employed roles (our e-recruitment system does not share name or other demographic info with recruiting) Ongoing The diversity of whom we recruit Head of HR and all recruiting managers We will consider the design of our roles including through the lens of being open to all Ongoing The diversity of whom we recruit Recruiting managers (with support from HR) We will tender for an e-recruitment system that meets our data needs 31 December 2021 Diversity data reports on job applicants for employed roles HR Team We will aim to create an environment where all staff can be themselves at work Ongoing Positive findings in all staff surveys and feedback from staff groups Work led by Anti Bullying champion Updated Dignity at Work policy for 2021/22 By 2022 Updated policy reflecting Commission needs and priorities HR, DARE, EDI Group, Anti Bullying champion, PCS We will work to deliver on our commitment to 'Zero Tolerance' of bullying and harassment. Ongoing with annual review Levels of bullying and harassment experienced and witnessed fall Anti-Bullying Champion working with Dignity and Respect Group; all managers and colleagues We will build on the learnings from relevant impacts of the Covid-19 pandemic 2020/21 – including hybrid ways of working, dependence on electronic communication; virtual leadership – to help us shape a new and inclusive workplace culture Ongoing as the pandemic recedes Continued balance of high staff engagement with delivery of business All managers and staff We will work through our Race at Work Champion and our Race at Work Taskforce to give effect to our Race at Work Charter Ongoing Actions agreed with Task Force and carried through according to plan Race at Work Champion working with the Task Force We will work with and support a new permanent EDI Lead for the Commission Summer 2021 EDI lead delivers against agreed outcomes Head of Planning and Performance We will continue to seek views and promote EDI through our EDI group Ongoing EDI considered in Commission decisions and processes All Heads Through continuing to provide induction to employees and workers, we will let them know of the EDI agenda and priorities Ongoing All new employees, temporary or permanent, understand the Commission's expectations on EDI HR, SLG and recruiting managers We will continue to discuss the results of all staff surveys and seek feedback both through teams and through the Commission's groupings such as the Equality, Diversity and Inclusion group, the Staff Engagement Group and with PCS After each full all staff survey Staff feel confident to speak up and share views to enhance the all staff survey process Head of HR working with relevant groups We will encourage employees to self-declare their diversity in our HR system to improve our organisational EDI data Spring 2021 Levels of self-declaration rise Head of HR We will continue to track the diversity of applicants and of leavers Ongoing Levels of diversity rise HR and managers Communicating our commitment to diversity Action When we will do it Measure of success Who is responsible We will draw up and implement a strategy for internal communications to make sure all staff are aware of our commitment to equality, diversity and inclusion By the end of 2021 All staff aware of Strategy and their responsibilities under it EDI lead working with Head of Internal Communications Submit your feedback Related content Statutory consultation on guidance for Returning Officers: Assistance with voting for disabled people Draft guidance for Returning Officers: Assistance with voting for disabled voters (statutory consultation) Our response to the Assembly Commission's consultation 'Creating a Parliament for Wales' Read our response to Assembly Commission's consultation from April 2018 Cabinet Office consultation: The Wales Act 2017 (Consequential and Saving Provisions) Regulations 2018 Read our response to the Cabinet Office consultation from February 2019

Report: The March 2017 Northern Ireland Assembly election | Electoral Commission Search Report: The March 2017 Northern Ireland Assembly election

You are in the Northern Ireland Assembly elections section Home Northern Ireland Assembly elections On this page Introduction The March 2017 Northern Ireland Assembly election: key findings and recommendations About the elections The experience of voters Our public awareness campaign The administration of the poll Candidates and campaigners Looking ahead First published: 7 September 2019 Last updated: 13 August 2019 Introduction On 2 March 2017 an election to the Northern Ireland Assembly was held. As with previous Assembly elections we sought the views and experience of voters, based on public opinion research and electoral data provided by the Electoral Office for Northern Ireland, as well as feedback and views about the administration of the election from candidates and agents, those responsible for delivering the poll, and other participants. We published our report on the May 2016 Northern Ireland Assembly election in September 2016¹, making a number of recommendations to the UK Government and the Chief Electoral Officer. Since then, in addition to the Northern Ireland Assembly election which took place in March, a UK Parliamentary General Election will take place on 8 June 2017 and it is possible that another Assembly election may take place later this year. This paper provides a summary of the issues that emerged at the March 2017 election and an update on the progress on recommendations that we made last September. The March 2017 Northern Ireland Assembly election: key findings and recommendations Our research with voters and campaigners found high levels of confidence that the Northern Ireland Assembly election held on 2 March 2017 was well-run: More than 812,000 votes were cast at the election, representing a turnout of 64.8% - the highest level of turnout since the first Assembly election in 1998. More than 8 in 10 people (82%) said they were very or fairly satisfied with the process of registering to vote. Nearly 9 in 10 people (86%) said they were satisfied that the elections were well-run. Nearly all those voters who responded to our survey (95%) said that they found it easy to fill in their ballot paper. More than 9 in 10 candidates and election agents (91%) said that they were satisfied with the overall administration of the election. People in Northern Ireland cannot yet apply to register to vote online, although legislation allowing online registration has been passed. We want to see progress by the Chief Electoral Officer towards implementing this important change after the June 2017 UK Parliamentary general election, to make it easier for people in Northern Ireland to maintain and update their registration details. As also outlined in our report on the May 2016 Northern Ireland Assembly election we continue to want to see increased transparency on how political parties are funded in Northern Ireland, to help increase public confidence in the democratic process. We look forward to progress being made on this issue and are ready to work closely with the UK Government to support their development of the necessary legislation.

About the elections On 9 January Martin McGuinness resigned as deputy First Minister. As required by law the Assembly needed to elect a new First Minister and deputy First Minister within seven days. By 16 January the Assembly had not elected a First Minister and deputy First Minister and the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland was therefore required by law to call an Assembly election, which he did for Thursday 2 March 2017. The Assembly Members (Reduction of Numbers) Act 2016 reduced the number of Assembly members returned from each of the 18 constituencies from six to five. Although the next scheduled Assembly election had been due to be held in May 2021, the 2016 Act required that the changes would come into effect at the first election after the May 2016 poll. This meant that there was an overall reduction from 108 to 90 MLAs to be elected at the March 2017 election. Registration and turnout A total of 1,254,709 people were registered to vote in the Northern Ireland Assembly election on 2 March 2017. 2 812,783 votes were included in the count, representing an overall turnout of 64.8%. 3 This was a 10 percentage point increase compared with May 2016 and was the highest turnout since the first Northern Ireland Assembly election in 1998. Figure

1.1: Turnout at Northern Ireland Assembly elections 1998-2017 The Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland The Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland is the registration officer and returning officer for all elections in Northern Ireland.

Virginia McVea took up this position on 1 February 2017. Her predecessor Graham Shields began planning for the election before his departure, largely replicating the model that was used for the May 2016 election. This transition worked well and no issues emerged with the leadership of the Electoral Office for Northern Ireland during this busy period. Overall the Chief Electoral Officer delivered a well-run poll, particularly in light of the short notice. As outlined in our report in 2016 we will continue to work with the Chief Electoral Officer to look at how further improvements can be made to the delivery of elections in Northern Ireland. To assist in the successful delivery of the election the Chief Electoral Officer established a Strategic Election Planning Group to oversee the management of the election. The group consisted of senior staff from the Electoral Office and representatives from the Northern Ireland Office and the Electoral Commission. The group monitored and reviewed progress made on all aspects of the election planning. The experience of voters Overall the evidence from our public opinion research suggests that most voters had a positive view of the electoral process and most were confident that the election was well-run. Most of the views expressed were consistent with those received after the May 2016 election. More detailed analysis of the research is available to view on our website. Registering to vote Our research shows that there is clearly an appetite from the public to move to the online electoral registration system that operates across the rest of the UK, with 77% of respondents agreeing you should be able to register to vote online. However in spite of this there still continues to be high levels of satisfaction with the current process for registering to vote. Only 3% of those surveyed expressed dissatisfaction with getting their name on the electoral register compared to 83% who said they were very or fairly satisfied. Why did people vote? As was the case at the May 2016 Northern Ireland Assembly election, the most common reason given for voting at the March 2017 election related to civic duty (68% in 2017 and 67% in 2016). However there was a significant increase in the number of people who said they voted to 'get a change', rising from 7% in May 2016 to 25% in March 2017. It is possible that this may have contributed to the higher turnout at the March election. As was the case in May 2016 many of those who didn't vote in March 2017 gave circumstantial reasons for not making it to the polling station, such as not having the time or having been too busy (51%). However there was an increase in the number of people who claimed they didn't vote in March 2017 because they were not registered to vote (16% compared to 5% in May 2016). This may have related to the number of people removed from the electoral register in December 2016. We address this issue in the administration of the poll section . People's experience of voting Voters continue to remain very positive about their experience of voting, whether in person at a polling station or by post. Nearly all (97%) of those respondents who voted in person at a polling station reported that they were very or fairly satisfied with the voting process. All respondents who voted by post (100%) reported that they were satisfied with voting in this way. The majority of voters at the Northern Ireland Assembly election were also satisfied that the elections were well-run; 86% of respondents to our survey said they were confident that the election was well run. This was a slight decrease on the 2016 Assembly election (when 93% of respondents said they were confident). The ballot paper As was the case in May 2016, almost all respondents to our survey (95%) said it was easy to fill in the ballot paper with 79% saying it was ‘very easy’. Only 2% said they found it difficult. A total of 9,450 ballot papers were rejected at the count by the Deputy Returning Officers, representing 1.2% of all votes cast. This is almost the same as the number of rejected ballot papers at the May 2016 election (9,425 representing 1.3%). A total of 6,836 ballot papers were rejected because there was a first preference for more than one candidate. Based on our observations at count venues this is because the voter had marked the ballot paper with multiple ‘x’s rather than using numbers. Whilst a single ‘x’ on a ballot paper could be considered as a valid first preference, once a second ‘x’ is placed on the ballot paper the voter’s intention becomes unclear. We will consider what more can be done through our future public awareness activity to raise awareness amongst the public on how to correctly complete the ballot paper. Electoral integrity Over a quarter of respondents to our public opinion research thought that fraud took place at the election (28%), including 9% who said they thought that a lot of fraud took place. This was largely consistent with findings from our research following the 2015 UK Parliamentary General Election and the 2016 Northern Ireland Assembly election. There no complaints or reports of electoral fraud made before or after polling day to the Commission. Those respondents who said that they thought electoral fraud had taken place at the election on 2 March were asked which, out of a list of options, described why they thought this. 4 The main reason given by people who thought that fraud had taken place was that this was due to a general impression that fraud was a problem (46%). Overall however 84% of respondents saw voting in general as being safe from fraud and abuse. The Police Service for Northern Ireland provide data to the Commission on alleged cases of electoral fraud on an annual basis, which we then report on. We will report on any alleged cases at the Northern Ireland Assembly election in early 2018, when we will also report on any alleged cases relating to the UK Parliamentary election and other elections that took place across the UK in 2017.

Our public awareness campaign We ran a campaign to increase people’s awareness of the Northern Ireland Assembly election and how to take part, including ensuring people knew they needed to be registered to vote by the 14 February deadline for registration applications. We updated our advertising from our 2016 Northern Ireland Assembly election campaign. This included our TV, radio, press, out of home and digital adverts. We also produced a suite of resources including a toolkit with examples of messages to share via websites, emails and social media channels, as well as poster templates and factsheets for use by other organisations to help promote electoral registration. On 1 February Facebook promoted a message in the newsfeeds of all Facebook users in Northern Ireland reminding them to register to vote before the deadline. In addition to this they also created an ‘I voted’ tag on polling day.

Public information We continued our long standing partnership with the Electoral Office for Northern Ireland in the provision of a public helpline throughout the duration of our public awareness campaign. In total the helpline handled over 27,000 calls from 23 January until polling day. This was an increase of almost 10,000 calls compared to the May 2016 campaign. Over 11,000 calls related to electoral registration queries and a total of 3,981 registration forms were sent out as a result. A further 7,686 registration forms were downloaded from our aboutmyvote.co.uk website. Other common queries to the helpline related to absent voting (6,699 calls) and electoral ID (1,303 calls). In addition to this there were almost 80,000 visits to our public information website aboutmyvote.co.uk and a total of 20,375 registration forms downloaded. The administration of the poll By its very nature an unscheduled election creates an unexpected workload for electoral administrators. However both the Commission and the Electoral Office have contingency plans in place in the event that such a poll is called, and so were able to respond quickly to the announcement of the Assembly election. In this section we cover some of the issues that arose during the preparations for polling day, on polling day and at the count.

The electoral register In autumn 2013 a full canvass of electors took place across Northern Ireland. The canvass was called following a decline in both the accuracy and completeness of the electoral register in previous years. The legislation that allowed for the canvass to take place included a provision to allow the names of those who did not return a canvass form be to retained on the register for a period of two years, if the Chief Electoral Officer was satisfied that they were entitled to be on the electoral register. The purpose of this provision was to ensure that eligible electors could take part in elections in 2014 and 2015. This provision was extended for a further year as the Northern Ireland Assembly election was moved from 2015 to 2016. Following this canvass in 2013, a total of 112,013 names were retained on the register despite not returning a registration form. Over the following years the Electoral Office contacted these people to advise them to update their details on the electoral register. The last letter sent in September 2016 advised that they would be removed from the register, as required by law, if they did not respond.

Following this a total of 60,433 names were removed from the electoral register on 1 December 2016. Following the announcement of the March 2017 Northern Ireland Assembly election on 16 January 2017, representations were made to the Electoral Commission, the Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Office that all of these names should be brought back onto the electoral register for the Assembly election. There were also concerns over the fact that the 'late registration' period came into effect as soon as the election was called. Anyone registering 'late' is required to provide additional documentation to support their registration as there is insufficient time for applications to be checked against other public data available to the Chief Electoral Officer, such as from the Department of Works and Pensions. However, there was no legislative tool available to allow for such changes. In our public awareness activity we continued to encourage people to make sure that they were registered to vote before the deadline of 14 February if they wanted to vote at the Assembly election. We are also promoting electoral registration ahead of the UK Parliamentary General Election on 8 June 2017. On 23 February the total electorate for the March 2017 Northern Ireland Assembly election was confirmed as 1,254,709. This was 26,886 fewer than the electorate for the May 2016 Assembly election. However there had been an increase in the total electorate of 20,606 compared to the previous register published on 1 February 2017. By a means of comparison, in 2016 the total electorate increased by 8,899 from the 1 April electoral register to the register published for the election on 27 April 2016. Although this put greater pressure on the EONI, the 'late registration' process was completed successfully. On polling day a total of 3,475 people attended polling stations in order to vote but were found to be not registered. The constituency with the highest number was Belfast West with 425 and the lowest was Lagan Valley with 109. As already highlighted we will continue to promote electoral registration as part of our future public awareness activity. Absent voting A total of 19,666 postal ballot papers were issued by the Electoral Office, an increase of 2,093 from May 2016. 86% of these ballot papers (16,186) were returned before the close of poll, of which 709 were rejected and therefore not included in the count. A total of 9,920 proxy voters were appointed at the Assembly election. This was an increase of almost 50% compared to 2016 when 6,644 proxies were appointed. Although the increased number of applications for absent votes did place significant pressure on the EONI, the overall process ran well. However the Chief Electoral Officer did express some frustration, as in previous elections that a large number of application forms were hand delivered by political parties on the day of the deadline. Whilst such applications are processed, should any errors be identified on the forms then it is not possible for a new or amended application to be made as the statutory deadline has passed. We will continue to monitor this process, particularly ahead of the June 2017 UK Parliamentary General Election.

Polling day

As was the case in May 2016, 619 polling places were used on polling day with a total of 1,380 polling stations used. No major issues were reported on polling day although there were some complaints received by the Commission and the EONI about the behaviour of both political party canvassers and non-party campaigners outside some polling places. All of the main political parties in Northern Ireland have agreed to a voluntary Code of Conduct produced by the Chief Electoral Officer on canvassing in the vicinity of polling stations, which is provided to all candidates. All campaigners should be mindful of and comply with this Code at future electoral events in Northern Ireland.

The count was held at eight venues across Northern Ireland, with verification of the used ballot papers beginning at 8am on Friday 3 March. The approach to the management of the count replicated that used at the May 2016 election. In particular this included the continuation of a new approach to the verification and primary sort of ballot papers. As was the case in May 2016 this worked well with verification completed in all but one constituency by 11:15am (South Down was completed shortly after midday). For the first time at a Northern Ireland Assembly election, all of the counts were completed without the need for a second day. By 11:00pm on 3 March, 11 counts were fully completed, while the last count to finish was Belfast South at 3:00am. Whilst it may be the case that the reduced number of candidates to be elected played some part in this, as well as the way the votes transferred in the later stages, it is clear that the overall management of the count continues to benefit from the changes made in 2016. Feedback from candidates on the count was very positive. 89% of respondents to our candidate survey reported overall satisfaction that the verification and count process were efficiently run. As we previously recommended in May 2016 we would encourage the Chief Electoral Officer to build on this success and to consider further ways to improve the overall efficiency and management of the count. This should include looking at what more can be done to improve the latter stages of the count, given the changes already made at verification and at the first stage of the count.

Electoral observers

In our report on the May 2016 Northern Ireland Assembly election, we expressed our concern and disappointment that the Commission's accredited electoral observer scheme was being abused. At the time we identified a number of applicants who were clearly supporting a political party or candidate and were seeking entry to the count. As a result, a number of accreditations were rejected or revoked. Following this we advised all of the main political parties that the observer scheme should not be used by party supporters as a means to access the count; instead party supporters should seek to attend as a counting agent for a candidate they support. Unfortunately a number of applicants for accreditation at the March 2017 Assembly election did not meet the political impartiality requirement set out in our Code of Conduct for electoral observers. In total we rejected 11 applications and revoked five accreditations. In total 40 of the 120 UK accredited electoral observers at that time were based in Northern Ireland. As outlined in our 2016 report we will be conducting a full review of how we accredit electoral observers in the UK. We expect this to commence in early 2018, with any revisions to the process to be in place before the next scheduled elections in Northern Ireland in 2019. Candidates and campaigners A total of 228 candidates contested the 2017 Northern Ireland Assembly election, down from 276 at the 2016 election. A total of 21 candidates stood as an independent and 14 political parties put forward candidates (down from 21 in May 2016). Overall feedback from candidates and their election agents was very positive. 91% of candidates who responded to our survey were satisfied with the overall administration of the election (compared to 94% in May 2016). All of those who responded to the survey found the nomination process to be straightforward and well run. Royal Mail Royal Mail delivered over 1.2 million poll cards and over 6.6 million items of candidate literature, a decrease from 8.3 million at the May 2016 Northern Ireland Assembly election. This was to be expected given that fewer candidates were standing.

Monitoring and compliance As was the case in May 2016, we took a proactive approach in raising awareness about the rules for candidates and agents, political parties and non-party campaigners. This included sending the guidance to parties and non-party campaigners, including information in nomination packs and a pre-election seminar for candidates and agents. We also continued to carry out desk-based monitoring of party and non-party campaigns at the Assembly election. The purpose of this work was to promote compliance by gathering information on campaigns and taking action if necessary at the time, and also to assist us to when checking statutory returns. It also helped identify non-party campaigners who appeared to be working together, or who were supporting or campaigning against particular parties, or categories of candidates. In the summer we will publish details of what political parties spent where their spending was below £250,000. Parties that spent over £250,000 have longer to make their returns to us but no party spent over this amount at the May 2016 election. Candidate returns were made to the Chief Electoral Officer and are available for public inspection at the Electoral Office upon request.

Campaign issues, trends and developments During the run up to the 2017 Northern Ireland Assembly election we identified a number of compliance issues that also arose at the May 2016 election. These covered issues such as imprints, social media and online campaigning. Given the short space of time between the elections in May 2016 and March 2017, little progress was made on the legislative framework on these issues but we will continue to work towards such changes being made ahead of future elections.

Looking ahead In our report on the 2016 Northern Ireland Assembly election, we made ten recommendations for the Chief Electoral Officer, the UK Government and the Commission itself, which covered issues such as online electoral registration, the introduction of performance standards for the Chief Electoral Officer, and changes to the regulatory framework for political finance. Given the short time that has elapsed since the May 2016 election and the March 2017 election, we will continue to prioritise these recommendations during the next five years until the next scheduled Assembly elections. However in this section of the report we have provided an update on some progress that has been made since our previous report in September 2016.

Donations and loans to political parties in Northern Ireland On 5 January 2017, the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland announced that he had written to the political parties in Northern Ireland seeking their views on whether the time was now right to move towards full transparency of donations and loans to political parties.

The response to this consultation has not yet been published given the ongoing political talks around the restoration of the devolved institutions. Increased transparency of donations and loans emerged as a significant issue during the 2017 Assembly election campaign and all of the main political parties in Northern Ireland expressed a commitment to move towards full transparency. As outlined in our 2016 report we have consistently called for increased transparency on how political parties are funded in Northern Ireland. We are clear that such a move will only help to increase public confidence in the democratic process. For our part we look forward to progress being made on this issue and are ready to work closely with the UK Government to support them with developing the necessary legislation. Online electoral registration On 12 December 2016 the Representation of the People (Electronic Communications and Amendment) (Northern Ireland) Regulations 2016 passed both Houses of Parliament. The Regulations allow for the introduction of digital electoral registration and will come into force once the necessary technical requirements are in place for the system to operate in Northern Ireland. The Chief Electoral Officer had originally intended for online registration to be launched by the end of 2016. However a number of technical difficulties began to emerge during testing of the system and how it would work in collaboration with the current online portal that exists in Great Britain. As such the launch was delayed until early 2017. Following the announcement in January 2017 that a Northern Ireland Assembly election would be held in March 2017, the Chief Electoral Officer postponed the scheduled introduction of online registration. There remain a number of technical difficulties that need to be addressed, and it is now likely that online registration will be introduced in autumn 2017. Future electoral events On 18 April, following a vote by the House of Commons in support of a motion for an early UK Parliamentary General Election, the Prime Minister confirmed that an election will take place on 8 June 2017. We have already produced guidance documents for the election and have launched another public awareness campaign to encourage people to check that they are registered to vote. We will also be reporting on the election which will give us the opportunity to return to some of our longer term recommendations in Northern Ireland and across the rest of the UK. We are also conscious that there is the possibility of another Northern Ireland Assembly election taking place later in the year. Should this be the case we will continue to work on the lessons learnt at the last two Assembly elections to support the delivery of an election should one be called by the Secretary of State. 1.

https://www.electoralcommission.org.uk/__data/assets/pdf_file/0013/215041/2016-NI-Assembly-election-report.pdf ■ Back to content at footnote 1 2. To vote in a Northern Ireland Assembly election a person must be registered to vote and also be one of the following: a British, Irish, qualifying Commonwealth or EU citizen living in Northern Ireland. ■ Back to content at footnote 2 3. Turnout figure includes valid votes and those rejected at the count. ■ Back to content at footnote 3 4. Respondents were able to select more than one answer ■ Back to content at footnote 4 5. A detailed explanation of the count process is included in our report on the May 2016 Northern Ireland Assembly election. ■ Back to content at footnote 5 Related content Report on the May 2022 Northern Ireland Assembly election Read our report on the May 2022 Northern Ireland Assembly election Report: Voting in 2017 Read our report about voting at the general election in 2017 Report: How the 2016 Northern Ireland Assembly election was run Read our report about how the 2016 Northern Ireland Assembly election was run Report: How the 2011 Northern Ireland Assembly election was run Read our report about how the 2011 Northern Ireland Assembly election was run imprints You are in the Our consultations section Home Our consultations Draft statutory guidance on digital imprints On this page Summary How to respond How we developed the draft guidance Questionnaire Background First published: 31 October 2022 Last updated: 31 October 2022 Summary Summary 'Imprints' are added to certain political or election-related material to show who is responsible for the material.

This helps to deliver transparency for voters about who is spending money to influence them. The Elections Act 2022 includes provisions requiring imprints on digital campaign material. The Act introduces a new duty on the Commission to prepare statutory guidance explaining the digital imprints regime and how the Commission and the police will exercise their enforcement functions under it. The guidance, once prepared, will be presented to the Secretary of State for Levelling Up, Housing and Communities. The Minister may then modify the guidance, before laying it for parliamentary approval. Parties and campaigners will need to understand and comply with the new digital imprint laws across the UK, regardless of their size or experience. Your views will help us make the guidance we present to the Secretary of State as clear and helpful as possible. Once the statutory guidance comes into force in November 2023, the Commission and the police must have regard to the guidance as they enforce the regime. For campaigners, showing that they have complied with the guidance will be a statutory defence to any offence under the new laws.

How to respond The consultation is open from 31 October 2022 until 20 December 2022. You can respond by: filling in our online form emailing your views to imprintsconsultation@electoralcommission.org.uk or writing to us at: Regulatory Support Team The Electoral Commission 3 Bunhill Row London EC1Y 8YZ

Throughout the consultation period, we will continue to engage with the electoral and campaigning community. We are happy to meet with any groups or interested individuals on request. If you have any questions, please do get in touch on 0207 271 0527.

How we developed the draft guidance We talked to a range of political parties and non-party campaigners from across the UK to inform the draft guidance. We asked them about: their understanding of the provisions how they use digital material in their political campaigning what digital platforms they use to reach voters how they see digital campaigning evolving in the future Opens in new window View the draft guidance. Questionnaire Background Existing imprint legislation There are well-established laws requiring imprints on printed material relating to elections, referendums and recall petitions in the UK. In 2020 the Scottish government introduced imprint requirements on digital election material used at Scottish Parliamentary elections and council elections in Scotland. For more information on these laws, please see our existing guidance . Elections Act 2022 The UK Elections Act 2022 includes provisions to require imprints on some kinds of digital material. The new digital imprints laws will apply: across the UK to all reserved elections Section 54 of the Elections Act 2022 contains a specific duty on the Commission to produce statutory guidance on the new digital imprint regime that comes into force in November 2023. Statutory guidance, unlike most of the Commission's guidance, must be approved by the relevant Minister, and Parliament.

Impact on voters | Electoral Commission Search Impact on voters You are in the May 2018 voter identification pilot schemes section Home Our research Voter identification pilots May 2018 voter identification pilot schemes First published: 24 July 2019 Last updated: 24 July 2019 Impact on voters The evidence we have collected suggests that nearly everyone who wanted to was able to vote in the pilot scheme areas: Nearly nine in ten of people who voted in polling stations were aware that they had to take identification with them to the polling station to vote Nearly everyone who went to vote at their polling station was able to show the right identification The number of people who wanted to vote at their polling station who did not have the right identification was very small; many of them came back with the right identification, but some did not There is no evidence that levels of turnout in the pilot scheme areas were significantly affected by the requirement for polling station voters to show identification Impact on voters There were a small number of people who were unable to vote because they did not have, or did not bring with them, the right type of identification. It was not possible to collect demographic data on these people and so we have no evidence to suggest particular demographics were more affected than others. More work is needed to make sure that an identification requirement doesn't stop people who are eligible and want to vote in future elections. Overall findings from the pilot schemes Awareness of the identification requirements Most people in the pilot scheme areas knew about the identification requirements. Our research found that nearly nine out of ten (86%) of people who voted at polling stations said they were aware beforehand that they had to show identification to vote at their polling station. Some groups of people were less likely to say they knew about the identification requirements. Polling station voters in the C2DE social grade were less likely to say they knew beforehand (18% said they did not know about the requirement compared to 9% of ABC1s). In the population as a whole, some groups were less likely to say they had heard something about the pilot. This included people aged under 35, C2DEs, those who said they were generally less politically active, and those who said that they didn't vote in the elections. People in Swindon and Watford were also less likely to say they were aware that they needed to show identification. This may be because they didn't consider the requirement to show a poll card as 'identification', although we cannot confirm this from the available data. Returning Officers in the pilot scheme areas ran public awareness campaigns before the elections, and awareness about the identification requirements improved between January and May 2018. In January, 36% of people in the pilot scheme areas said they had seen or heard something about the requirement, and by May this had risen to 55%. Types of identification that voters used In Bromley, Gosport and Woking most voters were able to show either their passport or photo driving licence to vote at their polling station. Local travel passes were the third most frequently shown type of identification. In Swindon and Watford, the vast majority of voters showed their poll card to vote at their polling station. A small proportion of people showed their photo driving licence, passport, debit or credit card instead of their poll card. Most frequently shown types of identification in each pilot area Most frequently shown 2 nd most frequently shown 3 rd most frequently shown Bromley Photo driving licence (54%) Passport (24%) Freedom pass (15%) Gosport Photo driving licence (55%) Passport (21%) Concessionary travel card (17%) Swindon Poll card (95%) Photo driving licence (4%) Passport (1%) Watford Poll card (87%) Photo driving licence (8%) Debit card (3%) Woking Photo driving licence (60%) Passport (25%) Surrey Senior travel card (12%) Very few people applied to use the alternative options provided for those who did not have the required identification. No one in Bromley and Gosport applied for a Certificate of Identity or Electoral Identity Letter. Feedback from the Returning Officers in both these areas suggests that most people who contacted them to ask about the alternative option found that they did actually have one of the acceptable forms of identification. In Woking, 64 people applied for a Local Elector Card before polling day and 43 voters showed their card as identification at their polling station. Voters in Swindon and Watford could show their poll card as part of the required identification, and they were able to apply for a replacement poll card before polling day. Returning Officers issued 66 replacements to voters in Swindon and 3 to voters in Watford. Voters in Swindon could also ask another elector at the same polling station to 'attest' their identity, and 107 voters used this option.

Although all of the pilot schemes allowed voters to show their identification in private (for example because they were registered to vote anonymously or if they normally covered their face for religious reasons), we are not aware that anyone used this facility. We therefore cannot draw any conclusions about how this process would work in practice. Impact on turnout and participation Although nearly everyone in the pilot scheme areas who went to their polling station to vote was able to show the required identification, a small number did not have the right identification with them and were not given a ballot paper. Many of these people returned later with the right identification, but some did not. People who did not return to their polling station to vote Bromley Gosport Swindon Watford Woking 569 without right identification 154 did not return 0.2% of all polling station voters did not return 120 without right identification 54 did not return 0.4% of all polling station voters did not return 64 without right identification 25 did not return 0.06% of all polling station voters did not return 194 without right identification 42-66 did not return 0.2% of all polling station voters did not return 89 without right identification 51 did not return 0.3% of all polling station voters did not return There is little evidence that the voter identification requirements had a direct impact on turnout in the May 2018 pilot scheme areas. In three areas turnout at the local authority level was no more than 1 percentage point lower than the most recent comparable elections. Turnout in the other two areas was higher than, including in Swindon where turnout was 5 percentage points higher. Overall turnout across England in 2018 was the same, at 36%⁷, as at the last comparable set of elections in 2014. There were some larger changes in turnout at the individual ward level in the pilot scheme areas. These ranged from an increase of 12 percentage points in one ward in Swindon to a decrease of 8 percentage points in one ward in Bromley. The data on turnout and participation cannot tell us much about people who may have decided not to go to their polling station at all because of the identification requirement. However, our research with people in the pilot scheme areas found that 2% of those who didn't vote in May 2018 said it was because they didn't have the right identification. Many more people said they didn't vote because they were too busy (27%), didn't know who to vote for (13%), were away on holiday (12%) or were not interested (10%). Most people in the pilot areas (79%) said the requirement to show identification made no difference to whether or not they voted in May 2018, and overall 3% of people said it made them less likely to vote. However, our research did confirm that non-voters were more likely than voters to say that it had made them less likely to vote: 5% of non-voters said it made them less likely to vote, and 2% said that they wouldn't have been able to vote because they didn't have any identification. Before the May 2018 pilot schemes, accessibility organisations raised concerns that some groups of people would find it harder to vote because they would not easily be able to access the right types of identification. This included concerns about disabled people and people from black and minority ethnic communities, who are also less likely to participate in elections in general. Overall, we found no clear pattern of decreased turnout based on the different demographic profiles of specific wards in the May 2018 pilot scheme areas. The relatively small size of the May 2018 pilot schemes, the level of turnout and the limited demographic variation across wards of the pilot schemes means that it is difficult to systematically identify examples of a negative impact for particular groups of people. The limitations of sample-based surveying also mean that we did not get enough responses from specific groups of people to be able to report experiences or views across those groups. In Watford we did find a correlation between the proportion of a ward's population that is Asian/British Asian and the number of electors both initially turning up without identification and not returning.⁸ We need to be cautious in drawing conclusions from this analysis as it is based on a small number of data points (only 12 wards in one local authority area). However, this does show that it would be helpful to have more pilots with more diverse populations in order to explore this further.

Beyond the pilots: implications for voters at future elections

Although we have found that most people who wanted to were able to vote in the pilot scheme areas in May 2018, we have also seen some evidence that particular groups of voters might find it harder to show identification at future elections. Our research with people across all elections that took place in May 2018 found that most people (88%) said they would find it easy or very easy to show identification if they had to at future elections. However, we did find that younger people aged 34 and below were slightly less likely (83%) to say they would find it easy. There were no notable differences in responses based on other demographic factors, including social grade, disability or ethnicity. We know that more people vote at other types of elections: some people who don't normally vote at local elections often vote at UK Parliament elections, for example. This means, that at other kinds of elections in the future, more people who want to vote could find it difficult to show identification.

and equality implications

Organisations representing the interests of different groups of people raised concerns with us about whether they would have easy access to the right identification if this requirement was applied at more elections in the future. For example, Mencap, RNIB and Stonewall highlighted the following concerns:

Mencap submission People with learning disability often do not have ID such as a passport as they are unable to travel abroad or cannot afford it. Almost none will have a driving licence and in some cases will not even have access to utility bills or other forms of ID.

RNIB submission The lack of driving licenses amongst blind and partially sighted people, meaning that they had fewer options of what they could provide at the polling station.

Stonewall submission Trans and non-binary people may have been particularly vulnerable to these ID requirements as the photo on their ID may not reflect their gender expression or identity.

Stonewall submission Final bits

Several organisations also raised concerns with us about the public awareness campaigns that Returning Officers ran in the pilot scheme areas. They were concerned about whether the campaigns did enough to target people from groups that were less likely to have the right identification. For example, both Mencap and RNIB felt that activities to raise awareness with the people they represent did not begin early enough in the May 2018 pilot scheme areas. This wider evidence suggests that further work is needed to make sure that an identification requirement doesn't stop people who are eligible and want to vote in future elections. More research and analysis is needed to identify which types of identification will be easiest for people to show, and how those who do not currently have identification can get it. This is particularly important for people who may find it harder to show the more common forms of photo identification such as passport, photo driving licence or travel card. We have previously recommended that any photographic voter identification scheme should include a free of charge photographic elector card for people who do not have any other acceptable form of identification. More work is also needed to find further ways to tell people about any identification requirement. Again, this should focus on how best to communicate any new requirement to people who are less likely to vote often and those who may find it harder to show one of the more common forms of identification. Related content Register to vote All you need to register to vote is 5 minutes and your National Insurance number. Our Commissioners Donations and loans Find out about donations and loans to a political party, individual or other organisation Report: How the 2017 UK general election was run Read our report about how the 2017 general election was run

Testing the EU referendum question | Electoral Commission Search

Testing the EU referendum question You are in the EU referendum section Home EU referendum On this page The proposed referendum question How we assessed the proposed referendum question What we found Our reports First published: 25 June 2019 Last updated: 1 August 2019 Overview We commented on the intelligibility of the proposed referendum question. We recommended that the question should be amended to: "Should the United Kingdom remain a member of the European Union or leave the European Union?" Remain a member of the European Union Leave the European Union The Government and UK Parliament accepted our changes in the House of Commons on 7 September 2015.

The proposed referendum question The proposed referendum question included in the European Union Referendum Act was: "Should the United Kingdom remain a member of the European Union?" "A ddylai'r Deyrnas Unedig ddal i fod yn aelod o'r Undeb Ewropeidd?" The response options to this question were 'yes' or 'no'. How we assessed the proposed referendum question We looked at the proposed question from the perspective of voters. We wanted to see if it was written in a way that voters could easily understand and answer. As well as looking at the question ourselves, we gathered evidence to help us with our assessment. This included: carrying out research with voters from different backgrounds and across different areas, through focus groups and one to one interviews asking for advice from experts on accessibility and plain language talking to potential campaign groups, other interested groups and individuals, including political parties who may want to campaign at the referendum What we found We found that the question was written in plain language and was easy for people to understand and answer. However, we had concerns that the question encouraged voters to consider one response more favourably than the other. This could raise concerns about the legitimacy of the result of the referendum. Our research with the public had also indicated that the question needed to make the UK's current EU membership status clear. Our assessment suggested that it was possible to ask a question which would not cause concerns about neutrality, whilst also being easily understood by including both outcomes – remain and leave – in the question and using these as the answer options instead of yes/no. Our reports You can download our reports. Full report of our views on the referendum question (PDF) Report on our research with voters which informed our views on the question (PDF) Previous research Previous research We also carried out research into a question on the UK's membership of the European Union in 2013, after a Private Members' Bill triggered it. The question in this Bill was: "Do you think that the United Kingdom should be a member of the European Union?" The response options to this question were 'yes' or 'no'. We found that this question could lead to misunderstanding, as some people were not clear about the UK's current EU membership status. Amending the question to make the UK's current membership status clear while keeping 'yes' and 'no' as the response options made some people think the question was biased. We set out two recommendations to Parliament in our report. If Parliament wants to retain 'Yes' and 'No' as the response options, we recommended the question should be amended to: a) "Should the United Kingdom remain a member of the European Union?" If Parliament decides not to retain a 'Yes' and 'No' question, we recommended: b) "Should the United Kingdom remain a member of the European Union or leave the European Union?" We also undertook additional research to explore any issues raised by moving away from a 'Yes' and 'No' question. This confirmed that question b) above was clear and straightforward for voters, and was the most neutral wording from the range of options we considered and tested. Our reports You can download our reports. Read the research report from our previous EU referendum

question testing \(PDF\) Read our advice to Parliament from our previous EU referendum question testing (PDF) Read our additional research on EU referendum question testing (PDF) Related content Results and turnout at the EU referendum View the results and turnout at the EU referendum Campaign spending at the EU referendum View data about campaign spending at the EU referendum. Report: 23 June 2016 referendum on the UK's membership of the European Union Read our report on the 2016 EU referendum Report: The costs of delivering the June 2016 referendum on the UK's membership of the European Union Read our report about the costs of delivering the 2016 EU referendum

Report: How the 2011 Scottish Parliament election was run | Electoral Commission Search Report: How the 2011 Scottish Parliament election was run

You are in the Scottish Parliamentary elections section Home Scottish Parliamentary elections On this page About the report and our role Facts and figures Did people feel informed People's experience of voting Lessons learnt: what should change Electoral Management Board for Scotland Invalid postal votes Our materials and resources for Returning Officers Costs of the election Recommendations: Public awareness Recommendations: Postal voting Recommendations: Ballot papers and other voter-focused election material Recommendations: Candidates and agents

Recommendations: Co-ordination of elections Recommendations: Timing of counts Download our full report First published: 4 July 2019 Last updated: 25 July 2022

About the report and our role Our report is about the administration of the Scottish Parliament election held on 5 May 2011. It identifies and comments on key issues that emerged and on experience of the election. It also reviews the impact of combining the election with the referendum on the UK Parliamentary voting system. The Electoral Commission is an independent body which reports directly to the UK Parliament. We regulate party and election finance and set standards for well-run elections and electoral registration. We are responsible for publishing reports on the administration of elections and referendums. For local government elections in Scotland we undertake a number of roles relating to the administration of the elections and for these we report directly to the Scottish Parliament.

Facts and figures Our report focuses particularly on the experience of voters, based on public opinion research and other research data. 3,950,751 people were registered to vote in Scotland and 50.6% of them did so in both the constituency and regional votes. In total 14.1% of the electorate had a postal vote for this election and a high proportion of those, 77.0% in the constituency and 76.9% in the regional vote used their postal vote. Postal votes accounted for 20.2% of all votes cast at the election while the rest 79.8% voted at a polling station. Our report reviews people's experience of voting in polling stations or by post. A total of 321 constituency candidates campaigned to be elected and 21 political parties nominated lists of regional candidates. This was 14 fewer constituency candidates and seven fewer political parties than in the Scottish Parliament election in 2007. Eleven individuals stood on the regional lists, three more than in 2007. Our report gives more detail on campaigning in the election.

Did people feel informed We undertook a public information campaign to increase people's awareness of the Scottish Parliament election and the UK-wide referendum. We sent an information booklet to all households in Scotland and used television, radio and online advertising to inform people about the polls taking place on 5 May. We evaluated levels of people's awareness by conducting public opinion research before and after our campaign. Of those surveyed, 67% recognised at least one element of our campaign. Of those we surveyed, 79% said they had enough information to make an informed decision on how to vote in the election. Of those aged 55 or over, 85% felt informed compared with 72% of 18-34 year-olds. Prior to polling day, some members of political parties and the media were concerned that holding the Scottish Parliament on the same day as a UK-wide referendum would lead to the referendum overshadowing the election. However, analysis of the content of media conducted for us by the University of Exeter prior to polling day suggested that the election gained more coverage in the Scottish media, while the referendum tended to receive more coverage in most of the UK media. Across the UK-based newspapers, television and radio news included in their study, Exeter found that referendum stories outnumbered those on the various elections taking place by nearly two to one. Across the Scottish media outlets studied, however, (including Scottish editions of UK newspapers), there was far more election coverage, with a ratio of more than six stories on the elections to every one story on the referendum. It would appear that despite concerns, the prominence of the Scottish election was not overshadowed by the referendum. People's experience of voting The 2007 Scottish Parliament election was notable for the high numbers of rejected ballots (2.88% of regional and 4.08% of constituency ballot papers). Ron Gould's independent report on the 2007 elections concluded that while there were a number of contributory factors relating to supplier management problems and too much political involvement in the design process, at the heart of the problem was a poorly designed ballot paper. The 2007 single ballot sheet on which both the regional and constituency ballot papers were located side by side was widely seen to have failed in enabling voters to express their voting preferences. For the 2011 election the two ballot papers were again presented to the voter on separate pieces of paper as they had been at the 1999 and 2003 Scottish Parliament elections and the layout of the ballot papers had been redesigned. Rejection rates for ballots at the 2011 election were 0.42% of constituency ballots and 0.34% of regional list ballots. This returned rejected vote rates to the levels experienced in 1999. In our public opinion research we asked whether voters found it easy or difficult to complete their ballot papers at the 2011 election. Nearly all (97%) said that they found it easy to fill in the Scottish Parliamentary ballots, with three-quarters (75%) finding it 'very easy' and just 1% reporting difficulties. Lessons learnt: what should change Timing of election counts The timing of election counts has increasingly become an area of discussion between political parties and Returning Officers (ROs) in Scotland. Opinion varies as to whether they should take place overnight or the next morning. Tensions emerged over the timing of the count at the 2007 Scottish Parliament election, the 2010 UK Parliament election and again at the 2011 Scottish Parliament election. We have no role in determining the timing of any election counts. However, it is clear that the question of the timing of election counts need to be addressed. We intend to circulate an Issues Paper on the timing of election counts. It will include evidence on the time taken to count votes at different elections and the impact of factors such as: the combination of elections; different electoral systems; and the number of ballot papers. It will identify the different perspectives that can be held by those delivering elections, parties campaigning in them and broadcasters who cover election results. We will circulate the Issues Paper on the timing of election counts by the end of November 2011. We will seek views from those with an interest in the timing of election counts, including governments, political parties, Returning Officers, broadcasters and voters. Following analysis of views received, we will seek to make recommendations in early 2012 on the timing of election counts and the way in which they are organised, taking account of the type of elections and a range of relevant circumstances. Electoral Management Board for Scotland The Commission has championed the development of the concept of the Electoral Management Board (EMB) since 2008 and continues to support it as a robust mechanism for the co-ordination of Scotland's electoral process. The EMB has continued to progress since it was established in November 2008. While still an interim EMB given its lack of statutory recognition for the Scottish Parliament elections it has added value to the planning and delivery of elections in Scotland and built upon the positive support it enjoys among the various stakeholders in the electoral community. We welcomed the decision of the Scottish Government to establish the EMB on a statutory basis for local government elections with a power of direction for its Elections Convener. The subsequent passing of the Local Electoral Administration (Scotland) Act 2011 in March 2011 is a welcome development in electoral administration for the future. The establishment of the EMB was intended to bring clear benefits to the voters in Scotland through the delivery of better and more consistent electoral administration. This was particularly important in the light of events surrounding the 2007 Scottish elections. The next 12 months is an important time for the EMB and the Elections Convener as they undertake on a statutory basis for the first time activities in relation to the local government elections in May 2012. Ministers in Scottish Government and the Scotland Office, and the Commission, expect that the EMB, led by the Elections Convener, will proactively develop its role as the co-ordinating body for Scotland's elections both strategically and operationally. The EMB's period as a steering group is over we will seek to support it as it develops into the national focal point for the administration of elections. We will consider the implications for the Commission as the EMB assumes a greater role and powers over time. Invalid postal votes Of the 429,432 postal ballots that were returned by voters at the Scottish Parliament election, 25,042 postal votes were rejected or not included in the counts in constituency contests and 25,058 in regional list elections. The rejection rates of 5.9% and 5.8% respectively were markedly higher than at the UK Parliamentary election in 2010 when 3.6% of returned postal votes in Scotland were rejected prior to the count. ROs rejected returned postal votes for the following reasons: the postal vote statement which must accompany the ballot paper was missing; the ballot paper was missing; or because the signature or date of birth supplied by postal voters could not be matched with their postal vote application. Our report contains more information and data about invalid postal votes. Allowing Electoral Registration Officers (EROs) to request a refreshed identifying signature, and also to provide electors with feedback if their postal vote has been rejected would help address this problem. We first made this recommendation to the UK Government in 2007 and have since reiterated it. In September 2011, the UK Government said that it would work with the Commission and electoral administrators to avoid the problems we have highlighted with the current postal voting system, while taking into consideration the need to ensure it remains secure against fraudulent applications for postal votes. We will work with the UK Government to ensure changes are in place by the UK Parliamentary General Election in 2015. Our materials and resources for Returning Officers We received positive feedback from ROs about the materials and resources and the direct support we provided to them, but there was also negative feedback. Some felt that we 'micro-managed' the UK referendum, with consequent impact on the combined elements of the election. There was also some negative feedback about presentational issues, with some electoral administrators saying they found our website difficult to navigate, preferring to have the guidance in one printed volume and not to receive updates by email, in case these were missed. We have taken account of the feedback we received in planning our guidance and resources for elections in 2012 and how we present that information on our website. Costs of the election Our report gives detail on how much the election cost. Scottish Parliament elections are funded by the Scotland Office. They meet the costs incurred by Returning Officers in administering the election. The total maximum recoverable for the constituencies in Scotland was £7,785,521 and for the regions was £20,080. The overall total cost was £7,805,601. The actual cost that Returning Officers incurred in running the elections is not yet known as the Scotland Office has set the deadline of 5 January for the submission of Returning Officers election accounts. Scotland Office also met the costs of Royal Mail's delivery of the freepost election communications of candidates and political parties. Royal Mail delivered 11,404,377 addressed items and 12,650,313 unaddressed items totally 24,054,690. The total cost of all postings was £6,402,314.

Recommendations: Public awareness The Commission will make template public awareness materials available to the Public Awareness Network of the EMB at an earlier date at future elections. This will ensure that they receive them in adequate time to use them in their local public awareness activity.

Recommendations: Postal voting We recommend that the UK and Scottish Governments amend legislation on postal voting to provide the power for EROs to request a refreshed identifying signature, and to provide feedback to electors, in cases where their postal vote has been rejected as a consequence of mismatched or incomplete identifiers. In order to obtain a clearer understanding of the scale of postal vote rejection on the grounds of mismatched or incomplete identifiers we will work with ROs to review our postal vote data collection forms ahead of the 2012 local government elections and provide additional guidance for those collating the data if required. Urgent steps need to be taken by ROs, EROs and ourselves ahead of the Scottish local government elections in 2012 to review postal voting materials in Scotland to ensure that the instructions for postal voters are sufficiently clear and the consequences of mismatched or missing identifiers are highlighted to the voter. We will work with the EMB to ensure that this happens and, as part of this review, we will consider other materials and communications for voters in which information about postal voting can be added, including canvass forms and poll cards).

Recommendations: Ballot papers and other voter-focused election material We continue to recommend that all election materials aimed at voters, including ballot papers, should be thoroughly tested with voters to ensure they are accessible before being used in an election. We recommend that the legislation concerning 'commonly used names' is reviewed to ensure clarity as to what ROs can and cannot accept in time for the 2015 UK Parliamentary general election and subsequent elections. ROs must ensure that, when outsourcing the printing of the ballot papers, they have sufficient arrangements in place with their printer to produce a ballot paper of any length. In future elections, the exact colours to be used for each ballot paper will need to be agreed well in advance of the election and must take account of the lighting conditions in which they will be used. In Scotland, the Elections Convener of the EMB will be best-placed to undertake this role. We recommend that a member of the RO's staff should always be present at the printing and issue of ballot papers and postal votes in order to ensure that any errors are identified and addressed before they impact on voters. We will work with the forms sub-group of the EMB in advance of the 2012 Scottish local government elections, to ensure that voter-focused forms are accessible and produced timeously for electoral administrators. Recommendations: Candidates and agents We will evaluate the new format of our guidance for candidates and agents and will consider their feedback as part of that process. Governments must ensure that any changes in the rules on spending at elections - such as the introduction of the long campaign for candidate spending at the 2011 Scottish Parliament election - are carefully thought through and clearly communicated in good time to all organisations that may need to reflect the rules in their own guidance. We will seek to work with the Scottish Parliament to ensure that the guidance provided to incumbent Members in advance of future elections is comprehensive.

Recommendations: Co-ordination of elections We urge governments to legislate to provide for a statutory EMB with a power of direction for other elections before the next Scottish Parliament election in 2016. Ahead of the 2012 local government elections in Scotland the EMB must be proactive in developing its role as the coelections both strategically and operationally. As the EMB assumes a greater role and powers the Commission will consider the implications of the EMBS development for our own role in elections in Scotland. We will take account of the feedback received on our performance monitoring and revise our performance standards scheme for ROs to monitor their performance in real-time. We will ensure that new standards are in place for elections held in May 2012. Following any boundary reviews ROs and EROs must make thorough checks with the relevant Boundary Commission to ensure they are able to precisely identify the exact boundaries that are set out in legislation. We welcome the recent decision of the Scottish Government to enact a legislative provision for the 2012 local government elections to allow for the issuing of ballots to those electors who were present in the polling station before the close of poll. We continue to recommend that similar provisions are brought in for other elections.

Recommendations:

- Timing of counts We will circulate a discussion paper by the end of November 2011 on the timing of election counts, identifying issues that have arisen at elections across the UK in recent years and inviting feedback from stakeholders. We commit to giving our view on the future timing of counts by mid-2012.
- Download our full report Report on the Scottish Parliament elections 2011
- Related content Report on the Scottish Parliament election on 6 May 2021
- Read our report about how the 2021 Scottish Parliament election was run
- Results and turnout at the 2016 Scottish Parliament election
- View the results and turnout at the 2016 Scottish Parliament election Report: How the 2016 Scottish Parliament election was run
- View the results and turnout at the 2016 Scottish Parliament election Report: How the 2011 Scottish Parliament election was run
- Read our report about how the 2011 Scottish Parliament election was run

Apply to be an individual accredited observer | Electoral Commission Search
Apply to be an individual accredited observer You are in the Observing elections and referendums section Home Observing elections and referendums Application: Individual electoral observer On this page Before you apply What you need to apply First published: 31 May 2019 Last updated: 11 August 2022 Before you apply Before you apply to be an electoral observer, you need to read: the Code of Practice for accredited electoral observers our privacy notice When you complete your application, you will need to confirm that you have read and understood all of these documents. What you need to apply To apply as an individual, you will need: your name, address and contact details to tell us how long you want your accreditation to last for, and where you want your badge to be delivered to upload a passport style photo and your identification Your photo needs to: just include you be a headshot, so that it includes your face and shoulders clearly show your face, with your eyes open be taken against a plain background Your identification needs to show your name and age. You can upload a copy of your: passport driving licence national identity card Northern Ireland electoral identity card 700KB is the maximum file size for the photo and ID. Anything above this cannot be processed. You can contact us if you do not have this form of identification. Apply Submit your application

Consultation: Draft performance standards for Electoral Registration Officers |
Electoral Commission Search Consultation: Draft performance standards for Electoral Registration Officers You are in the Our consultations section Home Our consultations Consultation form: Draft performance standards for EROs On this page Ways to respond How we developed the new standards About the draft standards Using the standards: EROs Using the standards: Electoral Commission Draft performance standards First published: 22 January 2020 Last updated: 11 June 2020 Overview We have the power to set and monitor performance standards for electoral services. We have been setting standards for Electoral Registration Officers (EROs) in Great Britain since 2008, with the most recent update in 2016. With our guidance and resources, the performance standards form part of a package which supports EROs with planning for and delivering well-run electoral registration services across Great Britain. Electoral registration in Great Britain is changing as a result of the reforms to the annual canvass being introduced this year. This provides us with an appropriate and timely opportunity to develop a new performance standards framework.
We want these standards to be used by us and by EROs to understand and improve their performance, ensuring that registers are as accurate and complete as possible and that everyone who is eligible to vote and wants to is able to do so. We want your views on a set of draft standards and how they should be used. How to respond This consultation is now closed. View our response to feedback Meetings Throughout the consultation period we will attend scheduled meetings - such as the Association of s (AEA) branch meeting and Scottish Assessors Association (SAA). We'll also meet individual stakeholders. We will take these opportunities to get views on the draft standards and how we use them. We are happy to consider meeting with any other groups or interested individuals on request. How we developed the new standards How we developed the new standards While the reforms to the annual canvas give us an appropriate and timely opportunity to introduce new standards, our intention is that we establish a set of standards which can be used by EROs and us throughout the year (including in the lead up to electoral events) to understand and improve their performance. The aim is to ensure that registers are as accurate and complete as possible and that everyone who is eligible to vote and wants to is able to do so.
Over the past year, we have been working collaboratively with representatives from across the electoral community – including the Association of s (AEA), Scottish Assessors Association (SAA) and Solace – to help shape the draft standards. After agreeing a set of key principles to underpin the new framework, we established a working group of electoral administrators from across Great Britain and held a workshop with them to scope out what a set of standards might look like. From this, we developed a draft standard around the accuracy and completeness of the electoral registers, which we tested with this group and the AEA, SAA and Solace. Their feedback has informed the content of the draft set of standards that we are now consulting on. As well as seeking views on the draft standards, we also want to hear views on how they should be used to support well run electoral registration services.
We will consider all feedback provided and use it to inform the final standards and how they will be used, ahead of the launch of the new framework in May 2020. About the draft standards The proposed new standards are focused on the outcomes that should be delivered, rather than the processes that are followed. The objective is to help EROs and their teams to understand the impact of their electoral registration activities. This should help EROs to make informed decisions about what activities are undertaken, how these activities are carried out and how their limited resources can be deployed efficiently and effectively. Objectives of the draft performance standards To support EROs and their teams to deliver efficient and effective electoral registration services, and to allow them to demonstrate the impact of their electoral registration activity To provide reassurance to the public and key stakeholders (such as political parties and elected members) that EROs are doing everything they can to ensure that everyone who is eligible and wants to vote is able to do so What the draft standards comprise of An outcome: This states the broad goal that EROs should be seeking to achieve What inputs are needed? This sets out the resources that will need to be put into the service to enable the necessary activities to be delivered What activities are being undertaken? This does not provide an exhaustive list of activities, but instead summarises the headline activities that EROs are likely to need to undertake to be able to meet the outcome. Our guidance and resources for EROs will support them in determining the specific activities that will need to be carried out in their particular circumstances What information is needed to understand the impact of our activities? This highlights the data and qualitative information which will help to demonstrate the impact of the activities and which should form the basis of how we and EROs can determine the success of their work. Again this is not an exhaustive list and the information listed may be supplemented by additional data or information that the ERO feels is relevant to their performance What difference is being made? This summarises the combined effects that the activities should have and which, taken together, would contribute to the delivery of the overall outcome How can we determine the success of our work? This sets out measures that will help to demonstrate what difference the work is making. In some cases the difference will not be straightforward to quantify or otherwise measure, and so an aggregation of several measures may be relied upon to demonstrate what the work is achieving The draft standards have been designed to be flexible enough to recognise the varying local circumstances each ERO is working within. With this in mind, whilst we recognise the benefits of EROs using targets for their registration activity locally, we remain of the view that it would not be appropriate to set performance targets at a national level, given the activities and impacts will vary significantly by local area reflecting the particular demographics and circumstances EROs are each working within. Questions Questions Do you think the draft standards will support EROs with understanding and improving their own performance? Do you think the standards will enable the Commission to understand the performance of EROs and to identify where support and challenge is needed? Are the standards focussed on the right outcomes? If not, what outcomes should be reflected? Do the draft standards demonstrate a clear link from inputs through to the overall outcomes? Do the standards focus on the right activities? If not, what activities should be included? Do you have any thoughts on the measurability of the impact of the activities set out in the draft standards? Do the standards cover the full range of responsibilities of the ERO? Are there any gaps or is there anything included that shouldn't be there? Using the standards: Electoral Registration Officers We want to ensure that EROs and their teams find the standards useful in understanding, improving and reporting on their performance. The standards, and the tools and templates we will make available to support them, have been designed to help EROs understand the impact of their activities on the overall delivery of their registration services. They should also help to identify where improvements can be made, and support EROs to report on their own performance locally. EROs should be using the data, and qualitative information set out in the standards, to help them understand the impact of their activities in any case, so they can identify what works, what doesn't, and where improvements can be made. The framework is designed to support this analysis and focus EROs on the key data and information that will indicate what is working well and what is not working so well. The standards, and the supporting tools and templates, should also help EROs to demonstrate locally – whether within an ERO's local authority, to elected members, or more broadly – how the activities they are carrying out contribute to the provision of an efficient and effective electoral registration service and, ultimately, will help to ensure that everyone who is eligible and wants to vote is able to do so. It is critical that data is readily available to EROs through their electoral management software (EMS) systems at any point within a year. The analysis of accurate and easily available data is vital for EROs to understand their performance, monitor their progress and assess the impact of their registration activities. We are continuing to work closely with Cabinet Office as part of the preparations for the introduction of canvass reform to ensure the relevant data can be easily accessed by EROs when they need it.

Guidance and resources

Guidance and resources We will continue to provide guidance and resources for EROs designed to support the end-to-end delivery of well-run electoral registration services, which will reflect the standards. The guidance and supporting resources will continue to set out EROs' statutory responsibilities and also provide wider practical guidance to help administrators plan for and manage the day-to-day delivery of electoral registration services. We are continuing with plans to reform our approach to presenting guidance on our website, drawing on feedback from administrators and user testing. As we update our guidance for EROs as a result of canvass reform, we will move away from the current PDF format and will instead present our guidance in a web-based format, in line with modern practice and evolving technology. The objective of this new approach is to make the guidance clearer and easier to navigate and use, while retaining features that we know are important to administrators, such as the ability to print hard copies of sections of the guidance as needed.

Additional tools to support the standards

We intend to develop new tools and templates to support EROs in using the performance standards and reporting on their performance locally. We expect these would include: a resource on using data, to include information on what data is available, how EROs can access it, how they can use it and what it should tell them additional planning and key performance indicator (KPI) setting guidance, including how to develop, monitor and evaluate against KPIs reporting templates, providing a framework for EROs to report on the impact of their activities locally.

Questions

Do you think the standards and the types of additional tools the Commission intends to provide will support EROs to understand and report on their own performance? Are there any other additional tools and guidance that would help to support EROs in using the standards?

Using the standards: Electoral Commission

We have the power in law to issue directions to EROs to provide reports on their performance against the standards, and to prepare and publish assessments of their performance against the standards.

Proposed approach

Our aim is to use the standards to inform how we engage with EROs and their teams over the course of the year. This will help us to understand their performance and to identify any issues or concerns, enabling us to provide support and challenge where it is most needed. However, we also have a responsibility to be transparent to the range of interested stakeholders across Great Britain, including voters, about the performance of EROs and, in particular, to highlight where the outcomes of the standards are not being delivered. We therefore intend to summarise the data and information gathered through our engagement with EROs and their teams to inform regular progress reports. These reports would provide reassurance to the public and key stakeholders (such as political parties and elected members) that EROs are doing everything they can to ensure that everyone who is eligible and wants to vote is able to do so, highlighting any instances where this is not the case. Engagement and reporting Engagement with EROs Over the last year we have already started to evolve the way we work with EROs and their teams. We have moved towards more regular engagement across the year, rather than focussing our activity around the annual canvass and electoral events. We want to continue to build on this and to use the new standards to inform our discussions on electoral registration issues. We want to provide a structure to help ensure we can develop a shared understanding of performance and identify any areas for improvement, as well as examples of good practice. While we will still want to collect data from all EROs to help us understand the state of the electoral registers across Great Britain, we are not proposing that EROs would routinely collate and provide us with all the information listed within the standards. However, we expect that EROs will be using the relevant data and information themselves to help them understand the impact of their activities and where improvement is needed. We also intend to work with EROs and their teams in analysing the data and information to help us with supporting and challenging their performance locally. Our objective is to work with all EROs and their teams at least once every two years. We will prioritise the order, frequency and intensity of the engagement based on risk. We will continue to take into account a range of factors when determining risk, including: experience of the ERO any significant changes in staffing in the electoral registration team any known issues with the delivery of electoral registration activities other relevant local circumstances Reporting We are proposing publishing regular reports that highlight the outcomes of our engagement with EROs and their performance locally. This will enable us to draw out successes and examples of good practice, as well as any issues faced, and to report on progress and improvements. The information we gain through our engagement with EROs will also help us to develop a broad understanding of the challenges faced by the electoral community in delivering registration services. This will facilitate reporting on general data analysis and wider themes, for example, in relation to local authority resilience and capacity, or the use of data locally to support registration services.

Question Will our proposed approach to how we engage with EROs and their teams enable us to provide effective support and challenge? Is there anything more or different we should be using the standards to do? Do you have any views on the proposed approach to reporting? Download and review the draft potential performance standards Appendix A - Draft potential performance standards for Electoral Registration Officers

Briefing summary Full briefing First published: 17 October 2019 Last updated: 17 October 2019 Summary Date: 17 October 2019 For: MPs Full briefing This briefing outlines the Electoral Commission's response to proposed legislation on electoral integrity which was included in the Queen's Speech. Voter identification The proposed legislation would introduce a requirement for voters at polling stations to show identification before they can be issued with a ballot paper. We undertook independent evaluation of the Government's voter ID pilots in 2018 and 2019 . These clarified the way in which a voter ID scheme could be delivered in Great Britain but did not point to definitive conclusions, particularly for higher turnout polls. We identified areas for further consideration, relating to security and accessibility.

We welcome the Government's commitment to for the provision of a free of charge, locally issued photo ID, as currently provided for electors in Northern Ireland. This would be available on application to voters without an approved form of photo ID. If legislation is approved by Parliament the Commission would expect to conduct public awareness campaigns in the lead-up to elections, to inform voters on what they need to do to comply with new identification rules. We will also provide guidance for Electoral Registration Officers and Returning Officers to help them deliver new voter identification requirements. We publish data on allegations of electoral offences annually and in 2014 published a report on electoral fraud. We also carry out annual survey work with voters, which regularly finds concerns about electoral fraud and the integrity of elections, including as a result of the lack of a requirement to show ID. Postal and proxy voting Proposal to introduce restrictions on campaigners handling postal votes – this would formalise the 'best practice' approach in our guidance and a voluntary code of conduct for campaigners. That would be beneficial as we do not see universal compliance by campaigners with current non-legally binding arrangements. Proposal to require people to re-apply to vote by post every three years – as we have previously recommended , would mean that voters are encouraged to regularly review and confirm that they still want to vote by post, or choose to vote in person at a polling station instead. This would help to ensure records are up-to-date and accurate. Proposal to limit the number of people for whom someone may act as a proxy voter to a maximum of two regardless of their relationship – as we have previously identified, this could disadvantage some people (including overseas voters) who have a genuine need to appoint a proxy. This should be considered in developing the legislation. The Government makes a welcome commitment of further support to people with disabilities. Extending the types of people who can act as a companion for disabled voters and improving the tools provided to support voters with visual impairments should help support people to cast their votes independently and in secret. We will work with the Government and groups representing people with sight loss and other disabilities to ensure that the proposed legislation delivers meaningful benefits. Other measures We strongly welcome the Government's commitment to implementing an imprint requirement for digital campaigning material; this is urgently needed to ensure transparency for voters about who is spending money online to influence them. We will work to ensure these proposals can improve transparency and public confidence. We also welcome the Government's intention to consult on measures to strengthen protection of our democracy from foreign interference. We continue to recommend our laws are updated to prevent foreign funding of elections and referendum campaigns. Other key priorities for the Electoral Commission While not included in the Queen's Speech, we continue to firmly recommend the UK Government introduce other legislative changes to make our elections more transparent and maintain trust and participation in our democratic processes. These include:

Simplifying and modernising electoral law We need comprehensive electoral law reform , including a new overarching UK Elections Act. The UK's Law Commissions have already provided a blueprint for electoral law reform that is widely supported by those who deliver, regulate and campaign at elections.

Strengthening digital campaign regulation Effective campaigning is an essential part of well-run elections, but we need transparency and safeguards to maintain trust and confidence. We have set out a package of recommendations to increase transparency about digital campaign spending, and to strengthen our investigation and enforcement tools.

Related content

Party registration decisions View our decisions on political party names, descriptions and emblems

View current applications View the political party names, descriptions and emblems which we are currently considering as part of our assessment process

Donations and loans Find out about donations and loans to a political party, individual or other organisation

Registers of unincorporated associations Download and view the registers of unincorporated associations

Report on the May 2023 local elections in Northern Ireland | Electoral Commission Search Report on the May 2023 local elections in Northern Ireland You are in the Northern Ireland local council elections section Home Northern Ireland local council elections Currently reading: of 3 - Show page contents On this page Voting at the elections Campaigning at elections Delivering the elections Report on the May 2023 local council elections in Northern Ireland This report looks at how the May 2023 Northern Ireland local council elections were run, how voters and campaigners found taking part, and what lessons can be learned for the future. We have reported separately on the elections held this year in England . On 18 May 2023, the Northern Ireland local council elections were held. A total of 1,380,372 people were registered to vote, up from 1,305,553 at the last local council elections in 2019. Overall, voters continue to have positive views about how elections in Northern Ireland are run, with most people confident the elections were well-run and satisfaction with the registration and voting processes remaining high. However, the large number of rejected postal and proxy applications show that the digital registration number (DRN) continues to be a barrier to voters. It is therefore vital that the UK Government urgently reviews the DRN to ensure that these barriers are removed while also maintaining the integrity of the absent voting process. Reporting on their experiences of the Northern Ireland local council elections highlight that their ability to reach voters was constrained by spending limits. We welcome the UK Government's intention to review these spending limits to ensure they allow candidates to effectively engage with the electorate. Half of all candidates also reported experiencing threats, abuse and/or intimidation. It is completely unacceptable that candidates continue to face any form of abuse when campaigning at elections. Tackling these problems will require coordinated action from a range of partners across the electoral community, including political parties and campaigners themselves as well as the Police Service of Northern Ireland (PSNI) and Public Prosecution Service (PPS). While the administration of polling day went well, with voters and campaigners reporting high levels of confidence, there were some concerns raised relating to campaigning in the vicinity of polling stations. We have recommended that the Chief Electoral Officer reviews and updates the Code of Conduct for canvassing in the vicinity of the polling stations to set out agreed standards on what is acceptable behaviour. The administration of the counts also generally went well, but more could be done to improve the efficiency of the latter stages of the count. The Chief Electoral Officer should explore what improvements can be made to the count process and its management that will support efficient count calculations and provide effective oversight of count processes. The capacity and resilience of electoral administrators, both in Northern Ireland and across the UK, remains a significant challenge. It is vital that electoral administration changes expected to be implemented ahead of elections in 2024 are well managed and that the UK Government carefully considers whether the necessary time and resources are, or will be, available before making any final decisions about implementing the remaining Elections Act changes. Voting at the elections The experience of voters at the 2023 Northern Ireland local council elections Voters continue to have positive views about how elections in Northern Ireland are run, with most people confident the elections were well-run and satisfaction with the registration and voting processes remaining high. The large number of rejected postal and proxy applications show that the digital registration number (DRN) continues to be a barrier to voters. It is vital that the UK Government urgently reviews the operation of the DRN to ensure that these barriers are removed while also maintaining the integrity of the absent voting process. The Chief Electoral Officer put in place a number of new initiatives to improve accessibility arrangements, but more needs to be done to raise awareness of the support that is available. Voting at elections On 18 May 2023 the Northern Ireland local council elections were held. A total of 807 candidates contested 462 seats across the 11 councils in Northern Ireland. The last local council elections took place in 2019. A total of 1,380,372 people were registered to vote, up from 1,305,553 at the last local council elections. The date of the local council elections was postponed by two weeks from 4 May to 18 May 2023 to avoid the counting of ballot papers clashing with the coronation of King Charles III on 6 May. The Elections Act 2022 introduced provisions to increase flexibility in relation to what support could be provided in polling stations to enable, or make it easier, for disabled people to vote independently and in secret. Voters continue to have positive views about how elections are run. Voters continue to have positive views about how elections are run. After each election we ask members of the public who were eligible to vote for their views on voting and elections. This helps us understand if views have changed since the last comparable set of elections. Satisfaction with the registration and voting processes remains high. People had high levels of satisfaction with the process of registering to vote and voting. Our research shows that: 86% of people were satisfied with the process of registering to vote – this is consistent with the levels of satisfaction reported by people after the 2019 local council elections (84%) 97% of voters were satisfied with the process of voting – this is broadly consistent with the 2019 local council elections (95%) 93% of people report being able to vote using their preferred method of voting – this is consistent with the 2022 Assembly elections (91%) Most people continue to be confident that elections are well-run. When asked, four-in-five (80%) said they were confident that the elections were well-run. This is broadly consistent with the 2019 local council elections (75%). The most chosen reasons for being confident were: it was quick and easy to vote (67%) the polling station was accessible and easy to get to (65%) a lack of negative experiences when taking part in the election (57%) Only 8% said they were not confident that the elections were well-run and when we asked people why they were not confident, it was because of issues accessing information. The most chosen reasons for not being confident were: a lack of information about the elections or candidates (28%) media, TV and press coverage was biased (27%) campaigns were based on incorrect or untrue claims (22%) Confidence that the election was well run was lower amongst those limited a lot by a disability or health condition, with 72% saying they were confident the elections were well-run. Most people think voting is safe from fraud and abuse. Views about the safety of voting and whether electoral fraud is a problem were consistent with the 2022 Assembly election, with 84% of people saying they thought voting was safe from fraud and abuse. This was an improvement when compared with the last local council elections in 2019 where 77% of people said they thought voting was safe from fraud. When asked if they thought electoral fraud was a problem in Northern Ireland, 14% of people said they thought it was, which is a significant reduction from 35% at the last local council elections and 20% at the 2022 Assembly election. The main reasons given by people who thought fraud had taken place was that they believed postal or proxy voting was not secure or that they had a general impression that fraud was a problem. The PSNI provide us with data on alleged cases of electoral fraud relating to offences under the Representation of the People Act. It has confirmed they have one allegation relating to irregularities on a nomination form that is under investigation. Turnout at these elections increased Overall turnout at the election was 54.7%, an increase of two percentage points on the last local council elections in 2019 (52.7%). The most common reasons given by people who told us they didn't vote were: a lack of time or being too busy at work (15%) a lack of interest in, or being fed up with, politics (14%) being away on polling day (12%) medical reasons unrelated to Covid (11%) The digital registration number continues to be a barrier to voters The digital registration number continues to be a barrier to voters In Northern Ireland, people can vote in one of three ways; in person, by post or by proxy (asking someone they trust to vote on their behalf). Unlike in the rest of the UK, voters must provide a valid reason why they cannot attend their polling station on polling day to be able to vote by post or proxy. Voters who have registered to vote online in Northern Ireland are required to provide a digital registration number (DRN) when applying to vote by post or proxy. A DRN is supplied to voters when they register online or can be requested from the Electoral Office for Northern Ireland. The DRN is intended to be a digital replacement for the wet ink signature that is required on paper registration applications. The DRN, or the wet ink signature, is a security measure used to link the person applying for a postal or proxy vote, with their electoral registration application. The DRN is not a requirement elsewhere in the UK. There are low levels of awareness surrounding the digital registration number At the 2023 Northern Ireland local council elections we ran a targeted campaign to raise awareness of the DRN, alongside our large-scale voter registration campaign, 'Got 5?'. This campaign targeted those groups we knew were more likely to need a postal or proxy vote. The campaign directed voters to the Electoral Office for Northern Ireland's website where they could request their DRN. It was supported by both partnership and public relations activity. Despite this campaign, awareness levels are low: 43% of people who registered online say they can't remember receiving a DRN 56% of people would not be confident accessing their DRN Large numbers of postal and proxy vote applications continue to be rejected In total there were 14,286 postal and proxy vote applications approved for the 2023 local council elections, with 7014 applications rejected. Of those rejected applications, 5,118 (73%) were rejected because there was no DRN. This is a significant increase from the 2022 Assembly election in which 3,636 applications were rejected because there was no DRN, which equated to 60% of all rejected applications. The Electoral Office for Northern Ireland received 8,700 requests for a DRN in the run up to the election, with 53% of those requests made in the last week before the absent vote deadline on 26 April 2023. This put a considerable administrative burden on the Electoral Office and created a significant challenge for staff to respond to requests for DRN in a timely manner. It is clear from the rejection rates and low awareness levels that the DRN is acting as a barrier to voters, a view that has also been explicitly expressed to us by candidates, political parties, and electoral administrators. It is also unclear if the DRN is achieving its intended purpose as a security measure against potential fraud. The personal identifiers required to request your DRN are the same as those needed to apply for a postal or proxy vote, which in effect means voters are being asked to supply the same information twice. The DRN is not a requirement elsewhere in the UK. Even when changes to absent voting rules are introduced in Great Britain later this year to enhance the security of the process there, a DRN will not be used but instead voters will be asked to provide their National Insurance number to confirm their identity and protect against voter fraud. The Electoral Office has advised that it is reviewing its processes relating to the administration of the DRN and has run workshops with political parties to collect their views on how the process could be improved. While this is welcome it is unlikely that this alone will address the fundamental issues that the DRN causes for voters and the Electoral Office. Ultimately, only legislative change would be able to remove this barrier to voting. Recommendation 1 Recommendation 1 The large number of rejected postal and proxy applications show that the DRN is a barrier to voters. We recommend that the UK Government urgently reviews the operation of the DRN to ensure that these barriers are removed, while also maintaining the integrity of the absent voting process. The Chief Electoral Officer took steps to support disabled voters at the elections but more needs to be done to raise awareness of what is available The Chief Electoral Officer took steps to support disabled voters at the elections but more needs to be done to raise awareness of what is available Further to changes in the law, electoral administrators across the UK now have increased flexibility on what support and equipment they can provide in polling stations to enable, or make it easier, for disabled people to vote independently and in secret. Restrictions have also been removed on who can be a 'companion'. Anyone who is 18 or over can now accompany a disabled voter to the polling station and, if requested by the voter, provide support. The companion no longer needs to be eligible to vote at the elections taking place, but they are still required to complete a declaration before assisting the voter. The Chief Electoral Officer provided a range of support at polling stations We published guidance for Returning Officers (ROs) to support them to implement the new accessibility arrangements, which ROs across the UK are required to consider. We consulted extensively on this guidance to ensure we could get wide input to help identify the measures that would help to improve the accessibility of polling stations. The Chief Electoral Officer put in place a number of new initiatives to improve the accessibility of voting at the local council elections. These included making hearing loops available at polling stations and an online application process on the Electoral Office website where voters could make a request for additional adjustments or support to be put in place at their polling station. The Electoral Office once again ran a telephone service, in partnership with the Royal National Institute of Blind People (RNIB), to provide an audio solution for voters with visual impairments. Almost all adults who voted in person and told us that they have a disability or long-term health condition (94%) said that, once they arrived at their polling station, it was easy to get inside the building to vote. Only a small proportion (2%) of in-person voters said that they had help filling in their ballot paper in the polling booth. Voters with a disability or long-term health condition were more likely to report needing help to vote, with most people getting help from their spouse/partner. 4% of in-person voters with a disability or long-term health condition said that they needed additional assistance or equipment to allow them to cast their vote independently and in secret. Further work is needed to ensure disabled voters receive and are aware of the support available We asked those who have a disability or long-term health condition for their views on the experience of voting. 49% agreed that they received the equipment, information and support that they need in order to vote (5% disagreed) 61% felt that staff at polling stations are properly trained to assist them with voting (9% disagreed) 60% disagreed with the fact that the way elections are run at present prevents them from voting in person, with 8% agreeing It is clear from feedback from the Chief Electoral Officer that awareness of the support available was low. This is supported by the fact that no requests were received through the new online application process where voters could request additional adjustments at polling stations. We will continue to work with the Chief Electoral Officer and civil society organisations to ensure disabled voters are aware of, and receive, the support they need to vote. Most people were confident they knew how to vote without making a mistake Most people were confident they knew how to vote without making a mistake Nearly all voters (97%) said that they found it easy to fill in their ballot paper, but some votes continue to be rejected and not included in the count. 9,740 ballot papers were rejected at the count, which represents 1.3% of all votes cast. This was a slight increase compared to the 2019 elections (0.9%) and in line with the 2022 Assembly election (1.3%). Campaigning at the elections The experience of campaigning at the 2023 Northern Ireland local council elections Candidates report that their ability to reach voters is being constrained by spending limits. The UK Government has already indicated its intention to review the spending limits for candidates to ensure they allow candidates to effectively engage with the electorate. Half of all candidates reported experiencing threats, abuse and/or intimidation. It is completely unacceptable that candidates continue to face any form of abuse when campaigning at elections. Tackling these problems will require coordinated action from a range of partners across the electoral community, including political parties and campaigners themselves, as well as the Police Service of Northern Ireland (PSNI) and the Public Prosecution Service (PPS). Campaigning at the elections A total of 807 candidates stood in the 2023 local council elections (12 fewer than in 2019). Sinn Féin fielded the most candidates with 162, followed by the DUP with 152, Alliance with 110, the Ulster Unionist Party with 101 and the SDLP with 86. In total, 15 political parties and 56 independent candidates contested the elections. Candidates report that their ability to reach voters is being constrained by spending limits Candidates report that their ability to reach voters is being constrained by spending limits At the 2023 local council elections, campaigners provided information in a variety of different ways. The most common way people reported seeing information on parties and candidates included: leaflets from a candidate/political party (74%) posters/billboards (52%) social media (27%) advert or message on television (26%) Candidates responding to our survey also told us that leaflets, posters / billboards and social media, along with canvassing, were their most used campaigning methods, specifically: almost all (96%) of candidates told us they used leaflets and canvassing over three-quarters (79%) listed posters/billboards and social media in their top three campaigning methods Despite candidates being able to engage with the public using a variety of methods, political parties and candidates have told us that the spending limit was too low for candidates at these elections, and this impacted their ability to campaign. Candidates responding to our survey said: Level of spending appropriate for 15 years ago. Limit is now too small and unable to communicate properly with whole electorate now. The spend limit meant we had to limit the materials in terms of number and type of leaflet... The spending limit is lower at local council elections in Northern Ireland compared to local council elections elsewhere in the UK, reflecting the fact that freepost election communications are available to local election candidates in Northern Ireland. However, parties and candidates have told us that the sharp rise in the printing costs of campaign materials has impacted their ability to use this freepost entitlement. Figures provided to us from Royal Mail indicate an 8.2% drop in the number of candidate mail items being sent from the most recent comparable election in 2019 (4.5 million to 4.13 million). It is important that voters have access to information to help them make an informed decision when they vote. However, only 67% of adults said they felt they had enough information on candidates to make an informed decision. A lack of information can have an impact on confidence in the elections. While most people are confident the election was well run (80%), for those not confident the top reason for this was the lack of information on the election and candidates (28%). The UK Government has announced that it intends to increase party and candidate spending limits for all reserved polls (except for local council elections in England, which it did in 2020), in line with inflation. While we wait to see the full proposals, we welcome the proposed review of the spending limits for candidates at the Northern Ireland local council elections. It is important to ensure any changes to the limits allow candidates to effectively engage with the electorate and for voters to be confident they have the information they need to inform their decision at the ballot box. Candidates continue to raise concerns about harassment. Candidates continue to raise concerns about harassment. After each election we ask candidates about their experiences of taking part. Our research following the 2022 Northern Ireland Assembly highlighted that a majority of candidates (71%) said they had some sort of problem with threats, abuse, or intimidation. Candidate responses after the 2023 local council elections indicate that harassment continues to be a significant issue (note: responses cannot be directly compared due to the different elections taking place each year and the self-selecting nature of the sample). In the lead up to the local council elections, we made it clear that intimidating and abusive behaviour has no place in our political system and worked closely with the PSNI to raise awareness of the support available to candidates, particularly female candidates, who face abuse and/or intimidation while campaigning. In March 2023, we published joint guidance with the PSNI, the PPS and the Electoral Office on the steps candidates can take to campaign safely, what support is available, and how to report an incident. The PSNI also attended our pre-election seminars for candidates to share this information and make contact with candidates. Almost half (46%) of all candidates reported looking at the guidance on campaigning safely. Half of all candidates reported experiencing threats, abuse and/or intimidation. When asked about how much of a problem candidates had with harassment, intimidation, or threats in this election, 50% of those who responded to our survey said they had a problem, with 6% reporting having a serious problem. 50% of candidates reported having no problem with harassment, intimidation or threats. The types of harassment most frequently experienced included: having campaign assets (such as posters) removed or destroyed (74%) or defaced (65%) someone intimidating or intentionally making you feel unsafe (41%) abuse posted on social media (26%). Women were more likely than men to have experienced harassment. The harassment most frequently came from members of the public (57%) and anonymous/unknown sources (40%). 17% was received from campaigners/volunteers and 13% from other candidates. When asked if they had avoided doing something as part of their campaign to keep themselves safe, 39% of respondents said that they avoided campaigning on their own and 19% avoided campaigning on social media. Almost 200 incidents were reported to the police relating to the elections. The vast majority of these (168) related to the theft, removal or damage of election posters. Other incidents reported related to intimidation, harassment or assault linked to campaigning. Despite the significant number of reported incidents, it appears many more go unreported, with only 25% of candidates telling us they reported incidents that happened to them or they witnessed happening to others. The Elections Act 2022 introduces a new electoral sanction for those found guilty of intimidating candidates, campaigners and elected representatives. This will come into force from 1 November 2023. This should strengthen the deterrent against intimidating behaviour by enabling someone to be banned from standing for elected office, as well as imposing criminal sanctions, such as a prison sentence or fine. The UK Government has also recently committed to explicitly exempt reasonable security expenses from contributing to spending limits for parties and candidates at certain elections, to ensure that these limits are not a barrier to providing adequate security during election campaigns. Recommendation 2: The electoral community should take action to protect voter trust and confidence in the democratic system Recommendation 2: The electoral community should take action to protect voter trust and confidence in the democratic system Candidates and campaigners should be able to participate freely in the democratic process, ensuring that voters can hear from a range of voices and have confidence in our elections. However, abuse and intimidation continue to persist.

Tackling these problems will require coordinated action from a range of partners across the electoral community, including political parties and campaigners themselves, as well as the PSNI and PPS. s should recognise the impact their choices have on how the public views our democratic system. They should actively discourage the use of inflammatory language and emphasise the importance of respect and constructive engagement with opposing viewpoints. Political parties should consider reviewing their membership criteria to include a clause explicitly emphasising respect for other campaigners and fostering a healthy political debate. The PSNI and PPS must continue to treat allegations and cases of election-related intimidation seriously and demonstrate that those committing offences against candidates and campaigners will face significant sanctions. Candidates continue to raise concerns about harassment We will build on the positive relationship we have with the PSNI, PPS and the Electoral Office and will continue to work together to promote our joint guidance on campaigning safely to ensure all candidates and campaigners are able to freely participate in the democratic process. Delivering the elections The experience of electoral administration at the 2023 Northern Ireland local council elections The 2023 Northern Ireland local council elections were well-run, with voters and campaigners reporting high levels of confidence. The administration of polling day generally went well, although some concerns were raised relating to campaigning in the vicinity of polling stations. A review of the Code of Conduct for campaigning in the vicinity of polling stations should be undertaken ahead of the next elections to help address these concerns. The administration of the counts generally went well, but more could still be done to improve their efficiency. The Chief Electoral Officer should explore what improvements can be made to the count process and its management that will support efficient count calculations and provide effective oversight of count processes. The capacity and resilience of electoral administration teams remains a significant challenge and the UK Government must carefully consider if the necessary time and resources are, or will be, available before making any final decisions about implementing the remaining Elections Act changes. Delivering the elections The local council elections took place across all 11 councils in Northern Ireland. Each council is made up of seven District Electoral Areas (DEAs), except for Belfast which has 10. In total there are 80 DEAs across the 11 councils. Councillors are elected to represent a DEA, with each DEA made up of five, six or seven wards. In total there are 462 wards. For the Northern Ireland local council elections, the local council Chief Executives are appointed as Deputy Returning Officers (DROs). There are 11 DROs, one for each of the 11 councils in Northern Ireland. The DROs act with the authority of the Returning Officer. Their responsibilities at these elections included managing nominations, the counting of votes and the receipt of candidate spending returns. The Chief Electoral Officer (CEO) for Northern Ireland is the registration officer and returning officer for all elections in Northern Ireland. The Chief Electoral Officer's duties include managing electoral registration, absent voting, and polling stations. An interim CEO was appointed on 3 April 2023 to oversee the local council elections while the process to recruit a permanent CEO was completed. Our evidence shows that, overall, the elections were well-run, and voters and campaigners reported high levels of confidence. However, underlying issues relating to capacity and resilience remain. Additionally, improvements to the efficiency of the count process are needed to support the effective delivery of future elections. The administration of polling day generally went well, although campaigning in the vicinity of polling stations remains an issue. The administration of polling day generally went well, although campaigning in the vicinity of polling stations remains an issue. The administration of polling day generally went well, with a majority of voters (80%) and most candidates (89%) reporting that they were confident the elections were well run. Concerns raised relating to campaigning in the vicinity of polling stations A small number of complaints were received relating to the behaviour of campaigners in the vicinity of polling stations. Candidates responding to our survey said: The guidance to stay a distance from polling stations and not hand out sample ballots is widely ignored by some parties. ...area in which candidates and supporters are able to hand out leaflets at the polling station seems to change from election to election... s are an essential element of a healthy democracy, and their right to put their arguments to voters should be supported and protected. It is equally important, however, that the activities of campaigners do not bring into question the integrity of the electoral process. All political parties have agreed to a Code of Conduct for canvassing in the vicinity of polling stations, which provides a guide on what is considered acceptable behaviour. However, it has been some time since this Code was reviewed. Also, its scope is limited to campaigning in the vicinity of polling stations. Elsewhere in the UK, political parties have agreed to a code that also covers campaigning in the community in the run up to polling day. Upcoming Elections Act changes to the rules on postal and proxy voting provide an opportune time to review the scope of the Code in Northern Ireland. Recommendation 3 Recommendation 3 The Chief Electoral Officer, working in consultation with political parties and the Electoral Commission, should review and update the Code of Conduct for canvassing in the vicinity of the polling stations. The updated Code should provide political parties with agreed standards on what is acceptable behaviour both before and during polling day. Improvements to the count process are needed to support the effective delivery of future elections. Improvements to the count process are needed to support the effective delivery of future elections. The counting of votes was managed by the 11 DROs, across 11 count venues, to fill 462 council seats across Northern Ireland. The majority of candidates (81%) were satisfied with the efficiency of the count, and the majority of voters (70%) agreed the votes were counted accurately. However, it is clear from our observations and feedback provided to us that the latter stages of the count are not as efficient as they could be. Action needed to improve the efficiency of the count Single Transferable Vote (STV) election counts are historically long events, with most taking two days to complete, subject to how the votes fall. 1 Improvements introduced to the verification and primary sort stages in 2016 and 2017 have supported the effective management of the early parts of the count. However, it is clear that improvements could be made to the latter stages of the count which could improve the efficiency of the process as a whole. The management of the adjudication of doubtful ballots and the decision making on the transfer and exclusion of ballot papers in some instances took a considerable time. In one instance, in the Waterside DEA of Derry and Strabane City Council, there was an error at the final stage of the count, which was confirmed by an election petition. The high court ordered a continuation of the count, with the redistribution of surplus votes from elected candidates. The continuation of the count took place on 9 August with the initial result remaining unchanged. Positive steps were taken to improve oversight of the count process, including through the establishment of a central hub by the Electoral Office, to which all 11 councils shared their count sheets digitally. This allowed the Chief Electoral Officer to see in real time what was happening and help identify any potential discrepancies. Nevertheless, the hub's ability to provide oversight was limited by its reliance on a small number of people checking a selection of stages of the count across 11 councils. An increased use of technology could play an important role in improving efficiencies at the count and supporting the further development of an oversight mechanism for the Chief Electoral Officer. It could also mitigate against the risk of human error and potentially, in time, provide cost savings in the delivery of elections.

Recommendation 4

The Chief Electoral Officer, working with us and other key stakeholders, should explore what improvements can be made to the count process and its management that will support efficient count calculations and provide effective oversight of count processes. The capacity and resilience of electoral administrators remains a significant challenge. The capacity and resilience of electoral administrators remains a significant challenge. The Chief Electoral Officer continued to highlight problems around recruiting and retaining experienced polling station and count staff, with a growing number of recruits dropping out ahead of polling day. Alongside this, these were the first elections in Northern Ireland when changes introduced by the Elections Act came into force. Further significant electoral administration changes arising from the Elections Act are expected to be implemented ahead of elections across the UK in 2024. These include changes to the arrangements for postal and proxy voting appointments, and the removal of the 15-year registration limit for overseas voters. This will increase risks, which will be exacerbated without sufficient clarity and resources for the Chief Electoral Officer to prepare effectively, well in advance of delivery. Before making any final decisions about implementing the remaining Elections Act changes, the UK Government must carefully consider whether the necessary time and resources are, or will be, available. Any decisions must be informed by a robust analysis of available data and evidence about realistic levels of preparedness, particularly given the complex range of changes that must be delivered and the interdependencies between them. The UK Government should continue to work with the electoral community in Northern Ireland to ensure there is sufficient clarity and time to implement these changes.

Supporting evidence

Post poll 2023 Northern Ireland Tables 1. In STV elections, voters rank candidates in order of preference. Any candidate who obtains enough first preference votes to reach the minimum required to be elected (known as the quota), is deemed elected. If a voter's first-choice candidate does not get elected, or if they are elected with more votes than the next candidate, their vote can be transferred to help elect their second choice and so on. If no candidate has reached the quota at the end of a stage, the candidate with the lowest number of votes is excluded and their votes transferred. At the 2023 local council elections and 2022 Northern Ireland Assembly elections, there were many stages of the count where only a small number of votes were able to be transferred at each stage, with more stages than needed before candidates had enough votes to get above the quota and be deemed elected.

■ Back to content at footnote 1

Page history First published: 13 July 2023 Last updated: 13 September 2023

Looking ahead to 2020/21 and using our resources to support the delivery of our goals | Electoral Commission Search Looking ahead to 2020/21 and using our resources to support the delivery of our goals You are in the Annual Report and Accounts 2020/21 section Home Our plans and priorities Annual Report and Accounts 2020/21 First published: 16 September 2021 Last updated: 16 September 2021

Looking ahead to 2021-22 2021-22 will be a busy year for the Commission. We are responsible for overseeing the delivery of a large and complex set of polls, and for ensuring that they are delivered safely and in a way that commands public confidence against the continuing backdrop of the pandemic. The arrival of a new Chair, the outcome of the enquiries by the Public Administration and Constitutional Affairs Committee of the UK Parliament and the Committee on Standards in Public Life, and the progress through Parliament of a significant Elections Bill will all impact on the work of the Commission as we start to emerge into a post-Covid environment. We will produce a Corporate Plan for the next five years. And we will for the first time be directly accountable to the Scottish Parliament and the Senedd Cymru in the same way as we are accountable to the UK Parliament through the Speaker's Committee. Our first priority is the delivery of the May 2021 polls, which will be the most complex for some considerable time. As highlighted above we have done substantial work with stakeholders and voters to prepare, but we do not underestimate the magnitude of the task. We welcomed a new Chair in the spring as well as two new Commissioners. This will provide refreshed strength in our strategic direction and governance as the Commission continues to deliver against a background of continuing change. Spring sees the expected introduction of the Electoral Integrity Bill; we will work closely with the UK Parliament to ensure parliamentarians have timely and evidence-based advice. Both the Committee for Standards in Public Life and the Public Administration and Constitutional Affairs Committee of the UK Parliament will publish reports relating to the Commission and electoral law. We welcome this scrutiny and look forward to seeing the recommendations. We welcome too our new accountabilities and relationship with the Senedd Cymru and the Scottish Parliament. We will work closely with both over the coming year to build our new relationship and support the implementation of any emerging plans for electoral reform. We will equally continue to work with stakeholders in Northern Ireland, particularly in supporting the 2021 canvass and preparing for the next Northern Ireland Assembly elections Core to our role is to continue to work constructively with all concerned – governments, parliaments, parties and campaigners, electoral administrators and other interested groups – to maintain confidence and trust in elections, including making preparations for the delivery of the May 2022 scheduled elections. We recognise the challenges. Strain and pressure on electoral administrators as a result of outdated and increasingly complex electoral law and continued pressure on resources and capacity continues to pose a risk to the successful delivery of registration and elections. We will continue work to develop and implement a strategy to support the increased resilience of local electoral services. And the nature of political campaigning continues to develop. Parties are spending a higher portion of their budgets on digital advertising and voters need to have confidence that they can critically examine and test political messages they see online. There is a risk that public confidence in digital campaigning will continue to fall, which poses a challenge for us, other regulators, governments and campaigners A different kind of challenge comes from adapting to the emerging post-Covid landscape. The Covid-19 pandemic has brought change and challenge for us as it has for every organisation. As it recedes we will put in place new post-Covid-19 working practices reflecting the fundamental changes likely to be brought about for us and for our stakeholders. All of this will feed into the new five-year Corporate Plan and Financial Strategy which we will develop over the course of the year and which will set out how we propose to meet these and other challenges. We will continue to deliver on our four goals Goal one support the May 2021 polls, working closely with the electoral community to ensure that they are delivered effectively continue to provide expert advice and guidance to electoral administrators, candidates and agents, including providing guidance, support and challenge in relation to preparations for the May 2022 elections continue to work with partners on improving the accessibility of elections so that everyone has equal access to election information and processes undertake a voter registration campaign ahead of polls, focusing particularly on groups which are harder to reach. support Electoral Registration Officers (EROs) in Great Britain, and lay new performance standards for them before the UK, Scottish and Welsh Parliaments.support the 2021 canvass in Northern Ireland and for the May 2022 Assembly election, including through electoral registration public awareness activity continue work to develop and implement a strategy to support increased resilience in the delivery of electoral services at a local level. support the implementation of the Scottish and Welsh governments' changes to the franchise and raise public awareness through our targeted Welcome to Your Vote campaign and working with a wide range of partner groups. continue to combat electoral fraud through close engagement with the police and with local authorities, supported by our Your Vote is Yours Alone campaign and by research and data analysis. Goal two Maintain the registers of political parties and campaigners, ensuring voters have clarity about registered parties and campaigners on the ballot paper Publish financial data from parties, candidates and campaigners, including that related to elections, ensuring transparency for voters Continue to evolve our effective enforcement of the political finance rules, ensuring voters, parties and campaigners have confidence that the rules are enforced proportionately and with impact, within our current powers. We will continue to publish the outcome of each investigation for transparency, including in full reports where that is warranted, so voters, parties and campaigners can see the way we act to enforce the rules. We will also continue to publish the outcomes of all investigations. Deliver a new Political Finance Online system to support parties and campaigners to deliver their financial returns efficiently Provide timely advice and guidance to parties and campaigners to support them in meeting their legal requirements, including for the major and complex polls scheduled for 2020 Consult on and then develop our new strategic framework to ensure effective and impactful proactive support which will have the greatest effect on compliance with the law continue to enhance the quality of our regulatory work by rolling reviews of regulatory procedures and completing a project on enhancing our enforcement processes. respond to the changing environment and impacts of digital campaigning. We will work with government, social media companies and other providers of digital advertising to ensure their services and policies support transparency for election and referendum campaign activity; we will continue to scrutinise their proposals and bring forward proposals of our own as appropriate. Administer the policy development grants scheme and ensure it operates effectively by making timely recommendations to the UK Government for any necessary changes Goal three continue to provide expert advice and support to political parties, campaigners, governments and the public to inform policy change, educate and inform the public and promote partnership working Support the UK Parliament to scrutinise the expected Elections Bill report on the administration of elections in line with our statutory duties to ensure we utilise learning to improve the delivery of future events continue to promote and build support for improvements to our democratic processes take forward work on a project to explore voters' attitudes to the voting process and options for change that would ensure their needs and expectations can continue to be met into the future continue to develop our evidence base to enable greater understanding of the electoral environment, including horizon scanning for emerging issues, risks and opportunities to the electoral system undertake public awareness activity to increase voter understanding of the rules already in place to regulate the digital campaigning techniques increasingly used to reach voters continue to expand our suite of education and learning materials designed to support understanding of the democratic process, for students and teachers across the whole of the UK. continue to develop our corporate website, using open data and digital tools to improve accessibility Goal four Design new working practices and shape a culture which helps us maximise performance and meet changed staff expectations as we start to emerge from the pandemic Publish a new Corporate Plan for 2022-27, led by the new Chair of the Commission. We will also develop a new five-year financial strategy Develop new working arrangements with the Senedd and the Scottish Parliament as well as the UK Parliament to reflect our new accountabilities Delivered and developed our People Strategy Continue our focus on equality, diversity and inclusion through our new Race at Work Taskforce and the publication of a new Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Strategy Continue our focus on learning and development, including our Leadership and Management Development Programme Continue to develop our quality management approach, building on our initial progress in 2020/21 Continue to upgrade our internal financial systems and performance tracking systems to improve efficiency and our ability to forecast Our commitment to equality, diversity and inclusion The Commission is committed to the principle of equality of opportunity and the value of diversity. We are subject to a range of legislation including the Public Sector Equality Duty as set out in the Equalities Act 2010, and Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, which prohibits discrimination and promotes equality of opportunity and good relations across a range of protected characteristics. Our commitment goes beyond compliance. We serve a diverse society, and diversity is at the heart of a democracy that works for every voter. We have three key objectives: that everyone who is eligible is able to participate in the democratic process, by identifying barriers, making recommendations and working with others to remove them that we embed equality and diversity in all our work, treat all customers fairly and with respect, and are transparent in the decisions we make equality of opportunity for everyone and that all staff are treated fairly and with respect These objectives are central to the Commission's work: We know which groups of voters are least likely to be registered, and have focussed communications and engagement activities to assist them. For example we have designed campaigns aimed at younger voters and in particular those from black and minority ethnic backgrounds whom we know from research are less likely to be registered, and have worked with a large range of groups such as those representing refugees, gypsies and travellers and voters with a disability. We completed equality impact assessments on relevant policies and procedures throughout 2020/21. The equality impact assessments support a commitment to evidence-based policy making. In addition to arrangements for consultation and monitoring, the assessment process helps to develop effective policies that meet the needs of people in respect to any protected characteristics. We have reviewed and enhanced our process and will fully implement this during 2021-22. We want to improve the diversity of our staff at all levels in the organisation, and consider it important that we reflect the diversity of the people we serve. We have taken a range of initiatives. Our People Strategy has equality, diversity and inclusion at its heart. Our work on diversity is supported by a number of staff groups. Our Equality, Diversity and Inclusion group meets regularly. Our Chief Executive chairs a Race at Work Taskforce and we have appointed a champion to lead actions on this work. The Dignity, Respect and Empowerment group holds the organisation to account on challenging bullying and harassment, working with a Director level Anti-Bullying Champion. Our Wellbeing Group and our Mental Health First Aiders provide support to staff. We will be publishing a new Equality, Diversity and Inclusion Strategy during 2021-22 alongside a new Employer's Statement on Equal Opportunities.

Northern Ireland Under Section 49A of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 (DDA 1995) (as amended by Article 5 of the Disability Discrimination (Northern Ireland) Order 2006), the Electoral Commission is required when carrying out its functions to have due regard to the need to: promote positive attitudes towards disabled people; and encourage participation by disabled people in public life ('the disability duties'). Under Section 49B of the DDA 1995, the Electoral Commission is also required to submit to the Equality Commission a disability action plan showing how it proposes to fulfil these duties in relation to its functions.

In January we published a draft Disability Action Plan and began a 12 week public consultation in Northern Ireland, as recommended by the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland. We intend to have the final action plan in place by June 2021 and will report annually on our progress on implementing the plan to the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland.

Wales

The Electoral Commission is committed to the principle that in its conduct of public business and provision of resources and services, the Welsh and languages should be treated on a basis of equality. During 2020/21, important work was undertaken with regard to the Welsh language within the Commission. Our campaigns were created and run bilingually in Wales, such as Got 5/Oes 5 'da ti general voter registration campaign, and the Welcome to Your Vote/Croeso i Dy Bleidlais campaign, to encourage registration among those newly enfranchised voters in Wales. New educational resources were also created for use in schools in both Welsh and . A complaint was made to the Welsh Language Commissioner during 2020 relating to the Commission's statutory process to maintain the registers of political parties and to take registration decisions. In its response the Commission reinforced its commitment to providing an exceptional service to partners in Wales in the language of their choice and to ensuring that the Welsh Language Standards, set in July 2016, are not only met, but that the Commission is innovative and ambitious in the services that it provides. We commissioned an external agency to carry out a review of the Commission's adherence to the Standards and the final report from this work will inform the organisation's next steps regarding Welsh Language provision.

Scotland

We continue to work with a range of delivery partners to promote equal access to and understanding of democracy in Scotland. Using our resources to support the delivery of our goals

Our people Staff relations and engagement

The expertise, hard work and high level of commitment of our workforce enable successful performance and delivery of our Corporate Plan. We value the positive and constructive relationship we have with colleagues and work hard to maintain it. Our staff engagement group meets on a regular basis to seek input from colleagues on emerging issues and help to maintain good relations with staff. We also actively encourage staff involvement as part of the day-to-day process of line management, and we share information on current and prospective developments widely and regularly. To support this, we have a recognition agreement with the Public and Commercial Services Union. We completed our latest staff survey in March 2020 and 86% of employees responded. Our employee engagement score was 72% (up from 65% in 2018-19). Our scores compared most positively to the Civil Service benchmark in areas such as our people agreeing that: we took action after the previous survey they feel a strong personal attachment to our organisation and its work they would recommend the Electoral Commission as a place to work. The areas where we compared least positively to the Civil Service benchmark and we need to improve on include people agreeing that: there are opportunities for them to progress in their careers at the Electoral Commission they have the IT systems and equipment they need to do their jobs effectively we are committed to creating a diverse and inclusive workplace.

Occupational health and safety We review our health and safety policy annually. We also have procedures, guidance and risk assessments in place to cover our core activities. A health and safety group oversees our arrangements. They meet regularly and report to our senior leadership group. However, primary responsibility for health and safety sits with people managers. We initiate independent health and safety audits of our premises each year, which involves inspecting working environments and reviewing safety management systems. These audits tell us if our arrangements are suitable and highlight any improvements we need to make. In 2020/21 we carried out specific risk assessments to ensure our sites were Covid secure prior to re-opening; routine assessments will restart once travel across the UK is permitted and our sites are back in use.

Our environmental impact We recognise that delivering our activities has an impact on the environment and we continue to work towards minimising this impact. We lease office space in four cities from a combination of public and private sector property owners. We do not have direct control of utility supplier and waste disposal targets and management at our premises. For a number of our offices, the property owner manages energy and water consumption as well as waste disposal and recovers costs through a consolidated service charge. Offices in Edinburgh, Cardiff and Belfast have relocated to smaller, more environmentally efficient premises in the last 10 years. We completed the renewal of the lease for our London office in 2020. Initiatives are in place to help minimise environmental impact: reduced printed resources provided to electoral administrators and other groups, focusing on electronic provision wherever possible encouraged the use of video and teleconferencing to avoid unnecessary travel with consequential CO₂ emissions operated recycling facilities in all our offices upgraded to more energy efficient information communication technology equipment.

Summary (London office) Performance commentary on emissions We aim to decrease our fossil fuel consumption year on year, an ongoing effect of the property owner's introduction of measures to reduce levels of electricity consumption, including lower 'out of hours' operation of plant and machinery and the introduction of energy-efficient lighting. Coronavirus has meant that the office has not been open during 2020/21 for all staff therefore our performance has not been measurable this year.

Waste report General waste and recycling figures are based on a proportion of total building waste and are not directly controllable by us. Confidential waste disposal for the organisation is handled separately from that for other building occupants. We shred the confidential waste we generate on-site before it is recycled into low-grade paper. The general and recycled waste is based on a proportion of total building waste. All general waste produced in the building, including that generated by us, is sent to a nearby energy from waste plant, instead of landfill sites. Using our financial resources efficiently In 2020/21, the resource initially made available to us by the UK Parliament was £23.3m for voted activity. We received non-voted funding of £200k to pay Commissioners' fees. In January 2021, we had our Supplementary Estimate Approved, which decreased our resource budget to £20.3m and increased our capital budget to £1.5m. We also reduced our AME budget to £0.3m. The budget changes were due to the postponement of the polls scheduled for May 2020 and the increased costs for our political finance online system. Our final budget breakdown:

Departmental Expenditure Limit Voted (£m)	Non-voted (£m)	Total (£m)	Resource	20.3	0.2	20.5	Capital	1.5	n/a	1.5
Annually Managed Expenditure	Voted (£m)	Non-voted (£m)	Total (£m)	Resource	0.3	n/a	0.3	Total Net Budget	Voted (£m)	Non-voted (£m)	Total (£m)	Resource	20.6	0.2	20.8
Capital	1.5	n/a	1.5	Net cash requirement	Voted (£m)	Non-voted (£m)	Total (£m)	Non	21.5	n/a	21.5	In achieving our objectives, we have used £19.1m worth of resources for	the whole year. This was out of the available sum of £20.5m approved by the UK
Parliament in our Supplementary Estimate (HC 64) for the net resource voted	requirement.	The graphic below summarises our financial performance on the 'voted' element of our budget.	Financial performance 2020/21	Our financial performance follows our strategic performance, being dominated by a shifting electoral timetable.	For the year 2020/21: our staff costs represented 55% of our resource expenditure, which is an increase of 8% from 2019/20. our capital expenditure increased by £0.4m due to the refurbishment works within the London office.	Expenditure 2020/21 (£m)	Staff costs £10.7	Public Awareness £2.2	Local Government Scotland £0.1	Capital Expenditure £1.3	Operating Costs £4.2	Policy Development Grant £1.9	Senedd £0.2	We report our underspend to reflect in-year operational decisions; R-DEL excluding depreciation and PDGs. In 2020/21 this was £1.0m against the voted budget of £17.9m (5.6%). This was predominantly due to unused contingency and other savings in campaigning for the May 2021 elections. The operating underspend - £000s	Event activity £448	Core staff and operating costs £591	The operating underspend is comprised of: £591k reduced spend within our campaigning budget for the May 2021 campaigns. (including contingency for Covid related campaigns that was not required) £103k as a combination of under and over spends within staff costs £253k due to reduced Welsh translation and travel costs £92k as a combination of individually small underspends across the Commission Other underspend £112k in unclaimed policy development grant £39k in depreciation £147k in provisions due to lower than expected costs £279k in capital projects The £80k underspend against non-voted funding is due to lower than expected costs for Commissioners due to vacancies. Our income in our accounts relates to charges for registering political parties and work completed for the Senedd and Scottish Parliament. We collect fines raised against political parties and individuals for failure to comply with the rules on party and election finance and then surrender these to the Consolidated Fund as required by law. The penalties due was £41k in 2020/21 received by 31 March 2021 and surrendered to the Consolidated Fund. In addition to monitoring performance against budgets, we also managed within our cash limits set by the UK Parliament. We required cash amounting to £20.3m in 2020/21 to finance our voted activities, which was £1.2m less than the sum of £21.5m approved by the UK Parliament in our Supplementary Estimate. The reconciliation of net resources outturn to net cash requirement provides a reconciliation from our outturn to the net cash we required in-year. The Statement of Cash Flows shows that the cash balance as at 31 March 2021 was £26k. The Statement of Financial Position as at 31 March 2021 shows positive taxpayers' equity of £0.9m. Supplier payments Although we are independent of government, we aim to comply with the Prompt Payment Code that operates across the public sector. The target is to pay undisputed invoices within 30 days. In 2020/21, we paid 85% of invoices (81.6% in 2019/20) within 30 days. The pandemic created a backlog in paying invoices during the first part of the year due to the closure of the offices; e-processes were set up and within the last six months of 2020/21 100% of invoices were paid within 30 days. Freedom of Information, complaints and parliamentary questions We are committed to the principles of openness and transparency in public life and acknowledge the duty to provide information to the public. In 2020/21, we received 153 Freedom of Information (FOI) requests. We responded to 136 (91.9%) of these within the 20 working days statutory timeframe (target: 90%); a proportion of large and complex requests continues to be high. There were nine FOI internal review requests, one of these requests led to additional information being sent to the requestor. The global pandemic had an impact on the number of FOI requests submitted to the Electoral Commission and the pattern of submission was not the same as in previous years. The complexity and impact of the requests did have an impact on the organisation, but this was mitigated by improvements in process and communication across teams. This led to the improvement in the number of requests responded to within the statutory response periods. We received five subject access requests. We responded to all of these promptly. We received one complaint and this is pending closure from the ICO related to a response issued in 2019. We also received two requests for erasure under the General Data Protection Regulation/Data Protection Act 2018. We handled 29 complaints, compared to 51 in 2019/20. Of the 29 complaints handled; 17 have been completed and 12 are still active. Of the 17 that were completed; 11 were not upheld, two were partially upheld, one was upheld, three were closed due to no clarification being received from the complainant. The learnings gleaned from the investigations of these complaints were fed back to the relevant teams to support our commitment to continuous improvement. These complaints spanned a range of topics. Eight complaints focussed on alleged delays in assessing applications to change a party's name. None of these complaints were upheld. We received one request for review by the Chief Executive. While this review did not change the original outcome of the complaint, it did enable further explanation and assistance. In addition, we received correspondence from 181 members of the public that did not constitute complaints under our policy. Where possible the complaints team responded directly to the individual or alternatively forwarded the correspondence to the appropriate team to provide a response if technical expertise was required. Via our dedicated public information service, we responded to 4,463 public enquiries, received by phone and email. Through this service, we have answered questions about how to register and vote in the May 2021 elections taking place across Great Britain. We have explained the public safety measures in place at polling stations, and how people can use absent voting methods to have their say without attending a polling station. We responded to 27 parliamentary questions during 2020/21, including questions about digital campaigning, electoral fraud, the accuracy and completeness of the electoral registers and the effectiveness of electoral law. Chris Matheson MP, a member of the Speaker's Committee, was our spokesperson in the UK Parliament and answered questions on our behalf. Supply estimate for 2021-22 Our supply estimate for 2021-22 (HC1371) provides for a net resource requirement of £17.4m. The Speaker's Committee approved this on 23 March 2021 and was laid before House of Commons on 22 April 2021. The Commission is established by legislation and following the principles of the FReM there is an assumption of continued provision of service, there is nothing to suggest services provided by the Commission will cease or future funding will not be provided. We plan to use these resources to continue delivering our four goals around the delivery of elections, the regulation of political finance, the use of our expertise to improve democratic processes and the best use of our resources.